The Country, for the moſt part, is very mountainous, over-run with the branches of Mount Taurus, but theſe branches feed great ſtore of Goats, of whoſe hair are made abundance of Chamlets and Grograins, not inferiour unto Silks for fineneſs. Towards the Sea, which for the ſpace of a hundred and fifty miles coaſt along this ſhore, more pleaſant, populous, and fruitfull; well watered, and as well planted. The principal Rivers hereof, being 1. Cataractus, 2. Ceſtrus, and 3. Eurymedon; Nigh to which laſt, Cimon the ſon of Miltiades, Captain General of the Athenian Army, overthrew in one day, both the Sea and Land Forces of the Perſians. The manner thus: having by plain Force broke their Navy, of which he took and ſunk no fewer than forty Ships, and three thouſand Gallies, beſtowed the Perſian Veſſels with his beſt men, attired in the habit, and wearing the colours of the Perſian in the tops of their ſhips. In their approach the Camp was opened, and all prepared to entertain their victorious Countrey-men; but the Greeks once in, ſuddenly put them to the ſword, and took twenty thouſand of them priſoners.

Principal Cities of it, 1. Attalia, founded by Ptolemy Philadelphus King of Egypt, and for long time the greateſt and moſt flouriſhing City of all this Province; well fenced, and ſeated very commodiouſly for Trade, on a very fair Bay, now called Golfo di Sattalia, by the name of the Town, but little altered. And though the Romans did conferr the honour of the Metropolitan City upon Aſpendus, yet ſtill Attalia had the ſtart in point of riches; and is to this day a wealthy and well-Traded Empory, the wealthier for the fair Tapeſtries which are herein made. Of this Town there is mention, Acts 14. v. 25 2. Perge, famous in old times for a Temple of Diana, and the yearly feſtivals there held in honour of her; from hence called Diana Pergaa: more famous in the fulneſs of time, for St. Pauls preaching in it, mentioned Acts 14. v. 15. 3. Side, renowned in times of Gentiliſm, for a Temple of Pallas. 4. Magydis, on the Sea-ſide, not far from Side. 5. Aſpendus, an inland Town, but ſtrongly ſituate, made the Metropolis of the Province in the time of the Romans: remarkable for the Fidlers, or Muſicians of it, who with one hand both held their Harps and plaid upon them, keeping the other free for more gainful uſes; whence the Proverb of Aſpendus Cithariſta, an Aſpendian Harper, by which they ſignifyed a Thief. The Town firſt founded by the Argives, the Colony ſent thither being led by Mopſus, from whom the Countrey hereabouts had the name of Mopſia. 6. Olbia, not far from Attalia. 7. Caracenſium, and 8. Colobraſſus, two of the Towns of that part hereof, which had the name of Cilicia aſpera; as 9. Cretopolis, and 10. Menedemium, of that part which was called Carbalia.

Of theſe Pamphylians there is little to be ſaid in point of ſtory, but that they were for the moſt part on the ſuffering hand; ſubject from time to time to thoſe mightier Princes, who would not let their neighbours reſt in quiet by them. Being on the ſame ſide of Taurus, and of eaſie acceſs, they became firſt Vaſſals to the Syrian, and after to the Perſian Kings. When Alexander paſſed that way, in his march towards Perſia, he took all the Sea-Towns of it; the whole brought under with the reſt of the Aſian Provinces, by Antigonus firſt, after by Seleucus the great King of Syria. In the expiration of whoſe line, this people and their neighbours of Cilicia, being left to themſelves, and tempted by Mithridates to his faction, began to be troubleſom to the Seas, and proved notable Pirates, and were the firſt Authors, or inventors, of thoſe Gallies of a hundred and fourty, or an hundred and ſixty Oars apiece; which the Italians call from hence by the name of Pamphyli. But forced to leave this Trade at laſt, being warred upon by the Romans with great Forces both by Sea and Land (a fuller narrative whereof we ſhall have in Cilicia) in the concluſion of that war, they loſt that liberty which ſo ſmall a time they had enjoyed; and were made Vaſſals unto Rome. Afterwards made a Province of the Aſian Dioceſe, they ran the ſame fortune with the reſt, till ſubdued by the Turks: and at the death of Aladine, were ſeized on by Caraman, and ſo became a part of his Kingdom. Of which we ſhall hear more when we come to Cilicia. And ſo much for the Provinces of the Aſian Dioceſe, (the Provinces of the Iſles excepted, whereof more anon) converted to the Chriſtian Faith by three great Apoſtles; but more eſpecially by Saint Paul, of whoſe travels through moſt Cities and Regions of it, there is ſuch pregnant evidence in the Book of the Acts. And that Saint Peter, and Saint John, had alſo their parts herein, appears by the Revelation of the one, and the firſt Epiſtle of the other: Paul planting, John and Peter watering, but God himſelf giving the increaſe. Paſs we on next to ISAVRIA and CILICIA, which though Provinces of the Dioceſe of the Orient, were parts of the Caramanian Kingdom: of which having taken a Survey, and ſo cleared our ſelves of this Peninſula, we will then ſail about ſuch Iſlands as make up the remainder of the Aſian Dioceſe.

18. ISAVRIA. CILICIA.

Theſe two, though diſtinct Provinces, I have joyned together, becauſe the firſt was only a part of the laſt: Cilicia antiently comprehending both. The fortunes of both being the ſame alſo an point of ſtory, which makes the conjunction the more natural.

ISAVRIA, a mountainous and hilly Province, ſeated on both ſides of Taurus, hath on the Eaſt and South, the reſt of Cilicia, whereof antiently it was a part; on the North, Piſidia; on the Weſt, Pamphylia. So called from Iſaurus, the chief City of it, when firſt made known unto the Romans; which being taken by Servilius the Proconſul, employed by Pompey in that Service, reduced the conquered Countrey under the command of Rome, and gave unto the Conquerour the Sirname of Iſauricus.

The quality of the Soil, and the whole eſtate of this ſmall Province, take thus from Ammianus Marcellinus, who had ſeen theſe Countries. Ciliciæ lateri dextro adnexa Iſauria, uberi palmite viret, & frugibus multis; quam mediam, flumen navigabile Calicadnus interſcindit, &c. i. e. "On the right hand of "Cilicia lieth Iſauria, a Province of a wealthy ſoil, plentiful of Vines, and much other fruits, which "the river Calicadnus parteth in the very midſt. Beautified, beſides many Towns, with two principal Cities. 1. Seleucia, founded by Seleucus: and 2. Claudiopolis, into which Claudius the Emperor brought a Roman Colony. For as touching. 3. Iſauria, heretofore a walled City, and of moſt eſteem, it hath been long ago deſtroyed, as yeelding too ſecure a refuge to the neighbouring Rebels; inſomuch that now there are ſcarce any viſible tracts of its former greatneſs. And not much after, Hæ duæ Provinciæ bello quondam Piratico catervis mixtæ Prædonum, à Servilio Proconſule miſſæ ſub jugum, factæ ſunt vectigales, i. e. "Theſe Provinces (Cilicia and this) heretofore in the Piratical war joyning with "thoſe Robbers, were brought under by Servilius the Proconſul, and made ſubject to the State of Rome. And here, we have in brief, the nature of the Countrey, the names of the chief rivers, and the principal Cities, with ſo much of the ſtory which relates to the firſt ſubjugation of it. What further doth concern it we ſhall hear in Cilicia, upon the which it did depend.

2. CILICIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Syria, or rather that part thereof which is called Comagena, ſeparated from which part by a branch of the mountain Taurus, called Amanus; on the Weſt with Pamphylia; on the North, with Iſauria, and Armenia Minor; on the South, with the Mediterranean, and Syria, eſpecially ſo called. It was thus named, as the old Tradition was, from Cilix, the brother of Cadmus the Phœnician, a near neighbour to it; but as Bochartus (of whoſe honour I have told you often) from Callukim, a Phœnician word ſignifying ſtones, quia lapidoſa eſt regio, becauſe in ſome parts, eſpecially in that which is called Cilicia Trachæa, or Cilicia Aſpera, is was very ſtony. It is now called Caramania, as the laſt Province of the Caramanian Kingdom, which held out for thoſe falling Princes, when the reſt was conquered by the Turks of the Ottoman race.

The Countrey ſaid by Marcellinus, to be terra dives omnibus bonis, wealthy and fruitful of all neceſſaries. Which character holdeth good, chiefly in the Eaſtern parts, which heretofore had the name of Cilicia Campeſtris; the Weſtern parts lying towards Pamphylia, formerly called Cilicia Aſpera, being rough and ſtony. But generally where the lands ly in ſeveral, and are duly cultivated, it anſwereth to the former Character: being alſo very well watered, and having a fair and large Sea-coaſt, for the ſpace of three hundred miles and upwards. Which notwithſtanding, it is not much traded, and but meanly inhabited, a great part of the Countrey lying in large, and common fields, to which none can lay any proper claim, and therefore planted onely with Goats and Sheep: out of which the Commoners on all ſides raiſe good profit by cheeſe and butter; by their fleeces chiefly. Here is alſo a good breed of Horſes, of which ſix hundred yearly are culled out for the ſpecial ſervice of the Grand Seignor. But as they have ſome profitable and uſeful creatures, ſo have they others as dangerous and hurtful to them; eſpecially thoſe which the vulgar Grecians call Squilachi, of a mixt making, betwixt a Dog and a Wolf; which go in troops, and are ſo bold, and theeviſh withall, as the uſe to ſet upon a man when he is aſleep, and leave him neither hat, cloak, nor fardel, nor any thing they can conveniently get from him.

Chief Rivers hereof are, 1. Pyramus, now called Malmiſtra, which riſing on the North ſide of the Taurus, and forcing his paſſage through that mountain, makes ſuch a noiſe in falling down the precipices and rocks thereof, as reſemblanceth at a great diſtance a clap of Thunder. 2. Orimagdus. 3. Cali- cadnus ſpoke of before. 4. Cidnus, which riſeth in the Anti-Taurus; a river of a violent courſe, and ſo cold a water, that as Pliny writes, it cureth the gout: the waters of which proved very dangerous to Alexander the Great, the coldneſs of them ſtriking violently into his ſtomack; and deadly to Frederick the Firſt Emperour of the Germans, as he here bathed himſelf, the violence of the ſtream tripping up his heels, and he not able to recover, was preſently drowned.

Of their chief hils I need add nothing, having already ſaid, that the Country is parted by Amanus from Syria; and by Taurus it ſelf from Piſidia and Armenia Minor; not eaſie of entrance by the firſt; but very difficult by the laſt: the Streights thereof called Pylæ Ciliciæ, or the Ports of Cilicia, being indeed ſo ſtreight, and almoſt impaſſable, that had they been guarded or regarded by the Perſians, as they ſhould have been, the progreſs of Alexander's victories might have ended there. But Arſenes who had the charge of them, durſt not ſtand his ground, and ſo left them open to the enemy: whom by thoſe ports he put into the poſſeſſion of the Kingdom of Perſia. With better faith, though no better fortune, did the Souldiers of Peſceninus Niger, make good theſe Streights againſt the Emperour Severus,; the Monarchy of the world lying a ſecond time at the ſtake, and to be tried for in this Cock-pit. For the Nigrians poſſeſſed of theſe Streights and enterances, couragiouſly withſtood the Severian party; till at laſt a ſudden tempeſt of rain and thunder continually darting in their faces (as if the very Heavens had been armed againſt them) they were fain to leave the paſſage, and therewith the victory, to the adverſe faction; having ſold that at the loſs of 20000 of their own lives, which Alexander had the happineſs or hap to buy for nothing.

In the borders of this Country towards Pamphylia, lived a Tribe or Nation called the Soli, originally of Attica: but in long tract of time diſuſed from converſe and communication with their Country-men, they ſpake that language ſo corruptedly, that from their barbarous manner of pronunciation, and as rude expreſſion, came the word Solæciſmus. Yet among theſe were born three men of eminent note, that is to ſay, Chryſippus the Philoſopher, Philemon and Aratus the Poets; out of the writing of which laſt, St. Paul vouchſafed to uſe this paſſage, τοῦ γὰρ γένος ἐσμὲν, i. e. for we are alſo his off-ſpring. Acts. 17. v. 28. That bleſſed Apoſtle thought himſelf never the worſe Preacher, for being brought up in humane learning at the feet of Gamaliel: not held it any diſparagement to the influences of the Holy Ghoſt, to make uſe of it in his Sermons, and divine diſcourſes, and therefore to prevent thoſe cavils which ignorance or miſpriſion might chance to make in times ſucceeding, he hath thrice vouchſafed the words and teſtimony of the Heathen writers, viz. of Epimenides, Tit. 1. v. 12. of Menander, 1 Cor. 15. v. 33. and that of Aratus before-mentioned. So lawful is it in this kind, for thoſe of the ſpiritual Iſrael, to rob the Egyptians; and to make this Hagar ſerviceable to her Miſtreſs Sarah.

Principal Cities of this Province. 1. Solæ, the habitation of the Soli, before remembred, by ſome ſaid to be built by Solon the Athenian, but generally affirmed to have been planted by thoſe of Rhodes and Attica: miſtakingly called Heliopolis, by Qu. Curtius, which is as much in Latin as Solis civitas or the City of the Sun. On the ſite hereof then decayed and ruinous (the town having been deſtroyed by Tygranes the Armenian king in his late war againſt the Romans) did Pompey build his City of Pompeiopolis after his victory over the Pirates; who not only lorded it over the Seas, and conſequently obſtructed trade and Merchandiſe, but waſted and ſpoiled the villages of Italy it ſelf. Pompey being Victor, and having inflicted exemplary puniſhment on the Ring-leaders, with the reſt peopled this new Town, and the Countrey adjoyning, allowing them competent poſſeſſions, leſt want and neceſſity ſhould again inforce them to the like courſes. An action truly commendable, aud worthy ſo great a Captain, rather to take an occaſion of offending from the people, than after offence done to puniſh them. Hythlodæus in the Utopia, ſomewhat bitterly, though perhaps not unjuſtly, inveigheth againſt the laws of England, for ordaining death to be the puniſhment of theft, Cum multos potius providendum fuerit, uti aliquis eſſet proventus vitæ; ne cuipiam ſit tam dira furandi primum, deinde pereundi neceſſitas. Whereas (ſaith he) the laws ought to make proviſion for putting men into ſome orderly courſe of life, and not let them run upon the neceſſity of ſtealing firſt, and then being hanged for it. 2. Tarſus, the birth-place of Saint Paul the Apoſtle, for that ſufficiently famous, were there nothing elſe to commend it to conſideration. But it was withall a Town of great note and conſequence, the Metropolis firſt of all Cilicia, and after the diviſion, of Cilicia Prima. The Inhabitants whereof had the privilege of Roman Citizens. Situate in a goodly plain on the banks of the Cydnus, and by ſome ſaid to be the work of Sardanapalus the laſt King of Aſſaria, it being engraven on a Monument erected to him, that in one day he had built this Tarſus, and 3. Anchiala, another City of this Countrey, near the Sea ſide, and not far from the promontory Zephyrium: Of the ſame date (if the ſaid Monument ſpeak truth,) but neither of the ſame fortune nor continuance: that being utterly decayed, but Tarſus ſtill remaining of great wealth and ſtrength. Much ſpoken of in the wars of the Holy Land, and in the ſtory of the Caramanian and Ottoman Kings. And though the Tarſians, to ingratiate themſelves with Julius Caſar, would needs have their Countrey called Juliopolis; yet the old name ſurvived the new, and it is to this day called Terſia or Teraſſa by the vulgar Grecians: but Hamſa by the Turks as Bellonius telleth us. 4. Adena, the Adana of Ptolemy, a large Town, but unwalled, in ſtead whereof defended by a very ſtrong Caſtle. Situate in a fruitful ſoil, both for wine and corn, wherewith the Town is always furniſhed for the uſe of thoſe that are to travell over the Taurus, who commonly take in here three days proviſion. 5. Epiphania, the birth-place of George the Arian Biſhop of Alexandria; thruſt on the world of late by ſome learned men (but of more induſtry than judgment) for George the Cappadocian Martyr. 6. Mopſueſtia, as famous, or infamous rather, for giving title to Theodorus Mopſueſtenus, Biſhop hereof, and a great Patron of the Neſtorian hereſies, in time of St. Chryſoſtom. The City otherwiſe of good note, and of great conſequence, in the courſe of the Roman wars, Cilicia.

deſcribed at large by Ammianus Marcellinus. 7. Iſſus, upon a ſpacious Bay, called hence Sinus Iſſicus, near the Borders of Syria: memorable for the great Battel here fought betwixt Alexander and an handful (in compariſon) of his Macedonians, and that vaſt Army of Darius (himſelf there in perſon) conſiſting of 600000 undiſciplined Aſians; whereof ſo many loſt their lives, that the dead bodies ſeemed to have buried the ground. For, partly by the unskilfulneſs of the Commanders, who choſe ſo ill a place to fight in, that they could make no uſe of their mighty numbers: and partly by the effeminateneſs of the Aſian Souldiers, unable to endure the charge; there fell that day no fewer than 200000 of the Perſians, 4000 of them being taken Priſoners, amongſt them the wives and daughters of Darius, and not above 100 of the Alexandrians, if Qu. Curtius be not partial in relating the ſtory. A victory which aſſured Alexander of his former purchaces, and opened a way unto the reſt: the Perſians not being able to make head again, till he had pierced into the bowels of their Empire, and added Syria and Egypt to his former Conqueſts. Of ſo great conſequence is one full victory to the loſing and getting of a Kingdom. This Town it ſelf now called Aiazzo, and the great Bay on which it ſtandeth Golfo di Aiazzo. 8. Alexandria, built by command of the Conquerour near the place of battel, commodiouſly for trade, as upon the Sea; but otherwiſe in a fenny and boggy ſoyl, which makes the air there to be very unwholſom to men not uſed to it; little now remaining, but a few houſes on the Sea-ſhore built of ſtraw and mud, hardly affording it the reputation of a ſorry Village, and would not long continue ſuch, but that it is the neareſt Haven to the Town of Aleppo (whereof more in Syria) which draweth unto it the reſort of ſome Chriſtian Factors, whoſe houſes are of Clay and Timber; but of them not many. The Town at firſt called Alexandria as before was ſaid; diminiſhed firſt to Alexandretta, now called Scanderone. 9. Nicopolis, another of Alexander's foundations, ſo named in memory of his great victory before mentioned. 10. Amavarza, a City of great Antiquity in the time of Strabo, and the Metropolis of the Province of Cilicia Secunda. 11. Heraclea, mentioned by Bellonius, and by him placed in a fruitful and well-cultivated plain, at the foot of Mount Taurus; a fair and large Town, as he reporteth it, and diſtant from Adana towards the North-weſt about three days journey. But I find no ſuch Town in Strabo, or Ptolemy, or any other of the Antients. 12. Scandeloro, a City of Cilicia Aſpera, or that part of Cilicia, which lyeth towards Pamphylia; heretofore with the adjoyning territory governed as a State diſtinct, when all the reſt of this Countrey was under the Kings of Caramania: againſt whom the Prince hereof, being a Mahometan, had preſerved his liberties, by the aſſiſtance of the Knights of the Rhodes, and the King of Cyprus. And when the Caramanian Kingdom was ſubdued by Bajazet, he made ſo good conditions for himſelf, that he had other lands and eſtates in the Leſſer Aſia, aſſigned to him in exchange for this, and ſo ſurrendred this to the Will of the Conquerours.

The firſt Inhabitants of this Countrey were of the Progeny of Tarſhiſh, the ſon of Javan, by whom, or ſome of his poſterity, to preſerve his memory, the City of Tarſus was firſt built. Increaſing in tract of time by ſome new Colonies out of the neighbouring parts of Syria, it followed for the moſt part the fortunes of it; ſucceſſiveſy together ſubject to the Aſſyrians, Perſians, and Macedonians. In the declining fortunes of the houſe of Seleucus they began to ſtand upon their own legs, and might have continued longer in ſo good a poſture, had they not hearkned to ill Counſels. Tempted by Mithridates to joyn with him againſt the Romans, of whoſe greatneſs all the Eaſtern States were grown very jealous; and being naturally good Sea-faring men, they began together with the Pamphylians, to infeſt the Seas. At firſt they ventured no further than the ſhores adjoyning. But after emboldned with ſucceſs, and finding the Romans were ſufficiently embroiled in Domeſtick troubles, and a ſharp War with Mithridates, fell upon the Coaſts of Greece, and in fine of Italy it ſelf; Publius Servilius the Proconſul firſt employed againſt them, gave them an overthrow at Sea; and following his good fortune, ſet upon them in their Harbours and retiring places. In which perſute he not only took from them Phaſelis, a ſtrong Town in Lycia, one of their Retreats, and others of their beſt and ſtrongeſt Receptacles; but waſting the whole Countrey of Cilicia, fell upon Iſaurus, the moſt defenſible Town thereof, which he took and ranſacked. No ſooner was Servilius departed home, but they broke out more violently than before; filling all the Creeks and Ports of the Eaſtern Seas with their Frigots, Brigantines, and other light Piratical Veſſels, inſomuch that Pompey himſelf thought it to be an action not unbecoming his greatneſs, to undertake the War againſt them. And he perſued it to ſuch purpoſe, that having armed 500 ſayl of all ſorts, and ſtored his ſhips with 130000 men, he ſet upon them all at once; and in the ſpace of one ſole month made an end of the War. An action not ſufficiently to be wondered at; if we conſider either the ſpeedineſs of it, done in ſo little time as a month; or the cheapneſs of the victory, purchaſed without the loſs of one Roman Veſſel; or finally the importance and conſequence of it, the Pirates from that time not daring to infeſt the Seas, and all Cilicia ſubjected to the State of Rome. How they were afterwards diſpoſed of hath been ſhewn already. After this they did very good ſervice unto Pompey in his War againſt Caſar; of whom thus Lucan, reckoning up his Allies and Aids.

> Atque Cilix juſtâ, nunc non Pirata, carinâ.

> And the reform'd Cilicia, now
> No Pirate, in his fleet did row.

Nor were they pliant unto him onely, as unto their Conquerour; but generally ſo tame and tractable in the time of Cicero, one of the firſt Proconſuls, or Lord Deputies, which were ſent to govern them: that he writ merrily to Rome, that he found all quiet in his Province: ſave that the Panthers (ſome of which, one of his friends had prayed him to ſend to Rome, for the adorning of his triumph) were for fear of him fled into Pamphylia. At the firſt conqueſt by the Romans, it was divided only into Campeſtrem and Trachæam, as was ſaid before; of which Campeſtris was reduced immediately to the form of a Province. Aſpera or Trachæa was a while continued under the government of Kings, till the time of Veſpaſian, and then made a Province as the other. By the ſucceeding Emperours, on ſome reaſons of State (if not thoſe intimated in Lycaonia) the number of Provinces being increaſed (though the bounds of the Empire were no larger than they had been formerly,) the whole was divided into three: that is to ſay, Cilicia prima, taking up all Campeſtris wholly; Cilicia ſecunda, conteining the Maritime parts of Cilicia Aſpera; and Iſauria, taking up the mountainous Part of this laſt diviſion. Laid by the Emperour Conſtantine to the Dioceſe of the Orient; and conſequently ſubject in ſpiritual matter to the Patriarch of Antioch, where the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis had his uſual reſidence. In the falling of the Eaſtern Empire, it was conquered by the Saracens in the time of Muhaveas, or Muavi the ſixth Caliph. Continuing under their command till their declination, it was recovered by the Greek or Eaſtern Emperours, and from them conquered by the Turks in the courſe of their victories. But the firſt race of Turkiſh Kings being worn out by the Tartars, and the Aladinian Kings ended in Aladine the ſecond; it was part of the new Kingdom of the Caramanians, continuing theirs till the deſtruction of that line by Bajazet the ſecond, Anno 1486. by whom incorporated with the reſt of the Ottoman Empire.

Cilicia.

Thus having made our progreſs over all the Provinces of the Leſſer Aſia, and ſhewn how every one of them was made ſubject to the Turkiſh tyranny: we muſt next draw down the ſucceſſion of ſuch Turkiſh Kings as have reigned herein, till it was wholly conquered by the Princes of the Houſe of Ottoman. Concerning which we are to know in the way of Preamble, that the Turks having made themſelves Maſters of the Kingdom of Perſia, and following their ſucceſſes into Syria alſo, fell to a breach amongſt themſelves. For making up whereof it was condeſcended unto by Axan, the then Perſian Sultan, that Meloch and Ducat, two of his diſcontented Kinſmen, ſhould be infeoffed in the Cities of Aleppo and Damaſcus, and their ſeveral Territories, with whatſoever they could conquer from the Caliph of Egypt, poſſeſſed at that time of moſt part of Syria, and ſome of the adjoyning Provinces. It was alſo then agreed upon, that a third, but nearer kinſman, called Cutlu Moſes, another of the Leaders of the oppoſite faction, ſhould have leave to conquer for himſelf whatſoever he could win from the Chriſtian Princes: And he accordingly being furniſh'd with a competent Army, ſubdued the Provinces of Media and Armenia in the Greater Aſia; with Cappadocia, Pontus, and Bithynia in Aſia Minor. Which and the reſt of their affairs take here in the enſuing Catalogue of

The Turkiſh Kings in Aſia Minor of the Selzuccian Family.

1075. 1 Cutlu Moſes, Nephew to Trangolipix, the firſt Perſian Sultan of the Turks, won Media, part of Armenia Major, Cappadocia, Pontus and Bithynia.

2. Solyman, ſon of Cultu Moſes, for a while diſpoſſeſſed of moſt of his eſtates by the Weſtern Chriſtians, in their firſt paſſage towards the Holy Land.

3. Mahomet, the ſon of Solyman, recovered moſt of his eſtates in the Leſſer Aſia; but outed of them, and ſubdued by

4. Muſat, Sultan, or Lord Deputy of Iconium; but of the ſame Selzuccian Family, who was thereby poſſeſſed of all the Turkiſh Provinces in the Leſſer Aſia.

5. Ciliſaſtlan, the ſon of Muſat (to whom his father left Iconium, with the adjacent Provinces,) wreſted Amaſia, and Ancyra, from his brother Jagupaſan; Sebaſtia, and Caſarea, from his brother Dodune; which with their ſeveral Territories were bequeathed unto them, by the Will of their father. He overthew the Emperour Emanuel Comnenus, and united Phrygia to his Kingdom.

6. Reucratine, the third ſon of Caliſaſtlan, having diſpoſſeſt his three brethren, Muſat, Cappatine, Caicoſrhoes, of the eſtates left them by their Father, became ſole Monarch of all the Turkiſh Provinces in the Leſſer Aſia. In the later end of whoſe reign, Occata the Tartarian Cham having driven the Turks out of Perſia, many of them under the conduct of Aladine, a Prince of the ſame Selzuccian Family, joyned themſelves to their Countrey-men here, with whoſe help they won Cilicia from the Grecian Emperours, who in the reign of Calo-Johannes, (the Turks being then embroiled by the Weſtern Chriſtians) had not long before regained it, and after the deceaſe of Reucratine, advanced him to the whole eſtate.

The Turkiſh Kings in Aſia Minor, of the race of Aladine.

7. Aladine, deſcended in a direct line from Cuſſanes, the laſt Turkiſh Sultan in Perſia, having with many of his Nation ſeated himſelf in Cilicia, firſt made Sebaſtia, one of the Cities thereof, his chief ſeat or reſidence, which after the death of Reucratine, he removed Iconium as the antient Regal City of the former Kings.

8. Azalide, by ſome called Azadine, the eldeſt ſon of Aladine, waſted the moſt part of his reign in wars with his brother Jathatine; whom at laſt he forced into exile.

9. Jathatine, on the death of his brother poſſeſſeth the Kingdom, ſlain afterward in ſingle combat by Theodorus Laſcaris, Emperour of the Greeks, at Nice.

10. Jathatine II. Son of the former, driven out of his Kingdom by the Tartars, and died in exile; the Turks becoming Tributaries and Vaſſals unto the Tartarian.

Tenedos.

11 Muſat, and Cei-cubades, of the ſame Selzuccian family (but whether the ſons of the ſecond Jathatine, I am not able to ſay) ſubſtituted in his place ; as Tributaries to the conquering Tartars.

12 Aladine II. ſon of Cei-cubades, ſucceeded his father in the Kingdom, but as Vaſſal and Leige-man to the Tartars. After whoſe death, leaving no iſſue of his body, the great Princes of his Family, divided amongſt them his Dominions. To Sarachan fell Æolis, Ionia, and part of Lydia, from him named Sarchan, Sarachan, or Saracha-Illi; to Aidin the reſt of Lydia, Phrygia Major, and the greateſt part of the Greater Myſia, from him called Aidinia, or Aidin-Illi ; to Caraſus, the Leſſer Phrygia, with the reſt of Myſia, from him denominated Caraſan, or Caraſa-Illi ; to the Family of the Iſendiars, the Cities of Heraclea, Sinope, and that part of Pontus which lyeth next to Bithynia. There were alſo leſſer Toparchies, or ſubdiviſions, from whence we find a Prince of Smyrna, a ſecond of Amaſia, a third of Amiſus, a fourth of Scandeloro ; beſides many others. But the main body of the eſtate was ſeized by Caraman, who for his ſhare had the whole Provinces of Lycia, Lycaonia, Pyſidia, Pamphylia, Iſauria, Cilicia, with the Regal City of Iconium, the greateſt part of Caria, (the reſt of it appertaining to the Prince of Menteſia) with part of Cappadocia, and Armenia Minor, and ſome Towns in Phrygia ; continuing in his family for as many deſcents (as either of the former had held before) in great power and luſtre, under

The Turkiſh Kings in Aſia Minor, of the houſe of Caraman.

13 Caraman, the firſt raiſer of this Family, Contemporary with Ottoman the firſt King of that race.

14 Aladine, ſon of Caraman, and ſon-in-law of Amurath the firſt of the houſe of Ottoman, by whom ſubdued, but pardoned and reſtored unto his eſtate, on the humble entreats of his wife.

15 Aladine II: ſon of the former, ſubdued by Bajazet the firſt, and hanged by Tertumaſes, one of Bajazet's great Commanders.

16 Mahomet, ſon of Aladine the ſecond, recovered his Kingdom on the death of Bajazet, vanquiſhed and led captive by the mighty Tamerlane. Afterwards warred upon and vanquiſhed by Mahomet the ſon of Bajazet, redeemed his peace, by yielding up unto him many of his principal Towns ; and was finally ſlain at the ſiege of Attalia.

17 Ibrahim, the ſon of Mahomet, the ſon-in-law of Amurath the ſecond, againſt whom unadviſedly raiſing War, he was forced to ſubmit and become his Tributary : after whoſe death, rebelling againſt Mahomet the Great, he was then alſo vanquiſhed, and a reconciliation made betwixt them.

18 Ibrahim II. by ſome called Pyramus, the ſon of Ibrahim the firſt, ſupported Zemes, brother of Bajazet the ſecond, in his War againſt him : for which Bajazet having ſettled his affairs, invaded and ſubdued the Kingdom of Caramania, killed the unfortunate King in battel, and ſo united that Eſtate unto the reſt of the Dominions of the houſe of Ottoman. The ſtrange ſucceſſes of which houſe, from the firſt riſing of it to theſe preſent times, ſhall be deferred till we come unto Turcomania ; from whence this Nation firſt attempted and atchieved the conqueſt of Perſia, and which onely of all their large poſſeſſions doth retein any thing of their name. In the mean time we will ſurvey the Iſlands of this Leſſer Aſia, and ſo proceed to their poſſeſſions in the Greater, as they ly before us.

19. The Province of the ASIAN ISLES.

The Province of the ASIAN ISLES comprehendeth all the Iſlands in Aſia Minor, from the mouth of the Helleſpont to the Rhodes, reckoning that for one: united firſt into a Province by the Emperour Veſpaſian, next reckoned as a part of the Aſian Dioceſe, and afterwards, together with the Province of the Helleſpont, and that of Aſia properly and eſpecially ſo called, making up the peculiar, or exempt Juriſdiction of the Proconſul of Aſia. Thoſe of moſt conſideration are, 1 Tenedos. 2 Leſbos. 3 Chios. 4 Samos. 5 Coos. 6 Icaria. 7 Patmos. 8 Claros. 9 Carpathos. 10 Rhodes. Others of leſs note, having nothing memorable but their names, are ſcarce worth the naming.

1. TENEDOS, is ſituate at the mouth of the Helleſpont, over againſt the noted Promontory, called of old Sigeum (but now Cape Janizarie) a Promontory of Troas, or the Leſſer Phrygia, from which diſtant not above five miles. The Iſle it ſelf in circuit no more than ten; ſwelling with a round Mountain towards the North, in other parts level ; in both producing as good wines as the beſt of Greece. It took name, as the general tradition was, from Tenes the ſon of Cyenus, King of a little City in the Leſſer Phrygia, who being falſly accuſed by his Step-dame for ſolliciting her to that inceſtuous mixture which ſhe had violently importuned, and he as piouſly refuſed ; was by the command of his Father put into a Cheſt, expoſed to the mercy of the Sea, and here miraculouſly preſerved. Here for a time he is ſaid to reign, with great commendation for his Juſtice ; and afterwards going to the aid of the Trojans, to have been ſlain by the hand of Achilles, of whom therefore it was not lawful to make mention in any of the Sacrifices offered in the Temples hereof. But Bochartus caſting off all this as an old wifes fable, will have it ſo called from Tin edum a Phœnician word, ſignifying Red-clay, which the Potters made uſe of in their earthen Veſſels. A Town it had of the ſame name with the Iſland, in which a Temple ſacred to Apollo Smintbius ; and another called Aſterion, ſituate near a little River well ſtored with Crab-fiſh, whoſe ſhells were made in the form of an Ax, or Hatchet. From which Town, as the Iſlanders have in ſome Authors the name of Aſterii; ſo from the other circumſtance, they are ſaid to have had the ſtamp of an Hatchet on their Coin, or Money. Memorable for an old cuſtom obſerved amongſt them, which was, that at the back of the Judg, there always ſtood a man with an Ax advanced; as well to terrifie the Witneſſes from giving falſe evidence to the Judg, as the Judg from pronouncing a falſe ſentence upon the evidence. Whence the Proverb, Tenedia Securis. More memorable for the final deſtruction of Troy, which was plotted here, the Grecians withdrawing their forces hither, as if gone in earneſt; but from hence ſetting ſail again to ſurpriſe the Town, when they ſaw their plot had took effect. And ſo I leave it with that Character which the Poet gives it:

Eſt in conſpectu Tenedos, notiſſima famâ
Inſula, dives opum Priami dum Regna manebant.
Nunc tantum ſinus, & ſtatio male-fida carinis.

In Engliſh thus:

In ſight of Troy, an Iſland ſtands, well known,
Call'd Tenedos: rich, and of great renown,
Whil'ſt Priam's Kingdom flouriſh'd; now (they ſay)
Grown a poor Road, for Ships an unſafe Bay.

Lesbos.

2. LESBOS, the largeſt of theſe Aſian Iſles, is diſtant from the main Land of Troas, about ſeven miles; 168. in compaſs: reckoned the ſeventh in bigneſs of the Mediterranean, which Ariſtotle in his Book de Mundo, ranketh in this Order following: τούτων αἱ μὲν ἀξιόλογοι, Σικελία, ϗ Σαρδὼ, ϗ Κύρνος, ϗ Κρήτη, ϗ, Εὐβοία, ϗ Κύπρος, ϗ Λέσβος. That is to ſay, The moſt conſiderable of theſe, are Sicily, Sardinia, Corſica, Crete, Euboea, Cyprus, and Lesbos. And though both Scylax in his Periplus, a nameleſs Poet in Euſtathius, Diodorus Siculus, Strabo, and other of the Antients, vary in ordering of the reſt, according as their information, or fancies led them; yet Lesbos comes in the ſeventh place conſtantly, without change at all. Upon which ground Bochartus will have it called Lesbos, from Esburith, a Phœnician word, ſignifying ſeven: contracted firſt to Esbu, by leaving out the laſt ſyllable of it; and then by changing bu to bos, and prefixing L to the beginning. Farr enough fet; and were it but as dearly bought, would be good for Ladies: this Iſland being reckoned in the ſeventh place for no other reaſon, but becauſe it lay furtheſt off, and moſt North from Sicily, from whence they ordered their accompts, and not any myſtery in the name thereof.

It had then the name from Lesbos the chief City of it, as that from Lesbus the Son of Lapythus, who married Methymna, the daughter of Macarius Prince hereof: from which Macarius, it had ſometimes the name of Macaria; as that of Mitylene, by which it is now commonly called, from Mitylene, another of the daughters of the ſaid Macarius. And that the memory of the whole Family might be preſerved in this Iſland, Methymna alſo had a City called by her name, one of the principal of the Countrey.

The Countrey towards the Weſt and South, reported to be mountainous, and ſomewhat barren, the reſt level and fruitful; plentiful of excellent Corn, and abounding in delicious Wines, compared by Athenæus to Ambroſia, the liquor of the Gods, as the Poets fable, affording alſo plenty of Sheep, and ſtore of Horſes; theſe laſt couragious and ſtrong, though but low of ſtature. More memorable for the eminent perſons which it hath produced; as, 1. Sappho, an Heroick woman, whoſe invention was the Sapphick Verſe, and therefore called the Tenth Muſe. 2. Pittacus, one of the ſeven Wiſe-men of Greece. 3. Theophraſtus, that noble Phyſician and Philoſopher. 4. Alcæus, the ſucceſſor of Opheus, in the excellency of Lyrical Poeſie; and, 5. Arion the Muſician, who was ſo perfect on his Harp, that being caſt into the Sea playing on that Inſtrument, a Dolphin took him on his back, and wafted him ſafe as farr as Corinth, where he related the whole Story unto Periander, atteſted by the Mariners who had thrown him overboard. And though this be by ſome rejected as a Poetical Fiction; yet paſt all doubt, the man was not onely an excellent Muſician, but an eminent Poet, the firſt Inventor of Tragedies, a chief Lyrick, and the Author of the Verſe called Dithyrambick.

Principal Towns therein, 1. Lesbos, ἀφ' ἧς ἡ ὅλη νῆσος Λέσβος ἐλέγετο, from whom (ſaith Stephanus) the whole Iſland had the name of Lesbos. 2. Methymna, ſo named from Methymna, one of the daughters of Macarius, and wife of Lesbus, ſpoken of before. 3. Mitylene, ſo named from the other daughter, now the chief City of the Iſland; ſeated on a Peninſula, looking towards the main Land, ſtrong by Nature, and fortified by Art: enjoying on either ſide a commodious Haven, that on the South moſt fit for Gallies; the other capable of Ships of burthen. Beautified heretofore with magnificent Buildings, and ſweetned with variety of delights and pleaſures; little now left of it ſince ſubdued by the Turks, but a ſtrong Caſtle, manned with an able Garriſon, and a well-ſtored Arſenal for Gallies, kept here in readineſs to preſerve thoſe Seas from Pirats, with which much infeſted. But the two firſt long ſince decayed and grown out of knowledge, thoſe of moſt note next Mitylene, are, 4. Vaſilica. 5. Theodori. 6. Caſtel-Gera; all of late days, and therefore of no obſervation in point of Story.

The Iſland was firſt inhabited by the Pelaſgians, conducted hither by Zanthus the Son of Triopus; whence named Pelaſgia; afterwards by ſome Ionians, and people of ſundry Nations, planted here by Macarius (the Father of Mitylene and Methymna) who by his prudence and the reputation of his juſtice, obtained a kind of Soveraignty over the neighbouring Iſlands. Lesbus the Son of Lapythus ariving here with his Family, married Methymna, and had the Iſland for her Dower; though Mitylene had the hap to have the predominant City, and the Iſland conſequently called by her name. Made ſubject to the

the State of Athens, in the time of the Peloponneſian Warr (when almoſt all Greece banded againſt that City) they revolted from it, and were ſo ſtraightly beſieged by Paches. an Athenian Captain, that they ſubmitted unto mercy. The General ſends to Athens, to know what ſhould be done with the Mitylenians; Anſwer was ſent, that he ſhould put them to the ſword. But the Senate on the morrow after, repenting of that cruel Decree, ſent a countermand. Theſe later Meſſengers made no ſtay, but eating with one hand, and rowing with the other, came to Mitylene, juſt as Paches was reading the former Order; by this ſpeed prevented. So near were theſe miſerable People to a fatal deſtruction. Subdued by the Romans, with the reſt of Geece, they fell together with it to the Conſtantinopolitan Emperors: from whom taken, with Chios, Samos, Andros, and ſome other of theſe Iſles, Anno 1124. by the State of Venice, upon a quarrel betwixt them and the Grecian Emperor. Confirmed unto that Signeury by the Emperor Baldwin, and all the reſt of the Ægean added to their portion; thoſe above named were again recovered by the valour and good fortune of John Ducas the Greek Emperor, then reſiding at Nice. Afterwards in the year, 1335. the Emperor Calo-Johannes gave it to Franciſcus Cataluſius, a Noble Gentleman of Genoa, with one of his ſiſters, for her dower. By whoſe Poſterity enjoyed, till the year 1462. when Mahomet the Great, incenſed againſt Dominicus Cataluſius the then Lord hereof, for the murther of his elder brother, a Vaſſal and Tributary of his Empire (thoſe Princes paying to the Turk an annual tribute of 4000 Ducats) but more for harbouring the Pirats of Spain and Italy, beſieges him in Mitylene his principal City, which in 27 days (for ſo long it held) he conſtrained to ſubmit unto him, and therewith all the Iſland alſo. Some of the chief Families being removed unto Conſtantinople, upon ſome reaſons of State, the main body of the people were permitted to remain here to till the Land; and ſo continue to this day, with ſome few Turks, conſiderable for their ſtrength, or numbers, intermixed among them.

3. CHIOS, the next to Lesbos both in ſite and bigneſs, lieth oppoſite to the ſhore of Ionia, from which diſtant not above four leagues, is in compaſs about 126 miles. So called, as ſome ſay, from Chione a fair Nymph hereof, much ſought after by many Suters: others ſay, from χιὼν, a Greek word ſignifying Snow, wherewith the Mountains of it are ſometimes covered And ſome again will have it take name from Chios, the chief City of it, which being built in the form of the Greek Letter χ, firſt got that name unto it ſelf, and afterwards did communicate it to the whole Iſland. Iſidore in his Origines gives another reaſon, and will have it called ſo from a Syriack word ſignifying Maſtick, whereof there is plenty in this Iſle. Chios Inſula (ſaith he) Syrâ Linguâ appellatur, eo quod ibi Maſtyx gignitur; Siri enim Maſtichen Chion vocant. And were it ſo, that Chios in the Syriack did ſignifie Maſtick, there could no better reaſon be aſſigned for the name: this Iſland being more furniſhed with that commodity, than any place in the world beſides. A Gum it is growing out of the Lentisk Tree, which in the Moneth of July and Auguſt the Inhabitants force out of thoſe Trees, by making with ſharp Inſtruments a deep inciſion into the bark of them; out of which the juyce dropping, is afterwards hardned like a Gum, and in September following gathered. A Commodity which yieldeth yearly to the Inhabitants 18000 Sultanies, every Sultany being valued at the rate of a Zechine of Venice: and therefore the felling of the Lentisk Tree, at the time of diſtilling of this precious juyce interdicted, on the penalty of loſing the right hand of him that doth it.

Other Commodities of this Iſland, are Corn and Oyl in indifferent plenty, ſome Quarries of moſt excellent Marble, a certain green Earth like the ruſt of Braſs; ſome Silks and Cotton-Wool, but ſhort in worth to thoſe of Smyrna, and other places: Honey as good as any the World affordeth; and a vein of moſt delicious Vines, thoſe eſpecially which grow on the Mountain Arvis, now called Amiſta. Of which Pliny gives this commendation, In ſumma gloria fuere Thaſium, Chiumque; ex Chio, quod Arviſium vocant. Of all Wines (ſaith he) thoſe of Thaſius and Chios, are of beſt eſteem; and of thoſe of Chios the Arviſian. Strabo extolleth them in the Superlative degree, and calleth the Wine hereof οἶνον ἀριςὸν τῶν Ἑλληνικῶν, incomparably the beſt of Greece. And Plutarch, ſpeaking of an Epicurean, or voluptuous liver, affirms, that he conceived it the ſupreme felicity: Λαῒ δὲ συγγνέσθαι, ϗ πεῖν Ἀριούσιον, to lie with Lais, and drink theſe Arviſian Wines. Here are alſo infinite ſtore of Partriges, of a red colour, kept tame, and fed in flocks like Geeſe, in the Streets and Greenſwarths of their Villages: ſome little Boy or Girle driving them to field, and calling them home again with a Whiſtle, when the night comes on.

The Iſland divided commonly into two parts, the Higher, called Apanomera, lying towards the North and Weſt; hilly and rough, but intermixed with fruitful Vales and pleaſant Rivers; the Lower oppoſite unto it, called Catamorea, ſwelled here and there with gentle Hillocks, on which groweth the Lentisk. The whole inhabited by Greeks, intermix'd with Genoeſe, and (ſince their conqueſt by that people) ſome few Turks amongſt them. Which mixture with the Genoeſe, tempereth the levity of the Greeks with Italian gravity: the better ſort of people both in apparel, and manners, coming neer the Genoeſe, once the Lords of this Iſland; the common ſort continuing their old Greek humor of mirth and jollity (not ſenſible of the Turkiſh thraldom under which they ſuffer) with as much licentiouſneſs as ever. And though this intermixture hath ſo corrupted their Language, that neither the Greek nor the Italian be here rightly ſpoken, but a compound Tongue made up of both; yet keep they their Religions ſtill diſtinct and ſeparate, as if they had never known one another.

Here are reckoned in it ſix and thirty Towns and Villages, the principal whereof are, 1. S. Elias, in the North. 2. Pigrine, in the midſt hereof; and 3. Chios it ſelf, now calle Sio (as is all the Iſland) one of the ſeven Cities contending for the birth of Homer; whoſe Sepulchre they pretend to ſhew in an old Caſtle near the Mount and Town of S. Elias (which were it his, would be a better argument for his burial here, than it is for his birth.) The Town ſituate in the moſt pleaſant and fruitful part of the Samos.

Countrey, to which both Induſtry and Art hath given great advantage: here being few houſes without Orchards of excellent fruits; as Oringes, Limons, Pomgranates, Citrons, and a kind of Figg, much praiſed for their quickneſs of taſte by the antient Romans. It ſtands on the Eaſt ſide oppoſite to the ſhore of Aſia, ſtretched along the bottom of the Haven, and on the Weſt-ſide backed with a rocky Mountain, upon which it formerly did ſtand. The Buildings ordinary, the Streets narrow, and the Haven every day decaying; though otherwiſe ſecure once entred; and for directing of the entrance, a Lantern advanced by the Genoeſe (when Lords thereof) to give light by the night, and ſerve for a land-mark in the day. Fortified on the North-ſide by a large and ſtrong Caſtle, environed with deep Ditches, well furniſhed with munition, and a Turkiſh Garriſon. And, becauſe the Iſland is on all parts acceſſible, not naturally fortified with rocks, and dangerous precipices, as many others; beſides this Caſtle, they have all along the Coaſt ſmall Watch-towers, which with ſmoak by day, and fire by night, give notice unto one another, of ſuch Veſſels as they ſee approaching: the Guards about the Caſtle being ſo intent alſo about their charge, that every minute of the night, there goes a word about the walls to declare their vigilancy.

The Chians were at firſt a free people, governing themſelves as a Common-wealth; and by reaſon of their many Harbours, able to furniſh out a Navie of 80 Sail, which gave them the Lordſhip of thoſe Seas, till eclipſed by the Rhodians. Beſieged by Philip, the Father of Perſeus, with his utmoſt power, who, when he could not get it by force, proclaimed freedom to the Slaves (of which here were many) and liberty to marry with their Maſters Wives, if they would rebell againſt their maſters. And when this policy would not do it, the Town being held out with greater heat of indignation, he gave over the ſiege. At laſt they became ſubject to the Romans with the reſt of Greece, and followed punctually the ſame change of fortunes, as did thoſe of Lesbos; which we have ſpoken of before: till given by Andronicus Palaeologus, one of the laſt Greek Emperors, to the Juſtinians, a Noble Genoeſian Family, aſſiſtant to him in his Warrs. Under them it continued as tributaries to the Turks (after the Turks had made themſelves Maſters of Conſtantinople) to whom they annually paid eighteen thouſand Ducats, till the year 1566. When Solyman the Magnificent, picking a quarrel with them for ſome ſuſpected correſpondency with the Knights of Malta, commanded Pial, one of his greateſt Baſſa's, to ſeiz the Iſland. And he accordingly preſenting himſelf before the City, with a ſtrong Fleet of eighty Gallies, did ſo aſtoniſh and amaze the Inhabitants of it, that without any other ſummons than the ſight of his Navie, they ſurrendred themſelves unto his diſpoſing upon Eaſter-day, being the ſame day he came before it. Since that time it hath continued Turkiſh, all, ſave their Religion, enjoyed by them with like liberty, as in former times.

4. SAMOS, is on the South-eaſt of Chios, diſtant about five miles from the ſhores of Ionia; about eighty, or eighty ſeven in compaſs; environed for the moſt part, eſpecially on the North-weſt, with inacceſſible rocks, but beautified with a fair and capacious Haven of little uſe by reaſon of the Pirats who infeſt thoſe Seas. The ſoil ſufficiently enriched with moſt kind of fruits, abundantly plentifull of Oyl and Olives, but of Vines altogether unfurniſhed; which is the more to be admired, in regard all the Iſlands and Shores about it, produce them in ſo great a plenty. It ſtretcheth from the Eaſt to the Weſt: and on the South part of it ſtood the City of Samia, near unto the Haven before ſpoken of. In former times populous, and well inhabited as was the reſt of the Iſland; now wholly deſolate in a manner, becauſe of the Pirats, and in moſt places, very much over-grown with Woods; becoming thereby very uſeful to thoſe publick enemies, who find here Timber enough for Shipping, and can, upon the ſudden, but a Ship to Sea, for perſute of their Robberies. The chief commodities it affordeth beſides thoſe above, is Medicinal Earth, uſeful for Chirurgery and Phyſick: of which in former times were thoſe Veſſels made, called Vaſa Samia, in great requeſt amongſt the Romans.

Antiently, it had the names of Dryuſa, Anathemuſa, Melamphylas, and Cipariſſa; out-worn by that of Samos, which it ſtill reteineth. Memorable in old times for the birth of Juno, of one of the Sibyls, hence called Samia; and finally, of the wiſe man Pythagoras (a wiſer than any of the ſeven wiſe Maſters ſo renowned amongſt them) who firſt brought Philoſophy into Greece, and from thence into Italy. Once a free Common-wealth, of no ſmall eſteem, the Inſtitutes whereof are mentioned by Heraclides, in his Books of the ſeveral Commonwealths then being: afterwards made ſubject to the Tyrant Polycrates, a man ſo fortunate, that for a long time he never fell into any miſchance. Fearing leſt ſuch a long calm would bring on a Tempeſt, he let fall into the Sea a moſt precious Ring by him deſervedly eſteemed; that ſo it might be ſaid, he had ſome miſ-fortunes. Which afer he had found again in the belly of a Fiſh, brought accidentally to his Table, he was overcome by Orontes, a Perſian, and brought to a miſerable death. Leaving a notable example, that fortune is certain in nothing but uncertainties; and like a Bee with a ſharp ſting, hath always ſome miſery fellowing in the train of a long concatenation of felicity. From this time forwards, it ran the ſame fortune with the reſt of theſe Iſlands; ſubject ſucceſſively to the greateſt Monarchies in former times, as of late times to the Venetians, Greeks, and Turks, who do now enjoy it.

5. ICARIA (now called Niceria). lieth not farr from Samos, to the Weſt-ward of it, narrow, but extended out in length, the whole compaſs ſeven and thirty miles: neighboured by two great Rocks, or little Iſlands, of old called Melanthii, now the Fernaces; formidable at all times to Mariners, in the night eſpecially. Meanly inhabited at the preſent, though abundant in paſturage, and yielding ſufficiency of Corn; Havenleſs, and therefore the leſs frequented, yet that defect ſupplied by commodious Roads. In former times called Doliche, then Macris, after Ichſiaſa: which name it held till the flight of Dedalus out of Crete. Who juſtly fearing the anger of Minos, for being Pandar to his Wife in her love with Taurus, ſecretly with Icarus his Son, fled out of that Iſland. And becauſe he would be ſure to out-ſtrip the Rowers who perſued him, he added ſails unto his Boat, which it is ſaid he firſt invented. But Icarus, coming after in another Bark, delighted with the new device, clapped on too much Canvaſs, and bearing too great a ſail, was here caſt away. Hence the new name, both to this Iſland, and the Seas adjoining to it: and the occaſion of the Fable of Dedalus putting wings upon his ſhoulders, when he fled from Crete; and of his Sons flying too high, whereby the Wax melted which his wings were faſtned with, and ſo he periſhed in the water. Of which thus Ovid:

> Dum petit infirmis nimium ſublimia pennis
> Icarus, Icariis nomina fecit aquis.

In Engliſh thus:

> Whil'ſt Icarus' weak wings too high did ſoar,
> He fell, and gave name to th' Icarian ſhore.

6. PATMOS, now called Palmoſa, is ſituate on the South of the other two; A little Iſland not above 30 miles in compaſs. Mountainous, but indifferently fruitful, eſpecially of Wheat and Pulſe; of other commodities and fruits, not ſo well provided. On one of theſe Mountains ſtands a Town of the ſame name with the Iſland; having on the top thereof a Monaſtery of Greek Caloires; and on the bottom a fair Haven (I mean in reference to the Iſland.) Fourty ſail of Ships are ſaid to belong unto it; by the trading thereof, they bring in thoſe proviſions which the ſoil affordeth not: the ſoil about the Town being ſo incomparably barren, that nothing groweth on, or near it, but on ſuch earth as is brought thither from other places, unto this Iſland (as to others in other parts of the World) did the Roman Emperors uſe to confine offenders. A puniſhment laid by Domitian on S. John the Divine, who in this place writ his Revelation, to the Churches of Aſia. So much the Text affirms for certain, as to the writing of it in this Iſland. And the Inhabitants by tradition, point unto a houſe on the North-ſide of the Town, in which it was written, and not farr off, the Cave where it was revealed. Both places equally honoured by the Greeks and Latines. They alſo ſhew a dead man's hand, which they affirm to be his, the nails whereof grow again as oft as cut. But the Turks (ſaith Maginus) claim it for the Hand of one of their Prophets. Let them diſpute the controverſie, whileſt we haſten to

7. CLAROS, another Iſland not farr off, containing about 40 miles in compaſs. Well ſtored with commodious Harbours, but very mountainous; ſome of thoſe hills of ſuch an height, that from the tops thereof, the City of Epheſus in Ionia, (though diſtant at leaſt eighty miles) may be eaſily ſeen. It is now called Calamo. Neighboured by Lero (of old called Ileron) a little Iſland not above eighteen miles in circuit; but very populous, inhabited both by Greeks and Turks, and furniſhing the neighbouring Countreys with ſome ſtore of Aloes. Sacred in former times was Claros, to Apollo; reckoned by him amongſt his honours, in his brags to Daphne; where he declares,

> ——— Mihi Delphica tellus, > Et Claros, & Tenedos, Pataræaque Regia ſervit.

That is to ſay:

> The folk of Delphos, Tenedos, and Clare.
> And Royal Catara, my Vaſſals are.

8. COOS, COS, or COUS, for by all theſe names it was called of old, is ſituate over againſt Caria, in the very bottom of the Ægean, that is to ſay, in that part thereof which is called Mare Myrtoum, the Myrtoan Sea. A Sea ſo called, as ſome ſay, from one Myrtilus, the Coach-man, or Charioteer, of Œnomaus, who having betrayed his race with Pelops, and importunate for his reward, was by Pelops precipitated into this Sea. Pliny leſs probably conceiveth that it took the name from Myrtos, a little Iſland not farr from Eubœa, a little too farr off to extend its name to the ſhores of Caria. And therefore conſidering that Lydia antiently was called Myrtus, and that in thoſe times Æolis, and Ionia, lying on this Sea, were accompted but as parts thereof, I think we may reſolve with more probability, that it derived this name from that of Lydian Myrtus.

In this Sea ſtands the Iſle of Coos, now called Lange, affording Saylers as they paſs by, a moſt beautiful proſpect, lying for the moſt part flat and level, but ſwelling towards the Eaſt with ſome gracefull Mountains, out of which iſſue many ſweet and pleaſant Springs to refreſh the Iſland, which maketh it more than ordinary fruitful. Productive of Cypreſs Trees, Turpentine, nd ſundry others, both delightful and Medicinal; but moſt eſpecially, celebrated for thoſe rich Wines, which the Good Fellows of Rome ſo much loved to quaff, called Vinum Cos. It is in compaſs 70 miles, having a Town of the ſame name, in the Suburbs whereof ſtood antiently the Temple of Æſculapius, famous and rich with the offerings of thoſe, who having by his aſſiſtance (as they ſuppoſed) recovered health, came thither to make payment of their Vows, and expreſs their Gratitude. It is now fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle, held by a Garriſon of Turks: and beſides this, two Villages onely in the Iſland, and both inhabited by Greeks.

In elder times, it had the name of Merope, Caria, and Nymphæa, and at laſt of Coos. Memorable in being the Countrey of many famous men, who were herein born: viz. of Hippocrates, the Reviver of Phyſick, then almoſt decayed, who is hence called Hippocrates Cous. 2. Sinius, a Phyſician alſo; 3. Ariſton, a Peripatetick Philoſopher; 4. Philetus, as good an Orator, as a Poet; 5. Nicias, who for a time oppreſſed the liberty of his people; and, 6. of Apelles, the famous Painter; who to expreſs his art in the picture of Venus (riſing naked out of the Sea) aſſembled together all the moſt beautiful women of this Iſland, uniting in that piece their divided perfections. Which famous piece being afterwards hanged up in the Temple of Stomalimne, one of the principal of this Iſland, was thence conveyed to Rome by Auguſtus, and there dedicated to Cæſar, as the Mother of the Julian Family: the Coans in regard thereof, being eaſed of a great part of their annual tributes. Not much leſs memorable for that fine thin Stuff (ſuch as now called Tiffanies) ſo much in uſe amongſt the Chief Ladies in Rome; which at once ſhewed them cloathed and naked. Perlucidâ utuntur veſte, ita ut nudé conſpici poſſint, as my Author hath it. Theſe they called Veſtimenta Coa, and Veſtes Coas, ſo often mentioned by the Poets, eſpecially, in their Amatoria; as Coa puellis veſtis, in Tibullus; Indue me Cois, in Propertius: Sive erit in Cois, ſaith the Poet Ovid. So in others alſo, too many, and too long to be added here. I paſs to

9. CARPATHOS, ſituate on the South of Caria, in the Mediterranean, from this Iſland, called hereabouts, the Carpathian Sea. A rugged and unpleaſing ſoil, full of difficult Mountains, but thoſe Mountains ſtored with Quarries of moſt excellent Marble. In circuit about 60 miles, extending more in length than breadth. Heretofore beautified with four Cities, and thence named Tetrapolis. But three of the four Cities are long ſince periſhed, that of Carpathos being ſtill remaining, and ſtill the principal of the Iſland; both now called Scarpanto. Some other Towns it hath all along the ſhore, and every one of them, furniſhed with ſome Port, or Haven; but ſmall, and, for the moſt part, very unſafe. Situate in the middle, as it were, betwixt Crete and Rhodes, it hath continued hitherto in poſſeſſion of the State of Venice (if not taken from them very lately) to whom being given, with other of the Iſlands of theſe Grecian Seas, at the taking of Conſtantinople by the Weſtern forces, it hath the fortune, or felicity to continue theirs, when almoſt all the reſidue were ſubdued by the Turks. The people Greek, of the Communion of that Church, notwithſtanding their ſubjection to a State of Italy.

10. RHODES, ſituate in the Rhodian, or Carpathian Sea, lyeth over againſt the Coaſt of Lycia, in Aſia Minor, from which diſtant about 20 miles. Formerly called Ophiuſa, Aſteria, Æthræa, Trinachia, Pœeſſa, Corymbia, Atabyria, and at laſt, Macaria; it ſettled finally and fortunately in the name of Rhodes. So named by the Grecians from the abundance of Roſes, which the ſoil produceth, Rhodos in that language ſignifying a Roſe, the Iſle of Roſes, as it were: but, the Poets ſay, of Rhoda, a Nymph of theſe Seas, here deflowred by Apollo; or rather of Rhoda, one of the daughters of Apollo begat on Venus. For ſo one of them thus declareth:

Inſula dicta Rhodos, de Sole & Cypride nata eſt.

Rhoda, from whom this Iſle took name,
Of Venus and Apollo came.

The Iſland 140 miles in compaſs, enriched with a moſt temperate air, and a fertile ſoil, producing fruits in very great plenty, full of excellent paſtures; adorned with Trees, which always do continue green; and in a word, ſo bleſs'd with the gifts of Nature, that it gave occaſion to the Fable of thoſe Golden Showers, which were once ſaid to have fallen upon it. The Wines hereof ſo excellent, and ſo rich of taſte, that by the Romans they were uſed in their ſecond courſes, or reſerved for the ſacrifices of the Gods, as too good for mortals as affirmed by Virgil in the Georgicks. The cauſe of which perpetual flouriſhing, and continual ſpring, is to be aſcribed to the powerfull influence of the Sun, ſo dearly cheriſhing this Iſland, or ſo much in love with it, that it is conſtantly affirmed that no day paſſeth wherein he ſhineth not clearly on it, be the air in all other places never ſo much over-caſt with Clouds, or obſcured by miſts. Feigned for that cauſe to have been naturally a meer Mariſh, altogether inhabitable, if not covered with waters: till loved by Phœbus, and erected above the waters by his vigorous influences.

Of the People we ſhall ſpeak anon; Look we in the mean time on the places of moſt obſervation. 1. Lindum (now Lindo, a pety Town, but formerly of more eſteem) of note in thoſe times for the Temple conſecrated to Minerva, by Danaus King of Egypt, landing here when he fled out of that Kingdom. As alſo for the birth of Chares the Architect of the huge Coloſſus, whereof more preſently; but eſpecialy for the Nativity of Cleobulus, one of the ſeven wiſe men of Greece: the other ſix being Solon of Athens, Periander of Corinth, Chilo of Sparta, Bias of Priene, Thales of Miletum, and Pittacus of Mytilene. Seven men of whom the Grecians moſt immenſly bragged, as if the World could neither afford them equals, or an equal number; for which derided handſomly by Lactantius, an old Chriſtian Writer, who ſcoffs their paucity, and calleth it a miſerable and calamitous Age, In quo ſeptem ſoli fuerunt qui hominum vocabula mererentur; in which there were no more than ſeven, who deſerved to be accompted men. 2. Rhodes, antiently, as now the chief City of it, the Iſland from thence taking name, and formerly, as well as in later times, depending on the fortunes and ſtrength thereof. No place in elder times held ſuperiour to it, for the conveniency of the Haven, magnificent buildings, delightful Orchards, and other excellencies. Situate on the Eaſt part of the Iſle, on the declining of an Hill, and near the Sea, where it enjoyeth a ſafe and commodious Haven: treble walled, fortified with thirteen Turrets, and five ſtrong Bulwarks, beſides divers Sconces, and other out-works; this Town, and Famaguſta, in the Iſle of Cyprus, being conceived to be the two ſtrongeſt Holds in the Turkiſh Empire. In former times, one of the principal Univerſities of the Roman Empire; this Rhodes, Marſeilles, Tarſus, Athens, and Alexandria, being reckoned the old Academies of that Monarchy. And to this Town, as a moſt noted place of ſtudy, Tiberius (afterwards Emperor) did withdraw himſelf, when Auguſtus had declared his ſecond Nephews, Lucius and Caius, for his Heirs; pretending onely a deſire to improve himſelf in the ways of literature; whereas the true cauſe was his envie at their preferment. Honoured in thoſe times with the huge Coloſſus, one of the ſeven wonders of the World, made by Chares of Lindum, before mentioned. Compoſed of Braſs, in height ſeventy Cubits, every finger of it being as great as an ordinary man; and conſecrated to the Sun, as the proper Deity of the Iſland. Twelve years in making, and having ſtood but 66 years was pulled down in an inſtant, by an Earthquake, which terribly ſhook the whole Iſland. The Rhodians being forbidd by an Oracle to erect it again (or poſſibly pretending ſuch an Oracle to ſave that charge) yet held the Braſs and other Materials of it, in a manner, ſacred. Not meddled with, nor ſacrilegiouſly purloined till Mnavias, the General of Oſmen, the Mahometan Caliph, finding in himſelf no ſuch ſcruple of conſcience (after he had ſubdued this Iſland) made a prey hereof, loading nine hundred Camels with the very Braſs of it. From this Coloſſus was the Iſland ſometimes called Coloſſa, and the people Coloſsians: not thoſe Coloſsians, (as ſome have very vainly thought) to whom S. Paul writ his Epiſtle, thoſe being of Coloſſe, a Town of the Greater Phrygia, as hath there been noted. Here was alſo in this City antiently a Temple of Bacchus, enriched with many preſents both of Greeks and Romanes; of both which people, the Rhodians were then held in a fair eſteem; but the God, and the good Wines in greater. Towns of leſs note, are 3 Villana. 4 Ruſsicare, and ſome others, but as little memorable.

This Iſland was firſt peopled by Dodanim the Son of Javan, and the Grand-child of Japhet, whom the Greeks call commonly, but corruptly, Rhodanim; miſtaking the Hebrew letter, Daleth for that of Reſh, letters ſo like, as eaſily it might draw them to that miſtake. Finding this Iſland too narrow for him, he left here a Colony, and, with the main Body of his people, paſſed into Greece; where he planted the Countrey of Epirus, as hath there been ſaid. Thoſe which ſtayed here, being miſtakingly called Rhodians (or called ſo by the Grecians, not looking with too curious eyes into their Antiquities, from the abundance of Roſes herein growing) making the beſt uſe of their Haven, and other the advantages of their ſituation, became ſo expert in Maritime affairs, that by Florus, they are ſtyled Populus nauticus; and that not onely in the way of Trade and Merchandize, but of power and government; holding for many years the command of theſe Seas, and preſcribing Laws for the Regleimant of Navigation. Which being called the Rhodian Laws, became a general Rule for deciding Marine cauſes, and ordering the affairs of Sea in all Parts and Provinces of the Roman Empire: and ſo continued till ſupplanted in theſe Weſtern parts by the Laws of Oleron. Fearfull of falling under the Macedonians, they applied themſelves unto the Romans, whom firſt they aided in their Warrs againſt Philip, the Father of Perſeus; and afterwards in that alſo againſt Antiochus. Rewarded for this laſt ſervice with Lycia and Caria, two of the Aſian Provinces, which Antiochus was to leave on his compoſition; they became ſo faithfully affected to the State of Rome, that when all the other Iſlands of the Mediterranean and Ægean Seas revolted to Mithridates, King of Pontus; this only adhered unto the Romans. Proud either of their ſtrength at Sea, or of thoſe good Offices, they began to take upon them as Mediators, and thought themſelves fit men to adviſe their Maſters. Grown troubleſome by their frequent interpoſitions, and loſing much of their eſteem by ſuch impertinencies; they began to grow jealous of the Romans, and incline to Perſeus King of Macedon; whoſe Father they before oppoſed with their utmoſt power. A change which Paterculus expreſſeth with ſome admiration. Rhodii ipſi fideliſsimi antea Romanis, dubia jam fide proniores in Regis partes viſi ſunt, as his words there are. But yet they held for them againſt Mithridates, as before was ſaid; and ſerved their turn on all occaſions, until inſenſibly they betrayed their liberty to the power of their friends; and of Confederates and Allies, became their Vaſſals. Made by Veſpaſian into a Province with the reſt of the Iſles; which gave the Title of Metropolitan to the Biſhop of Rhodes. Under that Empire it continued (or under that of Conſtantinople after the diviſion) till the year 1124. when taken from the Grecians by the State of Venice; again recovered by the Greeks, in the time of their Emperor, John Ducas, then reſiding at Nice, from the Grecians by the Turks, the Knights of Saint John of Hieruſalem, being utterly driven out of Aſia, poſſeſſed themſelves of it, by the favour of Emanuel the then Emperor, who aided them in the Conqueſt, Anno 1308. Afterwards proving bad neighbours to the Turkiſh Tyrants, whom they ceaſed not to infeſt upon all occaſions, they were many times in vain invaded: Mahomet the Great, for taking Conſtantinople, and the Empire of Trabezond, ſpending ſome time before their City, with both loſs and ſhame. At laſt, Anno 1522. it was again beſieged by Solyman the Magnificent, Lilladamus Villerius, being then great Maſter: who did as much in defence hereof, as policy and puiſſance could extend unto. But multitude in the end prevailed, and upon Chriſtmas-Day, the Turk entred Rhodes as Conqueror; though poſſibly he might have ſaid (as Pyrrhus once ſaid of a like Victory againſt the Romans) that ſuch another Victory would quite have undone him. Since that a Province of the Turks, by whom, and by ſome Jews baniſhed out of Spain, the City of Rhodes is wholly inhabited: the Chriſtians which are licenſed to dwell in the Countrey, and have leave to trade there in the day-time, not ſuffered upon pain of death to ſtay there all night. And ſo we paſs from the Iſland of the Aſian Dioceſe, to the Iſle of Cyprus, a near neighbour unto Anatolia; but no member of it: the reſt of that Dioceſe, and thoſe Seas, as 11. Poſſidium. 12. Arceſine, 13. Bugiales. 14. Minyas. 15. Sirne. 16. Ceſi, and the reſt, yielding but little matter of obſervation beſides their names.

OF CYPRUS.

CYPRVS is ſituate in the Syrian and Cilician Seas, extended at length from Eaſt to Weſt two hundred miles; in breadth, ſixty; the whole compaſs reckoned five hundred and fifty. Diſtant about ſixty miles from the rocky ſhores of Cilicia, in Aſia Minor, and about an hundred from the main land of Syria: towards which it ſhooteth it ſelf out with a long ſharp Promontory, extending heretofore to the main land, from which rent in former time by a violent Earthquake, as is ſaid by Pliny; and worn unto this narrowneſs by the continual working of the Sea upon it.

No place hath oftner changed his name, or at leaſt had more names on the By than this. Called at firſt Cethin, or Cethinia, from Ketim the ſon of Javan, who firſt planted in it. 2. Ceraſtis, from the abundance of Promontories, thruſting like horns into the Sea (as the word intimates in the Greek. 3 Amathuſia. 4 Paphia. 5 Salamina; theſe three laſt from the principal Towns in thoſe parts hereof. 6 Macaria, from the fruitfulneſs and felicities of it. Beſides theſe it hath in ſome times had theſe By-names alſo, as 7 Aſperia, from the roughneſs of the ſoil. 8 Collinia, from the frequency of Hills and Mountains. 9 Æroſa, from the Mines of Braſs, which abound therein. 10 And finally, all thoſe forgotten or laid by, it ſetled at the laſt in the name of Cyprus. So called, ſay ſome, from the abundance of Cypreſs Trees, with which moſt plentifully provided; as others, from Cryptos a Greek word, ſignifying concealed, or hidden, becauſe ſometimes concealed by the Surges from the eye of Saylors; but moſt improbably ſaid by others to take name from Cyrus, who founded here the City of Aphrodiſia; whereas indeed ſix hundred years before Cyrus his birth we find it by this name in Homer. More rightly Stephanus, who deriveth it, ἀπὸ Κύπρȣ τῆς θυγατρὸς Κινύρȣ, from Cyprus daughter of Cinyras, one of the Kings hereof, living before the Trojan wars: though in my mind the firſt comes neareſt to the truth, the Cypreſs Tree, not onely growing here in ſo great abundance, but being antiently peculiar in a manner to this Iſland onely.

But on what ground ſoever it was called Cyprus, certain I am it had the name of Ceraſtis upon very good reaſon: no Iſland or Region that I know of (for the bigneſs of it) thruſting out ſo many ſharp Promontories. For on the Weſt, there is 1. the Promontory called Acamas, now Capo S. Piſano. 2 Drepanum, now Trapano and Melechia. 3 Zephyrum, or Caput Calidoni, now Punta Malota. On the South, 4 Phrurium, now Capo Bianco. 5 Curias, or Capo della Gatte. 6 Gades, or Capo Chiti. 7 Throni, or Capo Pila. On the Eaſt, 8 Pendalium, now Capo di Griego. 9 Clides, now Capo S. Andrea. And on the North, 10 Cronyon, now Capo Cornochiette; beſides ſome other of leſs note. Some of the Poets give another reaſon of this name, as that Venus offended with the people of Amathus for ſacrificing their gueſts, ſhould turn them into horned Cattel, Vnde etiam nomen traxere Ceraſtæ, as it is in Ovid. But that meerly fabulous; ſomewhat of kin unto the Legend of Thomas Becket, and the Kentiſh Long-tails. Yet ſo far we may joyn with Ovid, that the Iſland was not onely called Ceraſtis, but that the people were alſo called Ceraſtæ, of which there wants not proof from ſome other Authors; with which we need not trouble our ſelves, that name being altogether worn out of uſe, and no other but that of Cyprus given it in common ſpeech. Nor is it a matter of more ſtrangeneſs, that Cyprus ſhould be called ſo by the Grecians, from its abundance of Cypreſs Trees, antiently and originally peculiar to this Iſland, as before was noted; than that the ſame Grecians ſhould give unto the neighbouring Iſland the name of Rhodes, from its great plenty of Roſes: or to the neighbouring Continent the name of Phœnicia, from its great plenty of Palm-trees; the words ſo ſignifying in that Language.

It is ſituate under the fourth Climate, ſo that the longeſt day in Summer is no more than 14 hours and a half; and for that cauſe the air in Summer time exceeding hot and ſweltry: the ſoil moiſtned with ſome few brooks, meriting rather the name of torrents, than Rivers, which being generated for the moſt part by rain water, are not ſeldom dried up by the heat of the Sun; inſomuch that in the reign of Conſtantine the Great; that Iſland was for 36 years together almoſt utterly forſaken, no rain falling all that time. Theſe inconveniences notwithſtanding, it is ſtored with ſuch plenty of all things, that without the help of any forein Nation, it is of it ſelf able to build a tall ſhip from the keel to the top-ſail, and ſo put it to ſea furniſhed with all things needful for a voyage, or a Sea-fight. It alſo aboundeth in Wine, Oyl, Corn, Sugar, Cotton, Honey, Wool, Turpentine, and Allom, Verdegreece, all ſorts of Metals, ſtore of Salt, Grogarins, and other commodities, whereupon this Iſland was once called Macaria (i.e. happy.) By reaſon of which wonderful affluence of all neceſſaries, and that variety of pleaſures (even to ſenſuality) which the place afforded, it was antiently conſecrated unto Venus, who is hence called Venus Cypria, and Dea Cypri : Sic te diva potens Cypri, in Horace; and in Ovid.

Feſta dies Veneris, toto celeberrima Cypro,
Venerat; ipſa ſuis aderat Venus aurea feſtis.

Venus feaſts hallowed through all Cyprus came,
And Venus with her preſence grac'd the ſame.

The people hereof are warlike, ſtrong and nimble; of great civility, and hoſpitality to their neighbours, and to ſtrangers of all Nations, Jews only excepted. For in the Empire of Trajan, the Jews inhabiting Egypt and the adjoyning Countreys, drew themſelves together, and choſe one Alexander for their Captain : under whoſe conduct they entred into this Iſland, and laid it deſolate, killing in it 240000 perſons of all ſexes and ages; not without much bloodſhed vanquiſhed and ſlain by Lucius the Emperours Lieutenant. Since which time the Cypriots permit no Jew to enter into the Iſland; but come he hither voluntarily or by force of tempeſt, they lay hands on him, and lead him preſently to execution. A hated Nation, that neither innocence can protect, or equity reprive from that cruel cuſtom.

The women in former time much noted for their Unchaſtity, to which their worſhipping of Venus was no ſmall incentive; it being the cuſtom of theſe women, to proſtitute themſelves on the ſhores, to the paſſers by : their very Virgins not refuſing to be handſelled there, before their marriage; either to raiſe their portions by the ſale of their bodies, or elſe to pleaſe their Goddeſs with ſuch beaſtly ſacrifices. And if Volaterranus may be credited (as I think he may) the Ladies which attended on Queen Carlotte, when ſhe came to Rome, to ſeek for aid againſt James the baſtard, who had diſpoſſeſſed her of this Kingdom, ſhewed themſelves little chaſter than thoſe antient Cypriots. Somewhat more fortunate in the men, Æſclepiades, the Author of the verſe ſo named; 2. Xenophon, an old poet; 3. Zeno, and 4. Apollonius, the Philoſophers; 5. Epiphanius, the learned Biſhop of Salamis; and 6. above all Saint Barnabas, the dear aſſociate of St. Paul, being all natives of this Countrey.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt here planted by Saint Paul and Barnabas, as the very firſt fruits of their Apoſtleſhip, after they had been ſeparated to the work of the Miniſtry by the Impoſition of hands; as appeareth Acts. 13. v. 4. &c. The Church hereof, by reaſon of the Antiquity of it, and the honour of this joint foundation, ſo privileged in the beſt ages of Chriſtianity, that the Archbiſhop of this Iſland had all Prerogatives of a Primate; conſecrated by his own Suffragan Biſhops, and acting in all ſacred and Eccleſiaſtical affairs, without dependence on, or relation to, the See of Antioch; whereunto all other Biſhops in the Eaſtern Dioceſe, were either ſubordinate or ſubject. Which privilege being queſtioned in the Council of Epheſus, was by the Fathers there aſſembled, on a full hearing of the cauſe, approved and ratified; confirmed by the civil ſanction of the Emperour Juſtinian, whoſe wife was a native of this Iſland, and by the name of Jus Cyprium, the privilege or exemption of the Cyprian Church, tranſmitted to the Prelates of ſucceeding times. Which notwithſtanding, they continued in good correſpondence with the Eaſtern Churches of the Greek Communion, and officiated all Divine Acts after the rites and form thereof; till the Venetians became Lords of it, who brought in the Latine Service into ſome of their Churches, and appointed Biſhop and other Miniſters of the Papal party, for execution of the ſame. And for the Government of theſe Churches, they had at firſt fourteen Biſhops and Arch-biſhops, to gratifie Queen Alice (who had a mind to enrich her friends with ſome of the ſpoils of them) reduced by Innocent the third to four only, that is to ſay, the Archbiſhoprick of Nicoſia, the Biſhopricks of Famaguſta, Paphos, and Amathus; but each See furniſhed with two Prelates, the one for the Greeks, the other for the Latines, of which the Biſhops for the Latines have all the Lands, and annual Revenues which of right belong to thoſe Cathedrals; the Greek Biſhops living upon ſtipends, levied on the Prieſts and Deacons of their juriſdiction.

Rivers, as formerly was ſaid, here are very few; and of thoſe few, the principal are called Lycus, and Lapithus; the firſt running towards the South, the laſt towards the North; but not ſeldom ſo dried up, that they leave their empty Channels without any water. Both alſo have their Source from the hill Olympus (the higheſt Mountain of the Iſland) garniſhed with trees and fruits of all ſorts; in compaſs about eighteen Leagues (which make four and fifty Italian miles) and at the end of every League a Monaſtery of Greek Monks, or Caloires, and a fountain of freſh water for the uſe of the houſe. Here are alſo two other little Rivers, the one called 3. Bodeus, the other 4. Tolius; but of the ſame nature as the former.

By Ptolemy, or in his time, divided into four parts or Provinces, but ſince it fell into the hands of the Luſignan family, diſtributed into twelve Counties or Cantrades; moſt of them called by the names of their principal Towns. viz. 1. Nicoſia. 2. Famaguſta. 3. Paphia. 4. Audima. 5. Limiſſa. 6. Maſorum. 7. Salines. 8. Meſſoria. 9. Cruſocus. 10. Pentalia. 11. Carpaſſus. 12. Cerines. The whole containing, beſides theſe Cities and great Towns, 805 Villages, or thereabouts, which they called Caſales; whereof the one half antiently belonged unto the Crown; the other half divided betwixt the Lay-Nobility, and the Eccleſiaſticks; the Patrimony of theſe laſt being computed at 80000 Crowns of annual rents, beſides caſualities, and the vails of the Altar. But becauſe the traceing out of theſe Cantrades will be very difficult (as a way which none have gone before me) I will adhere to the diviſion made hereof in the time of Ptolemy, into the Provinces of 1 Paphia, 2 Amathuſia, 3 Lapethia, and 4 Salamine.

1. PAPHIA, ſo called of Paphos the chief Town hereof, taketh up the Weſt part of the Iſland: in which the Towns of moſt importance and obſervation, are 1 Paphos, on the Sea-ſide, by Pliny called Pala-Paphos, or old Paphus; built as ſome ſay, by Ciniras, the Father of Myrrha, and ſo named in memory of Paphus his father: but as others ſay, by Paphos, the ſon of Pygmalion, King of Phœnicia, and Cyprus; to which laſt, Ovid doth agree, who ſpeaketh of Pygmalion's ſtatue, turned into a woman by the power of Venus (or rather of his beautifull wife, fabled, for the ſurpaſſing whiteneſs of her skin, to be made of Ivory) he adds this of her,

> Illa Paphum genuit de quo tenet inſula nomen.

> She Paphus bare, from whom the name
> Of Paphia, to the Iſland came.

Here Venus had her ſo much celebrated Temple, hence the name of Paphia; and hear her Votaries of both ſexes in their natural nakedneſs, did perform her ſacrifices. Both Town and Temple ruined by a fearful Earthquake: or as the Legends have it, by the prayers of Saint Barnabas; the ruines of it ſtill remaining. 2 Paphos Nova, or New Paphos, now called Baffo, five miles from the old, built by Agapenor, one of the Nephews of Lycurgus the Spartan Law-giver, after the ſack of Troy forced hither by a violent tempeſt: conſecrate to the ſame impure Goddeſs, and much frequented, but without injury to the other; thoſe which here offered, not thinking they had done her ſufficient ſervice, unleſs they went in a ſolemn manner of proceſſion, and paid their vowes alſo at the other. 3 Arſinoe, ſituate betwixt both; built by, or called ſo in honour of, Arſinoe daughter of Ptolemy, the firſt King of Egypt, and Lord of Cyprus, of that houſe. 4 Depranum, now called Trepano, under the Promontory ſo named, a well-traded Port, but miſerably defaced by the Turks, when they took this Iſland: 5 Connelia, one of the richeſt of the Iſland, by reaſon of the plenty of Sugar, and Cotton-Wool, growing thereabouts. Built in the place of 6 Cithera, dedicated to Venus alſo, but differing from the Iſland of that name in the Ægean Sea, rather in pronunciation than the purity of her oblations: the laſt ſyllable ſave one, in the name of that Iſland, being ſhort in verſe, but this of Cyprus ſounding long, as in this of Virgil.

> Eſt Amathus, eſt cella mihi Paphos, atque Cithera.

> Cithera, Amathus divine,
> And lofty Paphos, are all mine.

2. On the South-Eaſt of Paphia lyeth the Province or Diſtrict of AMATHUSIA, taking up the South-parts of the Iſland which look towards Egypt. Chief Towns hereof, 1 Amathus, giving name unto this diviſion, then of moſt note, and much frequented for the annual ſacrifices made unto Adonis the darling of Venus, who had here another of her Temples: the ruines of both hardly now diſcerned. Built, as ſome ſay, by Amaſis, King of Egypt, when he conquered this Iſland; but as others ſay, by ſome of the Anathites, deſcended from Anath one of the ſons of Canaan. 2. Cetium, or Citium, (for I find it called by both names) the birth-place of Zeno the Stoick, hence called Κιτιεὺς, or Citienſis; and memorable for the death of Cimon the Athenian General. A Town wherein the memory of Cittim, the ſon of Javan, is moſt apparently preſerved. 3 Epiſcopio, one of the chief of all the Iſland, built on the place, or out of the decay, of 4 Curias, not far from the Promontory of the ſame name, founded by the Argives, where Apollo had both a Grove and a Temple, by the name of Apollo Hylates; his Altars in thoſe times held ſo ſacred, that whoſoever preſumed to touch them, was thrown into the Sea from the Promontory or rocks adjoyning. 5 Salines, or Salinæ, ſo called from the rich Saltpits; one of the chief Towns of this part, and giving name to one of thoſe twelve Cantrades, into which the whole is now divided.

3. LAPETHIA, the third part of the Iſland, lyeth on the North thereof, oppoſite to Cilicia in Aſia Minor. Places of moſt importance in it, 1 Nicoſia, the Regal City of the Kings, the See of the Arch-Biſhop, and the chief of the Iſland: antiently called Ledronſis, and Lenteinis; but thoſe names long ago laid by. Situate in the middeſt of the Iſle, and in a plain and champain Country, abundantly fertile and delightful: Environed with a fair wall, ſo exactly round as if it had been drawn with a pair of compaſſes, in circuit about five miles, and both for ſituation, numbers of people, and magnificent buildings of all ſorts both publick and private, compared by ſome to the moſt beautiful City of Florence: Fortified by the Venetians, when in their poſſeſſion, with new walls, deep ditches and eleven ſtrong Bulwarks, with three great Out-works, all of them built according to the Art of modern fortification. But notwithſtanding all theſe works, and the help of 250 piece of Canon planted on the walls, and about the City, it was by the Turks taken at the ſecond or third aſſault, Septemb. 9. Anno 1570. So evident a truth it is, that Fortifications are more ſtrengthened by the Salamine. gallantry and courage of the Defendants, than the Defendants are by their Fortifications. 2. Cerines ſituate near the Sea, ſtrong by art and nature, and furniſhed with all things neceſſary to endnre a ſiege; but yielded to the Turks by Alfonſus Palacius the unwarlike Governour, terrified with the great ſlaughter made at the ſack of Nicoſia, before the enemy came near it. At the firſt called Ceurania and ſaid to have been built by Cyrus the great Perſian King, when he firſt ſubdued the nine Kings hereof, and united the Iſland to that Crown; bleſt with a more temperate and wholſom air, than any other in the Countrey. 3. Tremitus, the birth-place of Spiridion, a Biſhop of the Primitive times, renowned for miracles; many of which reported by Sozomen, lib. 1. cap. 10. and other Eccleſiaſtical writers. Wholly decayed, the ruin of it much contributing to the riſe of Nicoſia. 5 Lapithus (by Pliny called Lapeto) on the banks of a ſmall Riveret of that name. Of ſo great note in former times, that it gave to this Diviſion the name of Lapethia. In this part ſtandeth the hill Olympus (now the Mountain of the holy Croſs) deſcribed before.

4. SALAMINE, the fourth and laſt Province of this Iſland, taketh up the whole Eaſt-parts hereof: So named from 1. Salamis, once the chief City of the Iſle, and the See of the Primate; or Metropolitan hereof in the Primitive times. Deſtroyed by the Jews in the reign of Trajan, and re-built again; but being after that taken, ſacked, and razed unto the ground by the Saracens, in the time of Heraclius, it never could again recover: the Metropolitan See after that ſubverſion, being removed to Nicoſia. It was ſometimes, and by ſome writers, called Conſtantia alſo; but that name could give it no more perpetuity than the other of Salamis. Memorable whilſt it ſtood for the founder of it, being Teucer the ſon of Telamon King of Salamis, an Iſle of the Ægean Sea; baniſhed his Countrey by his Father, and ſetled in this Iſland by the power of Belus, King of Phœnicia: as alſo for a famous Temple ſacred unto Jupiter, herce called Salaminius. Out of the ruins hereof aroſe 2 Famaguſta, now the prime City of theſe parts; built as is ſaid by Coſta, the Father of Saint Catharine; but that uncertain. Situate at the Eaſt end of the Iſland, in a plain and low ground betwixt two Promontories, the one called the Cape of Saint Andrew, and the other Capo di Griego, or the head of Græcia. In compaſs not above two miles, in form four-ſquare, but that the ſide towards the Eaſt ſtretcheth out more in length than the other three. On two parts beaten on with the Sea, the other parts towards the Land defended with a Ditch not above fifteen foot in breadth, an old ſtone wall, and certain Bulwarks. The Haven (oppoſite to Tripolis, a Town of Syria) openeth towards the South-Eaſt, defended from the injury of the Sea by two great Rocks, betwixt which the Sea cometh in at a narrow paſſage not above forty paces broad, but after opening wider and wider, maketh a convenient Harbour, rather ſafe than large, aſſured both by the difficult entranee, and a chain croſſed over it. The whole Town, when the Turks appeared before it, but meanly fortified; the works of it of the old faſhion, generally decayed except one Bulwark, which was built according to the modern Arts of Fortification, with Palyſadoes, Curtains, Caſemates, and all other Additaments: moſt gallantly defended by Bragadine the noble General, to the wonder and envy of the Turks, who ſpent no leſs than 118000 great ſhot upon it; and at laſt yielded upon honourable terms, had they been as punctually performed. 3 Aphrodiſium, ſo named of Venus, whom the Greeks call Aphrodite, who had here another of her Temples. 4 Arſinoe, built alſo by one of the Arſinoes Queens of Egypt (there being two others of this name, and the ſame foundation,) now called Leſcare, and antiently renowned for the Groves of Jupiter. 5 Tamaſſus of good note in the time of Strabo, for rich Mines of Braſs, as afterwards for abundance of Verdegreece and Vitriol, found plentifully in the fields adjoyning. 6 Idalium, neer a Mount of the ſame name, ſo called by accident. For Chalcenor the founder of it being told by Oracle, that he ſhould ſeat himſelf, and build a City, where he firſt ſaw the riſing Sun: one of his followers, ſeeing the Sun begin to riſe, crying out ἴδον ἅλιον, that is to ſay, behold the Sun. Which Omen taken by Chalcenor, he here built this City. But whether this were ſo or not (as for my part I build not very much upon it) certain it is, that Venus had here another Temple, neighboured by the Idalian Groves, ſo memorized and chanted by the antient Poets. So ſtrong an influence had luſt and ſenſuality on this wretched People, that every corner of the Iſland was defiled with thoſe brutiſh Sacrifices, which day by day were offered to that impure deity: though to ſay truth, it was no marvail if having made their Belly their God, they made in the next place, their glory their ſhame.

The firſt Inhabitants of this Iſland were the poſterity of Cittim the ſon of Javan, and grand ſon of Japhet: who having ſeen his brother Tarſhiſh ſetled in Cilicia, (where his memory is ſtill preſerved in the City of Tarſus) planted himſelf and his retinue in this oppoſite Iſland. The City of Cetium, as Ptolemy, or Citium, as Pliny calleth it, one of the antienteſt of the Iſland; which with the Authority of Joſephus, and other of the antient writers, put it out of queſtion. But being this Iſland was too narrow to contain his numbers, and willing to ſeek further off for a larger dwelling, he left here ſo many of his followers as might ſerve in time to plant the Countrey; and with the reſt paſſed into Macedon, where we have already ſpoken of him. Made tributary firſt to Amaſis King of Egypt, from which diſtant about three or four days ſailing. Subjected afterwards to the Phœnicians, a near neighbour to them, who being a Sea-faring people, made themſelves Maſters of the Sea-coaſts and maritime places. Cinyras the Father of Myrrha; (by whom both Father and Grand-father to Adonis) is ſaid to have been K. of both. The like affirm'd of Belus one of his ſucceſſors, who is ſaid to have been the founder of the City of Citium, named ſo (if not rather repaired th an new built by him,) with reference no doubt to Cittim, the firſt Progenitor of this People. By the power and favour of this Belus, Teucer the ſon of Telamon, baniſhed his Countrey, accompanied with many followers from Salamis, Athens, and Arcadia, was ſetled in the Eaſt parts hereof; where the City of Salamis, by him built, was his firſt Plantation. Yet ſo, that the Phœnicians kept their former hold: it being evident in Story that Elulaus one of the ſucceſſors of this Belus, (but a King of Tyre) and a Co-temporary with Salmanaſſer King of Aſſyria, paſſed over into Cyprus with a puiſſant Navy to reduce the Citiaans to obedience, who had then rebelled. The Iſland at firſt coming of Teucer hither ſo infinitely over-grown with woods, that the people were not able to till the land. Inſomuch, that notwithſtanding the great waſte made of them, both in building ſhips, and caſting metals, a law was made that every one which would ſhould fell them, and take as much ground in ſeveralty for his own inheritance, as he could overcome and make fit for tillage. Encouraged herewith, the natural Cypriots, together with the Colonies of Grecians, Phœnicians, Egyptians, ſo beſtirred themſelves, that at laſt they brought it unto Champagn: parcelled out in ſucceeding times amongſt nine Kings, for ſo many Cyrus the great Perſian Monarch found at his coming hither. But Cyrus, though he did ſubdue all thoſe petit Princes, yet he took not from them their Eſtates or titles: contented with the conqueſt of it, and an annual tribute. For after this, in the time of Artaxerxes Mnemon, we find Evagoras, and Nicocles, to whom Iſocrates inſcribed two of his Orations, to be Kings hereof. And in the time of Alexander the Great, Citium it ſelf (ſuch was the honour born unto the Mother-City) had a King apart, not ſubject unto any other. The King whereof to indear himſelf with the Conquerour, gave to him a ſword, μαχαίραν θαυμαστὴν, ſaith Plutarch, an admirable ſword, both for colour and lightneſs, which he after uſed in all his fights. And after the death of Alexander; his great Commanders cantoning his eſtates amongſt them, the Princes and people of this Iſland were in great diſtractions, not knowing to whom they might ſubmit for their beſt advantage. But Ptolemy, who had ſeized on Egypt for his part of the ſpoil, being ſtrong in ſhipping, ſetled them by a perſonal viſit; and fortifiing ſome of the beſt pieces in it, aſſured the Countrey to himſelf. To him and his poſterity it continued ſubject till the time of Ptolemy Auletes, the ninth King of this line in our Accompt, who gave it for a portion to one of his Brethren: in whoſe time, the Romans, without any colour or pretence of quarrel, but only to enrich themſelves with the ſpoil of the Iſland, ſent Portius Cato to ſubdue it. And he at firſt aſſayed to get it with the Kings Conſent, offering him, in the name of the Roman Senate, the Prieſt-hood of the Temple of Paphos, being a rich and gainful Office, and of high eſteem among that people. But when Ptolemy for fear of a worſe miſchief had made away himſelf by poiſon, Cato without more ceremony takes poſſeſſion of it. And becauſe Ammianus Marcellinus the Hiſtorian, hath ſo ſignificantly expreſſed this buſineſs, and withall deſcribed ſo punctually the eſtate of this Iſland; we will adde to this diſcourſe from him, though ſomewhat be repeated which was ſaid before. Cyprum inſulam procul à Continente diſtantem, & portuoſam, &c. “ The Iſle of Cyprus, far diſtant from the Continent, and “ well ſtored with Harbours, is famous, beſides many Municipal Towns, by two principal Cities, that “ is to ſay, Salamis, and Paphos, the one ſacred to Jupiter, and the other to Venus: An Iſle ſo admi-“ rably fruitful, and with all things furniſhed, that without the help of any forein Nation, it is able “ of it ſelf to build and rig forth a ſhip, from the very keel unto the top-ſail, and trim it with all “ tackle neceſſary for a preſent voyage. Nor do I ſhame to ſay, that with greater Avarice than “ Juſtice, the Romans did invade this Iſland; King Ptolemy, our old Confederate and Ally, being un-“ worthily proſcribed, for no other reaſon, but that our Treaſury was bare, our Exchequer Empty. And “ he no ſooner had prevented this diſhonour by a quick and voluntary death, making away himſelf by “ poiſon, but the Iſland was forthwith made tributary, and the riches of it, velut hoſtiles exuviæ claſſi im-“ poſita & in urbem adducta per Catonem, as the ſpoils of ſome conquered enemy, were brought on Ship-“ board, and conveyed by Cato unto Rome. So far, and to this purpoſe, he.

I know there is another cauſe alleged for the ſending of Cato on this Errand, viz. that Clodins who was then Tribune, and ſped the Edict, might have opportunity by his abſence to revenge himſelf on Cicero. and ſome others of the oppoſite faction: but the main buſineſs was the money, as before was ſaid; the prey amounting to 7000 Talents, which comes to two Millions, and one hundred thouſand Crowns of coin now current. Which money and movables, amounting unto ſo vaſt a ſum, he fearing to loſe by Sea, divided it into many ſmall portions, which he put into ſeveral boxes, viz. in every box two Talents and fifty Drachms. At the end of every box he faſtned a long rope with a piece of cork; by which, floating above the water, the money, if by Shipwrack loſt, might be eſpied again: which was not much unlike the buoyes which Mariners faſten by long ropes to their Anchors, that they may be the ſooner found. We ſee by this, that the pretence of the Romans to this Countrey was very weak: Avarius magis quam juſtius ſumus aſſecuti, are the words of Sextus Rufus alſo. But being made a Roman Province, it was in the diviſion of the Empire aſſigned to the Conſtantinopolitan Emperours: under whom it ſuffered, as all other parts of the Empire did, by the violent invaſion of the Saracens, who ſpoiled and ranſacked it in the time of Conſtans the ſecond, deſtroying then the City of Salamis or Conſtantia. But that tempeſt being overblown, they returned again unto that Empire, governed by a ſucceſſion of Dukes, till the year 1184. At which time Andronicus Comnenus, uſurping the Greek Empire, compelled Iſaacius Comnenns, one of the blood Royal, to ſhift for himſelf: who ſeiſing on this Iſland made himſelf King thereof, and ruling till the year 1191. when Richard the firſt of England, being denyed the Common courteſie of taking in freſh water, and ſeeing his Souldiers abuſed by the Cypriots, not only took the King priſoner, but ſubdued the whole Iſland. And as Paterculus tells us, that when Marcus Antonius had captivated Artamaſdes King of Armenia, Catenis, ſed ne quid honori deeſſet, aureis vinxit; So did our Richard keep a decorum towards this Priſoner, binding him not in bonds of Iron, but ſilver. King Richard having thus poſſeſſed himſelf of this Countrey, ſold it for ready money, (which for the managing of his intended wars againſt the Turks, he moſt needed) unto the Templers: and taking it, upon I know not what diſcontent, again from them, he beſtowed it on Guy of Luſignan, the titulary and miſerable King of Hieruſalem; receiving in way of exchange, the title of that loſt and ſhipwracked kingdom: with which title he and ſome of his ſucceſſors for a time were honoured.

In the poſterity of this Guy, this Iſland continued free and abſolute, till the year one thouſand four hundred twenty three; when Melechella (or Melechnaſer) Sultan of Egypt, invaded this Countrey, took John King hereof Priſoner, ranſomed him for 150000 Sultanies, reſtored him to his kingdom, and impoſed on him and his Succeſſors, the yearly tribute of 40000 Crowns. This John was father to another John, whoſe two children were Carlotte a legitimate daughter, and James, a baſtard ſon. James, after the death of his father, diſpoſſeſſed his ſiſter Carlotte of the Crown, by the conſent and help of the Sultan of Egypt; and the better to ſtrengthen himſelf againſt all oppoſition, he took to wife Catherine Cornari, daughter by adoption to the Venetian Senate: whom at his death he made his heir, if the child ſhe went withall (having then none by her) ſhould die without iſſue, as it did, not long after it was born; and ſhe ſeeing the factious Nobility too head-ſtrong to be bridled by a female authority, like a good child deſigned her Crown and Scepter to the Venetian State, Anno 1437. Theſe defended it againſt all claims, (paying only as tribute to the Ægyptian, and after to the Turkiſh Sultans the 40000 Crowns before mentioned) till the year 1570. when Muſtapha, General of the Turks, wreſted it from the Venetians, to the uſe of his maſter Selimus the ſecond, who pretended title to it as Lord of Egypt. The Governour of the Venetian Forces at the time of this unfortunate loſs was Signior Bragadino, who as long as hope of ſuccours, means of reſiſtance, or poſſibility of prevailing continued, with incredible valour made good the Town of Famaguſta, in whoſe defence conſiſted the welfare of the whole Iſland. At laſt he yielded it on honourable conditions, had they been as faithfully kept, as punctually agreed on. But Muſtapha the Turkiſh General inviting to his Tent the principal men of worth in the Town, cauſed them all to be murdered: and as for Bragadino himſelf, he commanded his ears to be cut off, his body to be flead alive, and his skin ſtuffed with ſtraw, to be hanged at the main yard of his Gally. The chief of the priſoners and ſpoils were in two tall ſhips, and one Gallion, ſent unto Selimus; but he never ſaw them. For a Noble Cyprian Lady, deſtinated to the luſt of the Grand Seigneur, fired certain barrels of powder; by the violence whereof both the veſſels and the booty in them, were in part burned, in part drowned. A famous and heroick act; inferiour to none of the Roman Dames, ſo much commended in their Stories, though more to be commended in a Roman, than a Chriſtian Lady.

Thus having ſummed up the affairs of this Iſland, from the firſt plantation of it, till this laſt ſad conqueſt, I will lay down the ſucceſſion of the Cyprian Kings of the Noble Luſignan Family, in this enſuing Catalogue of

THE KINGS of CYPRVS.

1 Guy of Luſignan, the titulary King of Hieruſalem, eſtated in the kingdom of Cyprus, by Richard the firſt of England.
2 Almericus, the brother of Guy.
3 Hugh, the ſon of Almericus.
4 Henry, the ſon of Hugh.
5 Hugh II. ſon of Henry.
6 Hugh III. ſon of Hugh the ſecond.
7 John, ſon of Hugh the third.
8 Henry II. the brother of John.
9 Hugh IV. ſon of Guido, the younger brother of John, and Henry the ſecond.
10 Peter, the ſon of Hugh the fourth.
11 Petrinus, the ſon of Peter.
12 James, younger brother of Peter, and Uncle to Petrinus.
13 Janus, the ſon of James, made Tributary by Melechnaſer, to the Kingdom of Egypt.
14 John II. the ſon of Janus.
15 Carlotte, ſole daughter and heir of John the ſecond, firſt married to John the Prince of Portugal, and after to Lewis of Savoy; outed of her eſtate and kingdom, by 16 James II. the baſtard ſon of John the ſecond, who by ſtrong hand ſeized upon it, and by the help of the Venetian kept it during his life.
17 James III. born after the deceaſe of his father, whom he ſurvived not very long. After whoſe death, being the laſt of this Family, the Venetians poſſeſſed themſelves of Cyprus, which they invaded with no better title, than the Romans had done in former times; not likely to be bleſt with a long fruition, of that which they had ſo unjuſtly got into their hands. But of that already.

And here it is to be obſerved, that theſe Cyprian Kings reteining the title of Hieruſalem (towards which they ſometimes caſt an eye) beſtowed upon their greateſt Subjects, and deſerving Servitors, both titles of Honour and Offices of State, belonging antiently to that Kingdom. So that we find amongſt them a Prince of Antioch, a Prince of Galilee, a Count of Tripoli, a Lord of Cæſarea, and a Lord of Mount Tabor; a Seneſchal of Hieruſalem, a Conſtable, Marſhal, and High Chamberlain of that kingdom alſo. With better reaſon, though no doubt with as little profit, as the Pope gives Biſhopricks and Archbiſhopricks in Greece, or Egypt. But thoſe titular Offices are now quite extinct, though poſſibly ſome of the titles of honour which were took from thence, may be ſtill remaining.

But to return unto the Turks, having thus taken Famaguſta, and Nicoſia, on which the whole Iſland did depend, all other Cities of it, and the whole by conſequence, were forced to ſubmit to the Turkiſh Tyranny. The Noblemen, and Citizens of principal quality, either moſt cruelly maſſacred in the ſack of thoſe Towns, or baniſhed for ever their native Countrey, as men whoſe living there might poſſibly endanger their new conqueſt. But the Countrey people, Artificers, and perſons of inferiour rank, permitted to enjoy both their lives and livelihoods; together with their ſeveral and reſpective Religions, in the ſame manner as before; paying ſuch ordinary taxes as were laid upon them. And ſo this goodly Iſland came into the hands of the T[illegible], who have hitherto enjoyed the poſſeſſion of it: For notwithſtanding that the Venetians in the year next following, with the help of the Pope and King of Spain, gave the Turks that great and memorable overthrow, at the famous battel of Lepanto; yet did they nothing in perſuit of ſo great a Victory for the recovery of this Iſland; and indeed they could not, the confederates returning home, and diſſolving their Fleet, as ſoon as they had ſecured their own eſtates by the overthrow of the Turkiſh Navie. And though the Venetians, to put the beſt face they could upon ſo great a loſs, ſo highly pleaſed themſelves with the following Victory, that they put the ſame in ballance with the loſs of Cyprus; yet an ingenious Turk, to let them ſee the folly of ſo vain a boaſting, compared the loſing of Cyprus, to the loſs of an Army, which could not without a miracle be recovered; and the loſs at Lepanto, to the ſhaving of ones Beard, which grows the thicker for the cutting, as indeed it proved: For the next year the Turks armed out another Navie, no leſs formidable than the other had been before; braving therewith the whole Chriſtian Forces, either then disbanded, or not re-aſſembled.

What the Revenues of it were to the King hereof, I cannot certainly determine. The profits of Salt onely, as that of the Cuſtom-houſe, yielded yearly to the Seigneury of Venice, when it was in their hands, a million of Crowns. For the Cuſtoms and Profits of the Salt were farmed for 500000 Crowns per annum, which being turned into the chief Cyprian Commodities, were counted double worth that Money, when unladed at Venice. To which, if we ſhould add the Lands of the former Kings, and other ways of raiſing Money on the Subject, I cannot ſee, but the Intrado of the Crown muſt needs amount conſtantly to a million and an half, if it were not more.

The Arms hereof were quarterly, firſt Argent, a Croſs Potent between four Croſſes Or; ſecondly, Barr-wiſe of eight pieces, Arg. and Azure, ſupporting a Lion Paſſant Azure, Crowned Or; thirdly, a Lion Gules; and fourthly, Argent, a Lion Gules; as Bara a French Herald hath given the Blazon.

On the Eaſt of Cyprus, towards Syria, lie four ſmall Iſlands, which Ptolemy calleth by the name of Clides, not farr from the Promontory of that name; both Promontory and Iſlands now called S. Andrew's; and towards the Weſt another little knot of Iſlets, which he calls Carpaſia; but nothing memorable in either; So I paſs them over.

OF

OF SYRIA.

SYRIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Euphrates, by which parted from Meſopotamia; on the Weſt, with the Mediterranean Sea; on the North, with Cilicia, aud Armenia Minor, from the laſt parted by Mount Taurus: and on the South, with Paleſtine, and ſome parts of Arabia. The length hereof from Mount Taurus to the edge of Arabia, is ſaid to be five hundred twenty and five miles; the breadth from the Mediterranean, to the River Euphrates, computed at four hundred and ſeventy; drawing ſomewhat near unto a ſquare.

In the Scriptures it is called Aram, and the people Aramites, becauſe firſt peopled and poſſeſſed by Aram the Son of Sem; though Hamath, Arphad, and Sidon, the Sons of Canaan, did alſo put in for a ſhare; and yet not called thus by the Scriptures onely, but by ſome of the Heathen Writers alſo. For Strabo doth not onely acknowledg, that the Syrians in his time were called Ἀράμοι, but citeth Poſſidonius, a more antient Writer, for proof, that the Ἀρίμοι, which Homer ſpeaketh of, muſt be thoſe Syrians: further averring, that the Syrians called themſelves by the name of Aramai, or plainly Aramites. But by the Greeks, they are called Syrians, or Surians, from the City Tyre, called antiently by the name Sur, or Tſur (of which more hereafter:) either becauſe the Tyrians, or Tſurians, had in thoſe times the command of the Sea-coaſts of this Countrey; or elſe that Tyre or Tſur, being the chief Mart-Town of all thoſe parts, was the place where they traded with theſe Aramites. Conform to which antient Appellations, the City of Tyre is again called Sur, and this Countrey Soria. Others conceive, that being when the Greeks firſt knew it, a part of the Aſſyrian Empire, the ſeat of which was then at Ninive, it was called Syria for Aſſyria: as afterwards Aſſyria had the name of Syria (of which more anon) when the ſeat of that great Empire was removed to Antioch. And this may very well be ſo, conſidering that by the like decurtation we have turned Hiſpania into Spain, as the Greeks before us did into Spania, by which name it occurrs, Rom. 15. 28.

But here we are to underſtand, that though the Syria of the Romans, as it was a Member of that Empire, was limited within the bounds before laid down, yet antiently as well the Aram of the Hebrews, as the Syria of the Greeks and Romans, was of greater latitude: of which, becauſe it may be uſeful to the underſtanding of Holy Scriptures, and of ſome Claſſick Authors alſo, I ſhall enlarge a little further. For Aram, taken in the largeſt acception of it, extendeth from the Coaſt of Cilicia, North, to Idumæa towards the South, from the River Tigris in the Eaſt, to the Mediterranean Sea upon the Weſt; conteining beſides the Syria of the Greeks and Romans (in which Paleſtine alſo was included) Arabia the Deſart, and Petræa, Chaldæa, Babylonia, and all thoſe Provinces to which the name Aram is either prefixed or ſubjoyned in the Book of God; as Aram-Naharaiim, Aram-Sobah, Padan-Aram, Aram-Maachah, Sede-Aram, Aram-beth-Rehob, all mentioned in the Holy Scriptures. Some do extend it further yet, and do not onely bring Armenia within the Latitude of this name, which they derive from Aramminni, whoſe neighbourhood to Syria, may give ſome colour to the errour; but even thoſe People of Cappadocia bordering on the Euxine Sea, the Inhabitants of which were antiently called Luco-Syri, or White-Syrians. But this not having any good warrant or authority wherewithall to back it, ſhall not come under the compaſs of this conſideration. But for the reſt, I find it generally agreed upon amongſt the learned, that Aram-Naharaiim, is the ſame with the whole Countrey of Meſopotamia, ſo named by the Jews and Grecians, becauſe it is environed with the two famous Rivers of Tygris and Euphrates; which Priſtian by a meer Latine name, would have to be called Medamna (but Inter-Amna by his leave would expreſs it better). And as for Padan-Aram, wherein Laban dwelt, which is called Sede-Aram by the Prophet Hoſea, Chap. 12 v. 13. that is a part onely of the other: the whole Countrey of Aram-Naharaiim, or Meſopotamia, being divided into two parts; whereof the more fruitful lying Northward, is called Padan-Aram, or Sede-Aram, to whoſe Inhabitants Xenophon gives the name of Syrians; the barren and more deſart lying towards the South, which by the ſame Author is called Arabia. For Aram-Maachah, mentioned, 1 Chron. 19. 6. It is conceived to be that part of Syria, which was after named Comagena, whereof Samoſata was the Metropolis, or Mother City: And as for Aram-Sobah, of which, and of Adadezar the King thereof, there is no frequent mention in the Books of the Kings and Chronicles, it was the Province lying on the North-eaſt of Damaſcus, and ſo extending to the banks of the River Euphrates, and is the ſame with that which afterwards was called Palmirena, from the City of Palmyra. South-weſt of which, amongſt the petty Kingdoms on the North of Geſſur, in the Land of Paleſtine, lay the Kingdom of Aram-Beth-Rehob, confederate with Ammon in the Warr which they had with David, 2 Sam. 10. 6. Nor did the Greeks leſs extend the name of Syria, than the Hebrews did the name of Aram, if they ſtretched it not further. Certain I am, that Strabo comprehendeth the Aſſyrians in the name of Syria, where he affirmeth, that the Medes over-ruled all Aſia, καταλύσασι τὸν τὴν Σύρων ἀρχὴν, the Empire of the Syrians (he meaneth the Aſſyrians) being overthrown. And in Herodotus it is ſaid, that thoſe whom the Barbarians call Aſſyrians, ὑπὸ μὲν Ἑλλήνων ἐκαλέοντο Σύριοι, were called Syrians by the Greeks. And to that purpoſe Juſtine alſo Imperium Aſſyrii, qui poſtea Syri dicti ſunt, Annos 1300 tenuere. But theſe all writ after the time that Seleucns and his Race had the poſſeſſion of the Eaſtern Empire: who living for the moſt part in Syria, from whence they might more eaſily furniſh themſelves with Souldiers out of Greece (as they did moſt commonly for all their military expeditions) cauſed all the other parts of their large dominions to be called, in tract of time, by the name of Syria. But on the other ſide, as the Syria of the Romans extended not ſo farr to the Eaſt and South, as the Aram of the Hebrews did: ſo it contained ſome other Regions, that is to ſay, thoſe of Phœnicia and Paleſtine, which were not comprehended in the name of Aram; as being planted by a People of another Race, and of different fortunes, till brought together under the command of the Babylonians. In which regard we will treat ſeverally of the natures of the Soyl and people: their originals, government, and ſucceſſes, till we have brought them into one band: and then continue their affairs as one joint eſtate. But firſt we will ſurvey the antient and preſent fortunes of Chriſtianity, and other Religions herein embraced or tollerated, wherein the whole, according to the bounds and limits before laid down, is alike concerned.

And for Religions in this Countrey, here is choice enough; thoſe namely of the Mahometan, Chriſtian, Pagan, and one compounded out of all, which is that of the Druſians. The Mahometan imbraced by the generality of the people throughout the whole, and by all that be in any office or authority, is onely countenanced and approved, though all the reſt be tollerated. The Pagan entertained onely in the mountainous Countreys bordering on Armenia: inhabited by a people whom they call Curdi, or the Curdenes, ſuppoſed to be deſcended from the antient Parthians, as being very expert in Bows and Arrows, their moſt uſual Arms. A Race of people who are ſaid to worſhip alike, both God and the Devil; the one, that they may receive benefits from him; the other, that he may not hurt them. Se alios deos colere ut proſint, alios ne noceant, as Lactantius doth affirm of the antient Grecians. But their principal devotions are addreſſed to the Devil onely, and that upon good reaſons, as themſelves conceive; For God, they ſay, is a good man, and will do no body harm, but the Devil is a miſchievous fellow, and muſt be pleaſed with ſacrifices, that he do not hurt them. And for the Druſians, they are conceived to be the remainder of thoſe Frankes (by which name the Turks call all Weſtern Chriſtians) who driven unto the Mountains (when they loſt the Soveraignty and poſſeſſion of the Holy Land) and defending themſelves by the advantage of the place, could never be wholly rooted out by the Turks, contented at the length, to afford them both peace and liberty of their Religion. But they have ſo forgot the Principles of that Religion, that they retein nothing of it but Baptiſm; and not that generally neither; accompting it lawful moſt unlawfully to marry their own Daughters, Siſters, or Mothers: and yet conform unto the Turks in their habit onely, wearing the white Turbant, as the Turks do; but abhorring Circumciſion, and indulging to themſelves the liberty of Wine, by law forbidden to the Turks. A people otherwiſe very warr-like, ſtout, and reſolute; with great, both conſtancy and courage, reſiſting hitherto the attempts of the Turkiſh Sultans. The Countrey they poſſeſs environed with the Confines of Joppa about Cæſarea Paleſtina, betwixt the Rivers of Jordan and Orontes, extending Eaſtwards as farr as the Plains of Damaſcus: ſo that here is no part of Syria, except Comagena, unto which their habitations reach not.

But for the Chriſtian Faith, it was firſt preached here by ſome of the diſperſed Brethren (which fled from the rage of Perſecution) in Phœnice, and the City of Antiochia; amongſt whom S. Peter, as he paſſed through all quarters, Acts 9. 31. is by the Fathers ſaid to have been the chief. The Church more fully planted in it by Barnabas firſt, after by Paul and Barnabas jointly. Who ſpending there a whole year together, enlarged the borders of the Church, and gained much people, as is ſaid, Acts 11. v. 19. &c. in ſo much, that here the Diſciples were firſt called Chriſtians, verſe 26. Not called ſo accidentally, as a thing of chance, but on a ſerious conſultation had amongſt themſelves, and a devout invocation on the name of God, to direct them in it. The word χρηματίσαι, uſed in the original, importeth ſomewhat of Oracular and Divine direction. And certainly, it ſtands with reaſon that it ſhould be ſo. For if upon the giving of a name to John Baptiſt, there was not onely a conſultation had of the Friends and Mother, but the dumb Father called to adviſe about it; and we uſe not to admit the pooreſt child of the Pariſh into the Congregation of Chriſt's Church by the door of Baptiſm, but by the joint invocation of the name of God for his bleſſing on it: with how much more regard of Ceremony and Solemnity, muſt we conceive that the whole body of Chriſt's people were baptized into the name of Chriſtians? And there is ſome proof of it too, beſides probability and conjectures. For Suidas, and before him Johannes Antiochenus, an old Coſmographer, do expreſly ſay, that in the days of Claudius Cæſar, ten years after the Aſcenſion of our Lord and Saviour, Euodins received Epiſcopal conſecration, and was made Patriarch of Antioch the Great in Syria, ſucceeding immediately to S. Peter: then addeth, that at that time the Diſciples were firſt called Chriſtians, τοῦ αὐτοῦ Ἐπισκόπου Εὐοδίου προσομιλήσαντος αὐτοῖς καὶ ἐπιθήσαντος αὐτοῖς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦτο, &c. i. e. Euodius their Biſhop, calling them to a Solemn Aſſembly, and impoſing this new name upon them, whereas before they were called Nazarites, and Galilæans; A People ſo hated by the Heathen, that they ceaſed not to ſlander them from the firſt beginning. For as concerning this Sect, we know that it is every where ſpoken againſt, ſaid the Jews of Rome to the Apoſtle, Acts 28. 22. Tacitus, a Roman, but a Gentile, goes further with them, calling them, homines per flagitia inviſos, & noviſſima meritos exempla; the calumny in his time being ſtrong and general, that at their private meeting, they devoured Infants, and had carnal company with their Mothers and Siſters. Which defamations notwithſtanding, they grew in few years to ſo great numbers, that they were a terror to their enemies; though grievouſly afflicted, tortured, and put to ſeveral kinds of death, under the ten Famous Perſecutions, raiſed againſt them by Nero, Anno 67. 2. Domitian, Anno 96. 3. Trajanus, Anno 110. 4. Marcus Antonius, Anno 167. 5. Severus, Anno 195. 6. Maximinus, Anno 237. 7. Decius, Anno 250. 8. Valerianus, Anno 259. 9. Aurelianus, Anno 278. 10 by Diocleſianus, Anno 293. All, but this laſt eſpecially, ſo extremely raging, that (as S. Hierom writeth in one of his Epiſtles) there were martyred 5000 for each day in the year, except the firſt of January, on which they uſed not to ſhed bloud. But ſanguis martyrum ſemen Eccleſiæ. This little grain of Muſtard-ſeed, ſowed by God's own hand, and watered by the bloud of ſo many holy men, grew ſo great a Tree, that the branches of it ſpread themſelves over all the World: and got ſuch footing, even in the Roman Army it ſelf (men commonly not of the ſtricteſt kind of Religion) that when Julian the Apoſtat had vomited out his ſoul, with Viciſti tandem Galilæe, they elected Jovinian, though a Chriſtian, for his Succeſſor, with this acclamation, Chriſtiani omnes ſumus, We are alſo Chriſtians. But ſee how the Baptizing of God's people by the name of Chriſtians in the City of Antioch, hath drawn me out of my Way. I return again, both to the place, and to the Author; In whoſe evidence, beſides what doth concern the impoſition of the name of Chriſtian upon the body of the faithful, we have a teſtimony for S. Peter's being Biſhop of Antioch, the firſt Biſhop hereof (of the Church of the Jews therein at leaſt) as it is ſaid poſitively by Euſebius in his Chronologie, S. Hierom in his Catalogue of Eccleſiaſtical Writers; S. Chryſoſtom in his Homily, de tranſlatione Ignatii, Thodoret Dialog. 1. S. Gregory. Epiſt. lib. 6. cap. 37. and before any of them by Origen, in his ſixth Homily on S. Luke. With reference whereunto, and in reſpect that Antioch was accompted always the principal City of the Eaſt-parts of the Roman Empire (the Prefect of the Eaſt for the moſt part reſiding in it) the Biſhop hereof in the firſt Ages of Chriſtianity had juriſdiction over all the Churches in the Eaſt, as farr as the bounds of that Empire did extend that way. To which by Conſtantine the Great, the Provinces of Cilicia and Iſauria, with thoſe of Meſopotamia and Oſroena were after added; containing 15 Roman Provinces, or that whole Dioceſe of the Orient. And though by the ſubſtracting of the Churches of Paleſtine, and the decay of Chriſtianity in theſe parts by the conqueſts of the Turks and Saracens, the juriſdiction of this Patriarch hath been very much leſſened: yet William of Tyre, who flouriſhed in the year 1130. recited the names of 13. Archiepiſcopal, 21 Metropolitical, and 127 Epiſcopal Sees, yielding obedience in his time to the See of Antioch. Since which, that number is much diminiſhed, Mahometiſm more and more increaſing, and Chriſtianity divided into Sects and Factions: in ſo much as of three ſorts of Chriſtians living in theſe Countreys, viz. the Maronites, Jacobites, and the Melchites, onely the Melchites are ſubordinate to the Church of Antioch, the others having Patriarchs of their own Religion.

And firſt for the Melchites, who are indeed the true and proper Members of the Church of Antioch, and the greateſt body of Chriſtians in all the Eaſt; they are ſo named in way of ſcorn, by the Jacobite and Maronite Schiſmatick, ſeparating without juſt cauſe from their communion. The name derived from Malchi, ſignifying in the Syriack Language a King, or Emperour: becauſe adhering to their Primate, they followed the Canons and Deciſions of preceding Councils, ratified by authority of the Emperour Leo, by whom ſubſcription was required to the Acts thereof; and were in that reſpect (as we uſe to ſay) of the King's Religion. Conform in points of Doctrine to the Church of Greece, but that they celebrate Divine Service as ſolemnly on the Saturday, as upon the Sunday: ſubject to their true and original Patriarch, who, ſince the deſtruction of Antioch, doth reſide in Damaſcus; and on no tearms acknowledging the authority of the Popes of Rome.

Next for the Maronites, they derive that name either from Marona, one of the principal Villages where they firſt inhabited; or from the Monaſtery of Saint Maron, mentioned in the firſt Act of the Council of Conſtantinople holden under Mennas, the Monks of which called Maronites, were the head of their Sect. Some points they hold, in which they differ from all Orthodox Chriſtians; other in which they differ onely from the Church of Rome. Of the firſt ſort, 1. That the Holy Ghoſt proceedeth from the Father onely, without relation to the Son. 2. That the Souls of men were created all together at the firſt beginning. 3. That Male Children are not to be baptized together, but at ſeveral times, by one and one. 4. That Hereticks returning to the Church, are to be re-baptized. 5. That the Child is made unclean by the touch of the Mother, till her Purification, and therefore not baptizing Children till that time be paſt, which after the birth of a Male-child muſt be fourty days, of a Female eighty. 6. That the Euchariſt is to be given to Children preſently after Baptiſm. 7. That the fourth marriage is utterly unlawful. 8. That the Father may diſſolve the Marriage of his Son or Daughter. 9. That young men are not to be ordained Prieſts or Deacons, except they be married. 10. That nothing ſtrangled, or of bloud, may be eaten by Chriſtians. 11. That Women in their Monethly courſes are not to be admitted to the Euchariſt, or to come into the Church. 12. And finally (which was indeed their firſt diſcrimination from the Orthodox Chriſtians) that there was but one will and action in Chriſt; the Fautors of which Opinion had the name of Monothelites. Of the laſt kind, 1. That the Sacrament of the Lords Supper was to be adminiſtred in both kinds, 2. and in leavened Bread; 3. that Bread to be broken to the Communicants (and not each Man to have his Wafer to himſelf) according to the firſt Inſtitution. 4. Not reſerving that Sacrament, 5. nor carrying any part of the conſecrated Elements to ſick perſons in danger of death. 6. That Marriage is nothing inferiour to the ſingle life; 7. That no man entreth the Kingdom of Heaven till the General Judgment; 8. That the Saturday, or old Sabbath, is not to be faſted; 9. Nor the Sacrament upon days of faſting to be adminiſtred till the Evening. They withdrew themſelves from the See of Antioch, and ſet up a Patriarch of their own, many Ages ſince (but the certain time thereof I find not) conferring on him for the greater credit of their Schiſm, the honourable Title of the Patriarch of Antioch. His name perpetually to be Peter, as the undoubted Succeſſor of that Apoſtle in the See thereof. Diſperſed about the Spurrs and Branches of Mount Libanus, where they have many Townſhips; and ſcattered Villages, of which four are reported to retein in their common ſpeech the true antient Syriak: that is to ſay, 1. Eden, a ſmall Village, but a Biſhop's See. by the Turks called Æchera. 2. Hatchteth. 3. Sherrie. 4. Boloſa, or Blouſa, little Superiour to the reſt in bigneſs or beauty, but made the ſeat of their Patriarch, when he comes amougſt them. At ſuch time as the Weſtern Chriſtians were poſſeſſed of theſe parts, they ſubmitted to the Church of Rome; but upon their expulſion by the Turks and Saracens, they returned again to the obedience of their own Patriarch, on whom they have ever ſince depended. His reſidence for the moſt part at Tripolis, a chief Town of Syria; but when he came to viſit his Churches, and take an accompt of his Suffragan Biſhops (who are nine in number) then at Blouſa, as is ſaid before. Won to the Papacy again by John Baptiſt a Jeſuit, in the time of Pope Gregory the thirteenth, who ſent them a Catechiſm from Rome, printed in the Arabian Language (which is generally ſpoken by them) for their inſtruction in the Rudiments of that Religion: yet ſo that their Patriarch ſtill reteins his former power, and the Prieſts ſtill officiate by the old Liturgies of thoſe Churches, in the Syriack Tongue. So that this reconciliation, upon the matter, is but a matter of complement on the one ſide, and oſtentation on the other; without any increaſe of power or patrimony to the Pope at all. And for the Jacobites, though diſperſed in many places of this Countrey; yet ſince they are more entirely ſettled in Meſopotamia, where their Patriarch hath alſo his abode or reſidence, we ſhall there ſpeak of them.

The Language here vulgarly ſpoken, is the Arabick Tongue, continued here ever ſince the ſubjugation of theſe Countreys by the Saracens. But antiently they ſpake the Syrian and Phœnician Languages. Of which, the firſt (for of the other we ſhall ſpeak when we come to Phœnicia) was the very ſame with the Chaldæan (as the Learned Brerewood hath obſerved) either originally ſo, or elſe received by them when firſt conquered by the Babylonians. In which reſpect the Jews, when they returned home from their long Captivity, gave to the Language which they brought with them, the name of Syriack; being a compound of the Hebrew and Chaldæan Tongues: Chaldæan for a great part of it, as to the ſubſtance of the words; but Hebrew, as to the notation of Points, Conjugations, Affixes, and other properties of their former and original Speech. And of this more hereafter alſo, when we come to Palæſtine. But whatſoever their Language was in former time, it is now ſo over-topped by the Arabick, that it is ſpoken in ſome Villages of the Marorites only in all theſe Countreys; the Arabick being generally uſed in all the reſt, as was ſaid before.

Principal Rivers of theſe parts, are, 1. Chorſaus, called Chiſon by the Hebrews, which hath its fountain in Paleſtine, but his fall in Phœnicia, not farr from Mount Carmel. 2. Orontes, now called Saldino, and by ſome Writers, Jordan the leſs, ariſeth out of the Hills called Pieria, not farr from Mount Libanus; and after a while running under the ground, breaketh forth again about Apamia, and paſſing by the great City of Antioch, falleth into the Sea not farr from it. It was firſt called Tiphon, and took this name from one Orontes, who built the firſt Bridge over it, as we find in Strabo. 3. Eleutherus, which riſeth out of ſome part of Libanus, and glideth with a ſpeedy courſe through a ſtrangely-intricate Channel, into the Mediterranean Sea: guilty of the death of the Emperor Frederick Barbaraſſa, who falling from his Horſe as he perſued the Infidels, and oppreſſed with the weight of his Armour, was here drowned, and lyeth buried at Tyre. It is now called Caſmer. 4. Senigas, by ſome ſaid to be called Marſoas alſo, which riſing in the mountainous parts of Comagena, and paſſing by the City of Aleppo, falleth into Euphrates.. 5. Euphrates, the moſt famous River of the Eaſt; of which more hereafter.

Chief Mountains of it, 1. Carmel, which being properly of Phœnicia, we ſhall there ſpeak of it. 2. Pieria, out of which the River Orontes hath its firſt original. 3. Caſius, not farr from Antioch, ſaid to be four miles high perpendicularly. 4. Libanus, famous for its multitude of Cedars growing thereupon; affording materials unto Solomon for the Holy Temple. Beſides which it affordeth ſuch ſtore of Frankincenſe, that ſame derived the name from λιβανος, ſignifying Frankincenſe in the Greek: and ſo replenished with Honey falling from the Heavens, and hanging on the Boughs of the Trees, that the Husbandmen uſed to ſing (as Gallen telleth us) that God rained Honey; and yearly filled their Pots and Veſſels with the ſweets thereof. This the moſt famous and greateſt Hill of all theſe parts, extending in length 150 miles, that is to ſay, from Sidon, a City of Phœnicia, to Smyrna, one of the Cities of Cœle-Syria: and taking 700 miles in compaſs. Inhabited wholly in a manner by the Maronite Chriſtians, who, to keep their dwelling to themſelves without the intermixture of Mahometans, do yearly pay to the Great Turk ſeventeen Sultanies a man, for every one above twelve years of Age:

each Sultanie being reckoned at ſeven ſhillings and ſix pence of our money. And yet thoſe Maronites, though intire, without intermixture, are held to be the ſmalleſt Sect, for numbers, in all the Eaſt, not eſtimated to exceed twelve thouſand houſholds, by reaſon of the indiſpoſition of this Mountain, in moſt places unfit for habitation. For beſides the craggineſs and ſteepneſs of it, which makes many parts hereof to be inacceſſible, the higher Ridges of it are in a manner perpetually covered with ſnow, not melted in ſo hot a Climate at the neareſt approaches of the Sun. And thence no doubt it took this name; the word Leban, in the Hebrew and Phœnician language, ſignifying White, or Whiteneſs; even as from the like Whiteneſs of ſnow, the higheſt part of the Pynaan hills had the name of Canus; and that perpetual Ridge of Mountains, which parts Italy from France and Germany, had the name of Alpes. 5 Anti-Libanus, oppoſite to the former, and from that ſo called; a rich, but little Valley only being interpoſed, out of which Valley the Orontes hath its Spring or Fountain, the hill Pieria there beginning to advance it ſelf. Some make but one Mountain of them both, divided into two great Ledges or Chains of Hills. Of which the main body lying towards the North, hath the name of Libanus; that on the South, being but a branch or excurſion of it, called Anti-Libanus. And to this the Scripture gives ſome hint, in which both paſs for one, by the name of Lebanon.

The whole Countrey was antiently divided into theſe ſix parts, viz. 1 Phœnicia, 2 Paleſtine, 3 Syria ſpecially ſo called, 4 Comagena, 5 Palmyrene, and 6 Cœle-Syria, or Syria Cava. But Paleſtine, coming under a more diſtinct conſideration, we ſhall now ſpeak only of the reſt.

1. PHOENICIA.

PHOENICIA is bounded on the Eaſt and South, with Paleſtine; on the North, with Syria properly and ſpecially ſo called; on the Weſt, with the Mediterranean Sea. So called by the Grecians, from the abundance of Palm-trees therein growing, the word φοίνικη in that language ſignifying a Palm. And for a further proof hereof, (for I know there are other Etymons and Originations pretended for it) the Palm was antiently the ſpecial Cogniſance or Enſign of this Countrey; as the Olive branch and Cony of Spain, the Elephant of Africk, the Camel of Arabia, and the Crocodile of Egypt, being peculiar to thoſe Countries. And in an old Coyn of the Emperour Veſpaſian's. ſtamped for a memorial of his conqueſt of Judæa, the Impreſs is a woman ſitting in a ſad and Melancholick poſture, at the back of Palm-trees, with theſe two words, Judæa Capta, inſcribed thereon: in which, no queſtion may be made, but that the deſolate woman ſignifyed the Land of Judæa, and the Palm Phœnicia, Phœnicia being ſeated immediatly on the North, at the back of Jewry.

But it was thus firſt called by the Grecians only, the Latines and other People after them taking up that name. For by themſelves, and the people of Iſrael their next neighbours, they are called Canaanites, or the poſterity of Canaan, five of whoſe ſons, viz. Zidon, Harki, Arvadi, Senari, and Chemathi, were planted here: the other ſix inhabiting more towards the South and Eaſt, in the Land of Paleſtine. For further evidence hereof we may add theſe reaſons: firſt, that the ſame woman which in Saint Matthews Goſpel, chap. 15. verſe 22. is named a Canaanite, is by Saint Mark, chap. 7: verſe 26. called a Syro-Phœnician. Secondly, where mention is made in the book of Joſhuah, of the Kings of Canaan; the Septuagint (who very well underſtood the Hiſtory and Language of their Countrey) call them βασιλεῖς τῆς φοινίκης, or the Kings of Phœnicia. Thirdly, the Pœni, or Carthaginians, being beyond all diſpute a Tyrian or Phœnician Colony, when they were asked any thing of their Original, would anſwer that they were Channai; meaning (as Saint Auguſtine that Countrey-man doth expound their words) that they were Originally Canaanites, of the ſtock of Canaan. And laſtly, from the language of it, which antiently was the old Hebrew, Canaanitiſh, or the Language of Canaan; ſpoken both here and in Paleſtine alſo, before that Countrey was poſſeſſed by the houſe of Jacob: as appears plainly in thoſe names, by which the places and Cities of Canaan were called, when and before the Iſraelites came firſt to dwell amongſt them, which are meerly Hebrew. And ſo much, as unto the language is acknowledged by Bochartus alſo, who in the entrance of his Book inſcribed Canaan, declares what profit may enſue from that undertaking to the Hebrew tongue; cujus Phœnicia lingua dialectus fuit, of which the Phœnician language was a dialect onely.

The Countrey of it ſelf not great, extended in a good length, from the further ſide of Mount Carmel, where it joyns with Paleſtine; to the River of Volanus on the North, by which parted from Syria: but withall ſo narrow, that it is little more than a bare Sea-coaſt, and therefore rightly called terrarum anguſtiſſima by a modern writer. Rich rather by the benefit and increaſe of trade (to which no Nation under Heaven hath been more addicted) than by the natural commodities which the land afforded: yet for the quantity thereof, no place could be more plentifully furniſhed with Oyl, Wheat, the beſt ſort of Balm, and moſt excellent Honey; the lower part thereof being deſigned for the ſeat of Aſher, of whom Moſes propheſied, Dent. 33. v. 24. that he ſhould dip his foot in Oyl. So that the Countrey generally, was well conditioned, lovely to look upon, populous, and adorned with more beautiful Cities, than ſuch a ſpan of earth could be thought to hold. Of which thus writeth Ammianns, Acclivis monti Libano Phœnicia Regio, plena gratiarum & venuſtatis, urbibus decorata magnis & pulchris, &c. i. e. Falling from Mount Libanus, lieth the Countrey of Phœnicia, full of all graces and elegancies, adorned with great and beautiful Cities; of which the moſt renowned for the fertility of their ſoil, and the fame of their achievements, are Tyre, Sidon, Berytus, &c.

The people antiently, by reaſon of their Maritime ſituation, were great Adventurers at Sea, trading in almoſt all the Ports of the then known World, and ſending more Colonies abroad upon forein

Plantations than any Nations in the earth. An active and ingenuous people, ſaid to have been the firſt Navigators, the firſt builders of Ships, the firſt inventors of Letters, (of which hereafter more on ſome other occaſion) and the firſt Authors of Arithmetick, the firſt that brought Aſtronomy to an Art or Method, and the firſt makers of glaſſe. Defamed in holy Scripture for their groſs Idolatries, by which they laid a ſtumbling block at the feet of the Iſraelites: Aſtaroth (or Aſturte) the Goddeſs of the Sidonians (but whether Juno, Venus, or ſome other, I diſpute not here) being ſo highly prized amongſt them, that Solomon himſelf, when he fell from God, made this one of his Idols. Once yearly, as Euſebius telleth us, they ſacrificed ſome of their ſons to Saturn, whom in their language they called Moloch. And in the inmoſt retreats of Libanus had a Temple to Venus, defiled with the practice of moſt filthy luſts, intemperately uſing the natural Sex, and moſt unnaturally abuſing their own. Nor could the purity and piety of the Chriſtian faith prevail ſo far, as to extinguiſh theſe ungodly rites, till Conſtantine finally deſtroyed both the Temples and Idols, and left not any thing remaining of them, but the ſhame and infamy. St. Auſtin addeth, that they did proſtitute their daughters unto Venus, before they married them: and it is moſt likely to be true. For the Phœnicians and Cypriots being ſo near neighbours, and ſubject for a time to the ſame Princes alſo, could not but impart their impure Rites and Ceremonies unto one another.

Rivers of note there can be none in ſo narrow a Region, but what are common unto others, and ſhall there be ſpoken of. Moſt proper unto this is the river of Adonis, (now called Canis,) ſo named moſt probably from Adonis the darling of Venus, whoſe rites are here performed with as much ſolemnitie, as they be in Cyprus. His obſequies celebrated yearly in the moneth of June with great howlings and lamentations, Lucian fabling that the river uſually ſtreameth bloud upon that Solemnity; (as if Adonis were newly wounded in the mountains of Libanus,) to give the better colour to their Superſtitions. But the truth is, that this redneſs of the water ariſeth onely from the winds, which at that time of the year blowing very vehemently, do thereby carry down the ſtream a great quantity of Minium, or red Earth, from the ſides of thoſe hills, wherewith the waters are diſcoloured. Such uſe can Satan make of a natural accident, to blind the eyes and captivate the underſtandings of beſotted people.

Chief mountains of this Countrey are, 1. Libanus, ſpoken of before, which hath here its firſt advance or riſing. 2. Carmel, which Ptolemy placeth in this Country, of which it is the utmoſt part upon the South, where it joyneth with Paleſtine. Waſhed on the North ſide with the brook Chiſon; on the Weſt, with the Mediterranean Sea: ſteep of aſcent, and of indifferent latitude; abounding with ſeveral ſorts of Fruits, Olives and Vines in good plenty, and ſtored with herbs both medicinable and ſweet of ſmell. The retreat ſometimes of Elias, when he fled from Jezabel; whoſe habitation here, after his deceaſe, was converted to a Jewiſh Synagogue. To this place (being then in the poſſeſſion of the Kings of Iſrael) did that Prophet aſſemble the Prieſts of Baal; and having by a miraculous experiment confuted their idolatrous follies, cauſed them to be cut in pieces on the banks of the river Chiſon near adjoyning to it. Upon this viſible declaring of the power and preſence of the Almighty, the Gentiles grew perſwaded that Oracles were there given by God; by Suetonius called the God Carmelus. Where ſpeaking of Veſpaſian, who had then newly took upon him the Imperial Dignity, he addeth, Apud Judæam Carmeli Dei oracula conſulentem ita confirmavere ſortes, &c. that conſulting in Judæa with the Oracle of the God Carmelus, he was aſſured that whatſoever he undertook ſhould ſucceed well with him. In after-times the Order of the Friers Carmelites, as Succeſſours unto the Children of the Prophets left here by Eliah, had their name from hence: the ruines of whoſe Monaſtery are ſtill to be ſeen, with a Temple dedicated to the Bleſſed Virgin; and under that a Cave or Chappel, ſaid to have been the lurking place of that holy Prophet, in the time of his troubles.

Places of moſt importance in it. 1. Ptolemais, now nothing but a ruine of what it hath been, but formerly of great ſtrength and conſequence. Named Ace at the firſt, a refuge for the Perſian Kings in their wars againſt Egypt: enlarged, or rather new built, by Ptolemy, the firſt of that race, by whom called Ptolemais, which name ſtill continued; though Claudius Cæſar planting there a Roman Colony, would fain have had it called Colonia Claudii; after the conqueſt of it by the Saracens, in the time of Omer the great Caliph, it returned towards its firſt name, and was called Acon, or Acre; both names ſtill remaining in vulgar ſpeech, as that of Ptolemais amongſt Latine writers. Situate in the flouriſh of it on a flat or level, in form of a triangular ſhield; on two ſides neighboured by the Sea, which comes up cloſe to it; on the third looking towards the Campaign: environed with a double wall, to each wall a Ditch fortified on the outſide with Towers and Bulwarks; within the wals ſo ſtrongly houſed, as if the whole Town had been a conjunction of fortreſſes, and not ordained for private dwellings. In the midſt of the city was one tower of great ſtrength and beauty, which had ſometimes been the temple of Belzebub, and was therefore called the Caſtle of Flies: on the top whereof was maintained a perpetual light, like the Pharos of Egypt, to give comfort and direction in the night to ſuch Mariners, as made towards this Port. Took from the Chriſtians by the Saracens in the time of Omer, and from them wreſted by the Turks with the reſt of Syria; it became Chriſtian again An. 1004. in the raign of Baldwin the firſt, brother of the famous Godfrey of Bouillon, and ſecond King of Hieruſalem, by the help of the Genoeſe; who for their pains had the third part of the city aſſigned unto them. Recovered by Saladine to the Turks, and from him taken again by the weſtern Chriſtians, under the conduct of Philip of France, and Richard the firſt of England, An. 1191. it continued in the poſſeſſion of the Kings of Hieruſalem, notably defended by the Hoſpitalers (now Knights of Malta) till the year 1291. when beſieged by an Army of an hundred and fifty thouſand Turks, it was forced to yeeld, though loſt by inches: and the Turks fearing leſt the Chriſtians would again attempt it, razed it to the ground: demoliſhing the Phœnicia. large walls and arches of it, which lie like maſſie rocks on their old foundations. Memorable in thoſe times for the brave ſervice here done by the Chriſtians of the Weſtern parts, of which none more renowned then thoſe of our Richard the firſt, and Edward the firſt. This latter here treacherouſly wounded by an Infidel, with a poiſoned knife, the venom whereof could by no means be aſſwaged, till his moſt vertuous wife (herein propoſing a moſt rare example of conjugal affection) ſucked it out with her mouth. And for the former, he became ſo terrible and redoubted among the Turks, that when their children began to cry, they would ſay, Peace, King Richard is coming: and when their horſes ſtarted, they would ſpur them, ſaying, What you Jades, do you think that King Richard is here? By the Mamalucks, when Lords of Syria, it was patched together, and made fit for habitation rather than defence: not peopled by above 300 Inhabitants, nor would it have ſo many, but for the Haven adjoyning: which though a ſmall Bay, and of very ill anchorage, is much frequented by the Merchants of our Weſtern world, trading here for their Cotten Wool; with which the neighbouring Countrey is abundantly furniſhed. I have ſtaid the longer in this place, by reaſon of the great fame and importance of it, as being the laſt hold which the Chriſtians had of all their conqueſts; with the loſs whereof they laid aſide all thoughts of thoſe holy wars.

2, Tyre, ſeated in a rocky Iland, about ſeventy paces from the main land; well built, and circular of form, as well by Art as Nature impregnably fortified. A Colony of the Sidonians, and therefore by the Prophet Eſay, ch. 23. v. 12. called the Daughter of Sidon: but by them built upon an high hill; the ruines whereof by the name of Palætyrus, or old Tyre, are remaining ſtill. Removed unto the Ilands by Agenor, King of the Phœnicians, and by him named Sor, or Tzor, from the rocky ſituation of it (as that word importeth.) Mollified by the Greeks to Tyrus, and from them taken by the Latines, though known to them alſo by the name of Sarra (the Tyrrian purple being by Virgil, and ſome others of the antient Poets, called Sarrarum Oſtrum:) and now at laſt returned to its firſt and originall name, vulgarly at this day called Sur. A City in elder times of great trade and wealth: the Prophet Eſay, ch. 27. v. 8. calling the Merchants hereof Princes, and her Chapmen the Nobles of the World. Excelling all others of thoſe times both for learning and manufactures, eſpecially for the dying of Purple, firſt here invented; and that as Julius Pollux ſaith, by a very accident: the dog of Hercules, (or if not his, ſome dog or other) whoſe lips by eating of the fiſh called Conchilis, or Purpura, had been made of that colour. Grown to great pride, by reaſon of the wealth and pleaſures, her deſtruction was fore-ſignified by the holy Prophets: accompliſhed in Gods own time by Nebuchadnezzar; who with great induſtry and toil joyned it to the Continent. But his works being demolliſhed by the fury of the Sea, and the labour of the Tyrians, it was after ſeventy years again re-edified; and having flouriſhed after that for two hundred years, by Alexander the great was again demolliſhed; to whoſe indefatigable perſeverance nothing was impoſſible. For having filled the channel with the ſtones and rubbiſh of old Tyre, and rammed them in with huge beams brought from Libanus, he made a paſſage for his Army: and having once approached the walls, ſo over-topped them with towers, and frames of timber, that at laſt he made himſelf Maſter of it, putting to the ſword all ſuch as reſiſted, and cauſing two thouſand of them to be hanged in cold bloud, all along the ſhore for a terrour to others: This rendition of the Town was divined by the South-ſayers, who followed the Camp of Alexander, upon a dream which he had not long before. For dreaming that he had diſported himſelf with Satyres; the Diviners onely making of one word two, found that Σατυρὸς was no more than Σὰ τύρος, that is, Tua Tyrus; and it happened accordingly. Recovering once again, both her riches and beauties, ſhe became a confederate of the Romans, in the growth of their fortunes; endued by them with the priviledges of their City, for her great fidelity. Made in the beſt times of Chriſtianity, the Metropolitan See for the Province of Phœnicia, the Biſhop hereof having under him fourteen ſuffragan Biſhops. Subjected to the Saracens in the year ſix hundred thirty and ſix, and having groaned under that yoak for the ſpace of four hundred eighty and eight years, was at laſt regained by Guarimund Patriarch of Hieruſalem, in the reign of the ſecond Baldwin, the Venetians contributing their aſſiſtance to it, Anno 1124. In vain attempted afterwards by victorious Saladine; but finally brought under the Turkiſh thraldom, Anno 1289. as it ſtill continueth. Now nothing but an heap of ruines, but the very ruines of it of ſo fair a proſpect, as ſtriketh both pity and amazement into the beholders; ſhewing them an exemplary pattern of our humane frailty. Subject at the preſent to the Emir, or Prince of Sidon, and beautified with a goodly and capacious Haven, one of the beſt of the Levant; but of no great trading. 3. Sarepta, by the Hebrews called Sarphath, ſituate on the Sea-coaſt betwixt Tyre and Sidon. Memorable in holy Writ for the mirecle here performed by the Prophet Elijah, in raiſing the poor Widows Son: in Heathen Writers, for the pureſt Wines, little inferiour unto thoſe of Falernum in Italy, or Chios in Greece, Of which thus the Poet:

> Vina mihi non ſunt Gazetica, Chia, Falerna, > Quæque Sareptano palmite miſſa bibas.
> In Engliſh thus,
> I have no Chian, or Falernian wines,
> Nor thoſe of Gaza's, or Sarepta's vines.

4. Sidon, the ancienteſt City of all Phœnicia, and the moſt Northern of all thoſe which were aſſigned for the portion of the ſons of Aſer: beyond which the countrey of Phœnicia, having been hitherto to nothing but a bare Sea-coſt, beginneth to open towards the Eaſt in a fine rich valley, having Libanus upon the North, and the Anti-Libanus on the South; once cloſed up from the reſt of Syria with a very

ſtrong wall, long ſince demoliſhed. It was called ſo from Zidon, one of the ſons of Canaan, who firſt planted here; not (as ſome ſay) from Sida, the daughter of Belus, once a King hereof: this City being mentioned in the Book of Joſuah, when no ſuch Belus was in being. Situate in a fertile and delightfull ſoyl, defended with the Sea on the one ſide, and the other by the Mountains lying betwixt it and Libanus; from whence deſcended thoſe many Springs, with which they watered and enriched their moſt pleaſant Orchards. The Inhabitants hereof are ſaid to be the firſt makers of Chriſtal Glaſs; the materials of the work brought hither from the Sands of a River running not far from Ptolemais, and only made fuſible in this City. And from hence Solomon and Zerobabel, had their principal work-men, both for Stone and Timber, in their ſeveral buildings of the Temple. The people hereof ſo flouriſhing in Arts and Trades, that the Prophet Zecharia, chap. 9. v. 2. calleth them the wiſe Sidonians. A City which at ſeveral times was both the Mother and Daughter of Tyre; the Mother of it in the times of Heatheniſm, Tyre being a Colony of this People; and the Daughter of it when inſtructed in the Chriſtian faith, acknowledging the Church of Tyre for its Mother-Church. The City in thoſe times very ſtrong both by Art and Nature, having on the North-ſide a Fort or Citadel, mounted on an inacceſſible Rock, and invironed on all ſides with the Sea; which, when it was brought under the command of the Weſtern Chriſtians, was held by the Order of the Dutch Knights; and another on the South-ſide of the Port, which the Templars guarded. Won by the Turks with the reſt of this Countrey from the Chriſtians, and ruined by thoſe often interchanges of fortune: it only ſheweth now ſome marks of the antient greatneſs; the preſent Sidon ſtanding ſomewhat Weſt of the old, and having little worth a particular deſcription, in reſpect of what it was in her antient glories. The Haven at this time decayed, or ſerving at the beſt for Gallies; with a poor Block-houſe, rather for ſhew than ſervice: the walls of no greater ſtrength, and as little beauty, and the buildings ordinary; but that the Moſque, the Bannia of Bathes, and the Cane for Merchants, are ſomowhat fairer than the reſt: yet gives a title at this time to the Emir of Sidon, one of the greateſt Princes of all this Countrey, of whom more hereafter. 5 Berytus, originally called Geris, from Gergeſhi the fift ſon of Canaan, took this new name from Berith, a Phœnician Idol herein worſhipped; and now called Barutti. Deſtroyed by Tryphon in the wars of the Syrians againſt the Jews, it was re-edified by the Romans, by whom made a Colony, and honoured with the name of Julia Felix; Auguſtus giving it the Priviledges of the City of Rome. By Herod and Agrippa Kings of the Jews, much adorned and beautified; and of no mean eſteem in the time of the Chriſtians, when made an Epiſcopal See under the Metropolitan of Tyre. Being a place of no great ſtrength, nor aimed at by every new Invader, it hath ſped better than the reſt of theſe Cities (though ſtronger than this) retaining ſtill her being, though not all her beauties; well ſtored with merchandiſe, and well frequented by the Merchant. Nigh to this Town is a fair and fruitfull valley, which they call Saint Georges; in which there is a Caſtle, and in that an Oratory of the ſame name alſo. All ſacred to Saint George the Martyr, who hereabouts is fabled to have killed the Dragon, and thereby delivered a Kings daughter, but what Kings I know not, nor they neither. 6 Biblis, ſometimes the habitation of Hevi, the fourth ſon of Canaan, and then called Hevaa: afterwards made the Regal Seat of Cinyras, father and grandfather of Adonis, by his daughter Myrrha; whereof we have already ſpoken when we were in Cyprus. Of ſuch eſteem in the Primitive times of Chriſtianity, that it was made a Biſhops See; deſolate and of no repute ſince it loſt that honour, and became thrall unto the Turks. 7 Orthoſia, called alſo Antaradus, becauſe oppoſite to Aradus, another old City of this tract; but in after ages called Tortoſa, and by that name well known in the Hiſtories of the Holy War, undertaken by the Weſtern Chriſtians. To whom it made ſuch ſtout and notable reſiſtance, that though beſieged on all ſides with united Forces (the whole Army formerly divided, ſitting down before it;) yet after three months hard ſiege, they were fain to leave the Town behind them, and content themſelves with ſpoiling the adjoining Countrey.

8. Tripolis, ſeated in a rich and delightfull plain, more fruitfull than can be imagined: one of which fruits they called by the name of Amazza Franchi, i. e. Kill-Frank, becauſe the Weſtern Chriſtians, whom they call by the name of French, died in great numbers by the intemperate eating of them. A Valley which is ſaid to have yielded yearly to the Counts of Tripolis, no leſs than 200000 Crowns. As for the Town, it ſtandeth about two miles of the ſea, at the foot of Mount Libanus; ſo called becauſe built by the joint purſes of 3. Cities, that is to ſay, Tyrus, Sidon, and Aradus. Of no great note among the Romans, for ought I can find, till made one of the Epiſcopal Sees, belonging to the Archb. of Tyre in the Primitive times. But thriving by degrees, it grew to principal Accompt by the time that the Weſtern Chriſtians warred in the holy Land: when conquered by them, it was made one of the Tetrarchies, or Capital Cities for the 4. Quarters of their Empire; which were, Hieruſalem for Paleſtine; Edeſſa for Comagena, or Meſopotamia; Antioch for Syria, and this for Phœnicia. Committed at the firſt taking of it, to the cuſtody of Raymound Earl of Tholouſe in France: whoſe poſterity, whileſt it laſted, had from hence the title of Earls of Tripoli. A City, which, I know not by what good hap; hath ſped better than any of thoſe parts, retaining ſtill as much in ſtrength and beauty as ever it had; if not grown greater by the ruine of all the reſt. Situate two miles from the Sea, as before is ſaid, but not above half a mile from the Haven, which lieth upon the Weſt ſide of it; compaſſed with a wall, and fortified with ſeven Towers, of which the fourth is commonly called the Tower of Love, becauſe built by an Italian Merchant, who was found in bed with a Turkiſh woman; for which he had forfeited his life, if not thus redeemed. Before the Haven is an ill-neighbouring bank of ſand, which every day groweth greater and nearer to it; by which in time there is a Propheſie which ſaith it ſhall quite be choaked: On both ſides of it many ſtore-houſes for the Merchant to ſtow his goods in, and ſhops to ſell them; the way from thence unto the City, having on both ſides very pleaſant Phœnicia. Gardens, more curiouſly kept, than uſually amongſt the Turks. The Town it ſelf ſtretched out in length from the South to North, is ſituate, as before was ſaid, at the foot of Libanus, conveying a Brook into the Streets, and many pleaſant ſprings into the chief of their gardens: In which, and in thoſe towards the Haven, and on other ſides of the Town, the Inhabitants keep great ſtore of Silk-Worms; ſelling their Silks raw unto the Italians, and buying them again of them in Stuff or Manufacture. Their buildings generally low, and the ſtreets but narrow, except that leading towards Aleppo, which is fair and open. Over the Brook, at the Eaſt-ſide of the City are built two Bridges; and on the South-ſide a ſtrong Caſtle mounted on a hill, built by the French when they had the cuſtody hereof; now garriſoned for the Grand Seigneur with 200 Janizaries. At this time it is looked on as the Metropolis or chief City of Phœnicia, honoured with the reſidence of the Patriarch of the Maronites, for the moſt part dwelling in this Town; and enriched with a great part of the Trade of Scanderone, or Alexandretta, removed hither ſome forty years ago by the Turks appointment; that Haven lying unfenced and more open to Pyrates.

That the Phœnicians were deſcended of the ſons of Canaan, hath been proved already. And being deſcendants of that ſtock, they were at the firſt governed like them, by the Chiefs of their families, whom they honoured (as moſt Nations did) with the title of Kings. But moſt of the Canaanitiſh Kings being overcome and ſlain by Joſuah Agenor, a ſtout and prudent man, one of thoſe many Kings which commanded in thoſe parts of the Countrey, ſeeing how impoſſible it was to reſiſt that enemy, borrowed ſome aid from Egypt, where he had his breeding, to make good the Sea-coaſts of his Countrey: In which the Philiſtims, who interpoſed upon thoſe coaſts betwixt him and Egypt, concurred alſo with him. By which aſſiſtance, and by the fortifying of Zydon, Tyre, and Ace, (or Ptolemais) which were all the Cities of this Countrey that were then in being; he did not only preſerve his own eſtate from the preſent danger, but left it ſo aſſured to the Kings ſucceeding; that neither Solomon nor David, nor any of the Kings of Iſrael durſt attempt upon them. To Agenor ſucceeded his ſon Phœnix, (Cadmus, his elder brother, going into Greece in ſearch of his ſiſter Europa, raviſhed by Jupiter, where he built Thebes, and therein reigned till his death) from whom, as ſome conceive, this Countrey had the name of Phœnicia. And though I have declared my ſelf for another reaſon of this name, which I like much better; yet I ſhall rather yield to this, or to any other, than to that of Bochartus; who will have it derived from Ben-Anak, or the ſons of Anak, (as if the old Phœnicians were ſuch Gyantly men) which muſt firſt be contracted in Beanack, then by the Grecians turned into Theanac, and at laſt into Phœnix. Such far-fetched and extorted Originations never pleaſe my Fancy, who had much rather hearken to the old received opinions touching the firſt Originals of names and nations, where there is not very pregnant reaſon to perſwade me otherwiſe; than ſtrain my ſelf ſo far for a new invention, or hearken unto thoſe that do. But for what cauſe ſoever they were named Phœnicians, certain it is, they were a very active and induſtrious people, trading in the moſt parts of the Mediterranean, and planting Colonies in many. Thebes and Sephyra in Bœotia, Nola in Italy, Gades in Spain; Utica, Leptis, Carthage, in Africk, were of their foundation. Nay, if we may believe Bochartus, ther was no Iland, or Sea-coaſt in the Mediterranean, or on the Cantabrian, Gallick, or Britiſh Ocean, wherein they did not keep ſome factory, or erect ſome Colony. What Kings ſucceeded Phœnix in a conſtant and continued courſe, I can no where find. Moſt like it is, they were not under the command of any one Prince: and that beſides the Kings of Sidon, where Agenor reigned, there were ſome others who called themſelves Kings of Phœnicia alſo, as well as they. Of which ſort were Cyniras, Paphus, and Pygmalion, who had their Regal ſeat at Biblis, and lorded it over a good part of Cyprus, as did alſo Belus, who gave ſome part of that Iſle to Teucer, as is ſaid before. There is alſo found mention of one Phaſis, a Phœnician King, at ſuch time as the Grecians conquered Troy. After him none, till the ſubjugation of this Countrey by the Babylonians; Tetramneſtus, Tennes, and Strato, mentioned in ſucceeding times, being Tributaries to the Perſian, and no abſolute Princes. Whether it were that the Phœnicians were made ſubject to the Kings of Tyre, or that the Kings thereof did nothing to preſerve their memory, I am not able to determine. Certain it is, that the Kings of Tyre came in ſhort time to be of very great repute, and to poſſeſs themſelves of the coaſts of Syria and Phœnicia, and a great part of Cyprus; whereby and by the benefit of their trade and ſhipping, they grew rich, and powerfull and of great conſideration in affairs of the World. The names and hiſtory of whom I ſhall here ſubjoin, in this enſuing Catalogue of

A.M.

The KINGS of TYRE.

1 Abibalus, as Joſephus; Abemalus, as Theophilus Antiochenus calleth him, Co-temporary with Samuel; ſuppoſed to be the ſame which the Son of Syriach mentioneth, Eccleſ. 46. verſe 18.

2 Saron, the Son of Abibalus, whom David, as Euſebius ſaith, compelled to pay tribute; complained of by the Prophet, Pſal. 83. v. 7.

2931 3 Hiram, the Son of Saron, confederate with David, to whom he ſent Cedars, with Carpenters and Maſons, towards his building in Jeruſalem, after he had beaten thence the Jebuſites; as he did afterward to Solomon when he built the Temple. Much mentioned in the Books of Kings, and Chronicles. 53.

2955 4 Baleaſtartus, or Bazorus, ſucceeded Hiram. 7.

2983 6 Aſtartus,

Syria Propria.

2983 6 Aſtartus, brother of Abdaſtartus, recovered the Kingdom to his houſe, out of the hands of the Uſurpers. 12.

2995 7 Aſtorinus, or Athorinus, as Theophilus calleth him, the younger brother of Aſtartus. 9.

3004 8 Phelles, the brother of theſe three Kings, and youngeſt Son of Baleaſtartus, reigned eight moneths onely.

9 Ithobalus, called Ethbaal, 1 Kings 16. 13. ſon of Aſtorinus, ſlew his Uncle Phelles, and ſo regained his Fathers Throne; before which he was the High-Prieſt of the Goddeſs Aſtaroth, or Aſtarta, (a dignity next to that of the King.) He was the Father of Jezabel, the wife of Ahab, ſo often mentioned in the Scripture. 32.

3037 10 Badezar, or Bazar, ſon of Ethbaal. 6.

3043 11 Mettimus, by ſome called Matginus, ſon of Badezer, and father of Eliſa, whom Virgil celebrateth by the name of Dido.

3052 12 Pygmalion, the ſon of Mettimus, who ſlew Sicheus the husband of his ſiſter Eliſa, to get his riches; but yet he was coſoned of his prey: his ſiſter Eliſa, accompanied with her brother Barca (the founder of the Noble Barcine family, of which Annibal was) and her ſiſter Anna flying into Africk; where ſhe built the renowned City of Carthage. 47. The names of his ſucceſſors we find not, till we come to 13 Elulaus, deſcended from a ſon of Pygmalion, who overthrow the Fleet of Salmannaſſer, the Aſſyrian, in the Port of Tyre.

14 Ethobales, or Ethbaal II. who vaunted himſelf to be as wiſe as Daniel, and to know all ſecrets, as ſaith the Prophet Ezekiel, chap. 28. v. 1, 2. And yet not wiſe enough to preſerve his kingdom from Nabuchadonoſor; who after a ſiege of 13. years took the City of Tyre, and ſubjected it unto his Empire.

15 Baal, the ſon and ſucceſſor of Ethbaal the ſecond, but a Tributary to the Babylonians. After whoſe death the Tyrians had no more Kings, but were governed by Judges, or by ſuch titular Kings only as were ſent from Babylon. And though Tyre and Sidon did recover breath in the fall of the Babylonian Empire, and the unſetledneſs of the Perſian: yet being of the Perſian faction, and having dependence on that Crown, they were by Alexander held unworthy to continue. Who therefore depoſed Strato the King of Sidon, and overthrew the City of Tyre; in taking whereof he had ſpent more time, than in forcing all the Cities of Aſia.

After this time Phœnicia, being reckoned as a part of Syria, followed the fortune of the whole, ſubject unto the Syrian Kings of the houſe of Seleucus, till made a Province of the Romans, ſubject to the Conſtantinopolitans, till the fatal year 636. when ſubdued by the Saracens. Succeſſively conquered by the Turks, Chriſtians, and after their expulſion by the Turks again, then by the Mamalucks of Egypt, and finally with the reſt of Syria, by Selimus the firſt united to the Turkiſh Empire. Subject at this time, or of late, to the Emir of the Druſians, (commonly called the Emir of Sidon) of which people we have ſpoken before. A people who in the time of Amurath, the third, were governed by five Emirs or Princes; one of which was Man-Ogli, who ſo reſolutely reſiſted Ibrahim Baſſa, Ann. 1585. This Man-Ogli then kept his Court or reſidence at Andirene, a ſtrong place ſituate on a hill, and was of that wealth, that he ſent to make his peace unto the above-named Ibrahim, 320 Arcubuſes, 20 packs of Andirene Silks, and 50000 Ducats. At a ſecond time he preſented him with 50000 Ducats more, 480 Arcubuſes, 1000 Goats, 150 Camels, 150 Buffes, and 1000 Oxen, and 200 Weathers. By theſe rich gifts we may not a little conjecture of the Revenue of the preſent Emir of Sidon; who ſince the year 1600. hath reduced almoſt all the Countreys belonging once to five Princes, under his own Empire; containing the Towns and Territories of Gaza, Barut, Sidon, Tyre, Acre, Saffet, (or Tiberias) his ſeat of reſidence, Nazareth, Cana, Mount Tabor, Elkiffe, &c. This preſent Emir, by name Faccardine, was not long ſince driven out of his Countrey by the Turk, and forced to flye to Florence: but he again recovered his own, laid ſiege to Damaſcus, and cauſed a notable rebellion in Aſia; not quenched in a long time after. And finally, having poſſeſſed himſelf of the City and Caſtle of Damaſcus, prepared for the taking of Hieruſalem alſo; threatning to make the Chriſtians once more Maſters of it. This was in the year 1623. How he ſped afterward, and whether his ſon, as ſtout and valiant as himſelf, hath ſince his death ſucceeded him in his Eſtates, I am not able to ſay: having of late heard nothing of them.

2. SYRIA PROPRIA.

SYRIA PROPRIA, or Syria ſpecially ſo called, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Palmyrene; on the Weſt, with the Mediterranean; on the North, with Cilicia, on the South, with Phœnicia, and ſome part of Cœle-Syria.

This part of Syria I take to be the land of Hamath, ſo often mentioned in the Scriptures, the Kingdom of Toi or Tou, next neighbour, and ſworn Enemy to Adadezer King of Aram-Sobah: who hearing of the great diſcomfiture which David had given unto that King, ſent his ſon Joram, or Adoram, (for the Scripture calls him by both names) with preſents to him, as well to congratulate his ſucceſs, as to be aſſured for times to come of his love and amity. So called from Hamath one of the ſons of Canaan, who fixed his dwelling in theſe parts, and left many Cities of that name in Syria and Paleſtine (which we ſhall meet withall in the courſe of this work) either built by him or his poſterity. Now that the Land of Hamath was this part of Syria, I am perſwaded to believe by theſe folfollowing reaſons, viz. 1. From the neighbourhood hereof to Arpad, or Arphad, conjoyned together, as in Eſay 10. 9. and Jer. 49. 23. So in other places, viz. Where are the Gods of Hamath and Arpad? 2 Kings 18. 34. The King of Hamath, and the King of Arphad, Eſay 37. 13. And we know well that Arvad was the name of an Iſland over againſt the mouth of the River Eleutherus, one of the Rivers of this Countrey: ſo called from Arvad, one of the ſons of Canaan, alluded to by the Greeks and Romans in the name of Aradus; by which this Iſle was known unto them. 2*ly*, By the vicinity which it hath to Palmyrene, the Aram-Sobah of the Scriptures, to which it joyneth on the Eaſt, with the King whereof (as bordering Princes uſe to be) the Kings of Hamath for the moſt part were in open War. Of which ſee 2 Sam. 8. 9, 10. and 1 Chr. 8. 9, 10. 3*ly*, From the authority of Saint Hierome, who finding mention in the Prophet Amos, Chap. 6. verſ. 2. of a City named Hamath the Great, determineth it to be the City which afterwards was called Antiochia (the principal City of this part, and indeed of Syria:) the title of Great being added to it, to difference it from ſome other Cities of this name of inferiour note. And 4*ly*, From comparing the places in Scripture, with the like paſſage in Joſephus the Hiſtoriographer. The Scripture telleth us, that Hieruſalem being forced by the Babylonians, Zedekias the King was brought Priſoner to Nebuchadnezzer, being then at Riblath, 2 Kings c. 2. v. 6. to Riblath in the Land of Hamath, v. 21. where the poor Prince firſt ſaw his Children ſlain before his face; and then miſerably deprived of ſight, that he might not ſee his great misfortunes, was led away to Babylon. Ask of Joſephus where this ſad Tragedy was acted, and he will tell us that it was at Reblatha (or Riblah) a City of Syria, Antiq. l. 10. c. 10. And if we ask Saint Hierome what he thinks of Reblatha, he will tell us it was Urbs ea quam nunc Antiochiam vocant, the City which in following times was called Antioch. On theſe grounds I conceive this part of Syria to be the land of Hamath intended in the Texts of Scripture above-cited; though there were other Towns and Territories of the ſame name alſo.

The Countrey is naturally fertile; the hedges on the high-way ſides affording very good fruits, and the adjoyning fields affording to the Paſſenger the ſhade of Fig-trees. Were it not naturally ſo, it would not be much helped by Art, or Induſtry; as being very meanly peopled, and thoſe few people without any incouragement either to plant fruits, or manure the Land. Their ſheep are commonly fair and fat, but ſo overladed on the tail, both with fleſh and fleece, that they hang in long wreaths unto the ground, dragged after them with no ſmall difficulty. Pliny obſerves it in his time, that the tails of the Syrian ſheep were a Cubit long, and had good ſtore of Wool upon them. Natur. Hiſt. l. 8. c. 48. And modern Travellers report, that the tails of theſe ſheep do frequently weigh 25 pound weight, and ſometimes 30 pounds and upwards. The like hath alſo been affirmed of the ſheep of Paleſtine comprehended in old times in the name of Syria. And that may probably be the reaſon why the rumps, or tails of ſheep (and of no beaſt elſe) were ordained to be offered up in ſacrifice, of which Levit. 3. v. 9. But beſides the ſtore of Wool which they have from the ſheep, they have alſo great plenty of Cotton-wool, which groweth there abundantly; with the ſeeds whereof they ſow their fields, as we ours with Corn. The ſtalk no bigger than that of Wheat, but as tough as a Beans; the head round and bearded, in the ſize and ſhape of a Medlar, and as hard as a ſtone: which ripening breaketh, and is delivered of a white ſoft Bombaſt intermixed with ſeeds; which parted with an inſtrument, they keep the Seeds for another ſowing, and ſell the Wool unto the Merchant: a greater quantity thereof iſſuing from that little ſhell, then can be imagined by thoſe who have not ſeen it.

The people heretofore were very induſtrious, eſpecially about their Gardens; the fruitfull effects whereof they found in the increaſe of their herbs and plants. Whence the Proverb, Multa Syrorum Olera. But withall they were obſerved to be very gluttonous, ſpending whole dayes and nights in feaſting; great ſcoffers, and much given to laughter, Crafty and ſubtile in their dealings, not eaſily to be truſted but upon good ſecurity: and ſo were the Phœnicians, their next neighbours alſo. Hence came the Greek Adage which Suidas ſpeaketh of, Σύροι πρὸς Φοίνικας, Syri contra Phœnices, uſed by them when two crafty knaves endeavoured to deceive each other. They were noted alſo to be ſuperſtitious, great worſhippers of the Goddeſs Fortune, but greater of their Syrian Goddeſs, whatſoever ſhe was. Affirmed by Plutarch to be a womaniſh and effeminate Nation, prone unto tears, and ſuch as on the death of their friends would hide themſelves in caves from the ſight of the Sun. Herodian addeth, that they were wavering and unconſtant, lovers of playes and publick paſtimes, and eaſily ſtirred up to innovations. But at this time, they are almoſt beaten out of all theſe humours, having been ſo often cowed and conquered, that they are now grown ſervilely officious to them that govern them: not without cauſe, defective in that part of induſtry which before enriched them.

Whether by the way we muſt obſerve, that this Character of the people, and that of the Countrey belonging not to this part alone, excluſively of thoſe which follow, but to all Syria, and every part and Province of it, except Phœnicia, which being planted by a people of another Stock, hath had its Character by it ſelf. The whole by Ptolemy divided, beſides Comagena, Palmyrene, and Cœle-Syria, into many petit Regions, and ſubdiviſions, as 1. Pieria. 2. Caſiotis, from the Hills adjoyning. 3. Seleucis. 4. Apamene. 5. Laodicene. 6. Cyrreſtica. 7. Chalcidice, and 8. Chalybanotis, from their principal Cities. Of which in all he muſters up the names of an hundred and upwards, then of ſome note, moſt of them now grown out of knowledge, and many of them of no mark, or obſervation in the courſe of buſineſs. So that omitting his method, we will follow our own, and take notice onely of ſuch places as anciently were, or at this preſent are, of moſt obſervation and importance in the courſe of Story: with reference notwithſtanding to the ſubdiviſions made by Ptolemy, as they come in my way, reckoning Cyrreſtica, Chalybanotis, Caſiotis, and the Territories of Seleucus, Laodicea, and Apamea, into Syria Propria; and Pieria into Comagena.

Syria Propria.

Firſt then to begin with thoſe Cities which lye moſt towards the Eaſt, we have in Cyrreſtica. Firſt Zeugma, on the Banks of the River Euphrates, memorable for the paſſage of Alexander the Great, who there paſſed over his Army on a Bridge of Boats. 2. Berrœa, ſuppoſed by ſome both ancient and modern writers, to be that which is now called Aleppo, but the poſition of the place agreeth not with that ſuppoſition; Aleppo being placed by our modern Coſmographers, in the 72 degree of Longitude, and the 38 of Latitude: whereas Berrœa is aſſigned by Ptolemy, to the 36 degree of Latitude, & the 71 of Longitude. Beſides that, the River Singas, on which Aleppo is ſituate, keepeth it ſelf almoſt on an even courſe in the Latitude of 37. between 20 and 30 minutes over, which is more by a degree and a half than the ſite aſſigned unto Berrœa. 3. Cybros, as in the Latine Copies of Ptolemy, miſtook for Cyrrhus, once the chief Citie of this part, from hence called Cyrreſtica. 4. Heraclea, near which Minerva had a Temple: in which, as in that ſacred to her in Laodicea, they uſed once yearly to offer a Virgin for a ſacrifice; but afterwards on the ſight of that groſs impiety, changed it to a Hart. 5. Regia, now Rugia, two dayes journey from Antioch, took by the Chriſtians in the beginning of the Wars for the Holy Land. 6. Hierapolis, of great renown in thoſe dark times of ignorance and idolatry for the Syrian Goddeſs therein worſhipped; from whence it had the name of Hierapolis, or the Holy Citie: being formerly by the Grecians called Callinice; by the Syrians, Magog; one of the firſt ſeats of Magog the ſon of Japhet, and from him denominated. The Goddeſſe ſo eſteemed of in thoſe wretched times, that from all parts, Aßyria, Babylonia, Arabia, Cilicia, Cappadocia, and indeed what not, they brought her many rich gifts and coſtly offerings. Nero himſelf, who ſcoffed at all Religions elſe, being for a while a great Votary of this Syrian Idol, though afterwards he grew weary of her, and defiled her with urine. The Temple built by Stratonice, the wife of Seleucus, in the midſt of the Citie, encompaſſed with a double Wall, about the height of 300 Fathom: the roof thereof inlaid with Gold, and made of ſuch a fragrant and ſweet-ſmelling wood, that the Cloaths of them which came thither retained the ſent thereof for a long time after. Without the Temple there were places incloſed for Oxen, and beaſts of ſacrifice; and not far off a Lake of 200 Fathom in depth, wherein they kept their ſacred fiſhes: the Prieſts attending here for their ſeveral Offices, amounting in number to three hundred, beſides many more ſubſervient Miniſters. The tricks and jugglings of theſe Prieſts to deceive the people, he that liſt to ſee, may find them copiouſly deſcribed in the Metamorphoſis of Apuleius: which, changeing but the names and times, may ſerve for a relation of thoſe gulleries and Arts of Leger-de-main, which the Friers and Pardoners have practiſed in the Church of Rome. 7. Chalyban, whence the parts adjoyning were called Chalybanotis; conceived by Poſtellus, and ſome others to be Chalepium, or Aleppo, but on no good ground: this Citie having one degree leſs of Northern Latitude, than Berrœa had. 8. Barbariſſus, in the ſame ſubdiviſion, near the Banks of Euphrates. 9. Chalcis, the principal of that part of Syria Propria, which is called Chalcidice, but not otherwiſe memorable. 10. Telmediſſa, another Town of the ſame diviſion, and as little famous. 11. Seleucus, ſo named from the Founder of it, the firſt Eaſtern Monarch of that race, and the greateſt Builder of the World, founding nine Cities of this name, ſixteen in memory of his father Antiochus, ſix by the name of Laodice his mother, and three in honour of Apamia his firſt wife; beſides many others of great note in Greece and Aſia, either new built, or beautified and repaired by him. From this, the Countrey hereabouts had the name of Seleucis. 12. Laodicea, one of the Cities founded by Seleucus, in honour of Laodice his mother, from which the Region adjoyning is called Laodicene. Built by him in the place where formerly ſtood the Citie Rhamantus, ſo called from a certain Shepherd, who being ſtrook with a flaſh of lightning, cried out amazedly Rhamantus, that is to ſay, Deus ab excelſo; before which time it had been named Leuca Acte, from the whiteneſs of the Sea-cliffs near to which it is ſituate: the Countrey round about, commended anciently for the beſt Wines, and choice of very excellent fruits. 13. Apamea, ſo named in honour of Apamia, the wife of Seleucus; which, together with Laodicea and Seleucus before mentioned, having the ſame founder, and maintaining a ſtrict league of amity with one another, were commonly called the three Siſters. From this the Countrey near is called Apamene. 14. Emeſa, (now Hamſe) the Epiſcopal See of Euſebius, hence called Emeſenus, who flouriſhed in the time of Conſtantius, the ſon of Conſtantine: in whoſe name are extant certain Homilies, juſtly conceived to be of a later date. The Citie ſeated in a ſpacious and fruitfull plain of Apamene, watered with many pleaſant and cheerfull Riverets: once of great note, as may be eaſily conjectured from the Walls hereof, which are ſtill perfect and entire, built of poliſhed ſtone, and of very large circuit; but the dwelling-houſes ſo decayed, that it affordeth nothing worthy obſervation. 15. Epiphania, in the cantred, or ſubdiviſion of Caſiotis; called at firſt Hamath, from Hamath a Son of Canaan, the founder of it, and upon that account miſtaken by Saint Hierome for another Town of the ſame name, in the Tribe of Naphthali; ſo different from this place, both in Longitude and Latitude (as we ſhall ſhew hereafter when we come to Paleſtine) that they can by no means be the ſame. But that old Town being gone to ruine, it was repaired, if not re-edified by Antiochus Epiphanes King of Syria, who thereupon commanded it to be called Epiphania; obeyed therein, as Joſephus telleth us, by the Macedonians, though the Syrians ſtill called it Amatha, as in former times, Antiqu. l. 1. c. 7. 16. Larißa, which ſtill preſerveth its own name, being now called Laris; much mentioned in the Wars of the Holy Land, eſpecially for the death of Baldwin the firſt, brother of Godfrey of Bovillon, and ſecond King of Hieruſalem, Anno 1118. 17. Gebal, the Gabala of Ptolemy, and others of the ancient Writers, ſituate on the South of Laodicea, from which twelve miles diſtant; mentioned Pſalm 83. as a confederate with Tyre, and other uncircumciſed Nations, in their hatred and deſigns againſt the Iſraelites:

as

at this day called Gabella (with little difference from the old name of it) and by that name remembred in the Stories of the Holy Wars. 18. Aradus, one of the Co-founders of Tripolis, ſituate in a rocky Iland of a mile in compaſs, directly oppoſite to the mouth or influx of the River Eleutherus, and diſtant from the Continent about twenty furlongs. So called from Arvad, one of the Sons of Canaan, and mentioned by that name in the Prophet Ezech. ch. 27. v. 8, 11. This once a kingdom of it ſelf, containing not this Iland only, but ſome part of the Continent; eſpecially about Antaradus (ſo called becauſe built over againſt it) ſituate on the Northern banks of the River Eleutherus, of which we have ſpoken in Phœnicia. 19. Daphne, about five miles from Antioch; but afterwards by the continual enlargements of that City, accounted as the Suburb to it; ſo named of Daphne, one of the Miſtreſſes of Apollo, who was here worſhipped by the name of Apollo Daphnæus, and had here his Oracle and his Groves, with other the Additaments appertaining unto thoſe Idolatries: as much eſteemed of, but more ſumptuous than thoſe of Delphos. The Grove about ten miles in circuit, environed round with Cypreſſes, and other trees, ſo tall and cloſe to one another, that they ſuffered not the Sun to enter in his greateſt heats: the ground perpetually covered with the choiſeſt Tapiſtry of Nature, watered with many a pleaſant ſtream, derived from the Caſtalian Fountains as it was given out, and yielding the moſt excellent fruits both for taſte and tincture, to which the wind and air participating the ſweetneſs of the place, did add a moſt delightfull influence.

A place deviſed for pleaſure, but abuſed to luſt: he being held unworthy of the name of a man, who transformed not himſelf unto a Beaſt, or trod on this unholy ground without his Curtezan; inſomuch as they which had a care of their good names, did forbear to haunt it. A fuller deſcription of it he that liſts to ſee, may find in the firſt Book and 18. chapter of Sozomens Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, who is copious in it. The Temple ſaid to have been built by Seleucus alſo, renowned for the Oracle there given, by which Adrian was foretold of his being Emperour; and therefore much reſorted to by Julian the Apoſtata, for that purpoſe alſo. But the body of Babylas the Martyr and Biſhop of Antioch, being removed thither by the command of his Brother Gallus, then created Cæſar by Conſtantius, the Devil and his Oracles were both frighted away, as the Devil did himſelf confeſs to Julian. Who being deſirous to learn here the ſucceſs of his intended expedition into Perſia, received this Anſwer, that no Oracle could be given as long as thoſe divine bones were ſo near the ſhrine. Nor was it long after, before the Idol and the Temple were conſumed by a fire from Heaven; as was avowed by thoſe who obſerved the fall of it; though Julian did impute it to the innocent Chriſtians, and in revenge cauſed many of their Churches to be burned to aſhes. 20. Antioch, ſituate in that part hereof which is called Caſiotis, firſt built, or begun rather by Antigonus, when Lord of Aſia, by whom named Antigonia; but finiſhed and enlarged by Seleucus, after he had overthrown and ſlain him at the battel of Iſſus. Built near the place, and partly out of the ruins of an ancient City, in the ſecond Book of Kings called Riblah in the land of Hamath; Hamath the Great in the ſixt of Amos; by Joſephus and the Syrians, Rablata. Memorable in thoſe dayes for the Tragedies of Jehoahaz and Sedechias Kings of Judah: the firſt of which was here deprived of his Crown and Liberty, by Pharaoh Neco King of Egypt, 2 Kings 23. 33. the other of his eyes and children by the command of Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon, as was ſaid before. In following times it was by ſome Greek writers called Epidaphne, from the nearneſs of it to that Grove: as afterwards in the times of Chriſtianity; by the name of Theopolis, or the City of God, either from the many miracles there done in the primitive time: or from the great improvement which the Chriſtian faith did here receive, where the Diſciples firſt obtained the name of Chriſtians. The Royal ſeat for many Ages of the Kings of Syria, and in the flouriſh and beſt fortune of the Roman Empire, the ordinary reſidence of the Præfect or Governor of the Eaſtern Provinces: next of the Præfectus Pretorio Orientis, who had not only the ſuperintendency over the Dioceſe of the Orient, though that large enough; but alſo of the Dioceſes of Egypt, Aſia, Pontus, Thrace, extending ſo his juriſdiction into all the parts of the then known World. Honoured alſo with the reſidence of many of the Roman Emperours, eſpecially of Verus and Valens, who ſpent here the greateſt part of their times: and from the firſt dawning of the Goſpel, with the ſeat of the Patriarch. A Title of ſuch eminency in all times of the Church, the ſecond in accompt to the See of Rome (till Conſtantinople being made the Imperial City, got precedence of it) that there are at this time no leſs than four great Prelates which pretend unto it: that is to ſay, the true Patriarch, governing the Chriſtians of thoſe parts, whom they call Syrians or Melchites; the Pſeudo-Patriarchs of the Jacobite and Maronite Sectaries, both which, for the greater credit to their Schiſm, do aſſume this Title; and finally a titular Patriarch nominated by the Pope, who ſince the time that the Weſtern Chriſtians were poſſeſſed of theſe Eaſtern Countries, hath aſſumed a power unto himſelf of nominating Patriarchs for Alexandria, Hjeruſalem, and this City of Antioch.

The City ſeated on both ſides of the River Orontis, about twelve miles diſtant from the ſhores of the Mediterranean; the River Parfar paſſing the South-ſide of it. By Art and Nature fortified even to admiration; compaſſed with a double wall, the outermoſt of which was ſtone, the other of Brick, with four hundred and ſixty Towers in the Walls, and an impregnable Caſtle at the Eaſt-end thereof; and on the other ſide defended with big broken Mountains, whereunto was adjoyning a deep Lake, coming out of the River Parfar, before mentioned. Adorned in former times with many ſumptuous Palaces, and magnificene Temples, anſwerable to the reputation of ſo great a City: till taken by the Saracens, and after by the Turks and Mamalucks, men careleſs of all State and beauty in their faireſt Cities, it began to grow into decay. Recovered by the Weſtern Chriſtians from the power of the Turks, after a ſiege of 7 months, June 3. Anno 1098. confirmed in their poſſeſſion by a great and memorable Victory, got in the very ſight hereof within few dayes after, (June 28) obtained againſt Corbanas, Lieutenant to the Perſian Sultan: in which, with the loſs of four thouſand and two hundred of their own, they ſlew a hundred thouſand of the Enemy. The Town and territory given by the Conquerors to Bohemund a noble Norman, and Prince of Tarentum: who by practiſing with one Pyrrhus, who had the command of one of the chief Towers thereof, afterwards called S. Georges Tower, was ſecretly let into the City, and ſo made way for all the reſt. Bohemund thus made the Prince, or as ſome ſay, King of Antioch, left it to Bohemund his ſon, about ten years after; ſucceeded in this principate by Tancred and Roger, Princes of great renown in thoſe holy wars: which laſt was unfortunately ſlain by the Turks, not far from Aleppo, in the year 1120. Baldwin the ſecond having revenged his death by a ſignal victory, joyned this eſtate to the kingdom of Hieruſalem. Betrayed about ſixty years after this, that is to ſay, in the year 1188. it came into the power of Saladine, the victorious King of Egypt and Damaſcus; and therewithall no fewer then five and twenty Cities which depended on the fortunes of it; the glories of this famous City ſo declining after this laſt Tragedy (but whether laid deſolate of ſet purpoſe, or deſtroyed by the injury of the time, I am not able to declare) that it is grown the ſepulchre of what it was, and lieth buried in its own ſad ruins; hardly preſerving the repute of a ſorry Village. Such is the inſtability of all worldly glories. Some other Towns there are in this part of Syria, but not to be remembred the ſame day with Antioch. Of which the moſt obſervable is 21. Albaria, diſtant two dayes march from Antioch, remembred in the wars of the Holy Land.

Comagena.

As for the ſtory of this Province, as a State diſtinct, we find it had a king of its own, called the King of Hamath (the kingdom of Toi, or Tou before remembred;) who together with the King of Arphad, commanded in this part of Syria, and the Iſles adjoyning. Vaſſals in time ſucceeding to the Kings of Tyre, who lorded it over all the Sea-coaſts hereof, and conſequently had great influence on the Inlands alſo. And it continued in this State till the Aſſyrian Kings began to turn their forces Weſtward, when added to that Empire by Tiglath Phileſer, after the ſubverſion of the Kingdom of Damaſcus; or by Salmanaſſar, after the deſtruction of that of Iſrael. The proud but dreadfull vaunt which Senacherib, the ſucceſſor of thoſe mighty Monarchs, made to Hezekiah, viz. Where are the Kings of Hamath and Arphad, ſhewes clearly that thoſe Kingdoms had been conquered not long before; and therefore needs by Salmanaſſar, or Tiglath Phileſer. Afterwards in the ſtruglings betwixt the Babylonians, and Egyptians, for the chief command, it was a while at the devotions of the Kings of Egypt, it being at Reblatha in this Province, that Jehoahaz King of Judah was put into bonds, by the command of Pharaoh Neco, as was ſaid before. But Neco being not long after vanquiſhed by Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon, it returned again to that Crown; and after followed the ſame fortunes with the reſt of Syria.

3. COMAGENA.

Comagena is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Euphrates, by which parted from Meſopotamia; on the Weſt, with the Mountains called Amanus, which divide it from Cilicia; on the North, with Taurus, by which ſeparated from Armenia Minor; on the South, with Palmyrene. Called alſo Euphratenſis and Euphrateſia, when a Roman Province; by reaſon of its ſituation bordering on that River.

The reaſon of the name I find not amongſt my Authors: but find that many learned men conceive it to be that part of Syria, which the Scriptures call Syria Maacha, mention whereof is made 1 Chr. cap. 16. v. 6. gain-ſayed by others, becauſe they find a place called Maacha in the Tribe of Manaſſes; but with no great reaſon as I take it. For being it is joyned (in the 2. of Chron. 19. v. 6. above mentioned) in the ſame action with Meſopotamia, and Syria Sobah; and not ſo only, but placed between them in the Method of that holy pen-man: I dare not think but that they were all very near neighbours, and ranked according to the natural ſituation of them. Which agreeth very well with the ſite of Comagena, having Meſopotamia on the Eaſt, and Aram-Sobah on the South. Nor is it any ſtronger proof unto the contrary, that Maacha is a Town of the Tribe of Manaſſes; than if a man ſhould ſay that there is no ſuch Province as Mansfield in High Germany, becauſe there is a Town of that name in England; or no ſuch place as Savoy among the Alpes, becauſe there is a place of that name in London.

As for the people hereof, beſides what they have common with the reſt of the Syrians, they were of old much given unto Divinations, and for that cauſe derided thus in the ſixth Satyr of Juvenal,

Spondet amatorem tenerum, vel divitis orbi
Teſtamentum ingens, calida pulmone Columba Tractato Armenius vel Comagenus Aruſpex.
Pectora pullorum rimabitur, exta Catelli,
Interdum & pueri. Faciat quod deferat ipſe.

Thus Engliſhed by my honoured friend Sir Robert Stapylton.

A childleſs rich mans Legacy, or young love,
Are found i'th' Lights of a warm trembling Dove,
By Comagena South-ſayers; they look into.

A dead

Comagena.

A dead Chicks breſt, the ſame th' Armenians do.
They view the entrails of a Dog, and reach
A Childs perhaps? They do it, and then peach.

Chief places of this part, 1. Samoſata, the Metropolis, or head City of it, when a Roman Province, ſituate near the banks of Euphrates, over which it had a bridge for paſſage into Meſopotamia. Unfortunate for being the birth-place of Lucian that profane Scoffer of Chriſtianity, though otherwiſe a man of a quick wit, and of great abilities: as alſo of Paulus Samoſatenus, Patriarch of Antioch, condemned of Hereſie in a Councel holden in his own City. An. 273. (by the great and moſt learned Biſhops of that Age, there aſſembled together) for teaching that our Saviour was no other than a natural man; but neither God, nor the ſon of God, as the Scriptures teſtifie. 2. Germanicia, (by ſome called Germanicopolis) on the other ſide of the Country, near the mountain Amanus; no leſs unfortunate than the former, in being the birth-place of Neſtorius, Patriarch of Conſtantinople: who troubling the peace of the Church with Heterodoxie and impertinent niceties, about the bleſſed Mother of Chriſt, as alſo about the nature and perſon of Chriſt himſelf, was thereupon condemned of Hereſie in the Councel of Epheſus, Anno 435. In former times called Adata, as ſome write Adapa; but took this new name from Germanicus Caſar, in honour of whom it was made a Roman Colony by Auguſtus: teſtified by this inſcription extant in Onuphrius, viz. COLONIA JULIA GERMANICA, SACRA, AUGUSTA, FELIX. 3. Singa, ſo called from the River upon which it is ſituate. 4. Antiochia penes Taurum, ſo called becauſe ſeated at the foot of that Mountain, to difference it from the other of this name in Syria. 5. Pinara, one of the chief Cities of that part which is called Pieria. 6. Doliche, a ſmall Town; but made an Epiſcopal See in the beſt times of the Church, as appears by the Acts of the Counſels of Antioch, and Conſtantinople, in which there is ſome mention of the Biſhops of it. 7. Aleppo, now the principal of all the Country, ſuppoſed by ſome to be the Sepharvaim, mentioned 2 Kings 17. 24. It was thus called as ſome ſay from Halep, which in the language of thoſe parts ſignifieth milk, afforded liberally by the rich paſtures round about it: as others more improbably from Aleph, the firſt letter of the Hebrew Alphabet, becauſe the firſt in eſtimation of the Cities of Syria; Moſt probably from Alepius, Lieutenant here in the time of Julian the Apoſtata, who did here many notable exploits, and amongſt others, in or near the ruins of ſome old Town of theſe parts, not yet agreed on (in caſe it be not Sepharvaim before mentioned) advanced this City. Situate on the banks of the River Singas, which riſing out of the hill Pierius, with many windings and turnings runneth thorow Comagena, and there falleth into Euphrates. Deſtroyed by Haalon, King of the Tartars, at ſuch time as the Weſtern Chriſtians were poſſeſſed of this Country, and the Holy Land: but being repaired and re-peopled, became by reaſon of the commodious ſituation of it, to be much frequented by Merchants from all parts of the world. Situate in the midſt betwixt Tripolis, Berytus, and Alexandretta, the three prime Ports of Turkie on the one ſide; and the Perſian territories on the other: it was made choice of for the ſtaple of the Eaſtern commodities, brought to Euphrates, and then boated to this Town by the River Singas. A City of great trade at preſent, the Engliſh Merchants (amongſt others which frequent the ſame) having here three houſes for the Stowage, and diſpoſing of their commodities; and a chief Officer, or Super-Intendent over the whole Factory, whom they call the Conſul of Aleppo. But greater was the trade hereof in former times, before the Portugals found out a way by Sea to thoſe Eaſtern Countreys, ſince followed by the Engliſh, Hollanders, and other Nations, The building of it low, but of one Roof high, (as in moſt Towns of Syria) with a plain top plaiſtered to walk upon; and with Arches before their doors, or houſes, as well to paſs dry under them in time of rain, as to ſhew their wares. Pleaſantly ſeated amongſt Gardens, with the ſweet ſmels whereof very much refreſhed; the ordinary Reſidence of a Turkiſh Baſſa; ſafe rather in the remoteneſs of it from any Enemy, than the ſtrength of the place, as being nothing leſs than well-fortified. Near one of the Gates they ſhew a Sepulchre, by them affirmed to be Saint Georges (whom of all the Chriſtian Saints they only worſhip) before which they maintain a lamp which burns continually. 8. Aman, in the way betwixt Tripoli and Aleppo, ſuppoſed by ſome to be that Hamath, mention whereof is made 2 Kings, chap. 17. 12. A City of a large Circuit, pleaſantly ſeated on two hills, which give it a fair proſpect over ſix of the neighbouring Villages: a thing not to be boaſted of as the world now goeth, by many of the Syrian Cities. On a third hill once ſtood a Caſtle, now decayed and ruinous, beneath it a fair River which runs gently by it; environed round about with Orchards of Palm-trees, and very good fruits. 9. Chalmodora, ſeated by Ptolemy on Euphrates, of which no ruins now remaining; unleſs the name be changed to 10. Byrtha, as perhaps it may be: that being made by Ptolemy, the moſt Northern Town of Comagena; this the utmoſt Town which the Ægyptian Mamalucks (then Lords of Syria) had upon this River, and the boundary betwixt them and the Sultans of Perſia. Memorable for an old Ceremony here uſed by thoſe Mamalucks, who accounted not themſelves worthy of the name of a Sultan of Egypt, till in this place in ſolemn pomp in the ſight of their Army, they had forced their horſe into the River, and made him drink of the waters of it: teſtifying by that Ceremony as well the extent of their Dominions, as their readineſs to defend the ſame againſt all Invaders. A ceremony performed with great State by Campſon Gaurus, in the war betwixt him and Selimus the firſt. But for all this he loſt the field, and his life to boot in the fight near Aleppo: and therewith did not only leave him Syria, as the fruits of his Victory; but opened him a fair way to the conqueſt of Egypt, which ſoon after followed. And hereto I refer the Cities of 11. Hena, and 12. Ivah, with their ſeveral Territories; mentioned together with the City of Sepharvaim, Eſay 37. verſ. 13. and 2 Kings 18. v. 34. it being probable, that if Sepharvaim were the City now called Aleppo, as the Jews that dwelt there lay it was; that then the other two joyned together with it, muſt be hereabouts though we finde no tract of them in the old Geographers.

And if they were (as it ſeems probable to me) we have then more Kings in this Province in the elder times, than the King of Maacha; unleſs perhaps it may be ſaid that the Kingdom of Maacha (or of Aram-Macha) being broken in pieces, theſe petit States aroſe from the ruins of it. Of little obſervation in the courſe of buſineſs, whether entire, or ſubdivided into parcels; but that the King hereof (the King of Maacha) aided the Ammonites againſt David with 1000 men: no very great number I confeſs (as one who lay more out of the danger than the reſt of the Syrian confederates did) but ſufficient to ingage him in the quarrel with them. Nor finde we any thing after this touching their affairs, but that the Kings of Hena, Ivah and Sepharvaim (who ſhared the greateſt part amongſt them) being ſwallowed up by the Aſſyrians (as the forementioned Texts do expreſly ſay) ſome Colonies of the people hereof were ſent by Salmanaſſar the Aſſyrian Monarch, to plant the deſolate dwellings of the Tribes of Iſrael, as appeareth plainly in the 2 of Kings, Chap. 17. verſ. 24. A courſe in which the Conquerour dealt exceeding wiſely; weakning thereby the great Cities and mightier States of this Countrey, which otherwiſe might have been apt enough to revolt again; and ſtrengthning therewithall their Conqueſts in the Land of Iſrael, which otherwiſe had lain open to the next invader, and yielded little, or no profit to the publick Treaſury. More politick in this than the Babylonians in the like diſſolution and deſtruction of the Kingdom of Judah. After this time it followed the ſame fortune with the reſt of Syria, till Tigranes the laſt King thereof was ſubdued by the Romans. At what time all the reſt of Syria being reduced under the form of a Province, this part being then in the poſſeſſion of Antiochus, ſon of that Antiochus, ſurnamed Euſebes, whom Tigraves had ſpoyled of his eſtates; was left unto him by the Conquerours with the Title of King. Continuing in his line till the death of another Antiochus, the laſt King hereof; when made a Province of the Empire by Tiberius Caſar, as is ſaid by Tacitus; Qu. Servaus being ſent hither as the firſt Roman Prætor for the government of it; though Sueton doth refer it to the times of Veſpaſian.

4. PALMYRENE.

PALMYRENE is bounded on the Eaſt, by the River Euphrates; on the Weſt, by Syria properly and ſpecially ſo called; on the North, with Comagena; and on the South, with Mount Libanus, dividing it from the Province of Cœle-Syria, and part of Arabia Deſerta.

It took this name from Palmyra the Chief Citie of it. When conquered by the Romans, and made a diſtinct Province of it ſelf, it had the name of Syria Secunda, and Salutaris. Called Syria Secunda, to diſtinguiſh it from Syria ſpecially ſo called, which by them was named Syria Prima; and Salutaris, in regard of the Medicinal waters ſpringing in many places of it. But before it had any of theſe names, it was in the Scriptures called Aram-Sobah, whereof Adad Ezar was King in the time of David, as we read 2 Sam. 8. 3. and 1 Chron. 18. 3.

The Countrey deſtitute of Rivers fit for Navigation, ſave that it bordereth on Euphrates; but liberally furniſhed with thoſe hot ſprings, good for many diſeaſes, which gave it the name of Salutaris. Of which thus writeth Marcellinus, lib. 14. In his tractibus navigerum nnſquam viſitetur flumen, at in locis plurimis aqua ſuapte natura calentes emergunt, ad uſum apta multiplicium medelarum. So he. The ſenſe whereof we had before.

Places of moſt obſervation, are 1. Palmyra, ſeated in a deſart and ſandy plain, one of the Cities built by Solomon in the Wilderneſs, mention of which is made 1 Kings, Chap. 9. verſ. 17, 18. this Palmyra being ſuppoſed to be that Citie which is here called Tadmar, or Tamar in the Vulgar Latine. The cauſe for long time of much contention betwixt the Parthians and the Romans, as ſituate in the Borders of either Empire: not fully ſetled in the Roman, till that they had ſubdued Zenobia, then the Queen hereof. By Adrian the Emperour, who repaired it, it was called Hadrianople, but it held not long; the old name in ſhort prevailing above the new. 2. Gezer. 3. Bethhoron the upper, and 4. Bethhoron the nether, ſaid to be fenced Cities with Walls, Gates, and Bars, 2 Chron. 8. 4. and 5. Baalath, four of the other Towns here built by Solomon; but either quite worn out of knowledge, or called by new names in the times of Ptolemy, who ſaith nothing of them. 6. Adada, built, as the name doth intimate, by ſome of the Adads, Kings of this Countrey, or of Damaſcus, to which laſt made ſubject. 7. Sura, more towards the River Euphrates, in the Notitia, called Flavia, Firma Sura; which ſheweth that it was either repaired, or made a Colony by the Emperour Veſpaſian, whoſe fore-name was Flavius: honoured with an Epiſcopal See alſo in the times next following, as appeareth by the Acts of the Counceel of Conſtantinople. 8. Alamath, on the Banks of the River Euphrates, which if it were lawfull for me to criticize upon my Author, I ſhould conceive to be that Hamath of the Scriptures, which is called Hamath-Sobah, 2 Chron. 8. 3. againſt which Solomon prevailed, the miſtake from Camatha to Alamatha, being not uneaſie in the tranſcripts. Confirmed herein by that paſſage in the ſecond of Chron. chap. 18. verſ. 3. where it is ſaid, that David ſmote Hadad-ezar King of Sobah unto Hamath, as he went to ſtabliſh his Dominion by the River Euphrates: By which it ſeemeth that Hamath ſtood upon that River, as the Camatha, or Almatha of Ptolemy is ſaid to do. And if it were the ſame, as I think it was, I ſhould conceive it to be the chief ſeat of thoſe Kings, and the principal Citie of this Kingdom: the word Sobah, being added to it, not only for diſtinctions ſake; but in way of eminency. But if the Judicious Reader approve not of this criticiſm, I ſhould next think that this Alamatha of Ptolemy were that Ælam, or Helam, near unto which David diſcomfited that great Army of the Meſopotamians, mention whereof is made 2 Sam. 10. verſ. 16, 17. 9. Raſapha, a Town of note in

Cœle-Syria. in the time of Ptolemy; but of greater note in the holy Scripture, where it is repreſented to us by the name of Reſeph, Eſay 3. 20. Reſeph Civitas Syriæ, as St. Hierom hath it; and if a Town of Syria, then moſt like this. 10. Betah, & 11. Berothai, two other Cities of this Kingdom, taken by David in his War againſt Hadad-ezar, 2 Sam. 8. 8. the laſt ſuppoſed to be the Barathene of Ptolemy, though placed by him among the Towns of Arabia the Deſart, to which it ſeems it was alotted in the change of time.

This part of Syria, as the reſt, was once a diſtinct Kingdom of it ſelf, by the name of the Kingdom of Sobah, or of Aram-Sobah. The firſt King thereof, whoſe name occurs in holy Scripture, being Rehob, the Co-temporary of Saul King of Iſrael, by whom diſcomfited in battel, as is ſaid 1 Sam. 14. 47. But Adad ezar the Son of Rehob, a Prince of greater power and valour then his Father was, having brought all the neighbouring Kings under his command, (as is ſaid 2 Sam. 10. 19.) conceived himſelf a fit match for David, and thereupon oppoſed his paſſage, as he went to recover his border at the River Euphrates. In which action though he loſt a thouſand Charets, and twenty thouſand Foot, and ſeven hundred Horſe, yet would he not ſo end the War; but firſt with the Syrians of Damaſcus, and after with the Ammonites and their confederates; and finally by the aid of the Meſopotamians, renewed the quarrel. But being diſcomfited alſo in this laſt enterprize with the loſſe of fourty thouſand and ſeven hundred men, and his life to boot, the Kingdom of Zobah was brought under by the Kings of Damaſcus. The ſtory of this War we have in the 2 of Sam. cap. 8. and 10. in the firſt of Chron. cap. 18. and 1 Kings, 11. 23, 24. yet were not the Kings of Damaſcus ſo well ſetled in it, but that David had poſſeſſed himſelf of Bet[illegible]h and Berothai, and other pieces of importance: the Regal City of Hamath-Soba being won by Solomon, and many of the beſt Towns of it built by him to aſſure his conqueſt. But the Kingdome of Solomon being rent in pieces in the next ſucceſſion, the Kingdom of Zobah fell again unto thoſe of Damaſcus: and ſo continued till Damaſcus it ſelf was conquerd by the Kings of Aſſyria: unleſſe perhaps that Hamath, which Jeroboam the ſecond is ſaid to have ſubdued (together with Damaſcus it ſelf) to the Crown of Iſrael, 2 Kings 14. 28. were this Hamath-Soba, as perhaps it was.

After this nothing memorable in the affairs of this Countrey, till the time of Gallienus the Roman Emperour: during whoſe reigne, amongſt the reſt who cantonned that Empire betwixt themſelves (commonly called the Thirty Tyrants) Odenatus a man of great power and vertue aſſumed the imperial habit, and took unto himſelf the command of theſe parts of Syria, together with Meſopotamia, and ſome other Provinces, which he had conquered from Sapores the King of Perſia; againſt whom he had ſo good an hand, that he diſcomfited him in battel, ſeized upon his Treaſures, and took many of his Nobles, and moſt of his Concubines. For which great acts admitted partner in the Empire by Gallienus, he was not long after ſlain by Mœonius his Cozin German. Who by that murder hoped to obtain the principality of Palmyrene (for by that name it was now called) but in that deceived. For after his death, Zenobia his unfortunate widow, a moſt maſculine Lady, not only preſerved the principality of Palmyrene for the uſe of her Children; but took upon her both the Purple habit, and the command of his army: which ſhe managed with great wiſdom and gallantry, the reſt of the time of Gallienus, and all the reigns of Claudius, and Quintilius, his two next Succeſſors. But vanquiſhed and took Priſoner by Aurelianus (who had the happineſſe to unite the broken limbs of that Empire into as ſtrong a body as ever formerly) ſhe was led in triumph through Rome. The terrour of her name, and the unuſualneſſe of the ſight, ſo heightning the general expectation; ut ea ſpecie nihil unquam eſſet pompabilius, ſaith Trebellius Pollio; That never any ſhew was eſteemed ſo glorious. A Lady of ſo ſtrong a virtue, and of ſuch command upon her ſelf, that ſhe is ſaid never to have made uſe of her husbands company, when ſhe perceived her ſelf with Child. After this nothing ſingular in the ſtory of Palmyrene, but that when all the reſt of Syria was ſubdued by the Chriſtians of the Weſt, this Province and the next onely w[illegible] made good againſt them by the Turkiſh Sultans of Damaſcus.

5. COELE-SYRIA.

COELE-SYRIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Palmyrene, and Arabia Deſerta; on the Weſt, with Paleſtine; on the North, with Palmyrene, and ſome part of Syria Propria, from which divided by the interpoſition of Mount Libanus; on the South, with Ituræa, and Arabia Deſerta alſo.

This is the Syria ſo much mentioned in the Books of Kings and Chronicles, called by the Greeks Cœle-Syria, i. e. Syria Cava, becauſe partly ſituate in the hollow vallies interjected betwixt Libanus and Anti-Libanus; and ſometimes alſo Syro-Phœnicia, from the intermixture of thoſe people; as the Phœnicians which went with Dido into Africk, were called Libo-Phœnicia. By the Romans, when made a diſtinct Province of that Empire, it had the name of Phœnice Libani, or Phœnicia Libanenſis, to difference it from the other Phœnicia, which they call Maritima. But before all this by the Hebrews named Aram Damaſek, Syria-Damaſcena in the Latine, from Damaſcus the chief Citie of it: unleſſe perhaps we ſhould rather ſay, that Aram-Damaſek contained onely that which lay between the Mountains of Libanus and Anti-Libanus; the reſt being added by the Romans, out of the neighbouring parts of Paleſtine and Arabia-Deſerta, as perhaps it was Chief Rivers hereof, are 1. Abanah, and 2. Pharphar, the Rivers of Damaſcus, as the Scripture calleth them, 2 Kings, Chap. 5. The one of which is thought to be the River Adonis, ſpoken of already; the other that which Ptolemy calleth Chryſorrhoas, or the Golden flood, which riſing in the Hills of this Countrey, paſſeth by Damaſcus, and ſo together with the other into the Mediterranean Sea. Chief Mountains of it, 1. Alſadamus, by the Phœnicians called Syrion, by the Amorites, Samir; a ridge of Hills which beginning at the Eaſt point of Anti-Libanus, bend directly Southwards, ſhutting up on that ſide the land of Iſrael, whereof more in Paleſtine. 2 Hippus, a ledge of Mountains in the South Cœle-Syria. parts of this Province, where it bordereth on Arabia Deſerta.

Towns of moſt conſideration in it, 1 Heliopolis, ſo called from an Image of the Sun there worſhipped in the time of Paganiſm; now Ballebec, or (as ſome ſay) Balbec. 2 Chalcis, more Eaſtwards towards Damaſcus, which gave the title of King to Ptolemy Mennæus, and his ſon Lyſanias, the kingdom then extending over the City of Abila, and the whole Province of Ituræa in Paleſtine. But that Family being either expired, or grown out of favour, and Abila with Ituræa otherwiſe diſpoſed of; the title of the King of Chalcis, with the Town and territory, was given to Herod, brother of Agrippa the firſt King of Jewry. Erroneouſly ſuppoſed by ſome learned men to be that Chalcis, from which the Country called Chalcidice takes denomination: that Chalcis being placed by Ptolemy a degree and a half more Eaſt than Damaſcus, and two degrees more towards the North; whereas this Chalcis lyeth on the Weſt of that City, in the ſhades of Libanus, and in the very ſame degree of Northern Latitude. 3 Abila, ſeated at the foot of Libanus, betwixt Heliopolis and Chalcis, from whence the Countrey round about is called Abilene: given to Lyſanias, the ſon of the former Lyſanias, King of Chalcis, with the title of Tetrarch. Mentioned Luke 3. 1. with thoſe other Princes which ſhared Paleſtine amongſt them. Not that he was the ſon of Herod, as antiently Beda and Euthymius, and of late-times ſome very induſtrious men have been of opinion: but partly becauſe the Cities of Chalcis and Abila of right belonged to thoſe of the Tribe of Naphthalim (though never conquered or poſſeſſed by them) and ſo to be accompted a part of Paleſtine; and partly becauſe the Tetrarchy of Abilene, when Saint Luke wrote that Goſpel, was poſſeſſed together with the reſt by King Agrippa. Reſtored (as it ſeemeth) to the former Family, after his deceaſe; for known it was by the name of Abila-Lyſaniæ in the time of Ptolemy. 4 Adida, memorable for the victory which Aretas King of Arabia obtained near unto it, againſt Alexander King of Jewry, the kingdom of Syria, then lying open as a prey to the next Invaders. 5 Hippus, or Hippone, as Pliny calleth it, not far from the Mountain of that name. 6 Capitolias, now called Suente. 7 Gadara. 8 Scythopolis. 9 Geraſa, and 10 Philadelphia, reckoned by Ptolemy as Cities of Cœle-Syria, but of right belonging unto Paleſtine; where we mean to take more notice of them. 11 Damaſcus, ſituate in a large plain environed with hills, and watered with the River Chryſorrhoas, which with a great noiſe deſcendeth from the Mountains, and ſo abundantly ſerveth the City, that not only moſt of the houſes have their fountains of it, but their Orchards and Gardens have ſome Rivulets conveyed into them. The Country round about abundantly enriched with plenty of moſt excellent wines (the vines hereof bearing grapes all the year long) and great ſtore of Wheat; as their Orchards, with variety of moſt delicate fruit: (our Damaſcens, or Pruna Damaſcena as the Latines call them) coming firſt from hence; as alſo do our Damask Roſes, but infinite ſhort of their natural ſweetneſs, by the tranſplantation. A place ſo ſurfeiting of delights, ſo girt about with odoriferous and curious gardens, that the vile Impoſtor Mahomet would never be perſwaded to come into it: for fear, (as himſelf was uſed to ſay) leſt being raviſhed with the ineſtimable pleaſures of it, he ſhould forget the buſineſs he was ſent about, and make there his Paradiſe. But Mahuvias, one of his Succeſſors, having no ſuch ſcruple, removed the Regal Seat unto it, where it continued (for the moſt part) till the building of Bagdat by Bugiafer the twentieth Caliph, about an hundred years after this Removal: the Regal ſeat before that time, being at Mecca, Cuta, or ſome other of the beſt Towns of Arabia Felix. The chief building of it of late times (till deſtroyed by the Tartars) was a ſtrong Caſtle, in the opinion of thoſe times held to be impregnable; and not without great difficulty forced by Tamerlane, whom nothing was able to withſtand: and as Majeſtical a Church, garniſhed with forty ſumptuous porches, and no fewer than 9000 Lanterns of Gold and Silver; which with 30000 people in it (who fled thither for Sanctuary) was by the ſaid Tamerlane moſt cruelly and unmercifully burnt, and pulled down unto the ground. Repaired by the Mamalucks of Ægypt, when Lords of Syria, it hath ſince flouriſhed in Trade, the people being induſtrious, and celebrated for moſt excellent Artizans: the branching of Satins, and fine Linen, which we call by the name of Damasks, being amongſt many others, one of their inventions. Renowned in the Old Teſtament for the Kings hereof, and the birth of Eliezer, Abrahams Steward (ſo honourably antient was this City) and in the New for the Converſion of Saint Paul, who firſt preached the Goſpel in this place, and here ſo narrowly eſcaped the ſnares of his enemies, that he was fain to be let down out of the houſe in which he was, by the help of a Basket. 2 Eden, at the foot of Mount Libanus, now a Town of the Maronites, and antiently of ſuch eſteem, that the whole Countrey of Damaſcus was called Beth-Eden, Amos 1. 5.

But though antient and honourable this City of Damaſcus was, we find nothing of the ſtory of it, till the time of David, the Kings thereof until thoſe dayes, being conceived to have been Homagers and Tributaries to the Kings of Zobah. The firſt exploit aſcribed unto him in Holy Scripture, is their coming to the aid of Hadadezer, upon his firſt defeat by David: in which action having loſt 22000 men, they were ſo broken, that they did not onely ſuffer David to put Garriſons in the beſt Cities of Damaſcus: but patiently became his Servants, and brought preſents to him, 2 Sam. 8. 5, 6. The name of this unfortunate Prince not made known in Scripture, is by Joſephus affirmed out of Nicolas Damaſcenus, to have been Adad (a name much cheriſhed and aſſumed by the Kings Succeſſors) who keeping conſtant to the party of Hadadezer in his following wars, was at laſt ſlain with him in that great diſcomfiture which David gave them, mentioned in the 2 of Sam. 10. 18. In which Text the Scripture telleth us nothing of the death of thoſe Kings, that being ſupplyed to us by Joſephus out of the Records. Who alſo addeth, that Rezin, one of the chief Commanders of Hadadezer, taking this advantage, not only uſurped his Maſters kingdom, but made himſelf Maſter of the kingdom of Damaſcus alſo. From this time forward the Seat-Royal of the Kings of Syria. Nor is this the tradition of Joſephus onely, but founded plainly on the Scriptures, of which ſee 1 Kings 11. v. 23, 24. the Scriptures after this taking no notice of any other Kings of Syria (by the name of the Kings of Syria) but of thoſe that reigned in Damaſcus; who in ſhort time had ſwallowed up the petit kingdoms of Geſſur, Iſh-tok, Rehob, beſides that of Zobah before mentioned.

The KINGS of SYRIA or DAMASCUS.

1 Adad, the Friend and Confederate of Hadadezar King of Zobah, in whoſe quarrel he was vanquiſhed and ſlain by David.

2 Rezin, of whom the Scripture ſaith, in the ſecond of Chron. that when David ſlew them of Zobah, he fled from Hadadezar his Lord, and gathered men unto him, and certain Captains over a Band, and went to Damaſcus and dwelt therein, and reigned in Damaſcus.

3 Adad II. an Idumæan, ſuppoſed to be of the family of Hadadezar, but rather as I think of Adad, for fear of David fled to Ægypt, where he married Taphnes, the Queens Siſter: and hearing that both David and Joab were dead, returned again into his Countrey, and as ſome write, expelled Rezin out of Damaſcus, and reigned there as King.

4 Hezion, Succeſſor unto Adad.

5 Tabrimon, the ſon of Hezion, as is ſaid 1 Kings 15. 18.

6 Ben-hadad, the ſon of Tabrimon, hired by Aſa King of Judah, to aid him in his wars againſt Baaſha of Iſrael.

7 Ben-hadad II. ſon of the former, twice invaded Iſrael in the reign of Achab; but both times notably repulſed; the firſt time by a ſally of 700 men at the ſiege of Samaria; the next at Aphec, where with the like number in effect he was taken priſoner, and his Army routed.

8 Hazael, Captain of the hoſt to Benhadad, annointed King of Syria by the Prophet Eliſha, whom God appointed ſo to do, that by his hands he might avenge himſelf on Benhadad, whom Hazael ſlew; but he proved as ill a neighbour to the Kings of Iſrael, as thoſe before him. He attempted upon Judah alſo in the time of Joas, but bribed with the treaſures of the Temple, he withdrew his forces.

9 Ben-hadad III. Sonne of Hazael, diſcomfited in three ſet Battels by Joas King of Iſrael.

10 Ben-hadad IV. ſon of Ben-hadad the third.

11 Ben-hadad V. ſon of Ben-hadad the fourth.

12 Ben-hadad VI. ſon of Ben-hadad the fifth, in the time of one of which three Kings, but which one we find not for a certain, Jeroboam the ſon of Joas King of Iſrael, ſubdued both Chamath, and Damaſcus: 2 Kings 14. v. 18.

13 Rezin II. ſon of Ben-hadad the ſixth, and the laſt King of Damaſcus, who joining with Pekah King of Iſrael, againſt Ahaz of Judah; enforced them to call unto his aid Tiglah Phalaſer, King of Aſſyria; by whom Rezin was taken and beheaded, and the City of Damaſcus won; the Kingdom of Syria by that means united to the Aſſyrian Empire.

After this time, the Syrians continued ſubject to the Babylonian and Aſſyrian Monarchs; and in the overthrow of that Empire by the Medes and Perſians, became a part of their eſtate: remaining ſo till the firſt battel betwixt Alexander and Darius, fought near Iſſus in Cilicia. The victory wherein falling to the Macedonians, gave him without more trouble than the ſiege of Tyre, the poſſeſſion of Syria and Phœnicia. He dying not long after his conqueſt of Perſia, this Countrey lay as it were at ſtake betwixt Ptolemy King of Egypt, and Antigonus the chief Lord of Aſia: but the poſſeſſion of it, together with the reſt of the Perſian Empire, in both Aſias, fell in concluſion to the ſhare of Seleucus, for his many great and ſignal victories ſurnamed Nicanor; a man ſtrangely preferred. For being, at the firſt, Governour of Chaldea only, he was forced to leave Babylon, and forſake his Province for fear of Antigonus, then dreadfull to all the Macedonian Captains; and to flie into Egypt, where he became Ptolemies Admiral. After which Ptolemy fighting a pitched field with Demetrius, ſon to Antigonus, took Seleucus with him, and having won the battel, gave him aid and licenſe to recover his former government. Seleucus, wel-beloved of the people, ſoon made himſelf Maſter, not of Chaldea only, but of all the Perſian Provinces beyond Euphrates: and not long after (being ſeconded by his good friends Ptolemy, Caſſander, and Lyſimachus) he encountred Antigonus at Ipſus in Ionia, where Antigonus himſelf was ſlain, and his whole Army routed. This victory made Seleucus Lord of all Aſia, from whence paſſing over into Europe, he vanquiſhed and ſlew Lyſimachus: Seven moneths after which victory, he was ſlain by Ptolemy Ceraunus, whoſe patron and Protector he had formerly been; being yet the laſt ſurvivor of all Alexanders Princes, and the onely poſſeſſor of all the Dominions which his Maſter had, by the way of conqueſt, Ægypt excepted. His Succeſſours, although they were Lords of all Aſia, yet ſince in Syria they kept their reſidence, to the end that they might the better furniſh themſelves with Souldiers out of Greece, upon all occaſions, as was ſaid before, they were commonly called the Kings of Syria. But long they held not in that greatneſs of eſtate and power, which Seleucus left them: though being a ful-bodied tree, and of ſeveral limbs, it endured the lopping off of many branches, and many a ſad blow at the very root of it, before it fell. For in the time of Seleucus Callinicus, the fourth of this houſe, Arſaces a noble Parthian recovered from it all the Provinces of the Perſian Empire, lying on that ſide of Euphrates; and erected the ſo much celebrated

Parthian Kingdome, whereof more in Perſia. And in the reign of Antiochus Magnus, ſo called for his victories in Egypt, Judea and Babilonia, the Romans extorted from it all the Aſian Provinces, on this ſide Mount Taurus; not wanting many provocations to incite them to it, For he not only had made war againſt Ptolemy Philopater King of Egypt, whom the Romans had taken into their protection; but ſtirred up the Cities and States of Greece againſt them, invaded Lyſimachia, and ſome other parts of Europe in defiance of them, and had received Annibal the Carthaginian, and Thoas the Ætolian, their moſt mortal enemies, into his dominions, governing his counſels by the influences which they had upon him. Nor may we think but that ambition and avarice, to add to their fame and Empire by the overthrow of ſo great a Prince, did perſwade much with them. So that the point being brought to a ready iſſue, they pleaded it on both ſides in the battel of Magneſia, a City of Lydia; to which Antiochns brought an Army of 300000 foot, and as many armed Chariots beſides ſtore of Elephants, if the Roman writers be not over laviſh in their reports. But rejecting the advice of Annibal, and committing his affairs wholly to Evil-Counſellors, he was vanquiſhed by no more then four Legions of enemies: and for his peace compelled to quit all his Aſian Provinces, on that ſide of Taurus, and to pay 15000 Talents in ready money for the charge of the war. The reſt of his eſtates they were content he ſhould enjoy for a longer time, Et libentius quod tam facile ceſſiſſet (as Florus handſomly puts it on him) becauſe he had ſo eaſily relinquiſhed that. Afterwards in the civil broils among themſelves, about the ſucceſſion of the Kingdom; Alexander, King of the Jews, took from them many of their beſt Towns in Paleſtine, as Joppa, Gaza, Anthedon, Azotus, Rhinocorura, almoſt all Samaria, and Gaulonitis, with Scythopolis, Cadara, and many other ſtrong Towns in Cœle-Syria. Finally, when they had conſumed almoſt all the Royal race, and changed their Kings no leſs then ten times in 40 years (a ſure ſigne of a falling and expiring Kingdom) they were fain to caſt themſelves upon Tigranes King of Armenia, a puiſſant and ſucceſsful Prince, till ingaged in the quarrel of Mithridates againſt the Romans: by whom ſtripped of all his eſtates on this ſide Euphrates, he was fain to content himſelfe with his own Armenia; leaving Syria to the abſolute diſpoſal of Pompey, who preſently reduced it to the form of a Province. This ſaid, we have not much more to do with the houſe of Seleucus, but to lay down their names, and times of their ſeveral goverments, till we draw towards the laſt end of

The MACEDONIAN KINGS of SYRIA.

A. M.

3654 1 Seleucus Nicanor, the firſt King of this houſe. 31.

3685 2 Antiochus, ſurnamed Soter or the Saviour memorable for nothing ſo much, as marying with Stratonice his Fathers Wife, in his Fathers life-time

3704 3 Antiochus II by his flattering Courtiers ſurnamed Theos, or the God, but being poiſoned by his Wife he proved a mortal.

3719 4 Seleucus II. ſurnamed by the like flattery, Callinicus, or fair Conquerour; becauſe ſhamefully beaten by the Parthians.

3739 5 Seleucus III. called for the like reaſon Ceraunus, or the Thunder; the eldeſt Son of Callinicus.

3742 6 Antiochus III. ſurnamed Magnus, the younger Son of Callinicus, a Prince that imbraced many great actions, and was fortunate in his ſucceſſes beyond Euphrates: he plagued the Jewes, but loſt all Aſia Minor unto the Romans.

3778 7 Seleucus IV. called Philopator, the ſon of Antiochus, who firſt began to caſt his eye upon the riches of the Temple of Hieruſalem.

3770 8 Antiochus IV. ſurnamed Epiphanes, or the Illuſtrious, but more truly Epimanes, or the mad, the great ſcourge of the Jewes; brother of Seleucus Philopator. With whom beginneth the ſtory of the firſt Book of the Maccabees.

3802 9 Antiochus V. called by the name of Eupator, the ſon of Epiphanes; who by Lyſius his Captain tyrannized over the poor Judæans, for the little time that he reigned; as did alſo

3804 10 Demetrius, ſurnamed Soter, ſon of Seleucus Philopater, by the hands of Nicanor: having poſſeſſed himſelf of the diadem by the death of Eupator, ſlain in his favour by the Souldiers who revolted from him. He was afterwards depoſed for a time by Alexander Bala, pretending himſelf to be the ſon of Eupator, ſupported herein by the Antiochians.

3814 11 Alexander Bala, diſcomfited in his firſt battel by Demetrius, whom he ſlew and vanquiſhed in the ſecond; married Cleopatra Daughter of Ptolemy Philometor, by whoſe aid he was victorious. But a quarrel breaking out betwen them, Ptolemy invaded Syria, and cauſed himſelf to be crowned King of it; Alexander being ſlain by ſome of his Souldiers.

3819 12 Demetrius II. ſurnamed Nicator, Son of Demetrius the firſt, recovered his Fathers Kingdom, a friend of the Maccabees, but ſo cruel to his own people, that he was driven out of his kingdom by Tryphon General of his Armies.

3821 13 Antiochus VI. ſurnamed Entheus, the Son of Alexander and Cleopatra, advanced unto the Throne by Tryphon, and after ſlain by him to make way for himſelf unto the Diadem.

3824 14 Tryphon, called alſo Diodorus, having driven out Demetrius, and ſlain Antiochus, made himſelf King.

3827 15 Antiochus VII. ſurnamed Sedetes, brother of Demetrius, having overcome and ſlain Tryphon, ſucceeded him in the eſtate; for a while victorious againſt the Parthians, but afterwards overcome and ſlain by them. After whoſe death Demetrius Nicanor) having lived in Parthia ſince the loſs of his kingdom) was reſtored again unto the Throne; which having held about four years, he was again diſpoſſeſſed and ſlain by

3843 16 Alexnnder II. ſurnamed Zebenua, an Ægyptian of mean birth, ſet up by Ptolemy Euergetes, and pretending himſelf to be the adopted Son of Antiochus, afterward vanquiſhed and ſlain by 3845 17 Antiochus VIII. from the crookedneſs of his noſe ſurnamed Gryphus, Son of Demetrius, aided herein by the Ægyptian, with whom reconciled; having reigned about eight years in peace; embroiled himſelf in war with his half brother Antiochus ſurnamed Cyzicenus; which with variable ſucceſſes on both ſides, continued till the time of his death, having reigned 29. years in all.

3874 18 Seleucus V. Son of Antiochus Gryphus, in the beginning of his reign overcame and ſlew his Uncle Cyzicenus; but being vanquiſhed by Antiochus ſurnamed Euſebes or Pius, one of the Sons of Cyzicenus, he fled into Cilicia, and was there burnt in his Palace.

19 Antiochus IX. ſurnamed Euſebes, having firſt vanquiſhed Seleucus, and afterwards Antiochus, another of the Sons of Gryphus, was conwned King of Syria; but ſlain not long after in the Perſian wars.

20 Philip, and Demetrius III. ſurnamed Eucarus, younger Sons of Gryphus, jointly Kings of Syria; but reigning in their ſeveral parts. Of which Demetrius intending to diſſeize his brother, was himſelf vanquiſhed, and forced to fly into Parthia; leaving the whole kingdom unto Philip. During which wars amongſt themſelves, Syria was invaded, and in part conquered by Aretas King of the Arabians, and Alexander King of the Jews.

3884 21 Tigranes, King of Armenia, during theſe diſſentions was by the Syrians choſen King, that by his power they might be freed from the Jews and Arabians: the moſt puiſſant Prince that reigned in Syria, ſince the time of Antiochus the Great, as being King of Syria by election, of Armenia by ſucceſſion, of Media by conqueſt. But ingaging himſelf with Mithridates (whoſe Daughter he had married) againſt the Romans, was vanquiſhed by Lucullus: who with the loſs of five Romans only, and the wounds of an hundred, is reported to have ſlain of his Enemies above a 100000 men. Finally, being again broken and vanquiſhed by Lucullus, he yeelded himſelf to Pompey (who being appointed Lucullus ſucceſſor, deprived him of the honour of ending that war) and retaining to himſelf Armenia onely, he left all Syria to the Romans, having reigned eighteen years. And though Antiochus Comagenus, the Sonne of Euſebes, petitioned Pompey for the reſtitution to the Throne of his Anceſtors; yet it would not be granted: Pompey replying, that he would not truſt the Countrey into ſuch weak hands as were not able to defend it againſt the Arabians, Parthians, and the like invaders; and ſo reduced it preſently to the form of a Province. The government of this Countrey under theſe new Lords, was accompted to be one of the greateſt honours of the Empire: the Præfect hereof having almoſt regal juriſdiction over all the Regions of this ſide Euphrates; with a ſuper-intendency over Ægypt. Niger, the concurrent of Severus, was Præfect here; and on the ſtrength hereof preſumed on that competition. So alſo was Caſſius Syrus, who being a Native of this Countrey, and well-beloved by reaſon of his moderate and plauſible demeanour, had almoſt tumbled M. Antonius out of his Throne. On this occaſion it was enacted by the Senate, that no man hereafter ſhould have any military or legal command in the Province where he was born: Leſt perhaps ſupported by the natural propenſion of the people to one of their own Nation; and heartned by the powerableneſs of his Friends, he might appropriate that to himſelf, which was common to the Senate and people of Rome. But this was when it was entire, and paſſed but for one Province onely, Phœnicia being alſo taken into the accompt; which made the Antiochians ſo proud and inſolent, that Adrian, in his time intended to ſubduct Phœnicia from it, ne tot civitatum Metropolis Antiochia diceretur (ſaith Gallicanus) that Antioch might not be the chief of ſo many Cities. But what he lived not to accompliſh, was performed by Conſtantine. By whom Phœnicia was not onely taken off, but Syria it ſelf divided into four diſtinct Provinces, as was ſhewed before, each of them having its Metropolis or Mother City; but all ſubordinate to the command of the Comes, or Præfect of the Eaſt, as he to the command of the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis; the greateſt Officer of the Empire, of whom we have often ſpoke already.

For the defence hereof aſwell againſt all Forein invaſions, as the inſurrections of the Natives (a wavering and inconſtant people) the Romans kept herein continual pay four Legions, with their aids, and other additaments. For ſo many Mutianus had here in the time of Galba; and by the ſtrength & reputation of thoſe Forces, was able to transfer the Empire upon Veſpaſian. And though the Conſtantinopolitan Emperours to whoſe ſhare it fell, in the diviſion of the Empire, rather increaſed than diminiſhed any part of this ſtrength: yet when the fatal time was come, and that Empire was in the declination, the Saracens, under the conduct of Haumer their third Caliph, An. 636. poſſeſſed themſelves of it; Heraclius then reigning in Conſtantinople. And it continued in their power till Trangrolipix the Turk, having conquered Perſia, and the Provinces on that ſide of Euphrates, paſſed over the River into Syria, and made himſelf Maſter of a great part of that alſo. A quarrel falling out betwixt him and his neareſt Kinſ-men, and thereby a great ſtop made in their further progreſs, was thus compoſed, by the mediation of the Caliph of Babylon in the time of Axan his Succeſſor.

To Cutlu Moſes was aſſigned a convenient Army, to be by him employed againſt the Chriſtians, with Regal power over the Provinces by him gained; without relation or ſubordination to the Perſian Sultans: of whoſe ſucceſſes and affairs hath been ſpoke elſewhere. To Melech and Ducat, two others of his diſcontented kinſmen, but all of the ſame Selzuccian family, he gave the fair Cities of Aleppo and Damaſcus, and thoſe parts of Syria, with whatſoever they could conquer from the Caliph of Ægypt, who then held all Phœnicia, and the Sea-coaſts of Paleſtine; to be held in fee and vaſſalage of the Crown of Perſia. To theſe two brethren then we are to refer the beginning of the Turkiſh kingdom in Syria: who, with their Succeſſors, by reaſon that here they held their reſidence, cauſed themſelves to be called The TURKISH KINGS of DAMASCUS.

1075 1 Melech and Ducat, the firſt Turkiſh Kings of Damaſcus, by the gift of Axon, the ſecond Sultan of the Turks in Perſia, added to their dominions all the reſt of Syria, together with part of Cilicia, and ſome neighbouring Provinces in the Leſſer Aſia.

2 ------ Sultan of Damaſcus, at ſuch times as the Chriſtians of the Weſt won the Holy Land: againſt whom he notably defended the City and Territories of Damaſcus; and in a ſet battel diſcomfited and ſlew Roger the Norman, Prince of Antioch.

1146 3 Noradine, (the ſon of Sanguin) General of the Armies, and Son-in-Law to the former King, ſucceeded him in the eſtate. A noble Prince, memorable amongſt other things for a gallant anſwer made to his Commanders, when they perſwaded him to take the advantage on the death of Baldwin the third, and to invade Hieruſalem whilſt the Chriſtians were buſie in ſolemnizing his Funerals. Not ſo, ſaith he, Compaſſion and regard is to be had of the juſt ſorrow of thoſe Chriſtians, who have loſt ſuch a King, as could not be equalled in the world.

1175 4 Melechſala, Son of Noradine, contemned by reaſon of his youth, by his Nobles, and Souldiery, who made choice of Saladine for their King; by whom diſpoſſeſſed firſt, and after vanquiſhed.

1176 5 Saladine the Turkiſh Sultan of Egypt, having vanquiſhed the Perſians, or Parthians, coming under the conduct of Cacobed, Uncle to Melechſala, to reſtore that Prince to his eſtate, remained King of Damaſcus: and by the puiſſance of his Armies, recovered from the Chriſtians all Syria, and the Holy Land, with the City of Hieruſalem alſo.

1199 6 Eladel, or El-Aphzel the eldeſt Son of Saladine, ſucceeded in the Realm of Damaſcus: which he exchanged for that of Egypt with his Brother Elaziz.

7 Elaziz, the ſecond Son of Saladine, ſucceeded upon this Exchange in the Realm of Damaſcus, murdered not long after by his Uncle Saphradine.

8 Saphradine the Brother of Saladine, having barbarouſly murdered eight of the Sons of Saladine, (the youngeſt called Saphradine eſcaping onely, who was after Sultan of Aleppo) poſſeſſed himſelf of the Kingdom of Damaſcus, left at his death to Corradine, his Son or Nephew.

9 Corradine, Son or Nephew to the Tyrant Saphradine, was by him at his death, left Sultan of Damaſcus; to which all Syria and Paleſtine were then made Provincials.

But the treacheries and murders of Saphradine crying loud for vengeance, Haalon the Tartar, in the year 1262. having taken the King of Damaſcus Priſoner (but whether Corradine, or ſome other, I am not able to ſay) brought him before the walls of the City; threatning to kill him in the ſight of the people, if they did not deliver it unto him. Which the Citizens refuſing to do, the wretched King was torn in pieces, and the City taken by aſſault: the kingdom by the Conquerours conferred upon Agab the Son of Haalon. And ſo ended the Selzuccian family of the Kings of Damaſcus in the perſon of Corradine, or the ſon of Corradine, moſt miſerably murdered by the Tartars: as it had done in Egypt 17 years before, in the perſon of Melechſela, and Elmutam, the ſon of Meledine, as villainouſly diſpoſſeſſed and murdered by the Mamalucks. So ſlippery is the foundation of thoſe kingdoms which are laid in blood.

Nor did this kingdom hold long in the hands of the Tartars, recovered from them in ſhort time by the Mamalucks, then Kings of Egypt; from them once more regained by the furious Tamerlane: who in the year 1400 beſieged Damaſcus with an Army of 1200000 men, (if the number be not miſtaken, and one Cypher added more than ſhould) in purſuite whereof he filled up the ditches with his Priſoners, put all the People to the ſword; and with great Art raiſed three Towers as a Trophey of his victory, built with the heads of thoſe whom he had ſo ſlaughtered. A man ſo ſtrangely made up of vice and vertues, that it is hard to ſay which had the predominancy. But the violence of this tempeſt being overblown, the Mamalucks, from whom he had alſo conquered the kingdom of Egypt, recovered Syria by degrees, and repaired Damaſcus, continuing in their power till the year 1516. when Selimus the firſt diſcomfited Campſon Gaurus the Ægyptian Sultan in the fields of Aleppo. Upon the news whereof the Citizens of Damaſcus, fearing the ſpoil of their rich City, then of very great trading, ſet open their gates unto the Victors; as did all the other Cities and Towns of Syria, by their example. By means whereof, without any more blows, the Turks became Lords of this Countrey; as the next year of Egypt alſo, by the vanquiſhment and death of Tonombeius who ſucceeded Campſon: ſo rooting out the name and government of the Mamalucks, and adding thoſe rich kingdoms to the Turkiſh Empire. And ſo much for Syria.

Mount Hermon.

MOUNT HERMON.

In our paſſage out of Cœle-Syria into Paleſtine, we muſt croſs Mount Hermon; a legde of Hills, which beginning at the Eaſt point of the Anti-Libanus, bend directly South: in different places, and by ſeveral Nations called by divers names. By Ptolemy called Alſadamus; by the Amorites, Shenir; by the Phœnicians, Syrion; and by that name remembred in the Book of Pſalms. But Alſadamus they are called onely where they border upon Cœle-Syria. Where they begin to part the Region of Traconitis from Arabia Deſerta, they are called by Moſes and the Scriptures Hermon; part of the kingdom of Og, the King of Baſan, as is ſaid, Joſuah, ch. 12. v. 6. Sirion by the Sidonians, as is affirmed Deut. ch. 3. v. 9. Running farther after this unto the South, they are called Gilead, or Galaad; by Strabo, Trachonitæ, after the name of the Region along which they paſs, and are conceived to be the higheſt part of all Mount Libanus, or rather of that long ridge of Mountains which there take beginning. And ſo we are to underſtand the words of the Prophet Jeremie, ſaying, Galaad tu mihi Caput Libani, as the Vulgar readeth it. That is to ſay, that as the head is the higheſt part of a man; ſo theſe hills, or this part of them, was the higheſt of all the branches, or ſpurs of Libanus. Called Galeed by Jacob, from that heap of ſtones which was there laid by Laban and Jacob, to be a witneſs of the Covenant which was made betwixt them, Gen. 31. v. 47. the word ſignifying in the Original, an heap of Witneſſes. And Laban ſaid, This heap is a Witneſs betwixt me and thee this day; therefore was the name of it called Galeed, ver. 48. By theſe hills, and the main body of Anti-Libanus lying on the North, and the Mountains of Phœnicia and Idumæa on the Weſt; the land of Paleſtine is ſo ſhut up on every ſide, that no Fortreſs can be ſtronger by wit or Art, than that Countrey by Nature: the paſſages in ſome parts ſo narrow, as hardly to afford paſſage for a ſingle perſon. Clauditur undique montibus, hinc abruptis rupibus, & profundis vallibus concurſu Torrentium, inde altis & implexis anfractibus ſic contractis, ut per anguſtos colles vix pateat tranſitus viatori, as my Author hath it. I had almoſt forgot to add, that that part of theſe hills, which is commonly known in Scripture by the name of Hermon, is in one place thereof called Sion, as Deut. 4. v. 48. where it is ſaid that the Iſraelites poſſeſſed the Land from Aroer on the bank of the River Arnon, even unto Mount Sion, which is Hermon. As alſo that one of the higheſt tops or Summits of it, had the name of Amana, alluded to by Solomon in the fourth of the Canticles; by ſome miſtaken for Amanus, a branch of Taurus, which divides Syria from Cilicia, in the Leſſer Aſia, with which Solomon had but ſmall or no acquaintance. And ſo having cleared our ſelves of ſo much of this Mountain, as lay before us in our way, we paſs over to Paleſtine: where we ſhall meet with it again, (or rather with the Weſtern parts and branches of it) under the name of Gilead and Traconitis, as a part of that Conntrey.

OF PALESTINE.

PALESTINE is bounden on the Eaſt, with the Hills laſt mentioned, by which parted from Cœle-Syria,and Arabia-Deſerta; on the Weſt with the Mediterranean Sea,and ſome part of Phœnicia; on the North, with the Anti-Libanus which divides it from Syria, and the reſt of Phœnicia; and on the South, with ſome part of Arabia Petræa..

It was firſt called Paleſtine from the Philiſtims, the moſt potent Nation in thoſe parts. A name firſt found in the Hiſtory of Herodotus, but generally uſed in times ſucceeding, by the Greeks and Romans. And this I look on as the proper and adæquate name of the whole Countrey, according to the bounds before laid down: the others, by which commonly called, being more reſtrained, and properly belonging to ſo much hereof, as was in poſſeſſion of the Tribes of Iſrael. And of this ſort, are 1. Canaan, or the land of Canaan, ſo called from Canaan the ſon of Cham, by whom firſt peopled after the floud. Secondly, The Land of Promiſe, becauſe by God promiſed to Abraham, and his ſeed, for an habitation; Thirdly, Iſrael,from the Iſraelites, or ſons of Jacob, whoſe ſurname was Iſrael; Fourthly, Judæa, and by us Jewry, from the Jewes, or people of the Tribe of Iudah, the moſt prevalent of the Tribes of Iſrael; And fourthly, Terra Sancta, or the Holy Land, becauſe the ſubject of the greateſt part of the Holy Scripture; and that the work of our Redemption was herein accompliſhed by our Lord and Saviour. Which notwithſtanding we muſt know that though theſe names do many times by a Synechdoche, expreſs the whole Countrey of Paleſtine; yet neither the Canaanites or the Iſraelites were ever Maſters of the whole: except onely in the times of David, and of ſome of the Macchabæan Princes, as alſo in ſome part of the reign of Herod the Great; all which had the good fortune to command it totally.

But being the moſt conſiderable people of it were the Tribes of Iſrael; we will firſt look upon the Countrey People under that capacity. And for ſo much hereof as was held by them, it is ſituate between the third and fourth Climates; the longeſt day being fourteen hours and a quarter. The whole length but to 200 miles, and not above 80 in breadth; yet was of ſuch a fruitfull ſoil, that before the coming in of the Iſraelites,it had 30 Kings: and after the coming in of that people, ſo extremely populous, that David numbred a Million and 300000 fighting men, beſides thoſe of the Tribes of Levi, and Benjamin. But of the fruitfulneſs hereof more ſhortly.

As for the People they were by compoſition of a midle ſtature, but ſtrong of body: in their beſt times a murmuring and a ſtiff-necked generation, never well pleaſed either with God or man, with their Prieſts or Princes; ſeldom conform unto the Commandments of their God, nor very much conſtant to themſelves. So crippled in their going betwixt ſuperſtitions and Idolatry, that they knew not how to walk uprightly. Idolatrous above meaſure, and incorrigible in it, till their coming back from the Captivity of Babylon: and after that as ſuperſtitious and ſevere,in the point of their Sabbath, as they had formerly been exorbitant in the worſhip of Idols. No Medium on either ſide, but extream in both. Divided antiently into theſe four ranks, that is to ſay, 1 Jewes, 2 Helleniſts, 3 Proſelytes, and 4 Samaritans; all of them pretending a right unto this Countrey, though not all of them dwelling in it.

Of theſe the firſt called Jewes, from Judah, the predominant Tribe, and Hebrewes, from Heber the ſon of Sela, grand-ſon of Sem, and one of the Anceſtors of Abraham; were ſuch as naturally deſcended of the Tribes of Iſrael, and lived for the moſt part in their own Countrey; adhering to the Law of Moſes, and embracing the whole Canon of the Old Teſtament, from the book of Geneſis to the book of the Prophet Malachi. Called alſo Iſraelites, becauſe deſcended from the loins of their Father Jacob, to whom God gave the name of Iſrael, for his greater honour. But after the ten Tribes were carried away by Salmanaſſar to an endleſs captivity; and the two Tribes (with the remainder of the reſt) turned from that temporary one which they found in Babylon, the name of Iſraelites was laid by, and that of Jews aſſumed, as more proper to them. Theſe read the Scriptures, and executed all Divine Offices in their natural Hebrew.

2. The Helleniſts, were ſuch as were Iews by parentage, but lived diſperſed in moſt Provinces of the Roman Empire: called by that name (we may Engliſh it, the Gracizing Iewes) becauſe they read the Scriptures in the Greeks or Septuagints tranſlation; and performed all publick offices in that language alſo. In other things, as ſuperſtitious in their Sabbaths, as tenacious of their Circumciſion, and others of the rites and ceremonies of the Law of Moſes, as the Iewes of Paleſtine: and for that reaſon, ſcorned and derided by the Gentiles, amongſt whom they lived; Credat Iudæus apella, ſaith one of the Poets, relating to their circumciſing; Recutiaque Sabbata palles, ſaith another of them, with ſcorn enough unto their Sabbaths. Novi illic ritus & cæteris moralibus contrarii, ſaith Tacitus, a graver Authour, of the whole body of their Rituals, or Acts of worſhip.

3. The Proſelytes were ſuch, as not being Iews by birth, or deſcent of parentage, conformed themſelves unto their cuſtoms, and deſired to be admitted into their Religion. And theſe were alſo of two ſorts, the one called Proſelyti Portæ; and the other Proſelyti Fœderis. The firſt of theſe, admitted by the Iews to the worſhip of God, and inſtructed in the hopes of the life to come; were only tyed to thoſe precepts which the Hebrew Doctors call the Precepts of the ſons of Noah: but were neither circumciſed, nor otherwiſe conform to the Laws of Moſes. Which Precept of the ſons of Noah, ſo called, becauſe ſuppoſed to be given by Noah unto his Sons, when he came out of the Ark, were ſeven in number: that is to ſay, 1. That they dealt uprightly with every man, 2. That they bleſſed and magnified the name of God, 3. That they worſhipped not any falſe Gods, but to abſtain from Idolatry, 4 To refrain from all unlawfull luſts and copulations, 5. To keep themſelves from theft and robbery, 6. And from ſhedding bloud, And 7. not to eat the fleſh or member of any beaſt, taken from it when it was alive, by which all cruelty was forbidden. Theſe though they were admitted to the worſhip of God, and might repair unto the Temple; yet becauſe of their Uncircumciſion they were not ſuffered to converſe with the Iews, nor to come into the ſame Court of the Temple with them: but were accounted as unclean, and had their Court apart aſſigned them in the worſhip of God, which was called Atrium Gentium, or Immundorum, and was the outermoſt of all. The other Proſelytes, which were called Proſelyti fœderis, conformed in all things to the Iews, as in Circumciſion, Sabbath-keeping, and all other Ceremonies: and were accounted of as adopted Iews, priviledged as they were, to worſhip in the Inner-Court; bound as they were, from eating or drinking with a Gentile; and in a word, partakers with them in all things both divine and humane, and different in nothing from them but their race or parentage. Theſe laſt in the New Teſtament called ſimply Proſelytes, without any addition: the former by the name of Σεβόμενοι, or the worſhipping Gentiles, of which ſee Act. 16.*v.*14. and ch. 17.4.17. & ch. 18.*v.*4, &c.

4. As for the Samaritans, they poſſeſſed a great part of this Countrey, which the Proſelites did not; yet were not ſo much Iewes, as they. But of theſe more anon when we come to Samaria, the proper place of their abode.

As for the natural Jewes themſelves they are divided alſo into ſeveral Sects; as viz. 1 Eſſeni, 2 the Sadduces, 3 the Scribes, 4 the Phariſees, 5 the Herodians, and 6 the Gaulonites, or Gallileans. 1 The Eſſenes or Eſſeni, derive their name, as ſome conceive, from Aſca, which ſignifieth facere, to do, becauſe they laboured with their hands; as others ſay, from Aſa, which ſignifieth θεραπεύειν, or to cure diſeaſes, becauſe they were much given to the ſtudy and practiſe of Phiſick. Their beginning is not yet agreed on. The firſt time they were heard of, was in the time of Jonathan the brother of Judas Macbæus, about 150 years before Chriſts nativity; then mentioned by Ioſephus, Antiq. Iudaic. l. 13.*cap.*9. A Pythagorean kind of Iew, and not much differing in opinion from thoſe old Philoſophers, profeſſing as they did, 1 Community of goods, 2 Abſtaining even from lawfull pleaſures, 3 Forbidding of Oaths, 4 Forbearing Wine, and drinking Water, 5 Aſcribing the conduct of affairs to fate or deſtiny, 6 And uſing only inanimate or unbloudy Sacrifices. Some other Dogmata they had, but theſe the principal: forbidding marriage not being common to the Sect, but only to ſome few amongſt them. And though we find no mention of them in the New Teſtament, the Sect in thoſe times being ſmall and inconſiderable; yet it is thought that S, Paul alludeth to their Tenets: as where he adviſeth Timothy to make uſe of Wine, and glanceth upon thoſe who prohibited marriage, 1 Tim. 4. 3. or condemned others in the uſe of meat and drink, 2 Coloſ. 16. As for the manner of their life, they lived together as it were in Monaſteries, or Colledges, and in every one had their Σεμνεῖον, or Oratory: admitting none into their fellowſhips or ſociety, unleſs he brought all he had into their common Treaſury; and not then neither under a three years Probationerſhip. More of them he that liſteth to ſee, may ſatisfie himſelf in that tract of Philo, intituled De vita centemplativa, where he moſt copiouſly deſcribeth their Inſtitutes and courſe of life: miſtakingly applyed by Euſebius to the Primitive Chriſtians, as if that tract had purpoſely been compoſed of them, by that learned Iew.

2. The Saduces either derive their name from Sadoc, who lived about the time of Alexander the Great and is thought to be the firſt founder of them; or from Sadoc an Hebrew word, ſignifying Iuſtice; the men pretending to be ſo exact and ſtrict Iuſtitiaries, as if they would juſtifie themſelves before Gods Tribunal. The occaſion of the Sect or hereſie (for both it was) ſaid to riſe from a miſtake of Antigonus, a right learned man. Who teaching that we ought not to ſerve God, as Servants do their Maſters, for the hope of reward; occaſioned Sadoc and Batius, two of his Auditors, to conceive that there was no reward nor recompenſe for a godly life; and conſequently no Reſurrection nor World to come, neither Angels nor Spirits. Theſe were the moſt capital of their Errors, as appeareth Acts 23. 7. 8. Mat. 22. 3. Luke 20, 20. 27, &c. But other Dogmata they had, not mentioned in the holy Scripture: aſcribing nothing unto Fate, or Predeſtination, but all things altogether to a mans free-will. 2. Teaching the ſoul to be annihilated, at the hour of death; 3 Rejecting all Traditions; and 4. Allowing no more Scripture than the five Books of Moſes. In moſt of their opinions contrary to the Scribes and Phariſees, but joyning with them both in oppoſing Chriſt: and though like Sampſons Foxes they looked divers wayes, and were tied together by their tails only; yet in thoſe tails they carried firebrands to deſtroy Gods harveſt, and had done it, if they had been able.

3. But indeed the Phariſees were the men, who were the Maſter-wits in the Arts of miſchief, Homines robuſtiores impietatis, in the Fathers words. Fellows of ſuch a perfect and concocted malice, that they were almoſt able to poſſeſs the devil. Their name they derive from Pharez, which is to ſeperate. Separatiſts we may rightly call them. For they were firſt ἀφωρισμένοι εἰς τὴν νόμον, ſeperated to the ſtudy of the Law of God, as Saul was brought up to that purpoſe at the feet of Gamaliel: And 2. ἀφωρισμένοι εἰς τὴν ἁγιωσύνην, ſeparated from the reſt of mankind, by a more ſtrict profeſſion of ſanctity; as the Phariſee boaſted of himſelf that he was not as other men, or as that Publican. And that they might ſo ſeem unto ſimple men, they did thirdly ſeparate themſelves from the ſociety and converſation of others not ſo pure as themſelves, whom they called populum terræ, or the Sons of the earth, upbraiding Chriſt that he kept company with Publicans and Sinners: and more than ſo, uſed a particular kind of habit, & had a garbe unto themſelves which no others had; uſing it for a by-word amongſt themſelves, that Veſtes populi terræ, ſunt conculcatio Phariſæorum. To which end, as their countenances were more clouded and ſevere than others; ſo did they wear their Phylacteries of a broader ſize than others did: which, by the way, were ſcrols of Parchment bound about their heads and upon their hands, wherein were writ the Ten Commandements of God; fooliſhly ſo interpreting the words of Deut. And they ſhal be as frontlets between thine eyes, ch. 6. v. 8, &c. They began at the ſame time with the Sadduces; which was about 300 years before Chriſts nativity. As for their Dogmata, beſides thoſe ſpecified above, which were alſo practicable, they mentioned 1 a Pythagorean Metempſychoſis, affirming that the ſoul of a righteous man paſſed from one into another, at the time of his death: from whence the divers opinions touching Chriſt our Saviour, Mat. 16. v. 14. are ſuppoſed to ſpring; as if his body had been animated with the ſoul of Elias, John the Baptiſt, Jeremy, or ſome other Prophet. 2 They adhered ſo tenaciouſly to unwritten traditions, that in compariſon of them, they neglected the written Law, as either inſufficient or impertinent: And 3. aſcribed ſo much ſanctity unto frequent waſhings, eſpecially when they came from Market, Mark 7. v. 4. (where poſſibly they might meet with ſome unclean perſons) and before their ſitting down to meat, Mat. 15. 2. that if they came unto a place where there was not water enough both to drink and waſh, the Phariſee would rather chooſe to waſh than drink, though he died for thirſt. More of them he that liſt to ſee, may find it copiouſly ſet down in the 24 chapter of S. Matthew; and thither I refer the Reader. By means of which pretenſions to ſo great a ſanctity, and ſome other arts they had to abuſe the people; they grew ſo ſtrong, and had ſuch ſtore of followers, and dependants on them, that they became formidable in ſhort time, to their Kings and Princes. Inſomuch that Alexandra durſt not enter on the Government, in her Childrens nonage, as Joſephus telleth us, Antiqu. lib. 13. cap. 23. untill ſhe had permitted all things unto their diſpoſing; καὶ μηδὲν δίχα τῆς ἐκείνων γνώμης, &c. and promiſed to do nothing without their advice. And this ſhe did by the direction of King Alexander, her dying Husband: whoſe government, as ſhe found by too ſad experience had in many things proved unſucceſsfull, διὰ τούτους ὑβρίσθαι παρ' αὐτοῦ, becauſe ſhe had put ſome ſcorns upon them, and otherwiſe offended that prevailing faction. A faction ſo predominant amongſt the people, ſaith the ſame Joſephus, Antiqu. lib. 19. cap. 18. ὡς καὶ κατὰ βασιλέως τι λέγοντες, καὶ κατ' Ἀρχιερέως, &c. that whatſoever they pleaſed to ſpread abroad either of the High-Prieſt, or the King himſelf, how falſe or ſcandalous ſoever: it was received for truth without more diſpute, or any enquiry made into it.

4. But of the Phariſees enough, of the Scribes anon. Proceed we now to the Herodians and the Gaulonites, whom I look not on, as either the Authors or Promoters of any Sect of Religion in the Jewiſh Church; but as the names of two oppoſite factions in the Civil State. The firſt were ſuch who depending upon Herods fortune, as he did on the pleaſure of the Roman Emperors; ſollicited the paying of tribute to the Romans: and earneſtly preſſed upon that point, that Herod might be thereby the more indeared to his Maſters of Rome, and they to him. Upon this ground nick-named Herodians by the People, as men that more endeavoured the greatneſs and eſtate of Herod, than the proſperity and liberty of their native Country. And poſſibly enough it is, that ſome amongſt them ſeeing the magnificence of Herods Palace and experimentally knowing his prowefs; might fancy him to be the Meſſiah, ſo long looked for; and thereby own this name with a better Title, than the others did. Oppoſite unto theſe were thoſe called the Gaulonites (we may call the one the Court-faction, the other the faction of the Country or Common-people:) ſo named from one Judas, a Gaulonite as Joſephus calleth him, from the place of his birth; a Galilean, as Gamaliel calleth him Act. 5. 37. from the place of his abode or habitation. By him the Iews were practiſed with to deny this tribute, telling them that it was a manifeſt token of their ſervitude, and that they ought to know no Lord, but the Lord of Heaven: drawing them finally on this ground into open arms, in which action he and his adherents periſhed and were brought to nothing. Moſt of his followers were of Galilee, though he had ſome Diſciples in Hieruſalem and Samaria: and of theſe Galileans were thoſe poor men, whoſe blood Pilate is ſaid to mingle with their Sacrifices, Luke 13. 1.

The language of this people by them called the Hebrew, was naturally & originally the ſame which Abraham found in the land of Canaan, at his coming thither: as hath been ſhewn before when we were in Phœnicia. Uſed by them conſtanly till their ſubjugation by the Babylonians, when being led captive to that Country, and conforming themſelves to the ſpeech and dialect of it; they came at laſt to ſpeak a kind of broken language, neither true Chaldean, nor good Hebrew, but one made of both. Chaldee as to the main body of it, but Hebrew as to the affixes, points, and Conjugations; being the ſame with that which we now call the Syriack. And at their coming home, after ſeventy years, had ſo far loſt the knowledge of their Mother tongue; that they were not able to underſtand the words of the Holy Scripture, when Ezra read it in their hearing: inſomuch that he was forced to employ ſome learned in that tongue to expound it to them. To this the Scribes ſo often mentioned in the New Teſtament, muſt refer their original: there being no ſuch office heard of til the time of Ezra, though long before that time the Law had ordinarily been read unto them in the feaſt of Tabernacles. For this cauſe they were called Scribes of the Law, Ezra 7. 6. Doctors of the Law, Luke 5. 17. & ſimply by the name of Lawyers, Luk. 7. 30. as men whoſe office was to expound the Law, & make it intelligible to the people. Theſe we may beſt reſemble to the Canoniſts in the Church of Rome, or the Divinity Reader in ſome School or Colledg: & grew to ſo great eſtimation in the Iewiſh State, that it was hard to ſay at laſt whether the Phariſees or they were the better men, for what the Phariſees gained on the common people by pretence of ſanctity, theſe got more juſtifiably by their zeal to the written word; which they endeavoured to preſerve from the common dangers both of corruption, and contempt. And though I look on thoſe men eſpecially, as the name of a Function, not a Sect: yet being they held ſo cloſe to the Phariſees, and concurred with them in moſt of their ſuperſtitions, as appeareth, Mat. 23. I conſider them as a ſtrong and potent Faction of great authority and influence in affairs of moment.

For matters of Religion, the people of this Land were priviledged above all others, had they had the grace to make good uſe of it: the Law being given to them by God the Father, the Goſpel preached amongſt them by God the Son, and that Goſpel countenanced and confirmed before their eyes, by the miraculous operations of the Holy Ghoſt. The Government of that Church in the time of the Law, by a ſubordination of Prieſts and Levites to their ſeveral heads; the Prieſts divided by King David into 24. ranks or Claſſes, each Claſſis ſerving in their turns at the holy Temple: the Chiefs or Heads of which ſeveral Claſſes, made but that body of men which are called Principes Sacerdotum, or chief Prieſts ſo often mentioned in the writings of the holy Evangeliſts. Over all which there was one Supreme, whom they called Summum Sacerdotem, or the High-Prieſt, deſcended lineally from Aaron, till the Romans out of avarice and reaſon of State made the Office ſaleable. And becauſe poſſibly the High-Prieſt might be under ſome pollution, and ſo uncapable by Law to perform his Office; he had his Saffragan (or Sagan) to diſcharge it for him. Of which ſort was Zephaniah, the Sagan or ſecond Prieſt to Semiah, mentioned, Jer. 52. 24. And of this ſort is Annas thought by ſome to have been to Caiphas; and for that cauſe the title of High-Prieſt to be given to both: Luke 3. 2. though others think that Annas was High-Prieſt in right, and the other in fact; the one being depoſed by the Romans, and the other ſuper-induced into the place. In time of Chriſtianity they were governed as in other Churches, by a ſubordination of Prieſts to Biſhops, the firſt Biſhop ſaid to be S. James, the ſon of Alphaeus, commonly called the Lords Brother, affirmed by Ignatius, Schollar to the Apoſtles, in his Epiſtle ad Trallianos; by Egeſippus, who lived in the Apoſtles times, as S. Hierom and Euſebius cite him; as alſo by Clemens of Alexandria cited by Euſebius, Hiſt. lib. 7. cap. 14. by Cyril of Hieruſalem, Catechiſm 4. and 14. Epiphanius, Hæreſ. 78. n. 7. S. Ambroſe in Gal. 1. S. Chryſoſt. on the laſt of S. Johns Goſpel; S. Hierom in his Catalogue of Eccleſiaſtical writers; S. Auguſtine cont. Creſcon. lib. 2. cap. 37. To whom there may be added the joynt conſent of 289. Prelates, aſſembled in the ſixth General-Councel holden at Conſtantinople, affirming James the Lords Brother to be the firſt Biſhop of Hieruſalem: all of them with the Fathers before mentioned, taking the word Biſhop in that ſenſe, in which it generally paſſed for the times they lived in. His ſucceſſors ſubject at the firſt to the Biſhop of Cæſarea, as their Metropolitan; though priviledged in their own Dioceſe, with the rights of Patriarchs, as appears evidently by the Acts of the Nicene Council. But afterwards for the greater honour of the Holy City, wherein our Saviour wrought the work of our redemption, it was ordained at Chalcedon, that the Biſhop of Hieruſalem ſhould have as well the juriſdiction as the name of a Patriarch: the three Paleſtines (for Conſtantine had before divided it into ſo many Provinces) beeing ſubducted from the power of the See of Antioch, to make up his Patriarchate. So ſtood it in elder times; but now by the incroachment of Mahometaniſm the Chriſtian Faith is ſo obſcured, and the beauties of it ſo eccliſped, that were it not for ſome Sects of Chriſtians dwelling in Mount Sinai, and about Hieruſalem, it might be ſaid without any manifeſt untruth, to be quite extinguiſhed.

But to look back upon the Country, it cannot be deſcribed more fully, and ſignificantly, than Moſes hath done it to our hands, in the 8. of Deut. Where it is ſaid to be a land of Brooks and Waters, of Fountains and depths, that ſpring out of the Vallies and Hills; a land of Wheat and Barley, and Vines, and Fig-trees, and Pomegranates; of Oyl Olive, and Honey; a Land, wherein was bread without ſcarceneſs; a Land whoſe ſtones were as Iron, and out of whoſe hills one may dig braſs. An ample commendation; & yet in ſome ſort ſhort of the Fertility of this flouriſhing Country; which did not only conſiſt in the choiſe and plenty, but in the perpetuity of its fruits: it being on record in the Epiſtles of the Emperour Julian (ſirnamed the Apoſtate) that the Fig-trees, and other Fruit-trees herein, were ſeldome or never without fruits; the old not fully falling off, till the new came on. Which his report if true, (as certainly he did not love our Saviour ſo well as to flatter the Country for his ſake) we have then an anſwer to the difficulty, which hath ſo much perplexed all Commentators in former times; and that is, why our Saviour ſhould curſe the Fig-tree for not bearing fruit, when the Text ſaith, that the time of Fruits was not yet come, Mar. 14. 13. For though the time for new Fruits was not come as yet (it being then but early Spring) yet our Saviour being hungry might expect to find ſome of the old, and failing of his expectation lay that curſe upon it. Nor is this ſolution of the doubt diſcountenanced, (rather much confirmed) by the Character and Condition of the Country, as it ſtands at preſent: naturally adorned with beautiful mountains, and luxurious Valleys, the Rocks affording excellent waters, and the Air never pinched with colds, nor ſcorched with heats. And though either by the negligence of the Inhabitants, or ſome curſe laid upon the Land, far ſhort of that fertility with which once it flouriſhed; Yet ſtill Figs, Olives, Pomegrannates, Palm-trees, are here very frequently to be ſeen; ſome ſtore of Wine, with Oranges, and the Apple of Paradice, which they preſerve upon the trees all the year long (which agrees very well with that of Julian ſpoken of before) as well furniſhed with Honey and Sugar-canes; as alſo with Goats, Swine, Hares, Quailes, and Partridges: but peſtered ſo in many places with Rats and Mice, that if it were not for certain Birds which feed upon them, it were not poſſible for the people to have any Harveſt. Balm they had anciently, not now. Nor any Nuts, Pears, Plums, or Cherries, but what are brought hither from Damaſcus.

Principal Rivers of this Country, are 1 Chiſon, the Corſans of Ptolemy, which riſeth out of Mount Tabor in Galilee, and falleth into the Mediterranean Sea, not far from Mount Carmel in Phœnicia. 2. Cedron a Torrent rather than a River, paſſing betwixt Hieruſalem and the Mount of Olives; but more remarkable for many notable actions, than many others of a greater both name and courſe. For over this Brook did David paſs when he fled from Abſalom; and over this our Saviour the Son of David paſſed, when he went to his paſſion. On the Banks hereof did Aſa the King of Judah, burn his mothers Idols, 1 Kings 15.as Joſiah did the Veſſels which were made for Baal, 2 Kings 23.3 Zared, & 4. Naphea, which ariſing out of the Hills of the Tribe of Judah, have their fall into the Mediterranean. 5. Arnon, which hath his ſpring in the Hills ſo called, and endeth his courſe in the Mare Mortuum. 6. Jaboc, oft mentioned in Scriptures; which iſſuing out of the Mountains of Galaad, and 7. Hermon; which ſpringing from the Hills ſo named, loſe themſelves in Jordan. 8. Jordan, ſo called from Jor and Dan, two neighbouring fountains, out of which he ſeems to take his ſource: though they do alſo fetch their ſpring from Phiala, a round deep Well at the foot of Anti-Libanus, about twenty four miles from theſe fountains, into which he maketh his way like a Mole under ground. A River of more fame than length, breadth, or depth, running from North to South, almoſt in a ſtrait line to the Dead Sea, where he endeth his courſe; not navigably deep, nor above ten yards in breadth, where broadeſt; ſhadowed on both ſides with Poplars, Tamarisk-trees, and reeds of many ſeveral ſorts, of ſome of which the Arabians make darts and Javelines, of others Arrows, and ſome again they faſhion into pens to write with. Paſſing along it maketh two Lakes, the one in the Upper Galilee, by the antients called Samachonitis, dry for the moſt part in the Summer, and then covered with ſhrubs and ſedge; not mentioned in the holy Scriptures: the other in the Lower Galilee, about an hundred furlongs in length, & fourty in breadth; called the Sea of Galilee from the Countrey, the Lake of Tyberias from a City of that name on the banks thereof, & for the like cauſe called alſo the Lake of Genezareth. And here it is to be obſerved, that the River paſſeth thorough this Lake with ſo ſwift a courſe, that it preſerves it ſelf diſtinct from the waters of it both in taſte and colour, as is affirmed of Nilus for a long ſpace in the Mediterranean, and other great Rivers in their fall. Finally, having run thorow the plains of Hiericho, it finiſheth its courſe at laſt in the Mare Mortuum, or Dead Sea. Honoured with the name of a Sea, becauſe ſalt, and large, ſeventy miles long, and ſixteen broad; furniſhing with ſalt the whole land of Jewry: but called the Dead Sea, either becauſe it had no viſible efflux into the Ocean, nor is at all increaſed with the waters of this River and many other Torrents which fall into it; or becauſe no living Creature is nouriſhed in it, ſuffocated with the bituminous ſavour which it ſendeth forth, from the abundance of which matter is alſo called Lacus Aſphaltites. Nigh hereunto ſtood the once-famous Cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, with three others more, whence the valley had the name of Pentapolis, deſtroyed for their abominations by a fire from heaven: now fruitfull in ſhew only, but not in ſubſtance; the fruits here growing, being very fair unto the eye, ſed levi tactu preſſa in vagū fatiſcunt pulverem, but if touched, moulder into aſhes, as Solinus hath it.

Chief Hills and Mountains of it, beſides Anti-Libanus, and Mount Hermon, ſpoken of already, which be only borderers, are, 1. Mount Sion, memorable for the Tower of David, which was built upon it, called frequently the Holy Hill of Sion. 2. Mount Moriah, famous for the intended ſacrifice of Iſaac, and the Temple of Solomon. 3. Mount Calvary, on which CHRIST ſuffered, ſuppoſed to be the burial place of our father Adam. 4. Mount Tabor, on which our Saviour was transfigured. 5. Mount Olivet, from which he aſcended into heaven. 6. Mount Garizim, whereon ſtood the Samaritans Temple, their ordinary place of worſhip, mentioned John 4. 20. 8. The Mountains of Saron, ſtretching with intermixed Vallies, from the Sea of Galilee to the Mediterranean, not far from Tyre, there ending in a white Clif, and for that cauſe called Capo Bianco by the Sailer. The whole Mountain pleaſantly enriched with the fragrant ſmels of Roſemary, ſweet Marjoram, Hyſſop, Bayes, and other odoriferous plants which do grow there naturally: but for all that, deſtitute of any other Inhabitants than Leopards, Boars, Jaccalls, and ſuch ſavage Creatures. 9. The Mountains of Gilboa, the higheſt on the Weſt of Jordan; as 10. thoſe of Baſan, celebrated for their height in the Book of Pſalms, & 11. thoſe of Abarim, on the Eaſt-ſide of it: from one of the Summits of which laſt called Nebo, by ſome writers Piſgah, the Lord gave Moſes a ſurvey of the Land of Promiſe.

As for this whole Countrey comprehended in name of Paleſtine, it hath had divers diviſions, according to the quality of the people, or the will of thoſe who have been formerly maſters of it. Divided firſt betwixt the Philiſtims, Perizites, Hittites, Jebuſites, & others of the Sons of Canaan, on this ſide Jordan; the Moabites, Ammonites, Midianites, and Ammorites, dwelling on the other. When conquered by the Sons of Jacob, is was divided into the twelve Tribes, of 1. Judah. 2. Benjamin. 3. Simeon. 4. Dan. 5. Aſer. 6. Naphthali. 7. Zabulon. 8, Iſſachar. 9. Gad. 10. Ruben. 11. Ephraim, & 12. Manaſſeth. When that great breach was made by Jeroboam, in the Kingdom of David, it was broken into the two Kingdoms of Judah and Iſrael; of which the firſt contained only the two Tribes of Judah and Benjamin, the latter comprehending the other ten. When the Iſraelites were led Captive into Aſſyria, and a new ſet of people planted in their rooms, thoſe new-comers, from Samaria, their Capital Citie, had the name of Samaritans: and when the men of Judah were releaſed of their long captivity, and came back from Babylon, they took to themſelves the name of Jews. After which time, the whole Countrey of Paleſtine anciently poſſeſſed, or ſubdued by the ſeed of Abraham, was divided into 1. Peræa. 2. Ituræa. 3. Galilee. 4. Samaria. 5. Judæa, and 6. Idumæa. When conquered by the Romans, all theſe were joyned into one Province, which for a time was reckoned as a part of Syria, or at leaſt ſubordinate. But Conſtantine not liking of the one, or the other, went away by himſelf, and caſt it into three Provinces, viz. 1. Paleſtina Prima. 2. Paleſtina Secunda, and 3. Paleſtina Salutaris; the Metropolis of the firſt being Caſaræa Paleſtinæ; of the the ſecond, Samaria; of the third, Hieruſalem. But this diviſion of Conſtantines growing out of uſe, we will adhere unto the former: Beginning firſt with thoſe parts hereof which lay on the other ſide of Jordan, becauſe firſt conquered & poſſeſſed by the houſe of Iſrael; who at the Gate found entrance into all the reſt; and coming round to Idumæa, which laſt of all theſe Provinces was added to the State of Jewry. In the Chorographie whereof, I muſt confeſs my ſelf a Debter to Sir Walter Raleigh, whoſe induſtry herein hath ſaved me a great deal of ſearch; though ſometimes I make bold to differ from him, and add to him, as I ſee occaſion.

Peræa.

PERÆA.

PERÆA, is that part of Paleſtine, which lyeth betwixt the River Jordan, and the mountains of Arnon, (which divided Paleſtine from Syria and Arabia) Eaſt and Weſt; and reacheth from Pella in the North, to Petra the chief Town of Arabia Petræa, in the South. By Pliny it is made to bend more towards Egypt, who deſcribes it thus. Peræa Judææ pars eſt ulterior, Arabiæ & Egypto proxima, aſperis diſperſa montibus, & à cœteris Judæis Jordano amne diſcreta. Peræa (ſaith he) is the furtheſt part of Judæa, neighbouring Arabia and Egypt, interſperſed with rough and craggy mountains, and parted from the reſt of the Jews by the River Jordan. So called from the Greek word περά, in regard of the ſituation of it on the other ſide of that River; and not improperly might be rendered by Tranſ-Jordana. Bleſſed with a rich ſoil, and large fields beſet with divers Trees, eſpecially of Olives, Vines, and Palms. The habitation in times paſt of the Midianites, Moabites, and Ammonites, as alſo of the two Tribes of Gad and Reuben. Of all which I ſhall ſpeak in order, beginning with the Midianites, and the children of Lot, as the firſt occupants hereof; upon the knowledge of whoſe affairs, the State and ſtory of the Iſraelites hath ſo much dependance.

And firſt the Midianites inhabited on the South-Eaſt of the Dead Sea, at the very entrance of the Countrey; deſcended from one or more of the five ſons of Midian, the ſon of Abraham by Keturah mentioned Gen. 25. v. 4. Who leaving the reſt of their brethren to ſeek themſelves new habitations, more towards the Banks of the Red Sea, and the deſarts of Arabia Petraa; continued near unto the place of Abrahams dwelling: and mingling with the Moabites and Canaanites in bloud and marriages, came in ſhort time to loſe all the knowledge of the true God, and to worſhip Idols, as the reſt of their Neighbours did.

Their chief Cities were 1. Recome, built by one of the five Kings of the Midianites, which was ſlain, by Joſuah, afterwards called Selah, 2 Kings 14. 7. accounted at that time a City of the Edomites; next of the Iſmaelites or Arabians, and by them called Hagar. Beſt known unto the Greeks and Romans, by the name of Petra, and by that name we ſhall take further notice of it when we come to Arabia, 2. Midian, on the Banks of the Dead Sea, the ordinary reſidence of their Princes, abſolute of themſelves at firſt, as in other places; but at the time when Moſes and Joſuah led the people unto their poſſeſſions, ſubjected unto Sehon King of the Ammorites; whoſe Dukes their five Kings or Princes, are ſaid to be. Joſ. 13. 21. A people whom the Iſraelites had neither Commiſſion or intent to make war upon, if they had not cauſeleſly provoked them, at the requeſt of the Moabites, by ſending amongſt them (as Balaam the falſe Prophet had adviſed) the moſt beautifull of all their women, not only to intice them to prohibited mixtures, but to allure them to the worſhip of their Idols alſo. A miſchievous and ſucceſsfull plot, but alike dangerous to both parties: God ſending a fierce plague amongſt the Iſraelites, which coſt them the lives of 24000 perſons, beſides ſuch as periſhed by the Sword; and giving a command to Moſes, to avenge him of the Midianites, who had provoked him. On which Commiſſion, Moſes culled out 12000 men, and ſent them under Phineas againſt the Midianites: by whom all their Princes were ſlain, their Cities and goodly Caſtles burnt with fire, their men, women, and male-children put unto the ſword; as is related in the one and thirtieth Chapter of the Book of Numbers. Yet notwithſtanding this great ſlaughter, they recovered their former power, if not a greater; and after the death of Barac the Judge of Iſrael, did for the ſpace of 4 years ſo afflict that people, that they were fain to hide themſeves in the Caves and ſtrong holds of the Mountains, as is ſaid Judg. 6. 2. their Enemies having left them neither ſheep, oxen, nor aſs, or any ſuſtenance at all, v. 4. But Gideon being raiſed up by God for their deliverance, encountred with their four Kings, and put them to flight: of which four, Oreb and Zeeb were taken and ſlain by the Ephraimites at the paſſage of Jordan; Zebah and Salmanah, taken by Gideon himſelf, and executed by his own hand, as the ſtory telleth us. In this war there are ſaid to have periſhed of this people and their Confederates, no fewer than 120000 perſons, by which ſo weakned that we hear no more of them from this time forwards, in any action of importance: their name and Countrey being firſt incorporated into that of the Edomites; and after into that of the Iſraelites, and other the inhabitants of Arabia Petræa.

2. The Moabites poſſeſſed all the Countrey, from the Midianites in the South, as far as Eſebon in the North, on both ſides the River Arnon: having Jordan on the Weſt, and the hills of Abarim on the Eaſt. Poſſeſſed at the firſt by the Emmims, a race of Giants, whoſe chief City was Sheneth Kirjathaim. But theſe being vanquiſhed and broken by Chedorlaomer and his Aſſociates, of which ſee Gen. 14. 5. their forlorn ſeats were taken up by the Moabites, deſcended from Moab one of the ſons of Lot; who lived here in great proſperity, till the time of Vaheb, Grand-father unto Balaac, the ſon of Zippor; from whom Sehon King of the Amorites had taken all the parts of Moab, on the North of the River Arnon, and made that River, which before was the middle of Moab, to be the North bound or border of it. In which eſtate it ſtood in the time of Moſes.

Chief Cities of it at that time were 1. Rabbat, the Regal ſeat of Balaac the King of Moab, the Rhalmathum of Ptolemy. 2. Diblathum, deſtroyed with the reſt of Moab by Nebuchadnezzar, as is ſaid Jer. 48. 22. 3. Gallim, the principality of Phalti the ſon of Laiſh, to whom Saul gave his Daughter Michal, formerly married unto David, 1 Sam. 25. 44. 4. Muthara, and 5. Nathaliel, thorow which the Iſraelites paſſed, after they had left the Well called Beer. 6. Bamath, where Moſes was encamped when he ſent to Sehon to demand a paſſage thorow this Countrey, Num. 21. 19, &c. 7. Mizpah, the City of Refuge to the Father and Mother of David, in the time of his troubles under Saul. 8. Hor, the chief City of Moab, not medled with by Moſes in his march this way, the Lord himſelf forbidding him to touch upon it or diſtreſs it; becauſe it had been given by him for an inheritance to the Children of Lot, Deuter. 2.9. Which prohibition was only for this place particularly; (though this particularly there mentioned) but for all the lands and territories then in their poſſeſſion. 9. Kir-haſareth, of chief note for the barbarous and inhumane fact of Meſha the Moabitiſh King, who being beſieged herein by the Kings of Judah, Iſrael, and Edom, without hope of eſcape, ſacrificed his own eldeſt Son on the wall hereof; which ſo moved the Kings of Judah, and Edom, that they forſook the King of Iſrael whoſe the quarrel was. So the ſiege was raiſed, 2 Kings 3. 17.

Now as Moſes did not at the preſent diſobey Gods Order, in leaving the Moabites in quiet; ſo neither did the Moabites on their parts provoke him to it; giving him a free and open paſſage in his march for Canaan: out of an hope that when the Amorites were ſubdued, they ſhould be put into poſſeſſion of their loſt eſtates. And though they were deceived of that expectation, the Iſraelites looking on that Countrey which they had conquered, as the ſpoils of the Ammorites, and giving it for a poſſeſſion to the Tribe of Reuben: yet durſt they not do any thing in the way of Armes, but ſent for Baalam the falſe Prophet, to caſt them by his curſes and incantations into ſome diſeaſes, whereby their ſtrength and courage might be taken from them. Baalac the Son of Zippor was at this time King. After whom we find not the name of any other, till we come to Eglon, who with the help of Ammon, and Amalek, over-maſtered Iſrael, and for the ſpace of 18 years tyrannized amongſt them: when ſlain in his own houſe, and afterwards 10000 of his people, by the hand of Ehad. But this indignity was in the times ſucceeding revenged by Saul in ſome part, who made war upon them; but more by David who ſubdued them, and made them Tributaries. And not ſo only, but ſubjected them to the vileſt offices, as is intimated in that form of Speech, Moab is my waſh-pot, Pſal. 60. 8. Taking their opportunity they withdrew themſelves from the houſe of David, and put themſelves under the command of the Kings of Iſrael, to whom they paid for tribute in the time of Ahab, 100000 Lambs, and 200000 Rams, with their fleeces on: but quickly weary of thoſe payments, and revolting from the houſe of Ahab alſo, they were invaded by Jehoram, aided herein by the Kings of Judah, and Idumæa; by whom being vanquiſhed, Meſha their King was fain to ſhut himſelf up in Kir-haſareth, as was ſaid before. After this joyning with the Ammonites, and the Idumæans or ſons of Edom, they invaded Jehoſaphat King of Judah; to whom God gave a memorable and ſignal victory, without blow or battel: the Ammonites firſt ſetting upon the Edomites, and after upon one another, till they were almoſt all deſtroyed, 2 Chron. 20. 23. From this time we hear nothing of them; but probably they recovered ſome part of their former dwellings, when that two Tribes and a half on the Eaſt of Jordan, were carried away captive by Tiglath Pileſer. Poſſeſſed hereof and of other their habitations, till the reign of Zedekias King of Judah; when vanquiſhed, with the reſt of theſe Nations, by the Babylonians and Aſſyrians under Nebuchadnezzar. Nor find we any mention of them in the ages following; the name of Moab being forgotten, or grown out of uſe: the South part of their Countrey laid to Arabia Petræa, as the Eaſt parts were to that of Arabia Deſerta; and all the reſt, as well as that which had been conquered by the Jews, ſwallowed up in the general name of Paleſtinians.

3. The AMMONITES inhabited on the North-Eaſt of the River Arnon, and poſſeſſed all that tract from Arnon, on the head of the River, to the City of Rabbath; and on both ſides of the River Jaboc, as well within the Mountains of Galaad as without the ſame. The ſeat in elder times of the Raphaims, and Zamzummins, a Giant-like race of men; as the Emmins were; but vanquiſhed alſo, as the others, by Cherdorlaomor; Aſhtaroth, and Heth, being then the principal of their habitations. Succeeded to, in their deſolate and forſaken dwellings by the children of Ammon, the other Son of Lot, and the brother of Moab; both houſes running the ſame fortune (theſe Ammonites being conquered, and deprived of the beſt part of their Countrey on the South-ſide of Jaboc, by Og King of Baſan; as the Moabites, at the ſame time, of theirs by Sehon. A monument of which ſubjection was the bed of Og, found in the City of Rabbath, the chief City of Ammon, there to be ſeen, when Moſes had ſubdued the Kings of the Amorites, as appeareth Deut. 3.

Chief Cities at ſuch time as the Iſraelites firſt conquered the Land of Canaan, were, 1 Rabbath, the Regal City of their Kings; taken by Og of Baſan, as is ſaid before; but again quitted as it ſeemeth on the coming of Moſes, that he might be the better able to keep the field. Memorable in ſucceeding times for the death of Uriah, ſlain here by a deſign of Davids when beſieged by Joab. Who having brought it to terms of yielding, ſent for the King to come before it, that he might have the honour of taking a place ſo defenſible; environed in a manner with the River Jaboc, and therefore called the City of waters, 2 Sam. 12. 27. Afterwards repaired and beautified by Ptolomy Philadelphus, King of Ægypt, who having made himſelf Maſter of thoſe parts of Arabia, which lie near unto it, and liking the conveniency of the ſituation, honoured it with the name of Philadelphia. 2. Dathema, ſuppoſed to be Rithma by the learned Junius, mentioned Numb. 33. 18. (the Hebrew letters D. and R. being much alike) a place of great ſtrength amongſt the Ammonites. 3. Minneth, in the South border, and 4 Abel vinearum in the Eaſt border of Ammon; both mentioned in the purſuit of that people when purſued by Jephthe. 5. Mitſpa, ſometimes one of the Cities of the half Tribe of Manaſſes, and at that time honoured with the reſidence of Jephta; but afterwards recovered by the children of Ammon: in whoſe hands it was, when utterly deſtroyed and burnt by Judas Peræa. Maccabæus. 1 Macc. 5. 35. 6 Magod, and 7 Boſor, two other ſtrong places of the Ammonites, there alſo mentioned; but ſaid to be in the Region of Galaad, by which name, or by that of Gileadites, all the Countrey of the Ammonites lying on this ſide of the Mountains, was at that time called.

As for thoſe Ammonites, they had nothing at all to do with Iſrael as they paſſed towards Canaan; neither provoking them, nor provoked by them, to any acts of hoſtility. Afterwards not well pleaſed that they were not reſtored to the poſſeſſion of thoſe lands, which had been taken from them by Og of Baſan, (conferred by the decree of Moſes on the Tribe of Gad;) they joined with the Midianites in their expedition. But worſted by the puiſſance and good fortune of Gedeon, they lay ſtill a while, till ſtirred up by ſome ſecret motion from Almighty God, to avenge him on that ſinfull and Idolatrous people, who by worſhipping the gods of the Heathen, had provoked him to anger. Proſperous in it for a time, till his wrath was pacified; who having made uſe of him to chaſtiſe his people, delivered up his rod to be burnt by Jephthe, vanquiſhed and driven home by him with a very great ſlaughter. Not ſo much cruſhed by the unſucceſsfulneſs of this attempt, but that in the time of Saul they brake out again, and beſieged Jabeſh-Gilead; Nabas, a cruel tyrant, being then their King; who having brought the City into great extremity, would give them no other conditions than the loſs of every mans right eye: to the end that uſing to carry a great Target on their left Armes, wherewith the eye on that ſide was wholly ſhadowed, they might by this means be diſabled from all future ſervice. But Saul came time enough to ſave them from that ſhame and loſs; for that cauſe ſo offenſive to Nabas, that to deſpight him, he ſhewed friendſhip to David, in the time of his trouble. A curteſie which David was ſo mindful of, that he ſent Ambaſſadours to Hanan the Son of Nabas, to make acknowledgement of it, and to confirm the amity which he had with his Father: but found ſo ill requital from him, that in ſtead of thanks and kind acceptance, his meſſengers were deſpitefully handled, their beards half ſhaven, and their garments cut off by the knee. Incenſed werewith he ſent Joab againſt them; by whom the Countrey was laid waſte, and Rabbath their chief City taken, their Kings Crown, weighing a Talent of Gold, ſet on Davids head, and all the priſoners executed with great ſeverity, ſome of them being caſt into lime-kils, and the reſt torn in pieces with ſaws and harrows. Quiet a long while after this, we hear no great news of them till the reign of Jehoſaphat, againſt whom confederated with the Edomites and Moabites, they made open war: but fell by one anothers ſwords, as was ſaid before. Not well recovered of this blow, they were ſubdued and made Tributaries by Ozias King of Judah, and ſo continued in the time of Joatham his Son; who ſo increaſed the tribute laid upon them by his father, that it amounted to a hundred Talents of Silver, ten thouſand meaſures of Wheat, and as many of Barly. Taught by this leſſon how to value the Kings of Judah, they continued either quiet neighbours, or obedient ſubjects, though much improved in power and reputation, by regaining the greateſt part of their antient dwellings, on the removal of the two Tribes and an half, on the Eaſt of Jordan, to the land of Aſſyria, by Tiglath Phul-Aßur. For after this (with reference to the common danger) Baulis their King was ſo ſtrict a confederate with Zedechias, that when Nebuchadnezzar had taken Zedechias with him unto Babylon, and left Gedaliah as his Deputy to command the Countrey; Iſmael, one of the blood of the Kings of Judah, was ſent by Baulis to ſlay him. But he paid dear for his attempt; his Countrey being ſhortly conquered by the Babylonians, and the name of Ammonite forgotten: changed by the Grecians when they came to Lord it over them, to thoſe of Gileaditis, and Philadelphia; according to the new name of their principal City; and the old one of the Mountains and hills adjoining.

4. The REUBENITES took name from Reuben, the eldeſt of Jacobs ſons by Leah; of whom in the firſt muſter which was made of them at Mount Sinai, there were found 46000 fighting men; and 43700 at the ſecond muſter, when they paſſed over Jordan. Their dwelling was on the Eaſt of that famous River; having the Gadites on the North, the Deſart of Arabia on the Eaſt, and the Land of Moab on the South, from which parted by the River Arnon.

Places of moſt obſervation here 1 Abel-Sittim, ſeated in that part of the Countrey which was called the Plains of Moab; the laſt incamping place of Moſes: afterwards by the Jews called ſimply Sittim; memorable for the wood ſo often mentioned in the Scriptures, of which the Ark of the Lord was made. In after times by the Greeks and Romans it was called Abila, miſtook by ſome for that Abila or Abilene whereof Lyſanias was Tetrarch: that Town and Territory, as Joſephus doth affirm expreſly, being ſituate amongſt the ſpurs and branches of Libanus, far enough from hence. 2 Bethabora, or Beth-Bara, where John baptized, and Moſes made his laſt and moſt divine exhortations to the Tribes of Iſrael, contained in Deuteronomy. 3 Macharus, the ſtrongeſt in-land City and Caſtle in thoſe parts of the world, ſtanding aloft upon a Mountain every way unacceſſible: firſt fortified by Alexander Jannæus King of the Jewes, as a frontire Town againſt the Arabians; and afterwards demoliſhed by Gabinius, one of Pompey's Lieutenants, in the war againſt Ariſtobulus. Unfortunately remarkable for the death of John Baptiſt, where murdered by the command of Herod the Tetrarch of Galilee, and Lord of this Countrey of Peræa. 4. Laſa, or Leſhah, of which Gen. 10. 19. by the Greeks called Callirhoe, by reaſon of the fair fountains riſing from the Hills adjoining, out of which iſſue ſprings both of hot, and cold waters, as alſo bitter and ſweet; all which ſoon after joined unto one ſtream, make a wholſom Bath, eſpecially for convulſions and contraction of ſinews. 5 Medeba, famous for the defeat given to the Syrians and Ammonites by the conduct of Joab, Peræa. 1 Chron. 19. 7. In the time of the Greeks laid with ſome other Towns of this Tract unto Cœle-Syria; but in the declining times of the Seleucian Family, regained unto the Crown of Jewry by Alexander, he being of the race of the Maccabees; and finally with eleven others in thoſe parts, delivered by Antipater the father of Herod into the hands of Aretas King of the Arabians, hoping thereby to gain him to the ſide of Hyrcanus the ſon of Alexander, whoſe cauſe Antipater moſt favoured. 6. Boſor, or Bozra, a City of Refuge, and one of thoſe that were aſſigned unto the Levites on that ſide of the water. 7 Livias, a Town new built by Herod in honour of Livia, the Mother of Tiberius Caſar: different from that which the Geographers call Libias, (though by ſome confounded) the ſame with Laban, mentioned Dent. 1.1. 9 Kedemoth, another City of the Levites, giving name unto the adjoining Deſart, from whence Moſes ſent his ambaſſage to Sehon King of the Amorites. 10 Bamath-Baal, the chief City of the worſhippers of Baal, to which Balaam was brought by Balaac to curſe the Iſraelites. 11 Hesbon, the Regal City of Sehon King of the Amorites. 12 Adam, or the City Adam (Joſ. 3. 17.) where the Tribes paſſed dry-foot over Jordan, oppoſite unto Gilgal in the Tribe of Benjamin. Within this Tribe is the Mountain Nebo, from which Moſes took a vew of the Land of Canaan: an hill as it ſeemeth, of two tops, whereof that which looketh towards Jerico, is called Piſgah; that which looketh towards Moab, being called Huir. Here is alſo an high hill named Peor, where the filthy Idol Baal was worſhipped alſo, who hath hence the addition of Baal-Peor.

5. The GADITES, were ſo called from Gad the ſeventh ſon of Jacob, begot on Zilphah the hand-maid of Lea; of whom were found at the firſt muſter when they came out of Egypt, forty five thouſand five hundred and fifty fighting men; and at the ſecond when they entred the Land of Canaan, forty five thouſand bearing armes. Their ſituation was betwixt the Reubenites and the South, and the half Tribe of Manaſſes upon the North; the River Jordan on the Weſt, and the Mountains of Arnon on the Eaſt; by the which laſt parted from the dwellings of the Children of Ammon.

Cities of moſt obſervation, 1 Aroer, on the banks of the River Arnon, the principal City of the Gadites. 2. Dihon, more towards Jordan; of great note in the time of Ioſuah, and of no ſmall accompt in the time of Saint Hierome. 3 Beth-nimrah, of which Eſay propheſied that the water thereof ſhould be dried up; ſeated upon the Arnon alſo. 4 Nattoroth, more in the body of the Tribe. 5 Beth-aram, mentioned by Ioſuah, chap. 13. v.27. by Ioſephus called Betaramtha; new built by Herod Antipas, and called Livias, in honour of Livia the wife of Auguſtus Caſar, tranſlated into the Iulian family; who alſo laid unto it fourteen villages, to make it of the greater power and juriſdiction. 6 Beth-ezob, by Ioſephus called Vetezabra, the habitation of Miriam, who in the ſiege of Hieruſalem when deſtroyed by Titus, was compelled by famime to eat her own ſon. 7 Succoth, not far from the River Iordan, ſo called from the Tents or Booths which Iacob ſet up there, in his paſſage from Meſopotamia to the Land of Canaan: the people of which Town having denied relief to Gideon as he followed the chaſe of Zeba and Zalmanah, were by him miſerably tortured at his return, under a tribulum or threſſing carre, wherewith he tore their fleſh; and bruiſed their bodies. 8 Iahzor, another of the Regal Seats of Sehon King of the Amorites; firſt taken by Moſes, after recovered by the Moabites (as appeareth Eſay 16. 8.) then poſſeſſed by the Ammonites; and finally from them regained by Iudas Maccabæus, 1 Macc. 5. 8. 9 Mahanaim, ſo called from the Army of Angels which appeared to Iacob (Gen. 32. 2.) as ready to defend him againſt all his enemies, the word in the original importing a double Army. A place of very great ſtrength and ſafety, and therefore made by Abner the ſeat of Royal Iſhboſeth, the ſon of Saul, during the war he had with David; as afterwards the retiring place of David, during the rebellion of his ſon Abſolom. 10 Rogelim, the City of Barzillai the Gileadite, ſo faithfull to David in that war. 11 Ramoth, or Ramoth Gilead, ſo called from the ſituation of it near the Mountains of Gilead; a Town of ſpecial note in the book of God; particularly for the pacification here made, betwixt Iacob and Laban; for the death of Ahab King of Iſrael, who loſt his life in the recovery of it from the hands of the Syrians; and finally for the election of Iehu to the Crown of Iſrael, Anointed at the ſiege hereof, by a Son of the Prophets. 12 Penuel, ſo called from the enter-view which the Lord pleaſed to beſtow there on his ſervant Jacob, at his return out of Meſopotamia, mentioned Gen. 32. 32. the word ſignifying the place of the face or viſion of God: defaced by Gideon for their churliſh uſage of him, when he craved reliefe of them againſt the Midianites; to whom together with the Moabites, and Ammonites, the whole territory appertaining to theſe two Tribes, did once belong. But being from them taken by Og King of Baſan, and Sehon King of the Amorites, it came by the overthrow of thoſe Kings to the hands of Moſes; by whom aſſigned unto the Tribes of Gad and Reuben for thir habitation. Continuing theirs till the fatal period of the Kingdome of Iſrael began to approach, at what time theſe two Tribes with the half Tribe of Manaßes lying on the Eaſt of Jordan, being carried captive into Aſſyria, by Tiglath Philaſer, the Moabites and Ammonites recovered a great part of their antient dwellings. Of which poſſeſſed till their ſubverſion by the Babylonians. Afterwards this whole Countrey coming into the hands of the Kings of Syria, had the name of Peræa, for the reaſon formerly delivered. And being won piece-meal by the Maccabæans, came with the reſt of the kingdom of Judah, to the poſſeſſion of Herod the Great; by whom bequeathed at his death unto Herod Antipas one of his ſons, who held it, together with both Galilees, under the name of Tetrarch of Galilee and Peræa, as Ioſephus; or of Galilee onely, as Saint Luke; who being dead, it was beſtowed on Agrippa King of the Jews, of whom more hereafter.

ITURÆA.

ITURÆA. hath on the Eaſt and North, Cæle-Syria; on the Weſt, the River Jordan; and on the South, Peræa. So called from Jetur one of the Sons of Iſmael, ſeated on this tract; though loſt by his poſterity to the Amorites, one of the moſt powerfull Tribes amongſt the Canaanites; and by them made the patrimony of the Kings of Baſan. The race of which Kings ended in Og, the wealthieſt and beſt part hereof, were given by Moſes to the half Tribe of Manaſſes; ſuch parts of it as lay towards Damaſcus being ſeized on by the neighbouring Aramites, and made a Kingdom of it ſelf, called the Kingdom of Geſſur; and the more mountainous and unpleaſant left to the firſt Inhabitants, as not worth the conquering. But both the Kingdome of Geſſur, and thoſe of the half Tribe of Manaſſes, ſhifting from one Lord to another, till they came into the hands of the Grecians: the name of Ituræa revived again and grew into very good eſteem: the Ituræans being reputed for good Souldiers, eſpecially at the Bow and Arrows; of which thus the Poet in his Georgicks lib. 2.

Of the beſt Eugh that can be had.
The Ituræan Bows are made.

The whole Countrey in the times of the Greeks and Romans, divided into Trachonitis and Ituræa ſpecially ſo called: this laſt again being ſubdivided into Batanea, Gaulonitis, Auranitis, and Paneas. For whereas it is ſaid in Saint Lukes Goſpel, that Philip the Brother of Herod was Tetrarch of Ituræa, and the Region of Trachonitis; and by Joſephus, that for his Tetrarchy he had the Provinces of Trachonitis, Batatea, Gaulonitis, Auranitis, and Paneas: it muſt needs be that the four laſt mentioned Provinces make up that one, which by Saint Luke is comprehended in the name of Ituræa; diſtinct from that of Trachonitis, though a part thereof. Inhabited in the time of Joſephus, as in thoſe of Joſuah and David, both by Jewes and Syrians; the Syrians dwelling in the mountainous, and more barren parts, the Jewes in that which was aſſigned them in the time of Moſes: the whole not yielding unto Galilee for extent of ground, but far inferiour to it for wealth and fruitfulneſs; not well inhabited where beſt, and in ſome places which are deſert and very barren, hardly inhabited at all, or bearing any thing but wild fruits. Such was it in the time of Joſephus, and not bettered ſince.

1. TRACHONITIS is that mountainous and hilly Countrey, which beginning at the borders of the Ammonites, Where the Hills are called the Mountains of Gilead; extendeth it ſelf Northwards as far as Libanus: the Hills in thoſe parts being by the Jews called Galeed, Syrion, and Hermon; but by the Grecians, for the craggineſs and roughneſs of them, by the name of Trachones. The people miſchievouſly bent and much given to witch-craft, as we find in Strabo. Montanam regionem incolunt Ituræi & Arabes, malefici omnes. So he, or his Tranſlatour rather, for I have not the original by me. Where by Arabians, he meaneth thoſe of Trachonitis, which every where he maketh to be the ſame with Ituræa, though differing from it as the Cots-wold Countreys do from the reſt of Glouceſterſhire, or as a part doth from the whole, becauſe united by that name into one eſtate, at the time he lived in. Solet & Trachonitis Ituræ nomine appellari, ſaith the learned Grotius, according to the general conſent of the antient Writers. A people generally addicted to ſpoil and robbery, living eſpecially on the ſpoil of thoſe Merchants which trade to and from Damaſcus: till with ſome difficulty reſtrained to a more orderly life by Herod, on whom Auguſtus Cæſar had beſtowed the Countrey, to the end that by ſtrong hand he might hold them in.

The people and the Countrey by Joſephus are thus deſcribed. “The Trachonites (ſaith he) “have neither Towns nor Lands, nor Heritage, or any other poſſeſſions, but onely certain retreats “and caves under the ground, where they lived like beaſts: and having made abundant proviſion of water and victuals, were able to hold out a long time againſt any aſſailant. For the “doors of their Caves were made ſo narrow, that they could be entered but by one at once; “and the way of them not direct, but full of turnings and windings, not poſſibly to be found “out but by the help of a Guide: The whole Countrey naturally conſiſting of craggy Rocks. “The paſſages of the Caves once entered, they were found to be very large and ſpacious; “ſufficient to contain great multitudes of thoſe Theeviſh people, who when they had not “opportunity to ſpoil their neighbours, would rob one another, and omitted no kind of “wickedneſs; being ſo accuſtomed to theft, that they could not live otherwiſe. So he. But I conceive this is not meant generally of all the people, but onely ſome Body of Theeves or out-laws, which poſſeſſing themſelves of the ſtreits of the Mountains; from thence iſſued to aſſault and ſpoil the Paſſengers. For it is afterwards expreſſed that revolting upon the news of Herods death, and committing new out-rages; they no ſooner heard of his recovery but they fled the Countrey, and betook themſelves unto a ſtrong Caſtle in Arabia, where they increaſed to the number of 1000 perſons. So that there is no queſtion to be made at all, but they had Villages, and Towns, and Lands, and Heritages, in the more civil parts hereof, though not amongſt thoſe Mountainers which Joſephus ſpeaks of. And amongſt thoſe, I reckon, 1 Gerra, 2 Elere, 3 Nalaxa, 4 Adrama; all mentioned by Ptolemy, and all placed by him in the Longitude of 70 degrees, or upwards: more towards the Eaſt than well agreeth with the poſition of this Countrey, or with any part of Batanea, lying more towards the Weſt than Trachonitis, though to that part of Ituræa, by him aſcribed. Hither alſo I refer the City of 5 Tiſhbe, the Countrey of old Tobit, and of the Prophet Elias. 6 Tob, where Jephta lived in exile, when oppreſſed by his Brethren, till the neceſſities of his Countrey called him to the publick government: 7 Hippus, at the foot of thoſe Mountains, reckoned amongſt the Cities of Cœle-Syria, differing in ſoil as well as Etymologie from another of the ſame name in Batanea: this being ſo named from the Mountain Hippus under which it ſtandeth; that, from a Garriſon of Horſe there placed, as ſhall there be ſhewn. 8 Bathira, on the borders of this Countrey towards Batanea, built there by Herod, and planted with a Colonie of the Jews which came thither from Babylon; the better to ſuppreſs the inſolencies, and prevent the Robberies of this theeviſh people, accuſtomed (as before is ſaid) unto ſpoil and rapine.

2. BATANEA is that part of Ituræa which antiently made up the beſt and greateſt part of the kingdom of Baſan, whence it had this name: the changing of S. to T. as Aſſyria into Attyria, and the like, being uſual among the Greeks. But that kingdom being brought to an end by Moſes, it was given to the half Tribe of Manaſſes, ſo called of Manaſſes the ſon of Joſeph; of whom there were found at the firſt muſter near Mount Sinai, 32200 men able to bear armes: which though conſumed in the Deſerts, yet were they of ſuch a ſwift increaſe, that there were found 52700 fighting men of them, when they paſſed over Jordan. Their Territory on that ſide of the River, ſtretching from Jaboc on the South, to the Realm of Geſſur on the North; and from the Mountains unto Jordan, Eaſt and Weſt, was exceeding fertile: repleniſhed with all ſorts of Cattel, and adorned with the goodlieſt woods in that part of the world, the Oaks of Baſan being celebrated in the Holy Scriptures.

It had in it ſixty fenced Cities when firſt conquered by thoſe of this Tribe. The principal of which, 1 Pella, formerly called Butis, but being re-built by Seleucus, the Great King of Syria, was by him called Pella; with reference to a City of that name in Macedon, the birth-place of Alexander, to whom Seleucus owed his greatneſs and whole eſtate. Deſtroyed by Alexander Jannæus King of the Jews, becauſe not willing to admit the Law of Moſes; it was afterwards reſtored by Pompey to its former luſtre. Memorable in Church-ſtory for the Admonition or premoniſhment, given by a voice from Heaven, to the Chriſtians dwelling at Hieruſalem, to remove thence and dwell at Pella, that ſo they might eſcape that deſtruction, which the Roman Army under Titus was to bring upon it. 2 Edrey, the Seat-Royal of the Kings of Baſan. 3 Carnaim, on the banks of Jaboc, taken by Judas Maccabæus, who ſet fire on the Temple of the Idols there, and burnt therein all ſuch as fled thither for ſanctuary. 4 Ephron, a ſtrong City upon Jordan, taken and burnt by the ſame Judas Maccabæus, for refuſing to give a paſſage to his Army. 5 Jabeſh Gilead, more near unto the Mountains, whence it had that Adjunct; memorable in the Scriptures, for the ſiege of Nabas, King of the Ammonites, the raiſing of that ſiege by Saul, and the gratitude of the people towards him again, in taking down, inbalming and intombing the bodies of him and his Sons, which the Philiſtines had moſt deſpitefully hanged on the walls of Bethſan. 6 Aſtaroth, a City of great note in the elder times; the ſeats of the Rephaims, a Giant-like race of men, of whom deſcended Og of Baſan; from whence the Countrey adjoining had the name of the Land of Giants. Aſtaroth the Goddeſs of the Sidonians had here her worſhippers. 7 Gaulon, ſometimes poſſeſſed by Og of Baſan, and afterwards made one of the Cities of Refuge; of ſuch eſteem in the times of the Greeks and Romans, that the North part of Baſanitis or Batanea was called Gaulonitis; divided into Superior and Inferior, ſo often mentioned by Joſephus. And of this City or Countrey was that Judas of Galilee, ſpoken of in the fifth of the Acts, the Founder of the Gaulonites, or Anti-Herodians. 8 Gamala, in the Lower Gaulonitis, ſo called becauſe the hill upon which it ſtood was faſhioned like the back of a Camel: invincibly ſituate, ſtrengthened both by Art and Nature; and at the laſt with ſo great difficulty and hazard of Veſpaſians perſon, ſtormed by Titus, that the Romans in the heat of the execution ſpared neither Women nor Children; inſomuch that all the Inhabitants periſhed, except ſome few Women which had hid themſelves. 9 Gadara, after ten months ſiege, taken and deſtroyed by Alexander Jannæus King of the Jews; repaired by Pompey, and by Gabinius made one of the five ſeats of Juſtice for the whole Countrey of Paleſtine: the other four being Hieruſalem, Jericho, Hamath, and Sephorath. 10 Geraſa, or Gargeſa, the chief City of the Gergeſites, the people whereof on the loſs of their Swine, intreated our Saviour to depart out of their coaſts, as Saint Matthew hath it. Saint Luke, and Saint Mark aſcribe it to the people of Gadara. Not that the Cities were both one, or the Evangeliſts at ods in their Relation; but becauſe they were two neighbouring Cities, and their fields lay in Common pour cauſe de vicinage, as our Lawyers phraſe it: and ſo the ſtory might be common to both alike. 11 Hippus, not far from the River Jordan, ſo called from a Garriſon of Horſe there placed by Herod: not from the Mountain Hippus, as ſome ſuppoſe, which is too far off to have any influence upon it. 12 Julias, built by Philip the Tetrarch of Ituræa, in the Southern border of his eſtate, in imitation of the like work of Herod the Tetrarch of Galilee and Peræa: to ingratiate himſelf with Julia, the wife of Tiberius Cæſar. 13 Abel, by Joſephus called Abel Maacha, for diſtinctions ſake: where Sheba that Grand Rebel beſieged by Joab, and the City brought into ſome danger, had his Ituræa. head cut off, and thrown over the wall, at the perſwaſion of a wiſe woman of the Town. So the rebellion ended, and the City was ſaved.

North of Baſanitis, or Batanea, lyeth the kingdom of GESSUR, by a latter name called AURANITIS, from Hauran, a chief City of it, mentioned by the Prophet Ezechiel, chapter 16.18. A kingdom ſpoken of by Moſes as the Northern bound of the half Tribe of Manaſſes on that ſide of Jordan; Deut. 4. 14. by Joſuah as the Northern borders of the kingdom of Baſan, chap. 12. 5. but reckoned as a part of Syria, becauſe held by the Aramites, 2 Sam. 15. 8. A kingdom, though of no great territory, yet of ſome conſideration in the eye of the world: David eſteeming the alliance of the Kings hereof of ſome uſe unto him; and therefore marrying Maacha the daughter of Tolmui, King of Geſſur, by whom he had Abſalom and Tamar. And to this King it was that Abſalom fled on the killing of Amnon, abiding here three years, as the ſtory telleth us.

Conterminous to this, or at leaſt not very much diſtant from it, was the petit kingdom of Isk-tob, which ſent 12000 men to the aid of the Ammonites againſt David: and not far off, but more towards Palmyrene, or Aram-Zobah, that of Beth-Rehob, confederate in the ſame war alſo with the other Syrians; mention whereof is made in the ſecond book of Samuel, chap. 10. verſ. 6. Which whether they belonged to Syria, or to thoſe North-parts of Ituræa, is of no great certainty, and as little conſequence. For after this their greateſt and laſt exploit we hear no more news of them; ſwallowed up not long after (as it ſeems) by the Kings of Damaſcus.

To return therefore into Geſſur, as more certainly within the limits of Paleſtine, the places of moſt obſervation in it were, 1 Geßur, then the chief City of it, and giving name unto the whole. 2 Mahacath, or Macuti, as ſome call it: conceived to be that Maacha mentioned 1 Chron. 19. 6. But of this we have already ſpoken in Camagena. 3 Chauran, or Hauran, mentioned by the Prophet Ezekiel chap. 47. whence theſe Northern parts of Paleſtine were called Auranitis. 4 Chatſar-Hevan, there mentioned by that Prophet alſo. 5 Us, near the borders of Damaſcus, the firſt habitation of Us the ſon of Aram and Grandchild of Sem, by whoſe name ſo called: ſuppoſed to be the founder of Damaſcus alſo, and that more probably, than that the Countrey thereabouts ſhould be the Land of Hus, enobled by the dwelling and ſtory of Job. 9 Sueta, mentioned by Brochardus, and by ſome conceived to be the habitation of Bildad, ſurnamed the Shuchite, one of Jobs three friends, mentioned in that ſtory: but both of him, and Job himſelf, and the Land of Hus, we ſhall ſpeak more at large when we come to Arabia. More certainly remarkable for a Fort of great ſtrength and uſe, for the commanding of the Countrey; recovered from the Turks in the time of Baldwin the ſecond, by digging with incredible labour through the very rock upon which it was ſeated.

As for the fortunes of this part, after the Tribes on that ſide of Jordan were led Captive into Aſſyria, and the kingdom of Damaſcus ſubverted by Tiglagh-Phalaßer; it followed the fortune of the Babylonian, and Perſian Empires, together with which it came to the Macedonian Kings of the race of Seleucus. In the declining of which houſe it was conquered (or at the leaſt the greateſt part thereof) by Alexander the ſecond king of the Jews, of the race of the Maccabees; but loſt again for the moſt part in the time of Hircanus the ſon of Alexander; yet afterwards made up the greateſt part of the kingdom of Chalcis, poſſeſſed by Ptolemy the ſon of Mennæus, in the beginning of Herods greatneſs: who dying, left it to Lyſanias his eldeſt ſon, murdered about ſeven years after by Marc. Antonie, on the ſuggeſtions of Cleopatra, who preſently ſeized on his eſtates. But Antonie and Cleopatra having left the Stage, Lyſanias a ſon of the murdered Prince entreth next upon it, by the permiſſion of Auguſtus. During whoſe time Zenodorus, Lord of the Town and territory of Paneas, farming his demeſnes, and paying a very great rent for them, not only ſuffered the Trachonites to play the Robbers, and infeſt the Merchants of Damaſcus; but received part of the booty with them. Auguſtus, on complaint hereof, giveth the whole Countrey of Trachonites, Batanea, Gaulonitis, and Auranitis, to Herod the Aſcalonite, before created King of Jewrie; that by his puiſſance and power he might quell thoſe Robbers, and reduce the Countrey into order: Leaving unto Lyſanias nothing but the City of Abila (of which he was the natural Lord) whereof and of the adjoining territory, he was afterwards created Tetrarch, by the name of the Tetrarch of Abilene, mentioned Luke 3. Nor did Herods good fortune end in this. For preſently on the death of Zenodorus, not long after following, Auguſtus gave him alſo the deſtrict of Paneas (of which we ſhall ſpeak more when we come to Galilee) which with the Countries formerly taken from Lyſanias, made up the Tetrarchie of Philip his youngeſt Son; affording him the yearly Revenue of 100 Talents, which make 37500 l. of Engliſh money. On Philips death, his Tetrarchy was by Caius Caligula, conferred on Agrippa the Nephew of Herod by his ſon Ariſtobulus; whom he had alſo dignified with the title of King; after whoſe death, and the death of Agrippa Minor, who next ſucceeded, his eſtates eſcheated to the Romans, and have ſince had the ſame fortune with the reſt of Paleſtine.

3. GALILEE.

GALILEE is bounded on the Eaſt with Batanea, and part of the half Tribe of Manaſſes on that ſide of Jordan; on the Weſt, with the Sea-coaſt of Phœnicia, on the Mediterranean: on the North, with Anti-Libanus; on the South, with Samaria. So called, as ſome ſay, from Geliloth a Phœnician word, ſignifying as much as borders; becauſe the bordering Countrey betwixt them and the Jews.

The Countrey not ſo large as that on the other ſide of the River, but far more fertile; naturally fertile of it ſelf, every where producing excellent fruits without much pains to the Husbandman, and ſo well cultivated in old times, that there was hardly any waſt ground to be found in it. Thick ſet with Cities, Towns, and Villages in the time of Joſephus, and thoſe ſo populous and rich, that the ſmalleſt Village in it is affirmed by that Authour, to comprehend no fewer than 15000 Inhabitants. A number beyond all parallel if reported rightly, and not miſtaken in the tranſcripts. The people from their childhood very ſtout and warlike, not daunted for fear of want, or dread of penury: which ſeconded by their vaſt, and almoſt incredible numbers, made them experimentally known for a tough piece of employment, when ſubdued by Titus. And this, together with their zeal to the Jewiſh Religion, make it more than probable, that there was ſomething in them of the antient Iſraelites; and that they were not meerly of an Aſſyrian, either ſtock or ſpirit; but intermixt with ſuch remainders of the Tribes as had ſaved themſelves, either by flying to the Mountains, or hiding themſelves in Caves and Deſerts, or otherwiſe were inconſiderable for ſtrength and numbers; in the great tranſplantation of them made by Salmanaſſer. And in this I am more confirmed by their ſpeech or language, which was the ſame with that of the natural Jewes, differing no otherwiſe from it than in tone, and dialect; as our Northern Engliſh doth from that which is ſpoke in London: as appeareth by the communication which the Damoſel had with S. Peter, in the High-Prieſts Hall; in which ſhe plainly underſtood him, but ſo, that ſhe pronounced him for a Galilean. For had the Tranſplantation been ſo univerſal, as ſome think it was and that both ſick and ſound, old and young had been carried away, and none but Colonies of the Aſſyrians to fill up their places; it muſt needs be that thoſe New-comers would have planted their own language there; as the Saxons did on the extirpation of the Britans, on this ſide of the Severn. The like may be affirmed of the other Tribes on this ſide of Jordan, eſpecially Simeon and Dan, which either bordering upon Judah, or having their Lands and Cities intermingled with it, continued in great numbers in their former dwellings, under the Patronage or ſubjection of the Kings thereof.

Divided it was antiently into the Higher and the Lower. The higher ſo called from its ſituation more amongſt the Mountains, had alſo the name Galilea Gentium, or Galilee of the Gentiles. And that either becauſe it lay betwixt the Gentiles and the reſt of the Jewes; or becauſe a great part of it had been given by Solomon to the Kings of Tyre. But for what cauſe ſoever it was called ſo firſt, certain it is, it held this name unto the laſt; known by it in the time of the Apoſtles, as appeareth by S. Matthews Goſpel, Chap. 4. v. 15. The Lower Galilee is ſituate on the South of the other, memorable for the Birth and Education of our bleſſed Saviour, whom Julian the Apoſtata called, for this cauſe, in ſcorn, the Galilean: as for the ſame, the Diſciples generally had the name of Galileans impoſed upon them, till that of Chriſtian, (being a name of their own chooſing) did in fine prevail. Both, or the greateſt part of both, known in the New Teſtament by the name of Decapolis, or Regio Decapolitana, mentioned, Mat. 4. 25. Mark 7. 31. So called from the ten principal Cities of it, that is to ſay, 1 Cæſarea Philippi, 2 Aſer, 3 Cedes-Nephthalim, 4 Sephet, 5, Chorazim, 6 Capernaum, 7 Bethſaida. 8 Jotopata, 9 Tiberias, and 10 Scythopolis. By which accompt it ſtretched from the Mediterranean to the head of Jordan, Eaſt and Weſt; and from Libanus to the hills of Gilboa, North and South; which might make up a ſquare of forty miles. With reference to the Tribes of Iſrael, the whole Galilee was ſo diſpoſed of, that Aſer, Nephthali, and a part of the Tribe of Dan, had their habitation in the Higher; Zabulun, and Iſſachar in the Lower: according to which diſtribution we will now deſcribe them.

1. the Tribe of NAPHTHALI; was ſo called from NAPHTHALI the ſixth ſon of Jacob, begotten on Bilhah the handmaid of Rachel; of whom at their firſt muſter were found 53400 fighting men, and at the ſecond 44540 able to bear Arms. The land alotted to them lay on the Weſt-ſide of the River Jordan, oppoſite to the Northern parts of Iturea; where before we left: having on the Weſt, the Tribe of Aſer, and that of Zabulun on the South. Within which tract were certain Cities which they never conquered; and one which appertained to the Tribe of Dan: the chief of thoſe which were withholden by the Gentiles, being Chalcis, Abila, H[illegible]opolis, Cities accounted of as belonging to Cœle-Syria, where they have been ſpoken of already.

That which did appertain to the Tribe of DAN, lay on the North-Eaſt part hereof, confronting the moſt Northern parts of Iturea, as before was ſaid; where the Danites held one Town of moment, beſides many others of leſs note. And it ſeemed deſtined to this Tribe by ſome old preſage; the Eaſtern fountain of Jordan (which hath its original in this tract) being called Dan, at the time of the defeat which Abraham gave to Cherdorlaomer and his Aſſociates, hundreds of years before this Tribe had ever a poſſeſſion in it. Of which ſee Gen. 14. v. 14. The Town of moment firſt called Leſhem, by ſome Writers, Laiſh: afterwards ſubject or allied to the Kings of Sidon, and upon ſtrength thereof made good againſt

Galilee. thoſe of Naphthali; but taken by ſome Adventures of the Tribe of Dan. Of whom it is ſaid, Joſuah 19. 47. That finding their own Country too little for them, they went up and fought againſt Leſhem, which they took and called DAN. Accompted after this exploit, the utmoſt bound Northward of the Land of Canaan, the length thereof being meaſured from Dan in the North, unto Beerſheba in the South; remarkable for one of the Golden Calves, which was placed here by Jeroboam, and for the two ſpring-heads of Jordan, riſing near unto it. When conquered by the Romans, it was called Paneas, from a fountain adjoyning of that name: which, with the Territory about it, after the death of Zenodorus, who held it of the Roman Empire, as before is ſaid, was given by Auguſtus Cæſar unto Herod the Great; and by him at his deceaſe to Philip his youngeſt Son, with the Tetrarchy of Ituræa and Trachonitis. By him repaired and beautified, it was called Cæſarea Philippi, partly to curry favour with Tiberius Cæſar; partly to preſerve the memory of his own name; and partly to diſtinguiſh it from another Cæſarea ſituate on the ſhore of the Mediterranean, and called Cæſarea Paleſtina: and being ſo repaired by him, it was made the Metropolis of that Tetrarchy. Mentioned by that name Mat. 16. 13. when S. Peter made that confeſſion or acknowledgement of his Lord and Maſter, That he was CHRIST the Son of the living God. By King Agrippa, who ſucceeded him in his eſtates, in honour of the Emperour Nero, it was called Neronia. But that, and the adjunct of Philippi, were of no continuance: the Town being called Cæſarea Panea in the time of Ptolemy; and ſimply Paneas, as before in the time of Saint Hierome. Of this Cæſarea was that woman whom our Saviour cured of the bloudy Flux, by touching but the hem of his garment: who in a pious gratitude of ſo great a mercy, erected two Statuas in this place, repreſenting CHRIST, and her ſelf kneeling at his feet; remaining here entire till the time of Julian the Apoſtata, by whoſe command it was caſt down, and a Statua of his own ſet up in the place thereof, miraculouſly deſtroyed by a fire from Heaven. The City being at that time, and long time before an Epiſcopal See. Of leſs note there were, 1 Haleb, and 2 Reccath, both ſituate in the confines of it. And not far off the ſtrong Town and Caſtle of 3 Magdala, (the habitation as ſome ſay of Mary Magdalen) where the Phariſees deſired a Sign of our Saviour Chriſt, as it is ſaid Mat. 15. 39. 16. 1. the ſame, or ſome place near unto it, being by S. Mark (reporting the ſame part of the Story) called Dalmanutha. Chap. 8. 10, 11. But whether this Caſtle did antiently belong to theſe Danites, or thoſe of Naphthali, or to the half Tribe of Manaſſes beyond the River, I am not able to determine.

Of thoſe which were in the poſſeſſion of the Tribe of NAPHTHALI, the Cities of moſt eminent obſervation were, 1 Hazor, or Axor, by Junius and Tremelius called Chatzar, the Regal City and Metropolis of all the Canaanites: memorable for the Rendez-vous of 24 Canaanitiſh Kings in the War with Joſuah; by whom it was taken notwithſtanding, and burnt to aſhes. But being afterwards re-built it became the Regal Seat of Jabin the King of the Canaanites, who ſo grievouſly for the ſpace of 20 years, afflicted Iſrael; till vanquiſhed by Deborah and Barak. Deſtroyed in that war and repaired by Solomon, it continued in ſo good eſtate in our Saviours time, that it was then one of the ten Cities of Decapolis: in being ſtill, but known by the name of Antiopia. 2 Capernaum, ſeated on the River Jordan, where it falleth into the Sea of Galilee; of which Countrey it was accompted the Metropolis, in the time of our Saviour, with whoſe preſence and preaching often honoured, and one of the principal of the Decapolitans. Some marks of its former greatneſs it retained when S. Hierome lived, who confeſſeth it to be a Town of ſome good capacity; but ſo decayed in the time of Breidenbech and Brochardus, that it conſiſted but of ſix poor Fiſhermens Houſes. 3 Hamath, ſo called from Hamathi the ſon of Canaan, planted in theſe parts; a Town of ſuch eſteem in the elder times, that it was reckoned one of the Gates of the Land of Canaan; and therefore called in Scripture, Introitum Hamath, or the entrance of Hamath; as Numb. 34. 8. Joſ. 13. 5. Judg. 3. 3. &c. Miſtaken by S. Hierome for another of the ſame name in Syria, by the Greeks and Romans after them, called Epiphania. And in this I ſay he is miſtaken; Epiphania being placed by Ptolemy two degrees more Eſtward than Cæſarea Philippi, the moſt Eaſtern City of all Galilee; and two degrees more North than that, though the moſt Northern City of all Paleſtine. The ground of this miſtake we have ſeen before. Won by the Syrians of Damaſcus, it was again recovered to the Crown of Iſrael by Jeroboam the ſecond, the Son of Joas: and after added by the Romans (as were Scythopolis, Pella, Gadara, and ſome other of the Cities of this tract) unto Cœle-Syria. 4 Kadeſh, to difference it from others of the ſame name, called Kadeſh-Naphthalim, high ſeated on the top of an Hill, as is ſaid Ioſ. 20. 7. the King whereof being taken and ſlain by Ioſuah, it was made one of the Cities of Refuge, and given to the Levites. Moſt memorable for the birth of Barac, who diſcomfited Siſera, Lieutenant of the Hoſt of Iabin before mentioned, in the infancy of the Iewiſh State; one of the ten Cities of Decapolis, in the time of the Romans; and an Epiſcopal See in the firſt ages of Chriſtianity. 5. Riblah, watered with the fountain of Daphnis, a little Riveret, which hereabouts falleth into Iordan: to which City, as ſome ſay (but I think erroneouſly) Zedechias the unfortunate King of the Iews was brought Priſoner unto Nebuchadnezzar, who cauſed his children to be ſlain before his face; and then put out his eyes. But this I look on as an Errour in them that ſay it, the ſcæne of this ſad Tragedy being by Ioſephus laid in Riblatha (or Riblah) a City of Syria; the ſame which in ſucceeding times had the name of Antioch. And certainly Ioſephus, who was ſo long governour of both the Galilees, cannot be conceived to be ſo ignorant of the State of this Province, as to traſfer that bloudy execution to a City of Syria, if it had been acted in this Countrey. Nor can I think that this Riblah, none of the greateſt Towns in the Tribe of Napthali, ſhould be capable of the Court and train of that mighty Monarch; eſpecially for ſo long a time, as he is ſaid to have attended in that place, the ſucceſs of his forces then before Hieruſalem, and the diſpoſal of the State when the Town was taken. 6 Saphet, another of the Decapolitan Cities, ſtrongly if not impregnably ſeated; one of the ſtrongeſt Fortreſſes of the Weſtern Chriſtians, as it was after their expulſion, of the Turks and Saracens: who from hence waſted and ſubdued all the neighbouring Countrey, as far as to the very Sea; the only place, not of this Countrey only, but of all the Eaſt, in which the Jews (who poſſeſſed a third part of this Town) have any ſhew or ſhadow of a Common-wealth. 7 Bethſomes, mentioned Joſ. 15. 38. made tributary unto thoſe of this Tribe; though otherwiſe poſſeſſed by the Canaanites who held out againſt them. 8 Carthan, or Kiriathaim, ſituate near the Mountain which in following times was called Mons Chriſti, becauſe much frequented by our Saviour; who here made choiſe of his Apoſtles, as is ſaid Mark 3. 13. and where he alſo made that Divine Sermon, recited in the 5, 6, and 7 Chapters of S. Matthews Goſpel. 9 Maſoloth, a place of great ſtrength, but forced by Barcludes General of the Armies of the Kings of Syria, in the time of the Maccabees. 10 Cinnereth, a ſtrong City; after called Genneſareth; whence the Lake or Sea of Tiberias, neighbouring near unto it, is ſometimes called the Lake of Geneſareth, as Luke 5. 1. &c.

2. The Tribe of ASER, was ſo called from Aſer, the eighth ſon of Jacob, begotten of Zilpha the hand-maid of Leah: of whom at their firſt muſter when they came out of Egypt, were found 41500 perſons, able to bear Arms, all above 20 years of age; and at the ſecond muſter when they entered the Land of Canaan 53400 fighting men of the new increaſe. The portion of the Land alotted for their habitation was plentifull in wine, oyl, and wheat, with great ſtore of Balſam; extending from the Coaſt of Sidon, to Ptolemais, 30 miles in length; and from the Mediterranean Eaſtward, to the Tribe of Naphthali, ſome twelve miles in breadth. And though they never were of power to reduce the maritime Cities of Ptolemais, Tyre, Sarepta, and Sidon, under their command: yet had they in this narrow compaſs many beautiful Cities, and Towns of note; which they were quietly poſſeſſed of, till their ſubjugation by the Kings of Aſſyria.

The principal of thoſe, and others which have ſince been founded. 1 Aphek, memorable for the great ſlaughter there made of the Syrians, when beſieged by Benhadad; of whom 100000 were ſlain by the Iſraelites under the leading of Ahab, and 27000 killed by the fall of the Wall. 2 Gabala, mentioned by Ptolemy amongſt the mid-land Cities of Phœnicia; but belonging properly to this Tribe; one of thoſe twenty which were offered by Solomon unto Hiram, and upon his refuſal peopled by the Iſraelites. Fallen to decay, it was afterwards re-built and ſtrongly fortified by Herod the Great. 3 Giſcala, a Town of great ſtrength and conſequence, the birth-place of John or Jehochanan, one of the three ſeditious in Hieruſalem when beſieged by Titus, where he did more miſchief than the Enemy. Attempting to betray this City to the power of the Romans, he gave the Tyrians an opportunity to be Maſters of it, by whom it was burnt unto the ground. But being re-built by the Authority of Joſephus, then Governour of Galilee for the Jews, it was afterwards yielded to Titus upon compoſition. 4 Cana, for diſtinction ſake called Cana-Major, to difference it from another of that name in the Lower-Galilee, affirmed for the dwelling of that woman, whoſe daughter Chriſt delivered of an evil Spirit, called by S. Matthew a woman of Canaan, chapter 15. a Syro-Phœnician by S. Mark, chap. 7. the Syro-Phœnicians of this Tract, being originally of the race of Canaan, as was ſaid before. 5 Hethlan, or Cethlan, the furtheſt City of the North; as 6 Meſſal, or Maſhael, to the South, of the Tribe of Aſer. Of later date there are 7 Thoron, a ſtrong piece built by the Chriſtians on the Hills near Tyre, to hinder the excurſions of the Turks, when they held that City. Situate in a pleaſant and fruitfull ſoil, of great importance in the wars of the Holy Land, and giving name to the noble family of the Lords of Thoron: one of which being Conſtable to King Baldwin the third, lyeth buried in the Chappel adjoining to it; a curious piece of work-manſhip, and dedicated by the name of the bleſſed Virgin. 8 Belfort, ſo named from the ſtrength and beauty of it; ſeated on the high grounds near the River Naar: and memorable for the great repulſe which Saladine the victorious King of the Turks received before it: being forced to raiſe his ſiege with diſhonor and loſs, on the coming of the Chriſtian Armies. Some other Forts here of the ſame erection as 9 Montfort, and 10 Mount-Royal (or Caſtrum Regium) belonging to the Dutch Knights (of whom more hereafter) and by them valiantly defended againſt the Infidels.

3. The Tribe of ZABULON, was ſo called from Zabulon the tenth ſon of Jacob by his Wife Leah: of whom there muſtered near Mount Sinai, 57400 able men; and 65000 at their ſecond muſter, when they came into Canaan. Their Territory lay on the South of Aſer and Nephthalim, and the North of Zabulon; extending from the Lake of Tiberias, to the Mediterranean.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1 Jokneham, the King whereof was ſlain by Joſuah, and the City given unto the Levites. 2 Zabulon, or the City of men, a ſtately and magnificent City, till burnt to the ground by Ceſtius a Roman Preſident. 3 Cana-Minor, ſo called to difference it from the other in the Tribe of Aſer, the birth-place of Nathaniel, and as ſome ſay of Simon Zelotes: memorable for the marriage, at which our Saviour wrought his firſt miracle, of turning water into wine. Called in S. Johns Goſpel Cana of Galilee. 4 Berſabe, ſtanding in the border betwixt both Galilees, and therefore ſtrongly fortified by Joſephus againſt the Romans. 5 Dothan, where Joſeph found his brethren as they fed their flocks; and where the Prophet Eliſha ſtrook blind the Syrians, who beſieged him in it. 6 Bethſaida, ſituate on the Sea of Galilee, one of the ten Cities of Decapolis, the birth-place of Peter, Andrew, and Philip; but moſt renowned for the miracle and preaching of our Lord

Galilee. and Saviour. 7 Nazareth, now a ſmall village, ſeated in a vale betwixt two hills, not far from Ptolemais or Acon; upon one of which two hills it was formerly built; where ſtill are to be ſeen the ruins of many Churches, here founded by the Chriſtians; it being in the flouriſhing times of Chriſtianity, an Arch-biſhops See. Of great eſteem, for being, if not the birth-place, yet the habitation of the Virgin Mary; who was here ſaluted by thoſe joyfull tidings by an Angel, as ſhe ſate in her chamber. Of which Chamber it is ſaid in the Popiſh legends, that it was after the Virgins death had in great reverence by the Chriſtians; and remained in this Town, till the Holy Land was ſubdued by the Turks and Saracens, Anno 1291. Then moſt miraculouſly tranſported into Sclavonia; but that place being unworthy of the Virgins Divine preſence, it was by the Angels carried over into the Sea-coaſt of Italy, Anno 1294. That place alſo being infeſted with theeves and pyrats, the Angels removed it to the little Village of Loretto, where her miracles were quickly divulged: inſomuch that Paul the 2d. built a moſt ſtately Church over this Chamber, and Xiſtus the fifth made the Village a City. And thus we have the beginning of our famous Lady of Loretto. Here did our bleſſed Saviour ſpend a great part of his life before his Baptiſm; from whence both he and his Diſciples had for many years, the name of Nazarites. 8 Jotopata, ſtrongly ſeated on the top of a Mountain, near the Lake of Genneſareth; fortified by Joſephus in the war with the Romans, but after a long ſiege taken by Veſpaſian, and in it Joſephus the Hiſtorian, Chief Governour of the City, and of both the Galilees. 9 Tiberias, raiſed out of the ground by Herod the Tetrarch, and named thus in honor of Tiberius Caſar. Situate in a fruitfull ſoil, on the edge of the Lake, which afterwards took the name of Lake or Sea of Tiberias: this City being held to be the greateſt of the Lower Galilee, and the Metropolis of the Decapolitan Region. In this City it was that our Saviour CHRIST called S. Matthew from the receipts of the Cuſtom-houſe; and near unto it that he raiſed the daughter of Jairus. 10 Bethulia, more within the Land, ſeated on an high Hill, and of very great ſtrength, as appears by the ſtory of Judith and Holofernes. 11 Japha, a place of like ſtrength, but forced by Titus; who in the fury of the ſtorm ſlew in it above 15000 perſons, and carried away with him 2000 Priſoners. 12 Sephoris, or Sipphora the habitation of Joachim and Anna, the Parents of the bleſſed Virgin; fortified with ſtrong walls by Herod the Tetrarch, who made it his Regal ſeat for the Lower Galilee. Before that time it had been made by Gabinius one of the five Juridical Reſorts for the Paleſtinians: after that, not without great difficulty forced by Veſpaſian; and is nothing now but a Caſtle known by the name of Zaphet, or Saffet. The ordinary Reſidence, for the moſt part, of the Turkiſh Sanziack who hath the Government of this Province; and lately, if not ſtill, of the Emirs of Sidon; Faccardine the late Emir having been made the Sanziack of it, before his falling off from the Turks. Not far off is Mount Tabor; famous for the transfiguration of our Saviour, for a ſumptuous Chappel built on the top of the hill in memory of it, by the Empreſs Helen, mother of Conſtantine the Great: and for the Fountain of the brook Chiſon, which preſently divided into two ſtreams, runneth Eaſtward with the one to the Sea of Tiberias, and Weſtward with the other to the Mediterranean.

4. The Tribe of ISSACHAR, is ſo called from Iſſachar the ninth ſon of Jacob, by his wife Leah, of whom were found at the firſt muſter 54400 fighting men, and 64300 at the ſecond muſter. Their lot, in the partition of the land amongſt the Tribes, fell betwixt Zabulun and the Half Tribe of Manaſſes on this ſide of Jordan, North and South; extending from that River to the Mid-land Sea. A territory not ſo well repleniſhed with ſtrong and eminent Cities, as was that before; nor yielding ſo much matter of obſervation in the courſe of buſineſs.

Thoſe of moſt note in it, 1 Tarichea, on the ſide of the Lake, about eight miles from Tiberias, of great ſtrength both by Art and Nature; as witneſſed the notable reſiſtance which Veſpaſian found when he beſieged it, by whom taken with great difficulty and incredible ſlaughter. 2 Caſhion, a City of the Levites. 3 Remeth, called alſo Jarmuth, another City of the Levites; where the Hills of Gilboa take beginning, and then range as far as the Mediterranean Weſtward, and the City of Jezreel towards the Eaſt. 4 En-hadda, near which Saul being diſcomfited by the Philiſtims, ſlew himſelf for grief; or elſe for fear of falling into the hands of thoſe mercileſs Enemies, againſt whom he had ſo often returned victorious. 5 Naim, on the Banks of the River Chiſon, where CHRIST raiſed to life the Widows ſon. 6 Haphraim, or Apharaim, on the Banks of the ſame River alſo. 7 Endor, of chief note for the Witch with whom Saul conſulted; and the diſcomfiture of the Midianites by Gedeon, who periſhed at Endor, and became as Dung of the Earth, ſaith the Royal Pſalmiſt. 8 Dabarath, one of the Cities of Refuge. 9 Arbela, not far from the Cave of the two Theeves, which ſo greatly infeſted Galilee in the time of Herod. And 10 of a later date the Caſtle of Pilgrims (Caſtrum Peregrinorum in Latine Writers) built by Raymond Earl of Tholouſe, and after fortified by the Templers, for the ſecurity of ſuch as travelled to the Holy Land; and for long time the Magazine or Store-houſe of the Weſtern Chriſtians: now called Tortora. Situate on the ſhores of the Mediterranean near a ſpacious bay; on the North-ſide whereof Mount Carmell, deſcribed already.

As for thoſe Galileans which ſucceeded in the place of theſe Tribes, they were for the moſt part originally ſuch as were ſent hither by Salmanaſſer to inhabit there, when the Iſraelites were led away into endleſs thraldom; but intermixed with ſome Remainders of the ten Tribes as was ſaid before. And yet as if they had been wholly of the ſame extraction, with the reſt of the Samaritan Nations, they were as much deſpiſed as the Jews, (as witneſſeth that ſcornfull by-word, Can there any good come out of Galilee?) as the others were: though theſe as Orthodox in Religion as the Jews themſelves.

Samaria.

In which ſo zealouſly affected, that neither threats nor force could make them offer ſacrifice for the health of the Roman Emperours, whom they looked on as the enemies of their Law and liberty. Brought under the command of the King of Jewry by the Maccabæans, and with the reſt of that Kingdom beſtowed on Heroe by the Romans. Left by him at his death to Herod, ſirnamed Antipas, the ſecond of his ſons then living, with the Title of Tetrarch, which he enjoyed till the death of our Saviour: and on his deprivation (being baniſhed to Lyons in France by the Emperour Caligula) beſtowed upon Agrippa his Brothers ſon, the firſt King of the Jews ſo named. Under him and his ſon Agrippa the ſecond, it continued till the general revolt of the Jewiſh Nation. Subjected by the ſword of Titus to the power of the Romans, it hath ſince followed the ſame fortune with the reſt of Paleſtine.

4. SAMARIA.

SAMARIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Jordan; on the Weſt with the Mediterranean Sea; on the North, with Galilee; and on the South, with Judæa. So called from Samaria, the chief City of it, of which more hereafter.

The Countrey interchangeably compoſed of Fields and Mountains, excellent and good for tillage, and full of trees, yielding variety of fruits: watered both with the dew of Heaven, and many freſh ſprings which the Earth affordeth it; occaſioning thereby abundance of of graſs, and conſequently of Milch-beaſts exceeding plenty. Heretofore very wealthy, and no leſs populous, but now famed for neither.

The people for the moſt part, were originally the deſcendents of thoſe Aſſyrians, whom Salmanaſſar ſent hither to poſſeſs the dwellings of the Captive Iſraelites. Gentiles at firſt, till better inſtructed by the Lions whom God ſent amongſt them, and after by the Prieſts ſent hither by the Kings of Aſſyria; they entertained the five Books of Moſes, and out of them learned the manner of the God of the Land, 2 Kings 17. Further than this they would not go, rejecting all the reſt of the ſacred Canon; and no ſtrict obſervers of this neither. And though at firſt they ſo embraced the worſhip of God, as that they ſtill adhered to the Gods of the Nations, where before they dwelt, as Nergal, Aſhimah, Nibban, Tartak, and the reſt of that rabble, mentioned 2 Kings 17: yet they were ſoon taken off from thoſe impieties, and became zealous in the worſhip of one only God; erronious chiefly in the place which was deſtined to it. The wicked policy of Jeroboam the Son of Nebat, was as natural to them, as if they could not have poſſeſſed his Eſtates without it: and therefore would not ſuffer their people, to go up to Hieruſalem to worſhip, as the Law required. More pious in this than their Predeceſſors, that they erected no Golden Calves in Dan, and Bethel, or any other parts of their Dominions: though to divert the people from the Temple of God, they would have a Temple of their own. Mount Garizim, and the Temple there (of which more anon) as ſacred unto them, as that of Solomon to the Jews. Schiſmatical enough in this, but not Idolatrous and Schiſmatical too, as the others were; yet ſo conceited of themſelves, and their own perfections, that they imagined themſelves defiled by any company but their own. If therefore they had viſited any of their neighbour Nations, at their return, they uſed to ſprinkle themſelves with urine: but if by negligence, or the neceſſity of buſineſs, they had touched any not of their own Sect, they drenched themſelves, cloaths and all, in the next fountain. But in this the Jews cryed quittance with them, not ſo much as eating or drinking with them, nor having with them any kind of commerce or dealing, as appeareth John 4. 9. but loading them, on the other ſide, with all the bitterneſs of reproach and hatred. There are two manner of people (ſaith the ſon of Sirach) which mine heart abhorreth, and the third is no people: they that ſit on the Mountains of Samaria, the Philiſtims, and the fooliſh people that dwell at Sichem. Eccleſ. 50. And this continued to the times of our bleſſed Saviour; whom when the Jews endeavoured to reproach with their heavieſt calumnies, they could find out none ſo great, as to ſay that he was a Samaritan and (which they thought came all to one) a man that had converſe with Devils and familiar ſpirits.

Of theſe there were ſome Sects alſo amongſt the Jews, 1. The Doſitheans, ſo called from Doſitheus or Doſthai, ſuppoſed to be the firſt Prieſt who was ſent hither by the King of Aſſyria: agreeing with the Jews in Circumciſion, and the Sabbath, and the doctrine of the Reſurrection (in which laſt they differed from the common Samaritan, who was a Saduce in that point) but differing from them in ſome points of as ſignal conſequence. For they rejected the writings of all the Prophets, as not θεοπνευστοί, inſpired by the holy Ghoſt; they ate of nothing that had life, like the Pythagoræans; abſtained from marriage, like the Eſſenes; and in the point of Sabbath-keeping out-went the Phariſees; it being reſolved upon amongſt them, that in what poſture ſoever a man was found on the Sabbath-day-morning, in the ſame he was to continue without alteration the whole day after. 2. The Sebvians, ſo called from Sebva or Sebviah one of the Companions of that Doſthai; who though they kept all the publick Feſtivals, as the Jews and the other Samaritans did, yet they kept them not at the ſame time, transferring the Paſsover to Auguſt, the Pentecoſt to Autumne, and the feaſt of Tabernacles to the time of the Paſsover; not ſuffered for that cauſe to worſhip in the Temple of Garizim. 3. The Gortheni, who kept the ſame Feſtivalls, and obſerved the ſame times of thoſe ſolemnities, as the Law required; but kept only one of the ſeven dayes of thoſe great Samaria. great Feſtivals, and laid by the reſt, as dayes of ordinary labour. In other points not differing from the other Samaritans, who though at firſt poſſeſſed of all the land belonging to the ten Tribes of Iſrael, were yet reduced at laſt to a narrow compaſs: ſhut up betwixt Galilee and Judea, within the antient territories of the Tribe of Ephraim, and the other half Tribe of Manaſſes, on this ſide of the water.

1. The half Tribe of MANASSES on this ſide of Jordan, was ſituate betwixt Iſſachar on the North, and the Tribe of Ephraim on the South, extending from the Mediterranean, to the banks of that River. In which the places of moſt conſequence and conſideration, 1. Beth-ſan, environed almoſt with the land of Iſſachar, ſituate near the banks of Jordan, where it beginneth again to ſtreighten and be like it ſelf, having been almoſt loſt in the Sea of Galilee: firſt called Nyſa, and ſo called by Bacchus or Liber Pater the founder of it, in memory of his Nurſe there buried; but the children of Manaſſes not being able to expell the natives out of it, as in other places, gave it the name of Beth-ſan, or the houſe of an Enemy. Afterwards when the Scythians invaded thoſe parts of Aſia, and compelled ſome of the Jewes to ſerve them againſt the reſt (whom notwithſtanding their good ſervice they put all to the ſword) they new-built this City: called therefore by the Gracians, Scythopolis or the City af Scythiaus; and by them reckoned as a City of Cæle-Siria memorable in the old Teſtament for the hanging of the dead bodies of Saul and his Sons on the walls hereof, by the barbarous Phyliſtims; in the time of our Saviour for being the greateſt of all the Decapolitan Region; as afterwards in the flouriſhing times of Chriſtianity, for being the See of an Arch-biſhop: now nothing but a deſolate village, and an heap of rubbiſh out of which many goodly Pillars, and other pieces of excellent Marble are often digged. 2. Terzah, uſed by the Kings of Iſrael for their Regal Seat; till the building of Samaria, and the Removal of it thither. 3. Acrabata, the Territory whereof called Acrabatena, was afterwards made one of the ten Toparchies of Judæa. 4. Thebes, not far from Samaria, where the Baſtard Abimelech was wounded with a Stone which a woman threw at him from the Wall; and perceiving his death to be drawing on, commanded his Page to ſlay him, that it might not be ſaid he periſhed by the hands of a Woman. 5. Ephra or Hophra, in which Gideon dwelt: near whereunto there ſtood an Altar, conſecrated to Baal, defaced by Gideon; and not far off, the fatal Stone on which Abimilech ſlew 70 of his Brethren. An Heatheniſh cruelty, and at this day practiſed amongſt the Turks. 6. Aſophon, an ignoble Village, made famous only for the great and notable defeat which Ptolemy Lathurus here gave to Alexauder the King of the Jewes; which victory he uſed with ſo great barbarity, that he ſlew all the Women as he paſſed along, and cauſed young Children to be ſod in Caldrons. 7. Bezeck, the City of that bloudy Tyrant Adoni-Bezeck, whoſe ſtory (touched upon before) ſee at large in Judges Chap. 1. By Joſephus it is called Bala; and ſeemeth to be the place in which Saul aſſembled the chief ſtrength of Iſrael and Judah to the number of 33000 men, for the relief of Jabeſh-Gilead then diſtreſſed by the Ammonites. 8. Jezreel, the royal City of Ahab and the Kings of his race, ſituate on the foot of the Mountains of Gilboa; So near unto the borders of Iſſachar, that ſome have placed it in that Tribe. Memorable in ſacred ſtory for the ſtoning of Naboth by the procurement of Jezabel, and the breaking of Jezabels neck, by the command of Jehu. A City which gave name to the plains adjoyning, called the valley or Plains of Jezreel, but by the name of Campus Magnus in the Book of Maccabees, lib. 1. cap. 12.) extending from Scythopolis to the Mediterranean: famous for the great and many battels which have been fought in it, as namely of Gideon againſt the Midianites, of Saul againſt the Philiſtims, of Ahab againſt the Syrians, of Jehu againſt Jehoram, and finally of the Chriſtians againſt the Saracens. 9. Megiddo, unfortunately obſervable for the death of the good King Joſiah, ſlain hereabouts in a battel againſt Pharoah Neco, King of Egypt; and before that, of Ahaziah King of Judah, who received his deaths-wound at Gaber, a Town adjoyning: when purſued by Iehu. 10. Dora, or Dor, as the Scripture calls it, on the Mediterranean, not far from the Caſtle of Pilgrims in the Tribe of Iſſachar. A very ſtrong and powerfull City, and therefore choſen by Tryphon for his City of Refuge, who having firſt treacherouſly taken, and barbarouſly murdered Ionathan the Maccabæan, after he had received 200 talents for his Ranſom; and no leſs villanouſly ſlain Antiochus the ſixth of Syria, his Lord and Maſter, whom he ſucceeded in his Throne: was by Antiochus the ſeventh, with an Army of 120000 foot, and 8000 horſe, beſieged in this City, and moſt deſervedly put to death. 11. Caſarea, antiently called the Tower of Straton, from Straton a King of the Zidonians; new built by Herod, and by him not only beautified with a large Theatre and Ampitheatre, both of poliſhed Marble, but with a fair and capacious haven, which with incredible charge and pains he forced out of the Sea. And having in twelve years brought it to perfection in honour of Druſus Caſar, Son-in-law of Auguſtus, he cauſed one of the chief Towers thereof to be called Druſus; the City it ſelf to be called Caſarea Paleſtina. The ſtatelineſs and magnificence of which City (when firſt built by Herod) he that liſts to ſee, may find the ſame deſcribed at large by Ioſephus the Iew, in the 15th. Book of Antiq. cap. 13. In this City was Cornelius baptized by S. Peter; Here did S. Paul plead in defence of Chriſtianity, before Feſtus then the Roman Preſident; and finally, here Herod Agrippa was ſmitten by an Angel, and devoured by worms, after his Rhetorical Oration, which his Paraſites called the voice of God and not of man. The Metropolis of all Paleſtine, when one Province only; as afterwards of Paleſtina Prima, when by Conſtantine, or ſome of his ſucceſſors, cantoned into three: the firſt Biſhop hereof being ſaid to be that Cornelius, whom S. Peter here initiated in the faith of CHRIST. 12. Antipatris, another City of Herods rods building in the place, where Kepharſalamai, mentioned 1 Maccab. 7. 31. had ſometimes ſtood, who in honour of his Father Antipater, gave it this new name. Near hereunto did Judas Maccabæus overthrow a part of Nicanors Army: and not far off, the Mountain where Abdia, the Steward of Ahab, hid the hundred Prophets, whom he preſerved againſt the fury of Jezebel: Finally, to this City it was that Saint Paul was conveyed by the command of Lyſias, to ſave him from the Jews; who lay in wait to deſtroy him.

2. The Tribe of EPHRAIM was ſo called from Ephraim, the ſecond and youngeſt Son of Joſeph; of whom were muſtered in the Deſarts 45000 fighting men, and 32500 in the Land of Canaan: where their lot fell betwixt this half Tribe of Manaſſes, on the North, and the Tribes of Dan and Benjamin, upon the South; extending from the River Jordan, to the Mediterranean.

Places of moſt conſideration, 1 Saron, on the Mediterranean, to the South of Antipatris, mentioned Acts 9. 35. and giving name unto that fruitfull Valley, which reacheth from Cæſaræa Paleſtinæ, as far as Joppa. 2 Lydda, upon the ſame ſhores, where Saint Peter (virtute Chriſti, non ſua) cured Æneas of the Palſey. By the Gentiles it was called Dioſpolis, or the City of Jupiter; but by the Chriſtians in the time of the holy wars, it had the name of Saint Georges: partly from a Magnificent Temple which the Emperour Juſtinian there erected to the honour of that bleſſed Martyr; but principally from an opinion which they had amongſt them, that he ſuffered Martyrdome in that place. An opinion founded on miſtakes, firſt of a Cenotaphium, or an empty Monument, erected in this City to preſerve his memory, for the grave in which he was interred: the other, in taking the word Paſſio, uſed in the Martyrologies, for the place of his ſuffering, which is meant only of the ſtory or celebration. But howſoever they intituled it by the name of Saint Georges, as was ſaid before, and made it on that account alſo an Epiſcopal See. 3 Ramatha, or Aramathea, a City of the Levites, ſuppoſed to be the dwelling of Joſeph, who begged of Pilate the bodie of CHRIST. 4 Helon, or Aialon, a City of the Levites alſo; by ſome placed, and perhaps more fitly in the Tribe of Dan, and there we ſhall hear further of it. 5 Themnath-Chares, given by the Iſraelites to Joſuah, who enlarged the ſame, and made it a ſtrong and goodly City; honoured with the Sepulchre of that brave Commander, one of the nine Worthies of the world; and afterwards made one of the Præfectures of Judæa, by the name of Thamnitica. 6 Adaſa, or Adarſa, where Judas Maccabæus with 3000 Jews, overthrew the Army of Nicanor. 7 Jeſleti, called otherwiſe Pelethi, which gave name and birth unto the Pelethites, part of Davids guard, under the governance of Benajah. 8 Silo, ſituate on the top of a lofty mountain; the receptacle of the Ark, till taken and carried thither by the Philiſtims. 9 Michmas, the habitation of Jonathan, one of the Maccabæan Brethren, ſituate in the middle way from Samaria to Hieruſalem, now called Byra. 10. Naioth, where Saul propheſied. 11 Bethoron, a City of the Levites, beautified by Solomon, but made more famous by the great and notable overthrow, which Judas Maccabæus here gave to Lyſias. 12 Pirhathon, on the Mountain Amalec, the City of Abdon the Judge of Iſrael. 13 Sichem, called alſo Sichor, the habitation in the old times, of Sichem the Father of that Hamor, who deflowred Dinah the Daughter of Jacob; the City for that cauſe deſtroyed by Simeon and Levi: repaired again, and afterward by Abimelech levelled with the ground; a third time re-edified by Jeroboam the Son of Nebat, and a third time ruined by the Kings of Damaſcus: yet notwithſtanding theſe blowes it was of good eſteem in the time of our Saviour, who abode in it two days, and converted many. Memorable for Jacobs Well which was very near it, more for its neighbourhood to Mount Garizim, where the bleſſings were to be read to the people (of which ſee Deut. 11. 27. & Joſ. 8. 23.) and where afterwards was built a magnificent Temple for the uſe of the Samaritan Nation, at the coſt and charge of Sanballat a great Prince amongſt them. Who having married his Daughter to Manaſſes, brother of Jaddus the High Prieſt of the Jews, and fearing he would put her away, to avoid the ſentence of excommunication, which he was involved in for that match: promiſed him, that if he would retain her, he would build a Temple anſwerable unto that of Hieruſalem, and make him the High Prieſt thereof, which was done accordingly. But this Temple had not ſtood above two hundred years, when deſtroyed by Hyrcanus the Maccabæan; the place remaining notwithſtanding a place of worſhip, as appeareth Joh. 4. 20. As for the City of Sichem or Sichor; it was by the Grecians called Nicopolis, afterwards made a Colony by the Emperour Veſpaſian, who cauſed it to be called Flavia Cæſaræa: of which Colony was that renowned Juſtin Martyr. 14 Samaria, the Metropolis of the kingdom of Iſrael, founded by Omri one of the Kings thereof, on the top of the Mountain Samron, (which overlooketh all the bottom as far as the Sea-coaſt) whence it had the name. A ſtately and magnificent City, conjectured by Brochardus, who had traced the antient ruines of it, to be bigger than Hieruſalem. Deſtroyed by the Aſſyrians when they carried away the Ten Tribes; but afterwards repaired again, and again beaten to the ground by the Sons of Hyrcanus above-mentioned. But Herod the Great, who was pleaſed with the ſituation of it, did again re-edifie it, in more ſtately manner than before; as appeareth by the great ſtore of goodly Marble pillars, and other carved ſtones, in great abundance found amongſt the rubbiſh: and having re-built it to his mind, incloſed it with a ſtrong wall, and beautified it with a goodly Temple; in honour of Auguſtus Cæſar, whom the Greeks call Sebaſtos, he cauſed it to be called Sebaſte. Memorable after this new erection from the Sepulchre of Iohn Baptiſt, and being Judæa. made the Metropolis of Paleſtina Secunda, (by conſequence an Arch-Biſhops See) now nothing but a few cottages filled with Grecian Monks.

Nor were the Samaritans themſelves (ſo called from this their principal City) leſs ſubject to the viciſſitudes and change of fortune, than the City was. Deſcended for the moſt part from the Aſſyrians, and ſuch other Nations, as were ſent thither to fill up the empty places of the Captive Tribes: but called Cutheans by the Iews, either becauſe moſt of them were of Cuth, a Region of Perſia, as Ioſephus telleth us, which is now called Chuzeſtan; or elſe by way of ſcorn, for Chuſites, as being of the poſterity of the accurſed Cham, by Chus his ſon. Having imbraced the Law of Moſes, they began to think better of the Iews than the other Nations, but fitted their affections to the change of times: it being the obſervation of the ſaid Ioſephus, that as often as the Iews were in any proſperity, then they called them Cozins, and would be of the ſame Nation with them; but when their fortunes were on the declining hand, then they were ſtrangers which came thither out of forein Nations, and no kin at all. Nor doth he wrong them in that Character. For when Alexander the Great had granted the Iews a releaſe of the ſeventh years tribute, the Samaritans deſiring the like exemption, pleaded for themſelves Ἑβραῖοι μὲν εἶναι, &c. that they indeed were very Hebrews, though it pleaſed the Sidonians to call them Sichemites. But when Antiochus raged againſt them with fire and ſword, the Samaritans ſent Letters to him, diſclaiming all relation to thoſe of Iudah, and challenging their deſcent from the Medes and Perſians. Nor were they content only to diſclaim all kinred, with the Iews, in the times of trouble, when any perſecution roſe againſt them for the Law of God; but did them alſo all ill Offices, and joined with their Enemies to their deſtruction: eſpecially after the Iews had refuſed to admit of their aſſiſtance, in the re-building of the Temple; which after that they hindred with great malice, and no leſs perverſeneſs. But the fortune of the Iews did at laſt prevail, the whole Nation being ſubdued by Hyrcanus the Maccabaan, who deſtroyed their Schiſmatical temple alſo, and levelled Samaria it ſelf to the very ground. After this ſubject to the Iews, who poſſeſſed themſelves of moſt of their Cities, and contracted them into a narrower compaſs than they were in formerly: but ſtill ſo hated and contemned, that nothing was able to appeaſe that inveterate malice, which they had conceived; till both Nations were extirpated in the time of Adrian, and made to ſeek their dwellings in other Countries, Made afterwards a Province of the Roman Empire, by the name of Paleſtina Secunda; ſucceſſively ſubject with the reſt, to the Perſians, Saracens, and Turks, who do now poſſeſs it.

JUDÆA.

JUDÆA.

J*UDÆA*, is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Dead Sea, and the River Jordan; on the Weſt, with the Mediterranean; on the North, with Samaria; and on the South with Idumaa. So called from the Jews, or people of the Tribe of Judah, who after their return from the Captivity of Babylon, communicated the name of Jew unto all the Nation, as they did that of Judaa, to this part of the Countrey.

The Soyl of the ſame nature with that of Samaria, before deſcribed; but that it is more ſwelled with Hills, and more ſtored with Rivers, though of no great fame. And therefore we ſhall ſay no more, as to the general character and deſcription of it; but look on the particular parts as it ſtood divided betwixt the Philiſtims, the Tribes of Dan, Simeon, Judah, and Benjamin.

And firſt, the PHILISTIMS commanded all the Sea-coaſts from the South of Phœnicia, to the North of Idumaa; or from the Caſtle of Pilgrims, to the City of Gaza, taking both in the accompt. But Joppa, and all the Towns on the North of that, being taken in by the Iſraelites; they held no more than ſix Towns of any importance, with the Countries and Territories adjoining to them: but thoſe ſo populons and ſtrong, that by their own power, and the aſſurance of the Edomites, and the reſt of their neighbours, not well affected to the Tribes, they kept them under harder terms, and lay more heavy on them than all the Canaanites together; as will appear when we ſum up the ſtory and ſucceſſes of their affairs.

In the mean time let us ſurvey the Countrey which was holden by them, notwithſtanding all that could be done againſt them by the Kings of Iſrael: and therein we ſhall find worth our obſervation, 1 Geth, or Gath, the birth-place of the huge Giant Goliah, ſlain by David; as alſo of many others of the like Giantine proportion, ſlain by Davids worthies. Deſtroyed by David, or rather ſlighted and diſmantled, it was re-built by Rhehoboam the ſon of Solomon; but again razed by Ozias King of Judah, who found the Philiſtims there garriſoned, but ill neighbours to him, and finally laid waſte by Hazael the King of Syria. Not much regarded after that, though it kept the name of Gath in Saint Hieroms time; till in theſe laſt Ages Fulk the King of Hieruſalem erected there a new Caſtle, from the antient ruines. From hence as I conceive, the Idol Dagon, ſo much worſhipped by the Philiſtims, was by the Syrians and Phœnicians called Ater-Gatis; and not from Gatis a Syrian Queen, as is ſaid by many. 2. Accaron, on the South of Gath, of great wealth and power, and one that held out notably againſt the Danites and Judaans. Much ſpoken of in the holy Scriptures, but for nothing more than their Idolatrous worſhip of Bel-zebub, that is to ſay, the Lord of Flies: ſo called by the Jews, either in contempt of the Idolatries committed to him, or becauſe of that great multitude of flies which attended his Sacrifices, whereof ſome ſay, the Temple of Hieruſalem was wholly free. But whatſoever he was, or for what cauſe ſo named, certain it is that he was here had in eſpecial honour, and therefore called in Scripture the god of Accaron: and hither Ahaziah the King of Iſrael ſent his meſſenger, to enquire of this Idol, concerning his health. 3 Aſhdod, (by the Grecians called Azotus) memorable in the Holy Writ for the Temple of Dagon, into which the Ark of the Lord was brought; that Idol falling down before it, as not able to ſtand upright when the Ark was ſo near. Near to this Town was Judas Maccabaus overcome and ſlain by Bacchides, Lieutenant to Demetrius the King of Syria, and not long after the Town it ſelf was taken by Jonathan the brother of Judas, who put the Citizens to the ſword; and burnt all ſuch as fled into the Temple of Dagon, together with the very Idol, conſumed in the ſame fire with the Idolaters. Re-built by Gabinius a Roman General: in the time of Chriſtianity it was made an Epiſcopal See; and continued a fair Village till the dayes of S. Hierom. 4 Aſcalon, on the Sea-ſide alſo, ſaid to be built by Aſcalus a noble Lydian, employed by his King in a war againſt the Syrians; but this very uncertain. One of the chief and ſtrongeſt Cities of the Philiſtims, of great note amongſt the Gentiles for a Temple dedicated to Dirceto, the Mother of Semiramis, here worſhipped in the form of a Mer-maid: and for another of Apollo, wherein Herod the father of Antipater, and Grandfather of Herod the Great (from his birth in this City called Herod the Aſcalonite) is ſaid to have ſerved as the Prieſt. It had in the firſt times of Chriſtianity, an Epiſcopal See; and in the courſe of the holy wars, was beautified with a new wall, and many fair buildings by King Richard the firſt. 5 Gaza, more within the Land, on the River Beſor; a fair and ſtrong Town, formerly called Aſſa, from whence perhaps the name of Gaza was derived by the Heathens; or elſe it was ſo called by the Perſians, in regard that Cambyſes here laid up the Treaſure which he had provided for the war of Ægypt, the word Gaza, in the Perſians language, ſignifying treaſures. Of which Cambyſes it is ſaid by Pomponius Mela, cùm armis Ægyptum peteret huc belli opes & pecuniam invehi curavit. After which it was made the Receipt or Treaſury, in which the Perſians had the tributes of the Weſtern Provinces; whence all riches had in time the name of Gaza. Once Caleb took it, but not able to hold it againſt the Philiſtims, he again deſerted it. Deſtroyed by Alexander the Great, and re-built again, it made notable reſiſtance againſt the Maccabees; till at laſt forced by Simon, the brother of Judas, who liked the place ſo well, that he intended to have made it his place of reſidence: not ſo decayed in length of time, but that it was a goodly City in the days of Brochardus; And it is ſtill the beſt of all the coaſt, built on a hill encompaſſed with rich and pleaſant vallies; the building low and mean, as in other places; but ſome of them adorned with Pillars of fair Parian marble, digged out of the remaining ruins. 6 Maioma, the Port Town of Gaza, but made a City of it ſelf by Conſtantine, by whom called Conſtantia: but reſtored again by Julian unto thoſe of Gaza, and by him commanded to be called Gaza Maritima.

Theſe were the chief places holden by the Philiſtims, a ſtrong and Giantlike race of men, ſuch as the Scripture calls by the name of Anak, or the Sons of Anak. Originally deſcended from Caſluhim, and Copthorim, of the race of Mizraim the ſon of Cham: as appeareth both by the common conſent of antient Writers, and plain Texts of Scripture, Jerem. 47. 4. and Amos 9. 7. Theſe being ſetled firſt in the borders of Egypt and Idumæa, where the Caſluhim gave name unto the Province of Caſiotis, and the Mountain Caſias; proceeded North-wards and ſubdued the Avim, a Canaanitiſh people, planting themſelves in their habitations, as is ſaid expreſly Deut. 2. 23. Here Abraham found them in his time, and here they were when Iſaac went down to Gezar. Governed at firſt by one King whom they called alwaies by the name of Abimelech, as the Egyptians theirs by the name of Pharaoh; ſometimes by five, according to the number of their principal Cities; but ſtill united in the times of approaching dangers; Too ſtrong to be ſubdued by the Tribes of Iſrael, they made head againſt them, and maſtered them at ſeveral times, for above a 150 years, Tyrannizing over them, till broken by Sampſon, and for a time kept off by Samuel. Recovering again, they vanquiſhed the Iſraelites in the time of Saul, whom they diſcomfited, and hanged his dead body barbarouſly on the Walls of Bethſan. But David a more fortunate Prince, overthrew them in many ſet battels, and at length took the Town of Gath, one of the ſtrongeſt Towns they had; and by that means ſo weakned them, that they durſt not ſtir all the time of David, nor a long while after. Beginning to be troubleſom in the daies of Ozias King of Judah, they were warred on by him, their Army overthrown, Ita and Amnia, two of their ſtrong Ports, took and razed; and the Town of Gath again diſmantled. In the time of the Idolatrous Achaz, aſſociating with the Edomites, (who evermore attended the deſtruction of Judah) they brake out again; took Bethſemes, Ajalon, Timnah, and ſome other Towns; carried away many Priſoners, and ſlew much people. But the good King Ezekiah made them pay dear for it, taking from them the greateſt part of their Countrey, betwixt Gath and Gaza. Which notwithſtanding, they recovered to ſo great eſteem, that the whole Countrey had from them the name of Paleſtine. But broken by degrees by the Maccabæans, they loſt both their power and reputation, paſſing in common eſtimate as a part of Jewry; the fortunes of which it followed for the times ſucceeding.

2. The Tribe of DAN, is ſo called from Dan the fifth ſon of Jacob, by Bilhah the hand-maid of Rachel, of whom were muſtered at Mount Sinai 62700 fighting men; and 66400 at the ſecond muſter, in the Land of Canaan: where their lot fell betwixt Ephraim, on the North; Simeon, on the South; the Tribe of Benjamin, on the Eaſt; and the Mediterranean on the Weſt.

Places of moſt note in it 1 Joppa (now called Jaffa) once a famous Mart-town, and the onely Haven to Judæa in foregoing times: the Town, where Jonah took ſhip to fly unto Tarſhiſh; where Peter raiſed Dorcas from death to life; and where he lying in the houſe of one Simon a Tanner, was in a viſion taught the converſion of the Gentiles. This City they report to have been built before the flood. And here they ſay reigned Cepheus, whoſe Daughter Andromeda was by Perſeus delivered from a ſea-monſter; ſome of whoſe bones the people uſed to ſhew to ſtrangers, even to the flouriſhing of the Romans. Juſt as our Citizens of Coventry and Warwick, ſhew the bones of the Dun-Cow of Dunſmear heath, and the bones of I know not what Giant, ſlain by Guy Earl of Warwick. In the time of the Maccabees it was garriſoned by the Syrians; who having in the Port a Fleet of good power and ſtrength, invited 200 of the chief Citizens to go aboard with them, and there drowned them all: for which their Fleet was fired by Judas, and ſuch as did eſcape the Fire fell upon his Sword. Twice taken by the Romans, and the ſecond time burnt unto the ground: new walled, and fortified with Towers, by King Lewis of France, in the year 1250, the Holy Wars then drawing to their final end. Now nothing ſtanding of it but two little Turrets where are certain Harquebuſſes for defence of the Haven; none of the beſt; defended from the South and Weſt winds with eminent Rocks, but expoſed to the fury of the North; which makes it more unſafe than the open Seas, when inraged by Tempeſts. Not much frequented by the Merchants, who trade here but for Cottons onely; and hold their Factory not far off in a Town called 2 Rama, by the Moors called Ramula, ſituate in a ſandy plain on the riſing of a little Hill; built of free-ſtone, but the ſtreets thereof narrow, and the Houſes contemptible. More beautifull in the ruines of ſome Chriſtian Churches, and a Monaſtery built by Philip the Good of Burgundy, where the Houſe of Nicodemus ſtood; than in any of the remaining of edifices. 3 Jamnia, near Joppa, where Judas burnt the reſt of the Syrian Fleet, the flame whereof was ſeen to Hieruſalem, 240 furlongs off: mentioned by Ptolemy, and in the times of Chriſtianity an Epiſcopal See; now not diſcernable in the ruines. 4 Cedar or Cedron, fortified againſt the Jews by Cendebæus one of the Lieutenants of Antiochus, who hereabouts was overthrown by the Maccabees. 5 Modini, a ſmall Town, but honoured with the birth and ſepulchre of thoſe Maccabæans; the Sepulchre being ſeven Marble Pillars of ſo great an height, that they ſerved as a mark for Seamen. 6. Gibbethon, in the Countrey called Makats, a City of the Levites, but afterwards poſſeſſed by the Philiſtims; at the ſiege whereof Nadab, the ſon of Jeroboam King of Iſrael, was ſlain by Baaſha, who ſucceeded; and Omri choſen King on the death of Zimri. 7 Cariathjarim, where the Ark of the Lord was kept for 20 years, in the houſe of Aminadab; that is to ſay, from the ſending it home by the Philiſtims, till brought to Hieruſalem by David. 8 Beth-ſemes, to which the Ark was brought by a yoke of Kine, turned looſe by the Philiſtims: for irreverent looking into which, there were ſlain by the immediate hand of God, no fewer than 50070 perſons of this City. 9. Tſarah, near which is a fountain, called the Fountain of Ethiopia, becauſe Philip there baptized the Ethiopian Eunuch. 10. Caſpin, taken with great ſlaughter by Judas Maccabæus. 11. Lachis remarkable for the death of Amaziah King of Judah. 12. Ajalon, a City of the Levites alſo, touched upon before in the Tribe of Ephraim, in the borders whereof we find it ſituated; and therefore by ſome Authors reckoned to the ſame Tribe, and by ſome to the other, in the valley whereof the Moon is ſaid to have ſtood ſtill at the prayers of Joſuah, as the Sun did over the City of Gibeon: the motions of the Heavens being ſtaid, that he might have the more time for execution on the Kings of the Canaanites. To this Tribe alſo belonged the Town and Territory of Dan, or Leſhem, afterwards called Cæſaria Philippi, in the Tribe of NEPHTHALIM; whereof we have there ſpoke already.

3. The Tribe of SIMEON was ſo called from SIMEON the ſecond Son of Jacob, by his firſt Wife Leah: of whom were found at the firſt muſter 59300 able men: and but 22200 at the ſecond muſter, when they came into Canaan. Where they enjoyed but a ſmall Territory to themſelves, their lot falling amongſt the Philiſtims, whom they were not able to expell: and therefore they were taken into the Tribe of Judah, where they were permitted to enjoy ſome Towns and Villages, intermixed with that more potent Tribe. Afterwards, in the reign of King Hezekiah, ſome of them poſſeſſed themſelves of Gedar, belonging to the Children of Ham; and others paſſing Southwards into Idumæa, ſmote the Amalekites which inhabited in the Mountains thereof, and dwelt in the places by them conquered. But for all this, wanting room for themſelves and their Children many of them undertook the Office of Scribes or Scriveners, and diſperſed themſelves amongſt the reſt of the Tribes, teaching their children to write, and giving themſelves to the employment of Publick Notaries: God herein verifying the curſe which Jacob had denounced on Simeon, that he ſhould be divided and ſcattered in Iſrael. But for their fixed habitation which fell to them by lot, it lay betwixt Dan upon the North, and Idumæa on the South; the Tribe of Judah on the Eaſt, and the Philiſtims upon the Weſt.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Gerar, the Royal ſeat of the two Abimelechs, Kings of the Philiſtims, with whom Abraham and Iſaac had to do; and probably of ſome other of their Kings and Princes, till ſubdued by the Iſraelites. Situate in the South borders of Canaan, not far from the wilderneſſe of Beerſheba, but in a very healthfull air; called therefore Regio Salutaris in the times ſucceeding. 2. Siceleg, or Ziglag, belonging to the Philiſtims till the time of David, to whom given by Achiſh King of Gath, for his place of retreat, when perſecuted by Saul; from whom flying he lodged here all his goods and carriages: ſacked by the Amalekites, but the booty recovered from them ſpeedily by the diligence and good fortune of David. 3. Haiin; a City of the Levites. 4. Cariath-Sepher, that is to ſay the City of Books, ſeated within the bounds of Simeon, but belonging to Judah: which ſome hold to be the Univerſity or Academy of old Paleſtine. A City of the Levites alſo, and at firſt poſſeſſed by the Sonnes of Anak, or men of a Gigantine ſtature, but taken by Othoniel, the Son of Kenan, on the promiſe and encouragement which was given by Caleb, that whoſoever took it ſhould have his Daughter Achſah to Wife. Afterwards it was called Debir, Judg. 1. 11. known in the time of Saint Hierom by the name of Daema. 5. Chorma, conceived by ſome to be that place mentioned Numb. 14. 45. to which the Canaanites and Amalekites purſued thoſe of Iſraël. 6. Beer-ſheba, or Puteus juramenti; ſo called of the Wells of waters, and the Oath which was there ſworn betwixt Abraham and Abimelech, Gen. 21. 31. Memorable in the Scripture for the Grove which Abraham there planted; the wandring of Hagar thereabouts, when ſhe was caſt out of Abrahams houſe with her young ſon Iſmael; and the dwelling of Iſaac, for which cauſe called the City of Iſaac. Situate in the extreme South border of the Land of Canaan, the length whereof is often meaſured in the Scripture from this Town to Dan; and for that cauſe well fortified by the Weſtern Chriſtians, when they were poſſeſſed of this Country; as ſtanding on the borders of Idumæa, and the Deſarts of Arabia, in the way from Egypt.

4. The Tribe of JUDAH was ſo called from JUDAH the fourth ſon of Jacob, by his wife L[illegible]h: of whom there were numbered at the firſt general muſter taken near Mount Sinai, 76600 fighting men; and no fewer than 76500 at their entrance into the Land of Canaan. The greateſt Tribe, and therefore anſwerably fitted with the largeſt Territory: bordering on the Dead Sea, Eaſt; upon Simeon, Weſt; the Tribe of Benjamin on the North; and the Idumæans on the South. Comparatively large, with reference to the other Tribes; but otherwiſe unable to contain or feed thoſe infinite multitudes, without the extraordinary providence of Almighty God, which are recorded to be in it: King David muſtering 470000 fighting men of this Tribe alone; which was more than half the number found in the reſt of the Tribes. A Tribe which had a native ſoveraignty over all the others; the Scepter, the Legiſlative power, and the Worlds Meſſiah, being all promiſed unto this.

Places of moſt obſervation in it. 1. Arad, ſituate in the entrance of Judæa, in the way from the Wilderneſs of Edom. 2. Hebron, one of the antienteſt Cities of Canaan: the ſeat of Giants, called Anakim, or the ſonnes of Anak. This word Anak ſignifieth a chain worn for Ornament, and it

ſeemeth that this Anak enriched with the ſpoils of the enemies, wore a chain of gold, leaving both the cuſtom and name to his poſterity. We read the like of Manlius Torquatus in the Roman Hiſtories. This Town did Abraham buy for a burial-place for his dead; in which his Wife Sarah was firſt buried, and after her four of the Patriarchs. Adjoining to this Town is the plain of Mamre, where Abraham the Father of the faithfull, ſitting in his Tent, was viſited from Heaven by God in the ſhape of a man. Here David kept his Court before the winning of Hieruſalem; to this place came the Tribes to annoint him King over Iſrael; and hither came Abſalon, under the pretence of paying his vowes, to uſurp the kingdom of his Father. 3 Tecoa, the City of Amos the Prophet; and alſo that woman, who by the words which Joab put into her mouth, perſwaded the King to call Abſolon from exile. In the wilderneſs of this Tecoa, there aſſembled the Inhabitants of Moab, Ammon, and Mount Seir, to overthrow Juda. But the Lord being appeaſed by the publick Faſt, proclaimed and kept by Jehoſaphat and the people, ſowed diſſentions amongſt them. So that the children of Ammon and Moab ſtood up againſt the inhabitants of Mount Seir, utterly to ſlay and deſtroy them; and when they had made an end of the Inhabitants of Mount Seir, every one helped to deſtroy one another. 4 Cerioth, or Carioth, the birth-place of Judas, hence ſurnamed Iſcariot (or the man of Carioth) who betrayed our Saviour. 5 Jether, or Jutter, in the North border of this Tribe, towards Eleutheropolis, a City antiently of the Levites, and called in S. Hierom's time Jethica, and then altogether repleniſhed with Chriſtians, now nothing but the name remaining. 6 Mareſa, the native Soyl of the Prophet Michah, near whereunto firſt Aſa King of Judah diſcomfited the vaſt Army of Terah the Arabian or Ethiopian, conſiſting of above a Million of men; and afterwards Gorgias was overthrown by Judas Maccabæus. 7 Emaus, (after called Nicopolis) memorable for the third overthrow which Judas gave to the ſaid Gorgias; for our Redeemers ſhewing himſelf after his Reſurrection to Cleophas and an other of his Diſciples; and for the hot Bathes hereabouts, which gave the name of Salutaris to this part of Paleſtine. The Sovereign vertue of which waters Sozomen a Chriſtian, attributes to the waſhing of Chriſts feet in them, as he paſſed by at that time; but Joſephus, a Jew, aſcribes (as it is moſt likely) unto natural cauſes. 8 Haſor, or Chatſor, one of the frontier Towns towards Idumæa. 9 Odalla, or Hadullan, an antient and magnificent City, taken and deſtroyed by Joſuah, and long after much enlarged and beautified by Jonathan, one of the Maccabees. 10 Ceila, or Keila, where David ſometimes hid himſelf when he fled from Saul; by him delivered afterwards from the aſſaults of the Philiſtims. 11 Eleuthoropolis, or the Free City, not far from Hebron; a City of later date than any of Judah, mentioned by Ptolemy, and much remembred by S. Hierom. 12 Azecha, not far from Emaus, to which Joſuah followed Dabir the King of Eglon, and his four Aſſociates, whom he diſcomfited in the cauſe and quarrel of the Gibeonites; moleſted by them for ſubmitting to their common Enemy. Seated in the Valley of Terebinth, and of very great ſtrength, preſuming upon which, it revolted from Joram King of Judah, at the ſame time that Libna and the Edomites had revolted from him. 13 Beth-Sur, (or Beth-Sora) that is to ſay, the houſe on the Rock, ſo called from the ſituation on a rocky hill, one of the ſtrongeſt places of Judah: Fortified firſt by Roboam the ſon of Solomon, after by Judas Maccabæus, and finally made impregnable his brother Simeon. 14 Adoram, bordering on the Dead-Sea, beautified alſo by Roboam. 15 Zoar, in former times called Bela, but took his name from the words of Lot, alledging that it was but a little one, Gen. 19. 20. as the word Tſohor doth import, in whoſe eſcape it was preſerved, being otherwiſe one of the five Cities of the Region called Pentapolis, doomed unto deſtruction; the other four, Sodom, Gomorrha, Adama, and Seboim, being at the ſame time deſtroyed by fire and brimſtone. 16 Maſſada, frequently mentioned by Joſephus, as a place of great ſtrength both by Art and Nature, and as it is by him deſcribed (in the 7 Book de Bello Jud. cap. 28.) to be thought impregnable; and therefore made by Herod (in the time of his troubles) the place of Refuge, in which he diſpoſed of Mariamne his betroathed wife, her mother Alexandra, with divers honourable Ladies, and where they were preſerved in ſafety againſt all his Enemies, till he came armed with power from Rome, to diſlodge their forces, which was done accordingly. Firſt built by Jonathan the brother of Judas Maccabæus, as a ſure place of Refuge againſt the Syrians; and afterwards ſo eſteemed by Herod for the reaſon above mentioned, that he not onely much enlarged it, with all the requiſite additions of ſtrength and beauty, but built within the verge thereof, a magnificent Pallace. The whole environed with a wall of 7 furlongs compaſs, 12 cubits high, and 8 cubits broad, built of white ſtone, and ſituate on an high Mountain called Collis Achilla, waſhed on the Eaſt-ſide by the Dead Sea, or Lacus Aſphaltites, and by that ſecured; on the other ſide fenced with ſuch deep ditches, that it was a terrour to any man to look down into them: beſides which natural ſituation it was fortified by [illegible]rod with 27 Turrets, who left therein as in a place impregnable and inacceſſible, a Magazine of Armes, and warlike furniture, for an Army of 10000 men, all ſorts of victuals to ſuſtain them, and ground enough within the wall to yeeld corn ſufficient, when time and a long ſiege ſhould conſume thoſe victuals. A place of ſuch ſtrength and ſo great concernment, that it held out againſt the Romans (when Veſpaſian and his ſon Titus managed that great war) after all the reſt of Judæa had been conquered by them. 17 Libna, a ſtrong City ſeated in a Corner of Judah, running between the Tribes of Dan and Benjamin. This City revolted from Joram King of Judah, at the ſame time the Edomites did, and continued a free State, even as long as Judah continued a kingdom. 18. Ziph, in the wilderneſs, where David hid himſelf from the fury of Saul. Hither, when Saul purſued him, David came into his Camp (the watch being all aſleep) and took thence the Spear, and a Cruſe of Oyl, and departed. Abiſhai indeed would have killed him: but David, though he knew that Samuel had by Gods command abdicated Saul from the Kingdom, and that himſelf was appointed in his ſtead, would not touch him; but left him to the judgement of the Lord, whoſe anointed he was. 19 Bethlem, or (to diſtinguiſh it from another of this name in Zebulon ſo called) Bethlem-Judah, where Chriſt was born; and the Innocents ſuffered for him, before he had ſuffered for them. In this general Maſſacre of young Children, a ſon of Herods, which was at nurſe, was alſo ſlain; which being told unto Auguſtus, he replyed, he had rather be Herods Swine than his Son: His Swine being ſafe in regard the Jews were forbidden hog-meat; but his ſons frequently made away, upon fears and jealouſies. A Town for this cauſe had in great reſpect by the Primitive Chriſtians, beautified by Helen with a ſtately Temple, which yet ſtandeth entire; by the Lady Paula (much extolled by Saint Hierome) with ſome goodly Monaſteries, in one of which the body of that Father lyeth; and by the Weſtern Chriſtians, with a See Epiſcopal. 20. On the frontier of this Countrey towards the Philiſtims, was that ſtrong Caſtle which Herod repairing, called Herodium; ſeated on a hill, the aſcent unto which was made with 200 ſteps of Marble, exceeding fair and large. In this Countrey alſo are the hills of Engaddi, in a Cave of which David cut off the lap of Sauls garment; and all along the bottoms whereof were the Gardens of Balſamum or Opobalſamum, the trees of which, were by Cleopatra (at ſuch time as ſhe governed M. Antony, and the Eaſt) ſent for to be replanted in Heliopolis of Ægypt; and Herod, who durſt not deny them, plucked them up by the roots, and ſent them to her.

5. The Tribe of BENJAMIN took the name from the twelfth and youngeſt ſon of Jacob, by Rachel his beſt beloved wife, who died in that Child-birth: of which at the firſt muſter near unto Mount Sinai, were numbered 35000 able men; and at the ſecond muſter, when they entred the Promiſed Land, there were found of them fit for Arms, 45600 perſons. A Tribe in great danger to have been utterly cut off, by the folly of the men of Gibeah, all Iſrael arming againſt it as one man. For beſides thoſe that periſhed in the former battels; there fell in one day 25000 men that drew the ſword: the fury of the Conquerours after that great victory ſparing neither man nor beaſt, nor any thing that came to hand, and burning down all their Cities alſo which they came unto. So great an havock was there made even of innocent maidens, that when the edge of this diſpleaſure was taken off, there were not Wives enough found for thoſe young men which had eſcaped; The other Tribes having bound themſelves by ſolemn Oath, not to beſtow their Daughters on them: inſomuch that they were fain to provide themſelves of Wives of the Daughters of Jabeſh-Gilead, a Town of the Manaſſites beyond Jordan, which they took by aſſault; and of the Daughters of Shilo, whom they took by Stratagem. The whole ſtory ſee at large in the book of Judges, chap. 19. 20, 21.

The Territories of this Tribe lay betwixt thoſe of Ephraim on the North, and Judah on the South; having the Dead-Sea to the Eaſt, and the Tribe of Dan to the Weſt-ward of them. The chief of their Towns and Cities were, 1 Michmas, the incamping place of Saul, 1 Sam. 13. 2. and the abiding place of Jonathan, one of the Maccabæan brethren. 1 Macc. 9. 73. 2. Miſpah, famous in being the ordinary place of aſſembly, for the whole body of the people, in matters of war or peace: as alſo in that ſtanding in the midſt of Canaan, it was (together with Gilgal) made the ſeat of juſtice, to which Samuel went yearly, to give judgement to the people. 3. Gebah, the North border of the Kingdom of Judah toward Iſrael. 4 Gibeah, the Countrey of Saul, the firſt King: where the abuſing the Levites wife by the young men of this Town, had almoſt rooted the Tribe of Benjamin out of the Garden of Iſrael. 5. Ai, a great and ſtrong City, in the ſiege of which the Iſraelites were firſt diſcomfited: but when by the death of Achan, who had ſtoln the accurſed thing, the Camp was purged, Joſuah by a warlike ſtratagem ſurprized it. 6. Gibeon, the mother City of the Gibeonites, who preſaging the unreſiſtable victories of the Iſraelites, came to the Camp of Joſuah, and by a wile obtained peace of him and the People. Employed by them in hewing of wood, and drawing water for the uſe of the Tabernacle, after the fraud was made known unto them; called Nethinims, Ezr. 43. from Nathan, which ſignifies to give, becauſe they were given to the ſervice of the Tabernacle firſt; of the Temple after. Saul about four hundred years after, ſlew ſome of them; for which fact the Lord cauſed a famine on the Land: which could not be taken away till ſeven of Sauls Sons were by David delivered unto the Gibeonites, and by them hanged. This famine did God ſend, becauſe in the killing of thoſe poor Gibeonites, the Oath was broken, which Ioſuah and the Princes ſwore concerning them. In defence of thoſe Gibeonites it was that Ioſuah waged war againſt the Kings of the Canaanites; and ſtayed the motion of the Sun by his fervent prayers. 7 Iericho, deſtroyed by the ſound of Rams-horns, was not only levelled by Ioſuah to the ground; but a curſe inflicted on him that ſhould attempt the re-building of it. This curſe notwithſtanding, at the time when Ahab reigned in Iſrael (which was about five hundred years after the ruine of it) Hiel a Bethelite, delighted with the pleaſantneſs of the place, re-edified it. But (as it was foretold by Ioſuah) as he laid the foundation of the walls, he loſt his eldeſt Son; and when he had finiſhed it, and was ſetting up the Gates thereof, he loſt alſo the younger. It may be Hiel when he began this work minded not the propheſie; it may be he believed it not: peradventure he thought the words of Ioſuah, not ſo much to proceed from the ſpirit of propheſie, as from an angry and vexed heart; they being ſpoken in way of wiſh, or execration. And it is poſſible, it may be, he choſe rather to build the eternity of his name on ſo pleaſant and beautifull a City, than on the lives and iſſues of two young men. 8. Anathoth, the birth-place of the Prophet Ieremy, and the Patrimony of Abiathar the high-Prieſt, ſent hither by the command of Solomon, as to a place of his own, when depoſed from his office by that King. 9 Nob, called, 1 *Sam.*22. 19. the City of the Prieſts, deſtroyed by Saul, for the relief which Abimelech the high Prieſt had given to David; the Ark of the Lord then reſiding there. 10 Gilgal, upon the banks of Jordan, where Joſuah did firſt eat of the fruits of the Land, and kept his firſt Paſſover; where he circumciſed ſuch of the people, as were born during their wandring in the Wilderneſs; and nigh to which he ſet up twelve ſtones for a memorial to poſterity, that the waters of Jordan did there divide themſelves to give paſſage to the twelve Tribes of Iſrael. Here Agag King of the Amalekites, was hewn in pieces by Samuel, and here Samuel once every year adminiſtred Juſtice to the people. For being ſeated in the midſt of the Land of Iſrael betwixt North and South, and on the Eaſt-ſide of the Countrey near the banks of Jordan, it ſerved very fitly for that purpoſe: as Miſpah alſo did, which ſtood in the ſame diſtance, in regard of the length of the Land of Canaan, but ſituate towards the Weſt Sea, near the Land of the Philiſtims: uſed therefore interchangeably for the eaſe of the people. 11 Bethel, at the firſt called Luz, but took his new name in the remembrance of the viſion which Jacob ſaw here, at his going towards Meſopotamia, as is ſaid Gen. 28. 19. It ſignifieth the houſe of God, and was therefore choſen by Jeroboam, for the ſetting up of one of his Golden Calves; though thereby, (as the Prophet ſaith) he made it to be Beth-aven, the houſe of vanity, Oſee 4. 15. and 10. 5. For then it was a part of the Kingdom of the ten Tribes, and the Southern border of that Kingdom on the coaſt of Ephraim: but taken from it by Abjah the King of Judah, and after that accounted as a member of his Kingdom, till the deſtruction of it by the Chaldæans. Called with the reſt of thoſe parts, in the time of the Maccabees by the name of Aphærema, which ſignifieth a thing taken away; becauſe taken away from the ten Tribes, to which once it belonged, 1 Maccab. 11. 34. where it is ſaid, to have been taken from the Countrey of Samaria, and added unto the borders of Judæa. 12. Ramath, another place there mentioned, and ſaid to have been added to the Realm of Judah, having been formerly the South border of the kingdom of Iſrael; and therefore ſtrongly fortified by Baaſha, in the time of Aſa King of Judah. 13 Chadid, or Hadid, one of three Cities (the other two being 14. Lod, and 15. Ono) which were inhabited by the Benjamites after the Captivity. Deſtroyed in the wars with the Kings of Syria, and afterward re-built by Simon the Maccabæan.

But the chief glory of this Tribe, and of all the reſt, and not ſo only, but of all the whole world beſides, was the famous City of Hieruſalem; ſeated upon a rocky Mountain, every way to be aſcended with ſteep and difficult aſſents (except towards the North) environed on all other ſides alſo with ſome neighbouring Mountains, as if placed in the midſt of an Amphitheatre. It conſiſted in the time of its greateſt flouriſh of four parts, ſeparated by their ſeveral Wall, as if ſeveral Cities; we may call them the Upper City, the Lower City, the New City, and the City of Herod: all of them but the Lower City, ſeated upon their ſeveral Hills. Of theſe, that which we call the City of Herod, had formerly been beautified with the Houſes of many of the Prophets, as in our Saviours time with that of Mary the Mother of John Mark, mentioned Acts 15. 37. converted to a Church by the Primitive Chriſtians: the Weſtern part whereof was wholy taken up by the Palace of Herod (a wicked, but magnificent Prince) for coſt exceſſive, and for ſtrength invincible; containing Gardens, Groves, fiſh-ponds, places deviſed for pleaſure, beſides thoſe for exerciſe. Fortified with three Towers at the corners of it, that on the South-eaſt of the Wall, 50 Cubits high, of excellent workmanſhip, called Mariamnes Tower, in memory of his beloved but inſolent wife, raſhly murdered by him. Oppoſite to which on the South-weſt corner, ſtood the Tower of Phaſeolus, ſo called by the name of his brother, 70 Cubits high, and in form reſembling that ſo much celebrated Ægyptian Pharos: and on the North wall on an high Hill: the Tower of Hippick, exceeding both the reſt in height by 14 Cubits, and having on the top two Spires; in memory of the two Hippici, his very dear Friends, ſlain in his ſervice by the warrs.

2. On the South-ſide ſtood that part which was called the Old City, poſſeſſed if not built by the Jebuſites, and therein both the Mountain and Fort of Sion: but after called the City of David, becauſe taken by him; who thereon built a ſtrong and magnificent Caſtle, the Royal Court and Manſion of the Kings ſucceeding. In the Weſt part hereof ſtood the Tower of David; a double Palace built by Herod, the one part whereof he named Agrippa, and the other Cæſar, compoſed of Marble, and every where interlaid with gold; and not far off, the houſe of Annas and Caiaphas, to which the Conſpirators led our Saviour to receive his tryal.

3 That which was called the Lower City, becauſe it had more in it of the Valley, was alſo called the Daughter of Sion, becauſe built after it, and did in Majeſty and greatneſs exceed the Mother. For therein upon Mount Moriah, ſtood the Temple of Solomon (whereof more anon) and beewixt it and Mount Sion on another Hill, the Place which he built for his Wife the Daughter of Ægypt; and that which he founded for himſelf, from which by an high Bridge he had a way unto the Temple. Weſt hereof on a lofty rock over-looking the City, ſtood the Royal Palace of the Princes of the Maccabæans, re-edified and dwelt in by King Agrippa (though of Herods race:) and not far off the Theatre of Herods building, adorned with admiral Pictures, expreſſing the many Victories and Triumphs of Auguſtus Cæſar. In this part alſo ſtood Mount Acra, and on that once a Citadel built by Antiochus King of Syria, but raiſed up by Simon, one of the Maccabæan Brothers, becauſe it overtopped the Temple; the houſe of Helena Queen of Adiabene, who converted from Paganiſm to Judaiſm, had here her dwelling, and here died; and finally Herods Amphitheatre, capacious enough to contain 80000 people, whom he entertained ſometimes with ſuch ſhews and ſpectacles, as were in uſe amongſt the Romans. And in this part alſo on a high and craggy rock, not far from the Temple, ſtood the Tower of Baris, whereon the ſame Herod built a ſtrong and impregnable Citadel, in honour of Marc. Antonie, whoſe Creature he firſt was, called by the name of Antonius; having a fair and large Tower at every corner, two of them 50 Cubits high, and the other 70, afterwards garriſoned by the Romans, for fear the Iews preſuming on the ſtrength of the Temple, might take occaſion to rebel.

4. As for the New City, which lay North to the City of Herod, it was once a Suburb only unto all the reſt inhabited by none but mechanical perſons, and the meaneſt Tradeſmen; but after incompaſſed by Agrippa with a Wall of 25 Cubits high, and fortified with 90 Turrets. The whole City fenced with a wonderfull circumvallation on all parts thereof; having a Ditch cut out of the main Rock, as Joſephus an eye-witneſs writeth, ſixty foot deep, and no leſs than two hundred and fifty foot in breadth. Firſt built, ſay ſome, by Melchiſedeck the King of Salem; by the Jebuſites themſelves, ſay others: by whomſoever built, called at firſt Jebuſalem, afterwards Jeruſalem, with the change of one letter only: inlarged in time, when made the Royal ſeat of the Houſe of David, to the magnificence and greatneſs before deſcribed, till it attained unto the compaſs of ſixty furlongs, or ſeven miles and a half. Unconquered for the firſt four hundred years after the entrance of the Children of Iſrael: and when David attempted it, the people preſumed ſo much on the ſtrength of the place, that they told him in the way of ſcorn, that the blind and the lame which they had amongſt them (as the Text is generally expounded) ſhould defend it againſt him. But, as I think, the learned Mr. Gregory of Chriſt-Church in Oxon, hath found out a more likely meaning of the Text then this, who telleth us, that the Jebuſites by the blind and lame (as they knew well the Iſraelites called blind and lame) did underſtand thoſe Tutelar Idols, on whoſe protection they relied (as the Trojans did on their Palladium) for defence hereof: and then the meaning muſt be this, thoſe Gods whom you of Iſrael call blind and lame, ſhall defend our Walls. Why elſe ſhould David ſay (had they meant it literally) that his ſoul hated the lame and the blind? 2 Sam. 5. 8. or why ſhould the people of Iſrael be ſo uncharitable, as to ſay that the blind and the lame ſhould not come into the Houſe (or Temple of God) were it meant no otherwiſe? but notwithſtanding in theſe vain hopes, the Town was carried under the conduct of Joab, that fortunate and couragious Leader; and made the Royal ſeat of the Kings of Judah.

Proceed we now unto the Temple built by Solomon, in providing the materials whereof there were in Lebanon 30000 workmen, which wrought by the ten thouſand every moneth; 70000 Labourers, which carried burdens; 80000 Quarry men that hewed ſtones in the Mountains; and of Officers and Overſeers of the work, no leſs than 3300 men. The deſcription of this Stately Fabrick, we have in the firſt of Kings, chap. 6. 7. In the year of the World 2350 it was deſtroyed by Nebuchadnezzar at the taking of Hieruſalem: rebuilt again after the return from the Captivity; but with ſuch oppoſition of the Samaritans, that the Workmen were fain to hold their Tools in one hand, and their ſwords in the other, to repulſe if need were, thoſe malitious Enemies. But yet this Temple was not anſwerable to the magnificence of the former; ſo that the Prophet Haggi had good occaſion to ſay to the people, cap 2. v. 3. Who is left among you that ſaw this houſe in her firſt glory? is it not in your eyes as nothing, in compariſon of it? Nor fell it ſhort thereof only in the outward ſtructure, but ſome inward Additaments. For it wanted, 1. The Pot of Manna, which the Lord commanded Moſes to lay up before the Teſtimony for a Memorial, Exod. 16. 32, &c. 2. The Rod of Aaron, which only budded of all the Rods of the the Princes of Iſrael, and was commanded to be kept before the (Ark of the) Teſtimony, for a token againſt Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, Num. 17. 10. 3. The Ark of the Covenant, the making whereof we have Exod. 25. 10. and the placing of it in the Oracle, or Sanctum Sanctorum, 1 Kings 6. 19. 4. The two Tables of the Law, writ by Gods own finger, and by Moſes laid up in the Ark of the Covenant, Exod. 40. 20. and Deut. 10. 5. And 5. The fire of Sacrifice, which came down from Heaven, mentioned Levit. 9. 24. 2 Chron. 17. 1. which by the Prieſt was to be kept continually burning, never to go out. This ſecond Temple, partly becauſe it was grown ruinous, partly becauſe it ſeemed not magnificent enough, but principally to curry favour with the Jewes, Herod the Aſcalonite pulled down, and ſet up another in the place: making it not much inferiour (if at all) unto that of Solomon, but far ſuperiour to the other immenſa opulentia Templum, as Tacitus moſt truly called it. And this was it to which our Saviour did ſometimes vouchſafe his preſence.

But here we are to underſtand, that by the Temple is not meant the Fabrick only, or the houſe it ſelf; but alſo all thoſe ſeveral Courts with which encompaſſed, being four in number. That is to ſay, Atrium Sacerdotum, or the Prieſts Court, which was next unto the Temple; wherein ſtood the Brazen Altar for the daily ſacrifice, and the Laver for the waſhing of the Prieſts and the Sacrifice alſo: into which Court might none enter but the Prieſt alone. 2 Then there was Atrium populi, or the Peoples Court, ſeperated from the other by a Wall of three Cubits height, to which the people did repair to perform their ſacrifices, to ſay their prayers, and to make payment for their vowes. In the middle of this Court, did Solomon make a brazen Scaffold for the Kings his Succeſſors, 2 Chron. 6. 13. and afterwards in imitation of his Porch built before the Temple, were many Porches built about it, for the people to repair into in rainy weather; which gave to this whole Court the name of Solomons Porch, whereof ſee John 10. 23. Acts 3. 11. Without that ſtood 3. Atrium Fœminarum, or the Womens Court, divided from the other, as is collected out of 2 Chron. 20. 5. in the time of Jehoſaphat King of Judah; in which ſtood their Treaſury, or poor-mans Box, mentioned in the one and twentieth Chapter of Saint Lukes Goſpel: from whence this whole Court had ſometimes the name of Treaſury, as appeareth Jahn 8. 20. where it is ſaid that theſe words ſpake JESUS in the Treaſury, that is to ſay in the Womens Court, where the Treaſury or Alms-Box ſtood. Betwixt the laſt was an Aſcent of 15 ſteps, on which the Levites uſed to ſing thoſe 15 Pſalms, which do immediately follow the hundred & nineteenth Pſalm upon each ſtep one: from whence they had the name of Pſalmi Graduales, or Cantica Graduum, i.e. the Pſalms or Songs of degrees. And ſo far all was counted holy Ground, upon which none might tread but either natural Jews, or circumciſed Proſelytes, whom they called Proſeliti fœderis, as before was ſaid; or ſuch of the other Sex (not natural Jeweſſes) who having received all ouward initiations, had bound themſelves unto the obſervation of the Law of Moſes. 4. So was it not with the fourth and laſt Court, called Atrium Gentium, or the Court of the Gentiles; deſigned for the uſe of thoſe Gentiles, whom they called Proſelyti Portæ, bound only unto the keeping of the Precepts given to the Sons of Noah. For in that, as unſanctified ground (though counted part of the Temple alſo) did they permit a market of Sheep and Oxen, the ſale of Doves and Pigeons, and the Tables of money-changers, for the oblations of the people: ſtabling the poor Gentiles amongſt their Cattel, and ranking them with the worſt of men. And out of this Temple, or Court of the Temple, did CHRIST our Saviour caſt the buyers and ſellers, and overthrew the Tables of money-changers; aſſerting it to its primitive and original uſe, which was to be an houſe of prayer for all the Nations. This laſt Court ſeparated from the other by a wall of three Cubits height, adorned with certain pillars of equal diſtance, bearing this inſcription, Μηδεῖ ἀλλόφυλον ἐντὸς τοῦ Ἁγίου παριέναι, i.e. Let no Alien (or one that is no Jew) enter into the holy place; And to this wall it is that the Apoſtle alludeth, ſaying, He hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us (i.e. between the Jews and Gentiles) making one of twain, Epheſ. 2. 14, 15. inferring hereupon, that the Gentiles are no more ſtrangers and foreiners, but fellow-Citizens with the Saints, and of the houſhold of God, v. 19.

But to go forwards with the Temple, having continued in the glories to which Herod brought it, not above 85 years, it was finally deſtroyed by Titus, the ſon of Veſpaſian, in the 69 year after Chriſts nativity. At what time the Temple of Delphos was utterly overthrown by Earth-quakes, and Thunderbolts from Heaven; neither of them never ſince repaired, though much endeavoured. The concurrence of which two miracles evidently ſheweth, that the time was then come in which God would put an end both to the Jewes Ceremonies, and Heathen Idolatries, that ſo the kingdom of his ſon might be all in all. For this deſtruction of the Temple of Hieruſalem I may call a miracle, in regard it was done againſt the command of Titus; who was not only carefull to preſerve it, before his Souldiers had put fire to it, but did all that poſſibly might be to quench it. His reaſon was, Ῥωμαίων γὰρ ἔσεσθαι τὴν βλάβην, as Joſephus hath it, becauſe the loſs thereof would redound ſo highly to the prejudice of the Roman Empire, in being deprived of ſuch a glorious and magnificent ſtructure. But do he what he could with his utmoſt induſtry, there was no quenching of it till it was conſumed. And it adds ſomewhat to the marvel, that this ſhould happen on the tenth day of Auguſt, on which day the firſt Temple had been burnt by Nebuchadnezzar. And certainly it is worth the noting (I hope I ſhall not be accounted ſuperſtitious for this obſervation) to ſee how happy or unfortunate, one and the ſame day hath been found unto divers perſons. In the warrs betwixt the French and Spaniards for the Realm of Naples, Friday was obſerved to be very lucky to that great Captain Gonſalvo; he having on that day given the French many notable overthrows. Wedneſday is ſaid to have been fortunate to Pope Sixtus the fifth; for on that day he was born, on the ſame made a Monk; on that day created General of his Order; on the ſame made Cardinal, then choſen to be Pope, and finally on the ſame inaugurated. To Henry the ſeventh of England, Saturday was obſerved to be very fortunate in all his actions; as was the 24 of February unto Charls the fifth, on what day ſoever: for on that he came into the world, and in that he took King Francis Priſoner at the battell of Pavie, and on the ſame received the imperial Crown. But to return unto the Temple, we find that on the Sabbath, or Saturday it was taken by Pompey, on the ſame by Herod, and on that by Titus.

But go we forwards to Hieruſalem as now it ſtandeth, it lay in rubbiſh and unbuilt (after the deſtruction of it by Titus) till repaired by Adrian: and then the Temple not ſo much as thought of, till out of an ungodly policy, in the reign of Julian the Politick Enemy of the Church; who to diminiſh the infinite number of Chriſtians by the increaſe of the Iews, began again to build this Temple. But no ſooner were the foundations laid, but a terrible Earth-quake caſt them up again, and fire from Heaven conſumed the Tools of the Workmen, together with the Stones, Timber, and other materials. As for the City it ſelf, after the deſolation in it which was made by Titus, it was re-edified by the Emperour Ælius Adrianus, who named it Ælia, drave thence the Iews, and gave it to the Chriſtians. But this new City was not built in the place of the old. For within Mount Calvary is comprehended, which was not in the old before. As on the other ſide, a great part of Mount Sion, part of the City of Herod, and the Soyl where the New City ſtood, are left out of this: the ruins of the other ſtill remaining viſible, to ſhew the Antient greatneſs and magnificence of it. To look upon it then as it ſtands at preſent, it is now only famous for the Temple of the Sepulchre, built by Helena (whom moſt report to have been daughter to Coylus a Britiſh King) Mother to Conſtantine the Great. Much adoe had the good Lady to find the place where the Lords body had been laid; for the Iewes and Heathens had raiſed great hillocks on the place, and built there a Temple of Menus. This Temple being plucked down, and the earth digged away, ſhe found the three Croſſes, whereon our bleſſed Saviour, and the two Thieves had ſuffered. To know which of theſe was the right Croß, they were all carried to a woman, who had been long viſited with ſickneſs, and now lay at the point of death. The Croſſes of the two Thieves did the weak woman no good, but as ſoon as they laid her on the Croſs on which the Lord died, ſhe leaped up and was reſtored to her former health. This Temple of the Sepulchre, even at the firſt building, was highly reverenced and eſteemed, by the Chriſtians of theſe parts. And even until our daies, it is much reſorted to, both by Pilgrims from all the parts of the Romiſh Church, who fondly and ſuperſtitiouſly hope to merit by their journey; and alſo by divers Gentlemen of the reformed Churches, who travel hitherward, partly for curioſity, partly for love to the antiquity of the place, and partly becauſe their generous ſpirits imitate the the Heaven and delight in motion. Whoſoever is admitted to the ſight of this Sepulchre, payeth nine crowns to the Turkiſh Officers; ſo that this Tribute only is worth to the Grand Signeur, eighty thouſand Ducats yearly. The other building generally very mean and poor, if not contemptible. Built of flint ſtones, Low, and but of one roof; flat on the top for men to walk on, and fenced with battlements of a yard in height to preſerve them from falling: the under-rooms no better then vaults, where they repoſe themſelves in the heat of the day. Some houſes near the Temple of Solomon, and the Palace of Herod, adorned with Arches toward the Street, where the paſſenger may walk dry in a ſhowre of rain; but not many ſuch: nor any thing left but the ruins of the antient buildings. The whole circuit of it reduced to two or three miles; and yet to thoſe that take a ſurvey thereof from ſome Hills adjoyning, where the ruins are not well diſcerned from the ſtanding edifices, it affordeth to the eye no unpleaſing proſpect. And as the place is, ſuch is the people, inhabited for the moſt part by Artizans of the meaneſt quality, gathered together of the ſcum of divers Nations, the greateſt part conſiſting of Moors, and Arabians; a few poor Chriſtians, of all the Oriental Sects, which dwell there for devotion; and ſome Turks, who for the profit which they make of Chriſtians, are content to ſtay in it. Inſomuch that when Robert Duke of Normandy, being then not cured of his wounds, was carried into this City on the backs of ſome of this raſcal people; he called to a Gentleman of his, who was going for England, and bad him ſay, that he ſaw Duke Robert carried into Heaven on the backs of Devils.

Come we now to the Tribe of LEVI, though indeed not reckoned for a Tribe, becauſe not planted cloſe together as the other were; nor had whole Provinces to themſelves, but mingled and diſperſed amongſt the reſt of the people; having forty eight Cities aſſigned them for their habitation, proportionably taken out of the other Tribes. So was it ordered by the Lord, partly that they being ſet apart for his ſervice, might be at hand in every place to inſtruct the people; and partly to fulfill the Propheſie which he had ſpoken by Jacob, who had foreſignified to Levi at the time of his death, that he ſhould be devided in Jacob, and ſcattered in Iſrael. The like fortune he had propheſied of Simeon alſo; of the accompliſhment whereof, ſo far as it referred to him, and the diſperſion of his Tribe, we have ſpoken before. Now to make up the number of the twelve Tribes, Joſeph was divided into Ephraim, and Manaſſes; and the Levites were reckoned to belong unto that Tribe, within whoſe Territory, that City which they dwelt in, ſtood Their maintenance was from the Tenths or Tithes, the firſt fruits, offerings, and Sacrifices of the people: and as it is in the eighteenth of Ioſuah, v. the 17, The Prieſthood of the Lord was their Inheritance. There were of them four kinds. 1 Punies or Tirones, which from their childhood, till the five and twentieth year of their age, learned the duty of their offices. 2 Graduates λυτῇ, which having ſpent four years in the ſtudy of the Law, were able to anſwer and oppoſe in it; 3 Licenciates, ϖϑλυτῇ, who did actually exerciſe the Prieſtly function; And, 4 Doctors (Rabbins they uſe to call them) who were the higheſt in degree. For maintenance of whom, they had (as before is ſaid) the tithes, firſt-fruits, and offerings of all the reſt of the People; beſides the 48 Cities aſſigned for their habitation: which laſt, with the ſeveral Territories appertaining to them, extending every way for the ſpace of two thouſand Cubits; ſeems to have been a greater proportion of it ſelf, than any of the other Tribes (with reference to the ſmall number of Levites) had in their poſſeſſions. Then for the Tithes, there was not only a full Tenth ſet out of all kinds of increaſe; but ſuch an impoſition laid upon all ſorts of grain, as came to more than a ſixth part of the Crop it ſelf. For firſt, out of ſix thouſand buſhels (and ſo accordingly in all after that proportion) a ſixtieth part at leaſt, and that they termed the Therumah of the evil eye, or the niggards firſt fruits) was to be ſet forth at the firſt-fruits of the threſhing-floor; which was an hundred in the totall. Out of the reſidue being five thouſand and nine hundred Buſhels; the firſt Tithe paid unto the Levites, came to five hundred and ninety Buſhels; and of the reſidue, being five thouſand three hundred and thirty Buſhels, five hundred thirty and one were paid for the ſecond Tithe, unto the Prieſt, which miniſtred in the holy Temple; yet ſo, that ſuch as would decline the trouble, of carrying it in hand unto Hieruſalem, muſt pay the price thereof at the Prieſts own eſtimate. Laying which ſeveral ſums together, it appears demonſtrably, that of ſix thouſand Buſhels (& ſic de cæteris) there will accrew one thouſand two hundreds ſeventy and one Buſhels to the Prieſts and Levites; and but four thouſand ſeven hundred ſeventy and nine unto the Lord or Tenant; which is not fully a ſixt part, as was ſaid before. Then had they the firſt born of mankind and all unclean beaſts, redeemed at a certain rate; the firſt fruits of Wine, Oyl, and Wool, the firſt fruits of the Dough, and and of the firſtlings of clean Beaſts) their bloud being ſprinkled on the Altar, and the fat offered for a burnt-offering) the fleſh remained unto the Prieſt. They had alſo the meat-offerings, the ſin-offerings, the treſpaſs-offerings, the ſhake-offerings, the heave-offerings, and the Shew-bread: as alſo of all Euchariſtical Sacrifices the breaſt and the ſhoulder; of others the ſhoulder, the two cheeks and the maw; and of the whole burnt-offering they received the Skin; beſides the free gifts of the people, appearing thrice yearly before the Lord: and all this brought in unto them without charge or trouble. Which makes it evident, that they were far more liberally provided for, than the reſt of the Tribes; though they had no whole Country allotted to them, as the others had. And ſo much for ſuch parts of the Land of Paleſtine as were poſſeſſed in part, or wholly, by the Sons of Iacob; proceed we now to the Inheritance of the Sons of Eſay.

Idumæa.

IDUMÆA.

IDUMÆA, or the Land of EDOM, is bounded on the Eaſt and South, with Arabia Petræa; on the North, with Judæa; and on the Weſt with the Mediterranean Sea. So called from the Edomites, or Children of Eſau, whoſe name is Edom, Gen. 36. 1. the Father of the Edomites, v. 43. by whom it was planted and poſſeſſed: or, as others ſay, from the Idumai, a people of Arabia; who in a mutiny being forced to forſake their Countrey, came and ſetled here. The firſt the more certain of the two, and therefore I adhere to that.

The Countrey towards the Sea ſide very fat and fruitfull; but where it bendeth towards Arabia exceeding mountainous and barren. Heretofore it afforded Balm, not now: but ſtill it hath ſome ſtore of Palm-trees, for which much celebrated by ſome writers of antient times; as Arbuſto Palmarum dives Idume, in the Poet Lucan. Sandy, and full of vaſt deſarts, for which, and for the want of water, it is thought unconquerable. For though they have many Wells there for the uſe of the natives, yet to them only are they known, and not obvious at all to the eyes of ſtrangers, no not upon the ſtricteſt ſearch that can be imagined. But all places are not ſo well furniſhed, as appeareth by the ſad condition which the Kings of Judah, Iſrael, and Edom were fallen into, when they led their Armies through the Deſarts of this Countrey, againſt the Moabite, finding herein no water for man or beaſt: inſomuch that the King of Iſrael ſaid, Alas, that the Lord hath called theſe three Kings together, to deliver them into the hand of Moab, 2 Kings 3. 10. Not otherwiſe delivered out of this perplexity, but by a miracle from Heaven: God ſending them the next day an abundance of water, without wind or rain or any other viſible means, ver. 17. 20.

The people antiently rude and barbarous, greedy of change in Government, eaſily ſtirred unto inſurrections, and in love with tumults. Profeſſed enemies to the Jews, till conquered by them: and when compelled by Hyrcanus to the Jewiſh Religion, they were at beſt but falſe friends; and in the ſiege of Hieruſalem by Titus, did them more miſchief than the Romans. At this time ſubject to the Turk, and differ not much in life and cuſtome from the wild Arabians.

Rivers of note there can be none, where ſo little waters. One lake it hath, though poſſibly it had been better had they been without it, now ſmall, and every day growing leſs; the paſſage being long ſince barred which it had to the Sea. Antiently, though then narrow, it was two hundred furlongs, or five and twenty miles long; bordered on each ſide by hills of ſand, which born by the winds into the water did ſo thicken the ſame, that it was not eaſie to be diſcerned from the dry land; inſomuch as whole Armies had been ſwallowed up in it. Thence called Barathrum by the Latines; The true name of it formerly was the Lake of Sirbon. By the Italians it is now called Lago di Teveſo, by the Natives Bayrema; the utmoſt of Paleſtine, where it joyneth on Ægypt.

The chief Mountains of it, are, 1 Mount Seir, the firſt habitation of Eſau, after he left his dwelling in the Land of Canaan, to make roome for Jacob, as is ſaid, Gen. 36. 7. 8. Not called ſo unleſs by Anticipation (a thing not uſual in the Scripture) till the coming of Eſau thither: the word Seir ſignifying hairy or briſled, ſuch as Eſau is deſcribed to be, Gen. 27. 11. To this S. Hierome doth accord, deriving the name of Seir from Eſau, Sumpto ab autore nomine. His reaſon is, Seir quippe interpretatur hiſpidus & piloſus qualis Eſau fuit. So he in his Comment on Eſaiah, cap. 21. For the ſame cauſe, is the whole Countrey of Edom, ſometimes called Mount Seir in Scripture, by the name of this Mountain, as 2 Chron. 20. 10. 23. The ſecond hill of note is that called Caſſius, not far from the Lake of Sirbon, now nothing but an huge heap of ſand; formerly famous for a Temple of Jupiter, and the Sepulchre of Pompey the Great. Who being baſely murdered here (after his defeat near Pharſalia by Julius Cæſar) by the command of Ptolemy the younger, King of Egypt, unto whom he fled (or rather by the command of Archillus who then governed his Counſels) by the piety of a private Souldier was here interred, in an obſcure and homely, but honeſt Sepulchre. The Sepulchre afterwards reedified, and made more ſuitable to the man, by the Emperour Adrian. The piety of the Souldier not a whit the leſs for the coſt of the Emperour: in whoſe name Lucan had beſtowed this Epitaph, on that firſt Monument.

Hic ſitus eſt Magnus, placet hoc, Fortuna, Sepulchrum
Dicere Pompeii; quo condi maluit illum,
Quam terrâ caruiſſe ſocer.

Which may be Engliſhed to this purpoſe.

Here Magnus lies, Such, Fortune is thy doom
That this vile earth ſhould be great Pompey's Tomb.
In which even Cæſars ſelf would rather have.
His Son-in-Law interr'd, than want a grave.

Idumea.

Places of moſt conſideration in it, 1. Dinhabath, the City of Bela, the firſt King of Edom. 2. Anith, the City of Hadad, and 3. Pan, the City of Hadar, two others of the Kings hereof: which three are mentioned Gen. 36. 32. 35. 39. 4. Berzamna, placed here by Ptolemy, ſuppoſed to be the ſame with Berſhabee in the Tribe of Simeon, the utmoſt border South-wards of the Land of Canaan, of which more there. 5. Caparorſa, 6. Gamararis, and 7. Elaſa, all of them mentioned by Ptolemy; which ſheweth them to be of ſome conſideration in thoſe times; though now forgotten with the former. 8. Anthedon, on the South-ſide of the River Beſor, oppoſite to Gaza in the Tribe of Simeon, which is ſituate on the Northern bank. A port Town, once of good repute, till defaced by Alexander King of the Jewes: re-edified afterwards by Herod the Great, and named Agrippias, in honour of Agrippa the favourite and Son-in-law to Auguſtus Cuſar. 9. Roſſa, a Fort of conſequence not far from Maſſada, before mentioned, when we were in Judæa; taken by Herod in his way to relieve that Caſtle. 10. Raphia, memorable for the great defeat which Ptolemy Philopater there gave unto Antiochus ſirnamed Magnus. 11. Rhinocurura, ſo called from a miſhap which befell the Inhabitants hereof, by mangling and defacing their noſes. By Pliny and Strabo called Rhinocurula: and at this time Pharamica. Memorable for an old but ill-grounded tradition, that here the world was divided by lots, betwixt the poſterity of Noah: and ſo conſiderable in the wars of the Holy Land, that it was ſtrongly fortified by Baldwin the firſt, to obſtruct the paſſage of ſuch forces as uſually came out of Egypt to aid the Turks. 12. Oſtracine, now Stragioni; on the Sea-ſide beneath Athedon, and in that part of the Country which from Mount Caſius, hath the name of Caſiotis: aſcribed by Ptolemy to Egypt; but being they are both on the North of the Lake of Sirbon, more properly belonging to Paleſtina. But moſt of theſe being now buried in their ruins, there are left none but a few Caſtles and ſcattered Villages: the Villages inhabited for the moſt part by Arabians, the Caſtles gariſoned by Turks. The chief of which lying on the Sea, in the road to Egypt, are, 13. Hamones, a ſmall Caſtle not far from Gaza, uſed chiefly for a Toll-booth, to receive cuſtom of ſuch Merchants as paſs that way. 14. Hariſſa, a ſmall Caſtle alſo, ſerving ſpecially for the ſame uſe; but ſtronger, and of more importance becauſe near the Sea, from which not above two miles diſtant; and for that cauſe garriſoned with an hundred Souldiers: environed with a few houſes, by reaſon of the commodity of the water, which is ſweet and wholeſome; elſe little better then a Deſart. 15. Catio, another Caſtle, or rather Toll-booth, with a garriſon of about 60 Souldiers in it: ſeated in a place ſo deſert and unfruitfull, that nothing vegetable groweth in it, but a few ſtarved Palm-trees; the water which they have there, ſo bad and brackiſh, though eſteemed good enough for the common Souldiers; that all which the Captain drinketh is brought from 16. Tina, a Town upon the Sea-ſhore, about twelve miles diſtant, and the laſt upon this Coaſt towards Egypt.

The firſt Inhabitants of this Country were the Horites, the Horites which dwelt in Mount Seir, as we read in Geneſis, Chap. 14. verſ. 6. that is to ſay, which dwelt in that hilly Country which afterwards was called Mount Seir. But whether it was ſo called from Eſau's dwelling here, as is ſaid before, or from Seir the Horite, mentioned Geneſis 36. 20. as perhaps may probably be ſuppoſed need not now come into diſpute. Broken by Cherdorlaomer, and his Aſſociates, they were the more eaſily ſubdued by Eſau. Who leaving the Land of Canaan to his brother Jacob, Geneſis 6, 7, 8. becauſe thoſe parts in which they dwelt did not afford them room enough for their ſeveral Cattel; came into this Country; and having deſtroyed the Horites from before them, ſucceeded in their habitations, and dwelt there in their ſtead even unto this day, Deut. 2. 22. 'Tis true, we find Eſau in Mount Seir, before this remove: for it is ſaid, that Jacob at his firſt coming out of Meſopotamia, ſent Meſſengers before him to Eſau his brother, unto the Land of Seir, the Country of Edom, Gen. 32. 3. And hence a queſtion hath been moved, how Eſau dwelling there before Jacobs coming, can be ſaid to remove thither to make room for him. To this Sir Walter Raleigh and ſome others anſwere, that at the time when Jacob came out of Padan-Aram, Eſau dwelt in thoſe parts of the Mountains which lye on the Eaſt of Jordan, called afterwards Galaad and Mount Hermon, by which Jacob muſt needs paſs in his way to Canaan; which Mountains then were called by the name of Seir, and from thence Syrion by the Zidonians, or Phœnicians in the ages following: from whence driven by the Amorites at ſuch time as they vanquiſhed thoſe of Moab and Ammon, they were forced to ſeat themſelves on the South of Canaan, where Moſes found them. But with this I am by no means ſatisfied. For beſides that it maketh Eſau to carry a Mount Seir with him, whereſoever he went; it doth expreſly differ from the plain words of Scripture, both in the occaſion: and the time of his ſetling there: the victories which the Amorites had over the Ammonites and Moabites, being then freſh and newly gotten, when Moſes with the children of Iſrael came into theſe parts; which was at the leaſt 200 years after Eſau did withdraw himſelf to the Land of Edom. And therefore I ſhould rather think, that Eſau finding himſelf diſtaſted by his Father and Mother, in regard of his Canaanitiſh marriages, and the hatred which he bare to Jacob; departed from them, and ſojourned in the South parts amongſt the Horites of Mount Seir; that thither Jacob ſent his Meſſengers, to make peace between them, that the reconciliation being made, Eſau returned unto the place where before he ſojourned; and having brought thence his children, cattel, and the reſt of his ſubſtance: fixed himſelf again near the houſe of his Fathers: and finally, that on Iſaac's death, finding his family increaſed, his heards and flocks augmented, and the reſt of his ſubſtance alſo doubled by the death of his Father; he thought it fit alſo to enlarge his dwelling and ſo removed once more to Edom. A thing not needfull to be done had he dwelt in Galaad, Hermon, or any other part of that Mountainous Tract; conſidering the great diſtance betwixt thoſe Idumæa. Mountains and the City of Hebron, in which Iſaac dwelt: nigh to which Jacob alſo had ſet up his dwelling.

But on what ground ſoever Eſau left the poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan, to his brother Jacob, certain it is, he did it not without ſome ſtrong impulſions from the Spirit of God, by whom the poſſeſſion of that land was deſigned for Jacob; to whom the bleſſing and the birth-right had been both preferred. And though Eſau over-ruled by Almighty God, ſeemed to have forgotten all diſpleaſure againſt his brother: yet the quarrel began by them in the womb of Rebecca, brake out more violently in the time of their poſterity. Inſomuch that Moſes could by no means, obtain a paſſage thorow Edom, into the Promiſed Land, though he ſought it by fair addreſs, and preſſed it by all thoſe motives and inducements, which a wiſe and an underſtanding man could have ſet before them. For though the King of Edom then being, ſeemed to pretend nothing but the ſafety of himſelf and his people: both which he might have hazarded (in all humane reaſon) by opening the cloſures of his mountains, and letting in a Nation mightier than his own: yet it is poſſible that there might be as much of ſtomach as worldly policie; and that as well the buying of the birth-right for ſo ſleight a trifle, as the getting of the bleſſing by ſuch fraudulent means, might not be forgotten. For he not only denied them paſſage, and ſent word expreſly they ſhould not go thorow; but came againſt them with much people and a ſtrong band, as is ſaid Numbers 20.20. But the Edomites could not for all this prevent their deſtiny, or make the word of God to be ineffectual; by which it had been ſignified, when they were yet in their mothers womb, that the elder ſhould ſerve the younger. Not verified in Eſau's perſon, for Jacob called him his Lord Eſau, profeſſed himſelf to be his ſervant, and willingly ſubmitted to his ſuperiority; but in the iſſues of them both: then ſpecially when David had ſubdued the Edomites, and made them homagers and vaſſals to the Crown of Judah, 2 Sam. 8. 14. Nor is leſs intimated in thoſe words of the 60 Pſalm, where it is ſaid, Over Edom will I caſt my ſhoe; it being a cuſtom of old times to fling their ſhooes upon a Countrey conquered, or deſigned for conqueſt. Projectio calceamenti ſuper Regionem aliquam, denotat ſubjacere, as my Author hath it. And in alluſion unto this, there is a ſtory in the Chronicles of the Kings of Man, how Magnus King of the Iſles ſent his Embaſſadours to Murchard a King in Ireland, commanding on the next Chriſtmas day, to carry openly the ſhooes of King Magnus upon his ſhoulders; in teſtimony, ſaith the ſtory, that he was his Vaſſal. The caſting of the ſhooe on a conquered Countrey, or the treading of it under feet, another ceremony of this nature mentioned Deut. 33. 29. do come both to one, and ſignifie that vaſſallage or bondage, which ſuch a captivated Countrey was reduced unto.

But on the other ſide, there was another part of the heavenly Oracle, which made for Edom: Iſaac had ſignified to Eſau, that though the bleſſing given to Jacob could not be revoked, and that he muſt content himſelf with being a ſervant to his brother for a certain ſeaſon: yet there ſhould one day come a time, in which he ſhould not onely break that yoak from off his neck, but obtain the dominion over him, Gen. 27. 40. The firſt part verified, when the Edomites revolted from the Kings of Judah, in the time of Joram, or Jehoram, the ſon of Jehoſaphat: and in ſtead of a Vice-Roy ſent unto them from the Court of Hieruſalem, ſet up a King of their own Nation: never returning after that to the houſe of David. For though Joram made war preſently upon them, and got the victory; yet he did not proſecute it unto any effect, nor beat them out of any of their ſtrong holds, nor reduce any of their Cities unto his obedience: as if he had got honour enough in the eye of the world, by being maſter of the field; or ſhewing his abilities in command of a greater Army, than the Edomites could bring againſt him. The like errour was committed alſo by Amaziah, who by a vaſt Army of 300000 fighting men, did no greater wonders, than the killing of 10000, and the taking of as many Edomites; but neither left garriſons in any of their defenſible places, nor reduced any part of their Countrey under his obedience. And for the later part thereof, it was as punctually fulfilled in the time of Antipater an Idumæan, Herod the Aſcalonite his ſon, and their Succeſſours, who in the decrepit age of the houſe of Jacob, became King of the Jewes, and lorded over them with inſolence and contempt enough.

Mean time to look upon the intermediate paſſages of their ſtate and ſtory. It ſeemeth that at firſt they were governed by Dukes, each having the command of thoſe ſeveral families, of which they were the Heads or Princes. But as ambition and power did prevail among them, the more potent having vanquiſhed or awed the reſt, took to himſelf the name of King: which by the names of their Fathers, and their ſeveral Cities in which they reigned, ſeem to have been choſen by election; or otherwiſe to come in by ſtrong hand, as the ſword could carry it. The names of which are thus ſet down in the book of Geneſis.

8. Hadar, the Son per-haps of Baal-Hanan, for I find no mention of his Father. After whoſe death, the head of the ſeveral Families reſumed the Government again; ruling over their own Tribes, without any one Soveraign or Supreme. And all theſe Kings they had, before there reigned any King in Iſrael, Gen. 36.31. that is to ſay, before any form of Supreme Government was eſtabliſhed amongſt them, in the perſon of Moſes, called by the name of a King in the book of Deut. ch. 35. v. 5. But this diſtracted Government did not long continue, the Edomites being under a King again, at ſuch times as the Children of Iſrael came out of Egypt: for it was unto the King of Edom that Moſes ſent Meſſengers from Kadeſh, to deſire a paſſage thorow his Country. Which being denied and the Edomites in Arms to defend their paſſes, Moſes forbore to force his way, though the neareſt for him: partly becauſe he had no mind to ſpend thoſe forces in fighting with hills and deſarts, which were deſigned for the conqueſt of another Countrey; but principally becauſe God commanded him not to medle with them, or take ſo much as a foot of their Countrey from them, Deut. 2. 5. But David, upon whom lay no ſuch obligation, having vanquiſhed the Syrians, and other Nations round about him; followed his fortunes unto Edom, whom he overcame, and put Garriſons into all their Cities, and the Edomites became his ſervants. Governed from thence by a Deputy or Vice-Roy (as is ſaid before) till the time of Joram the ſon of Jehoſaphat King of Judah; in whoſe Reign they revolted, as before was ſaid. Never regained to that Crown, and but twice endeavoured; that ſo the word of God might be all in all. Only the Simeonites in the Reign of Hezekiah, wanting paſture for their Cattel, and room for themſelves, ſeized on the parts that lay neareſt to them, deſtroyed the Inhabitants thereof, and dwelt in their habitations, becauſe there was paſture for their flocks, 1 Chron. 4. 39. Provoked wherewith, and with the natural Antipathy which was between them, no people were more miſchievouſly bent againſt Judah, than theſe Edomites were: none ſo forward of themſelves, to aſſiſt Nabuchadonoſor againſt Hieruſalem; none that ſo vehemently cryed Down with it, down unto the ground; none half ſo ready to ſet fire to the holy Temple. But they got little by this ſervice to the Babylonians, their own thraldom following cloſe upon that of Judah: with whom made fellow-ſubjects to the Chaldæans; as afterwards to the Perſians, and Kings of Syria of the race of Seleucus. In the declining of that houſe, ſubdued by Hyrcanus the ſon of Simon, the fourth of the Maccabæan Princes; by whom they were compelled to be Circumciſed, and to receive the Law of Moſes: not only reckoned after that, as a Province of the Jewiſh Kingdom, but as natural Jews. Which notwithſtanding, and that the ſetting of that Crown on the head of Herod and his houſe, being originally Idumæans, might in all reaſon have extinguiſhed their inveterate malice: yet was their hatred of that Nation as great as ever. Forgetting therefore how they had been rewarded by the Babylonians, they would needs aid the Romans againſt them alſo: putting themſelves into Hieruſalem, when beſieged by Titus, only of purpoſe to betray it; joyning with the ſeditious there, doing more miſchief in the City than the enemy had done without; and finally, ſetting fire to the ſecond Temple, as they had done unto the firſt. Subjected afterwards by the Romans, they followed the ſame fortune with the reſt of Paleſtine.

Having thuse gon thorow with the ſtory of thoſe neighbouring Nations which encompaſſed Canaan: it will be ſeaſonable to look on the affairs of the Canaanites firſt, and after of the houſe of Jacob, who poſſeſſed their Countrey. Firſt for the Canaanites, they deſcended from Canaan the ſon of Cham, who with his eleven ſons were here ſetled immediately after the confuſion of Babel. Of thoſe twelve (taking in the Father) five planted in Phœnicia, and the coaſts of Syria, that is to ſay, Sidon, Harki, Arvadi, Semari, or Hamathi: the other ſeven in thoſe parts which we now call Paleſtine, though not all of that; the Edomites, Moabites, Midianites, Ammonites, and Ituræans, being Occupants or Tenants with them. And of thoſe 7 came thoſe 7 Nations, which by Gods appointment were totally to be rooted out, viz. the Canaanites, the Amorites, the Hittites, the Jebuſites, the Hivites, the Gergeſhites, and the Perizites. But from which of the ſons of Canaan theſe laſt deſcended, is not yet agreed on: unleſs perhaps they were deſcended of the Sinites, (not otherwiſe reckoned in this muſter) and got the name of Perizites, on ſome new occaſion. Governed at the firſt by the chiefeſt of their ſeveral Families, with the names of Kings; the number of which increaſed, as their Families were ſubdivided into ſmaller branches: inſomuch as Joſhuah found 31 Kings of the Canaanites only, beſides what might deſcend from thoſe who were ſetled in Phœnicia, and the borders of Syria. The moſt potent of thoſe Nations were the Amorites, the Jebuſites, and the Canaanites properly ſo called. Of which the Amorites had not only inlarged their borders beyond Jordan, but in the reigns of Og and Sihon, ruling at the ſame time in their ſeveral parts, had thruſt the Ituræans, Ammonites, and Moabites, out of moſt of their Countries: and ſo reſtored the ſame again to the race of the Emmims, and Zanzummims (of which line Og and the Kings of Baſon were) who had been diſpoſſeſſed thereof by the ſons of Lot. Theſe vanquiſhed in the time of Moſes, and their habitations aſſigned over to the Tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the one half-tribe of Manaſſes. The Canaanites properly ſo called, as they were the firſt which fought with the houſe of Jacob; ſo they were the laſt of all theſe people that contended with them. They firſt fought with them under the conduct of Arad their King, who thinking it more ſafe and prudent to encounter the enemy in another mans Countrey, than to expect it in his own; gave battel unto Moſes in the deſarts of Moab: and having cut off ſome of the out-parts of his Army, and taken a few Priſoners, he went home again. But Jabin, under whom they made their ſecond onſet, went to work more reſolutely; and taking a time when the iniquities of that people cried aloud for vengeance, ſo prevailed againſt them, that he tyrannized over them for the ſpace of 20 years. After which time, his Army being diſcomfited by Barak, in the time of Debora; Siſera, his great Captain ſlain by Jael the wife of Heber the Kenite, and moſt of his Cities taken and poſſeſſed by the Iſraelites; he periſhed himſelf in the cloſe of that war: for it is ſaid, that they prevailed againſt Jabin the King of Canaan, till they had de- deſtroyed him, Judg. 4. 24. As for the Jebuſites, they were grown ſo formidable, (at the time of the coming of the Hebrews) to the reſt of the neighbours, that their King Adonibezek bragged that he had cut off the Thumbs and great toes of 70 Kings, and made them eat the crums which fell under his Table. But being vanquiſhed by Judah, he was ſerved in the ſame kind himſelf by Judah and Simeon, and carried to Hieruſalem, where he died: the whole Countrey of the Jebuſites, and the City of Hieruſalem it ſelf, the fortreſs of Mount Zion excepted only, being made a prey unto the Victor. And though the Jebuſites held that fortreſs till the time of David, yet being they were only on the defenſive ſide, and made no open war againſt thoſe of Iſrael, I reckon the Canaanites as the laſt which did contend with them for the chief command.

The Canaanites thus conquered, and for the moſt part worn out of the Country, the Iſraelites ſucceeded in their poſſeſſions; according to the promiſe of God made to Abraham, renewed to Iſaac, and confirmed to Jacob, Governed after the death of Moſes and Joſuah, by the Congregation of the Elders, as appears by many paſſages of the book of Judg. the Judges (as the Scripture calleth them) not being the ordinary Magiſtrates, but raiſed up occaſionally by God for ſome ſpecial purpoſe, according to the exigence of their affairs. Carrying in this a likeneſs unto the Dictators in the State of Rome. So that the government at the firſt was an Ariſtocratie; though to ſay truth, it rather was a Theocratie, as the Fathers call it; that is to ſay, a Government wherein GOD preſided more immediately, than in other Nations. And thereupon when the people cryed to Samuel to have a King, God ſaid unto him, Hearken unto the voice of the people, for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me that I ſhould not reign over them, 1 Samuel 8. 7. God was their King, and he had mightily reigned over them ſince they came out of Egypt; but they deſired to have a King like other Nations, to go in and out before them, and to fight their battels; a King whom they might ſee with their bodily eyes, and converſe with him in ſuch manner as the people did, which dwelt round about them. And ſo came in the Monarchy or kingly Government, begun in Saul, but confirmed in David; the firſt a Benjamite, the ſecond of the Tribe of Judah; of which Jacob had fore-told at the time of his death, that the Kingdom of his people ſhould be veſted in it. But there were only three in all, reckoning Saul for one, who had Dominion over the whole houſe of Iſrael; the kingdom after Solomons death, being rent in twain: ten of the twelve Tribes revolting unto Jeroboam the Son of Nebat; and only Benjamin and Judah, and ſo much of the Tribes of Dan, and Simeon, as lay intermingled with and in the Tribe of Judah, remaining firm to Rhehoboam the Son of Solomon, who miſguided by ſome evil Counſellers which were about him, had given occaſion to the breach. A breach that could never be ſoldered or made up again, notwithſtanding the fair opportunities which were after offered, of uniting Iudah unto Iſrael (for ſo the two kindoms were diſtinguiſhed) in the time of Joas; and rejoyning Iſrael to Judah, in the time of Aſa. The opportunity offered to Aſa King of Judah for re-gaining the revolted Tribes, was the confuſions which in his time had fallen out amongſt them, by ſeveral factions; each challenging the priviledge of making a King unto it ſelf: Nadab the Son of Jeroboam being ſlain by Baaſha, Ela the Son of Baaſha murdered by Zimri, Zimri depoſed by Omri the Father of Ahab, and Tobni a Competitor againſt Omri alſo. During which time, as the people muſt needs ſuffer many great oppreſſions, which might make them think of their allegiance to the houſe of David: ſo could not Aſa have wanted many fair advantages (had he made his beſt uſe of them) of working on that divided kingdom, and reducing it back to his Houſe. But there were two reaſons which prevailing more againſt this re-union, than any that could he preſented to invite them to it. Firſt the imperiouſneſs, and arbitrary Government of the Kings of Judah, putting to death without formality of Law, thoſe that had diſpleaſed them, as in the caſe of Shimei, Joab, and Adonijah, in the dayes of Solomon: and raiſing on the Subject what ſums they pleaſed, though more for oſtentation of their own magnificence, then the neceſſities of the State. Of which exactions Rhehoboam the ſon of Solomon was ſo far from promiſing a releaſe, or ſome mitigation at leaſt; that he threatned to make them more than double what they had been formerly: and how knew they, but that Aſa, and all ſuch as deſcended from him, might be of the ſame temper alſo, and act according to thoſe Principles which their Fathers left them. Whereas the Kings of Iſrael holding by no other title than the love of their people, and the moderate and regular form of their government over them; had put their mouths in ſuch a taſte of the ſweets of liberty, and made them ſo much maſters of their own both lives and fortunes, that Naboth durſt deny his vineyard to Ahab, though offering full compenſation for it; and Ahab durſt not queſtion the life of Naboth, but by ſuborning witneſſes to accuſe him of blaſphemy. So that the preſent confuſions under which they ſuffered, by the change and violent death of ſo many Kings one after another, being onely temporatory, and not likely to continue long, were no perſwaſions unto them to accept of Aſa, and much leſs to offer themſelves unto him; who conceived all adverſity to be far more tollerable, than the weighty Scepter of that houſe. And there was ſomething alſo of preceding profit, which ſwayed the buſineſs. The people were obliged by the Law of Moſes to make three chargeable journeys yearly to Hieruſalem, to worſhip there in the Holy Temple; and to pay a double tenth yearly out of their eſtates (beſides offerings and other caſualties) to the Prieſts and Levites. Ieroboam out of an ungodly policy, fearing theſe frequent journeys unto Hieruſalem might be an occaſion of reducing them to the houſe of David, releaſed them of that charge and trouble, by ſetting up a new form of worſhip: erecting golden Calves for them in Dan and Bethel; and leaving every man unto the liberty of his own opinion, ſo it tended not to the eſtabliſhment of the old Religion. And on the other ſide the Levites which dwelt amongſt them, and received their Tithes, not willing to conform to theſe new impieties, and finding that their Miniſtry was no longer uſefull, withdrew themſelves into the Kingdom of Judah, and left the antient places of their habitation: by means whereof, the people were releaſed of thoſe payments alſo. If they returned again to their old obedience, and accepted Aſa for their King, they muſt return again to their old Religion; the golden Calves of their own imaginations and inventions, muſt no more be worſhipped: and (which no doubt prevailed moſt on the common people, who like that Religion beſt which coſts them nothing) the antient payments to the Prieſts, and Levites, muſt come up again. Rather than ſo, they were reſolved to ſuffer yet a little longer, to pleaſe themſelves in expectation of more ſetled times: and ſo no falling off to Aſa, though as moderate and religious a Prince as they could have wiſhed for, had they had power of faſhioning a King to their own deſires. Now as this opportunity of rejoyning Iſrael unto Judah, proved unſucceſsfull unto Aſa, ſo did the like of uniting Judah unto Iſrael, prove as unprofitable unto Joas the ſon of Jehoahaz, and grand-child of Jehu King of Iſrael, who being provoked by Amaziah King of Judah, made war upon them; and not only diſcomfited him without battel, and took him priſoner without blowes, but led him captive to the very walls of Hieruſalem; and by his authority, got the gates thereof to be opened to him. But not contented with his honour, (greater than ever had befallen to the Kings of Iſrael) he cauſed 400 cubits of the wall to be broken down; thorow which breach he entered triumphantly in his chariot, carrying the unhappy Prince before him, and being entred, ſacked both the Royal Palace and the Holy Temple. This was the opportunity which was given to Joas, of uniting Judah unto Iſrael; and this the loſs of it. For the people, otherwiſe like enough to have accepted him for their King, as a Prince of whoſe noble Acts they had heard much ſpeech; were ſo exaſperated by theſe raſh and unſeaſonable outrages, that they looked upon him as a Sacrilegious Church-Robber, whom the Holy Altars were not ſafe from; and as a covetous and ungoverned Tyrant, not able to concoct the fulneſs of his own proſperities. If he were thus unſatiable in his covetouſneſs, and inſupportable in his pride, when he was a Candidate for their Kingdom; when in all common prudence he ſhould have ſought their loves, and inſinuated into their good opinion, by eaſing them of former taxes, and ſhewing them fair hopes of his moderate government: what muſt they look for when their Towns were fill'd with garriſons, Hieruſalem ſtuffed with armed troops; and all the Princes of the houſe of David, from whom they might expect redemption from cruel bondage, deſtroyed or baniſhed, or otherwiſe made unable to afford them ſuccours? rather than ſo, they were reſolved to riſe as one man againſt him, and let him ſee, that neither their Army was ſo ſcattered, nor themſelves ſo cowed, but that they durſt adventure it to a farther tryal. The fear of which made Joas ſenſible of the loſs of his opportunity: and ſo content with hoſtages for his ſafe retreat, he returned home again without other benefit of his victory, than the ſpoil and honour. And that this poſſibly might be the motive of his going back, without putting the ſucceſs of the affair to a further hazard, may be made probable by the like occurrence in the ſtory of Guicciardine, which in brief is this. Peter de Medicis had very weakly opened the gates of Florence to Charles the eighth, then in his paſſage towards Naples. Charles entreth it triumphantly as a conquered City, armed in complete manner, and his lance on his thigh; his whole Army with him. Many inſolencies being committed by the French, the Citizens prepare to fight in defence of their liberties. Charles, willing to go forwards on his march towards Naples, propounds conditions in writing: but ſo intollerable, that Peter Caponi one of the chief Citizens catching the papers out of the Kings Secretaries hands, and tearing them before his face, Do you, ſaith he, ſound your trumpets, we will ring our bells, and ſee what will follow. Which ſtout and peremptory dealing did ſo daunt the French that they condeſcended upon very eaſie termes to abandon the City; and reſtore all the places appertaining unto their eſtate, which were in his power. The like conſideration probably might prevail with Joas, as did then with Charls; and prompt him not to fight with an inraged multitude in the ſtreets of a City, where he could make no uſe of his horſe: and where he might be more galled with women and children, throwing ſtones or darts out of their windows, and from the tops of their houſes; than with an armed enemy in the open field. Nor wanted Joas an example of this kind, in the times before him; even that of Abimelech, in the book of Judges: who having taken the Town of Thebet, and forced all the men and women into the Caſtle; was ſlain there by a piece of a Mill-ſtone, thrown at his head from one of the Turrets of it by the hand of a woman.

To proceed further in the ſtory of theſe ſeveral Kings, or recapitulate the ſumme of their principal actions (as in other places we have done) may be thought unneceſſary: the Scripture being in the hands of all ſorts of perſons, in which their actions and ſucceſſions are at large contained. So that I only ſhall ſubjoyn their names, with the time of their reigns, and the year of the world in which they did begin their Empire: leaving the reſt unto the induſtry and ſearch of the Chriſtian Reader, of whoſe acquaintance with the Scriptures I dare make no queſtion. This only I premiſe as concerning the Judges, that the time of their continuance in that authority, is not to be meaſured from the time of their coming to it, till the entrance of the next Succeſſor, as in that of the King, theſe being occaſionally raiſed by Almighty God, for ſome preſent ſervice, and no ſtanding or eſtabliſhed Magiſtrates: except Moſes and Joſuah only, who held the government during life, and managed it as abſolute Princes.

ſucceeded in the Throne of his Father: ſlain at the end of 6 moneths by 15 Shallum, who at the moneth end was ſlain by 1378 16 Menahem, the Son of Gadi. 10.

1388 17 Pekahiah, the ſon of Menahim; ſlain by

3190 18 Pekah, the ſon of Remaliah; ſerved in the ſame kind after a reign of 20 years by 2310 19 Hoſeah, the ſon of Ela; in the fifth year of whoſe reign and the 18 year from the death of Pekah, Salmanaſſer King of Aßyria having by a ſiege of three years carried the city of Samaria, deſtroyed the kingdom of Iſrael, and led the greateſt part of the people into Captivity.

3141 20 Azariah, the Son of Amaziah, called alſo Uzziah; ſmote with a Leproſie by the Lord. 52.

3192 21 Jotham, the Son of Uzziah, or Azariah. 16.

3208 22 Achaz, the Son of Jotham, in whoſe time, and on whoſe occaſion, the Kingdom of Damaſcus was ruined by Tiglath Pileſer King of Aſſyria; and the Tribes on the farther ſide of Jordan led into captivity. 16.

3224 23 Hezekiah, the Son of Ahaz, a religious Prince; in whoſe time the Kingdom of the ten Tribes was deſtroyed by the Aſſyrians, and that of Aſſyria, by the Babylonians.

3253 14 Manaßes, the wicked Son of the good King Hezekiah, reſtored Idolatry, and put to death the Prophet Iſaiah, for oppoſing his irreligious courſes. 55.

3308 15 Amon, the ſon of Manaſſes, and as bad as he; ſlain by a conſpiracy of his ſervants, when he had reigned but two years only.

3310 16 Joſiah, the ſon of Amon, a right godly King, unfortunately ſlain by Pharaoh Necoh King of Egypt, at the battel of Megiddo. 31.

3341 17 Jehoahaz, the ſon of Joſiah, a King of three moneths only, depoſed and ſent Priſoner by Pharaoh Necoh, to Riblah in the land of Hamath, ſince called Antiochia.

18 Jehojakim, the ſon of Joſiah, and half brother of Jehoahaz, advanced unto the Throne by Necoh, who changed his name from Eliakim, by which he was formerly called, into that of Jehojakim. 11.

3351 19 Jehojachia, or Jechoniah, the ſon of Jehojakim, at the end of the moneths led captive unto Babylon, with his Wives and Mother, and the great Officers of the Realm, by Nebuchadnezzar.

20 Zedekiah, another of the ſons of Joſiah, and brother by the whole bloud of Jehoahaz, made King by Nebuchadnezzar in the place of Jehojachin, or Jeconiah; his name being changed from Mattaniah, by which called before. But rebelling againſt his Benefactor, contrary to the Counſel of the Prophet Jeremy, he was taken Priſoner in the 11th. year of his reign, Hieruſalem deſtroyed, the Temple ruinated, and the People carried Captive to the land of Babylon, A. M. 3362. where they lived in exile 70 years: which time expired, Cyrus the King of the Perſians, gave them leave to return to their Country, and to re-edifie their City and Temple. Which work being finiſhed, by the encouragement of Ezra, Nehemiah, and Zorobabel; and the Nation again ſetled in ſome part of their old poſſeſſions; they were after governed by their High-Prieſts, and the Counſel of the Elders, which they called the Sanhedrim, the High-Prieſts bearing the chief ſtroke, and being looked on as a man of the greateſt power. And therefore I will here ſubjoyn the Catalogue of ſo many of them, as governed the affairs of this Country, from the Return of the People from the Captivity of Babylon, till the time of the Maccabees; who managed the eſtate hereof both as Prieſts and Princes, till their ſubjection by the Romans.

The High-Prieſts of the JEWES, after the Captivity.

A.M.

3427 1 Joſuah, the High-Prieſt at the time of the Return, aſſiſtant to Zorobabel in re-building the Temple which he lived not to finiſh; though continuing (as ſome ſay) in the Government 100 years. But I believe rather, that the names of his Succeſſors being loſt, the whole time is aſcribed to him.

3530 2 Joiakim, ſaid to be the ſon Joſua, in whoſe time, by the diligence of Ezra and Nehemiah, the Temple was finiſhed, and the worſhip of God reſtored.

3580 3 Jonathan, or Johanan. 30.

3610 2 Jaddus, who entertained Alexander the Great, coming to Hieruſalem (of whom more anon) the brother of that Manaſſes, for whoſe ſake, and on whoſe occaſion, the Temple on Mount Garazim, was built by Sanballat, with the leave of Alexandar. 20.

3630 5 Onias ſucceeded Jaddus, as Jaddus had done Jonathan; not by birth (as formerly) but by the Election of the People.

3651 6 Simon, ſirnamed Juſtus. 9.

3660 7 Eleazar, the brother of Simon. 32.

3692 8 Menelaus, the brother of Eleazar, and Simon.
3718 9 Onias II. 14.
3732 10 Simon II. 10.
3742 11 Onias III. the ſon of Simon the 2d.
3787 12 Jaſon, the Brother of Onias the 3d.
3789 13 Menelaus II. the brother of Jaſon, in whoſe time the Temple was profaned by the Syrians, at the command of Antiochus Epiphanes.
3794 14 Alcimus, under whoſe Government the Maccabees began to appear in defence of their Country, and Religion, by whom ſucceeded in the office of High Prieſt, after his deceaſe.

Among theſe none of greater note than Iaddus, High Prieſt at ſuch time as Alexander the Great having conquered Syria, marched towards Hieruſalem, and was encountred by this Iaddus in his Prieſtly veſtments; aſſuring him in the name of the moſt high God, and making it demonſtrable from the Prophecy of Daniel, that he ſhould proſper in his enterprize againſt the Perſians. An hope which Alexander did embrace with the greater confidence, becauſe (as he affirmed to Parmenio his chief Commander) he had once at Diu, a City of Macedon, ſeen in a dream or viſion ſuch a perſon as Iaddus was, ſo habited, and profeſſing the ſame one God; by whom he was encouraged to purſue the action which he had in hand, with aſſurance of victory. And upon this the Jewes were ſo much favoured by him, that he gave them leave to live according to their own Lawes, and to enjoy with freedom their own Religion. But it held only for his own time. For ſhortly after his deceaſe, they were on both ſides plagued by the Kings of Egypt and Syria, who ranſacked their Cities, ſlaughtered their People, made havock of their goods, and compelled many of them both to eat of forbidden meats, and offer ſacrifice unto Idols. At laſt God raiſed up Mattathias, and his five ſons to reſiſt theſe inſolencies; who in the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes King of Syria, undertook the protection of the People, and gave unto the Syrians many notable overthrows, inſomuch that the Jewes made choiſe of Judas ſirnamed Maccabæus (the eldeſt of the five brethren) for their Prince or Governour.

The MACCABÆAN Princes of JEWRY.

A. M.
3799 1 Judas Maccabæus, one of the nine Worthies, vanquiſhed three great and puiſſant Armies of the Syrians, conducted by Apollonius, Gorgias, and Lyſias, men of great renown, being Commanders of the forces of Antiochus Epiphanes, before mentioned.
3805 2 Jonathan, the brother of Judas, vanquiſhed the forces of Bacchides and Alcimus, Captains of Demetrius King of Syria; and after many notable exploits and deeds of Arms, was treacherouſly murdered by Tryphon, aſpiring at that time to the Syrian Diadem.
3823 3 Simon, the brother of Judas and Jonathan, ſubdued the Cities of Gaza, Joppe, and Jamnia, and cleared Judæa of the Syrians: perfidiouſly ſlain in the courſe of his fortune, by his Son in-law Ptolemy. 8.
3831 4 Johannes Hyrcanus, the third Son of Simon (his two other Brethren being in the power of Ptolemy) ſucceeded in the Government. He deſtroyed the Temple on Mount Garizim, conquered Alſamaria, and ſubdued the Idumæans, compelling them to be Circumciſed; transferred the war into Syria, and dying left the Sovereignty to his eldeſt ſon Ariſtobulus.

The MACCABÆAN Kings of JUDATH.

3862 1 Ariſtobulus, cauſed himſelf to be crowned, and was the firſt King of Judah after the Babylonian captivity; he ſtarved his mother, and ſlew Antigonus his brother.
3863 2 Alexander, the brother of Ariſtobulus, exceedingly enlarged the Kingdom of Jewry; by the conqueſt of all Ituræa, and ſome parts of Syria; but was withall ſo great a Tyrant that he cauſeleſly ſlew of his own Subjects fifty thouſand in battel; and commanded 800 of his principal enemies to be hanged before his face, he left behind him two ſons: Hyrcanus who was himſelf ſlain by Herod after all his troubles, leaving no iſſue male behind him: and Ariſtobolus the Father of Alexander, and of Antigonus, of whom more anon, of which two Alexander was the Father of another Ariſtobulus, the moſt beautifull Prince of all his time, and of Mariamne the Wife of Herod, by whoſe command they were moſt villanouſly murdered.
3890 3 Alexandra, by ſome called Solome, the wife of Alexander, following the Counſel of her husband at the time of his death, committed her ſelf and her Children into the hand of the Phariſees, then in great power and credit amongſt the people; by means whereof ſhe procured an honourable burial for her husband, obtained the Kingdom for her ſelf, and finally left it to her Children, whoſe diſagreements cauſed the ruine of his famous Family.

4. Hyrcanus

3899. 4. Hyrcanus, elder ſonne to Alexander, a Prince of weak Parts and of little action, and therefore at the firſt diſturbed in ſucceſſion by his younger brother Ariſtobulus; but was at length firmly eſtabliſhed in his Throne, by Pompey: who carried Ariſtobulus, with his ſonnes, Alexander and Antigonus, captives to Rome; from whence Alexander eſcaping out of priſon, troubled the quiet of his Country, till he was ſurpriſed by Gabinius, and ſlain by Scipio, two of Pompeys Captains: after whoſe death, Antigonus by the aid and power of the Parthians, deprived Hyrcanus of his Kingdome, and cut off his eares; but Revenge ſuddenly followed this villany; he being not long after ſlain by Marcus Antonius, and his Kingdom given to a ſtranger. As for the unfortunate Hyrcanus the rightful Prince of this Country, he remained priſoner for a time among the Parthians; till hearing of the death of Antigonus, he returned into Jewry, and lived contentedly under the Government of Herod, of whoſe greatneſſe he had laid the firſt foundation, and was by him in fine moſt wickedly murdered.

The Idumaan Kings and Princes of Jewry.

A.M: 3940. I. Herod the Aſcalonite, ſurnamed the Great, ſonne of Antipater an Idumaan, was by Mark Antony created, and by Auguſtus confirmed King of Jewry; under whom that Kingdome was more enlarged, and in greater ſplendour, then ever it had been in the time of David. A Prince of great magnificence, but of great vices. During his reign, the Scepter being now departed from Judah, the Lord CHRIST was born.

A.C. 6. 2, Archelaus, eldeſt ſon of Herod, at the time of his death, ſucceeded with the title of King, but in truth and reality poſſeſſed onely of a Tetrarchy, or fourth part of the Kingdome, though the beſt and largeſt of the four, containing Judæa, Samaria, and Idumæa, The reſt of Herods Kingdome was divided into three other Tetrarchies, i. e. the Tetrarchie of Galilee and Petræa, given to Herod Antipas; Secondly that of Ituræa, given to Philip, another of the ſonnes of Herod; And thirdly, that of Abilene, conferred on Lyſanias. Baniſhed into France, his Tetrarchie was made a Province of the Roman Empire; governed by Pontius Pilate, at our Saviours paſſion.

16. 3. Herod II. ſurnamed Antipas, Tetrarch of Galilee and Petræa, upon the baniſhment of Archelaus ſucceeded him, as chief of the Herodian family, but not in his Tetrarchie; and at laſt followed him in his baniſhment alſo. This is he who murdered John Baptiſt, and in whoſe time CHRIST ſuffered.

40. 4. Herod III, ſurnamed Agrippa, in honour of Agrippa the ſon in Law, and moſt truſty favourite of Auguſtus Cæſar, Nephew to Herod the Great, by his ſon Ariſtobulus, begotten on Mariamne of the race of the Maccabees; was by Caligula firſt inveſted in the Tetrarchy of his Uncle Philip, with the title of King, and next in that of Antipas alſo; and finally by Claudius, in that alſo of Lyſanias; ſome part of the Tetrarchy of Archelaus being added unto his Dominions; this was the man that murdered James, and impriſoned Peter; and in the end was ſtriken by an Angel, and devoured by wormes.

47. 5. Agrippa Minor, ſon of Herod Agrippa, was he before whom Saint Paul pleaded in defence of the Goſpel; and the laſt which had the title of King of the Jewes: for in his time the City of Hieruſalem was deſtroyed by Titus, and the whole Kingdom made a Province of the Roman Empire, Anno 73

And here it is to be obſerved, that when Salmanaſſar had ſubdued and captivated the ten Tribes of Iſrael, he ſent new Colonies of his own to plant this Country; that ſo fruitful and well-ſituate a part of his Empire might yield its juſt tribute, and not lie open to the furie of the next invader. But the Romans not having (it ſeemeth) ſo much policy or providence, as thoſe whom they accounted barbarous; having laid the Country deſolate, left it unfurniſhed of new Colonies: whereby the Perſians, next the Saracens, and after them the Turks, entering the Roman Empire at this door, have ſucceſſively driven the Romans out of the whole houſe, Now that we may the better perceive how the Romans had weakned and almoſt utterly rooted out the Jewiſh Nation, we will relate ſome of their particular maſſacres: which were not more cruelly inflicted on them by the enemy, then juſtly deſerved by themſelves; they wiſhing, though (I ſuppoſe) not deſiring, that the innocent Blood of our Saviour ſhould be on them and their children. Firſt then, the inhabitants of Cæſarea ſlew of the Jews in one day, about 20000, and ſuch as fled were took and impriſoned by Florus the Roman Lievtenant of Judæa. To revenge this ſlaughter, the Jews ſet upon the Syrians; in which skirmiſh 13000 of them were ſlain. The people of Alexandria put 50000 of them to the ſword, they of Damaſcus, 10000; Antonius a Roman captain, ſlew in Aſcalon 10000 of them; and Ceſtius another Captain, 8040 perſons. Now to come to the wars here managed by Veſpaſian. This Veſpaſian, in the ſiege of Apbaca, ſlew and took priſoners 17130 perſons; in Samaria, 11600 perſons; in Iotopata, 42200 perſons: In Joppa ſo many killed and drowned themſelves, that the Sea threw up again 4200 dead bodies; and the reſt ſo totally periſhed, that there remained none to carry tidings unto Hieruſalem, of the loſſe of the Town. In the City of Tarichea, were ſlain, and made captives, 45000 perſons, beſides thoſe which were given to the King Agrippa. In Gamala there periſhed 90000, and none left alive but onely two women: In Gaſcala 5000. men died by the ſword; in the City of Gadera there were ſlain 32200, beſides an infinite number of ſuch as had drowned themſelves. In Hieruſalem it ſelf, there died 1100000 of them, partly by the ſword, and partly by the famine; the worſer enemy of the two; there were found 2000 in privies and ſinks; and 9700 taken priſoners, inſomuch that 30 Jewes were ſold for a penny. So punctual was the Divine Juſtice in retaliating to this wretched people, according to the meaſure of their iniquities; that they who bought their Saviour for thirty pence, ſhould be ſold at thirty for a peny in the open market.

Now that Jeruſalem was able to contain ſuch a number of people,is evident, in that when Ceſtius was Leivtenant of Jewry, the High-Prieſt did, at his requeſt, number the people which came thither to eat the Paſchal Lamb; and found them to be two millions and ſeven hundred thouſand living ſouls, all found and purified: For to leapers, or men having a flux of ſeed, or women in their monethly terms, or to ſtrangers, it was not lawful to eat of it. And when Titus laid ſiege to the City, it was in the feaſt of the Paſſover, when moſt of the People were there aſſembled; God (as it were) having thus impriſoned them. All theſe maſſacres, beſides divers others which I have omitted, and infinite number which were ſlain in the fields and villages, which drowned themſelves, and which were privately made away, amounting all to almoſt 2000000 of people, hapned in the compaſs of four years; beginning at the 12 of Nero, and ending at the 2 of Veſpaſian; yet was not the whole Nation rooted out, til the year 136. For then this miſerable people, having ſtirred two notable rebellions; the one under Trajan, and the laſt under Adrian the Emperours, were generally baniſhed their native Country, and never again permitted to inhabit it, otherwiſe then as ſtrangers. After this diſſolution, the Jews were diſperſed all over the world, and eſpecially in Spain, where Adrian commanded many of them to dwell: yet they found every where ſo little favor, that having divers times been put to grievous mulcts and ranſoms, they were at laſt thruſt out of moſt of the Kingdoms of Europe alſo. They were baniſhed out of England by Edward the 1st, Anno 1290. Out of France, by Philip the Fair, 1307 Out of Spain by Ferdinand the Catholick, 1492 Out of Portugal, by Emanuel, 1497 Out of Naples and Sicily, by Charls the fift, 1539. Yet are they found in great numbers in the Romiſh parts of Germany and Poland, in moſt Cities of Italie, eſpecially Rome it ſelf, where there are no leſs then 15000 or 20000 of them; and alſo in the Popes Country of Avignion. The reaſon why they are permitted to live thus under the Popes noſe, is pretended to be an expectation of their converſion, which is a meer pretence indeed; the true reſaon being the benefit hence ariſing to his Holineſs coffers: the hopes of their converſion being very ſmall, and the means leſs. For beſides the ſcandal datum & acceptum, by the Papiſts fond worſhipping of Images, ſo peremptorily contrary to the firſt table of the Law; they are not permitted to ſee any book of the Chriſtian Religion, no not ſo much as the New-Teſtament. And (which worketh much upon men of their metal) becauſe at their converſion they muſt quit all their goods unto the Church, as being ill-gotten, and by conſequence the works of the Devil, which in their Baptiſm they promiſe to renounce. They have alſo a Synagogue at Amſterdam, and are pretty thick ſpread over the Dominions of the Turks: who notwithſtanding ſo hate them for crucifying of CHRIST, that they uſed to ſay in deteſtation of a thing, I would I might dy a Jew. Neither will they permit a Jew to turn Turk unleſs he be firſt baptized. And though their multitudes be ſo great both in Theſſalonica, and Conſtantinople, that it is conceived they do amount to the number of 160000 perſons; yet are they not only contemned and hated, but there, and in all other places of their habitation, upon every tumultuous aſſembly of the common people, and conſtantly every Eaſter, whereſoever they be, in danger of death, Inſomuch that if a Jew do but ſtir out of doors betwixt Maunday Thurſday at noon, and Eaſter Eve at night, the Chriſtians of the Eaſt amongſt whom they dwell (though far fewer in number) will be ſure to ſtone them; becauſe at that time they buffetted, derided, and in fine crucified their Saviour. Hated in all parts of the Turks Dominions, becauſe employed as Publicanes in gathering and enhauncing the publick tributes, which they exact with all ſeverity that may be, and improve unto the moſt. And no leſs hated in all parts of the Chriſtian world, as enemies to the Croſs of CHRIST: ſo unreclaimably addicted to their ancient Judaiſm, and ſo abhorring from the converſation of other men; that it is not poſſible that they ſhould reap any other harveſt, then contempt and ſcorn, from thoſe amongſt whom they dwell.

To give you their Character in brief. They are a people which know how to comply with the times and the condition which they live in; eſpecially if their profit be concerned in it: reviled like dogs, and uſed like ſlaves, yet never ſhew ſo much as an angry countenance. A Nation which wil thrive whereſoever they come, but moſt by uſury and brocage; not lending any thing but on pawns, and thoſe once forfeited, never more redeemable. The beſt of both Sexes ſaid to have an unſavoury rankneſs, not incident (if not cauſed by ſluttiſhneſs) to other people: from whom as different in their habit, as in their Religion. And as for that, they retain ſtil Circumciſion, as the badge and cognizance of their Nation; but mingled with many ceremonies not preſcribed by the Law, nor obſerved by the Ancients: placing a void chair for the Prophet Elias, whom they believe to be preſent, though unſeen, at the ſolemnity. And upon this they are ſo beſotted, that they conceive the femal ſex uncapable of eternal life, becauſe not capable of Circumciſion; and therefore uſe to name them with no other ceremony, then at the ſix weeks end to have ſome young wenches lift up the Cradle with the child in it; which ſhe that ſtandeth at the head, giveth the name unto. Of their Sabbath ſo extreamly doting, that they have added to the ſuperſtitions left them by the Phariſees: & herein they are ſo preciſe, that if a Jew travel on the Friday, and in the evening fall ſo ſhort of his journeys end, that it amounts to more then 2000 Cubits or ſix Furlongs, which they count a Sabbath-dayes journey; there muſt he ſit him down and keep his Sabbath, though in a wood or field, or the High-way ſide, without fear of wind or weather, of Thieves or Robbers, and without taking order for meat or drink: periculo latronum prædonumq; omni, penuria item omni cibi potuſq; neglectis, as Buxdorfius hath it. And ſo far have they gone in deſpight of Chriſt, as to declare it unlawful to lift the Ox or Aſſe out of a ditch; permitted in the ſtricteſt times of Phariſacial rigor: So pertinacious in retaining the difference of meats and drinks, that they wil by no means ſit at the ſame table with other men, and ſo preciſe in the dreſſing of it, that they will eat of no fleſh but of their own killing onely; and that too with ſuch cautions and reſervations, that if any of the entrails be corrupt or diſlocated, they will ſell the whole beaſt to the Chriſtians for a very trifle. Beneficial in that only to the neighboring Chriſtians. Wine they forbear, except it be of their own planting, not ſo much out of diſlike of that liquor, for they are generally good fellows, and love their bellies; as for fear the Wine would be baptized; a Ceremony much uſed in the Eaſtern parts. Of the coming of their Meſſiah ſo full of hopes, that there is no greater Warrier ſtirring, but they look upon him as the man; till ſome ſad tragedy or other, which they ſuffer under that perſwaſion, makes them ſee their error: promiſing to themſelves, whenſoever he cometh, a reſtitution of their Kingdome; and ſuch felicities therein, in the literal ſence of ſome Texts of Scripture, which carry in them a more myſtical and ſacred meaning. That in good time (but God's, not theirs) they ſhall be made partakers of the ſeveral bleſſings which thoſe Text do ſpeak of, is both the hope & wiſh of all pious men: who cannot chooſe but grieve to behold the natural branches ſo long diſmembred and cut off from the Tree of life. And this they neither hope nor wiſh for, but on ſome fair grounds, preſented to them by S. Paul; who ſaid expreſly, that when the fulneſs of the Gentiles is once come in, that then all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, Rom. 11.25,26. The words are ſo plainly poſitive that they need no commentary. Or if they did, we have the general conſent of the Ancients, beſides the conſtant current of moſt modern Writers; who cheriſh the glad hopes of their converſion to the Goſpel, which the Apoſtle doth there aim at. Origen, Athanaſius, Hierome, Auguſtine, Chryſoſtome, for the primitive times: Beda and Hugo Cardinalis, in the times ſucceeding; Gorram, and Thomas Aquinas for thoſe of Rome; Calvin, Beza, Bullinger, and Peter Martyr, for the Reformed Churches: beſides divers others of great note, ſo expound that Text. Nor want there other Texts of Scripture to affirm as much; which he that doth deſire to ſee, may finde them, with the expoſitions of moſt Chriſtian Writers, in a book writ by Doctor Willet; entituled, De generali & noviſſima Judæorum vocatione: and thither I refer the more curious Reader. Out of all I ſhall take theſe words of Peter Martyr, writen on that paſſage of Saint Paul to the Romans; Viz Non ita Judæi perierunt, ut nulla de illorum ſalute ſpes ſuperſit; The Jews (ſaith he) are not ſo wholly faln from the favour of God, but that there ſtill remain ſome hopes of their ſalvation. Of their Salvation then by the Goſpel of Chriſt, when the fulneſs of the Gentiles is once come in, we conceive good hopes: but whether there be any of their reſtitution to their temporal Kingdom, is a further queſtion; and not ſo clearly evidenced in the Book of God, though there be ſomewhat in that book which may ſeem to intimate it. That the opinion of being reſtored by the Meſſiah to that temporal power which was taken from them by the Romans. was prevalent as well amongſt Chriſt's Diſciples, as the reſt of the Jews, is, as I take it, cleer enough in the holy Goſpel. In ſuch a Kingdome and no other, did the two ſons of Zebedee deſire to ſit on both hands of their Maſter: and the ſame was it, and no other, which all of them expected, as appeareth by the words of Cleophas, Luke 24.21. that Chriſt ſhould have reſtored unto them. We thought, ſaid he, that this would have proved the man. that ſhould have redeemed Iſrael. Redeemed Iſrael? from what? from ſin and Satan, or the curſe and bondage of the Law? Not ſo, ἀλλ' ἀπὸ τοῦ ζυγοῦ τῆς δουλείας; but from the yoak of vaſſalage, which the Romans had ſo lately impoſed on them, ſay the Fathers rightly. Touching the ſame it was that they moved him, ſaying, Lord wilt thou at this time reſtore again the Kingdom of Iſrael? Acts 1. 6. In anſwer whereunto, our Saviour makes them no denial, as unto the thing, nor tells them that they never muſt expect ſuch a reſtauration; but only puts them off as unto the time, and bids them reſt themſelves on the pleaſure of God the Father, in whoſe hands the diſpoſing of all Kingdomes was. It is not for you, (ſaith he) to know the times and ſeaſons which the Father hath in his own power, verſe 7. By which anſwer, (as it ſeems to me) there is a poſſibility of reſtoring them unto their Kingdome alſo; though not in the τὸ νῦν, at that very inſtant when they were moſt deſirous to have it done, or at any other time fit for them to know, that being a ſecret which the Father hath reſerved to himſelf alone.

But leaving theſe ſpeculations of a reſtitution of the Throne of Iſrael, and the great power & priviledges it may then enjoy; let us look back on the eſtate in which it flouriſhed in the former times: when the forces and revenues of it were at the higheſt. And firſt for the Revenues, they amounted in the time of Solomon (as is ſaid 2 Chron. 9.13.) to 666 Talents of Gold, beſides the benefits of his Cuſtoms & Impoſition; which cometh to two Millions, and nine hundred ninety and ſeven thouſand pounds, of yearly income. A vaſt ſumm for ſuch a little Kingdome. Nor can we reckon them at leſs, if they were not greater, in the time of David; of whom it is affirmed, 1 Chron. 22.14. that he left to Solomon an hundred thouſand Talents of Gold, and ten hundred thouſand Talents of Silver, towards the building of the Temple; beſides three thouſand Talents of Gold, and ſeven thouſand Talents of Silver, formerly depoſited for that purpoſe, as is ſaid 1 Chron. 29.4. which if it be computed at the ordinary rate of a Jews Talent, reckoning a Talent of Gold at four thouſand and five hundred pound, and a Talent of Silver, at three hundred ſeventy five pound; will amount in our money to eight hundred and forty millions, and one hundred twenty and five thouſand pounds: So vaſt a ſumm, that it had been ſufficient to have built a Temple of pure Gold and Silver, far greater than the Temple of Solomon, without other materials. I conceive therfore with our learned and induſtrious Brerewood, that by the Talent in thoſe places we are to underſtand a far leſſer ſumm, than the ordinary Hebrew talents: which whether it doth there ſignifie a Sicle only, which is half a Crown of Engliſh money, as Eupolemus, cited by Euſebius, was of opinion; or that every talent of Gold came to three golden Crowns of Athens, which maketh forty five ſhillings of Engliſh money, as Julius Pollux hath it in his Onomaſticon, I am not able to determine. But meaſuring it by the laſt eſtimate, wch I more approve of, it will amount to 2 millions, and 2 hundred ninety and five thouſand pounds; a vaſt ſumm for a King to leave in ready mony, which was alwaies exerciſed in War. And though I do not find expreſly what the Revenues of Judah might amount unto, after) the diviſion; yet by one circumſtance I find them to be very great. For it is written, 2 Kings 18.14. that the yearly tribute impoſed upon King Hezekiah, by the King of Aſſyria, was 3 hundred talents of Silver, and 30 talents of Gold; amounting, according to the ordinary hebrew talent, (which queſtionleſs is there intended) to two hundred forty ſeven thouſand & five hundred pounds of Engliſh mony: and therefore probably his ordinary Revenue muſt be thrice as much, above that tribute; elſe the Aſſyrian had not left him a ſubſiſtance for a King to live on. Nor can I think that the Revenues of this Crown were leſs to Herod, than formerly to Solomon, or David; conſidering his vaſt expences, the many and magnificent Structures which he brought to perfection, the immeaſurable Donatives beſtowed upon Auguſtus, Livia, and the Court of Rome, together with the large Legacies he gave at the time of his death; not parallel'd by any King before or ſince, though of a larger and more ample Territory than he ſtood poſſeſſed of.

What Forces the Kings of the Hebrews were able to bring into the field, may beſt be eſtimated by the Muſter which David made, when he numbred the People; the enrolment of ſuch as were able to bear Arms, and fit for ſervice; coming in all to five hundred thouſand fighting men, in Judah only, and eight hundred thouſand men in the Tribes of Iſrael. 'Tis true, that David never brought into the field ſo vaſt a multitude: but when the Kingdomes were divided, and War denounced betwixt Jeroboam and Abijah, we finde almoſt the whole number brought into the field; that is to ſay, eight hundred thouſand on the ſide of Jeroboam, the King of Iſrael; and four hundred thouſand by Abijah, the King of Judah. After this, out of that ſmall Kingdome, Aſa the ſon of Abijah being invaded by Zerah the Arabian or Ethiopian, advanced an Army of five hundred and eighty thouſand men; which was more than the enrolment made in the time of David: an infinite proportion for ſo ſmall a Kingdome; and were it not avouched in the holy Scriptures, far above belief: had not that God who ſaid to Abraham, that his ſeed ſhould be as the ſtars of heaven for multitude, been able to have made it good.

As for the ſtory and affairs of this Country ſince the time of Adrian, the Jews being all expelled their native Soil, and Chriſtianity in fine prevailing over all thoſe parts; it was inhabited as the reſt of the Empire was, by men of that Religion only: in this Country ſo advanced and countenanced, that Helena the Mother of Conſtantine, is reported to have built in it no leſs than 2 hundred Temples and Monaſteries, in places of moſt note, for the miracles of Chriſt our Saviour, or the dwelling of ſome of his Diſciples. In the year 615. the Perſians, under the conduct of the Choſroes their King, became Maſters of it, and poſſeſſed themſelves of Hieruſalem alſo: expelled thence by the valour and good fortune of the Emperor Heraclius, who recovering the Croſs on which Chriſt ſuffered, out of the hands of the Pagans, carried it with as great a triumph into Conſtantinople, as David once did the Ark into Hieruſalem. But this glory and rejoycing did not long continue: For within twenty years after the recovery of this City from the power of the Perſians, it was again conquered and ſubdued by Homar, or Aumar, Caliph of the Saracens, Anno 637. Under this yoak the captivated Chriſtians had not long ſuffered, when they changed the Tyrant, but not the tyranny; the Turks about the year 1079. overcoming the Saracens, and domineering in their ſtead. Twenty years did the Chriſtians languiſh under this oppreſſion, when one Peter an Hermite travelling for devotion to the holy Land, and being an eye-witneſs of the miſeries under which they groaned, at his return, made his addreſſes to Pope Urban the Second, acquainting him with the ſad condition of the poor Chriſtians in thoſe Countries. A Council thereupon is called at Cleremont in France, where the Pope (willing to imploy the Chriſtian Princes further off, that he might the better play his game at home,) did ſo effectually advance and endear the buſineſs, that no fewer than three hundred thouſand fighting men, under ſeveral Leaders, undertook the ſervice. And it proſpered ſo well with them in the firſt beginning, that having beaten the Turks out of Aſia minor, taken the great City of Antioch, and moſt of the ſtrong Towns of Syria, they encamped before Hieruſalem, and in ſhort time took it, Anno 1099. after it had been four hundred years, and upwards, in the power of the Infidels. The City being thus gained, was offered, with the Title of King, to Robert Duke of Normandy, ſon of William the Conqueror: but he upon the hopes of the Kingdome of England, refuſed the honour; never proſpering as it was obſerved, after that refuſal. Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorreine, had the next offer of it, which with a religious joy he accepted of, though on the day of his inauguration he refuſed the Crown, affirming that it was not fit for a Chriſtian Prince to weare in that City a Crown of Gold, where the Redeemer of the World ware a Crown of Thorns.

The Kings of Hieruſalem.

1099.	1.	Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorreine.
1100.	2.	Baldwin of Lorrein, brother of Godfrey, won Ptolemais, and many other Cities of Syria.
1118.	3.	Baldwin II. ſurnamed of Bruges, Coſin of Godfrey, and Baldwin, the former Kings, overcame the Sultan of Damaſcus, and enlarged his Kingdome by the addition of Tyre.
1131.	4.	Fulk, Earl of Anjou, having married Milliſcent the daughter of Baldwin the II. ſucceeded after his deceaſe: unfortunately killed with a fall from his horſe.
1142.	5.	Baldwin III. ſon of Fulk and Milliſcent, fortified Gaza againſt the Caliph of Ægypt, and recovered Paneade from the King of Damaſcus.
1164.	6.	Almericus, the brother of Baldwin the 3d: ſo diſtreſſed the great Caliph of Ægypt, that he was forced to call in the Turks to aid him; by whom ſlain, and his Kingdome transferred on Sarracon, the Turkiſh General.
1173.	7.	Baldwin IV. ſon of Almericus, over-threw Saladine the victorious King of the Turks, in a fight neer Aſcalon, and valiantly defended his Dominions.
1185.	8.	Baldwin V. ſon of Sybill the ſiſter of Baldwin the 4th. by William Marqueſs of Montferrat, unnaturally poiſoned by his own Mother, having reigned only five months, to make way for her ſecond huſband, called,
1185.	9.	Guy of Luſignan, the laſt King of Hieruſalem, that had the poſſeſſion of the City; during whoſe time, Saladine the Sultan of Ægypt won that Kingdome, Anno 1187. which his Succeſ-

ſours

ſors defended againſt all invaſions, till the year 1517. in which Selimus the Firſt, Emperor of the Turks, added the Holy Land, together with Ægypt, to his Empire. When Hieruſalem was taken by the Chriſtians, it is ſaid that the German Emperor's name was Fredericus; the Pope's, Urbanus; the Hieroſolymitan Patriarch, Heraclius: and that ſo alſo were they called, when the Chriſtians again loſt it. This is the conceit of Roger Hoveden, in the life of Henry the Second; but how it can agree with Chronology, I do not ſee. Paleſtine.

After the taking of Hieruſalem by Sultan Saladine, the Chriſtians retired their forces into ſome of the other Towns of the Holy Land; which they made good againſt the enemy: and defended them under the Government of theſe three following, Viz.

10 Conrade Marq. of Monferrat, husband of Iſabel the daughter of Almericus King of Hieruſalem.

11. Henry Earl of Campaigne, ſecond husband of Iſabel.

12. John di Brenne, husband of Mary, or Yoland, as ſome call her, daughter of Conrade and Iſabel, the laſt Chriſtian King that ever had poſſeſſion in Syria or Paleſtine; inhabited ever ſince by Moors and Arabians; few Chriſtians, and not many Turks but ſuch as be in Gariſons only. Yoland the daughter of this John di Brenne, was wife to Frederick King of Naples, who in her right intituled himſelf King of Hieruſalem: and ſo now do the Kings of Spain, as heirs unto, and poſſeſſors of the Kingdome of Naples. Concerning which Title it would not be amiſs to inſert this ſtory. When the wars in Queen Elizabeths time, were hot between England and Spain; there were Commiſſioners of both ſides appointed to treat of peace. They met at a Town of the French Kings; and firſt it was debated in what Tongue the Negotiation ſhould be handled. A Spaniard thinking to give the Engliſh Commiſſioners a ſhrewd gird, propoſed the French Tongue as moſt fit; it being a Language which the Spaniards were well ſkilled in: and for theſe Gentlemen of England, I ſuppoſe (ſaith he) that they cannot be ignorant of the language of their fellow-ſubjects; their Queen is Queen of France, as well as of England. Nay, in faith, my maſters, replied Doctor Dale, (a Civil Lawyer, and one of the Maſters of the Requeſts) the French tongue is too vulgar for a buſineſs of this ſecrecy and importance, eſpecially in a French Town. We will therefore rather treat in Hebrew, the language of Hieruſalem, whereof your Maſter is King; and I ſuppoſe you are therein as well ſkilled, as we in the French. And thus much for this Title.

The Armes of the Chriſtian Kings in Hieruſalem, was Luna, a croſs Croſſet croſſed, Sol; which was commonly called the Hieruſalem Croſs. But for their Forces and Revenues, I cannot ſee how any eſtimate may be made thereof, in regard they ſubſiſted not by their own proper ſtrength, but by the Purſes and the Forces of the Weſtern Chriſtians; more or leſs active in that ſervice, as zeal, or emulation, or deſire of glory, were predominant in them.

Chief Orders of Knight-hood in this Kingdome, after the recovery thereof from the power of the Turks, Were,

1. Of the Sepulchre, ſaid to be inſtituted originally by Queen Helena, the Mother of Conſtantine the Great, by whom the Temple of the Sepulchre was indeed firſt built: but more truly by Philip King of France, Anno 1099. at ſuch time as that Temple was regained from the Turks. Their Armes the ſame with that of the Kings before blazoned, repreſenting the five wounds of our Saviour CHRIST. At the firſt conferred on none but Gentlemen of blood and fortunes; now ſaleable to any that will buy it of the Pater-Guardian, who with a Convent of Franciſcans doth reſide neer that Temple.

2. Of Saint John of Hieruſalem, begun by one Gerrard, Anno 1114. and confirmed by Pope Paſchalis the Second. Their Badge or Cognizance, is a white Croſs of eight points. Their duty, to defend the Holy Land, relieve Pilgrims, and ſuccor Chriſtian Princes againſt the Infidels. They were to be of noble Parentage, and Extraction; and grew in time to ſuch infinite riches, eſpecially after the ſuppreſſion of the Templars (moſt of whoſe lands were after given uuto this Order) that they had at one time in the ſeveral parts of Chriſtendome, no fewer than 20000 Mannors; and of ſuch reputation in all Chriſtian Kingdomes, that in England the Lord Prior of this Order, was accounted the prime Baron in the Realm. But now their Revenue is not a little diminiſhed, by the withdrawing of the Kings of England, and other Proteſtant Princes, from the Church of Rome: who on that change, ſeiſed on all the Lands of this Order in their ſeveral Countries, and either kept them to themſelves, or diſpoſed them to others, as they pleaſed. Of theſe we ſhall ſpeak more when we are in Malta, where they now reſide; advertiſing only at the preſent, that their firſt Great Maſter was that Gerrard by whom they were founded: the laſt that had his reſidence in the Holy Land, was one John de Villers, in whoſe time being driven out of Paleſtine, they removed unto Cyprus, and in the time of Fulk de Villeret, Anno 1309. to the Iſle of Rhodes. Outed of which by Solomon the Magnificent, Anno 1522. they removed from one place to another, till at laſt by the magnificence of Charles the Fifth, Anno 1530. they were ſetled in Malta: and there we ſhall ſpeak further of them.

3. Of the Templers, inſtituted by Hugh of Payennes, Anno 1113. and confirmed by Pope Eugenius. Their Enſign was a red Croſs, in token that they ſhould ſhed their blood to defend Chriſt's Temple. They were burried croſs-legged, and wore on their backs the figure of the Croſs; for which they were by the common people called Croſs-backs or Crouch-backs, and by corruption Crook-backs. Edmund Earl of Lancaſter, ſecond ſon to our Henry the Third, being of this Order, was vulgarly called Edmund Crook-back; which gave Henry the Fourth a fooliſh occaſion to feign, that this Edmund (from whom he was deſcended) was indeeed the eldeſt ſon of King Henry the Third, but for his crookedneſs and deformity, his younger brother was preferred to the Crown before him. Theſe Knights had in all Provinces of Europe their ſubordinate Governors, in which they poſſeſſed no leſs than 16000 Lordſhips; the greatneſs of which Revenue was not the leaſt cauſe of diſſolving the order. For Philip the fair, King of France, had a plot to inveſt one of his ſons with the Title of King of Hieruſalem, and hoped to procure of the Pope the revenue of this order to be laid unto that Kingdome, for ſupport of the Title: which he thought he might the better do, becauſe Clement the Fifth then Pope, for the love he bare to France, had tranſferred his ſeat from Rome to Avignion. But herein his hopes deceived him; for this Order being diſſolved, the lands thereto belonging were given to the Knights Hoſpitallers, or of Saint John. The crimes objected againſt this Order were; firſt, Their revolt from their profeſſed obedience unto the Patriarch of Jeruſalem who was their Viſitor. Secondly, Their unſpeakable pride; and, Thirdly, Their ſins againſt Nature. The houſe of our Law-ſtudents in London, called the Temple, was the chief houſe of the Knights of this Order in England; and was by the Knights of Saint John: whoſe principal Manſion was in Smithfield, ſold unto the Students of the Laws, for the yearly rent of 10 l. about the middle of the Reign of Edward the Third.

Theſe three Orders M. Selden (and deſervedly) put not in his Title of honour, in that they were prohibited to kiſs a woman; honourary Knighthood, and the love of Ladies going together, like Vertue and Reward.

Thus much for PALESTINE.

OF

OF ARABIA.

ARABIA hath on the Eaſt, Chaldæa, and the Bay or Gulf of Perſia; on the Weſt, Paleſtine, ſome part of Ægypt, and the whole courſe of the Red-ſea: On the North the River Euphrates, with ſome part of Syria and Paleſtine; and on the South, the main Southern Ocean. But at ſometimes the name extended ſomewhat further. Pliny enlargeth it as far as to Comagena, the North part of Syria; in regard that many Arabian Colonies had been there planted by Tigranes; and Xenophon comprehended in it the greateſt part alſo of Meſopotamia; becauſe ſcituate on the Weſt of the River Tigris, and conſequently the Weſtern part of the Aſſyrian Empire, as the word Ereb doth import; from whence ſome derive the Etymon, and name hereof. Which notwithſtanding, in the general eſteem of Authors, it is bounded only as before.

As for the name, there be ſome that derive it from Arabus, a ſuppoſed ſon of Apollo and Babylonia: Others from three ſuppoſitious ſons of Janus Pater, one of the pretended Grand-ſons of Cham. Who is fabled to have ſent his ſon Arabus into Arabia Deſerta; Petreius into Arabia Petræa: and Sabus, into Arabia Felix, the dwelling place of the Sabæans. And for this trim conceit we are beholding to the Beroſus of Frier Annius. More probable is their conjecture, who derive the name from the Hebrew, Arab, ſignifying black; by reaſon of the ſwarthy or tawny complexion of the inhabitants, who are inter nigrum & fulvum, as Vertomannus an eye-witneſs hath informed us of them: on the ſame reaſon as one of the Provinces of Africa, is commonly entituled the Land of Negroes. But the moſt likely origination of it, as I conceive, is from Harabi, which ſignifieth in the hebrew a Thief or Rober, ſuch as the Arabians, in all ages, have been known to be. According unto that of the Prophet Jeremy; In the waies thou haſt ſate for them, as an Arabian in the wilderneſs, as our Engliſh reads it; Tanquam Latro inſidians in ſolitudine, ſaith the Vulgar Latine, Jer. 32. St. Hierome, though he render it, quaſi Latro, as the Vulgar doth, yet in his Commentary he informs us, that the word doth alſo ſignifie an Arabian, quæ gens latrociniis dedita uſq; hodie incurſat Paleſtinæ fines, &c. which people being addicted to theft and robbery, do to this day (ſaith he) infeſt the coaſts of Paleſtine which border neer them, and lye in wait for thoſe which had any occaſion to travel thither. Agreeable hereunto is the obſervation of Martin del Rio; Adeo latrociniis infames ſunt, ut Hebræis Arabs latronem denotat, ſicut Chananæas Mercatorem, Chaldæus Mathematicum: i e. So infamous were they for their theft and frequent robberies, that it was as familiar with the Jews to call a thief by the name of Arabian, as by Chanaanite to ſignifie a Merchant, or to uſe the word Chaldæan for a Mathematician. In the ſame ſence they came in the ſucceeding times to be called Saracens, from Sarak or Saraka, an Arabian word, which ſignifieth to ſteal; whereof more anon. No otherwiſe then one of the American Iſlands had the name of Ladrones, or Inſula latronum, given by Magellanus, from the thieviſhneſs of the Inhabitants, who had ſtoln his Cock-boat.

I have ſtaid the longer on the name, becauſe it doth expreſs ſo much of the Character of the people alſo, living for the moſt part upon ſpoil and robbery, as all that travel that way know by ſad experience. Of mean ſtatures, raw-boned, tawny, or ſwart-complexioned; having feminine voyces; of ſwift, but noiſeleſs gate, and upon you ere you are aware. Of no ſet-dwellings (except only in Arabia Felix) living in Tents, which they remove like walking Cities, for the benefit of paſturage, and hope of booty: for this laſt cauſe hanging about the skirts of more habitable Countries; and having robbed, retire with a marvellous ſpeed. Mounted on Dromedaries for that purpoſe, a beaſt of moſt incredible ſwiftneſs, ſatisfied with little food, though without water to it, and will eaſily carry a man a hundred miles a day, without any refreſhing. Nor are ſuch horſes as they have, though but poor and lean, of leſs ſpeed, or leſs patient of travel; whom they feed twice a day with the milk of Camels, and think them not worth keeping, if not able to out-go an Oſtrich. As now, ſo formerly, all horſemen, and but ill appointed; fitter to rob and ſpoil, then to deal with Souldiers; as riding ſtark naked, and truſting rather to the ſwiftneſs of their horſes, than any other way of reſiſtance, where they were oppoſed.

Their language is the Arabick, ſo called from this Country, but not proper to this Country only: ſpoken in all places where Mahometaniſm hath got any footing: The Alcaron being written in it, the publick offices of their Religion performed in it, and the tongue taught in Schools as generally, as with us the Latine; but made the natural language in Meſopotamia, Syria, Paleſtine, the three Arabia's Ægypt, and all Barbary, except the Kingdome of Morocco. A great extent, but ſhort of that which ſome give to it, who will have it ſpoken in two parts of the whole habitable World.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt here planted by S. Paul, of whoſe being in Arabia, after his converſion, he telleth us, Gal. 1. 17. to which the coming in of the Saracens gave a great increaſe, in the time of Mavia their Queen, during the Empire of Valentinian the Firſt: Moſes a man of exemplary piety, and famed for many miracles, being created their firſt Biſhop; after more generally propagated over all the Country, by their King Alamandarus; Anaſtaſius then reigning in the Eaſt. But long it had not been received, when ſupplanted by Mahometaniſm, which had its firſt beginning here; and hath ſo univerſally over-ſpred the whole face hereof, that now there are no Chriſtians left in all the Country, except only in Eltor, a Port Town in the Bay of Arabia Felix; in Petra, the chief City of Arabia Petræa; and in two ſmall Monaſteries about Mount Sinai.

It is in circuit about 4000 miles, but of ſo unequal and heterogeneous compoſition, that no general Character can be given of it: and therefore we muſt look upon it, as it ſtands divided into Arabia Deſerta; 2. Arabia Petræa, 3. Arabia Felix, and 4. the Arabick Iſlands.

1. ARABIA DESERTA.

ARABIA DESERTA, (called Beriara by the Turks) is bounded on the Eaſt, with Babylonia; on the Weſt, with parts of Paleſtine, and Arabia Petræa: on the North, with Palmyrene, and Meſopotamia, from which laſt it is parted by Euphrates: and on the South, by ſome parts of Petræa, and Arabia Felix.

It hath the name of Deſerta, from the vaſt Deſarts which are in it, and the un-inhabitedneſs thereof; called alſo by Ariſtides, Aſpera, from the roughneſs: by Servius, Inferior, or the Lower, in regard of the ſituation of it more towards the River: by Lucian, from the frequent bottoms and valleys in it, Arabia Cava; and finally, by the Jews it was called Kedar, from the blackneſs or ſwarthineſs of the People; the word in Hebrew ſignifying as much as Sun-burnt: whence the people are by ſome Writers called Kedareni, and by Pliny, Cedrai.

But the common and moſt uſual name of it, is Arabia Deſerta, agreeable to the nature of it, being generally a ſandy Country full of vaſt Deſarts; in which all ſuch as travel uſe to carry their Proviſions with them, and to guide themſelves in their journey by the courſe of the Stars; though in ſome parts which lie neer Euphrates, and the Mountains of Arabia Felix, it have ſome few Towns, and thoſe reſorted to by Merchants. But this is only in thoſe parts, the reſidue of the Country being ſo deſolate and waſte, that one who had travelled in it, doth deſcribe it to be ſo wilde a place, ut nec homines, nec beſtiæ videantur, nec Aves; imo nec arbores, nec germen aliquod, ſed non niſi montes ſaxoſi, altiſsimi, aſperrimi. A Country, ſaith Guillandinus Melchior, where are found neither Men nor Beaſts, no, not ſo much as Birds or Trees, nor Graſs, nor Paſture, but only ſtony, high, and moſt craggy Mountains.

The people, for the moſt part, uſed to dwell in Tents, alluded to by David, Pſal. 120. v. 5. which they removed from place to place, as the paſture for their Cattel failed them: taking no other care for houſes, than the boughs of Palm-trees, to keep them from the heat of the Sun, and other extremities of weather. Hence by the Ancients called Scenitæ, or men dwelling in Tents (in which reſpect the Jews call the Tartarians, Kedarim, from the like courſe of life which theſe Kedareni, or Arabians lived:) but the name reaching into the other parts of Arabia, where they uſe the ſame kinde of living: of whom more anon.

Yet notwithſtanding moſt memorable is this Country in ſacred ſtory, both for the dwelling place of Job, and the habitation of thoſe Wiſe men who came out of the Eaſt unto Hieruſalem, to worſhip Chriſt the new-born King of the Jews. That Job was an inhabitant here, appeareth by the ſcituation of his dwelling, being in the Eaſt, as is ſaid in the ſtory of him, chap. 1. v. 3. that is to ſay, in the Country lying Eaſt to the Land of Canaan, as this part of it doth; and therefore called ſimply by the name of the Eaſt, as Judg. 6. 3. where by the Children of the Eaſt, are meant expreſly the inhabitants of Arabia the Deſart, who together with the Midianites and Amalekites, oppreſſed thoſe of Iſrael. Secondly, by the ill neighborhood which he found from the Sabæans, who inhabited in this part alſo; and of the Chaldæans mentioned, v. 17. the next Borderers to it: and, Thirdly, by the inconſequences which needs muſt follow, if we place him, as ſome do, in the Land of Uz, neer unto Damaſcus. For how improbable muſt it be, for the Sabæans of the Red-ſea, or the Perſian-Gulf, or the Chaldeans, dwelling on the banks of the River Euphrates, to fall upon Job's Cattel grazing neer Damaſcus, the Countries being diſ-joyned by ſuch vaſt Deſarts, and huge Mountains, that it is impoſſible for any ſtrangers to paſs them, eſpecially with any numbers of Cattel, in reſpect of thoſe large Mountains, deep Sands, and the extream want of water in all that paſſage? and how impoſſible muſt we think it, that the pen-man of the ſtory of Job, who certainly was guided in it by the Holy-Ghoſt, ſhould be ſo miſtaken, as to place Job's dwelling in the Eaſt, if the Land of Uz, wherein he dwelt, bordered on Damaſcus; which lay not on the Eaſt, but the North of Canaan? A City called Us, or Uz, there was, ſcituate neer Damaſcus, ſo called from Uz, the ſon of Aram, Gen. 10. 23. A land of Uz alſo amongſt the Edomites, ſpoken of in the Lamentations of the Prophet Jeremy, chap. 4. v. 21. ſo called from Uz, one of the poſterity of Eſau, mentioned, Gen. 36. 28. And finally, a Land of Us, or Uz, ſo called from Huz the ſon of Nachor, the brother of Abraham, mentioned, Gen. 22. 21. which is that ſcituate in this Tract, the habitation & poſſeſſion of that righteous man: The Country hereabouts being called Auſitis, and the people Auſitæ, though by miſtaking in the Tranſcripts, we find them named Αἰσῖται, or Æſitæ, in the fifth of Ptolomy. The like I ſay alſo of the Wiſemen, or Magi, who came to Hieruſalem from the Eaſt, that they dwelt in this Country, where the ſaid Ptolomy placeth the City Saba; according unto that fore-ſignified by the Royal Pſalmiſt, that the Kings of Arabia and Saba ſhould bring their gifts, Pſal. 72. 10. Confirmed herein by the ſcituation of the Country lying Eaſt of Canaan; the authority of thoſe Fathers who lived neereſt to the time of our Saviours birth, Juſtin Martin, Tertullian, Cyprian; and by the teſtimony of Guillandinus Melchior above mentioned, affirming on the credible report of the people hereof, that they came neither out Meſopotamia, or Arabia Felix, as many wiſe men

men do believe, but out of Saba in Arabia the Deſart; which City (ſaith he) when my ſelf was there, was, as I judged, called Semiſcaſac.

Cities of note, in a Country ſo deſart and un-inhabited, we muſt look for few; yet ſome there are, inhabited by a more civil ſort of people, whom they call by the name of Moors; giving that of Arabian, to thoſe only who live roming and robbing up and down. Ptolomy gives the names of forty Cities and Villages in it (Civitates & vicos, ſaith the Latine) the memory of moſt of which is now utterly periſhed. Thoſe of moſt obſervation, 1. Sabe, or Saba, the habitation of thoſe Sabæans who pillaged Job; ſo called from Sheba the grand-ſon of Abraham by Keturah, mentioned, Gen.25.3. Of whom, and of the reſt of that Line, it is ſaid in the ſixth Verſe of that Chapter, That Abraham gave them gifts, and ſent them away from Iſaac Eaſt-ward unto the Eaſt-country, now called Semiſcaſac, as is thought by Melchior. 2. Theman, which poſſibly may be the Country of Eliphaz the Themanite, one of the Viſitants of Job. As 3. Shuah, on the North hereof was probably of Bildad, another of them, hence ſurnamed the Shuite. 4. Tharſacas, by Pliny called Aphipolis. 5. Zagmais, near the Perſian Gulf, in the Country of the Raubeni, ſuppoſed to be deſcended from Miſhma, the fourth ſon of Iſmael. 6. Phunton the 36th. 7. Oboth the 37th Manſion of the children of Iſrael. 8. Rheganna, another of thoſe named by Ptolomy, in the Greek Copies called Beganna. Of any Town of note now being, more then Semiſcaſac, before named, I finde nothing certain.

The firſt inhabitants of this Country, of whom there is any certain Conſtat, were the poſterity of Huz, the ſon of Nachor, and the ſons of Abraham by Keturah: of whoſe being ſetled in theſe parts, we had before good teſtimony from the Book of God; and intermixt with them lived ſome of the deſcendants of Iſmael alſo. For if the Adubeni, whom Ptolomy calleth the Agubeni, fetch their original from Adbeel the third, and the Raubeni, from Miſhmai the fifth ſon of Iſmael, as ſome ſay they do; I ſee no reaſon but the whole Country might be called Kedar, from Kedar the ſecond ſon, as well as from the tawny complexions of the people of it. From them deſcended the Tribes or Nations ſpoken of by Ptolomy; that is to ſay, the Orcheni, Chaucabeni, Auſitæ, Maſoni, Materni, and Agræi, beſides the Adubeni, and Raubeni, already ſpecified. But being a diſ-joynted people, not under any ſetled form of Government, not poſſeſſed of any thing worth looking after, they were either held not worth the conquering, in regard of their penury; or elſe unconquerable in reſpect of their Country, impaſſable for great Armies, by reaſon of the rolling ſands, and want of all things. Yet I conceive, that lying ſo neer to the Chaldæans, they followed the fortunes of that mighty Monarchy; Subjects unto it whilſt it ſtood, and after Tributaries unto thoſe who ſucceſſively poſſeſſed themſelves of the Supream power. Nor looked at by the Romans, or regarded by them, who aimed at wealth as honour, in their expedition; nor otherwiſe ſubject to the Turk at this preſent time, then as they can make uſe of him and his protection in their frequent robberies; but counted of as a part of the Turkiſh Empire, becauſe the more civil Arabians are indeed his Subjects.

2. ARABIA PETRÆA.

ARABIA PETRÆA (now called Barra, Baraab, and Barthalaba) hath on the Eaſt, Arabia Deſerta, and part of Sinus Perſicus, or the Bay of Perſia: On the Weſt, the Iſthmus which joyneth Africa to Aſia; and part of the Red-ſea, or Gulf of Arabia. On the North, Paleſtine; and on the South, a long ridge of Mountains, which divide it from Arabia Felix.

It had this name either from the rockineſs of the Soil hereof, or more properly from Petra, the chief City of it, called alſo by Ethicus, Sicaria, but I know not why: by the Hebrews Chus, generally tranſlated Æthiopia: by William of Tyre, Arabia ſecunda, Felix being reckoned for the firſt. By Strabo, Ptolomy and Pliny, it is called Nabathæa, which name it had from Nabaioth, the eldeſt of the twelve ſons of Iſmael, though properly that name belonged only to thoſe parts of it which lay next Judæa; fruitful, though joyning to the Deſarts: and thus remembred by the Poet, as an Eaſtern Country.

Eurus ad Auroram, Nabathæaque regna receſſit.
Eurus unto the Eaſt did flie,
Where fruitful Nabathe doth lie.

The Country much of the ſame nature with the other, but in ſome parts thereof more fertile if well manured: and in the time of Marcellinus, affirmed to be a rich Land, flouriſhing with variety of Trade and traffick; but for the moſt part full of untravellable Deſarts, except to thoſe which carry their proviſions with them for fear of ſtarving, and go in great companies, or Caravans for fear of robbing: and yet much travelled by Merchants who traffick into Ægypt, and Babylonia; the commodities whereof they lay on Camels, which are the ſhips of Arabia, as their Seas, the Deſarts. For upon one of theſe Camels they will lay ordinarily 600. and ſometimes 1000 pound weight; yet not afford him water above once in four daies, not oftner in fourteen, if there be occaſion. So that the Camel carrying ſo great a burden, and ſeldom f[illegible]er than 500, going in one voyage; the Merchant if he ſcapeth robbing, makes a rich return. Of theſe Deſarts, the moſt memorable are thoſe of Sin and Pharan, in which the Iſraelites ſo long wandered: not beautified with Graſs. nor adorned with Trees, the Palm only excepted; nor furniſhed with water, but by Rain, or Miracle.

The people of it, for the moſt part, deſcended of the ſons of Chus, and Iſmael, intermixed with the Madianites, deſcending from Abraham by Keturah, and the Amalekites, deſcended probably from Amalek, the grand-ſon of Eſau, mentioned Gen. 3,6. but all united at the laſt iu the name of Saracus. This name derived, as ſome think, from Sarra, ſignifying a Deſart, and ſaken which ſignifieth to inhabit, becauſe they live for the moſt part in theſe deſart places: as others ſay, from Sarak, ſignifying a Thief or Robber, agreeable to that of Arabia, before delivered. This laſt moſt ſuitable to their nature, and beſt liked by Scaliger. Saraceni à vicinis dicuntur ab Elſarak, i. e. λῃστρικῶς νομαδικῶς, quòd rapinis victitent. So he, in his ſecond book de Emend. Temp. A people not reckoned of in the former times, till made remarkable by their conqueſt of a great part of the world; but alwaies counted warlike and martial men. Of whom take this Character out of Marcellinns; ‘The Saracens (ſaith he) whom we are neither to ‘wiſh for our friends or enemies, are a martial people, half-naked, clad as far as the groin with painted ‘Caſſocks, ranging up and down on Camels and ſwift horſes, as well in peace as troubleſome times. ‘Not uſed unto the Plow, to plant Trees, or get their living by Tillage, they wander from one place to ‘another, without houſe or home, or any conſtant dwelling place, or the uſe of Laws: nor can they ‘long endure the ſame either Air or Soil; the manner of their lives being alwaies fleeting, like ravenous ‘Kites; which if they chance to ſpy a prey, ſnatch it up in their flight; or if they chance to faſten on it ‘as it lieth on the ground, they make no long ſtay. Their food is chiefly upon Veniſon, and ſtore of ‘milk, herbs which they gather from the ground, and birds which they get by fowling; but altogether ‘ignorant of Corn and Wine. Their wives they hire only for a time, though for a ſhew of Matrimony, they preſent their husbands with a Spear and a Tent, as in way of Dowry; but they part with ‘them when they pleaſe. Both Sexes moſt extreamly given to carnal luſts; the women as rambling as ‘the men, married in one place, and brought to bed in another; leaving their children where they fall, ‘without more care of them. So far, and to this purpoſe, he.

Rivers of note here are not many. The principal are, 1. That called Trajanus amnis, or the River of Trajan, which paſſing thorow this Country endeth his courſe in the Red-ſea. 2. Rhinocorura, called in Scripture the torrent of Ægypt, which riſing in this Country, and paſſing by the borders of Idumaa, hath its fall in the Lake of Sirbon; and together with the waters thereof, loſeth it ſelf at laſt in the Mediterrancan.

With Mountains it is better ſtored, and thoſe of eminent obſervation; as, 1. Mount S*inai*, famous in all ages, for the promulgation of the Law; and of late times for a Monaſtery of Maronites, on the top thereof. The hill ſo high, that both ſhores of the Red-ſea may be thence ſeen: but eaſie of aſcent, by reaſon of ſteps cut out of the Rock: which notwithſtanding, he that beginneth to go up it at the break of day, will hardly overcome the top of it till the after-noon. The Monaſtery made an Epiſcopal See, and formerly very well endowed, as appeareth by the Letters of Eugenius Biſhop thereof, to the Arch-Duke Charles, Anno 1569. complaining that the Turk had ſold all their Lands, and that himſelf and the Monks were fain to pawn their holy Veſſels, and take up mony on uſury. Here is alſo a Meſque, or Meſquit of Turks, who reſort in pilgrimage to this hill, as well as the Chriſtians. 2. Mount Horeb, where the Iſraelites worſhipped the Molten Calf, about a mile and a half diſtant from Mount S*inai*, but not ſo high: on the top of which is a Church alſo; and a Monaſtery of Coloires, or Greek Monks, at the bottom, exceeding hoſpitable to ſtrangers, whom they entertain of free coſt, and cheerfully ſhew them all the places worth obſervation, which the Scripture mentioneth in that Tract. Both hills by Ptolomy called Melani, or the black Mountains: the laſt now called Orel. 3. Mount Hor, bordering on Idumæa: and memorable for the death of Aaron.

Places of moſt obſervation, 1. Petra, the name-giver to this part, at firſt called Recem, and at that time belonging to Midian; afterwards called Selah, when pertaining to the Idumaans; but falling under the power of the Arabians, it is now called Crat. Beſt known in holy Scripture by the name of Selah, before-mentioned, which ſignifies the ſame with the Latine Petra. A City of great note and ſtrength in all times fore-going, taken by Amaziah the King of Juda, 2 Kings 14.17. and by him called Jock-heel, but in vain beſieged by Scaurus, a Roman General, who finding the place to be impregnable, was content by the perſwaſion of Antipater, to take a ſum of mony and raiſe his ſiege. Nor did the Emperor Trajan ſpeed much better at it, his Souldiers being ſtill beat off in all their aſſaults, the very next man to him ſlain with a Dart, and himſelf forced to caſt away his Imperial Habit, and fly for his life: the Heavens themſelves, if Dion (who is never ſparing of the like prodigies) may be believed, fighting againſt the Romans with thuuder, lightning, whirwinds, and tempeſts, as often as they made any approaches to it; But in the end ſubdued with the reſt of the Country. In ſuch eſteem, by reaſon of the ſtrength of it, by the S*oldans* of Ægypt, that they kept here their choiceſt treaſures; and in the courſe of the Holy Wars, much aimed at by the Turks and Chriſtians, as the key that opened the Gates of Paleſtine: on the South border whereof, not far from Mount Hor before-mentioned, the Town is ſcituate: the Metropolis of the Province when firſt under the Romans: and made the ſeat of a Latine Biſhop, when the Chriſtians of the Weſt were the Lords thereof. 2. Boſra, ſaid to have been built by Auguſtus Cæſar, becauſe by him repaired, when decayed and ruined: afterwards by Alexander Severus made a Colony of the Romans. This laſt moſt certain, and for ſuch teſtified by this ancient Inſcription, in an ancient Coyn. COL. BOSTRAN. T.R. ALEXANDRIANÆ? Memorable alſo for the Birth of Philip the Emperor, one of that Alexanders next Succeſſors; by whom it was cauſed for a time to be called Philippus: for the Metropolitan dignity removed hither from Petra, ſomewhat before the time of Juſtinian, but by whom I finde not; and for being the Epiſcopal See of Titus (hence ſur[illegible]med) Boſtrenus, a Reverend Father of the Church in the time of Julian the Apoſtate. A City of as great antiquity as the moſt that be, mentioned Gen. 36.33. though there accounted of as a City of Edom, to which at that time it did belong; and is ſtill remaining, and well known by the name of Buſſereth. 3. Elama, on a bay of the Red-ſea, called hence Sinus Elaniticus. 4. Phara, reckoned by Ptolomy for a chief Town of this Tract, from whence the Wilderneſs of Paran ſeems to take its name. 5. Berenice, ſo called from ſome of the Queens of Egypt, but better known by the name of Ezion-geber, one of the Stations or incampings of the children of Iſrael; and made by Solomon the ordinary harbour for his Ships, which ſailed to Ophir in the Eaſt-Indies. 6. Sur, the chief City of the Amalekites, giving name to the Wilderneſſe or Deſart of Sur, coming cloſe up to it: remarkable for the firſt encamping of the Tribes of Iſrael, after their miraculous paſſage over the Red Sea; and the defeat which Saul gave to the Amalekites, whom he ſmote from Havilah to this place. 7. Havilah, ſo called from Havila the Son of Chus, being the furtheſt border of theſe Amalekites, and Iſmaelites, on the Gulfe of Perſia, as Sur was on the Red Sea, or Gulfe of Arabia. 8. Madian, ſo called of Madian the ſon of Abraham by Keturah, ſituate towards the Red Sea alſo; the City of Jethro, whoſe daughter Zipporah was the wife of Moſes: who flying from the Court of Pharaoh King of Egypt, was by Gods ſecret providence directed thither; that keeping the flocks of Jethro in the Deſarts adjoyning, he might acquaint himſelf with the wayes and paſſages, thorow which he after was to lead the houſe of Iſrael. 9. Rephaim, the encamping place of Moſes, where he diſcomfited the Amalekites: and to which the ſaid Jethro came to him, with his wife and children, adviſing him to eaſe himſelf of ſome part of that burden, which the government of ſo great a people would elſe bring upon him. 10. Kadeſh-barnea, the ſtation of the Tribes, when the ſpies which were ſent to diſcover the Land of Canaan, returned back unto them; memorable for the death of Miriam the Propheteſſe. And 11. Thara, no leſs memorable for the mutiny and puniſhment of Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, the place mentioned Numb. 23. 27. But others will have, 12. Makheloth, mentioned, v. 25. of that Chapter, to be the ſtage of that action; the Scriptures being ſilent in this particular. The reſt of their encamping places, being moſt of them in this part of Arabia, I omit of purpoſe, as obvious in the Scripture unto every Reader: as I do alſo ſome of the Cities of Moab and Ammon, accompted of by Ptolomy as Cities of this Province; but ſpoken of already, in our Deſcription of Paleſtine, to which more properly belonging.

The old inhabitants of this Country were the Midianites, the Iſmaelites, the Amalekites, and the Children of Chus; who dwelling promiſcuouſly together, are ſometimes uſed for one another: the Merchants which bought Joſeph of his Brethren, being indifferently called Midianites, and Iſmaelites, Geneſis 37. 28. And Zipporah the wife of Moſes, who queſtionleſſe was a daughter of Madian, being by Miriam, and Aaron, called an Ethiopian or Chuſite, as in way of reproach, Numb. 12. 1. But being they were different Nations, and ſuch as had ſome ſpeciall engagement, with or againſt the children of Iſrael, we will conſider them by themſelves, till we have brought them into one body, by the name of Chuſites, Ethiopians, or Arabians, which are all the ſame.

And firſt, the MADIANITES were ſuch of the poſterity of Madian, the ſon of Abraham by Keturah, who preſerving the knowledge of the true God, withdrew themſelves from all communion with the Idolatrous Canaanites, at ſuch time as the reſt of their brethren did aſſociate with them; and ſetled themſelves more towards the banks of the Red Sea, where they did all good offices to the children of Iſrael, as they paſſed thorow their Country. Of theſe the Kenites were a branch, as appeareth Judges. 1. 16. where Jethro the Prince or Prieſt of Madian, is called a Kenite: ſome of which turned Proſelytes, and dwelt with the Iſraelites in Canaan; of which race Heber the Kenite, the husband of Jael, who ſlew Siſera, was undoubtedly one. The reſt continuing mingled with the Amalekites, till the time of Saul, were by him warned (in memory of former courteſies) to withdraw themſelves from them; leſt they ſhould periſh with them in the ſame deſtruction. Afterwards we hear little of either people, loſing their name in the greater Nation of the Iſmaelites, with whom intermingled, or paſſing with them into the ſame common notion of Arabians, Chuſites, or Ethiopians.

Secondly, nor were the AMALEKITES, though a greater and more powerful Nation, of much more continuance; deſcended, as it is conceived, from Amalek, the Grand-ſon of Eſau, (though I deny not but there are ſome reaſons to be urged againſt that opinion) and planted on the back of the Edomites, as their Guard or Outwork. A people miſchievouſly bent againſt thoſe of Iſrael, as if they had inherited the hatred which Eſau their fore-father did bear to Jacob, whom they violently ſet on at Rephidim, when they ſuppoſed them ſpent and wearied with their flight from Egypt. And though diſcomfited in that battel, yet they continued in their malice againſt the Tribes, joyning firſt with the Canaanites againſt them when they were in their march; and after with the Midianites, when not well ſetled in their new poſſeſſions. A provocation ſo ill taken by the Lord of Hoſts, becauſe unnatural, and ill grounded, that he declared his reſolution, from the time of the Battel of Rephidim, to put out the remembrance of Amalek from under Heaven, Exod. 17. 14. Accordingly, when the children of Iſrael were provided for it, he commanded Saul to ſet upon them, and to ſlay both man and woman, infant and ſuckling, yea, their ſheep and cattel. But ſome of them eſcaped this ſlaughter, and fell, not long after, upon Ziglag, the retiring place of David, which they took and ranſacked; but being by him followed, on the firſt intelligence, they were eaſily overthrown, and the prey recovered. Their malice yet ſurvived their power; and what they could not do by their forces, they endeavoured to effect by joyning with the Ammonites, Moabites, and other enemies of David, in their warres againſt him. And this was ultimnm conamen, one of the laſt flaſhes of their dying light: nothing done by them worth remembrance of the times ſucceeding, moſt of the Nation being worn out. and thoſe few which were left retiring to the Mountains of Edom, but thereof alſo diſpoſſeſſed by the Simeonites, during the reign of Hezekiah.

Thirdly, The ISMAELITES, deſcending from Iſmael, the ſon of Abraham by Hagar, branched into twelve great Nations, and grown wondrous populous, ſpred themſelves over a great part of theſe three Arabia's: all of them either Thieves or Merchants, trading to Egypt in ſpicery, and balm, and myrrhe; or robbing thoſe which traded in the like commodities. Called alſo Hagarens in the Scripture, as 1 Chron. 5.10. Pſalm 83.6, &c. and by that name well known to many of the ancient writers. A people for the moſt part of a vagabond and roguiſh life, more given to ſpoil, than any honeſt courſe of living, which made every Traveller and Merchant to be armed againſt them; ſo verifying the prediction which was given of Iſmael, that he ſhould be a wilde man, having his hand againſt every man and every mans hand againſt him. Saint Hierome ſo conceives that Prophecy to have been accompliſhed. More fitly verified perhaps, when in and under the name of Saracens (by which, and by the name of Scenites, they were more generally known to the Greeks and Romans) they made ſuch foul havock in the world, and were eſteemed the Common enemies of all Civill Nations. Never ſo governable in their beſt and moſt orderly times, as to acknowledge King or Law, till made one body with the Chuſites, and the reſt of thoſe Nations: and then no further, then it ſtood with their luſt or liking.

Fourthly, as for the Chuſites, though they permitted the Nations above ſpecified to inhabite in thoſe Deſarts and waſte places, which themſelves either could not people, or cared not for; yet were they always of moſt power, and gave name to that whole tract of ground, containing now all Petræa, the South part of Deſerta, and the mountains which divide Petræa from Arabia Felix; which from them was called Chus, or the Land of Chus. Rendred in all places of the Old Teſtament, by the name of Ethiopia; firſt by the Septuagint, and afterwards by all the Fathers, Greek and Latine, the Vulgar tranſlation of the Bible, and almoſt all other Tranſlations at this day extant, and rendred right enough at firſt, as in all times ſince, though by ſome miſtaken: who having never heard of any other Ethiopia, then that in Africk, have transferred thither all thoſe actions and Texts of Scripture, which are meant of this. The Septuagint, no doubt, were not ſo ignorant of the affairs of their next neighbouring Nation, as not to know by what name they were called by the Greeks, their then Lords and Maſters. And he that looks into the Hiſtory of Herodotus, who lived 150 yeares before that Tranſlation will finde, that by the Gracians they were called Ethiopians; and called ſo queſtionleſſe from the ſelf-ſame reaſon; that is to ſay, the ſwarthineſs or Sun-burntneſs of their complexion, as the Ethiops of Africk were; that name being framed of the Greek word Αἴθω, ſignifying to burn; and Ὤψ, a countenance; by reaſon of their tawny and Sun-burnt Countenances. For ſpeaking of the huge Army of Xerxes againſt the Greeks, he doth thus proceeed, Ἀραβίων δὲ καὶ Αἰθιόπων τῶν ὑπὲρ Αἰγύπτου οἰκημένων ἦρχε Ἀρσάμης, &c. “ Arſames, ‘ (ſaith he) was Captain of the Arabians (he meaneth the Troglodites) and Ethiopians, which are be- ‘ yond Egypt: but the Eaſtern Ethiopians were ranked with the Indians, nothing differing from the other ‘ in the ſtructure of their bodies, but their hair and voyce only; the Eaſtern Ethiopians wearing their ‘ hair ſmooth, thoſe of Lybia curled. The Ethiops of Aſia were armed like the Indians, but the Ethiops ‘ of Africa were arrayed with the skins of beaſts. Here then we have an Aſian Ethiopia in the time of Herodotus; the ſame acknowledged by Pauſanias an old Greek writer, and by Philoſtratus, after him, though they look for it in the wrong place: the firſt amongſt the Seres, in the North of Aſia; the other on the River Ganges, too much in the Eaſt. Nor doth Æthicus, one of the old Coſmographers, publiſhed by Simlerus, ſhoot more neer to the mark, who ſpeaking of the River Tigris, ſaith that it burieth it ſelfe and runneth under the ground in Ethiopia: Which though Simler doth interpret of theſe parts of Arabia, yet queſtionleſſe that Authour meaneth it of the Countreys about Mount Taurus; where that River doth indeed run under ground, and having paſſed under thoſe vaſt mountains, riſeth up again.

But what need further ſearch be made to finde out the ſcituation of this Ethiopia, when it is bounded out ſo plainly in the holy Scripture? For when it is ſaid of Zipphorah, the wife of Moſes, that ſhe was an Ethiopian woman, Num. 12.1. who is well known to have been a Native of this Country; and when it is ſaid in 2 Chron. 21.16. that the Lord ſtirred up againſt Jehoram the ſpirit of the Philiſtims, and of the Arabians that were neere the Ethiopians: It muſt needs be that the Ethiopia here ſpoken of, muſt be conterminous to the reſt of Arabia, and be intended of that Country wherein Madian was. So where God threatneth by the mouth of the Prophet Ezekiel, that he would lay waſte the land of Egypt, from the Tower of Syene, even unto the borders of Ethiopia, chap 29.10. that is to ſay, from one end there of unto the other: it followeth neceſſarily, that Ethiopia there meant muſt be this part of Arabia, or the Land of Chus, as the bound of Egypt, moſt remote from the Tower of Syene, which all Geographers acknowledge to be in the extream South parts thereof, towards the Cataracts of Nilus. For to expound it, as ſome do, of Ethiopia in Africk, on the borders whereof Syene ſtood; and ſtood ſo indifferently betwixt it and Egypt, that Stephanus an ancient Writer makes it very doubtfull to which of the two it did belong, were to make the Scripture ſpeak plain non-ſence: as plain as if a man ſhould ſay, that the French conquered all the Netherlands, from Graveling to Flanders: or that the ſword hath ranged over all England, from Berwick to Scotland. As when we have found this Ethiopia in the Old Teſtament to be neer the Philiſtims on the one ſide, and the land of Egypt on the other; ſo may we finde it to be bounded alſo on the Eaſt with Babylonia or Chaldea: the River of Gihon, which is ſaid to compaſs the whole Land of Ethiopia (or the Land of Chus) Gen. 2.13. being no more then a branch of the River Euphrates, which falleth into the Lakes of Chaldea. So that the tranſlation of the Septuagint, in reading Chuſites, or the Land of Chus, by Ethiopia, needs no ſuch alteration or emendation, as ſome men ſuppoſe. The miſtakes (whereof there have been many) which ariſe from hence, not being to be charged on them, or on their Tranſlation, but on the ignorance of the Reader, or error of ſuch Expoſitors, who dreaming of no other Ethiopia then of that in Africk, have made the Scriptures ſpeak things as it never meant, and carried theſe Chuſites into the African Ethiopia, where they never were. And yet perhaps it may be ſaid,that this poſterity of Chus,being ſtreightned in their own poſſeſſions, or willing to ſeek new adventures, might have croſſed over the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia (being but ſeven miles broad where narroweſt) and mingling with the ſons of Ludim on the other ſide,might either give the name of Ethiopians to them, or receive it from them.

Now to go forwards with the ſtory;the firſt great action attributed to theſe Chuſites, or Arabian Ethops,incorporated with the reſt of thoſe mingled Nations,is the expedition of Zerah the King hereof, againſt Aſa King of Judah, drawing after him an Army of a million, and three hundred Chariots of war; (the greateſt Army ever read of in unqueſtioned ſtory)but for all that, diſcomfited by the Lord of Hoſts, on the prayers of Aſa, and all the ſpoil of that huge Army carried to Hieruſalem. After this Tirrakah; another of theſe Ethiopian Kings, finding how dangerous the great growth of the Aſſyrian Kingdom might prove unto him,prepared a puiſſant Army againſt Senacherib,then beſieging Libna,threatning the conqueſt of all Judah, and invading Egypt:upon the news of whoſe approach, Senacheribs forces which were even upon the gaining of Peluſium, the Gate of Egypt,were fain to diſlodge and provide for their ſafety.For though Herodotus call Senacherib King of Arabia and Aſſyria,yet was he Maſter only of thoſe parts of Arabia which had been formerly poſſeſſed by the Kings of Iſrael, being no more then ſome few cities of Petræa,bordering next unto them , or perhaps called ſo only in reſpect of thoſe parts of Syria and Meſopotamia, which were ſometimes comprehended under the name of Arabia,as before is ſaid. What part they after took in the great war betwixt Nebuchadnezzar and Pharaoh Necho King of Egypt, is not hard to ſay.For beſides that,the ſame reaſons of ſtate obliging them to ſide with the Egyptian,were ſtill in force;their giving Necho leave to paſs through their Country with his Army,to invade the Babylonians on the banks of Euphrates, make that plain enough. Now that both Tirrakah and Zerah, were Kings of this Aſian, and not of the African Ethiopia, is moſt clear and evident : partly in regard the Kings of Egypt would never ſuffer ſuch huge Armies to paſs thorow the whole length of their Dominions;but principally becauſe it is ſaid in the holy Scriptures, tha[illegible]ſa having overthrown that vaſt Army of Zerah,ſmote all the Cities about Gerar, which formerly had belonged unto the Philiſtims, but were then poſſeſſed by theſe Chuſites,and their aſſociates.After this,either as Confederates or Subjects,we finde them aiding unto Xerxes, in his war on Greece : and like enough it was, that in Alexanders march from Egypt towards Perſia,they ſubmitted to him,as did all the other Countreys thorow which he paſſed. He being dead,Antigonus, one of his great Commanders, ſend Athenæus with an Army to bring them in, who being trained into an ambuſh, was diſcomfited by them. Demetrius the ſon of Antigonus, thinking that he had done enough in revenge of that overthrow, by compelling them to ſue for peace. In the time of the Seleucian race in Syria, we finde them governed by Kings of their own, moſt of them called by the name of Aretas;of which one was of ſpecial note in the declining fortunes of the Seleucidans,for bidding very fair for the Crown of that Countrey;and being a great ſtickler in the wars of Jewry, in the time of Hircanus the fourth,King of the race of the Maccabees,to whom at the requeſt of Antipater,the father of Herod, he gave hopes of aid; and on thoſe hopes was poſſeſſed of Medaba, and other Towns of good importance, which Alexander the father of Hircanus had regained from the Syrians, and laid unto the Crown of Jewry, to which,as parts of Ituria; and anciently poſſeſſed by the Tribes of Iſrael, he might make ſome claim. Another there was of the ſame name, and of no leſs power, whom we finde to have been warred upon by Herod, about the time of the battel of Actium, and for the moſt part vanquiſhed by him;and finally a third of more power then either, mentioned by St. Paul: 2 Cor. 11. 32. as Lord of Damaſcus.In the flouriſhing of the Roman fortunes,the Kings hereof having firſt aided Mithridates and Tigranes, in the war againſt them, ſubmitted themſelves unto Lucullus, being then no nearer to them then Armenia major. The like they did to Pompey alſo,being then in Judea.Firſt vanquiſhed by Ælius Gallus in the time of Auguſtus; but the victory not improved to an abſolute conqueſt, till the time of Trajan,when partly by his perſonal preſence,and partly by the valour and good fortune of Palma, his Lieutenant, they were fully vanquiſhed,and brought into the form of a Roman province : but ſo that they had Kings of their own (Vaſſals and Feudataries of the Empire) as in former times; continuing in that condition till the riſe of Mahomet. Of which more hereafter.

3. ARABIA FELIX.

ARABIA FELIX is bounded on the Eaſt with the Perſian; on the Weſt with the Arabian Gulf; on the North with a long ridge of mountains, which part it from Deſerta and Petræa; and on the South with the boundleſs Ocean. Environed on three parts with the Sea, on the fourth with rough impaſſable mountains; in ſituation and figure much reſembling Italy.

It had the name of Arabia Fælix from the fertility and happy condition of it;being eſteemed the moſt fruitful and pleaſant Countrey in all Aſia, abounding with Myrrhe, Balſamum, Frankincenſe, Gold, & precious ſtones:by Curtius called Odorum fertilitate nobilis Regio, from the abundance of Frankincenſe, wherewith enriched beyond all others. Concerning which there goeth a ſtory, that when Alexander in his Adoleſcency or Boyage was ſacrificing to the Gods, and caſt into the fire with both hands great ſtore of Frankincenſe and Myrrhe; Leonidas his Governor bid him be more ſparing of thoſe precious and dear commodities, till he was Maſter of the Countrey in which they grew. Which Alexander remembring,when he had brought almoſt all the Eaſt under his obedience, he ſent unto Leonidas a ſhip laden with Frankincenſe,biding him from thenceforth ſerve the gods more liberally.But aſwel for the reaſon of this adjunct,as a more perfect character and deſcription of it; take along this of Ammianus Marcellinus,who deſcribes it thus,‘On the eaſt and ſouth hereof(ſaith he)are the happy Arabians,ſo called ‘becauſe ſo rich in corn,as well as plenteous in cattel,vines,& odoriferous ſpices of all kinds; ſhut up betwixt ‘the Red-Sea & the Perſian Gulf,and ſo acquainted with all bleſſings, which either element can afford: ‘well furniſhed with Roads and quiet harbors for ſhipping,the Towns of trade & merchandize ſtanding ‘very thick; the retiring houſes of the Kings,paſſing neat and ſumptuous. “ tains of medicinal waters, they enjoy divers Brooks and Rivers very clear and pure, and a temperature “ of Air exceeding healthy; ſo that whoſoever conſidereth all things aright, may well conclude, that “ there is nothing wanting to the accompliſhment of its felicity in the higheſt degree. So Ammianus “ Marcellinus. To which we need add nothing more to ſet forth its happineſs, than that Danæus in his comment on Saint Auſtins Enchiridion ad Laurentium, is perſwaded that it was the local place of Paradiſe. Dicitur (ſaith he) Paradiſi terreſtris Regio pars quædam eſſe Arabiæ, quæ nunc dicitur Fælix. But it hath other names beſides this of Fælix. By the Arabians themſelves called Jeman, and Al-jeman (Ajaman corruptly by the Turks) which in that tongue ſignifieth the South, or Southern Region; by Virgil it is named Panchaia, quaſi tota dehiſcens, becauſe of the many chops and chinks which the ardour of the Sun makes in the ſands thereof, though by him much extolled alſo for its plenty of Frankincenſe.

Totaque thuriferis Phanchaia pinguis arenis,
Famed are the whole Panchaian lands
For rich and incenſe-bearing ſands.

The People antiently, though more civil than the reſt of the Arabians, had yet many ſtrange and barbarous cuſtoms. Adultery amongſt them was puniſhed with death, as in other places, but onely he was held an Adulterer, which enjoyed any that was not his own kinſwoman, be ſhe his ſiſter or his mother, and ſo they kept themſelves in their own families, community of wives or women was eſteemed no crime. And of this there is a tale in Strabo, that a King of this Countrey had 15. ſons, and but one daughter, who according to the cuſtoms hereof, was the common wife of all her brethren: every of which had a ſtaff of like making, which when he went in unto his ſiſter he did leave at the door; and by ſo doing did forbid entrance to the reſt, til it were removed. The young Lady wearied with a continual ſupply of dalliance, ſecretly procured a ſtaff like unto the reſt, which when ſhe was deſirous to prohibit their acceſſes to her, ſhe left at her chamber door; and by that means did many times enjoy her deſired privacy. At laſt it hapned that all the brothers being together, one of them departed towards his ſiſters lodging; where finding a ſtaff before the door, and knowing that he had left his brethren in one place together, he accuſed her of Adultery: but the truth being made known, the Lady was quitted, and their viſits aftewards reſtrained. Of dead bodies they took no care, not ſo much as of their Chiefs, or Princes; but left them to the cuſtody of the next dunghill. They bragged much of their deſcent from Jupiter; & neglected all ſciences and arts, as diſparagements to ſo great nobility. Commendable onely in the keeping of their faith and promiſes, and in that moſt punctual. Much of the ſame condition are the preſent Inhabitants, ſave that leſs faithful in their contracts; and by their law reſtrained from medling with the wives of others, permitted many of their own. Some there are of them which apply themſelves to the grazing of cattel, and the reſt to Merchandize, wherein very cautious and cunning; but hating to this day al Mechanical Arts. A Nation from the beginning unmixed with others, till the coming of the Turks amongſt them, of which but few, and thoſe diſpoſed of in garriſons: boaſting of their nobility, and glorying in nothing more than their greateſt ſhame, namely, that the falſe Prophet Mahomet was their Countreyman; whoſe impieties are here generally embraced and followed.

Amongſt the rarities of this Countrey, ſome count the Phœnix, which growing old, burneth her ſelf in a neſt of ſpices, and from thence a young one is ingendred; one of them onely at a time, which after a life of five or ſix hundred years, thus reneweth her kind. But this tradition, queſtioned in former times by Pliny and ſome others, is now proved a fiction; contrary both unto divinity and natural reaſon: though ſome of the Fathers made uſe of it as an argument to prove the Reſurrection, againſt the Gentiles, by whom the Tradition was believed more common; but of no leſs obſervation is the Oſtridge, a bird which ſwalloweth all it findeth, be it ſtones or iron. They delight chiefly in the Deſarts, in the ſands whereof they lay their eggs, and then fogetting where they left them, ſit on thoſe they meet next. In that reſpect accounted for a ſimple fowl, though otherwiſe of wit enough to preſerve themſelves; keeping in flocks, and oftentimes with their fearful ſhrieches affrighting Paſſengers, to whom they do appear afar off like a Troop of horſemen. Their wings too little for their bodies, ſerve them not for flight, but to run more ſpeedily; and by that means not eaſily caught, though much laid in wait for for their skins, which the people ſell unto the Merchant with their feathers on them. Nor of leſs note is the Frankinſence, though of common uſe; almoſt peculiar to this Countrey, and here, but to thoſe parts thereof which were formerly poſſeſſed by the Sabæi: the wood out of which this gum proceedeth being about 100 miles long, and 50 broad; gathered onely in Spring and Autumn. More of this anon.

The Countrey is much commended by Ammianus, for plenty of Rivers; the principal whereof are ſaid by Ptolomy, to be 1. Betius. 2. Prion. 3. Harman. 4. Lar; but the modern names thereof I finde not. Many fair Lakes, and ſtore of large capacious Baies on each coaſt of the Sea, as 1. Sinns Elaniticus. 2. Sachalites. 3. Leanites. 4. Sinus Magoram. 5. Sinus Ichthiophagorun. 6. Meſſanites. 7. Sacer Sinus or the holy Bay, and 8. the Road or Naval ſtation, called Neogilla. Mountains of moſt note. 1. Thoſe which are called Melanes, at the entrance of the Perſian Gulf. 2. Cabubuthra, at the entrance of the Red ſea, or Gulf of Arabia. 3. Hippus. 4. Prionotus, not far from the River Prion, from whence ſo denominated. 5. Climax. 6. The Mountains called Dedymi, &c.

Towns of good note in ancient times it had very many, no Region affording unto Ptolomy the names of more; and amongſt thoſe, many commodious Ports for Traffick, the Sea begirting it for the ſpace of three thouſand miles and upwards. Of moſt importance and obſervation in thoſe times, were 1. Zebrum, 2. Badeo. 3. Rhabana. 4. Carman. 5. Manambis. 6. Sabe. 7. Are; the Royal ſeats of ſo many ſeveral Kingdoms, and therefore honored by Ptolomy with the title of Regiæ. Then there are 1. Macoſmos, 2. Meara, 3. Magara, 4. Sabbatha, 5. Mapha, and 6. Saphar, which he called Metropoles; as being the head Cities of ſome ſeveral Natrons. Amongſt the Ports, he reckoneth, 1. Soſip- pus, 2. Trulla, 3. Tretos, 4. Criptus, 5. Itamos, and 6. Moſcha: amongſt the moſt noted Empories or Towns of Traffick, 1. Muſa, 2. Ocelis, 3. Arabia, 4. Cane. Beſides which there are ſome which do preſerve the memory of their firſt Plantations, as, 1. Saphta, upon the Perſian Gulf, ſo called from Sabta the third Son of Chus, 2. Rhegama, or Regma, (as the Greek copies of Ptolomy have it) ſo named from Regma or Raama his ſixth Son; on the ſame Gulf alſo. 3. Sabe on the ſhores of the Red Sea. And 4. Sabe Regia, more within the Land, ſo called from Seba the eldeſt Son of the ſame Chus, from whom the rich and potent Nation of the Sabeans are to be derived. Out of all which, and many others by him named, we ſhall take more particular notice of ſome that follow. 1. Muſa, a noted port on the entrance of the Red Sea, frequented antiently by the Ethiopian and Egyptian Merchants; who there laded their ſhips with Frankincenſe, Myrrhe, Spices, and other commodities of this Country, bringing in, in exchange thereof, Saffron, Corne, Wine, Ointments, Purple-Dies, &c. 2. Sabe, the Regal ſeat of the Kings of the Sabeans, particularly of that Queen ſo memorized in holy Scripture; called in the old Teſtament the Queen of Sheba, from her Country and place of dwelling, in the new Teſtament, the Queen of the South, becauſe of the Southern ſcituation of it in reſpect of Judæa: ſaid there to come from the furtheſt part of the world, becauſe there was no part of the world which lay ſouth to the Country of the Sabeans, over which ſhe reigned. Scituate on a little Mountain, affirmed by Agatharcides to be πολὺ κάλλιστον τῶν κατὰ τὴν Ἀραβίαν, the moſt beautiful by far in all Arabia, and the Metropolis of the rich and potent Nation of the Sabæans: rich in all the excellencies of Nature, eſpecially in Frankincenſe, a gum peculiar to them onely, and growing here in a wood of about 100 miles long, and 50 broad; not gathered but in the ſpring and Autumn, nor then without great care, and many ceremonies. The Country hereabouts from hence called Thurifera, and this ſweet gum appropriated ſolely to it. Sabæi Arabum propter thura clariſſimi, as we find in Pliny; Solis eſt thurea virga Sabæis, as it is in Virgil; and finally—Thuriferos, fælicia Regna, Sabæos, in the Argonauticks of Valerius Flaccus. It was called alſo Mariaba, and by that name occurreth in ſome ancient Writers. 3. Saphar, more towards the Perſian Gulf, on the South-ſide of the mountain Climax, the chief City of the Homaritæ; adorned in times of Chriſtianity with a beautiful Temple. 4. Sabbatha, or Sabota, as Pliny calleth it, ſeated about the middeſt of the Country, on the top of an high and lofty hill, from whence it had a gallant proſpect on the fields adjoyning: antiently large and populous, and ſtrongly fortified, having no fewer than 60 Temples within the walls; the principle they conſecrated unto Sabis the God of their Nation; to whom they offered the tithe of their Frankincenſe, ubi decimas Deo quem Sabin vocant, menſura non pondere capiunt Sacerdotes, as we read in Pliny.

But theſe and almoſt all the reſt being grown out of knowledge, there have riſen in their rooms, 1. Egra, on the ſhore of the Red Sea, neer the Bay called Sinus Elaniticus; by Ptolomy called Arga, by the Arabians themſelves, Algiar; the Port Town to Medina, from which about three dayes journey diſtant. 2. Jathrib, or Jatrib, in the way betwixt Algiar, and Medina, the birth-place of Mahomet; by whom fortified with a mud-wall, as his place of retreat in the firſt beginnings of his fortunes. 3. Medina, commonly called Medina Talmabi, corruptly from Medinatho luabi, that is to ſay, the City of the Prophet: ſo called from the Sepulchre of Mahomet, that vile Impoſture, which is there to be ſeen, although not in ſuch an iron coffin, or drawn up to the roof of the Temple by virtue of an Adamant there placed, as ſome deliver. The Town ſcituate in a deſolate and barren place, bordering on Arabia Petræa; but of great trade, rich, and well in habited: the Sepulchre of that falſe Prophet drawing thither a continuall reſort of Pilgrims. The Temple gorgeous having 3000 lamps in it, which burn continually. The Sepulchre or Tomb incloſed within an Iron grate, but of no magificence or beauty: covered with a carpet of Green Velvet, which is ſent hither yearly by the Grand Signieur; the old one being taken off, and cut into innumerable ſhreds or pieces, and ſold for Relicks by the Prieſts, (to ſuch as come in Pilgrimage thither) to their great enriching, 4. Cufa, the ordinary reſidence of the firſt Caliphs, till the removing of the imperial Seat to Damaſcus, in Syria; and after that, the uſual place of meeting for conſultation in affairs for State, relating to the peace of this Country, and the common intereſt of this people: as memorable for the Sepulchre of Mortis Hali, the Progenitor of the Perſian Sophies, as Medina is for that of Mahomet. 4. Meccha, ſuppoſed to be the Mechara of Ptolomy, ſcituate in the like barren ſoyl, not far from Medina, but of far greater reſort and traffick: the whole wealth, in a manner, of this Country, together with the commodities of Perſia, and India, being firſt brought hither; and from hence on Camels backs tranſported into Egypt, Syria, Paleſtine, and other parts of the Turkiſh Empire. Unwalled; and either for that cauſe, or for concealment of their fopperies from the eyes of Chriſtians, it is made death for any Chriſtian for to come within five miles of it. Utterly deſtitute of water, but what they keep in Ciſterns, from one ſhower of rain unto another, or elſe brought thither with great charge; otherwiſe pleaſantly ſeated, rich, and containing about 6000 families: every year viſited with three Caravans or troops of Merchants and Pilgrims, from India, Damaſcus, and Grand Caire: who having done their buſineſſe and devotion there, go afterward in Pilgrimage to Medina alſo, to the great enriching of both places. 6. Ziden, The Haven town of Mecca, from which diſtant about forty miles, ſcituate on the Red Sea, in a ſandy ſoyl, unwalled and much expoſed both to wind and weather; but wealthy, well-built, and of great reſort. 7. Zebit, now the Metropolis of the Country, ſcituate about halfe a dayes journey from the Red Sea, in a large plain between two Mountains: a Rivulet of the ſame name paſſing by it: well-traded for Sugars, Spice, and fruits; the ordinary reſidence of the Turkiſh Beglerbeg, by whom taken, not long after Aden. 8. Eltor, a Port Town of this Country and the onely Town, where the Chriſtians are ſuffered to inhabit. 9. Aden, on the very entrance of the Red Sea, neer the Streights called Babel-Mandel; ſuppoſed by ſome to be the Madoce of Ptolomy, but more agreeing, in ſcituation, with the famous Emporie by him called Arabia. The faireſt Town of the whole Peninſula, of great ſtrength, both by Art and Nature; well Traded, and well fortified, having a large capacious Haven, ſeldome without good ſtore of ſhipping, and containing to the number of ſix thouſand perſons. Once a diſtinct Kingdome of it ſelf, but treacherouſly ſurprized by the Turks, Anno 1538. and therewithall the reſt of the Country: made afterwards the ſeat of a Turkiſh Beglerbeg, under whom, and him of Zebit, are ſuppoſed to be no fewer than thirty thouſand Timariots. 10. Oran, the Lock and Key of the Southern Ocean. 10. Thema, or Themau, the ſame I take it, which our later Travellers call Zeman, ſcituate more within the Land; affirmed by Benjamin the Jew, ſuinamed Tude Cenſis, to be a Town of 15 miles ſquare, but to have within the Walls thereof great quantity of ground for Tillage. 12. Zarval, a retiring place of the Caliphs, when they lived in this Country. 13. Hor, on the point or Promontory, called Chorodemus, a Garriſon not long ſince of the Kings of Ormus. 14. Muskahat, on the Perſian Gulf, neer the point of land called Cape Rozel gate: oppoſite to Surat, in the Eaſt India, and poſſeſſed by the Portugals, who have fortified it with a well-built Caſtle, for defence of their Ships and Frigots which frequent thoſe Seas. Of no great note till the taking of Ormus by the Perſians, many of the Inhabitants whereof were ſince ſetled here. Of the affairs of this Country we ſhall ſpeak anon; having firſt took a brief view of the Iſlands which belong unto it.

4. The ARABICK ISLANDS.

THe ISLANDS which lie round about the ſhores of Arabia Felix, and have been anciently accounted as parts thereof, are diſperſed either in the, 1. Red ſea. 2. Southern Ocean, or, 3. The Gulf of Perſia.

1. The RED-SEA, (called alſo by the Antients, Sinus Arabicus, and now Golfo di Mecca) is that part or branch of the Southern Ocean, which interpoſeth it ſelf betwixt Ægypt on the Weſt; Arabia Felix, and ſome part of Petræa, on the Eaſt: the North-eaſt bound of it touching upon Idumæa, or the Coaſt of Edom. Extended in length from the Town of Sues, anciently called Arſinoe, in the bottom of it, to the ſtreights of Babel-Mandel, where it openeth into the Southern Ocean; for the ſpace of one thouſand and four hundred miles: in breadth, for the moſt part but one hundred, but in ſome places almoſt two; the ſtreights themſelves not being above a mile and an half, anciently chained by the Kings of Ægypt, as is ſaid by Strabo, but now left open by the Turk, who is Lord hereof. A violent and inquiet Sea, full of ſands and ſhelves; inſomuch as they who paſs in and out, are fain to make uſe of Pilots which dwell thereabouts, and are experienced in the Channel. Sufficiently famous in all times and ſtories, for the miraculous paſſage of the Children of Iſrael, and the drowning of Pharaoh King of Egypt.

It took the name of the Red-ſea, as ſome conceived, from the redneſs of the ſands; as others have delivered, from the redneſs of the waters: but later obſervations have diſcovered the weakneſs and abſurdity of theſe Etymologies: the Sea, and Sands being coloured here, as in other places. By the Grecians it was called Erythræum, which in that tongue ſignifieth Red alſo, not from the colour either of the ſands or waters; but from one Erythras ſuppoſed to be the ſon of Perſeus and Andromeda, who commanded the Eaſtern ſhores hereof. And theſe come neerer to the mark than the others did. For the truth is, it was originally called the Sea of Edom, becauſe it took beginning on the Coaſts of that Country: which word in the Hebrew, ſignifying Red, as appeareth, Gen. 25. 30. firſt given as a nick-name to Eſau, and from him afterwards to Mount Seir, or the land of Edom, Gen. 36. 31. was by the Greeks rendred Erythræum, and Mare Rubrum by the Latines. Whence the name of the Red-ſea became known to all; but the reaſon of the name to few.

Of the great Traffick which was anciently driven up this Sea, we ſhall ſpeak hereafter, when we are in Ægypt, on the other ſide of it. Look we now on the Iſlands which belong to Arabia, as they all generally do: Known in the times of Ptolomy by the names of, 1. Adani. 2. Æni. 3. Are. 4. Cardamine. 5. Combuſta. 6. Damanum. 7. Hieracum, or the Iſle of Hawks. 8. Maliaci. 9. Polbii. 10. Socratis. 11. Timagenis. and 12. Zygana. But by what names now called, and of what note then, is a thing ſo doubtful, that I dare not offer a conjecture. Late Travellers report almoſt all of them to be ſmall, deſolate, or but meanly inhabited, deſcribed by them under other names. One there is of indifferent largeneſs, ſaid to be an hundred twenty and five miles long, though but twelve broad, called Dalaqua, with a City in it of that name, where they gather Pearls. 2. Then there is Camaran, moſt extreamly hot, of moſt note for the many ſpoils there made by the Portugals. 3. Xamoa, the earth whereof is ſaid to be Red, (perhaps to countenance the vulgar tradition, of calling this the Red ſea, from the colour of the ſands or ſhores) and the King a Moor. 4. The Samaritan Iſland, ſpoken of by Scaliger, inhabited by a remainder of that people; who as ſoon as they ſaw any ſtranger land upon their coaſts, would moſt religiouſly deſire him not to touch them. Such other Iſlands as lie upon the oppoſite ſhores, and ſeem to appertain unto Ethiopia, ſhall finde their place in our deſcription of the African Iſlands.

II. The SOUTHERN OCEAN comprehendeth that vaſt body of waters, which from the Eaſtern banks of both Ethiopia's coaſt, along on the South of Arabia Felix, and ſo directly Eaſt-ward, to the furthieſt India; in this regard called by ſome Writers Oceanus Indicus, by others Mare Auſtrale, from the ſcituation; and by ſome alſo Mare Rubrum, or the Red-ſea, from Erythras a great King (as they ſuppoſe) reigning hereabouts, and giving name not only to the Red-ſea (or Gulph of Arabia) ſtrictly and ſpecially ſo called, but to all the Sea-coaſt alſo, from the opening of the Bay of Arabia, to the coaſts of India, by them called Mare Erythræum.

In this vaſt Ocean Ptolomy placeth many Iſlands which belong to Arabia, but of little note, viz. Two Iſlands by the name of Inſula Agathoclis. 2. Three more by the name of Cocconati. 3. Dioſcoris, by Pliny called Dioſcurias, with a City of the ſame name in it. 4. Seven others in the Bay called Sinus

Sachalites

Arabia Felix.

Sachalites, by the name of Zenobii. 5. Organa, by Strabo called Tyrrina, memorable for the Sepulchre of Erythras before mentioned, being a great Hill planted with trees. 6. Sarapias, by Ammianus Marcellinus called Turgana, famed for a Temple of Serapis, the Egyptian Idol. None of them now of any credit, nor formerly of any great note, the two laſt excepted.

III. On the Eaſt-ſide of Arabia Felix, betwixt it and Perſia, lieth another large Arm of the Southern Ocean, antiently called Sinus Perſicus, or the Bay of Perſia, now Golfo di Elkadiffe. A turbulent and unruly Sea, the Southern Ocean breaking in at the one end, and the River Euphrates at the other: the continual combating or claſhing of which two great waters, makes it ſo unquiet. Ptolomy placeth in this Bay (but as parts or members of Arabia,) 1. Tylus, which Arianus ſets at the mouth of Euphrates, Solinus in the Indian Seas, affirming it to be well ſtored with vines, and olives: another of this name being placed by Theophraſtus in the Bay of Arabia (but probably the place miſtaken) affording good materials for ſhipping. 2. Apphana. 3. Tharo. 3. Ichara; of which nothing memorable. To theſe ſome late Travellers have adjoyned two others, if not ſome of the former, under thoſe new names, that is to ſay, 6. Bayren, and 6. Gonſiar, where they take the beſt Pearls in the world, in beds of Oiſters. Other Iſlands of this Bay (if any) do belong to Perſia; where, if occaſion ſo require, we ſhall ſpeak more of them.

To return therefore to the main-land of Arabia Felix, the firſt Inhabitants thereof were the ſons of Chus, and the families which they brought with them. Their memories preſerved in the names of ſome of the chief Towns and Nations, till the days of Pliny, Ptolomy, and ſome others of the antient writers. Divided afterwards into the ſeveral Tribes or Sects of the Caſſanitæ, Cinædocolpitæ, Homaritæ, Adramitæ, Eleſari, Sachalitæ, Anaritæ, Gerræi, Ægæi, Sabæi, Minæi, Leanitæ, Cattabani, Abuceni, and divers others: each governed ſeparately and apart by their ſeveral Chiefs; whom they honoured, as in other places, with the name of Kings. One of which ſpoken of by Juſtine, named Hierotimus, is ſaid to have been the father of 500 children. Eaſie to have been overcome, becauſe ſo divided, if any potent neighbour had attempted the conqueſt of them: as it is wondrous ſtrange they did not, conſidering the richneſs of the Countrey, and the many temptations which it had to invite them to it. More worthily deſerving the name of Felix, in that never conquered, than in all the other rarities and delights thereof. By Alexander once deſigned for the ſeat of his Empire, who probably had endeavoured the conqueſt of it, having finiſhed his war againſt the Perſians, had he not died in Babylon at his coming back. Nor did the Romans ever extend their Empire beyond Petræa, though once Auguſtus did attempt it; employing in that action, Largus, his Lieutenant in Egypt: one Sames being then King of thoſe parts which lay neereſt to him. The Romans at their firſt entry found no reſiſtance. But when by the extraordinary heat of the air, and drinking ſalt waters, they began to grow diſeaſed and ſickly; the Arabians fell luſtily upon them, and made them return back both with loſs and ſhame. After this nothing done by the Romans, to diſturb their quiet; nor much done by the Chriſtians to advance their glories: the whole divided into almoſt as many Religions, as Principalities and Eſtates. Moſt of them Gentiles, but Circumciſed, as the Iſmaelites and other Arabians had been of old; many Jews intermingled with them, and ſome ſtore of Chriſtians, but thoſe divided alſo into Sects and Factions. And in this ſtate it ſtood, when Mahomet firſt began to broach his blaſphemous dotages. By birth of Jathripp, an obſcure village then, not far from Medina; his father called Abdalla, an Idolatrous Pagan; his mother named Hemina, as perverſe a Jeweſs. Deprived of both his parents when but two years old, he was left unto the care of an uncle: who not able to give him education, nor willing to be at the charge to keep him longer, ſold him at ſixteen years of age to the Iſmaelites; by whom expoſed to ſale in the open markets, he was bought by one Abdalmutalif, a wealthy Merchant. By him employed at firſt in drudgery: and ſervile offices, till noting his great wit, and fitneſs for better ſervices, he at laſt uſed him as his factor: ſending him with his Camels and loads of Merchandize, into Syria, Perſia, Egypt, and other places; wherein he did behave himſelf with ſuch dexterity, that he much increaſed his Maſters wealth, and his own eſtimation. Of perſon he is ſaid to be low, and withall ſcald-headed; but otherwiſe comely to the eye, and of good aſpect. Much troubled with the falling ſickneſs, which infirmity he made good uſe of afterwards; affirming that thoſe fits were nothing but heavenly raptures, in which he did converſe with the Angel Gabriel. He is ſaid to have been alſo well skilled in Magick, by which he taught a white Pigeon to feed at his ear, which he gave out to be the Holy Ghoſt, by whom he was inſtructed in the law which he was to publiſh: but this not till afterwards. By Sorceries, comelineſs of perſon, and the great knowledge which he had in his Maſters buſineſs, he gained ſo far on the affections of his Miſtreſs, that on the death of Abdalmutalif, ſhe made him her husband. Poſſeſſed of all his maſters wealth, he affected eaſe; and being till then of no Religion, or at beſt a Pagan, he began to hearken unto Sergius, a Neſtorian Monk: who flying out of Syria for fear of puniſhment (the hereſies of Neſtorius being newly both revived and cenſured) came into Arabia; where he found entertainment in the houſe of Abdalmutalif, the Maſter of Mahomet. By his perſwaſions, who found him a fit inſtrument for the devil to work on, he began to entertain the thoughts of hammering out a new Religion; which might unite all parties in ſome common principles, and bring the Chriſtians, Jews, and Gentiles, (into which the world was then divided,) under one Profeſſion. Reſolved on this, he retired himſelf unto a Cave not far from Mecca, as if he there attended nothing but meditations; Sergius in the mean time ſounding in the ears of the people, both his parts, and piety. The people being thus prepared to behold the Pageant, outcomes the principal Actor with ſome parts of his Alcoran (pleaſing enough to ſenſual minds) which he profeſſed to have received from the Angel Gabriel. And finding that this edified to his expectation, he next proclaimed liberty to all ſlaves, and ſervants, as a thing commanded him by God, by whom the natural liberty of mankind was moſt dearly tendred: which drew unto him ſuch a rabble of unruly people, that without fear of oppoſition he diſperſed his doctrines, reducing them at laſt to a book or method.

The Book of this religion he calleth the Alcoran, that is to ſay, the Collection of Precepts: the Original whereof they feign to be written in a Table which is kept in Heaven; and the Copy of it brought to Mahomet by the Angel Gabriel. A Book ſo highly reverenced by the Mahometans, that they write upon the cover of it, let none touch this but he that is clean. The body of it (as it now ſtandeth) was compoſed by Oſmen the fourth Caliph, who ſeeing the Saracens daily inclining to divers hereſies, by reaſon of ſome falſe copies of Mahomets Laws; and that the Empire by the ſame means was likely to fall into civil diſſention; by the help of his wife, who was Mahomets daughter, he got a ſight of all Mahomets papers, which he reduced into four Volumes, and divided into one hundred twenty and four Chapters; commanding expreſly, upon pain of death, that that book, and that onely, ſhould be received as Canonical through his Dominions. The whole body of it is but an expoſition and gloſs on theſe eight Commandments.

1. Every one ought to believe that God is a great God; and one onely God, and Mahomet is his Prophet. They hold Abraham to be the friend of God; Moſes, the meſſenger of God; and Chriſt, the breath of God: whom they deny to be conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, affirming that the Virgin Mary grew with childe of him by ſmelling to a Roſe, and was delivered of him at her breaſts. They deny the myſtery of the Trinity; but puniſh ſuch as ſpeak againſt Chriſt; whoſe Religion was not (ſay they) taken away, but mended by Mahomet. And he who in his pilgrimage to Mecca, doth not, coming or going, viſit the ſepulchre of Chriſt, is reputed not to have merited, or bettered himſelf any thing by his journey.

2. Every man muſt marry to increaſe the Sectaries of Mahomet. Four wives he alloweth to every man, and as many Concubines as he will: between whom the husband ſetteth no difference, either in affection or apparel; but that his wives onely can enjoy his Sabbaths benevolence. The women are not admitted in the time of their lives to come into their Churches; nor after death to Paradiſe: and whereas in moſt or all other Countreys, Fathers give ſome portions with their daughters, the Mahometans give money for their wives; which being once paid, the contract is regiſtred in the Cadies book, and this is all their formality of Marriage. More of this theam we ſhall ſpeak hereafter, when we are in TURCOMANIA, and among the Turks.

3. Every one muſt give of his wealth to the poor. Hence you ſhall have ſome buy ſlaves, and then manumit them; buy birds, and then let them flie. They uſe commonly to free Priſoners, releaſe bond-ſlaves, build canes or lodgings in the waies for the relief of paſſengers, repair bridges, and mend highwaies. But their moſt ordinary alms conſiſt in ſacrifices of Sheep or Oxen, which when the ſolemnity is performed, they diſtribute among the poor; to whom alſo, on the firſt day of every year, they are bound to give the tith or tenth part of their gettings in the year fore-going: inſomuch that you ſhall hardly finde any beggars amongſt them.

4. Every one muſt make his prayers five times a day. When they pray they turn their bodies towards Mecca, but their faces ſometimes one way, ſometimes another way, believing that Mahomet ſhall come behind them, being at their devotions. The firſt time is an hour before Sun-riſing; the ſecond at noon-day; the third at three of the clock afternoon; the fourth at Sun-ſetting; the fifth aud laſt before they go to ſleep. At all theſe times the Cryers keep a bauling in the ſteeples (for the Turks and Saracens have no bells) for the people to come to Church. And ſuch as cannot come, muſt when they hear the voice of the Cryers, fall down in the place where they are, do their devotions, and kiſs the ground thrice.

5. Every one muſt keep a Lent one moneth in a year. This Lent is called Ramazan, in which they ſuppoſe the Alcoran was given unto Mahomet by the Angel Gabriel. This faſt is onely intended in the day time, the law giving leave to frollick it in the night, as they beſt pleaſe, ſo they abſtain from Wine, and Swines fleſh; prohibited by their Law at all times, but never ſo punctually abſtained from, as in the time of their Lent.

6. Be obedient to thy Parents; which law is the moſt neglected of any, in all the Alcoran; never any children being ſo unnatural as the Turkiſh.

7. Thou ſhalt not kill; and this they keep unviolated among themſelves; but the poor Chriſtians are ſure to feel the ſmart of their fury. And as if by this law, the actual ſhedding of blood only were prohibited, they have invented puniſhments for their offenders, worſe than death it ſelf. As firſt the Strappado, which is hanging of them by the arms drawn backwards: when they are ſo bound, they are drawn up on high, and let down again with a violent ſwing, which unjoynteth all their back and arms. Secondly, they uſe to hoiſe up their heels, and with a great cudgel to give them three or four hundred blowes on the ſoles of their feet. Thirdly, it is ordinary to draw them naked up to the top of a Gibbet or Tower full of hooks; and cutting the rope to let them fall down again; but by the way they are caught by ſome of the hooks, where they commonly hang till they die for hunger.

8. Do unto others, as thou wouldeſt be done unto thy ſelf. To thoſe that keep theſe Laws he promiſeth Paradiſe, a place of all delights, adorned with flowery fields, watered with Cryſtalline Rivers, beautified with Trees of gold; under whoſe cool ſhade, they ſhall ſpend their time with amorous Virgins, whoſe manſion ſhall not be far diſtant. The men ſhall never exceed the age of thirty; nor the women of fifteen; and thoſe to have their virginities renewed as faſt as loſt.

Friday he ordained to be the Sabbath-day, partly to diſtinguiſh his followers from the Jews and Chriſtians, who ſolemnize the days enſuing; but principally becauſe he was on that day proclaimed King or Emperor, & ſolemnly ſo created. Wine and Swines-fleſh are the principal things forbidden by the Alcoran: from the laſt whereof they all unanimouſly refrain; bnt on the firſt they are ſo ſotted, that when they come at it, they ſeldome go home again unled; inſomuch that all the wines in Conſtantinople have been thrown about the ſtreets, and death made the penalty for any that will preſume to bring any more into the City. Mahomet taught them that every one ſhould be ſaved by his own Religion; him onely excepted that revolted from the Alcoran unto another Law: but ſo that under the notion of Religion, he means onely ſuch as worſhip the one and onely God, excluding by that means the old Idolaters of the Gentiles from the hopes of ſalvation. And he taught too, that at the end of the world all men that profeſſed any ſuch Religion, ſhould go into Paradiſe; the Jews under the banner of Moſes, the Chriſtians under the banner of Chriſt, and the Saracens under the banner of Mahomet. They compel no man therefore to abjure the faith in which he was born, but commend and approve ſecretly ſuch as they finde zealous and conſtant in their own Religion; yet holding it an eſpecial honour to have daily new Proſelytes, they incite them by hope of freedom and preferment, which with many are motives too much prevailing. Hence I have heard many ſay, that it is better for a man that would enjoy liberty of conſcience, to live in the Countreys profeſſing Mahometaniſm, then Papiſtry; for in the one he ſhall never be free from the bloody Inquiſition; in the other he is never moleſted, if he meddle not with their Law, their Women, or their Slaves.

The opinions which they hold concerning the end of the world, are very ridiculous; as that at the winding of a horn, not all fleſh onely, but the Angels themſelves ſhall die, that the earth with an Earthquake ſhall be kneaded together, like a lump of dough; that a ſecond blaſt of the ſame horn ſhall after forty days reſtore all again; that Cain ſhall be the Captain or Ring-leader of the damned, who ſhall have the countenance of dogs, and ſwine; that they ſhall paſs over the bridge of Juſtice, laden with their ſins in ſatchels; that the great ſinners ſhall fall into hell, the leſſer into purgatory onely; with a thouſand of the like fopperies: which it is needleſs to adde here, conſidering that the Alcoran it ſelf is now extant in Engliſh, and every one that liſts may read it. A thing ſo full of Tautologies, incohærencies, and ſuch groſs abſurdities, of ſo impure and carnal mixture, that he muſt lay aſide the uſe of his natural reaſon, who is taken by it, if force, ambition, or the want of Chriſtian education do not lead him on. For if we ſeriouſly look into the cauſes of the deplorable increaſe and long continuance of this Religion, we ſhall finde them to be chiefly theſe, 1. The greatneſs of the Victories gotten by the Saracens; who eaſily compelled the conquered Nations to receive their Law. 2. The great zeal and diligence of the Arabians themſelves, who being a numerous people, and much given to Merchandize; have poſſeſſed themſelves of all the Sea-coaſts of Africk, from the ſtreights of Babel-Mandel, almoſt as far as to the Cape of good hope; of all the Iſlands in thoſe Seas, and many Factories and good Towns on the coaſts of India: in all which they have ſetled their Religion alſo, as a thing inſeparable from their Nation. 3. A peremptory reſtraint of all diſputation, in any point of Religion whatſoever it be. 4. The ſuppreſſing of Philoſophy, and the ſtudy of Humane Sciences; the light whereof might eaſily detect the groſsneſs of their ſuperſtitions. 5. The ſenſual liberty allowed of having variety of wives, and as many concubines as they are able to keep. 6. The promiſe of the like ſenſual pleaſures in the other world, with which a ſenſe not illuminated with the Spirit of God, doth for the moſt part uſe to be more affected, then with the ſpeculative hope of ſpiritual happineſs. 7. The forbidding of Printing and printed Books, by whch the people might come to ſee the verity and purity of the Chriſtian faith; the falſhood and impurity of the law of Mahomet. Theſe laſt not uſeful, or at leaſt not able to induce belief, if the firſt had not opened and prepared the way.

For indeed force of Arms was the ſtrongeſt argument by which Mahomet himſelf confirmed, and his ſucceſſors in their times have ſince propagated and diſperſed his doctrines. Strengthned by the reſort of that raſcal Rabble which repaired to him, he aſſaults Medina, pretending a quarrel to the Jews, who had there a Synagogue. Repulſed at firſt with loſs of men, and a wound in his face, by which ſome of his fore-teeth were beaten out; there likely to have made an end of his new Religion, if not recovered by his Souldiers for a further miſchief. At the next onſet he prevailed, the battel being fought near a place called Bedez, ſituate betwixt Mecca and Medina, frequently mentioned in the Alcoran. After which fight he took the City, converting the Synagogue to a Temple for his own impieties: the news whereof ſo ſtartled the Phylarchæ, or Nobility of Mecca, that they armed all their powers againſt him, and ſped ſo well in the beginning of the war, that they drove him forcibly from their territories; which not long after he ſubdued, and ſet his chief ſeat at Mecca. From that his flight, the Saracens began their computation of years (as we from CHRISTS Nativity) which they call the Hegira; which beginneth about the year of our Redemption, 617. Concerning which time, I cannot but obſerve, that Mahomet compiled his devilliſh doctrine, beginning his Empire; and Boniface the third aſſumed his Antichriſtian title, beginning his unlimited Supremacy nigh about the ſame year. It was called the Hegira, from the Arabick Hegirathi, which by the learned in that tongue, is rendred by διωγμὸς ὑπὲρ τῆς θρεσκείας, i. e. the perſecution raiſed about Religion. Joſeph Scaliger in the firſt edition of his moſt laborious work de emendatione temporum, caſteth off this Etymology with purum putum mendacium. He will not have it called Æra fugæ or perſecutionis, but Æra Hagarena: becauſe forſooth the Arabians were by ſome called Hagarens. I believe it would have puzled Scaliger, with all his reading, to ſhew unto us any Epoche or Æra, which is taken from the name of a Nation. And therefore other reaſon he giveth us none but this. Nos autem ſcimus vocem illam primogenia ſignificatione ab Hagarenis, non à fuga duci. But time, and oppoſition, at the laſt reclaimed him from this error: and in the ſecond edition of his work, he is content to follow the common opinion of thoſe men, whom in the firſt he whiſtled off with the infamous appellation of mendaces.

But to proceed, It hapned much about this time, that the Saracens revolting from Heraclius the Eaſtern Emperour, joyned themſelves unto him. They had long been diſpleaſed with their condition, and now hoped to mend it. Exaſperated by Julian the Apoſtate, when they ſerved in his wars againſt the Perſian, for telling them when they demanded their pay, that he had more ſtore of Steel than Gold: but then they wanted a fit head to reſort unto. Now ſerving Heraclius in the ſame war, they were uſed by his Officers in the ſame ill manner. Asking their pay, the Treaſurer of the Army made them this churliſh anſwer, that there was ſcarce money enough to pay the Roman and Grecian Souldiers; and muſt thoſe dogs be ſo importunate for their wages? Provoked herewith, and hearing the fame of Mahomet, they betook themſelves to him: who ſtrengthned by their forces, and the coming in of the reſt of their Countreymen, ſoon brought the three Arabias under his ſubjection. To which, having defeated the Emperors forces ſent againſt him, he added ſome parts of Syria, and Egypt; and returning to Mecca, there died frantick and diſtempered, in the 70th. year of his age, and three and twentieth of his impoſtures: of which he had ſpent thirteen at Medina, and the reſt at Mecca; from his firſt ſetling in which City, the years of his Empire were computed. His dead body being kept four daies in expectation of a reſurrection, which he promiſed to perform at the end of three; grown full of ſtench and putrefaction, was carried to Medina, and there interred: his Succeſſors out of wicked and worldly policy, keeping up the reputation of that Religion after his deceaſe, which they derided in his life; and calling themſelves Caliphs, or Vicars-General, to him, their Prophet, to the Catalogue of which we haſten; made intricate, not more by their own confuſions, than by the difference of thoſe names by which they are preſented to us by ſeveral Writers; according to the times and Languages in which they writ.

Of the Ægyptian Caliphs, when we come into that Country: take now with you the name only of the Syrian, and Babylonian Caliphs; for ſtory of them I finde little or none, the power being totally in the hands of the Sultans of the ſeveral Provinces, and nothing left unto the Caliphs but an aiery Title, the ſhadow of that mighty Tree, which formerly had ſpread it ſelf over moſt parts of the World.

1255 638 21. Muſtatzem, the laſt Caliph or High-Prieſt of the Saracens of Bagdet, or Babylon, living in the account of a Prince or Emperor; or looked on as the ſupream Lord of the Saracen Empire: ſtarved in his Caſtle of Bagdet, and his whole poſterity rooted out by Allan, or Haulon the Tartar, in the firſt year of his reign. Yet there is ſtill remaining a carkaſs of the old body, one whom they call Caliph, at whoſe hands the neighbor Princes uſe to receive their Diadems and Regalities: for ſo we find, that Solyman the magnificent, after his conqueſt of Chaldæa, Meſopotamia, and Aſſyria, to have been by one of theſe poor titulary Caliphs, Crowned King of Babylon, Anno 1513.

This unwieldy body of the Saracen Empire having thus two heads, began apparently to decline: loſing to the Kings of Oviedo, and Navarre, a great part of Spain; to the Genoeſes, Sardinia, and Corſica: to the Normans, Naples and Sicily: and finally moſt of their Empire, with their very names, to the Turks and Tartars. For Allan, or Haallon, a Tartarian Captain, ſtarved Muſtatzem the Babylonian Caliph, in his Tower of Bagdet, and rooted out all his poſterity: and Sarracon the firſt Turkiſh King of Ægypt, brained the laſt Ægyptian Caliph with his horſe-mans Mace; leaving not one of his iſſue or kindred ſurviving. The office of the Caliphs (as to matters which concern their religion, and the ſupream determination of the doubts and controverſies which occur therein) is now executed in the Turks Dominion, by the Mufti, or chief Prieſt of the Turkiſh Mahometans.

As Mars ſhewed himſelf a friend unto thoſe Saracens, in their wars and triumphs; ſo alſo did Phœbus pour down no leſs cœleſtial influence, on ſuch as addicted themſelves to Scholarſhip. Bagdet in Chaldaa, Cairoan, Feſs, Morocco, in Barbary, and Corduba in Spain, were their Univerſities: out of which came the Philoſophers, Avicen, and Averroes; the Phyſicians, Rhaſis, and Meſue: the Geographers, Leo, and Abilfada; and almoſt all the Textuaries and profound Writers (as Hali, Algazel, Albumazar, &c.) in Aſtrology; from whom a great part of our Aſtronomical, and Aſtrological terms are borrowed.

There is now no Kingdome, Iſland, or Province, which acknowledgeth the Empire of the Saracens, but the Kingdome of Feſs and Morocco only: Arabia it ſelf, the very firſt ſeat of their power, acknowledging a ſubjection to the Turkiſh Empire. For firſt Petræa and Deſerta, being ſubdued by the Turks, when they conquered Perſia, or otherwiſe following the fortunes of the preſent Victor, were afterwards accounted of as ſubject unto the Mamulucks of Ægypt, who out of that Country, and all Syria, had by degrees diſſeized the Selzuccian Family. And as the vaſſals of that Crown, though but Subjects at will, they more moleſted Selimus in his march towards Ægypt, by falling on his Rear, and terrifying him with their night Alarms; than all the forces of the Mamalucks, in the field againſt him. But Ægypt being ſubdued, and the Mamalucks utterly deſtroyed, ſome of their Chiefs being gained by mony, and the reſt by promiſe of preferment; the whole Nation of theſe wild Arabs ſwore alliegeance to him: continuing in account as Subjects, unto his Succeſſors, but in effect doing what they liſt; governed as formerly by the Chiefs of their ſeveral Clannes, and in their Robberies taking no more notice of the Turk than they do of the Chriſtians. And as for Falix, it continued alſo in a free condition, in reſpect of any forreign power; till of late times the Turkes, and Portugals, entrenched upon them. For in the year 1538 Solyman Baſſa, Admiral of the Turkiſh Fleet againſt the Portugals, who had diverted the trade of the Red Sea, and otherwiſe given offence to Solyman the Magnificent, by aiding the Perſians, went with a ſtrong army to take Diu, a Town and Iſland of the Eaſt India, then in their poſſeſſion. But being unable to effect it, at his coming back he called in at Aden, one of the beſt traded Ports of Arabia Falix; invited the King thereof aboard, moſt treacherouſly hanged him, and ſurprized the City. The like he alſo did to the King of Zibit, the Port Town to Mecca, and by that meanes got poſſeſſion of all the Coaſts of this Country, bordering on the Red Sea, or Gulf of Arabia; of which the Turks ſtill continue Maſters. But in the Inland parts, and towards the Perſian Gulf, of no power at all; not ſuffered to travel up and down without a Paſs from ſome of the Arabian Chiefs; or if they do, in danger to be ſet upon by the Natives, who brook them not. Some parts hereof which ly next unto the Iſle of Ormus made one Kingdome with it; but the Kings, originally, of this Country, by whom the City of Ormus was firſt builded; and ſo continued till the taking of Ormus by the Portugals, anno 1622, who ſince the taking of that Iſle by the King of Perſia, hold Muskahat, and ſome other Pieces upon this Continent. The reſidue of the Countrey cantonned amongſt a company of petit Princes, as in former times; before ambition taught them to devour one another.

Thus much for ARABIA.

9. CHALDEA.

6 CHALDÆA.

7 ASSYRIA.

8 MESOPOTAMIA.

THeſe Provinces, which properly and originally conſtituted the Aſſyrian Empire, I have joyned together in the Title, becauſe united in the Story and affairs thereof; though ſeverally to be conſidered in the Deſcription, and Chorography of them.

CHALDÆA is bounded, on the Eaſt with Suſina, a Province of Perſia; on the Weſt, with Arabia Deſerta; on the North, with Meſopotamia; and on the South, with the Perſian Bay, and the reſt of Deſerta. Originally called Chaſdim, from Cheſed the fourth ſon of Nachor, the brother of Abraham. Cheſed quoq; quartus eſt, à quo Chaſdim, id eſt, Chaldæi, poſtea vocati ſunt, as St. Hierome hath it. But why the Chaldeans ſhould derive their name from Cheſed, being a People long before Cheſeds birth, I am not able to determine: unleſs he taught them the firſt Principles of the Art of Aſtronomy; or was the Author of ſome ſignal benefit unto them, which we know not of. It was called afterwards Babylonia, from Babylon the chief City of it; and at this day, by Bellonius, Azamia; by the Arabians, Xeldan, by the Turks, Curdiſtan.

But the name of Chaldea ſometimes went beyond theſe bounds, taking in ſome part alſo of Meſopotamia, as appeareth by that paſſage of St. Stephen, ſaying, Acts 7. v. 2, 3, 4. That the God of glory appeared to our father Abraham, when he was in Meſopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran; and ſaid unto him, Get thee out of this Countrey, and from thy Kindred, and come into the Land which I ſhall ſhew thee. Then came he out of the Land of the Chaldees, and dwelt in Charran, &c. Where clearly that part of Meſopotamia which lay next unto Aſſyria, where then Abraham was, is included under the name of Chaldea, or the Land of the Chaldees. Which I deſire the Reader to take notice of, becauſe I muſt make uſe of this obſervation in another place.

The Countrey by Herodotus ſaid to be ſo fruitful, that it yielded ordinarily two hundred, and in ſome places three hundred-fold; the blades of wheat and barley being (as he affirmeth) four fingers broad. By Pliny it is ſaid of the Babylonians, that they mowed their corn twice, and ſeeded it a third time, or elſe it would be nothing but blades: and yet ſo, that the worſt of their Land yielded fifty, and their beſt an hundred-fold encreaſe. Nor is the nature of the ſoil ſo altered in long tract of time, but that (as late Travellers have obſerved) it would in all likelihood attain to its firſt fertility, if it were ordered with like care and diligence, as in former times. But what need more be ſaid as to the natural fruitfulneſs and delights of this Countrey, then that it pleaſed Almighty God to make choice of ſome part hereof for the terreſtrial Paradiſe, or Garden of Eden, in which he placed our father Adam, at his firſt Creation. For here that Paradiſe, by men both skilled in Divinity, and Geography, is affirmed to have ſtood. Yet amongſt all ſorts of Writers we finde different opinions. Some make Paradiſe to be a place of pleaſure, and the four Rivers to be the four Cardinal Vertues; but theſe Allegories on the Scripture are not warrantable. Others place it in the air, under the circle of the Moon; and tell us that the four Rivers in the Scriptures mentioned, fall down from thence, and running all under the Ocean, riſe up again in thoſe places where they are now found: but this is ſo vain a foppery, that I will not honor it with a confutation. Such as make Paradiſe local, are divided alſo into three ranks (for I omit the reſt) whereof ſome place is under the Æquator; but this agreeth not with the bounds preſcribed by the Holy Ghoſt. Some conceive the four Rivers to be Tigris, Euphrates, Nilus, and Ganges; and that Paradiſe was the whole world; but this cannot be: for then when Adam was driven out of Paradiſe, it muſt alſo follow that he was driven out of the world, which were abſurd. Thoſe of the ſoundeſt judgements place it here, in an Iſland which is made by the Rivers Tigris and Euphrates, and ſome branches running from them both: the uppermoſt of which is called Piſon (falſly rendred Ganges) which watereth the land of Havilah, or that part of the land of Havilah, which is called Chuſeſtan, or Suſiana, a Province of Perſia; and the lowermoſt is named Gihon (improperly by ſome tranſlated Nilus) whch compaſſeth the Eaſt parts of Arabia Petræa, by the Septuagint for the reaſons above mentioned, rendred Ethiopia. And this agreeth both with the poſition of this Countrey, and the courſe of thoſe Rivers. For that Tigris and Euphrates (which the Hebrew text calleth Hiddekel, and Perah) do here joyn their ſtreams, is confeſſed on all ſides. Then as for Piſon, it is no other then that River by Ptolcmy called Baſilius, or Regius; by Curtius more nearly Piſo Tigris, or Paſi Tigris, pervenit ad fluvium, Paſitigrin incolæ vocant, as his own words are. A little ſtream which watering the Land of Havilah, or the Countrey of the Chavelei, or Chaulaſei, or Chaulota (for by theſe ſeveral names they are called amongſt the Antients, who place them betwixt the Babylonians, and the Nabatheans, an Arabian people) poureth it ſelf into the Tigris, and falls together with it in the Gulf of Perſia. And finally for Gihon, by Ptolomy called Maarſares, and by others Marſyrus, it is no other then a branch of Euphrates, which watering the Land of Chus, or Ethiopia Aſiatica, take which name you will, loſeth it ſelf at laſt in the Lakes of Chaldea.

But though in general the Countrey was extreamly fruitful, yet in ſome places was it covered with a ſlimy matter, which the overflowing of the waters, and the nature of the ſoil together, did bring forth abundantly. Uſed by them in their buildings, inſtead of morter, then which more durable and binding; and therefore choſen for the cement of the Tower of Babel, Gen. 11. 3. Some alſo tell of a cliff, which opening ſendeth out ſuch a ſtink, that it killeth birds as they flie over it; and others of a like open place near a Town called Ait, which continually throweth out boiling pitch (named therefore Hell-mouth by the Moors, filling therewith the adjoyning fields; and that herewith the people uſe to pitch their boats. But this in ſome places onely, the Countrey generally being both healthy and delightful, as before was ſaid.

The people anciently were much addicted unto Sooth-ſaying and Divinations; and no leſs noted for being Authors of the firſt Idolatry that was ever practiſed in the world. Induced unto the laſt perhaps by the power of their Kings, who would needs confer divine honors upon ſome of their Anceſtors; but to the firſt inclined by their own diſpoſition, and the ſituation of their Countrey, yielding a fair ſenſible Horizon (for the Region is alike in all places, both in hills and valleys) and conſequently profitable to the obſervation of the riſing and ſetting of the Stars, whether Heliacal, Acronical, Matutine, or Veſpertine, as the Artiſts phraſe it. Whereunto may be added the length of life in thoſe elder times, furniſhing them with the greater meaſure of experience, concerning the diſtinct motions of each ſeveral Orb, and the full period of the courſes of each ſeveral Planet. Certain it is, that they grew ſo noted in this Art, that at the laſt every Aſtrologaſter, or Figure-flinger, was called a Chaldean: Gentis nomine ad eos homines tranſlato, qui ſeſe illius ſapientiæ ſpecie venditabant, as Beza hath obſerved in his Annotations. For giving too much credit to them, the people thus flouted by the Satyriſt.

> Chaldeis ſed major erit fiducia, quicquid
> Dixerit Aſtrologus, credent à fonte relatum
> Ammonis. &c.

That is to ſay,

> Joves Oracles no greater credit have,
> Then Sooth-ſayings of a Chaldee cozening knave.

The language which was ſpoken here, had the name of the Chaldee, or Chaldæan tongue; of great antiquity; and ſanctified by the Holy Ghoſt, ſome Chapters of the Prophecy of Daniel being written in it. So different from the Hebrew in its primitive purity, that the Jews did not underſtand it, as appeareth by the words of the Officers of Hezekiah, 2 Kings 18. 26. deſiring Rabſeketh to ſpeak to them in the Chaldee tongue, that the common people of the Jews might not hear his blaſphemies. A further proof may be, that a man may have ſome knowledge in the Hebrew, and yet be ignorant of the Chaldee; as many are, no doubt, at this preſent day. But whatſoever it was in its primitive purity, it altered afterwards, when the Jews came to live amongſt them, during the Captivity: out of whoſe long commerce with them, both Nations loſt their proper languages, and fell upon a third, made out of both, which was called the Syriack. Of this we ſpake before when we were in Syria and Paleſtine. And this is now the natural language of this Countrey, and its neighbor Aſſyria, but with a little mixture of the Greek and Arabick: not vulgarly ſpoken elſewhere, for ought I can finde, but uſed by many others, in their ſacred offices, by whom not commonly underſtood. For in this language, all the Sects of the Eaſtern Chriſtians do officiate their publick Liturgies; that is to ſay, the Neſtorians, Jacobites, Maronites (for I reckon not the Melchites, who uſe the Greek Liturgy, amongſt the Sectaries.) The like do alſo the Indians or Chriſtians of Saint Thomas, the Cophties or Chriſtians of Egypt, and the poor remainder of the Chriſtians in the Iſle of Zocatara, an Iſland on the coaſt of Affrick. Uſed to thoſe Liturgies, when the language was more underſtood amongſt them; though now worn out of vulgar knowledge by the overſpreading of the Arabick, Tartarian, and Turkiſh Conqueſts. In which the Prelates of theſe Churches have fallen into the great error of the Church of Rome: and without taking notice of the alterations, hapning in the vulgar tongues of thoſe ſeveral Nations, which are united under them into one opinion, keep up a language in their Liturgies which they underſtand not: as if the capacities of the people could be ſooner raiſed to the underſtanding of an unknown language, then the publick Liturgies be fitted unto their capacities. The ancient piety of the Church, and the modern languages of Gods people, are not inconſiſtent; though out of private ends ſome have taught us otherwiſe. But I fear this error (as ſome others) will not be ſo eaſily remedied, as reprehended. From the tongue in which they celebrate the Divine Offices of their Religion, paſs we to the Religion it ſelf, whoſe Sacred Offices are ſo celebrated.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt preached in this Countrey by St. Peter, of whoſe being in Babylon, (the chief City hereof) himſelf aſſureth us in the laſt words almoſt of his firſt Epiſtle: and other buſineſs he had none here but to preach the Goſpel. Much perſecuted by the Perſians, (who were then poſſeſſed of all theſe parts) it prevailed at laſt; Chriſtianity growing up the faſter for the cutting down. The Patriarchal See, originally planted in Seleucia, ſucceſſor unto Babylon in repute and greatneſſe, if not alſo in name: the Biſhop whereof, by order of the Nicene Councill, had the Eccleſiaſticall juriſdiction of theſe parts, with the name of Catholick; and the next place in Seſſion, at all publick aſſemblies of the Church, next after the Patriarch of Hieruſalem. And beſides this, the Indians or Chriſtians of Saint Thomas, acknowledge him for their Primate or Metropolitan; as they did afterwards, in his right, the Patriarch of Muzal. At this preſent here are ſome remainders of Chriſtianity, part of them Jacobites; but the moſt Neſtorians; of whom more anon.

Of the chief Rivers hereof we have ſpoke already; and Mountains there are none to hinder us in our paſſage forward. So that without more delay we may take a view of the principle places. And in the firſt place we meet with Babel, (in the Hebrew ſignifying confuſion) famous for the confuſion of languages which here happened. For immediately after the Univerſal deluge, Nimrod the Son of Chus, the Son of Cham, perſwaded the people to ſecure themſelves from the like after-claps, by building ſome ſtupendious Edifice, which might reſiſt the furie of a ſecond deluge. This Counſel was generally imbraced, Heber onely and his Family, (as tradition goeth) contradicting ſuch an unlawful attempt. The major part prevailing, the Tower began to rear a head of Majeſty, 5146 paces from the ground: having its Baſis and circumference equal to the height. The paſſage to go up went winding about the outſide; and was of an exceeding great breadth; there being not only room for horſes, carts, and the like means of carriage, to meet and turn; but lodging alſo for man and beaſt, and (as Verſtegan reporteth) graſs and corn-fields for their nouriſhment. But God beholding from on high this fond attempt, ſent amongſt them (who before were of one language) a coufuſion of tongues: which hindred the proceeding of this building, one being not able to underſtand what his fellow called for.

2. Babylon on the bank of Euphrates, the antient'ſt City in the World, on this ſide of the flood, firſt built by Nimrod, in the place deſtinated to the raiſing of the Tower Babel, and by him made the Seat of his Kingdome: afterwards beautified and enlarged by Semiramis, the wife of Ninus, one of his Succeſſors; and finally much increaſed both in bulk and beauty by Nebuchadnezzar, who therefore arrogated to himſelf the whole glory of it, ſaying in his pride, is not this the great Babel that I have builded? Dan. 4. 30. A City of great fame and ſtate, accounted one of the worlds nine wonders, and deſervedly too.

The compaſſe of the walls 365 furlongs, (or 46 miles) according to the number of the dayes in the year; in height 50 Cubits, and of ſo great breath, that Carts and carriages might meet on the top of them; finiſhed in one year by the hands of 200000 workemen, employed daily in it. Scituate on both ſides of Euphrates, over which there was a ſumptuous bridge, and at each end of that bridge a magnificent Palace: beautified alſo with the Temple of the Idol Bel, and famous for the Penſil Gardens, made with great charge, and born up with moſt ſtately Arches. In a word, ſo great and vaſt it was, that Ariſtotle ſaith, that it ought rather to be called a country, then a City: adding withall, that when the Town was taken, it was three dayes before the furtheſt parts of the Town could take notice of it. Which taking of the Town muſt be underſtood of the ſurprize thereof by the Medes and Perſians; and not of the taking of it by the Macedonians, as Pet. Ramus (as great a clerk as he was) in his marginal notes upon the Politicks of that Authour, hath moſt vainly told us. Which, whether it were that there were Gates at the end of every ſtreet, which made it to be ſo long in taking; or that the Babylonians were not wakened from their drunken feaſt, in the time whereof it was ſurprized; I determine not. Revolting in the time of Semiramis, the News came to her as ſhe was ordering her hair: whereupon leaving her head halfe-dreſt ſhe went and beſieged it, never ordering the reſt of her hair till ſhe had recovered it. How it fell into the hands of Cyrus, we learn out of Xenophons Cyri paideia, which was in this manner. The River Euphrates ran quite thorow the Town, round about whoſe banks the Politick Prince cut many and deep channels: into which when the Babylonians were ſecurely merry at a general feaſt, he ſuddenly drained and emptied the River, conveying his own forces into the Town all along the dry and yielding Channel; and in a little time made himſelf maſter of it. From the Perſians it revolted in the Reign of Darius Hyſtaſpes: and that ſuſtenance might not be wanting to the men of war, they ſtrangled the moſt part of the women, being thought, in actions of this quality, not ſo much as neceſſary evils. When they had for twenty moneths ſo obſtinately defended the Town, that the Perſians had leſſe hope then ever of prevailing; Zopyrus one of Darius Captains, mangling his body and diſfiguring his face by cutting off his noſe and eares, fled to the Babylonians, complaining of the tyranny of his King. They crediting his words and knowing his prowes, committed the charge of the whole Army unto him, as a man, to whom ſuch barbarous uſage had made the King irreconcileable. But he taking the beſt opportunity, delivered both the Town and Souldiers into the hands of his Soveraign. Which made Darius often ſay, that he had rather have one Zopyrus, then twenty Babylons. Here died Alexander the Great, after whoſe death the Grecian Captains regardfull rather of their own ambitions, then the common loyalty, divided the Empire among themſelves; leaving the body of the King 8 dayes unburied. A wonderful change of fortune, that he who living, thought the world too ſmall for his valour, being dead ſhould find no place big enough for his body. After this taking of it by the Macedonians, the glorie and Magnificence hereof began to decline, leſſened unto a fourth part in the time of Qu. Curtius the hiſtorian; in ſolicitudinem redacta, reduced to deſolation in the days of Pliny; & being turned into a Park, in which the Kings of Perſia did uſe to hunt, in the time of Saint Hierome. That wonderous change occaſioned partly by the injury of time, partly by the neglect of the Macedonians, who removed the Seat Royall of their Empire more towards Greece: but principally by Seleucus Nicanor, who offended with the Babylonians built the City of Seleucia.

3. Seleucia, the Second City of note in all this Country, ſituate in a place more commodious and healthy, neer the meeting of Tygris and Euphrates, and about 40 miles more North than Babylon; out of which he drew 500000 perſons for the peopling of it. Nor did this new City rob the old onely of its power and greatneſſe, but alſo of its very name; being called Babylon in ſome of the Antient Authors, Βαβύλων περσικὴ πόλις, Μετρόπολις, Σελευκία καλουμένη, as (for one) by Stephanus. In the primitive times of Chriſtianity, The Biſhop of this See was accounted for the Primate of the Chaldeans; with a ſuperintendency over the Chriſtians of India alſo, as before was ſaid. But this Supplanter was in time brought to ruin alſo, And

4. Bagdat, a new City raiſed from the ruines of it: built neer the foundation of Seleucia, by Bugiafer the twentieth Caliph of the Mahometans, at the expence (as ſome write) of eighteen millions of crowns; which becauſe of the many Gardens contained in it had the name of Bagdad, the word ſo ſignifying in the Arabick tongue. Firſt built upon the Weſtern bank of the River Tigris, neer to its confluence with Euphrates; but in the year 1095 removed to the other ſide of the River, by Muſtetaher, the 45 Caliph of the Saracens; becauſe leſs ſubject to the inundations of that furious River. But it was reckoned ſtill for the ſame City, as if built by Bugiafer; by whom being made the ſeat of his Royall Reſidence (whoſe Succeſſors were from hence called the Caliphs of Babylon) it flouriſhed in great pride and ſplendor: till taken and ſacked by Allan, or Haalan, a Tartarian Captain, who here ſtarved Muſteatxem, the laſt Caliph of it, and rooted out his whole poſterity; as if the Caliphate and City were to end together. But the Town revived again, though the Caliph could not; continuing to this day a City of great wealth and traffick; but nothing comparable unto what it was for beauty and bigneſs; being not above ſeven miles in compaſs, and having nothing in the buildings to be juſtly bragged of. Taken by Solyman the Magnificent, with the reſt of the Countrey, it became ſubject to the Turks; from them recovered by Abas King of Perſia, Anno 1625 and again recovered by the Turks, about the year 1640. In which changes it can be no marvail that ſhe hath loſt much of her former ſplendor. Maintained eſpecially at the preſent by the trade of Aleppo; to which, beſides ſuch goods as go up the water, there paſs yeerly many Caravans, or troops of Merchants, each of them having in it ſome hundreds (if not thouſands) of Camels laden with commodities. For whoſe ſafe lodging, as they paſs (the wayes being generally ill provided for Travellers, in theſe Eaſtern Countrys;) there are ſome houſes of receipt built at the publick charge, or by ſome ſpeciall Benefactor, to preſerve his memory: moſt of them ſtrong, and many fair and lovely, which in the dominions of the Perſians they call Caravan Ruwes; in the Turkiſh, canes. And for communicating the ſucceſs of their buſineſſe unto the place from whence they came, they make uſe of Pigeons, which is done in this manner. When the Hen-Pigeon ſitteth, or hath any young, they take the Cock, and ſet him in an open Cage: whom, when they have travelled a dayes journey, they let go at liberty, and he ſtrait flieth home to his Mate. When they have trayned them thus from one place to another, and that there be occaſion to ſend any advertiſements, they tie a letter about one of their necks, which at their return home is taken off by ſome of the houſe, advertiſed thereby of the ſtate of the Caravan. The like is alſo uſed betwixt Ormus and Balſora. But of this enough.

5. Cteſiphon, on the River of Tigris, not far from Seleucia, by whoſe fall it roſe, occaſioning the decay thereof, as that did of Babylon. So Pliny, ſpeaking of the fall of Babylon, by the building of Seleucia ſo neer unto it; then adding, invicem ad hanc exhauriendam, Cteſiphontem juxta tertium ab ea Lapidem condidere Parthi. Firſt built, ſaith Marcellinus, by Vardanes, afterwards beautified and walled by Pacorus, a Parthian King; and by him made the ſeat-Royall of the Perſian Kingdome. Many times beſieged and aſſaulted by the Roman Emperors; but moſt commonly without ſucceſs; and amongſt others, by Julian the Apoſtate, that bitter enemy of the Goſpell, who here breathed out his ſoul to Satan, in theſe dying words, Viciſti tandem Galilæe. But Vardanes (whoſoever he was) cannot of right be called the firſt founder of it; who raiſed it rather from the rubbiſh of an old foundation: this City being the ſame with that which Moſes called Calne; and Ezekiel, Canneh, Gen 11. and Ezek. 27.23. and therefore rightly ſaid by Pliny, to be built in Chalanitide, or the Region of Chalne.

6. Sipparum, remarkeable for the great trench made neer it, to receive the overflowings of Euphrates, which otherwiſe might have annoyed the City of Babylon: in compaſs 1280 furlongs or 160 miles; in depth 20 fathoms. A vaſt and expenceful work; but that nothing was to be admired, when Babylon it ſelf was up and in full proſperity.

7. Apamia, a City of Seleucus foundation alſo, ſcituate at the fall of Piſon into the River Tigris.

8. Vologeſia, Placed by Ptolomy amongſt the Cities of Chaldea, but by Marcellinus in Aſſyria; built or repaired by one of the Vologoſes, Kings of Perſia, and from him denominated.

9. Borſipha, by Ptolomy called Barſita, memorable for the great victory, which Cyrus the firſt Perſian Monarch, obtained here againſt Nabonidus the King of Babylon, by Scaliger ealled Darius Medus, (of which more anon): whom having vanquiſhed, he pardoned him (as he ſaith) his life, and gave him the government of Carmania.

10. Balſora, the Port Town to Babylon, ſcituate at the fall of Euphrates into Sinus Perſicus, and conſequently of great wealth and trading: The riches of Arabia, Perſia, and ſome part of India, being landed here, and ſo carried to BABYLON, and thence up the water to Aleppo. Suppoſed to be the City of Teredon, mentioned by Potolomy; built or repaired by Nebuchadnezzar, and not long ſince taken from the Turk by Abas, the Perſian.

7. ASSYRIA.

ASSYRIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Media, from which parted by the mountain called Coathras; on the Weſt, with Meſopotamia, from which divided by the River Tigris; on the South with Suſiana; and on the North, with ſome part of Turcomania, and part of Chaldæa. So called from Aſſur the ſon of Sem; by whom firſt inhabited. But having long ſince loſt that name, as to vulgar ſpeech, it is by Niger called Adrinſa; by Mercator, Sarh; by the Turks, Arzerum.

The Countrey very plain, and level, exceeding fruitfull, and abounding in Rivers. For beſides Tigris, which waſheth one whole ſide thereof, Ptolomy aſſigneth to this Countrey the River of 2. Lycus, 3. Cuprus, and 4. Gorgos; all of good note, and all of them increaſing, with their tributary Streams, the greatneſs of Tigris.

The people were antiently great warriers, and together with the Babylonians and Chaldæans, commanded a great part of the Eaſt; extending their dominion from the Mediterranean Sea, to the River Indus; inſomuch that not the people of this Province onely, but of all the Provinces almoſt of this ſpacious Empire, had the name of Aſſyrians. The men for all this, exceeding formal in their habit, wearing long robes which trailed on the very ground, their hair long, their hats or Caps Pyramidal like the Perſian Miters; not ſtirring out of doors but perfumed with Muſk, rings on their fingers, and a Scepter in their hands; and very frequent in their waſhings, eſpecially after copulation. As for their women, it was an antient cuſtome with them, to expoſe the faireſt unto ſale in the open Market: and with the money given for thoſe, to put off ſuch as were deformed and not ſo amiable: And hence perhaps the Fathers of our times have learnt this leſſon, of giving leſs portions with ſuch daughters as will ſell themſelves; but greaſing the fat ſow (as the ſaying is) with the addition of ſome hundreds: which made the merry fellow ſay, That the money were a good match, if the wench were away.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt here planted by Saint Jude, and took ſuch deep root in that plantation, that it could never be pulled up; notwithſtanding the cruel perſecutions raiſed againſt it by the Kings of Perſia: who when they ſaw there was no means to deſtroy it by violence, attempted in the next place to corrupt it with hereſie. And to that end, as alſo to revenge himſelf upon the Emperor Heraclius, a great Champion of the Orthodox Belief againſt Neſtorianiſm, Choſroes the great King of Perſia inforced all the Chriſtians of his Empire unto thoſe opinions, which he knew that Emperour condemned; permitting none who were counted Catholicks within his Dominions. By means whereof, and afterwards for want of Preachers to inſtruct them otherwiſe (the Saracens having conquered the Perſian Empire,) Neſtorianiſm prevailed ſo far, that it extended over all the Countreys Eaſt of Tigris, as far as India; and Northwards too amongſt the Tartars; of which more hereafter. Governed by their own Patriarch, who reſideth at Moſul, now the chief City of this Countrey; and honoured by his people with the Title of Jacelich, miſtaken or pronounced amiſs for Catholique: an attribute given antiently to all Orthodox Prelates.

The Opinions held by them as Neſtorians, were, 1. That there were two perſons in our Saviour, as well as two natures; but yet confeſſing that CHRIST from the firſt inſtant of his conception, was both God and man. 2ly. That the bleſſed Virgin ought not to be called Θεοτόκος, or the Mother of God; but yet acknowledging her to be the Mother of God the Son. 3ly. That Neſtorius, condemned for theſe opinions in the third and fourth General Councils, was an holy man; for whoſe ſake they condemn Saint Cyrill, his profeſs'd Antagoniſt, and all thoſe Councils wherein any cenſure was laid upon him. In other points, though differing from the Church of Rome, they are right enough, (their rejecting Epiſcopal Confirmation excepted only.) As 1. in celebrating the Sacrament of the Lords Supper with leavened bread; 2ly. communicating in both kinds; 3ly. enjoyning no neceſſity of auricular Confeſſion; 4ly. contracting marriages in the ſecond degree of Conſanguinity; 5ly. permitting ſecond and third marriages unto men in Orders, after the death of their firſt wives; 6ly. not praying before the Croſs, nor giving religious worſhip to the Crucifix, or other Images. So much for theſe Neſtorians, if ſo named aright, conſidering the qualifications added unto their opinions; now (but corruptly) called Noſtranes: the greateſt Sect of Chriſtians in all the Eaſt.

The ſolemnities which theſe Chriſtians uſe in contracting marriage, becauſe not very uſual, I will here relate. Their Wives they never ſee till the day of their marriage, but hearing a good report of the young Woman, negotiate with her parents for her. Agreed upon the buſineſs, they meet in the Chancel of the Church, wherein there is a partition with an hole in it: the Bridegroom and his friends ſtanding on the one ſide; the Bride and her kinred, on the other. When there, the Caſſiſſe or Church-man biddeth the Bridegroom to put his hand thorow the hole in the partition, and take his Bride by the hand, which he doth accordingly: the mother of the Bride, with a ſharp-pointed inſtrument, made of purpoſe, pricking the Bridegrooms hand all over, with ſufficient eagerneſs. If when he feeleth the ſmart, he lets go her hand, they take it for a ſign that he will not love her; but if he hold her faſt, and wring her hand till ſhe cry again, they take it for a very good Omen, and are glad they have ſo well beſtowed her. After the marriage is conſummate, if a male-child be born unto them, the father loſeth his own name, and is called by the name of his eldeſt ſon: ſo as if the fathers name be Moſes, and his ſons name Joſeph; the father is no more called Moſes, but Abba-Joſeph, or the father of Joſeph. So highly do they reverence marriage, and the fruit thereof, poſterity.

It was antiently divided into theſe ſix parts, 1. Arraphachitis, bordering on Armenia Major; ſo called for Arphaxaditis, or the plantation of Arphaxad, the ſon of Sem. 2. Adiabene, bordering on Meſopotamia, ſo called, quaſi Ἀδιάβατος, or inacceſſible, becauſe fenced with ſuch unfoordable

Rivers, Tigris, and Euphrates, that there was no eaſie coming to it; διὰ δυσχερεϛίαν τ̃ διάβασιν, as it is in Sudas: or rather for Adiavenena, from Dianas, and Adianas, the chief Rivers of it (the ſame which Ptolomy called Lycus, and Caprus) as in Media. 3. Calacine, and 4. Sitacene from Sittace, and Calach, two chief Cities of it; of which more anon. 5. Arbelites, and 6. Apolloniates, from Apollonia and Arbela, two other of the principal Cities.

Here then we have four of the Cities of Aſſyria brought unto our hand, 1. Calach, one of thoſe four which Nimrod built in the Land of Aſſur; Gen. 10. 11. and one of them to which the Ten Tribes were tranſplanted by Salmanaſſar, 2 Kings 17. 6. & 18. 11. of ſuch eſteem in thoſe elder days, that Calacine as Ptolomy, or Calachene as Strabo more rightly calleth it, did take name from hence, 2. Sittace, ſcituate about two miles from the banks of Tigris; in the way from Babylon to Suſa. A City, when it gave name to the parts adjoyning, both great and populous; well ſeated, in a fruitfull ſoyl, and well ſhaded with trees of ſeveral ſorts; ſuppoſed by the ſcituation of it to be that Accad, (or rather built in or near the place of it) which was one of the firſt four Cities of Nimrods Kingdom. 3. Athela, on the banks of the River Caprus, built as ſome ſay by Belus (or Belochus) Priſcus, an Aſſyrian King, whence it had the name. Near unto which there is a place which Strabo calleth Κυπαρισσῶν, or Cupreſſetum, conceived by ſome to be the place where Noah framed the Ark. 4. Apollonia, built after the Macedonian conqueſt, as appeareth by the name, which is wholly Greek: not otherwiſe obſervable, but for giving the name of Apolloniates to the Countrey adjacent. Adde unto theſe, 5. Geguamela, ſcituate in the middle ſpace betwixt Lycus, and Caprus, memorable for the laſt and greateſt Battel betwixt Alexander and Darius the King of Perſia; who had he made good the Eaſtern banks of the River Tigris, might eaſily have hindred the Macedonians from coming over: the River being ſo extreamly ſwift and violent, that the Macedonians were not able to paſs it, but by linking their hands and arms together, and making one entire body to oppoſe the current; and therewithal of ſo great depth, that the Footmen were fain to hold their Bows and Arrows over their heads, to keep them from being moiſtned and made unſerviceable. But having miſerably loſt this opportunity by the cowardiſe of Mazeus, who had the keeping of this Paſs; he was inforced to venture all upon a battel: drawing unto this place an Army of 50000 horſe, and 200000 foot in their accompt who ſpeak leaſt of it (for Arrianus makes it above a Million.) Oppoſed by Alexander with no more than 40000 foot, and 7000 horſe of his Europaans; but thoſe victoriouſly ſucceſsfull: 46000 of the Perſians ſlain, (but Diodorus Siculus ſpeaks of 90000) with the loſs of 300 Macedonians onely, as is ſaid by Curtius. In memory of which notable victory, a Mountain near the place of the battel was by Alexander called Nicator, known by that name to Strabo, and ſome other antients. 6. Reboboth, another of the four Cities, which Nimrod is ſaid to have built in Aſſur; by ſome ſuppoſed to be Birrha, an antient City upon Tigris, and bordering ſo near unto Meſopotamia, that by Ptolomy it is placed in it. Of which more anon. 7. Rheſen, another of the Cities of Nimrods building, ſeated by Moſes between Calach and Ninive, Gen. cap. 10. v. 12. and there commended for a great City. Which Character, with the ſight thereof, have induced ſome learned men to think it to be the ſame, which is by Xenophon called Lariſſa; ſeated by him on the River Tigris, much about this place, and ſaid to be a City of ſuch ſtrength and greatneſs, that it was no leſs than two Paraſangs or four miles in compaſs: the walls in height an hundred foot, twenty five in breadth; ſo ſtrongly cemented, that Cyrus, who beſieged it, could have never taken it, if a caſual Eclipſe of the Sun had not diſcouraged the defendants. But whether this conjecture be good or not, we have here Lariſſa for another of the principal Cities. 8. Ninive, by the Greeks and Latines called Ninus; firſt built by Nimrod, and called Ninive with relation unto Ninus, his Son or Nephew, after the example of Cain whoſe ſteps he followed; of whom it is ſaid that he built a City, and called it after the name of his Son, Enorh, Gen. 4. 17. I know the building of this City is by ſome aſcribed to Aſſur, grounding themſelves on that of Moſes, Gen. 10. 11. Out of that land went forth Aſſur, and built Ninive, &c. But I like better of their judgement, who take Aſſur in this place for the name of the Countrey; and not of the man; making the Text to ſpeak of Nimrod, and to ſay of him, Et egreſſus eſt in Aſſur, &c. that is to ſay, And he went forth so Aſſur or the land of Aſſyria, and there built Ninive, Rehoboth, and the reſt there named. A City ſo enlarged by ſome of the ſucceeding Kings, that it came at laſt to be bigger than Babylon, in compaſs 480 furlongs, or 60 miles; and therefore ſaid in the Book of Jonah, to be a City of three days journey, in circuit, as indeed it was: accompting 20 miles for a days journey, according to the common eſtimate of thoſe elder times; as alſo of the Greeks, and Romans, in the times ſucceeding. Nor was it of leſs ſtrength than greatneſs, the walls an hundred foot high, and ſo broad that three Carts might go abreſt on the top thereof: and in thoſe walls 1500 Turrets, each of 200 foot in height. So ſtrong, that it was thought to have been impregnable; eſpecially becauſe of an ancient Prophecy, which ſignified that the Town ſhould never be taken, till the River became an enemy to it. A Prophecy which induced Sardanapalus to make it the ſeat of his war againſt Belochus, and Arbaces, then in arms againſt him: who having beſieged it three years without hope of ſucceſs, at laſt the River over-flowing, carried before it twenty furlongs of the Wall. Which accident ſo terrified the effeminate King; that he burnt himſelf in the midſt of his enemies, and left the Town to the Beſiegers. Threatned deſtruction by the preaching of the Prophet Jonah, it eſcaped then upon repentance. But the people going on in their wicked courſes, it was deſtroyed by Aſtyages King of the Medes, that it might no longer be an encouragement to the Aſſyrians to rebel againſt him, as formerly againſt ſome of his Predeceſſors: and ſo deſtroyed, that in the time of Saint Cyril of Alexandria, as himſelf affirmeth in his Comment on the Prophet Nahum, ὡς μηδὲ ὅποι ποτὲ γέγονεν ὁρᾶσθαι λοιπόν, that one could ſcarce diſcern in what place it ſtood. 9. Moſul, at this time, and for long ſince, the chief of Aſſyria; ſeated on the Tigris, and raiſed out of the ruines of Ninive: of moſt note for being the ordinary abiding place of the Neſtorian Patriarch, who either in the City it ſelf, or the Monaſtery of Saint Hermes near adjoyning to it, hath his conſtant Reſidence. The Neſtorians in this City ſo conſiderable, both in power and number, that though it be in the hands of Mahometans, either Turks or Perſians, yet there are numbred in it fifteen Chriſtian Churches, and at leaſt 40000 ſouls. A Sect ſo maligned by the Pope, (whom they commonly call the Reprobate Biſhop) for the greatneſs of the juriſdiction which this Patriarch hath, that not contented to withdraw the Indians from him, (whereof more hereafter) Pope Julius the third, ſet up an Anti-Patriarch againſt him, to whom he gave the title of the Catholique of Muſal alſo; to whom the Neſtorians dwelling in the Northern parts of Meſopotamia, (if ſome writers of the Papal party may be believed) do ſubmit themſelves. 10. Arzeri, of greater ſtrength then Muſal, though of leſs antiquity and repute; from which the whole Province of Aſſyria is now called Arzerum. And 11. Scheheruzal, at this time of the greateſt note, as being the ordinary Reſidence of the Turkiſh Beglerbeg or Baſſa; who hath 10000 Timraiots under his command, to defend this Countrey, and be ready for any ſervice, as occaſion is.

MESOPOTAMIA.

MESOPOTAMIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Tigris, by which parted from Aſſyria; on the Weſt, with Euphrates, which divideth it from Comagena, a Province of Syria; on the North, with Mount Taurus, by which ſeparated from Armenia Major; and on the South, with Chaldæa, and Arabia Deſerta, from which laſt it parted by the bendings of Euphrates alſo.

In the Scripture it is called moſt commonly by the name of Padan Aram, that is Syria Culta, but that name properly belonging to the North-parts of it, Aram or Syria, becauſe inhabited originally by the Aramites, whom the Greeks call Syri; and Padan, or Culta, from the fruitfulneſs and riches of it, exceeding plentifully ſtored both with corn and wine, and furniſhed with all neceſſaries for the life of man; in that regard by Strabo called Meſopotamia Felix. The Southern parts hereof being barren and full of Deſarts, not having any herbage in them, οὐδὲ ἄλλο δένδρον, nor any kind of Tree, as we read in Xenophon; amongſt ſome of the antient Writers, had the name of Arabia, partly becauſe ſo alike in nature to Arabia Deſerta, and partly becauſe planted with Arabian Colonies. The name which comprehends both parts is ſometimes Syria Tranſ-fluvialis, or Syria beyond the River (Euphrates) of which ſee 2 Sam. 10. 16. But generally in the Hebrew it is called Aram-Naharaim, which the Greeks render properly by Meſopotamia, or the Countrey in the middle of Rivers: environed by Tigris on the Eaſt, and Euphrates on the Weſt and South; the River Caboras, or Abaras, paſſing alſo thorow it. The Latines generally call it by the ſame name which the Greeks had given it; Priſcian only to ſhew his faculty in Grammar, calling it Medamna; by the Turks it is now called Diarbeck.

As is the Countrey, ſuch the People, the moſt Adjective of any we have met with hitherto; able at no time to ſtand by themſelves, but ſtill requiring the addition of ſome neighbour Nation to be joyned unto them. Nothing that they can call their own, their Name, their Language, nor their Countrey. Beholding for their Name in the North, to Syria; in the South, to Arabia: the Chaldæans alſo putting in for a ſhare, and challenging thoſe parts which lie next Aſſyria, to belong to them. Their Language antiently the Syriack, at this day the Arabick. Their Countrey ſucceſſively ſubjected to the Babylonians, Aſſyrians, Medes and Perſians. From them firſt conquered by the Romans, under the conduct of Pompey; reduced into the form of a Province, by the Emperor Trajan; more fully ſetled and confirmed by Aurelianus. But being recovered by the Perſians, they fell together into the power of the Saracens, and are now commanded by the Turks. Never appearing of themſelves on the Stage of action, but when once God ſhewed his mighty power in their many weakneſſes; and raiſed them up to be a ſcourge to the houſe of Iſrael, of which ſee Judges chap. 3. v. 8. Hired afterwards by Adadezer King of Syria Zobah, in his war againſt David; by whom moſt ſhamefully defeated, 2 Sam. 10. 16. 18. Yet notwithſtanding memorable in the Book of God, for the birth of Abraham and Rebecca; the long abode of Jacob, and the birth of his children, in that reſpect affording an Original to the Hebrew Nation.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt preached here by Saint Thaddæus, one of the 70 Diſciples; Anno 43. upon this occaſion. Agbarus the Toparch, or Prince of Edeſſa, one of the chief Cities of this Countrey, having been long afflicted with an incurable infirmity, and hearing of the fame of JESUS; beſeeched him, by a ſpecial meſſage, to come and help him: whereunto our Saviour made this anſwer, That he could not viſit him in perſon, the things he was to do, whileſt upon the earth, being to be performed onely in the land of Canaan; but that he would take care of his health in convenient time. Accordingly, not long after his Aſcenſion, Saint Thomas the Apoſtle, by immediate revelation from our Saviour, ſent Thaddæus thither; by whom the Prince was cured, and the Goſpel preached, and many of the Nation converted to it: the Acts whereof, together with the Copies of the ſeveral Letters from Agbarus to CHRIST, and from CHRIST to him, preſerved in the Archives of Edeſſa; were by Euſebius tranſlated out of the Syriack, and inſerted into the body of his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, lib. 1. cap. 14. Once planted, it found good increaſe, continuing in the purity of it till about the year 530. at what time one Jacobus Syrus (ſo called from his birth and abode in Syria) took on him the defence of the Errors of Eutyches, touching the unity of natures in CHRIST our Saviour. Whoſe followers finding the Patriarch of Antioch too vigilant over them, removed for the moſt part further off; ſetling themſelves in Babylonia, and Meſopotamia, where they continued in great numbers: governed by their own Patriarch, to whom the Jacobites in Syria are alſo ſubject, who takes unto himſelf the title of Patriarch of Antioch, and is ſucceſſively called Ignatius, as if the undoubted Succeſſor of that Saint and Martyr; ſuperior in that regard, to the Patriarch of Hieruſalem, who is alſo a Jacobite. The Patriarchal See fixt it in the Monaſtery of Saphran, near the City of Merdin; but the Reſidence of the Patriarchs for the moſt part, at Caramit: the number of Chri- ſtians under his obedience, computed formerly at 160000 Families, reduced ſince unto 50000. That which they hold as Jacobites, diſtinct from all other Chriſtians, is 1. The acknowledgement but of one nature, one will, and one operation (as there is but one perſon) in Chriſt our Saviour. 2. In ſigning their children before Baptiſm, in the face or arm, with the ſign of the Croſs, imprinted with a burning iron. 3. Retaining Circumciſion, and uſing it in both Sexes. 4. Affirming the Angels to conſiſt of two ſubſtances, Fire and Light; and 5. Honouring the memory of Dioſcurias (of Alexandria) and Jacobus Syrus, condemned by the antient Councils. The points wherein they differ from the Church of Rome;

1. Not enjoyning the people the neceſſity of Confeſſion to a Prieſt, before they admit them to communicate.

2. Not admitting Purgatory, nor Prayers for the dead.

3. Adminiſtring the Sacrament of the Euchariſt in both kinds.

4. Allowing the marriage of Prieſts; And

5. Teaching that the ſouls of men deceaſed are not admitted preſently to the Viſion of God, but remain ſomewhere in the earth, to expect Chriſts coming. In which laſt, (ſetting aſide the determination of the place) as they have many of the Fathers concurring with them; ſo to the firſt (touching the unity of natures in our Saviour Chriſt) they have of late added ſuch qualifications, as poſſibly may make it capable of an Orthodox ſenſe.

Chief Rivers of this Countrey (beſides Tigris and Euphrates, of which more hereafter,) 1. Chaboras, which riſing in Mount Maſius, paſſing directly South, falleth into Euphrates; as alſo doth, 2. Syngarus, by Pliny called Maſca, ariſing out of the Mountain Syngarus; which is but the more Weſtern part of the ſaid Mount Maſius. Which names of Maſca, Maſius, and Màſieni, (being the name of a people dwelling thereabouts) ſhew plainly that they go upon very good grounds, who place Maſch, or Meſech, one of the ſons of Aram, in theſe parts of the Countrey.

It was divided antiently into, 1. Anthemaſia, 2. Chalcitis, 3. Caulanitis, 4. Accabene, 5. Ancorabitis, and 6. Ingine: each part containing ſeveral Cities or Towns of name. Theſe ſix when conquered by the Romans reduced unto two Provinces onely, viz. 1. Meſopotamia, lying on the South of Mount Maſius, or the head of Chaboras; and 2. Oſrhoene on the North: this laſt ſo named from one Oſrhoes, the Prince or Governor of theſe parts in the time of the Perſians, as Procopius telleth us.

Chief places of the whole, 1. Edeſſa, the Metropolis of Oſrhoene, ſcituate on the River Scirtas, which runneth thorow the middeſt of it, not far from the fall thereof into Euphrates. Memorable for the Story of Agbarus before related, amongſt Church-Hiſtorians: and in the Roman Hiſtories, for the death of the Emperor Caracalla, ſlain here by the appointment of Macrinus, Captain of his guard. The occaſion this. The Emperour conſcious to himſelf of his own unworthineſs, employed one Maternianus to enquire amongſt the Magicians in the Empire, who was moſt likely to ſucceed him: by whom accordingly advertiſed that Macrinus was to be the man. The letters being brought unto Caracalla, as he was in his Chariot, were by him delivered with the reſt of the Packets, to the hands of Macrinus, (who by his Office was to be attendant on the Emperours perſon) that he might open them, and ſignifie unto him the contents thereof at his better leiſure. Finding by this the danger in which he ſtood, he reſolved to ſtrike the firſt blow; and to that end entruſted Martialis, one of his Centurions, with the execution; by whom the Emperor was here killed, as he withdrew himſelf, Levandæ veſicæ gratia, as my Author hath it. So impoſſible a thing it is to avoid ones deſtiny; ſo vain a thing for any Price to think of deſtroying his Succeſſor: and therefore very well ſaid to Nero in the times of his Tyranny, Omnes licet occideris, Succeſſorum tuum occidere non potes, that though he cauſed all the men of eminence to be forthwith murdered, yet his Succeſſor would ſurvive him, and eſcape the blow. But to return unto Edeſſa; in following times it was made one of the four Tetrarchies of the Weſtern Chriſtians, when they firſt conquered Syria, and the Holy Land; the two firſt Governors or Tetrarches, ſucceſſively ſucceding Godfrey of Bouillon in the Kingdom of Hieruſalem. But in the year 1142. it was again recovered by Sanguin the Turk, father of Noradin, Sultan of Damaſcus; and by the loſs thereof, no fewer than three Arch-Biſhopricks withdrawn from the obedience of the See of Antioch.

2. Cologenbar, another ſtrong piece adjoyning, beſieged on the taking of Ed*eſſa*, by the ſame Sanguin, who was here ſtabbed in a drunken quarrel by one of his familiar friends; and the Fort ſaved for that time.

3. Niſibis, ſcituate ſomewhat near to the Eaſt of Mount Maſius, called alſo Ant*iochia Mygonia*; from the River Mygdonius, which runneth thorow it; and afterwards Conſtantia, from Conſtantius the ſon of Conſtantine. A City of great note in thoſe elder times, a Roman Colony, and the Metropolis of the Province of Meſopotamia, properly and ſpecially ſo called: which being beſieged by Sa*poris* the King of Perſia, (Conſtantius ruling in the Eaſt) and in no ſmall danger to be loſt, was gallantly defended by James the then Biſhop of it, whom Theodoret calls not onely Epiſcopum Civitatis, ſed Principem & Ducem, not the Biſhop onely of the City, but the Prince and Captain of it, libr. 2. cap. 31. So little inconſiſtency was there found in thoſe early days, betwixt the Epiſcopal function and civil buſineſſes; that the Biſhops were not interdicted from the acts of War, when the neceſſities of the State did invite them to it. The City not long after moſt unworthily delivered to the ſaid Sa*pores*, by the Emperor Jovinian; which drew along with it, in ſhort time, the loſs of the Province.

4. Ur, ſeated on the Eaſt of Niſibis, betwixt it and Tigris; and ſo placed by A*mmianus*, who had travelled this Countrey. Conceived to be the birth-place of A*braham*, and called Ur of the Chaldees, Gen. 11. 28. either becauſe the Chaldees were in thoſe days poſſeſſed of the place; or becauſe the name of Chaldæa did comprehend alſo thoſe parts of this Countrey which lay towards Tigris, as was ſhewn before. For that the place from which Terah the Father of Abraham did return to Haran in Meſopotamia, was rather ſcituate in this coaſt where Ur is placed by Ammianus, then betwixt the Lakes of Chaldea and the Perſian Gulf, where moſt Writers place it, may appear probable for the reaſons which are here ſubjoyned, 1. Becauſe it is ſaid by Joſhua, chap. 24. ver. 12. That Terah the Father of Abraham, and the Father of Nachor, dwelt on the other ſide of the Flood; that is to ſay, on the further ſide of the River Euphrates, and that too ἀπ᾽ἀρχῆς, as the Septuagint, ab initio, as the Vulgar Latine; in the firſt beginning. Which cannot be underſtood of any Ur, placed on or near the Lakes of Caldea, thoſe being on this ſide the Northern parts of Aſſyria, and Meſopotamia: and it were ſtrange that Terah ſhould be planted ſo far from the reſt of his kindred. 3. Becauſe from Ur in Meſopotamia, near the banks of Tigris, the way to Canaan (to which Terah did intend to go) was directly by Haran: whereas if he had dwelt (as ſome ſay he did) by the Lakes of Chaldea, his way had been directly Weſt thorow Arabia Deſerta, and not to have travelled, with his family, ſo far North as Haran; and then to have fallen back as much Southward, as he had gone Northward, croſſing Euphrates twice with his herds and cattel. 5. Haran, the place to which Terah did remove when he went from Ur, and from which Abraham did remove when he went towards Canaan; ſo named in memory of Haran the ſon of Terah: but called afterwards by the name of Carræ, and by that name well known to the Roman Writers for the death of Craſſus, that wealthy Roman. Whoſe eſtate (beſides the tenth which he offered to Hercules, and three moneths corn diſtributed amongſt the poor) amounting to 7100 Talents, which comes in our money to one Million, 331250l. but all his wealth could not preſerve him from the ſlaughter; ſlain near this City, with the routing of his Army alſo, by Herodes King of Parthia: of which briefly Lucan,

> ———miſerando funere Craſſus
> Aſſyrias Latio maculavit ſanguine Carras.

Which may be Engliſhed to this purpoſe,
By a defeat lamented Craſſus ſtains
With Roman blood the Aſſyrian Carras Plains.

Called the Aſſyrian Carræ by Poetical licence, becauſe the Aſſyrians formerly had been Lords thereof. And no leſs memorable was it in the times foregoing, for a famous Temple of the Moon, worſhipped here (but in no place elſe) under both Sexes: ſome honoring it as a female Deity, then called Dea Luna; and others in the ſhape and dreſs of a man, and called Deus Lunus. But with this fortune and ſucceſs, as ſaith Spartianus, qui Lunam fœmineo nomine putabat nuncupandam, is mulieribus ſemper inſerviat: that they who worſhipped it in the form of a Woman, ſhould be always ſubject to their wives (I trow there were but few of that Religion) qui verò Marem deum crederet, is uxori dominetur; but he that worſhipped it as a man, ſhould preſerve the maſtery. 6. Amida, near the River Tigris, the Metropolis of Meſopotamia, when one Province onely, and before it fell into the hands of the Romans, much beautified by Conſtantius the ſon of Conſtantine, by whom named Conſtantias. But that new name dying with him, the old revived: of great ſtrength, as a frontier Town againſt the Perſians, and by them much aimed at. Honored of late times with the Reſidence of the Patriarch of the Jacobite Chriſtians, as the chief City of this Province; for this cauſe alſo made the dwelling of the Pſeudo-Patriarch of the Neſtorians (or Noſtranes) of the Popes erection; and the chief ſeat alſo of the Baſſa, or other Officer, governing this Countrey for the Turks; by whom called Caramit, or Kara Amida, that is to ſay, Amida the black, becauſe it was walled with black ſtone. 7. Phalga, or Phaliga, at the meeting of Chaboras with Euphrates not far from Carræ; mentioned by Stephanus and Arrianus, and by Ptolemy miſtakingly called Pharga: the ſeat or firſt plantation of Phaleg, one of Abrahams Anceſtors: Serug, another of them giving name to 8. Sarug, about a days journey off from Haran, ſpoken of by ſome later Writers. 9. Singara, on the River ſo named, a fortified City in the time of Ammianus, by whom mentioned, lib. 20. 10. Cezabde, mentioned by the ſame Author, by whom ſaid to have been a very ſtrong Fort, ſeated on a pretty high hill, and bending towards the banks of Tygris, before whoſe times it had anciently been called Phœnicha. 11. Virta, ſuppoſed to have been the work of Alexander the Great, circled with Walls, environed with Half-Moons and Bulwarks, and made unacceſſible: in vain beſieged by Sapores the Perſian King, after the taking of Bezabde. The ſame perhaps with the Birtha of Ptolomy. 12. Merdin, not far from which, in the Monaſtery of Saphran, is the Patriarchal See of the Jacobite Sectaries.

The firſt Inhabitants of theſe Countrey, though united from the firſt beginning under the ſame Princes, and form of Government, came from ſeveral families: all the three ſons of Noah concurring as it were in this Plantation. From Nimrod, Havilah, and others of the poſterity of Chus, the ſon of Ham, came the Babylonians: with whom Cheſed the ſon of Nachor, of the houſe of Sem, intermingling families; or being the Author of their language, or of ſome other ſignal benefit; gave to them the name of Chaldim, whence came that of Chaldeans. From Aſſur, Arphaxad, and thoſe of Arphaxads poſterity, intermingled with the ſons of Maſh, the ſon of Aram, came the Meſopotamians and Aſſyrians. And that Japhet alſo and his children may put in for a part, the neighbourhood of the Medes and Albaneſe, deſcended from him, makes it ſomewhat probable.

But whatſoever Parents they deſcended from, Nimrod the ſon of Chus made ſo bold with them, as to bring them under his command: planting in Chaldea, the Cities of Babylon and Calne; in Aſſyria, Ninive, Rheſem, and Calach; and finally Rehoboth (if that were Birtha as ſome think it was)

was) in Meſopotamia. By theſe ſtrong Forts he curbed the native, and aſſured his power; being the firſt that altered the Paternal form of Government, and drew unto himſelf the Government of ſeveral Nations, not having any dependance upon oneanother. The foundation thus laid by him, his Succeſſors ſoon raiſed the building to a wondrous height; advancing the Aſſyrian Emplre, from the Mediterranean Sea, to the River Indus: and that too in a ſhorter time than could be imagined, but that the World was then divided into petit States, not cemented together with the ligaments of power and policy: for though there be little found of Belus the ſon of Nimrod, but that he ſpent moſt of his time in draining the mariſhes, and making firm ground of thoſe vaſt ſens which lay near to Babylon, which were works of peace: yet by thoſe and the like works of peace, he ſo ſetled his affais at home, that he gave his ſon Ninus the better opportunity to look abroad: who mightily improved his Empire, and was the greateſt and moſt powerful of all that line; extending his dominions, from the River Indus, to the Mediterranean; and from the Caſpian Sea, to the Southern Ocean. His Succeſſors we ſhall finde in the following Catalogue of

The Aſſyrian Monarchs.

A. M.
1798	1. Nimrod, called bi ſome Saturnus Babylonius, the ſon of Chus, and Nephew of Cham, was the firſt who altered the Paternal Government, and uſurped dominion over others; making Babylon his Imperial City. 47.
1845	2. Belus, or Jupiter Babylonicus, the ſon of Nimrod, whoſe Image was worſhipped by the old Idolaters, under the names of Bel, and Baal. 62.
1907	3. Ninus, the ſon of Belus, conquered Armenia, Syria, Media, Bactria, and the Perſian Provinces; and removed the Imperial Seat to Ninive, by him much beautified and enlarged. 52.
1959	4. Semiramis, the wife of Ninus ſubdued the Arabians; but invading the Indianss alſo, ſhe was vanquiſhed and ſlain by their King Staurobates. Of this great Lady it is ſaid, that ſhe was born in Aſcalon, a Town of Syria, and expoſ'd to the fury of wild beaſts. But being born not to die ſo ingloriouſly, ſhe was brought up by ſhepherds, and at full age preſented to the Syrian Vice-Roy, who gave her in mariage to his onely ſon. Going with him to the wars, ſhe fell in acquaintance with Ninus, who liking her perſon and ſpirit, took her to his bed. This bred in him a greater affection towards her, ſo that he granted her, at her requeſt, the command of the Empire for five days; making a Decree, that her will in all things ſhould be punctually performed: which boon being gotten, ſhe put on the Royal Robes, and (as ſome Writers do report) commanded the King to be ſlain. Having thus gotten the Empire, ſhe exceedingly enlarged it, leading with her an Army conſiſting of one hundred thouſand Chariots of war, three millions of foot, and half a million of horſe. A woman in whom there was nothing not to be honoured or applauded, but her inſatiable luſts: in which, if the Greek Writers ſay true (as we have no reaſon to believe it of ſo gallant a woman) ſhe was very guilty.
2001	5. Ninus II. the Son of Ninus and Semiramis.
2039	6. Arias 30.
2069	7. Arabius 40.

3126	38. Sardanapalus, by Euſebius called Tonoſcolos, the laſt King of this Race.

Of which, being 38 iu all, there is ſcarce any thing remaining but the very names: regiſtred in this order by Beroſus, or rather by Frier Annius a Monk of Viturbum in Tuſcany, who hath thruſt upon the world the fancies of his own brain, under the name of that antient Hiſtorian. The chief Kings of note after Semiramis, were,

1. Ninus, or Zameis her ſon; who by his Deputies and Lieutenants ſubdued the Arrians, Bactrians, and Caſpians; but was otherwiſe a man of effeminate and unkingly carriage. And therefore is conceived to be the elder Bacchus, ſo much celebrated amongſt the Grecians.

2. Belus the ſecond, who recovered that Countrey which afterwards was called Judaa, to the Aſſyrian Empire, from which it had revolted in the time of his Predeceſſor, (on the defeat of Amraphel, one of his Lieutenants, by the ſword of Abraham) and ſubdued many other nations.

The new Kings of Aſſyria and Chaldea.

3. Bolochus Priſcus, the tenth King, who by ſome Writers is ſaid to be the Authour of Divination by the flying of Birds, called Auſpicium. For of Sooth-ſayers there were in all four kinds.

1. This Auſpicium, quaſi Aviſpicium, taken from the flight of Birds, either on the right hand, or on the left; (and hence the Proverb cometh, avi ſiniſtrâ, good luck, becauſe in giving, the right hand is oppoſite to the receivers left) or from the number of the Birds, whence Romulus had promiſed to him the Empire, before his Brother, becauſe he had ſeen the double number of Vultures: or laſtly, from the nature of them, whence the ſame Romulus, ſeeing the Vultures, was (ſaith Florus) ſpei plenus urbem bellatricem fore, ita illi ſanguini, & præda aſſueta aves pollicebantur.

2. Aruſpicium, ab Aras inſpiciendo, in which the Sooth-ſayers obſerved whether the Beaſt to be ſacrificed came to the Altars willingly, or not: whether the entrails were of a natural colour, exulcerate, &c. or whether any part were wanting. All Hiſtories afford varieties of Examples in this kinde; I need give no particular inſtance. A kinde of Divination ſaid to be practiſed firſt by the Tuſcans, or Hetrurians; inſtructed in the knowledge thereof by one called Tages, who appearing to certain Plough-men out of a Furrow, taught them this myſtery, and ſo vaniſhed.

3. Tripudium, ſo called quaſi Terripudium, and Terripavium, from the trembling or ſhaking of the Earth; was a conjecture of future ſucceſſes, by the rebounding of crums caſt unto Chickins. We have an inſtance of this in the life of Tiberius Gracchus, who being ſeditiouſly buſie in promoting the Law Agraria, was fore-warned by the keeper of his Chickins to deſiſt from that enterpriſe; becauſe when he had thrown the crums to the Coop, there came out but one of the Chickins onely, and the ſame without eating went back again; which was taken for a ſign of ill luck, as the greedy devouring of them had been of good. But Tiberius ſlighting the advertiſement, and purſuing his deſign, was the ſame day ſlain.

4 Augurium, ſo called ab avium garritu, was a prediction from the chirping or chattering of birds; as alſo from the ſounds and voices heard they knew not whence; nor on what occaſion. In which later kinde the death of Cæſar was divined from the clattering of Armour in his houſe; and the poyſoning of Germanicus by the ſounding of a Trumpet of its own accord: In the former, an Owl ſcreeching in the Senate-houſe, was deemed ominous to Auguſtus; and a company of Crows following Sejanus to his houſe, with great noiſe and clamour, was judged to be fatal to that great Favourite: and ſo it proved

5. Manitus, the thirteenth King; who revived again the antient Diſcipline, corrupted by the ſloathfulneſſe and effeminacy of his Predeceſſors; and by the terrour of his name awed the Egyptians.

6. Aſcatades, the eighteenth King, more abſolute in Syria, and the Weſtern parts, than any of the Kings before him.

7. Sardanapalus, the laſt King of this Race, who being wondrous effeminate, and utterly unable to govern ſo great an Empire; gave opportunity to Arbaces, his Lieutenant in Media, to conſpire againſt him. By whom, aſſociated with Belochus Governour of Babylon, he was beſieged in his City of Ninive: and there reduced unto ſuch extremities, that gathering his treaſures all together, he burnt himſelf and them in one funeral Pile; eo ſolum facto virum imitatus, at is ſaid by Juſtine. The treaſure which he is ſaid to have burnt with him, amounted to one hundred Millions of Talents of Gold, and a thouſand Millions of Talents of Silver: which in our Engliſh money comes to twenty thouſand and five hundred Millions of pounds. A maſs of money, which as it muſt be long in gathering, ſo probably it had not ſeen the Sun in many years, and therefore grown ruſty, might require a fire to purge it. This Sardanapalus afforded it, it may be, to end his life with that, in which he placed his Summum Bonum: It may be in ſpight unto his enemies; and it is poſſible it might be in policy, that ſo great a treaſure not falling to the poſſeſſion of his foes, might ſo much the more diſable them from making reſiſtance againſt, or detaining the Empire from his next rightfull Succeſſors. For it is of all things moſt fooliſh, both to loſe our Treaſure, and with it to inrich our adverſaries. On which conſideration the Spaniards fired their Indian Fleet at Gades, and the Genoeſe theirs at Tripolis, that their lading might not come into the poſſeſſion of their enemies, the Engliſh and Mahometans. After the death of this Sardanapalus, Arbaces took Media, and Perſia, with the confining Provinces; Belochus ſtrengthned himſelf in Aſſyria, Chaldea, and the adjacent Regions, his Kingdom being called the new Kingdom of Aſſyria.

3194.	2. Phul Aſſur, deſtroyed Galilee, and ſubdued the Kingdom of Damaſcus; the ſame who is called Tiglah Philaſſar in the holy Scriptures.
3217.	3. Salmanaſſar, who deſtroyed Samaria, and ruined the Kingdom of Iſrael, and carried the ten Tribes to perpetual Captivity. This is the Nabonaſſar of the Chronologers.

3383. 10. Evilmerodach, the ſon of Nebuchadnezzar, ſlain by Aſtyages, King of the Medes. 26.

3409. 11. Balthaſſar, ſon of Evilmerodach (the Nabodinus of Beroſus) a Prince of a diſſolute and cruel nature, was in the later end of his reign aſſailed by Cyaxares the ſon of Aſtyages (whom the Scriptures call Darius Medus) and by Cyrus the Perſian: by whom he was ſlain in the ſeventeenth year of his reign, and the Empire of the Babylonians was transferred to the Medes and Perſians. A.M. 3426.

That this was the end of Balthaſſar, is the common opinion. But Joſephus Scaliger, in his learned and induſtrious work, De emendatione temporum, maketh him to be ſlain in a tumult by his own people: who elected into the Empire a Nobleman of the Medes, called in prophane ſtories, Nabonidus; in divine, Darius Medus; who after a 17 years reign was ſlain by Cyrus King of the Perſians. But by the leave of ſo worthy a man, this cannot hold good. For the Lord, by his Prophet Jeremy, had pronounced (Chap. 27.) That all nations ſhould ſerve Nebuchadnezzar, and his ſon, and his ſons ſon; whereas Nabonidus was a Prince of ſtrange blood, and ſo the Nations were not to ſerve him; and in Balthaſſar, the ſons ſon of Nebuchadnezzar, was this word accompliſhed. But let us examine his arguments, and withal the ſcoffs, which very prodigally he beſtoweth on ſuch as maintain the contrary opinion: Natio Chronologorum, the whole rout of Chronologers; boni & diligentes viri, good ſimple meaning men; & addunt alia nihil veriora, are his firſt complements. Ut igitur, quod Chronologorum eſt, omnes reſipiſcant, &c. therefore that they may repent their ever being Chronologers, he bringeth in Beroſus, cited by Joſephus, in his firſt Book againſt Appion. But Beroſus there maketh Nabonidus (to whom he ſaith the Kingdom of Balthaſſar was by the people delivered) to be a Babylonian, and not as Scaliger would have him ſay, a Nobleman of the Medes; neither can the authority of Beroſus countervail that of Daniel, who in Chap.6. telleth Balthaſſar, that his Kingdom ſhould be divided among the Medes and Perſians. His ſecond argument is drawn from the nature of the word ἀναδέξατο, ϗ Δαρεῖος ὁ Μῆδος ἀναδέξατο τὴν ἀρχὴν, as it is in the ſame Chapter, and Darius the Mede took the Empire: by which word took is implied (ſaith he) not a forcible invaſion, but a willing acceptance of the Empire offered. To this we anſwer, that Darius indeed took the Empire quietly and willingly, being offered unto him by Cyrus, and his army, conſiſting of Medes and Perſians, who according to the word of God had taken it from Balthaſſar, Darius being then abſent. Quid ſi probavero (ſaith he) eum cognominatum fuiſſe Medum? he hath yet one trick more then all theſe; and Medus muſt not be the national name, but the ſirname of Darius, which he proveth out of a fragment of Megaſthenes, cited by Euſebius, in his Work De Præparatione Evangelica, where he is called Μήδης, λυνάστιος ἔςαι Μήδης, &c. an argument of all others the moſt ſleight and trivial. For beſides that Μήδης may there as well be the name of his Nation, as of his Family; and beſides that it thwarteth the places of Jeremy and Daniel, already quoted; it is diametrally oppoſite to another place of the ſame Daniel, in his ninth Chapter; where he is called Darius, of the ſeed of the Medes. Of this Darius more anon, when we come into Media. As for Nabonidus, queſtionleſs he was the ſame with Balthaſſar. For beſides that Joſephus, and Beroſus, attribute to either of them the reign of 17 years, the ſame Joſephus (who might beſt know the truth in this caſe) telleth us that Balthaſſar was by the Babylonians called Naboandel, a name not ſo great a ſtranger to Nabonidus, as Scaligers Darius, or Herodotus his Labonitus. But in this we muſt pardon Scalig. Scorn and contradiction was a part of his eſſence. For had he not been in ſome things ſingular, in all, peremptory, he had neither been a Scaliger, nor the ſon of Julius.

But leaving Scalig to the ſingularity of his own conceits we finde nothing done by the Aſſyrians or Chaldeans after this ſubjection, which might denote them to have been once the Lords of ſo great an Empire. Succeſſively inſlaved by the Medes, Perſians, and Macedonians; then by the Perſians again, afterwards by the Saracens, next by the Turks, a third time by the Perſians, once again by the Turks of the Ottoman Family, unto whom now ſubject: never endeavouring to aſſert, in the way of war, or oppoſition, either their ancient reputation, or their native liberties; but ſuffering themſelves to be won, loſt, fought for, and again recovered by their quarrelſome Maſters, as if they had no title to their own Countrey, but were born to follow the fortunes of all pretenders. The reaſon of which is principally to be aſcribed to the form of Government uſed amongſt the Perſians, which was ſo deſpotical and abſolute, if not tyrannical, that they held all the people conquered by them in the nature of ſlaves; not ſuffering any to grow great in the ſtate of inheritance, or to enjoy any place of power and profit under them in the conquered Provinces, but at the pleaſure of the Prince; as it is now uſed amongſt the Turks of the Ottoman Empire. By means whereof, the great men having no alliances amongſt themſelves, and as few dependants amongſt the people, were never able to take head againſt the Conquerors; but in the fall of the preſent Prince fell together with him: it being a good rule of Machiavel, that where the antient Nobility is in good regard, linked in alliances with themſelves, and well reſpected by the common and inferiour people; there it is difficult for the Invader,though a Conqueror,to win a Country,and harder to keep it being conquered. But on the other ſide, where Nobility is quite worn out,and the Prince doth hold his Subjects in the nature of ſlaves,there both the conqueſt will be eaſie and ſoon aſſur'd. For to what purpoſe ſhould the Subjects reſiſt the Conqueror,or ſtand any longer to their King,then he ſtands to himſelf,when they are ſure the Conqueror can lay upon them no heavier burdens,then they were accuſtomed to before, & have withal a flattering hope,that their new Maſters may be gentler to them,then their former were? It fares with them no otherwiſe then with Eſops Aſs,which refuſed to make the opportunity of an eſcape from the hands of the enemy,by whom he was taken,becauſe he knew it was not poſſible they ſhould lay more load upon his back, then his old Maſter made him bear. To which condition the Chaldeans and Aſſyrians being brought by the Perſians,and never accuſtomed to the taſte of a better fortune,have followed the ſame ſucceſſes as the Perſians did,falling together with them from one hand to another; the particular accompt of whoſe eſtate we ſhall finde in Perſia,taking this onely for the cloſe, that when Solyman the Magnificent had diſcomfited Tamas King of Perſia,and taken the great City of Bagdat; Caramit, Meridin, and the reſt,both in Aſſyria, Chaldea, and Meſopotamia, ſubmitted to him without any reſiſtance, and received his Garriſons. And for a confirmation of his eſtate, he received at the hand of the Caliph of Babylon(who by an old Prerogative had the nomination, or Confirmation at the leaſt,of the Kings of Aſſyria and the Sultans of Egypt)the Royal Ornaments and Enſigns, Anno 1534 incorporating by that meanes thoſe Regions into his eſtates,and making them provinces of his Empire; in which he left a Beglerbeg at Bagdad to command in chief; and divers Sanziacks in their ſeveral and reſpective Provinces. And though the Perſian Kings have ſince taken,and are ſtill poſſeſſed of ſome places of importance in them, yet I account them,in regard of the ſaid inveſtiture, and the long poſſeſſion following on it,for Provinces of the Turkiſh Empire: as I do Medina of the Perſian, though Taurus and ſome other pieces of it be poſſeſſed by the Turks.

MOUNT TAVRUS.

MOVNT TAVRVS is a conſtant and continual ridge of hills, which extend from the Mediterranean to the Indian Seas; running thorow the whole length of Aſia from Weſt to Eaſt, and dividing it, as the Æquator doth the Globe, into North and South. It was called Taurus, from the word Tur or Taur, which in the Syriack and Chaldean ſignifieth a Mountain; the common name of all high mountains being made peculiar unto this, by reaſon of its greatneſſe and continued length: yet ſo, that it had other names alſo in ſome parts thereof, according to the Regions and Nations by which it paſſed, and on which it bordered. The courſe whereof is thus ſet down by Sir Walter Rawleigh: premiſing onely, that it beginneth in the Province of Lyſia, a Region of Aſia Minor. neer the Mediterranean. ‘Theſe Mountains (ſaith he) which ſunder Cilicia from the reſt of Aſia the leſſe, on the North thereof, are called Taurus; and where they part it from Comagena a Province of Syria, they are called Amanus. On the Eaſt-ſide of the River Euphrates (which forceth it ſelf a way thorow it) it ſometimes reſumeth the name of Taurus, as in Ptolomies three firſt Tables of Aſia, and ſometimes taketh the name of Niphates, as in the fourth: retaining that uncertain appellation, ſo long as they bound Armenia from Meſopotamia. After the River Tigris hath alſo cut them aſunder, they continue the name of Niphates altogether, untill they ſeparate Aſſyria and Media; but then they call themſelves Coatras: although between the upper and lower Media, they appear not alwayes, but are ſeen diſcontinued, and broke in pieces; ſuch ſarts of it as are found in the middle of that Country being called Orontes; thoſe which lie more towards the Eaſt being named Coronus; out of the Southern parts whereof iſſueth the River of Bagradus, which divideth the ancient Perſia from Caramania. Continuing further Eaſt-ward by the name of Coronus, they give unto the Parthians and Hyrcanians, their proper Countrys; and afterwards change themſelves into the Mountaines of Seriphi, out of which riſeth the River Maugris. And now beginning to draw towards the ends of their courſe, they firſt make themſelves the South border of Bactria, and are then known by the name of Paropamiſus: and after take unto themſelves the name of Caucaſus, where the famous Rivers, Indus, Hidaſpis, and Zaradrus, have their firſt beginnings. In this point do they hold their heads exceeding high, to hinder the Mountains of Imaus, whom they encounter within the 35. 36, & 37. Degrees of Latitude. and the 140 Degree of Longitude: known by no other name then this, till finally they terminate their courſe in the Indian Seas. So far and to this purpoſe, that noble Gentleman. It may be added hereunto, that though the ancient writers could trace the courſe of this Mountain no further then the meeting of it with Imaus; yet latter obſervations follow it to the wall of China: the parts beyond Caucaſus being now known by the names of Delangeur, and Naugrocot. But this is to be underſtood onely of the main body of theſe Mountains, which hold on in an even courſe from Weſt to Eaſt; not of thoſe ſpurs and Branches of it which ſhoot either to the North, or South: ſuch as are the Anti-Taurus in ſome parts of the leſſer Aſia; the Gordian Hills, and the Montes Moſchici, with thoſe which Pliny called Pariedri, others Pariardri, in Armenia Major; and that of Caboras, which ſheweth it ſelfe on the North-Eaſt of Aſſyria, with divers others.

In ſuch a continual courſe of Mountains it muſt needs be that many fierce Nations did inhabit in former times, not eaſily ſubdued, nor ſo ſoon reduced unto civility, as ſuch who were poſſeſſed of places leſſe defenſible, and fitter for commerce and traffick with the reſt of mankind. And they continued in theſe late times, the laſt which were brought under by the Turks and Perſians, the mightieſt Monarchs of thoſe parts; though bordering on, or totally invironed with their dominions. Two Kingdoms they afforded of long continuance: one towards the Weſt, where it cloſeth with the Mountains of Anti-Taurus, and divideth Syria Comagena from Armenia Major; the other towards the Eaſt, ſeparating Media from Hyrcania. For want of other names to deſcribe them by, we will call the firſt, the Kingdome of Aladeules, and the laſt the Kingdome of Bahaman; according to the names of the two laſt Kings.

1. The Kingdom of ALADEVLES contained that part of this Mountainous tract, which beginning in or about Anti-Taurus, extended it ſelf as far towards the Eaſt, as to the banks of the River Tigris, where they part Meſopotamia from Armenia major. Inhabited by a people naturally very fierce and warlike, more famous for nothing, then their want of al things; who as men dwelling in a rough and barren Country could little profit themſelves by husbandry, and therefore gave themſelves to grazing, breeding on their paſtures ſome ſtore of horſe and camels, which they ſold to others, but eſpecially maintaining themſelves and their families by hunting and ſtealing. Suppoſed to come originally from the Cappadocians & Armenians of the leſſer Aſia, which by long and continual wars, in the former Ages, were forced to forſake their dwellings, and for ſafety of their lives to fly to thoſe unpeopled and deſolate Mountains tains. Where ſearching every hill and dale, and following the opportunity of Springs and Rivers, but chiefly the mildeſt Temperature of the Air, and moſt chearful aſpect of the Sun: they built in many places poor Villages, and afterwards ſome better Towns. The principal of which is named Maras, ſo called, as it is conceived, from the River Marſias, which riſing out of the Mountain Cœlene, paſſeth by the ſame, and not far off falleth into the River Euphrates.

When it was made a Kingdom firſt, it is hard to ſay, the Kings hereof being mean and inconſiderable in the eye of the world, not worth the conquering, and wanting power to conquer others, and enlarge their Territories: nor indeed worthy any King but one of their own, who could content himſelf with reigning over Rocks and Mountains. The laſt was Aladeules, ſo much ſpoken of in the Turkiſh Hiſtories, and by them called the Mountain King. Conceived by ſome Writers to have been the Author of ſuch a Paradiſe as we ſhall finde deſcribed when we come to Drangiana, a Province of Perſia; and by that means grown formidable to his neighbouring Princes. But that which made him moſt really and truely known in the ſtories of the former times, was the ſtout oppoſition which he made againſt the Turks, in their wars with Perſia: he had before given no ſmall check to the proceedings of Bajazet the ſecond, in his conqueſt of the Caramanian Kingdom; and no leſs troubled Selimus the ſon of Bajazet, in his Perſian Wars, impeaching what he could the greatneſs of the Ottoman Family. Fought with by Selimus, he made good his ground with a great deal of courage, till betrayed by Alis-Beg, General of his horſe; and ſeeing his Army terrified by the ſhot of the Turks, he was fain to flie. But being at laſt taken, and put to death by the command of Selimus, his Kingdom was converted to a Turkiſh Province, Anno 1515. and ſo continueth to this day.

2. The Kingdom of BAHAMAN was ſcituate more towards the Eaſt, amongſt the Mountains which divide Media from Hyrcania, as before was ſaid. The Mountains in thoſe parts ſo high, that Travellers, at the end of two days journey, may diſcern the middle Region of the Air to be beneath them, exceeding troubleſome to aſcend, about fifty miles in height, when once got to the top; but more dangerous by reaſon of the Rocks and Precipices, in the going down: full of inhoſpitable ſtreights, and ſo cold and barren, that were not Sovereignty a temptation above all reſiſtance, no man would take upon him the command of ſo poor a Kingdom. And yet in this extremity of height and cold, there is great quantity of Sulphur, which makes it ſparkle in the night, like the Hill Veſuvius in Italy: by means whereof here are many Hot Baths, three of them walled about, two open; to which reſort unſound and decrepid people, in very great multitudes. The chief Town of it, Larry-Joon, in the ordinary road or paſs betwixt Omoal the laſt Town of Hyrcania, and Damoan the firſt of Media. But the Kings ſeat was in a valley called Reyna, where he had a Caſtle ſo built upon the beſt advantages of art and nature, that it ſeemed invincible: adorned above with gardens, flowers, and moſt pleaſant fruits; and furniſhed beneath with a Rivulet of pureſt water, which pleaſantly paſſing thorow the Caſtle, fell into the Vallos; A Caſtle of ſo large a circuit, that beſides the Kings Family or Court, it was able to admit a Gariſon of 10000. men.

The laſt King hereof was the aforeſaid Bahaman, derived from a long deſcent of Royal Anceſtors, comparing for antiquity with the Perſian Sophies: who though ill-neighboured on both ſides, by the Tartarian on the one, and the King of Perſia on the other; yet had they with great fortune, policy and valour, maintained their Royalties againſt all pretenders. But Abas, the late Perſian Sophy, having either conquered or reduced Hyrcania, picked a quarrel with Bahaman: pretending that by the opportunity of his ſcituation he might rob his Caravans, hinder his progreſs towards the Hyrcanian-Sea, and turn into other Channels all the Streams or Rivers, which riſing from Mount Taurus, watered and enriched his Perſian Territories. And though Bahaman never had attempted any of the things objected, yet it was cauſe enough of quarrel that he might ſo do: and therefore is beſieged in his Caſtle of Ryna, with an Army of 30000 men. Finding no poſſibility to prevail by force, the General of the Perſians proceeds by Treachery: invites the old King into his Camp under colour of parley, and by his means drew his two ſons out of the Caſtle to the parley alſo. Whom having got into his power, he firſt cauſed their heads to be cut off; and after making uſe of their ſeals and ſignets, obtains a ſurrender of the place; and with it the poſſeſſion of this mountainous Kingdom, Anno 1601. or thereabouts; united ever ſince to the Crown of Perſia.

TURCOMANIA.

TURCOMANIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Media, and the Caſpian Sea; on the Weſt, with the Euxine Sea, Cappadocia, and Armenia Minor; on the North with Tartary, and on the South with Meſopotamia and Aſſyria. So called from the Turcomans or Turks; who from hence made their firſt expedition for the conqueſt of Perſia, and after ſpread themſelves over all thoſe parts of Europe, Aſia, and Africk, now in their poſſeſſion. A Countrey which conſiſteth of four ſeveral Provinces, each Province having to its ſelf its particular ſtory; and therefore we muſt look upon it as it is now divided into thoſe four parts, that is to ſay, 1. Armenia Major, or Turcomania properly and ſpecially ſo called; 2. Colchis, now called Mengrelia; 3. Iberia, now named Georgia; 4. Albania, which they now term Zuiria.

1. ARMENIA MAJOR.

ARMENIA MAJOR is bounded on the Eaſt, with Media, and ſome part of the Caſpian ſea; on the Weſt with the River Euphrates, which parteth it from Armenia Minor, in the leſſer Aſia; on the North with Colchis, or Mengrelia; and on the South with Meſopotamia, and ſome part of Aſſyria.

It was called Armenia, as ſome ſay, quaſi Aram-Mini, or the Minni of Syria: but as others ſay, quaſi Har-mini, that is to ſay, Mons Mini, or Montana Miniadis: the Mini or Minni, being a region of this tract, mentioned by Jeremiah the Prophet, chap. 5. ver. 27. and by him placed betwixt Ararat and Askenaz, which ſhew the ſcituation of it to be hereabouts. Major was added to it for diſtinction ſake, to difference it from Armenia Minor: and now it is called Turcomania, as the firſt ſeat in which the Turcomans or Turks did fix themſelves, after their eruption out of Scythia.

The Countrey in the moſt part overſpread with hills, branches of thoſe huge mountains of Taurus, and Anti-taurus; but intermixt with fertile and delightful vallies, liberally furniſhed with Cattel, and good ſtore of fruits, though much ſubject to deep ſnows, which do much annoy it. The riches of it not to be better eſtimated than by the frankneſs of Tigranes, once King hereof. Who being fined by Pompey at 6000 talents, not onely very readily laid down that ſum; but added of his own accord to every Roman Souldier 50 Drachmas of Silver, 1000 Drachmas to each Captain, and to every Colonel a Talent. For though Tigranes had added ſome part of Media, and the whole Kingdom of Syria, unto his eſtate, yet thoſe being new Acqueſts, and not fully ſetled, were not much likely for the preſent to enrich his offers: new conquered Provinces being for the moſt part more chargeable than beneficial to the Victor.

The people are generally great bodied, of comely perſonage, and patient of all kind of labour; good archers, when put to it, but careleſs of honour got by war; merry, deſirous to be at eaſe, and apt to be ſoothed. The women tall, but homely, of a manly look, moſt of them skilful at their bow, or ſome other weapon. Their families for the moſt part great, the father and all his poſterity to the third and fourth generation, living under a roof; after whoſe death, the eldeſt, whether ſon or brother, hath the chiefeſt rule. In diet and clothing all alike; and in moſt places they are ſaid to be very induſtrious; painful in tillage, and well ſeen in manufactures, eſpecially rich tapeſtries, grograins, and watered chamlets: with which they traffick into moſt Cities of the Turks, and other Mahometans, priviledged, as they ſay, by a Charter under Mahomets own hand, above other Chriſtians, and upon that occaſion more diſperſed in the Eaſtern Countreys than any Nation in the world, the Jews excepted.

They have a language of their own, which they call the Armenian, not onely uſed amongſt them in common talk, but in ſacred offices: the Scriptures being tranſlated into that language alſo, and that as the people do affirm, by the hand of Saint Chryſoſtome, at ſuch time as (on the ſolicitation of the Empreſs Eudoxia, his moſt eager enemy) he was confined to the leſſer Armenia, by the Emperor Arcadius; to whom they alſo aſcribe the invention of the Armenian Characters, or letters, ſtill in uſe amongſt them.

They received the Chriſtian faith by the preaching of Saint Bartholomew, and were antiently of the juriſdiction of the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, as a Province of the Pontick Dioceſs; which together with the Aſian Dioceſs, and that of Thrace, were by the Council of Chalcedon laid unto that Patriarchate. But falling into the opinions of Eutyches, [illegible]ching one nature onely in CHRIST our Saviour; they withdrew themſelves, long ſince, from th[illegible]mmunion of the Greeks, whom they hold in greater deteſtation than all other Chriſtians, and choſe two Patriarchs of their own, of whom more anon. Other opinions which they hold beſides thoſe of Eutyches, (which yet they labour to make capable of an Orthodox ſence and thoſe wherein they differ from the Church of Rome, as 1. Denying Purgatory, and prayers for the dead; 2. Admitting none to be made Prieſts, except thoſe that be married; 3. Denying the body of Chriſt to be really under the ſpecies of bread and wine; and 4. Rebaptizing ſuch as come to their Communion from the Latine Churches, are theſe that follow: in which they differ alſo from moſt Churches elſe; viz. in receiving Infants to the Lords Table, immediately after Baptiſm. 2. In abſtaining from unclean beaſts; 3. In faſting on Chriſt-maſs day: and 4. In holding their children over the fire, as a neceſſary circumſtance in Baptiſm, becauſe John the Baptiſt told the people which followed him, that CHRIST would baptize them with the Holy Ghoſt, and with fire: in which place he meaneth not material fire, but the lively purgation of the Holy Ghoſt, according to the nature of fire. The Church of this Sect is governed by two Patriarchs; whereof the one hath under his juriſdiction this Turcomania; comprehending 150000 Families, beſides very many Monaſteries: and the other hath under him, the two Provinces of Armenia the leſſer, and Cilicia, comprehending 20000 Families, or thereabouts: The firſt reſiding antiently in Sebaſtia, the Metropolis of the greater Armenia; the ſecond originally at Melitene, the Metropolis of Armenia Minor, but of late at Sis, a ſmall City, not far from Tarſus in Cilicia. Both honoured with the title of Catholiques, and having under them to the number of thirty Biſhops.

Chief Rivers of this Countrey, 1. Araxes, which riſing out of Mount Abos, an Armenian Mountain, firſt runneth Eaſtward as far as Media, and then bendeth it ſelf towards the North: and after a long courſe is divided into two branches; whereof the one falleth into the Caſpian Sea, the other into, 2. Cyrus, another great River of this Countrey. The fountain of this laſt in Mount Caucaſus in the furtheſt North of Turcomania; and falling into a Lake, there meeteth with, 3. Cambyſes, another great River of theſe parts; and ſo together haſten to the Caſpian alſo. 4. Euphrates, by the Turks called Frat, by the Hebrews, Perah, famous in Scripture for its watering the garden of Eden, hath its fountain in the hills which they call Niphates, as is ſaid by Strabo. A River of great length and ſwiftneſs. For having forced it ſelf a paſſage thorow the Mountains of Taurus, it runneth in the Weſt of Meſopotamia, with a ſtream ſo violent, that they who go by water from Bir or Birra, a Town on the North-weſt of Meſopotamia, to the City of Bagdat, are fain to come back again by land; ſelling thoſe Boats for eight crowns which they bought for fifty. At Apamia, a City of Chaldæa, it is joyned with Tigris, with which the greateſt branch of it paſſeth thorow the City of Babylon, and ſo into the Perſian Gulf: the reſt of it being cut into many Channels, for fear it ſhould overflow and drown the Countrey, are quite loſt in the Lakes of Chaldæa. 5. Tigris, a ſwifter ſtream than that, whence it had the name; the word in the Median tongue ſignifying an Arrow. A River of ſo ſtrong a courſe, that it paſſeth thorow the Lake Thonitis, without mixture of Waters, and affordeth the Armenians an eaſie paſſage to Bagdat: who on a few Rafts born up with Goat-skins blown full of wind, and boards laid upon them, make their voyage thither. It is called Heddekel in the Scripture, one of the four Rivers which watered the Garden of Paradiſe; ſcituate in an Iſland made by the imbracement of this River and Euphraees, with their ſeveral Branches. Riſing originally out of the Lake of Thelpitis, in Armenia Major, where now we are: it is preſently almoſt ſwallowed by the gaping Earth; and paſſing under the huge bulk of Taurus, breaketh forth again; and compaſſing the Eaſt parts of Meſopotamia, which it divides from Aſſyria, meets with Euphrates, as before. Of which its firſt and ſecond birth, thus the Poet Lucan.

At Tigrin ſubito tellus abſorbet hiatu,
Occultoſque tegit curſus; rurſuſque renatum
Fonte novo flumen pelagi non abnegat undas.

That is to ſay.

Tigris, ſoon ſwallowed by the thirſty earth,
Finds there a burial where it had its birth:
But breaking out at a new ſpring, vouchſafes
With the ſalt Seas to mix its ſweeter waves.

Mountains of moſt note, are, 1. Abos, glorying in the fountains of the great River Araxes. 2. Periardes, or Periarges as Ptolomy, Pariedri, as Pliny calleth it, a Branch or Spur of the great Mountain Taurus. 3. Udaceſpes, another branch of that great Mountain. 4. Some part of Anti-Taurus. 5. The Mountains called Montes Moſchici, more towards the North, abutting upon Cappadocia, and the Euxine Sea: which name they took from Meſech, or Moſoch the Son of Japhet, preſerving the remembrance of his planting there. 6. Niphates, one of the Spurs of Taurus, out of which the famous River Euphrates is ſaid to iſſue. 7. The Gordiæan Mountains, conceived by many learned men to be the Mountains of Ararat, on one of the tops whereof called Baris, the Ark of Noah is moſt generally affirmed to reſt. Aſſirmed by many antient Writers of the Chriſtian Church, and countenanced not onely by Joſephus and ſome others of the Elder Hiſtorians; but by the Septuagint themſelves: who in the 37 chap. of Eſay, v. 38. and 2 Kings 19. 37. have rendred Ararat by Armenia. And be it ſo, let Arata be Armenia, and conſequently the Mountain of Ararat be Armenian Mountains: yet doth it not follow hereupon, that the Ark reſted on the Gordiæan Mountains, or any others of this Countrey, as they would conclude. We may infer as Logically, for ought I can ſee, that the Garden of Eden muſt be looked for in Armenia alſo; becauſe ſcituate in the circlings of Euphrates, and Tigris, two Armenian Rivers. Thoſe Rivers have indeed their fountains in Armenia Major, but compaſs not the Garden of Eden, till after a long courſe they encounter each other in the ſpacious Plains of Babylonia. And ſo thoſe Mountains, though they have the name of the Mountains of Ararat or Armenia; becauſe there firſt grown to a diſcernable and ſuper-eminent height above all the mountains of thoſe parts, became not the reſting place of the Ark, till after a further courſe towards the Eaſt, they were grown to their fulleſt height; which is in thoſe parts of it betwixt Scythia, and Perſia, which are called Mount Caucaſus: not that Mount Caucaſus, which lieth on the North of Colchis, and Iberia, out of which the River Cyrus is ſaid to riſe; but that which lieth on the Eaſt-ſide of the Caſpian Sea, where Mount Taurus and Imaus do croſs each other. But of this elſewhere.

It was divided heretofore into many Provinces, the principal whereof had (I grant) its name from the Gordiaan Mountains, called in ſome Writers, Cordiai, from whence the Province had the name of Gordiene, but moſt commonly called Corduene, bordering on Aſſyria. The Kingdom once of Zarbienus, who ſiding with Lucullus againſt Tigranes King of Armenia, was by Tigranes murdered with his Wife and Children: but honoured by Lucullus with a ſtately and magnificent funeral. 2. The 2d. Province of note is called Cotacene, near the Montes Moſchici. 3. Toſarene, bordering on the River Cyrus. 4. Colthene on the banks of Araxes. 5. Sophene, near the turnings of the River Euphrates; miſtook by ſome induſtrious and knowing men, to be the Syria Soba of the holy Scriptures. 6. Baſi ſine, on the North-Weſt, near the ſprings of that River. But what Cities did belong to each, I finde no where ſpecified.

Thoſe of moſt conſequence in the whole, 1. Artaxata, by Florus called Caput Gentis: of moſt eſteem in thoſe times, and the Seat-royal of the Kings of Armenia from its firſt foundation. Built by Artaxes, one of the Progenitors of Tigranes, at the perſwaſion of Annibal, whileſt he abode in this Countrey: who liking the ſcituation of the place, drew on it the model of a ſtrong and gallant City, according to which Platform it was preſently built. Taken and ſacked by the Romans, as a daughter of Carthage, by Corbulo in the time of Nero; it never could revive again to its former ſplendor: in the middle ages called Eſechia, and at this day Coy, or Coim; if not built rather out of the ruines of it. A City memorable for two great battels near unto it; the firſt between Lucullus on the one ſide, againſt Mithridates & Tigranes on the other; wherein the Romans were victors: the ſecond between Selimus Emperor of the Turks; and Hyſmael the Perſian Sophy; wherein the Turks were conquerors, Ann. 1514. A victory which he bought with the loſs of 30000 of his beſt men, and ſuch a terrour to the whole Army, that the Turks to this day call it, the onely day of doom. The fields adjoyning to the Town wherein this cruel battel was fought, called the Chalderan fields. 2. Sebaſtia, now Suaſſia, ſeated on Euphrates, where it meeteth with the Mountain Taurus; the reſidence of the Patriarch of the Armenians, at their firſt ſeparation from the See of Conſtantinople; the Metropolis at that time of all Armenia: ſo named in honour of Auguſtus, whom the Greeks call Sebaſtos. But of late diveſted of that dignity, the Patriarchal See, by reaſon of the fierce wars raging in this Countrey, betwixt the Perſians and the Turks, being removed to the Monaſtery of Eomeazin, near the City of Ervan in Perſia; in the dominions of which King theſe Armenian Chriſtians live in great abundance, by the name of Jelphelins. 3. Tigranes certa, beautified and inlarged if not firſt founded, by Tigranes above-mentioned; by whom repleniſhed with people of ſeveral Nations, whoſe Countries he had taken from them, and enriched in a manner with the wealth of all his Kingdom: there being no Armenian, either Prince or Peaſant, who ſent not ſomewhat towards the adorning of it. But taken by Lucullus without great reſiſtance, thoſe ſeveral Nations not agreeing amongſt themſelves: and therein beſides other Treaſure, no leſs than 8000 Talents in ready money. The City ſcituate near a River, which Tacitus calleth Niceſorius. 4. Arſamoſata, by Pliny called Arſimote, on the banks of Euphrates. 5. Cholna, ſo called in memory of Hul, or Chul the Son of Aram, one of the firſt Planters of this Countrey, 6. Baraza, by the Emperour Leo much inlarged and beautified; dignified with the new name of Leontopolis, and for a while made the Metropolis of the Province. 7. Arſarata, by Strabo called Arxata. 8. Theodoſiopolis, built on the foundation of ſome of the more antient Cities; by the Emperor Theodoſius, and of him thus named. 9. Colonia, the ſtrongeſt and moſt defenſible City hereof, when poſſeſſed by the Romans. 10. Clamaſſum, a ſtrong Town on the banks of Euphrates, taken by Selimus the firſt in his way towards Perſia, and therewith livery and ſeiſin of the reſt of this Countrey, ſince wholly conquered by his Succeſſors. 12. Chars, not far from the ſame River alſo, ſuppoſed to be the Chorſa of Ptolomy, of which not long ſince the ruines onely; but in three weeks ſo repaired and fortified by the Turks, Anno 1579. that it is thought to be impregnable. 13. Theſpia, giving name of old to the Lake Theſpitis, and to the Region called Theſpitis; but now not in being. 14. Arminig, now of greateſt name, and eſteemed the Metropolis of this Countrey: ſcituate in that part of the Lake of Vaſtan (the Martiana palus of the antient Writers) which lieth next to this Countrey; and by that well fortified: the onely City of Armenia poſſeſſed by the Perſians, who are the Lords of all that Lake, of which more hereafter. 15. Van, both for natural ſcituation, and the works of art, accounted by the Turks for their ſtrongeſt Bulwark in theſe parts againſt the Perſians; and for that cauſe well garriſoned, and as well munitioned.

This Countrey was firſt planted by Hul or Chul the ſon of Aram, and by Meſech one of the Sons of Japhet, who with their Families or Colonies poſſeſſed the ſame: the one leaving the remainder of his name, in the Montes Moſchici; the other in the Town called Cholna, and the Region called Colthene by Ptolomy, Cholohatene by Stephanus. Advanced to the honour of a Kingdom as ſoon as any, that of Babel excepted: Ninus the third from Nimrod finding Bazanes King hereof, whom he forced to acknowledge his ſuperiority, and to aid him in his wars againſt Zoroaſter the King of Bactria. Kings of moſt note in times ſucceeding, (for we have no conſtant Catalogue of them) were 1. Araxes, who being warred on by the Perſians, was promiſed victory by the Oracle, on the ſacrifice of his two fair daughters. Willing to ſatisfie the Gods, and yet ſpare his children, he ſacrificed two of the daughters of Miesfalcus, a Nobleman of this Countrey: by whom, in revenge hereof, his daughters were ſlain, and himſelf ſelf ſo ſolely followed, that ſwiming the River then called Helmus, he was therein drowned, and thereby gave unto that River the name of Araxes. 2. Artaxa, the founder of the great City Artaxata; ſpoken of before. 3. Tigranes, the moſt mighty King that ever reigned in Armenia; to which he added by his prowеſs Galatia, and a great part of Cilicia, in Aſia Minor, the whole Countrys of Media, Syria, and Phœnicia. But ſiding with Mithridates, whoſe daughter he had married, againſt the Romans, he was by Lucullus overthrown in two great battells, and outed of the greateſt part of his dominions. Hearing that Pompey had ſucceeded Lucullus in command of the Army, and truſting more unto his goodneſs then a wiſeman would, he put himſelf into his power: by whom condemned in a great ſum of money for the charge of the war, and ſtripped of all the reſt of his eſtates he was ſuffered to injoy Armenia Major, Syria being made a Province, Sophene given to Ariobarzanes King of Cappadocia, Media left unto it ſelf, and the leſſer Armenia conferred on one of his Sons, who being found guilty of ſome practice with the King of Parthia, was carried Priſoner unto Rome, and his Country brought into the forme of a Province. 4. Artavaſdes, circumvented by Marc. Antony, who led him Priſoner to Rome, but (catenis, ne quid honori ejus deeſſet, aureis, (as the Hiſtorian tells us of him) it was in chains of Gold, for his greater honor; giving Armenia to one of the Sons of Cleopatra. And though, 5. Artaxias recovered his Fathers Kingdom, yet he and his Succeſſors held it but as Vaſſals to the Roman Empire: the Senate after that confirming, and ſometimes nominating the Armenian Kings. Continuing in this eſtate till the time of Trajan, it was by him reduced to the form of a Province (made after that a part of the Pontick Dioceſs) who added Meſopotamia alſo to his Dominions, made Tigris the Eaſtern border of his Empire, which Auguſtus thought fit to limit with the banks of Euphrates. But long it held not in that form, being governed by its own Kings, as it was before Trajans time, in the reign of Conſtantius, Julian, and the Emperors following; whom they acknowledged and reverenced as their Lords in chief, till the time of Juſtinian the ſecond (he began his Empire, Anno 687) when ſubdued by the Saracens. Recovered by that Emperor, but ſoon loſt again, it continued ſubject to the Saracens, till the breaking in of the Turks, Anno, 844. of whom more anon. The greateſt part of the Turks emptying themſelves into Perſia, and other Countrys which they took from the Eaſtern Emperors; the Chriſtians of Armenia began to take heart again and to have Kings of their own, by whom governed, till again ſubdued by Occadan, or Hoccata, ſon of Cingis, the firſt Cham of the Tartars. Nor did the Tartars make ſo abſolute a conqueſt of it, as to extinguiſh either Chriſtianity or the race of the Kings: Haithon, ſirnamed Armenius, reigning after this, and going in perſon to Mango, the great Cham of Tartary, 1257. And in our own Chronicles, in the reign of King Richard the ſecond, we finde mention of one Leon an Armenian King, who came hither to ſue for aid againſt the Turks; by whom then diſpoſſeſſed of his eſtates. By Uſſan-Caſſanes, on of the Princes of this Country, (of whom more hereafter) who had the fortune to obtain the Crown of Perſia, Anno 1472 it was made a Province of that Kingdome: and ſo continued till the year 1515, when conquered by Selimus the firſt, and by him made a part of the Turkiſh Empire; more fully ſettled and aſſured in the reign of Amurath the third, who by cauſing many forts and Garriſons to be planted in it, made the conqueſt abſolute.

The Armes of this Kingdom, when a Kingdom, governed by Princes of its own of the Chriſtian faith, were Gules, 3 heads of a Buck Argent, Crowned Or,

2. CHOLCHIS.

COLCHIS is bounded on the Eaſt, with Iberia; on the Weſt, with the Euxine Sea, and part of the Tartars Precopenſes; on the North, with Tartarie, from which parted by thoſe vaſt hills, which the Romans called Caucaſi; and on the South, with Armenia Major, from which ſeparated by the Montes Moſchici.

The reaſon of the name I finde not. Nor can yield unto Boeherttus, who fetcheth the original of the name and Nation, from Cuſluhim, one of the Sons of Mizraim, the ſon of Cham: The Etymology of the name being too much wreſted, and Egypt too far off to give a being to Colchis in thoſe early days: though poſſibly in times ſucceeding, the Ægyptians hearing, by the Greeks, of the wealth of the Country, might ſend Colonies of their people thither, as to other Places. It is now called Mengrelia.

The Country ſaid to be very fruitful, if the care of the husbandman were not wanting. Their Vines they plant at the feet of great Trees, which twining a bout the armes thereof lade them full of Grapes: with which and other fruits riſing from the Earth, they uſed of late times to furnſh the Store-houſes of their Kings, for want of ready money to fill his Coffers; their tributes being paid in ſuch commodities. Formerly of great fame for abundance of gold, found in the ſands of their Rivers iſſuing from the Caucaſian Mountains. The thing affirmed by Appianus in his Mithridatica, χρυσοφοροῦσι δ᾽ ἐκ τοῦ Καυκάσου πολλαὶ πηγαὶ ψῆγμα ἀφαλὲς; Many of their ſprings, ſaith he, which come out of Caucaſus, carry veins of Gold. The like ſaith Strabo alſo, and ſome other Antients. With which and out of their rich mines both of Gold and Silver, the Kings hereof were ſo well furniſhed with thoſe metals, that the furniture of their Chambers were all of Gold, and the beams of their Lodgings were made of Silver. But now ſo deſtitute of both, that the people for want of money to buy and ſell with, are enforced to barter their commodities, and change one for another.

The people at the preſent are very rude & barbarous; ſo inhumane & void of natural affection, that they ſell their children to the Turks. The better ſort of them much given to belly-chear, dancing and ſinging looſe ſonnets of love and dalliance, uſing much wine in their entertainments, which the more their Gueſts drink, the better welcome; inflamed wherewith they offer them for a cooler their wives or Siſters, with charge to yield them all content, eſteeming it no ſmall credit to them if it be accepted. Nor are the women much averſe from the entertainment, whether to pleaſe themſelves, or obey their husbands, let them tell that can.

The Chriſtian faith was here firſt planted in the time of the Emperor Juſtinus, by whoſe perſwaſion Taurus Prince of the Colchi, then at the Court in Conſtantinople, became a Chriſtian ; and being baptized was returned back into his Country with the Title of King. But Cabades the King of Perſia much offended at it, proclaimed war againſt him : which hindered the further progreſſe of the Goſpel, till the year 860, About which time Methodius and Cyril, two reverend men, wereby the Patriarch of Conſtantinople employed in this ſervice, which they ſucceſsfully effected: in that regard they hold to the communion of the Church of Greece, and belong to the juriſdiction of that Patriarch. To whom conform in moſt dogmatical points of their Religion, and in many practical. And though they have a diſtinct language of their own, which hath no affinity with the Greek, yet do they celebrate their Divine Offices in the Greek tongue, and follow the Ritualls of that Church; which few of them underſtand any better then the Vulgar Papiſts of France, Spain, or Germany, do the Latine Service. Whether it be that they have no learned men among them, either to tranſlate their old Liturgy, or to compoſe a new, or that they hold all alterations in Religion to be matters of danger ; or that ignorance is the beſt mother of devotion (as is thought by others) I am not able to determine.

The Chief Rivers of this Country, are 1 Hippus, 2. Cyaneus, 3. Chariſtus, all riſing out of the Caucaſian Mountains, and falling into the Euxine. 4. Phaſis, the principal of all, riſing out of the Montes Moſchici, or Armenian Mountains, and there called Boas. Navigable with ſmaller Veſſels a great way up into the Country, and with great ſhips, 18 miles from the Sea. Memorable amongſt the Antients for the Landing of the Argonautes, in the mouth thereof ; and thoſe delicate Fowl called from hence Phaſides, or Phaſiani (Pheſants) which they brought with them into Europe.

As for this expedition of the Argonautes, being the moſt remarkeable action of thoſe Elder ages of the world, when Piracy and depredations were accounted for Heroical vertues; it was no other then the adventures of ſome Noble Gracians, for the gold of Colchos. The age wherein it hapned, was about the 11 year of Gideon the judge of Iſrael. The chief adventurers, Jaſon, Orpheus, the famous Poet, Caſtor and Pollux, the ſons of Tindarus, Telamon and Peleus, the ſons of Æacus, and Fathers of Ajax and Achilles, Laertes the Father of Ulyſſes, Amphiaraus the ſooth-ſayer, Hercules, Theſeus, Meleager, with many others of like note. Theſe moved with the great noiſe of the wealth of Colchos, and the riches of King Ætes, then therein reigning, reſolved upon a voyage thither, embarked in a ſhip called Argos (whence the name of Argonautes) whereof on Typhis was chief Pilot. Paſſing the Helleſpont, Propontick, and Thracian Boſphorus, they came into the Euxine Sea : and after many difficulties and ſtrange adventures (which ſuch Knights Errants could not chooſe but encounter with) they landed in the River Phaſis, and came to the Kings Court, and there were kindly entertained. But finding the Kinges Treaſures to be too well Guarded to be took by force (ſaid by the Poets to be kept by a Dragon alwayes waking) they practiſed with Medea, the daughter of Ætes, to aſſiſt them in robbing her Father. Who being in love with Jaſon, on promiſe of marriage with him, aſſented to it : By whoſe Artifices (which the Poets call Magical charms) the Guardians being circumvented, and the treaſure gotten, they all, together with Medea, imbarked again, and after a long and dangerous voyage returned into Greece. This is the ſubſtance of the ſtory; which being the greateſt and moſt notable voyage which the Gracians in thoſe early days had undertaken, occaſioned the Poets to advance it to the higheſt pitch, and to diſguiſe it with many fictions, and ingenious fancies : But not without ſome ground intituled to the Golden Fleece (which they make the end of the deſign.) For the Rivers, as before was ſaid, having Golden ſands, which fell down from the Mountains (as in many other parts of the world they are found to have :) it was the cuſtome of the people to lay many Flieces of wooll in the deſcent of thoſe Rivers in which the grains of Gold remained, though the water paſſed through ; which Strabo witneſſeth to be true.

But leaving theſe Adventurers to purſue their fortunes, let us go forward to ſurvey the Cholchian Cities; the principle whereof, 1 Dioſcurias, a Town of great wealth and trade, founded by Amphitus, and Telchius, two Spartans, the Charioteers of Caſtor and Pollux, and ſo named in honour of their Maſters, whom the Greeks call Διόσκυροι : which two Spartans paſſing further Eaſt, were afterwards the founders of the Nation from them called Heniochi, or the Chariot-drivers. A Town of ſuch reſort by Merchants from moſt parts of the world, that here were ſpoken 300 different languages; inſomuch that the Romans (as Pliny ſaith) were fain to maintain here 130 Interpreters, for diſpatch of buſineſſe, and negotiating with thoſe Merchants. 2. Sybaris, the Seat-Royal of the Colchian Kings, about 9 miles from which was the Temple of Mars, to which Medea is reported to have brought the Argonautes. 2. Siganeam, neer the mouth of the River Cyaneus : as is alſo, 4. Æa, by Ptolomy called Æapolis, an Egyptian Colony, planted here by Seſoſtris (in the time of Rehoboam the Son of Solomon) at what time he attempted, but without ſucceſſe, the Conqueſt of Colchis. 5. Neapolis, ſo called from the newneſſe or late foundation of it, when that name was given. 6. Phaſis, ſo called from the River upon which it is ſcituate, retaining both the ſcite and name, to this very day: the ordinary reſidence of the Turkiſh Beglerbeg, by whom called Phaſſum. 7. Alvati, a well fortified place. More in the Land are placed by Ptolomy, 8. Mechleſſus. 9. Sirace. 10. Zadris, 11. Surium, &c. not much obſervable in old Story, nor now known at all.

The firſt inhabitants of this Country, moſt probably, came out of the neighbouring Armenia, and therefore the poſterity of Hul or Chul, from whence perhaps the name of Colchis ; to whom in tract of time time, ſome Colonies out of Ægypt (a ſea-faring people) moved with the great fame of the riches and wealth hereof, did adjoin themſelves; the Colchians on that ground, (or from ſome part of his Army left here by Seſoſtris) being ſaid by Ammianus Marcellinus, to be the antient off-ſpring of the Egyptians. The moſt antient of their Kings was Ætes, ſpoken of before: who entertaining Phryxus flying out of Greece from the furie of his ſtepdame Ino, with great ſtore of treaſure; occaſioned the Argonauts, as well in way of revenge, as in hope of booty, to make that famous expedition for the Gold of Colchos, diſguiſed under the fiction of the Golden Fliece. Of moſt note after him, Selauces and Eſubops, who firſt diſcovered the rich mines of Gold and Silver; of which metals they made all their Utenſils, even the beams of their Chambers. The fame thereof drew thither Seſoſtris, the great King of Egypt; who being vanquiſhed in the field was fain to lay aſide all thoſe hopes which he brought with him thither, and return back to Egypt in a worſe ſtate then he came; but that he left behind him an Egyptian Colony in the City of Æa; which after occaſioned others of that Country to repair thither alſo. Living in peace and unmoleſted from this time forwards, they were unhappily ingaged by Tigranes of Armenia, to ſide with him againſt the Romans; and in his overthrow gave ſuch advantage to the Victor, that Orodes the King of Colchos was fain to ſubmit himſelfe to Pompey; to diſmiſs his forces, leave his faſtneſſes, and finally to redeem his peace, by ſending to him a bedſtead of pureſt Gold, and many other rich preſents. After this, the Romans had here their Agents, and received hence ſome annual profits, but never brought it to the form of a Province. Diſtreſſed between the Perſians and Conſtantinopolitans, they had much ado to ſtand upright; though betwixt both they kept themſelves in a kind of liberty: as of late times, betwixt the Perſians, Turks, and Tartars, their too potent Neighbors. But at the laſt, Anno 1579. Amurath, the third, to make the ſafer paſſage for his forces in Georgia, ſent Uluzale his Admiral, with a great Fleet, into the Euxine Sea: who coming up the River Phaſis took the City of Faſſum, fortified it, and laid ſo certain a foundation of a future conqueſt, that though the Mengrelians did not long after demoliſh ſome of his fortifications, yet were they afterwards repaired, and Faſſum made the ſeat of a Turkiſh Beglerbeg, as it ſtill continueth.

3 IBERIA.

IBERIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Albania; one the Weſt with Colchos; on the North, with the Caucaſian Mountains; and on the South, with the Montes Moſchici; by the firſt mountaines parted from Sarmatia Aſiatica, and by the laſt from Armenia Major.

It was ſo called from the River Iberus, which Running thorow it, falleth at laſt into the more noted River Cyrus. But is now called Georgia, and that, as ſome ſay, from St. George the Cappadocian Martyr, whom here they have in very great reverence, as their tutelary Saint and Patron: as others ſay, from George a Cappadocian Biſhop, by whoſe preaching they were brought unto Chriſtianity; and ſome again will have them properly called Gordiaans, and corruptly Georgians, from their neer neighbourhood to thoſe Mountains. But the moſt probable opinion is, as I conceive, that they took this name from the Georgi, whom Pliny reckoneth amongſt other of the Caſpian nations. Though, to ſay truth, the name of Georgia extendeth ſomewhat further than that of Iberia, as comprehending alſo that part of Armenia Major, which lies next to Media, and the whole Country of Albania, if I gueſs aright.

The Country, for the greateſt part, is covered with Mountains, Woods, and Thickets, and in that regard unconquerable for the difficultie of the mountainous paſſages; yet notwithſtanding it is very fruitfull in many places, having many fertile plains and wealthy vallies; well watered, and of great increaſe to the husband-man, if he be not wanting to himſelf of care and induſtry.

Of the old Iberians it is written, that they were a very warlike nation, and uſed to ſet as many Pillars about the grave of a dead man, as he had ſlain Enemies in his life: as alſo that thoſe of the ſame Tribe or family had all things common; he being the Ruler, which was eldeſt: and that ſome of them did derive themſelves from the Children of David begotten on the wife of Uriah, for that cauſe never marrying out of their own kindred. The preſent Georgians very warlike, ſtrong of Body, and valorous in fight, for a long time defended themſelves and Country from the Turks and Perſians, with great prudence making uſe of the one againſt the other. But overpowered by the vaſt multitude of the Turks breaking in upon them, they have loſt many of their beſt Forts, and much of their liberty.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt here planted in the time of Conſtantine the Great, by means of a Chriſtian captive woman (ſuch extraordinary wayes doth God finde out to promote his Goſpel): who being of a moſt devout life and exemplary piety, had by her prayers to CHRIST reſtored a young Child to health, which was thought paſt cure, and healed the Queen hereof of a deſperate Malady, when no help of Phyſick would prevail. Whereupon the King ſent Ambaſſadors to Conſtantine, deſiring Miniſters and Preachers to be ſent to Iberia, to inſtruct the People in the faith; which was done accordingly. Since that time, Chriſtianity hath flouriſhed in this Country without interruption; though by Mahometans and Pagans, on all ſides encompaſſed: agreeable in doctrinall points to the Church of Greece, whoſe Rituals alſo the People do to this day follow. Not ſubject for all that to the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, (though of his Communion) but to their own Metropolitan onely; who hath under him about 18 Biſhops, and reſideth, for the moſt part, in Saint Catharines Monaſtery on Mount Sinai. By means of which remote dwelling of their principall Paſtor, Mahometaniſm hath got ſome footing, and Jeſuitiſm began to creep in amongſt them. The occaſion of which laſt was this:

About the year 1614. the Perſians making an inrode into this Country, took the City Cremer, and therein Cetaba, the Mother of Prince Teimurazes; whom, leading her captive into Perſia, and not able to prevail with her to turn Mahometan, they moſt cruelly murdered. Some of the Jeſuits then travelling in thoſe Countreys, and willing out of that ſad accident to advance the fame of their Society, together with the Catholik cauſe, cut off the head of a dead man whom they found in the way, anointed it with oyl and odours, brought it into Georgia, and ſignified unto the Prince, that they had with them the head of the bleſſed Martyr Cetaba: deſiring leave to live in ſome Monaſtery, and have the keeping of the holy Relique committed to them. This eaſily believed, and granted, the head was placed with great honour in the Church of Saint George, at Aberdal; much reſort to it from all parts by diſeaſed perſons: whom, if paſt cure, the Jeſuits ſent home again, preſcribing them in way of preparation a long time of repentance; if cureable by outward meanes, which they applyed, the cure was preſently aſcribed to the holy Relique. Grown famous by this means, they gained many Proſelytes to themſelves; and had no ſmal hope of prevailing on Prince Teimurazes to ſubmit himſelf to the Pope as the Vicar of CHRIST: When in the heat of all their glories, a Letter cometh from Maacla, a Lady attendant on the Princeſs (but then living in Perſia, as a ſlave or bond-maid) ſignifying that her Maſter by her perſwaſion had got into his power the body of his Mother Cetaba; which he might ranſome if he pleaſed: two Travellors withal, who came out of Perſia with the Jeſuites, reporting what they ſee them do with the dead mans head. By which means the Impoſture being diſcovered, the body of the Queen was ſent for, the falſe Relique was caſt out of the Church, and the falſer Jeſuits into priſon, and next out of the Country.

Rivers of note I finde not any, either in Ptolomy, or any of our Modern writers, but what are touched upon before, except onely the River of Iberus ſpoken of before, from which the Country is thus named: The whole in general ſo deſtitute of waters, that Pompey in his march this way againſt the Albanians, was fain to carry 10000 bladders filled with water for the uſe of his Army.

Places of moſt antiquity and importance in it, 1. Artaxiſſa, 2. Vaſada, 3. Lubium, 4. Armaſtiça, all named by Ptolomy; this laſt by Pliny called Harmaſtis. 5. Cremen, the chief City, now poſſeſſed by the Georgians, 6. Cachete, honoured with a faire Church, the moſt beautiful of all the Countrey, dedicated by the name of Saint George. 7. Triala, where are to be ſeen the ruines of a large City, and many Churches, by what name antiently called, I finde not. 8. Altuncala, or the Golden caſtle, a ſtrong fortreſſe, and the ordinary reſidence of the Georgian Princes, ſince the time of the wars betwixt the Perſians and the Turks. 9. Archichelech, a ſtrong Caſtle, taken by Solyman the Magnificent, in his wars againſt Tamas King of Perſia, and ever ſince holden by the Turks. 10. Teflis, a large and capacious Town, forſaken by the Georgians at the coming of Muſtapha, General of Amurath the third, againſt the Perſians: who liking the ſcituation of it cauſed it to be repaired and fortifyed, planted thereon an hundred pieces of ordnance, and left therein a Garriſon of 6000 Souldiers. 11. Lori, diſtant from Teflis about two dayes journey of a Carriers pace, ſtrengthened with a lofty Caſtle, invironed with deep ditches, and a thick wall, amounting to a mile in compaſs. Seiſed on by Ferat Baſſa, the Succeſſor of Muſtapha, who repaired the walls, planted thereon 200 ſmall pieces of ordnance, and Garriſoned it with 7000 Turks for defence thereof. 12. Tomais, a ſhort daies march from Lori, the Country lying betwixt both full of rich fields and paſtures, abounding with Corn, fruit, and Cattel. Nigh unto which the ſaid Ferat raiſed a new Fortreſs, for the better command of the Streights and paſſages, leading from thence to Lori, and ſo to Teflis (the key of Media or Sirvan) the wall whereof being 1700 yards in compaſs, he cauſed to be planted with 200 pieces of Artillery and with incredible diligence cut down a thick wood which lay before it, and otherwiſe would have been a receptacle of thieves, or Enemies. 13. Gliſca. 14. Baſcapan, &c. poſſeſſed and fortified by the Turks, to make good their footing in this Country. But poſſibly moſt of theſe ſtrong holds now poſſeſſed by the Turks may be within the bounds of Armenia Major, and Albania, though within the Country of the Georgians; that name not being limited to Iberia, as was ſaid before.

The firſt Inhabitants hereof were ſuch who were brought hither by Tubal, the ſon of Japhet, from whom this people, at the firſt, as Joſephus hath it, had the name of Thobeli. But that name growing out of knowledge, the Nations of moſt note in it were the Tibereni, Moſſynœci, Chalybes; and of leſs eſteem the Biſeries, Sapires, Macrones, &c. united at the laſt in the name of Iberi, from the River Iberus, of which Pliny ſpeaketh, the principall of all this Country. Too fruitfull of increaſe for ſo narrow a dwelling, ſome of them put themſelves to ſeek their fortunes, when after long wandering they fell upon the Coaſt of Spain next the Pyrenees, where they ſtaid themſelves; giving the name of Iberus to the chief River there, and of Iberia to the Country. Of which more before. Such of them as remained behind continued an unconquered people, under the government of their own Kings, till the time of Tigranes King of Armenia. By whom invited to his aid againſt the Romans, they came in accordingly: and in his fall, diſcomfited by Lucullus in three ſeverall battells, were fain to ſtand upon their Gaurd as well as they could, firſt holding faire with Pompey, who ſucceeded Lucullus in his charge: But breaking out again on a new temptatiun, they were encountred by him; in which battel 9000 of their men being ſlain, and 10000 taken, they were conſtrained to ſue for peace; not otherwiſe to be obtained till Artaces the King of theſe Iberians, gave their ſons for pledges. After this Feudataries to the Roman, and Grecian Emperours, till the fatal inundations of the Saracens had ſo weakened that Empire, that the Kings hereof acknowledging no more ſubjection to thoſe of Conſtantinople, till Conſtantinople it ſelf became the Imperial ſeat of the Ottoman Family; in whoſe quarrels with the Perſian Sophies, this Country began to ſuffer a new invaſion; ſome Towns and Forts of it being taken by Solyman, in his march or paſſage againſt Tamas. Afterwards in the time of Amurath the third, who ſet his mind moſt eagerly on the war with Perſia, great part of it was ſubdued by Muſtapha the Turkiſh General: who inviting the widow Princeſs and her two Sons to come to his tent, ſent the young Princes to Conſtantinople; and by that means had opportunity to aſſure his purchaſes. And though the Perſians did their beſt to aſſiſt the Georgians, yet proved they but a kind of miſerable comforters; as much puniſhing or plaguing this poor Country with their aides, as the Turks by their armies. So that now it ſtands divided betwixt the Grand Signeior, and its natural Princes: the Georgian Princes holding the greateſt part, but the Turks being in poſſeſſion of the ſtrongeſt holds; kept by them under colour of ſecuring their way to Perſia, for which this Countrey is indeed but unhappily ſeated.

4. ALBANIA.

ALBANIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Caſpian Sea; on the Weſt, with Iberia; on the North, with the Caucaſion Mountains; on the South, with the Moſchici. So named from the Albani, who did once inhabit it; and of late called Sairia; but reckoned in theſe laſt ages as a part of Georgia.

The Countrey of ſo rich a ſoil, that without the leaſt labour of the husbandman, the Earth doth naturally and liberally afford her ſtore; and where it is but once ſown, will yield two or three reapings. But being ill husbands on it in former times, they occaſioned Strabo to give them this note for a remembrance, That they needed not the uſe of the Sea, who knew no better how to make uſe of the Land. The people antiently ſo ſimple, that they could not reckon above an hundred; ignorant of weights, meaſures, and the uſe of money. Old age they had in high eſteem, but held it utterly unlawfull to make ſpeech of the dead. And of theſe Pliny doth report, that they were gray-headed from their very youth, and could ſee as well by night as by day; the variety of which laſt may be ſomewhat queſtionable. But withal, they are affirmed to have been a ſtout and couragious people, ſtrong bodies, patient of toil and labour, as they are at this day. And well the men may be couragious and ſtout, where the women are ſo truly maſculine. Of whom it is affirmed by Authors of undoubted credit, that they were exerciſed in Arms and martial feats, as if deſcended lineally from the antient Amazons; whom Plutarch placeth in this tract; reporting ſome of them to be aiding to theſe Albanians, in their war with Pompey: which poſſibly might be no other, than ſome the more noble Albanian Dames.

Principal Rivers of this Countrey, 1. Soania, giving name to the Soani, one of the Nations of theſe parts mentioned by Pliny 2. Caſius. 3. Gerrus. 4. Albanus, whence perhaps the name of Albani came unto this people. 5. Cyrus, (by Plutarch called Cyrnus) ſpoken of in Armenia Major, but more properly belonging to this Countrey; becauſe herein it hath its ſpring, and the greateſt part of its courſe alſo. For riſing out of the Mountain Caucaſus, which ſhuts up this Province on the North, it paſſeth thorow the middeſt of it, till it come to the borders of Armenia; where it beginneth to bend more towards the Eaſt: and having received into its Channel all the former Rivers, beſides many others of leſs note, falleth with twelve mouths into the Caſpian, or Hircanian Sea. Mountains of note here are not any, but what are common unto them with other Nations: the Montes Moſchici on the South, and Caucaſus upon the North, being rather common boundaries betwixt ſeveral Nations, than peculiar unto any one; though from the laſt the Iberians and theſe Albanians, be in ſome Writers called Caucaſiæ Gentes.

Cities and Towns I finde many in it, but little of them more than their very names. 1. Chabala, by Pliny called Cabalaca, and honoured with the Character of Inſignior Albaniæ urbis, the moſt noted City of this Countrey. 2. Albana; ſo called from the River Albanus, upon which it was ſeated. 3. Telebæ, 4. Namechiæ, 5. Thelbis; 6. Getarra, near unto the influx of the River Cyrus. How theſe are called, or whether any thing be remaining of them, I am not able to ſay. The chief now being, and worthy to be ſo accounted, is the City of Derbent, ſcituate near the Caſpian Sea; from which to Teflis a City ſpoken of before, remain the foundations of a high and thick wall; affirmed to have been built by Alexaader the Great, to defend theſe parts againſt the irruptions of the Northern unconquered nations. The Town environed with two walls, and ſo defended by difficult and narrow paſſages of the rocks, that it is not eaſily acceſſible: but taken for all that by Muſtapha the Turkiſh General, Anno 1587. and made the ordinary reſidence of a Turkiſh Baſſa. Conceived to be the Caucaſiæ Porta of the Antients, which Pliny honoureth with the title of ingens naturæ miraculum: by Egeſippus, for the ſtrength of it called Porta Ferrea; with reference to which, by the Turks called Demir-can, the word ſignifying in their language, a gate of iron. The other places of this tract are either of no accompt and eſtimation, or elſe are ſpecified before amongſt the Cities and good Towns of the Georgians, of whoſe Countrey this is now a part: yet we may add, 2. Sabran, upon the borders of Media. 3. Sancta Maria, north of Derbens; both of them on, or near the banks of the Caſpian Sea.

The firſt inhabitants of this Countrey ſeem to have been of the plantation of Gether the ſon of Aram, and Nephew of Japhet, whoſe memory was long preſerved in the City of Getara before-mentioned. So called by him, or ſome of his poſterity, in remembrance of him. The People living ſomewhat out of the common road, were little troubled with invaders from forreign parts; neither the Perſians, nor Macedonians looking ſo far North. Nor poſſibly had the Romans taken notice of them, had they not ingaged themſelves with Tigranes firſt, and afterwards with Mithridates. Falling on Pompey with an Army of 40000; and well beaten by him, they were content to ſue for peace. But finding that the Iberians alſo had took up Arms, they ingaged again; leavying an Army of 12000 horſe and 50000 foot, in which Oroezes their King, with his brother Coſis, were in perſon preſent. And though they had made good the banks of the River Cyrus; yet being ill armed, and for the moſt part only with skins of beaſts, they made but ſmall reſiſtance againſt the Romans: notwithſtanding the gallant charge of Coſis, who aſſaulted Pompey, and had the honour to be ſlain by him in the place. After this overthrow, and their giving pledges unto Pompey for their good behaviours, we finde little mention of them in the Stories of the Roman Empire, till the time of Trajan. Who having conquered, and reduced Armenia Major to the form of a Province, reſolved to ſhew his power to theſe neighbouring nations: and to that end impoſed a King on the Albani; of his own appointment, and made the Kings of Colchis, and Iberia, do their homage to him. In times ſucceeding no news of them; either becauſe remote from the ſtage of Action, or ſerving under the

Albania. the command of ſome greater nation, where their name occurs not. Conquered by Occadan, or Haccata the Cham of Tartarie, together with Iberia, and Armenia; they were a while ſubject to that Empire: and paſſing in ſucceeding times by the name of Georgians, partook of the ſame fortunes with them. Now at the mercy of the Turks, who by reaſon of the ſtrong footing which he hath gotten amongſt them, is become a dreadfull neighbour to them; if not acknowledged by them for their Lord in chief.

Thus having taken a ſurvey of all the Provinces of the Turkiſh Empire, both in Europe, and Aſia, and touched upon the means by which they are poſſeſſed of Ægypt, whereunto all the reſt of their hold in Africk ſerves but for an acceſſory: we will now look upon the ſtory of this people, their firſt original, the great ſucceſs of their affairs, the Princes under whoſe command they have made theſe Conqueſts. Which having done, we will proceed to a Deſcription of the Perſons, Manners, and Conditions of the Turks themſelves, their power and policy; with other things conſiderable in ſo great an Empire.

And firſt, for the original of the Turkiſh Nation; they were moſt probably the Deſcendants of thoſe Turcæ, whom Pliny and Pomponius Mela place about the Fens of Mæotis. Of whom thus Mela, ſpeaking of the Gelani, a Scythian people. Juxta Thirſagetæ, Turcæque; vaſtas ſylvas occupant, alunturque venando, &c. Next unto them (ſaith he) live the Thyrſagetæ, and the Turcæ, poſſeſſed of vaſt woods, and maintained by hunting; and then a rough and deſart Countrey with continual rocks, as far as to the Arympheians. And Pliny muſtering up the barbarous Nations of thoſe parts, joins the Tuſſagetæ (or Thyrſagetæ) with the Turks, and placeth them next the Arympheians, as Mela doth, uſque ad ſolitudines ſaltuoſis vallibus aſperas, ſpreading themſelves unto the rough deſarts, and woody valleys. Not known by action (though by name) till the time of Tiberius the ſecond, who began his Empire Anno 577. when preſſing hard on the Avares, a neighbouring Nation, they compelled them to forſake their ſeats and paſs into Europe; where they made themſelves maſters of Panonia, now called Hungary. In the time of Heraclius, we finde them with other barbarous Nations, at the ſiege of Conſtantinople; but under the command of the Perſians. After which they began to ſet up for themſelves, and in the year 763. made a road into thoſe Countreys which we laſt deſcribed; and loading themſelves with prey and booty, returned home again. But liking better of theſe parts than their own poor dwellings; in the year 844. they brake once more thorow the Caſpian Streights; and paſſing thorow Iberia, ſeized on Armenia Major, and there fixed themſelves, giving it the name of Turcomania. In which wide and ſpacious Countrey they roamed up and down, without any certain habitation, removing their herds and families from one place to another; as they had formerly been uſed to do, in the Fens of Mæotis; and as the Tartars and wild Arabs do until this day. And ſo they lived a poor and contemptible nation, till Mahomet the Sultan of Perſia, rebelling againſt his Lord and Maſter the Caliph of Babylon, called in theſe Turks unto his aid; and by their help obtained a ſignal victory. The victory obtained, the Turks deſire their wages, and a fair diſmiſſion; but could ſpeed in neither: the Sultan being loth to part with ſuch a neceſſary miſchief, till his affairs were better ſetled; and therefore ſhutting up the paſſages of the River Araxes, which he before had opened for them; provoked wherewith, under the conduct of Tangrolipix, their principal Leader, they began to ſpoil and waſte the Countrey; a multitude of needy people, and ſome of the diſcontented Souldiers, coming daily to them. Aſſaulted by the Perſians, in the firſt battel they not onely got a notable victory, but ſuch ſtore of Armour, Horſes, and other neceſſaries, as made them able to encounter with the Sultan himſelf: whom having overthrown and ſlain in the ſecond fight, Tangrolipix is by both Armies proclaimed King of Perſia, in the year one thouſand and thirty, or thereabouts.

There were at this time amongſt the Turks, two moſt noted Tribes; the Selzuccian, and the Oguzian. Of the Selzuccian, Tangrolipix, Cutlu Muſes, Melech, and Ducat were the heads: of which, Tangrolipix as the chief of that Clan or Family, was ſetled in the throne of Perſia: Cutlu Muſes furniſhed with an Army againſt the Chriſtians, poſſeſſed himſelf of a great part of Aſia Minor; Melech and Ducat, by the like favour of their Couſin the Perſian Sultan, were veſted into the Cities of Aleppo and Damaſcus, with their ſeveral Territories. But the line of Tangrolipix and the reſt being all worn out, as hath been ſhewn in our deſcription of Syria, and Anatolia; the man of moſt Nobility amongſt the Turks, was Ottoman, the chief of the Oguzian family; Nephew of Solyman Prince of Machan, a ſmall territory in the Realm of Perſia. Which Solyman, flying the fury of the Tartars when they conquered Perſia, was drowned in croſſing the River Euphrates, as he paſſed with his few Subjects towards Aſia Minor, the beſt place of refuge for his Nation; leaving the chief-ſhip of his Tribe to Ethrogul his Son: who obtained of the laſt Aladine of the Selzuccian Family, the village of Saguta in Bithynia; for himſelf and his ſmall handfull of people. To him ſucceeded his Son Ottoman, in the year 1280. who to revenge ſome injuries done unto his people by the improvident Chriſtians, took from them Caſtle after Caſtle; and in the end poſſeſſed himſelf of the City of Nice, not long before the Imperial Seat of the Grecian Emperors. Emboldened with ſuch great ſucceſſes, and hearing of the death of Aladine the ſecond, whom he acknowledged for his Lord, he took unto himſelf the Title of Sultan; Anno 1300. from which before he had abſtained. To this time, and theſe ſmall beginnings, we muſt reduce the firſt foundation of the Ottoman Empire; increaſed unto its preſent greatneſs, by the courage and good fortune of theſe Princes following.

The Kings of the Turks of the Oguzian, or Ottoman Family.

1300. 1. Ottoman, or Oſmon, the Son of Ethrogul, the firſt Turkiſh Sultan of this line, added to his ſmall territory the greateſt part of Bithynia, and ſome part of Pontus. 28.

The Ottoman Emperors.

1328. 2. Orchanes took the City Pruſa, and made it his reſidence; and was the firſt that had footing in Europe, where he got Gallipolis, and other pieces.

1350. 3. Amurath won the Thracian Cherſoneſe, the ſtrong City of Adrianople, with the Countries of Servia, and Bulgaria; where he was ſlain by a common Souldier in the fields of Coſſova 23.

1373. 4. Bajazet made himſelf maſter of a great part of Thrace, Macedon, and Achaia. He was taken priſoner by Tamerlane, and brained himſelf in an iron cage, in which the inſolent Conqueror uſed to carry him. 26.

1399. 5. Solyman the eldeſt ſon of Bajazet ſucceeded in the peaceable poſſeſſion of the Turkiſh Provinces in Europe; but paſſing with an Army into Aſia, for the recovery of thoſe parts thereof, uſurped by Mahomet his youngeſt brother, he was forced again into Europe, to make head againſt Muſa Bajazet his third ſon (employed by Mahomet in that diverſion) who having there vanquiſhed and ſlain him, Anno 1406. ſucceeded for a time in the Throne at Adrianople.

1404 .6. Mahomet the youngeſt ſon of Bajazet, a vigilant and active Prince, firſt wreſted from his brother Iſa (Bajazets ſecond ſon then living) the City of Pruſa, with the dominions thereunto belonging, and thereupon taking to himſelf the Title of King or Sultan, by degrees recovered all which his father had loſt unto the Tartars: afterwards making uſe of Muſa, for the ſupplanting of Solyman, he followed him preſently into Europe, where he fought with him, vanquiſhed and ſlew him about the year 1416. Thereby uniting in his own perſon the whole Turkiſh Kingdom, which he enlarged with the more abſolute conqueſt of Dacia, part of Sclavonia, and the reſt of Macedon. 17.

1416. 7. Amurath II. ſubdued from the Conſtantinopolitan Empire, all Achaia, Theſſaly, Epirus; he ſhaked the State of Hungary, and died before the walls of Croy. 34.

The Ottoman Emperors.

1450. 8. Mahomet II. ſurnamed the Great, and firſt Emperor of the Turks, conquered the two Empires of Conſtantinople and Trabezond, twelve Kingdoms, and two hundred Cities. 31.

1481. 9. Bajazet II. ſubdued the Caramanian Kingdom, and part of Armenia; and drove the Venetians from Morea, and their part of Dalmatia. 31.

1512. 10. Selimus having poiſoned his father, ſubverted the Mamaluks of Egypt; bringing it, together with Palaſtine, Syria, and Arabia, under the yoke of the Turks. 7.

1519. 11. Solyman II. ſurnamed the Magnificent, ſurpriſed Rhodes, Belgrad, Buda; with a great part of Hungary, Babylon, Aſſyria, Meſopotamia. 48.

1567. 12. Selimus II. an idle and effeminate Emperor, by his Deputies took from the Venetians, the Iſle of Cyprus; and from the Moors the Kingdom of Tunis, and Algiers. 8.

1575. 13. Amurath III. took from the diſagreeing Perſians, Armenia, Media, and the City Taurus; and the Fort Gnaino from the Hungarians. 20.

1595. 14. Mahomet III. took Agria in Hungaria; which Kingdom in all likelihood had been loſt, if he had purſued his victory at the battel of Kereſture. Never but then in any battel, and then ſo frighted, that he durſt never ſee the face of an Army afterwards.

1603. 15. Achmat, who the better to enjoy his pleaſures, made peace with the German Emperor, and added nothing to his Empire. 15.

1618. 16. Muſtapha, brother to Achmat, ſucceeded, which was a novelty, never before heard of in this Kingdom; it being the Grand Signieurs common policy to ſtrangle all the younger brothers: howſoever this Muſtapha was preſerved, either becauſe Achmat being once a younger brother, took pity on him; or becauſe he had no iſſue of his own body, and ſo was not permitted to kill him.

1618. 17. Oſmen, or Ottoman II. ſucceeded his Uncle Muſtapha; and being unſucceſsfull in his war againſt Poland, was by the Janizaries ſlain in an uproar, and Muſtapha again reſtored: yet long enjoyed he not his throne; for the ſame hand that raiſed him, plucked him down again, and ſeated young Amurath in the place.

1623. 18. Morat (or Amurath the IV.) brother of Oſman, of the age of 13. year, ſucceeded on the ſecond depoſition of his Uncle Muſtapha, who proved a ſtout and maſculine Prince, and bent himſelf to the reviving of the antient diſcipline. To the great good of Chriſtendom, he ſpent his ſtomach on the Perſians, from whom he recovered Babylon.

19. Ibrahim, the brother of Morat, preſerved by the Sultaneſs his mother, in his brothers life; and by her power depoſed again for interdicting her the Court. He ſpent a great part of his reign in the war of Crete, againſt the Venetians; but without any great ſucceſs.

1648. 20. Mahomet IV. ſon of Ibrahim, now reigning, Lord of all this vaſt Empire, containing all Dacia and Greece, the greateſt part of Sclavonia and Hungary, the Iſles of the Ægean Sea, and a great part of the Taurican Cherſoneſe in Europe; of all the Iſles and Provinces which we have hitherto deſcribed, in Aſia, and in Africk, of all Egypt, the Kingdoms of Tunis and Algiers, with the Ports of Snachem and Erocco. Nor is their ſtile inferior to ſo vaſt an Empire, Solyman thus ſtiling himſelf in his Letter to Villerius, great Maſter of the Rhodes, at ſuch time as he intended to invade that Iſland: i.e. Solyman King of Kings, Lord of Lords, moſt high Emperor of Conſtantinople and Trabezond, the moſt mighty King of Perſia, Syria, Arabia, and the Holy Land; Lord of Europe, Aſia, and Africa; Prince of Meccha, and Aleppo, Ruler of Hieruſalem, and Soveraign Lord of all the Seas and Iſles thereof.

As for the perſons of the Turks, they are generally well-complexioned, of good ſtature, proportionably compacted, no idle talkers, nor doers of things ſuperfluous; hot and venerous, ſervile to their Prince, and zealous in their Religion. They nouriſh no hair upon their heads, except it be a tuft on the top of their crowns; by which they think that Mahomet will ſnatch them up into Paradiſe at the day of judgement. For which reaſon they keep one of all ſides, though never ſo poor, accounting it an approbrious thing to ſee any men uncover their heads; ſaying when they diſlike any thing which they ſee or hear, I had as lieſe thou hadſt ſhewn me thy bare skull. In their familiar ſalutation they lay their hands on their boſomes, and a little incline their bodies; but when they accoſt a perſon of rank, they bow almoſt to the ground, and kiſs the hem of his garment. Walking up and down they never uſe, and much wonder at the often walking of Chriſtians. Biddulph relateth, that being at his ambulatory exerciſe with his companion, a Turk demanded them whether they were out of their way, or their wits? If your way (quoth the Turk) lay toward the upper end of the Cloiſter, why come you downwards? If to the nether end, why go you back again? Shooting is their chief recreation, which they alſo follow with much lazineſs, ſitting on carpets in the ſhadow, and ſending ſome of their ſlaves to fetch their arrows. They prefer, as they paſs the ſtreets, the left hand before the right, as being thereby made maſter of his ſword with whom they walk. As they ſhave their heads, ſo they wear their beards long, as a ſign of freedom; but their ſlaves keep theirs ſhaven and cloſe cut.

The women are of ſmall ſtature, for the moſt part ruddy, clear, and ſmooth as the poliſhed Ivory; as neither afflicted with the weather, and often frequenting the baths: of a very good complexion, ſeldom going abroad, and then masked: ;laſcivious within doors, pleaſing in matters of incontinency, and they are accounted moſt beautiful, which have the greateſt eyes, and are of the blackeſt hue. Every Turk is permitted to have four wives, and as many ſlaves as he is able to keep; yet are they to meddle with none but their own, the offending women being drowned, and the man diſmembred. Theſe women live in great awe and reſpect of their husband, never ſitting with him at the table, but waiting till he hath done, and then withdrawing into ſome room. If their husband hath been abroad, at his coming in, they all riſe from their ſtools whereon they ſate, kiſs his hand, and make an obeiſance, and ſtand as long as he is in preſence. The children which they have, they carry not in their arms, as we do, but aſtride on their ſhoulders, they live immured from the ſight of the world: and permit not any male children, no not their own ſons, to come among them, after they are twelve years old. From their husbands they cannot be divorced, but on ſpecial occaſion: but their husbands may put away their wives, or give them to their ſlaves, when, and as often as they liſt. Far better is it with the ſiſters or the daughters of the Sultan; to whom when her father or brother beſtoweth her on one of the Baſſas, he giveth her a dagger, ſaying, I give thee this man to be thy ſlave or bedfellow; if he be not loving, obedient, and dutiful unto thee, I give thee here this Canzharre or dagger, to cut off his head. When they are married, their husbands come not to bed unto them, till they are ſent for, and then alſo they creep in at the beds feet. That ever any of their Ladies made uſe of their daggers, I could never read. Onely I finde, that Lutzis Baſſa, the chief man of the Empire next the Sultan himſelf, and of him very much beloved; having given his wife, which was ſiſter to Solyman the Magnificent, a box on the ear, was upon complaint by her made, thruſt from all his honours, baniſhed into Macedon, and had doubtleſs been ſlain, if the Emperours love and his own merits had not pleaded for him. And this is all the prerogative of the Sultans daughter; her ſons being accounted as meer and ordinary Turks onely, and never being preferred above the rank of a common Captain, for fear they ſhould be kept to harbour ſome aſpiring thoughts.

The better ſort of the Turks uſe the Sclavonian Tongue, the vulgar ſpeak the Turkiſh language; which being originally the Tartarian, borrowed from the Perſians their words of State; from the Arabick, their words of Religion; from the Grecians, their words or tearms of war; and from the Italians, their tearms of navigation.

They were formerly idolatrous Pagans, and were firſt initiated in Mahometaniſm, when they got the Soveraignty of the Perſian Scepter. The degrees in their Religion are, 1. The Saffi or Novices; 2. The Calſi, or readers, 3. The Hegi, or writers of books, for printing they uſe not; 4. The Napi, or young Doctors; 5. The Caddi, whereof there is at leaſt one in every City, to judge of offences; 6. The Mudreſſi, who uſe to overſee the Caddis; 7. The Medlis, or principal Church-Governour under the Muſti; 8. The Caldeleſcais, whereof there are onely three, one of Greece, the other of Anatolia, the third for Egypt and Syria; and theſe ſit with the Baſſa in the Divano, to determine of temporal ſuits. 9. The Muſti, whoſe ſentence in Law and Religion is uncontroulable. He abaſeth not himſelf to ſit in the Divano, nor affordeth more reverence to the Emperour, than he doth to him.

His forces are either for the ſea or the land. His ſea-forces are great in regard of his ſpacious ſea-coaſts, vaſt woods, and number of Subjects. He never ſuffered but one memorable defeat, which was that at Lepanto; yet the next year he ſhewed his Navy whole and entire. Gallies are his onely veſſels, which being unable to cope with Ships of any bigneſs, were not onely the occaſion of that overthrow, but alſo have heartned the Florentine, with ſix great Ships of War only, to ſwagger in the ſeas; ſo that for more ſafety, the tribute of Egypt is of late ſent to Conſtantinople by land. The Captain Baſſa, or Admiral, notwithſtanding with a Navie of 60 ſail, makes a yearly progreſs about the ſeas, and ſea-Towns, to annoy the enemy, ſuppreſs Pyrats, collect the tributes, and to redreſs the abuſes committed in the maritime Towns belonging to the Admiralty: which annual circuit is begun in May, and ended in October.

Their land forces are either horſe, or foot. They which ſerved on horſeback, are either the Spahi, or Aſapi: theſe latter ſerving to weary the enemies, and dull their ſwords with their multitudes; of whoſe bodies the Janizaries uſe to make mounts, whereon to aſſault the wall of a beſieged Town; and are by hem ſo contemned, that a Janizarie once ſold two of them for a ſheeps head. As for the Sphahi, they ill they are inrol'd into pay, are of the ſame originall and education with the Janizaries, and called by he ſame name, Azamaglans. Their pay is ten Aſpers a day. The Turk is able and doth maintain 50000 Horſes at little or no coſt, which no other Prince can do with fourteen millions of Gold. or whereſoever any parcell of Land is conquered, it is divided into divers parts, and committed to he manuring of divers men, whom they call Timariots. Theſe are to pay unto the Emperour certain Rents; and at their own charges, to ſend to his Wars ſo many Horſe excellently appointed for he Field: and which is the chief point of their ſervice, to keep in awe the Subjects, in all parts of his Empire. For being, as they are, diſperſed in all quarters of his Dominions, the people can no ſooner ſtir, but theſe will be aſſembled and fall upon them. Theſe Timariots are in all accounted 719000 fighting men, whereof 257000 have their abode in Europe, and 402000 in Aſia, and Africa. Were it not for theſe Timariots, as the Turks ſaying is, no Graſs would grow, where the Grand Signieurs horſe hath once ſet his hoof: for if the care of manuring the ground were committed to Peaſants, and not to military men, the greateſt part of this Empire would grow waſte and deſolate. Theſe Timariots were inſtituted by Ottoman, the firſt Turkiſh King of this Family, and a curſe by him laid on them that ſhould annihilate the inſtitution. The name is derived from the Turkiſh word Timar, ſignifying a ſtipend.

But the nerves and ſinews of this warlike body are the Janizaries, who by originall being Chriſtians, are choſen by the Turkiſh Officers, every five years, out of his Europæan Dominions: and ſo diſtributed abroad to learn the language, cuſtomes, and religion of the Turks; afterward according to their ſtrength, will, or diſpoſition, placed in divers chambers. They of the firſt chamber are preferred, ſome to be Chiauſies, ſuch as go on Embaſſies, and execute judgements; others to Sanziacks, or Governours of Cities; ſome to be Baſſas, or Commanders of horſemen; and others to be Beglerbegs (id eſt, Lord of Lords) to command the reſt in generall. They of the other chambers, are the Janizaries, or Prætorian Souldiers of the Guard, to whoſe faith and truſt the care of the Emperours Perſon is comitted. The tithing of theſe young ſpringals is, as we have ſaid, every fifth year, and oftner ſometimes, as occaſions ſerve. By which means he not onely diſarmeth his own ſubjects, and keepeth them from attempting any ſtirre or innovation in his Empire: but ſpoileth all the Provinces he moſt feareth, of the Flower, Sinews and ſtrength of their People, choice being made of the ſtrongeſt youths only, and fitteſt for war. Theſe, before they are inrol'd in pay, are called Azomoglans, and behave themſelves with much ſubmiſſiveneſs towards their Seniours and governours: but when once they are honoured with the title of Janizaries, they grow by degrees into an intolerable pride and haughtineſs; till of late they were not permitted to marry, neither now can any of their ſons be accounted any other than a naturall Turk (whom of all the reſt they account the baſeſt) the eldeſt onely excepted: to whom this Prerogative was granted by Amurath the third, when he came to the Crown. They are in number 40000. of which 16000 are alwaies reſident in Conſtantinople. In this City they are diverſly employed, being as Conſtables, to ſee the Peace kept; as Clerks of the Market, to ſee to the weights and meaſures; as Officers, to arreſt common offenders; as Warders, to look to the Gates, to guard the houſes of Embaſſadours, and to travel with ſtrangers for their more ſafety; in which charge they are very faithfull. Their pay is but five Aſpers a day, and two gowns yearly; neither are their hopes great, the command of 10, 20, and 100 men being their greateſt preferments: yet are they very obſequious to their Captain or Aga, who is in place inferiour to the meaneſt Baſſa, though in power perhaps above the chiefeſt. For the crafty Turks join not power and authority, and if they obſerve the Janizaries to love and reſpect their Aga, they quickly deprive him of life and office. The Founder of this Order was Amurath the firſt, Anno 1365. their greateſt eſtabliſher Amurath the ſecond: their name ſignifieth young Souldiers. Now concerning theſe Janizaries, we will further conſider the ſway they bear in deſigning the Succeſſor; 2ly. Their inſolency towards the Emperour, and his Officers; 3ly. Their behaviour in the vacancy of the throne; and 4ly. Their puniſhments.

1. Concerning the firſt, I never find any particular ſway the Janizaries carried in the deſignation of their Emperour, till the death of Mahomet the Great: when the Baſſas having choſen Corcut the Son of Bajazet, were over-ruled by the Aga and his Janizaries, who more inclined to Bajazet his Father, and Son to Mahomet. Though I am not ignorant, that when this Mahomet ſucceeded in the Throne, the joyfull acclamations made by the Souldiers was accounted the chiefeſt ſigne of his ſecure and perpetuated eſtabliſhment. But the chief inſtance of their power herein, was the inthronizing of Selimus the firſt, who being but the ſeventh Son of this Bajazet, was not only preferred by them before his brethren, in his Fathers life time; but by their aids alſo he ſeverally maſtered them, and in the end poiſoned his Father. To omit other examples, even of late, Anno 1622. they ſlew the young Emperour Oſmen, drew his Unkle Muſtapha out of priſon, and eſtabliſhed him in the Royalty.

2. As for the next, the firſt example in which I find them peccant toward their Prince, was at the beginning of the reign of the above-mentioned Bajazet; when hearing of the intended death of Achmet Baſſa whom they loved, they broke open the Court Gates, and told the Emperour, They would teach him, like a drunkard, a beaſt, and a raſcall as he was, to uſe his great place and calling with more ſobriety and diſcretion. Not long after, conceiving further diſpleaſure againſt the ſaid Bajazet, they ſhook their weapons againſt him, and refuſed to take him into the middeſt amongſt them, and were not without great and vile ſubmiſſion on his part, appeaſed. Againſt Selimus the firſt they alſo mutined, when being reſolved to winter in Armenia, for the better purſuit of his victories againſt the Perſian, he was by them forced to return home to Conſtantinople. Againſt Solyman they mutined ſo violently, that they compelled him to diſplace Ruſtan his chief Baſſa or favorite. Againſt Amurath the 3d. for placing over them a new Aga, they ſo ſtrongly oppoſed themſelves; that firſt they ſet fire on Conſtantinople, and burnt therein, beſides ſhops and ware-houſes, twenty five great Innes, ſeven Temples, and 15000 houſes: and in the end conſtrained him to give them money, and to yield alſo into their hands two of his chief Counſellors, by them ſuppoſed to be their adverſaries; whom they drew about the ſtreets. Finally, (to omit the tumult 1622 above-named) in the year 1600. they grew ſo diſcontented with Mahomet the 3d. that they not onely threatned to deſtroy the principall Officers of the Court, and the baniſhment of the Sultaneſs his Mother, but the depoſing of himſelf alſo.

3. Now for the third, I find it to have been the cuſtome of theſe Janizaries, between the death of an old Emperor, and the beginning of a new, to commit divers inſolencies; as the rifling of the houſes of the Jews and Chriſtians, among whom they dwell; the murdering of the Baſſas, and principall men about the Court, whom they ſuſpected not to have favoured them; and a number of the like outragious miſchiefs. Of theſe we finde frequent mention, as after the death of Amurath the 2d. and Mahomet the Great: at which laſt time the Merchants of Conſtantinople, being naturall Turks, eſcaped not their ravenous hands; neither could Mahomet-Baſſa avoid the fury of their ſwords. This ſpoil they took for ſo certain a due, that if they were diſappointed of it, they would preſently raiſe commotions both in Court, Field, and City, unleſs ſome preſent ſatisfaction were made them. To this end, Achmat diſtributed among them, two millions and an half of Ducats; Selimus the firſt, two millions; others made an encreaſe of their daily pay. But Selimus the 2d. diſtributing among them 100000 Sultanies onely, was by them prohibited to enter into his Seraglio, till he had inlarged his bounty: and the great Baſſaes were rapped about the pate with their Callivers, for perſwading them to quietneſs. Now to prevent the dangerous and factious liberty, which in the vacancy of the Empire was uſually committed; the death of the old Emperour was with all ſecrecy concealed, till the arrivall of the new. To omit others, I will inſtance in the deaths of Mahomet the firſt, and Solyman onely. This Solyman died at the ſiege of Sigeth in Hungary, which was ſo cunningly concealed by Mahomet-Baſſa, the ſpace of twenty dayes, that before the Janizaries knew of it, his Son Selimus had poſſeſſed himſelf of Conſtantinople, and came alſo to their Army then in retreat homewards. For this Mahomet privately ſtrangled the Phyſicians & Apothecaries, which knew of his death, commanded the Soulders to go on in their ſiege; and divers times ſhewed them the Emperor ſitting in his horſe-litter, as (being troubled with the Gout) he uſed to do: and when the City was taken, marched home with his dead body, ſitting ſtill in the ſame manner. So after the death of Mahomet the firſt, the Baſſaes of the Court called their Divanos, as formerly they uſed, gave order for the levying of an Army, as if ſome war were intended; and the Kings Phyſicians went up and down with their Potions, as if they had him ſtill in cure. But the Penſioners and Janizaries miſdoubting the matter, with all eagerneſs deſired to ſee him; which when the Baſſaes durſt not deny, they appointed the next day for their viſit. The next day the body was apparelled in Royal large robes, placed in a chair, at the end of a long gallery, and a little boy cunningly ſet behind him to move the Kings hand to his head, as if he ſhould ſtroke his beard, as his manner was: which ſignes of life and ſtrength the Souldiers ſeeing, held themſelves contented, and ſo was his death concealed the ſpace of 41 dayes.

4. As for the laſt, Theſe inſolent and unſufferable pranks committed ſo commonly by theſe maſterfull ſlaves, ſo exceedingly ſtomached Bajazet the 2d. that he ſecretly purpoſed with himſelf, for curing ſo dangerous a diſeaſe, to uſe as deſperate a remedy, which was, to kill and deſtroy ſuddenly all the Janizaries. It is like, that this Bajazet being a Scholar, had read how Conſtantine the Great had caſſed the Pretorian Souldiers, and deſtroyed their camp, as men that were the cauſes of all the ſtirs in his Empire, and whoſe pride was come to an intolerable height: and having the ſame cauſe to deſtroy his Janizaries, hoped to have done it with as much eaſe and ſafety as the other did. But they having notice of the plot, for the time continued ſo united and linked together, that he durſt not then attempt it; and afterward ſiding with his Son Selimus, caſt him out of his Throne into his grave. Since which time the Emperors never durſt puniſh them openly; but when any of them proveth delinquent, he is ſent privately in the night time to Pera over againſt Conſtantinople, where by the way he is drowned, and a piece of Ordnance ſhot off, to ſignifie the performing of the Sultans command.

Now for the Emperors themſelves, we will conſider them in matters of pleaſure, in matters of ceremony, and in matters of State; the laſt being conſiderable in three main points, which are the murdering of their brethren, the removing of their Sons, their revenue, and therein a touch of their government. To theſe we will add, what apparent ſymptomes may be obſerved to prognoſticate the ſtanding, decreaſing, and increaſing of this puiſſant Monarchy.

1. For the firſt, he hath not ſo few as 500. (ſometimes a 1000) choice virgins kept in a Seraglio by themſelves, all ſlaves born of Chriſtian Parents, and indeed the rareſt beauties of his Empire. When he is diſpoſed to take his pleaſure with any of them, they are all ranked in a gallery, and ſhe is by the Aga of the women prepared for his bed, to whom he giveth his handkercher. She that beareth him the firſt Son, is honoured with the title of Sultaneſs (Queen Mother we may call her) neither can he make any of them free unleſs he marry them. When the Sultan dieth, all his women are carried into another Seraglio, where they are ſtrictly looked to, and liberally provided for, and not ſeldom times are beſtowed by the ſucceeding Sultan, on his great Baſſaes, and ſuch as he chiefly favoureth, which is a principall honour. They are attended on by women, and Eunuches; theſe being not gelded onely, but deprived of all their genitalls, and ſupplying the uſe of nature with a ſilver quill: which inhumane cuſtome was brought in among them by Selimns the ſecond, becauſe he had ſeen a Gelding cover a Mare.

2 Theſe ceremonies are either performed by them, which is for the moſt part, the building of a Moſque, onely to help to the ſalvation of their ſouls; or towards them by others, which are moſt apparent in the entertainment of Embaſſadors. For when ſuch come to his preſence, they are led between two of his Courtiers, and coming before the Throne (on both ſides whereof the Baſſaes ſit with admirable ſilence, reſembling rather Statuaes than men;) they bow themſelves to the ground with all humility: laying their hands on their breaſt, but never uncovering their heads, which (as we before noted) is counted an undecency. When they are to depart, they go all backwards; it being accounted very irreverent to turn their back-parts towards a Prince ſo glorious. The reaſon why they are thus brought in between two, is ſaid to be for their greater honour: but is indeed a fear they have, leſt the Grand Signieur, under the pretence of a Salutation, or the delivery of an Embaſſie, ſhould be ſtabbed. Which warineſs they have uſed, ever ſince the time that Miles Cobiletz, a Servian, ſcrambling from among the ſlain at the battel of Caſſona, and being admitted to the ſpeech of Amurath the firſt, the Author of that overthrow, ſtabbed him into the belly with his dagger.

3. Amongſt all the jarres and diſcontents that be, none have been with more unkindneſs begun, or more eagerneſs proſecuted, than thoſe of brothers; and that not only in private families, but in the ſtems of Princes: the multitude of Pretendants being the originall of moſt civill wars. To prevent theſe publick emotions, the Emperors of Habaſſia uſe to immure up all their younger children in the hill Amaza; the Perſians do put out the eyes of their younger brothers; and the Turks do murder them: ſtrange and horrid courſes, whereby to avoid the fear of a war in the State, they ſtir up a war in their own bowels. The firſt amongſt the Turks that began this barbarous cruelty, was Bajazet the firſt, on his brother Jacup: whom immediately after his Fathers death, he ſtrangled with a bow-ſtring: this being the only inſtrument of their Fratricide, becauſe thereby none of the blood-royall of Ottoman is ſpilt on the ground. After him, Mahomet the Great, cauſed his young brother then at nurſe, to dy the death; and was not without much ado perſwaded from being the executioner himſelf. Amurath the third cauſed his five brethren to be at once ſtrangled before his face; and Mahomet, his Son, no fewer than nineteen in one day. By this courſe they imagine their own eſtate to be infinitely ſecured, as knowing that Muſtapha a younger Son, ſtirred a rebellion againſt Amurath; and Zemes, againſt Bajazet; both the ſecond of thoſe names: that Solyman, Muſa, and Iſa, ſeverally afflicted Mahomet the firſt; and Corcut, Selimus; the firſt of theſe names alſo. But yet they will not know, that nothing ſooner putteth their younger brothers into theſe acts of hoſtility, than an inevitable certainty of a violent and unnatural death: whereas were they but ſure of life, and a liberall and Princely maintenance, it is more than probable, they would reſt content, as in other Kingdomes the younger Princes do. And notwithſtanding their barbarous policy, they are not quite free from fear, as knowing the counterfeits have heretofore much diſturbed the quiet of their Predeceſſors: for thus we find Amurath the ſecond to have been vexed by one, that took upon him the name of Muſtapha, elder brother to Mahomet, then late deceaſed; who was much furthered and aided by the Greek Princes. This hath been one of the vulgar policies of Princes to kindle flames of ſedition in their neighbours Countreys. In the infancy of the Roman Empire, we find a counterfeit Agrippa, after that a counterfeit Nero; and before them two counterfeit Alexanders in Syria. But never was Realm ſo often troubled with theſe Mock-kings, as England; a counterfeit Richard the 2d. being made in the time of Hen. the 4th. a counterfeit Mortimer, in the time of Hen. the 6th. a counterfeit Duke of York, a counterfeit Earl of Warwick, under Hen. the 7th. and a counterfeit Edw. the 6th. under Q. Mary. To prevent theſe walking ſpirits, Mahomet the third laid out the dead bodies of his Father and nineteen brethren, as a common ſpectacle for all that paſſed by, or would come to behold them. Of late indeed the Grand Signieur Muſtapha miraculouſly ſcaped the bow-ſtring twice; 1. when his brother Achmat, and 2ly. when Oſmen his young Nephew, were made Sultans; and was the firſt in this Empire that ever were ſucceeded in the collaterall line, as Ibrahim the late Sultan was the ſecond, on the death of Morat, or Amurath, the fourth, his elder brother.

4. The removing of the young Princes is done for three reaſons: 1. to wean them from the pleaſures of the Court; 2ly. to train them up in arms, and inure them to hardneſs; 3ly. and principally to avoid the danger of a Competitor, whereof old Princes are eſpecially jealous. The common places deſtinated to this Princely exile, are Amaſia, in Cappadocia; Magneſia, in Lydia, and ſuch like Towns of Natolia. Neither do the old Sultans by ſuch a great diſtance think themſelves ſecure altogether; but carry a vigilant eye over their Sons actions, and have intelligence of almoſt every particular thought: the leaſt ſuſpition being cauſe ſufficient to deſtroy them. So we find Muſtapha, Son to Solyman, the hopefulleſt branch that ever ſprang from the Ottoman tree, to have been ſhamefully ſtrangled by the command of his Father; upon a rumour onely of a marriage, which he was ſaid to have negotiated with the Perſian Kings daughter. When theſe Princes are once ſetled in their government, it is a crime meriting no leſſe puniſhment than death, to depart thence and come unto Conſtantinople, before their Fathers death; or unleſs they are by their Fathers ſent for. Of this we have a Tragical example in Mahomet, a Prince of great hope, Son to Bajazet the ſecond: who deſiring to ſee the faſhion of his Fathers Court, left Magneſia to which he was by his Father confined; and attended by two or three Gentlemen, came in the habit of a ſeafaring man to Conſtantinople, and having obtained his deſire he returned to his charge. This ſtrange action being quickly divulged abroad, and by divers variouſly interpreted, ſtirred ſuch jealouſies in the ſuſpicious head of his old Father, that he took order not long after to have him ſecretly poiſoned.

5. As for the ordinary revenue, it conſiſteth either in money received, or in money ſaved. The money ſaved, is firſt by the Tartars, of whom he commands continually 60000 to attend him in his wars, without any pay but the ſpoil of the Enemy. And ſecondly, by the Timariots, who nouriſh and bring into the Field more horſes, than any Prince in Chriſtendome can keep (as we have already ſaid) for 14 millions of Gold. The money received (according to Boterus) is only 15 millions of Sultanies, which is nothing in reſpect of ſo great an Empire: the chief reaſon whereof is the Tyrannicall government of the Turk, which deters men from tillage, merchandize, and other improvements of their eſtates; as knowing all their gettings to lie at the Grand Signieurs mercy. His extraordinary revenue is incredible. For beſide that no Ambaſſadour cometh before him empty-handed; no man is maſter of his own wealth, furthe than it ſtands with the Emperours liking: ſo that his great Baſſaes are but as ſpunges, to ſuck up riche till their coffers ſwell; and then to be ſqueezed into his Treaſury. Theſe men, as he advanceth withou envy, ſo can he deſtroy without danger: no man here hoping for Partakers, if he ſhould reſiſt, as no being ignorant that one mans fortune is built on the deſired overthrow of another. Such riches as they gain, if they hap to die naturally, return to the Emperors coffers; who giveth only what he pleaſeth to the Children of the deceaſed. Theſe Baſſaes have in their particular Provinces, their Divanoes, or Law-Courts, where juſtice hath bin adminiſtred formerly with great integrity; but now not a little corrupted; yet the comfort is, that ſuch as miſcarry in their right, ſhall without delay know what to truſt to; and the Baſſaes upon complaint to the Emperor, are ſure to die for it. Over theſe Baſſaes (the chief of whom is the Viſier Baſſa, or Preſident of the Council) preſide two Beglerbeggs; one for Greece, the other for Natolia.

6. Concerning the preſent ſtate of the Empire, many judge it to be rather in the wane, than the increaſe; which judgement they ground upon good reaſons, whereof theſe are the chief.

1. The body is grown too monſtrous for the head: the Sultans, ſince the death of Solyman, never accompanying their Armies in perſon (except Morat, or Amurath the fourth) but rioting, and waſting their bodies and treaſures at home.

2. The Janizaries, who have been accounted the principall ſtrength of this Empire, are grown more factious in the Court, than valiant in the Camp: corrupted with eaſe and liberty, drowned in prohibited wines, enfeebled in the continual converſe of women, and fallen from their former auſterity of diſcipline.

3. They have of late given no increaſe unto their Dominions: and as in the paths of vertue, non progredi eſt regredi; ſo in Empires, by violence gotten, when they ceaſe to be augmented, they begin to be diminiſhed.

4. Rebellions have in theſe latter times been in this Empire ſtrangely raiſed, and mightily ſupported; which commotions the former Sultans were never acquainted with.

5. The greatneſs of the Empire is ſuch, that it laboureth with nothing more than the weightineſs of it ſelf; ſo that it muſt in a manner needs decline Pondere preſſa ſuo, overburdened with its own mightineſs: For as in a naturall body, a ſurfeit killeth more then faſting; ſo in the body Politick alſo, too much extent doth ſooner draw on a ruin, than either too little, or a mediocrity.

6. The Sons of the Grand Signieur, whoſe bravery of mind is ever ſuſpected by their Fathers, are nurſed up (contrary ſometimes to their natural inclinations) in all effeminacy; which once rooted in them in their youth, doth always after ſubject them to the ſoftneſs and baſeneſs of libidinous pleaſure.

7. They have loſt much of that fear and terror, which formerly their very name did carry with it: inſomuch that not the Venetians onely have by Sea often mated them, & once overthrown them; the Hungarians withſtood their greateſt forces, for the ſpace of 200. years, by land; the Polonians forced them to diſhonourable retreat and compoſition: but the poor Prince of Tranſylvania did divers times diſcomfit them, with the death of many of their Baſſaes; the Florentine, with ſix ſhips onely, intercepteth their trade; and the poor Emir of Sidon held it out againſt them many years together.

8. By the avarice and corruption reigning in the Court; all peace and war, all Counſels and informations, all injuries and favours, being now made ſaleable. And

9 It is viſible and apparent, that their Empire was long ſince at the higheſt: Et naturaliter quod procedere non poteſt, recedit, as Vellius hath it: when an Empire can aſcend no higher, by the ordinary courſe of nature it muſt have a fall. All theſe are more then probable prognoſticks of a ſinking Monarchy: and yet there is a greater then any of theſe, that is to ſay, the preſent State of Affairs. The young Emperor Mahomet the fourth, now reigning, is but a weak ſtaff to ſupport ſo vaſt an Empire: conſidering not onely the infinite caſualties, to which children are naturally ſubject; but the dangers which he may juſtly fear from a rebellious Souldiery, and a factious Court. Who by the murder of one Emperor, and the depoſition of two, have made themſelves ſo formidable, but withall ſo odious in the ſight of the Imperiall houſe, that there is no way left to ſave them from a merited vengeance, but to tranſlate the Empire to ſome other Family, though by the rooting out of this. Which whenſoever it ſhall happen, either by the naturall death, or unnaturall deſtruction of the preſent Sultan, it will draw with it an extermination of the Ottoman race: which I look on as a matter not to be avoided, except by miracle. Suppoſing then the line of Ottoman to fail, (as it is moſt probable that it will) what will become of this vaſt Empire? Three there will be, to offer at it, viz. the Crim-Tartars, the Janizaries, and the Baſſas. And firſt, the Crim-Tartar may plead a compoſition made by his Anceſtors, with the Princes of the Ottoman family; which is, that he ſupplying them with 60000 men at his own charges, ſhould on the failer of the heirs males ſucceed in this Empire. Beſides which, he may hope for no ſmall ſuccors, not onely from the reſt of the Tartarian Princes, but even from the Great Cham himſelf, to recover his eſtate herein, if withholden from him: thereby to adde unto the preſent greatneſs and renown of the Tartars, the acceſs of ſuch a ſpacious Empire. 2ly. The Baſſaes may conceive no ſmall poſſibilities, of dividing this great Empire among themſelves, partly by the example of Alexanders Captains, who after their Maſters death (there being yet ſome of the blood-Royall remaining) parted among themſelves not onely the new-gotten Provinces, which they had gotten from the Perſians; but even the Kingdome of Macedon, his old Inheritance: partly by an example in their own Hiſtories, by which it appeareth, that after the death of Aladine the 2d. Caraman, Sarachan, Ædin, Caraſus, and the reſt of the more powerfull Commanders, divided among them the whole Turkiſh Kingdome in the Leſſer Aſia: and partly by the opportunity which they have as Governours in their ſeveral Provinces, and having ſo many bands of Souldiers under their command; which may eaſily inveſt them as Proprietaries in thoſe Eſtates; of which they have already ſuch a fair poſſeſſion. And ſo we find the Sultans or Provincial Governours of the Caliphs of Babylon, to have done before them. 3ly. The Janizaries may alſo build their hopes on as fair foundations, as being the Sword and Buckler of the Ottoman Empire; got, and maintained by their valour chiefly. Who to excite them to the Enterprize have the example of the Prætorian Guards of the Roman Empire (a body far more politique and better compacted than this is); who out of their own company created the far greater part of the Roman Emperours, neither the Provinces or Senate daring to oppoſe them in it. But above all Examples, that of the Mamalucks of Egypt doth make faireſt for them; who were born of Chriſtian Parents, as theſe are; appointed for the Guard of the Sultans, as theſe are; purpoſely entertained and inured to the wars, to take from the natural ſubjects the uſe of Arms, as theſe are; men of approved valour, and the chief Bulwark of that Kingdom againſt the Chriſtians, as theſe are: and then why may they not be like them in this laſt Attempt, for ſitting in their Maſters Throne, as theſe Mamalucks did. Adde hereunto, that they are already (in a manner) poſſeſſed of Conſtantinople, the head town and heart of the Empire: and their hopes are not vain. For my part, I hold them to be the men moſt like to carry it, unleſs the Princes of Chriſtendome laying aſide private malice, joyn all in arms to ſtrip this proud Peacock of his feathers: and (upon ſo bleſſed an advantage) to break in pieces with a rod of iron, this inſolent and burdenſome Monarchy. A thing rather to be deſired than expected. But this by way of ſuppoſition, and as in a dream, I awake again.

The enſign of this Empire (or arms of it) is the Croiſſant, or half moon; but how blazonned I cannot tell you: nor are the learned yet reſolved on the beginnings of that bearing. Some derive it to them, from the Eaſtern Gentiles, who worſhipped the Moon under both ſexes; as we learn in Spartianus. Some make it common to them, with the other Mahumetans; and they derive it from a pretended miracle of Mahomet; who to ſhew his power, is ſaid to have made the Moon fall into his lap in two pieces, and to have reſtored her whole again to the heavens. Others are of opinion, that it was taken by the Grand Signieur at the winning of Conſtantinople; ut ſignum victa gentis penes quam orientis imperium eſſet. And of this mind is Juſtus Lipſius, induced thereto, as it ſeemeth, by the figure of the Croiſſant born in ſome old Bizantine coins. A pretty plauſible conceit; and therefore, till we have a better, may paſs as currant as the money.

And thus much I thought convenient to inſert in this place, concerning the original, proceeding, and continuance; the natural diſpoſitions, policies, and forces of the Turks: this being as the only Province which retaineth their name; ſo both the firſt they were poſſeſſed of, and the laſt which they have fully conquered, of all their Dominions.

And thus much of Turcomania.

OF MEDIA and PERSIA:

THeſe I have joyned together alſo, becauſe the affairs thereof have been ſo united, in making up the ſecond of the four great Monarchies, and running the ſame fortunes ever ſince; that they are hardly to be parted in courſe of ſtory, though each muſt have unto it ſelf a diſtinct Chorographie. Firſt then, we begin with MEDIA.

MEDIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Parthia, and ſome part of Hyrcania, Provinces of the Perſian Empire; on the Weſt, with Armenia Major, and ſome part of Aſſyria; on the North, with the Caſpian Sea, and thoſe parts of Armenia Major which now paſs in the accompt of Georgia; and on the South, with Perſia. So called from Madai the Son of Japhet, by whom firſt planted and poſſeſſed, after that general diſperſion made at Babel. Known by this name amongſt the antients, both Greeks and Romans; but at this time called Sheirvan by the Turks, and Perſians; the word ſignifying in the language of this Countrey, a Milkie-Plain.

The Countrey of a large extent, and of ſo different nature, as one would think it not the ſame. The North parts lying betwixt Mount Taurus and the Hyrcanian Sea; very cold and comfortleſs: ſo barren, that for the moſt part they make their bread of dried Almonds, and their drink of the juice of certain herbs. Fruit-trees they have but few, and thoſe but of Apples; nor any droves of tame cattel, as in other places, their food being generally on Veniſon, or the fleſh of wild beaſts took in hunting. But on the South-ſide of the Taurus, the ſoyl is very rich, and the Countrey pleaſant, plentifull both of corn and wine, and all things neceſſary; full of fat paſtures, ſome of them ſo large in compaſs, that 50000 horſes do graze upon it.

The people antiently great warriers, as thoſe who ruined the great Empire of the Babylonians; and laid upon themſelves and their own vertue, the foundation of the ſecond Monarchy. But being not long after incorporated into the ſame Empire with the Perſians, have not onely ever ſince followed the ſame fortunes with them, but participate of their nature alſo: and therefore we ſhall hear more of their Character, when we come to Perſia. Polygamie antiently amongſt them, ſo far from being eſteemed a ſin or an inconvenience, that it was a puniſhment for the common Villager to have leſs than ſeven wives; or the woman, if of noble birth, fewer than five husbands. In their wars they uſe commonly to envenom their arrows with an oyl or liquor, made of a bituminous water called Naphta; whereof there is great plenty both here, in Perſia, and Aſſyria. The oyl called Oleum Mediacum, from this people onely, becauſe their invention, and by them moſt miſchievouſly uſed. The Arrow which was anointed with it, being ſhot from a ſlack bowe (for a ſwift and ſtrong motion takes away its vertue) did burn the fleſh, wherein it faſtned with ſo great a violence, that nothing but duſt could mitigate the fury of it; water increaſing rather than diminiſhing that malignant flame.

The Chriſtian Religion was firſt here planted by Saint Thomas, but never had the happineſs to be ſo univerſally embraced, as in other places; always oppoſed and ſuppreſſed, either by Paganiſm in the time of [illegible] Perſian Kings; or by Mahometaniſm, ſince the firſt Conqueſt of this Countrey by the power of the [illegible]. Some Chriſtians yet there be amongſt them, either of the Armenian, or Neſtorian Sects, (as in all other parts of the Perſian Empire) the ſpecialties of whoſe Religion have been elſewhere ſpoke of. Here live alſo very many Jews, indulged the free exerciſe of their Religion: many of which are Deſcendants of thoſe Tribes, which were tranſplanted hither by Salmanaſſar. But the Religion generally embraced and countenanced, is that of Mahomet, according to the Sophian or Perſian Sects; the Language of which Nation they do alſo ſpeak, though they had a language of their own, different from that of the Parthian, Elamite, or Perſian, as appeareth Acts 2. v.9. where they are reckoned as diſtinct.

Mountains of chief note, 1. Orontes, 2. Coronus, 3. Chaboras, the boundary betwixt Media and Aſſyria, 4. Jaſonium, 5. Lagoas; all of them (except Chaboras only) the diſjointed branches of Mount Taurus; which is here more broken and divided, than in any part of his courſe beſides.

Out of theſe flow their principal Rivers, 1. Amandus, 2. Strato, and 3. Carindas; of greateſt eminence in this Countrey, in the time of Ptolomy, but otherwiſe of no great account or obſervation. 4. Canac, the Divider of this Province from Armenia Major; but whether any of the former under this new name, I am not able to affirm. Adde hereunto the great Lake, now called Argis (by the Perſians, Vuſthlan) but by Strabo named Martiana Palus, ſcituate in the confines of Aſſyria, Media, and Armenia; of the fiſh whereof, dried by the Sun and wind, and ſold into divers other Countries, the people of theſe parts raiſe a great commodity.

In former times it was divided into many Provinces; the principal of which, 1. Tropatene, 2. Charomithrene, 3, Darites, 4. Marciane; 5. Amariace, and 6. Syro-Media: theſe and the reſt reduced to two in the later reckonings, viz. Atropatia, and 2 Media Major.

1. ATRO-

Atropatia.

1. ATROPATIA is that part hereof, which lieth betwixt Mount Taurus and the Caſpian Sea. So called from that Atropatus, Governour of theſe parts in the time of Darius; the laſt Perſian Monarch, who ſo valiantly held out againſt the Macedonians: The Tropatene (as I take it) of the antient Writers. A barren, cold, and unhoſpitable Countrey, as before deſcribed: and for that cauſe allotted for the dwelling of many of the captive Iſraelites, brought hither by Salmanaſſar when he conquered that Kingdom: their numbers being found ſo great in this Northern Region, that Benjamin the Jew reckoned no fewer than 50000 of them in one City onely, which he calleth by the name of Madai. And that great numbers of them were tranſplanted hither, appeareth by that paſſage 2 Kings 17.6. where it is ſaid, that they were placed in Halah and Habor by the River of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes. Now Halab or Chalah ſeems moſt probably to be that region of Aſſyria which Ptolomy calleth Chalatone, in the North of that Countrey, towards Media: Habor, or Chabor, to be that Mount Chaberus, which parteth this Countrey from Aſſyria, in which mountainous tract there was in thoſe times a City of the ſame name alſo. Betwixt which City and the banks of the Caſpian Sea, I finde in Ptolomy the City Gauzania, in the fortieth degree and forty minutes of Northern Latitude: in which there are apparent footſteps of the name of the River Gozan, upon whoſe banks it was moſt likely to be ſeated.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Hamadum, by Benjamin the Jew called Madai, repleniſhed in his time with families of the captive Iſraelites. 8. Gauzavia, another dwelling of thoſe Tribes, ſpoken of before. 3. Mandagarſis, of which nothing extant but the name. 4. Gelan, the Gelæ of the antients, whom the Greeks call Caduſii. 5. Bochu, more towards the Caſpian Sea, hence called Mare de Bochu. 6. Eres, a place of great ſtrength, but poſſeſſed by the Turks, and made the reſidence of ſome of their principal Officers: taken by Muſtapha General of the Turkiſh forces in the time of Amurath the 3d. and by him fortified as the Gate and entrance of this Countrey. 7. Shumachia, or Shamaki, betwixt Eres and Derbent, taken by Oſman Baſſa, at the ſame time, Anno 1578. and made the Reſidence of a Beglerbeg; An. 1583. Conceived to be the Cyropolis of Ptolomy, by the Perſians called Cyreckbata; bearing the name of Cyrus the great Perſian Monarch, by whom built or beautified. Remarkable at the preſent for a Pillar of flint-ſtones, inter-woven with the heads of many of the Perſian Nobility, moſt barbarouſly ſlain by one of the late Sultans, and this Pillar here erected for a terrour to others.

2. MAJOR MEDIA, or MEDIA ſpecially ſo called, is that part hereof, which lieth on the South of the Mountain Taurus. Commended by the Antients, for one of the goodlieſt Countries in all Aſia: the fields (ſaith Ammianus) yielding abundance of Corn and Wine, for their fatneſs and fertility very rich, and no leſs pleaſant for freſh Springs and clear veins of water: where one may ſee plenty of great Meadows; and in them a breed of generous horſes, which they call Niſæi, mounted by as valiant and generous Riders, who with great jollity uſe to go unto the wars, and charge furiouſly upon the Enemy. The men commended by Polybius (κατὰ τὰς ἀρετὰς ἀνδρῶν, &c.) as well as the Countrey.

Cities of moſt note in it, 1. Ecbatana, of as great antiquity as Babylon; for we finde that Semiramis the wife of Ninus, in a war made againſt the Medes, who had then rebelled, taking an affection to the place, cauſed water-courſes to be made to it from the further ſide of the Mountain Orontes, digging a paſſage thorow the hills, with great charge and labour: Deſtroyed by the injury of time, it was re-edified by Deioces the ſixth King of the Medes; and afterwards much beautified and enlarged by Seleucus Nicanor, Succeſſor unto Alexander in his Aſian Conqueſts. For beauty and magnificence little inferiour to Babylon, or Ninive, before beſcribed. In compaſs 180 or 200 Furlongs, which make about 24 Italian miles. The walls thereof affirmed, in the book of Judith, to be 70 Cubits high, 50 Cubits broad, and the Towers upon the Gates 100 Cubits higher; all built of hewn and poliſhed ſtone, each ſtone being ſix Cubits in length, and three in breadth. But this is to be underſtood onely of the innermoſt wall; there being ſeven in all about it; each of them higher than the other, and each diſtinguiſhed by the colour of their ſeveral Pinacles; which gave unto the eye a moſt gallant Proſpect. From which variety of colours it is thought to have the name of Agbatha, or Agbathana. In former times, the ordinary reſidence of the Monarchs of the Medes and Perſians, in the heats of the ſummer; as Suſa (the chief City of Suſiana) in the cold of winter. The Royal Palace being about a mile in compaſs, was built with all the coſt and cunning, that a ſtately manſion did require: ſome of the beams thereof of ſilver, and the reſt of Cedar; but thoſe of Cedar ſtrengthned with plates of Gold. Said by Joſephus to be built by the Prophet Daniel. Which muſt be underſtood no otherwiſe, in the truth of Story, than that he over-ſaw the Workmen, or contrived the Model; appointed to that office by Darius Medus, to whom the building of the ſame is aſcribed by others. Neglected by the Kings of the Parthian race, it became a ruine. 2. Tauris, ſcituate in or near the place of Ecbatana, out of whoſe rubbiſh it was built. Diſtant 150 miles from the Caſpian Sea, under the ſhadow of Orontes, now called Baronta; but opening Southwards, towards a large and ſpacious Campaign: in compaſs about ſix miles, and beautified on the South-weſt within a large and pleaſant garden, the work of Sultan Tamas, who reſided here often; the buildings for the moſt part of brick, with flat roofs (as generally in all the Eaſt) well peopled, as containing 200000 perſons of all ſorts and Sects. Of great trading, till ſubdued by the Turks, by whom it was thrice taken within very few years, viz. by Selimus the firſt, Anno 1514. by Solyman the Magnificent, Anno 1530. and by Oſman Baſſa, general of Amurath the 3d. Anno 1585. But this laſt finding it too chargeable to be alwaies garriſoned, and not otherwiſe tenable but by force, pulled down the walls, and built a large and capacious Citadel: both Town and Citadel recovered by Emir-Hamze Mirza, Prince of Perſia, and father of Sultan Soffy, Anno 1614. after it had been for a hundred years a continual prey unto the Turks. 3. Arſacia, ſo named by Ptolomy, and by the name conjectured to be built by ſome of the Parthian race. Ruined long ſince, but more beautifully revived than ever, in the preſent. 4. Casbin, raiſed from the ruines of that Town. Scituate in a fair and open place on the banks of a little River, which ſerveth it for houſhold uſes, but not for traffick.

Exceedingly enriched by removal of the Court from Tauris hither, in the time of Tamus; partly invited thereunto by the richneſs of the ſoyl, and the commodiouſneſs of the place: but chiefly that he might without danger attend the Turks, who began to encroach on his dominions. In compaſs about ſeven miles, beautified with a large market-place, many ſtately Moſques, and the Sultans Palace: this laſt adjoyning to the firſt, convenient enough, but neither of great ſtate nor beauty. 5. Rages, or Raga, mentioned in the book of Tobit, ſo called from Ragas the ſon of Phaleg, the founder of it: ſcituate near the ſpacious Plain, ſo memorable for the great breed of horſes ſpoken of before; and therefore in that book called the Plain of Rages. Repaired afterwards by the Greeks, it was named Europus, and ſo ſtands in Ptolomy. 6. Naſſivan, ſuppoſed by ſome to be the Artaſata, more probably the Naſuana, of the Antient Writers: a place much aimed at by the Turks in their Perſian wars. 7. Ardoville, on or near the banks of the great Lake Argis, ſpoken of before; the birth-place and chief Seat of Guine, and Aider, the firſt Authors of the Sophian Sect; and the burial-place of Sultan Hyſmael the firſt Perſian Sultan of that line. 8. Sultania, about ſix days journey from Taurus, environed with high Mountains; the tops of which continually covered with ſnow, may be ſeen far off: founded by Alyaptu, the eighth King of the ſixth or Tartarian Dynaſty; and by him made the Royal Seat of the Perſian Sultans, whence it had the name. But ruined by the Tartars, it retaineth nothing now of its former ſplendor, but the Moſques, or Temples, (one of them, the faireſt in the Eaſt) which the Tartars ſpared. 9. Tyroan; in the Territory of Sultania, ſcituate in a large Plain, but not far from the Mountains; beautified with a fair Market-place, many pleaſant Gardens of private men; and one belonging to the King, environed with a wall of greater circuit than the City. 10 Turcoman, in the middle way betwixt Taurus and Casbin. 11. Damoan, at the foot of Taurus, a Town of 200 houſes, not here conſiderable but for the ſignification of the name; which is ſaid to ſignifie a Second Plantation: and being ſcituate at the foot of ſo high a Mountain, occaſioneth ſome of the Jews to think, that the Ark reſted not far off, as perhaps it did not. 12. Marant, in the Extremity of the Countrey, but of leſſer note.

The firſt Inhabitants hereof were the poſterity of Madai, as before was ſaid; Ragan the ſon of Phalag taking up thoſe parts, which lay next Aſſyria. Divided in long tract of time into ſeveral Tribes, as the Codusii, Amariacle, Margaſi, Sagartii, Debryces, Tapyri, and ſome others. Governed by Kings immediately from the firſt Plantation; for we finde that Pharnus King hereof was overthrown and ſlain by Ninus the grand-ſon of Nimrod. After this made ſubject to the Aſſyrians, their Kings were only titular; at the beſt but Homagers, perhaps no better than Provincial Governours, under that great Monarchy. Of moſt eſteem amongſt them was that Arſaus, who with an Army of 800000 men (if the number be not miſtaken) incountred the Caduſii, by whom diſcomfited and ſlain. But the Caduſii ſo broken, that they were fain to put themſelves under the power of the Perſians; and ſo continued till the time of Arbaces, the laſt of theſe Provincials, and the firſt Monarch of the Medes. He living in the time of Sardanapalus, had the chance to ſee his Lord and Maſter in a womans dreſs, ſpinning among his Concubines, and otherwiſe behave himſelf in a brutiſh manner; which ſo moved him, that he reſolved to be no longer ſubject to ſo vile a Monſter. Communicating his thoughts unto Beloehus, Governour of Babylon, and well ſeen in Aſtrology, he was incouraged to proceed; and ſped ſo well, that having made themſelves Maſters of Ninive, the imperial City (though Sardanapalus for a time put them ſhrewdly to it) they divided betwixt them his Eſtates. To Belochus fell Aſſyria, and Babylonia, with the Provinces on the Weſt of Tigris: to Arbaces, Media and the reſt, which now make up the Kingdome of Perſia. But being a mild Prince, and deſirous by fair and gentle means to aſſure his Empire, he confirmed the Perſian Satrapaes in their former Government; reſerving nothing to himſelf but a titular Soveraignty. Of whom and his Succeſſors more, when we have taken in the reſt of the Provinces.

PERSIA.

PERSIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with India; on the Weſt, with Media, Aſſyria, and Chaldaea; on the North, with Tartary; on the South, with the main Ocean. So called from Perſis the predominant Province of it, that which gave law to all the reſt: as that is ſaid to do from Perſeus, the ſon of Jupiter and Danae; affirmed by the Grecians to have conquered theſe Eaſtern Countries, and to have left his name to this. Of which thus Iſodore, Perſæ populi à Perſeo Rege ſunt vocati, qui à Græcia in Aſiam tranſiens ibi barbaras gentes gravi diuturnoque bello perdomuit, & victor nomen ſubactæ Genti impoſuit. In the Scripture it is conſtantly called Elam, till the time of Daniel the Prophet, from Elam the ſon of Sem, who was planted there. But after that the Medes and Perſians had ſubdued Babylon, and transferred the ſupreme Monarchy to themſelves, we finde this people called by the name of Paras, (whence the name of Perſian ſeems to come) the word Paras, (or Pharas) ſignifying as much as horſemen. Given therefore to this Nation, as it is ſuppoſed, from an Edict of Cyrus, who not onely taught them the art of horſemanſhip, but ſet forth a law, that it ſhould be a reproach to any man to go on foot; ſive multum ſive parum itineri eſſet conficiendum, whether the journey that he had to go were long or little. Called ſometimes alſo Achæminis, from Achæmenes the Son of Perſes, one of the firſt known Kings hereof; and by that name (Non tot Achæmeniis armantur Suſa Sagittis) they occurre in the ſecond of Propertius. Where by Achæmeniæ Sagittæ, he means Perſian Arrows.

It is of very great extent, ſtretched out in length from the 82 degree of Longitude, to the 120. being 38 degrees in all; and in breadth from the 23 degree of Northern Latitude, to the 43. being 20 more. According unto which poſition, with reference to the heavenly bodies, we ſhall finde it ſeated under the third, fourth, fifth, and ſixth Climates: the longeſt ſummers day in the Southern parts; being thirteen hours almoſt three quarters; and fifteen hours, one quarter, in the parts moſt Northwards.

The Countrey not alike in all places, as it is impoſſible it ſhould in ſo great a compaſs. But generally it is of a pure & wholſome air, the high hills ſhading it on the one ſide from the heat of the Clime under which it lieth; and the warmth of the Sea, wherewith encompaſſed, cheriſhing a great part thereof. And ſo it is affirmed to be by Quintus Curtius. Regio non alia in tota Aſia ſalubrior habetur; temperatum cœlum, hinc perpetuum jugum opacum & umbroſum, quod aſtas levat; illinc mare adjunctum, quod modico tepore terras fovet. Then for the earth, it is by reaſon of the great heat of the Sun, very dry and ſandy, in many places deſtitute of water, few Rivers, and not many Lakes; by conſequence, neither well peopled, nor manured, for the greatneſs of it: men loving to inhabit (and I cannot blame them) where they may have the uſe of water. Which notwithſtanding it is furniſhed with all neceſſaries both for life and pleaſure; one part affording that which the other wanteth, as ſhall be ſhewed in the deſcription of the ſeverall Provinces.

The people antiently were trained up to the wars, but chiefly unto Archery, from their very childhood. Indulged the liberty of having as many wives as they pleaſed, they never ſaw the children begotten of them, until five years old. At that age ſent unto their Fathers, they were taught preſently to handle the Bow and Arrows. Upon this ground we finde the Bow of Elam mentioned by the Prophet Jer. Chap. 4. and the Quiver of Elam, by the Prophet Iſaiah, Chap. 22. v. 6. as the Arms peculiar to that Nation, or moſt uſed amongſt them. They were good horſemen alſo, and well skilled in their darts and ſlings, till wealth, and eaſe, & the pride of ſo great an Empire, made them wholly feminine: depriving them of thoſe abilities both of mind and body, wherein they did excell moſt Nations in their harder times. In all their fortunes very obſequious, if not ſervile, to their Kings and Princes, in whoſe preſence it was a crime to ſpit: but to deny obedience to his commands, an offence ſo heinous, as was not to be puniſhed with leſs than the loſs of life, and want of burial. In this obſervance of their Kings, followed, if not out-ſtripped by the modern Perſian. A race of men, affirmed to be cunctorum hominum mitiſsimi, the moſt meek or patient of the world, eſpecially compared with thoſe of the ſame Religion, the Turks and Tartars. Not haters of learning, as the Turks; but ſtudious, many of them, in Phyſick and Aſtrology; moſt of the better ſort much delighted in Poetry, which they give their minds to. For the moſt part addicted to hoſpitality, magnificent in expence, Lordly in their complements, fantaſtical in their Apparel, maintainers of Nobility, and deſirous of peace. Such as apply themſelves to Trades, and Mechanick Arts, prove excellent in the making of Silks, and Cloth of Gold: thoſe which betake themſelves to war, proving very good Souldiers, as the Turks have found unto their coſt, who by their long wars againſt them have got nothing but blows. The women ſaid to be neat and cleanly, truly loving, gorgeous in Attire, and delightfull in the ſequeſtration of pleaſure.

Their Religion at the firſt was Paganiſm, wherein directed principally by their Prieſts or Magi; men of a ſtrict auſtere life, forbidding outward ornaments, and the uſe of gold; making the ground their bed, and the herbs their food; their whole time ſpent in offering to the Gods the prayers and ſacrifices of the people, as if they onely might be heard; or elſe in divinations, and foretelling of things to come, from whence the names of Magick and Magician are derived unto us. Studious in the knowledge of God and nature, and therefore called by Suidas, not onely Philoſophy, lovers of wiſdom; but Philothei, lovers of God. Of ſuch eſteem, that as Cicero telleth us, the Perſian Kings were not admitted to the Throne, till they were trained up in the diſcipline of the Magi: and of ſuch power and intimacy in the Royal Court, that one of thoſe Magi, on the death of Cambyſes, poſſeſſed himſelf of the Perſian Monarchy. In a word, ſuch as the Druides were to the Gauls and Britains, the Gymnoſophiſts, or Brachmans to the antient Indians, and the Chaldæans in the Empire of Babylon; the ſame, if not of greater ſway in affairs of moment, were the Perſian Magi. And Perſians they muſt be, if Magi; none but the Natives of that Countrey being to admitted of that Society: though by a Metaphor applyed to the Profeſſors of the ſame Arts, though of other Countries; as thoſe which came from the Eaſt to worſhip Chriſt, are by Saint Matthew called Magi (Mat. 2. 1.) though they came from Arabia.

The people then were Gentiles, as to their Religion; and beſides other Gods which the Gentiles worſhipped, they were great Idolaters of the Fire: which they offered ſacrifice unto in time of peace, and carried it with them as their Tutelar Deitie, in the time of war. At what time (eſpecially if the King were there in perſon) it was born in the very front of their Army, attended on by their Prieſts, and followed by a train of boyes all clothed in Scarlet, to the number of 365. according to the number of the days of the year. In this equipage, with a great deal of pomp beſides, did Darius ſet forward to fight with Alexander, at the battel of Iſſus in Cilicia. A ſuperſtition derived from them to the Medes, and Aſſyrians, their next-neighbouring Nations, and not extinguiſhed to this day in ſome parts of this Countrey: in which many of theſe Fire-worſhippers are ſtill remaining. But from a God, it grew in time to be a Gentleman-Vſher, and to attend on Kings and perſons of greateſt eminence: uſed to be born before the Emperors of Rome, as a point of State. Inſomuch that Commodus though fallen out with his Siſter Lucilla, permitted her notwithſtanding to enjoy her Seat in the publique Theatre, ϗ πῦρ προπομπεύειν αὐτῆς, and fire to be born before her, as in former times, as we are told by Herodian.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt planted in the Provinces of the Perſian Kingdome, by Saint Thomas the Apoſtle, and held in all points anſwerable to thoſe of the Catholick Church; till Sapores to deſpight the Emperour Heraclius, a right Orthodox Prince, commanded that all the Chriſtians in his Dominions ſhould conform themſelves to the opinions and tendries of the Neſtorian Sect, by that means univerſally ſpread over all theſe Provinces. With whom here live now intermingled ſome Armenian Chriſtians, who with their Patriarch removed hither, when their own Countrey was made the ſeat of a long and miſerable war betwixt the Perſian and the Turk; but found not here ſo ſafe a dwelling as they did expect: 1200 of them being ſlain by Abas the late Perſian Sultan, on a ſuſpicion that they went about to reconcile themſelves to the Pope of Rome (whom he held to be more inclinable to the Turk than to him) in the year, 1609. Which notwithſtanding (ſo miſerable a condition do theſe Chriſtians live in) he ſuffered two Convents of Auguſtine and Carmelite Friers to be ſetled at the ſame time, even in Spaw-hawn it ſelf; and many Jeſuits to live peaceably up and down the Countrey, which ſerve for little elſe than to give intelligence. Here are alſo many Jews diſperſed over all the Provinces of this Empire, allowed their Synagogues, and Publique Places of Aſſembly. But the Religion publikely authorized and countenanced, is that of Mahomet, impoſed on this Countrey by the Saracens, when by them ſubdued: differing in ſome points from the Turks, eſpecially about the true Succeſſor of that falſe Seducer (of which more anon;) the cauſe of the long wars betwixt thoſe Nations.

As for the Perſian Language, it is very ancient, ſuppoſed to be as old as the Confuſion at Babel; ſome words whereof, by Daniel and Ezra, which lived in the Perſian Court, have been made uſe of in ſome parts of the holy Scripture. A tongue which ſtill hath left ſome remainders of it, in the language of the modern Perſian (as thoſe of judgement in this tongue have delivered to us:) notwithſtanding ſo long tract of time, and the conqueſt of this Countrey by the Greeks, Arabians, Turks and Tartars. Not ſpoken onely in this Countrey, nor limited within the Provinces of the Perſian Empire; but uſed alſo in the Court and Camp of the Great Mogul, and ſome parts of Zagathay; and where not vulgar unto all, ſtudied and underſtood by perſons of more eminent ſort, as the Latine by the Gentry of theſe Weſtern parts. Inſomuch as he that hath this Language may travell over all the Eaſt without an Interpreter.

Rivers here are but few, as before was ſaid, and thoſe few not navigable; by conſequence, of little note or eſtimation. The principal of thoſe that be, are 1. Eulæus, the chief River of Suſiana, emptying it ſelf into Sinus Perſicus: a River of ſo pure a ſtream, that the great Perſian Kings would drink of no other water. 2 Ochus in Bactria, a River of the greater note amongſt the Antients, becauſe it was navigable; opening with a fair Channel into the Caſpian Sea, to which it haſtneth from Mount Taurus: and ſo doth alſo, 3. Oxus in Margiana, a fatal bound to theſe great neighbors. A River which the Perſians have ſeldom paſſed to inlarge their Dominions, but they received ſome notable overthrow at the hand of the Scythians; and when the Tartars made over it, under the conduct of Saba the Cham of Zagathay, for the invaſion of Perſia, they were ſhamefully beat back again by Hyſmael Sophie. Nor is it leſs memorable in old ſtories, for the famous paſſage of Alexander over it, in purſuit of the murderers of Darius. For having followed Beſſus to the banks of this River, and not knowing how to paſs over his men, there being neither ſhips upon it, nor timber neer at hand to build them, he cauſed a great number of bags and bladders to be ſtuffed with ſtraw, and ſo in three days tranſported his Army. So that I may truly ſay, with his owu Hiſtorian, Unum id Conſilium quod neceſſitas ſubjecerat, iniit; neceſſity is the beſt Author of fine inventions. 4. Zioberis in Hyrcania, which riſing out of the ſame mountainous tract (as the two laſt mentioned) after a long courſe above ground, in the open light, hideth himſelf again for the ſpace of 38 miles, and then breaketh out at a new fountain, and falleth into, 5 Rhadaga, another chief River of thoſe parts. And this Alexander the Great found to be true, by caſting two Oxen into the River Zioberis, which by the current of the ſtream were carried under the ground, and brought to light where the River had its riſe again. 6 Hidero, by what name known unto the Antients I am not able to ſay, but of great note amongſt modern Travellers, for the fall thereof into the Sea: ſo ſteep and ſtrong, that the people are ſaid to ſacrifice or banquet under the fall thereof, the ſtream ſo violently ſhooting over their heads, that it never wetteth them.

Mountains of moſt note, are thoſe which paſs by the name of Taurus, which having left Media on the Weſt, paſſeth thorow the Northern Provinces of the Perſian Empire; dividing Parthia from Hyrcania, and Paropamiſus from Bactria, and Aria from Margiana. Known by the names of Coronus, the Seriphian hills, Paropamiſus, Caucaſus; whereof more as occaſion ſerveth, in their proper places.

It is divided into particular Provinces of, 1. Suſiana, 2. Perſis, 3. Carmania, 4. Ormuz, 5 Gedroſia, 6. Drangiana, 7. Aria, 8. Parthia, 9. Arachoſia, 10. Paropamiſus, 11. Hyrcania, and 12. Margiana. Which we will ſeverally ſurvey in the Chorography and ſtory, till we have joyned them altogether in the Perſian Monarchy; and then purſue the hiſtory as conjunct and faſhioned into the body of one Empire.

1. SUSIANA.

SUSIANA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Perſis; on the Weſt, with Babylonia, or Chaldæa; on the North, with Aſſyria; on the South, with a branch of the River Tygris, and ſome part of the Gulfe of Perſia.

It was ſo called, quaſi Cuſiana, or the Land of the Chuſites, from Chus the eldeſt ſon of Ham, and the Grand-ſon of Noah; by whoſe Son Havilah it was firſt peopled; and therefore called in Scripture the land of Havilah: this being that land of Havilah which the River Piſon is ſaid to incompaſs, in the book of Geneſis. The difference betwixt them is, that that land of Havilah lay on both ſides of the River Euphrates (which the Countrey of Suſiana doth not) and was the Eaſtern bound of the Iſmaelites, Amalekites, and other Nations intermingled in thoſe parts of Arabia. For whereas Saul is ſaid in the firſt of Sam. chap. 15. ver. 7. to have ſmitten the Amalekites from Sur to Havilah, that is to ſay, from the Red Sea to the gulf of Perſia: it muſt be underſtood of Havilah in the firſt extent; but neither of Havilah in the Eaſt Indies (ſo called from a Son of Jocktan) or of that part of Havilah which lay on the Eaſt ſide of Euphrates, and is that Suſiana, in which now we are: it being no where found that Saul was ſo great a Traveller as to ſee the Indies; or of ſuch puiſſance as to force a paſſage thorow the Countreys of the Chaldeans and Babylonians. But the name of Havilah being loſt, that of Cuſiana or Suſiana did ſtill remain; preſerved to this day in that of Chuſeſtan, by which now called.

Suſiana.

The Countrey memorable in the Scriptures for Gold, Bdellium, and the Onyx ſtone; which doth abundantly ſet forth the richneſs and commodities of it: Bdellium being a Tree (for of the other two nothing need be ſaid) about the bigneſs of an Olive, yielding a certain Gum, very ſweet to ſmell to, but bitter of taſte; which in time hardneth to a Pearl, as Eugubinus and Beroaldus have delivered to us.

Divided antiently into many particular Regions, or at leaſt known by ſeverall names in its ſeverall quarters. For where it bordered upon Tigris, it was called Melitene; Cabandone, where it touched upon Perſis; where it confined on the Elymeans, it had the name of Ciſsia; and neer the wall or Ditch called Vallum Paſini, it was called Characene. Watered beſide Eulæus, and Tigris before ſpoken of, with the Rivers Orontes, and Maſæus; with that branch of the River Tigris which Ptolomy called Baſilæus; Curtius, Paſi-Tigris; and the Scriptures, Piſon.

Chief Cities hereof, 1. Aracca, ſpoken of by Ptolomy, the ſame which the Scriptures call Erech, and one of the four which Nimrod built in the firſt beginning of his Empire, Gen. 11. Remembred by Tibullus for the fountains of Naphtah (of which the Medians made their oyl, ſpoken of before) a bituminous liquor, eaſily taking fire, but not eaſily quenched. Of which thus the Poet.

Audet Areccæis aut unda per hoſpita Campis.

Whereby unda perhoſpita, he meaneth that bituminous liquor called Napthta, iſſuing from the fields of Erech, as the learned Salmaſius hath obſerved in his notes on Solinus. 2. Suſa, the Shuſan of the Book of Heſter, and Nehemiah; honoured with the reſidence of the Perſian Monarchs in winter, as Ecbatana in Summer. Scituate on the River Eulæus, by the Prophet Daniel called Vlai. Built, as ſome ſay, by Memnon the ſon of Tithonus, ſlain by the Theſſalans in the Trojan wars: the walls whereof, as Caſſiodorus hath reported, cemented with Gold. But howſoever, it was, doubtleſs, a magnificent City, and of infinite wealth: Alexander finding in it 50000 Talents of gold uncoined, beſides Silver wedges, and Jewels of ineſtimable value. Memorable for the great feaſt here made by Ahaſuerus, of 183 days continuance, for his Lords and Princes: imitated by the Perſian Sultans to this very day; who with a Royall Feaſt of the like continuance, do annually entertain their Nobles. Now nothing but a ruine, and perhaps not that. 3. Elymais, the chief City of the Elimai, by Ptolomy (unleſs his Copies be corrupted) miſtakingly called Eldimai. Scituate on the banks of Eulæus alſo, neer the border of Perſis (the Nation of the Elamites or Elymai taking part of both Provinces.) Of great note antiently for a ſumptuous Temple of Diana, ſacrilegiouſly ranſacked by Antiochus, of which ſee 1 Mac. 6. 2. and of ſuch wealth, by reaſon of the concourſe of Pilgrims thither, that Severus Sulpitius calleth it Oppidum opulantiſſimum, a moſt opulent City. 4. Sela, on the banks of Elæus alſo, reckoned by Ammianus amongſt the moſt eminent of this Province; ſo named from Selah, the ſon of Arphaxad, who firſt planted there. To whom the building of the City of Suſa is aſcribed by Euſtathius, in his Hexameron, Σαλὰ ἀφ᾽ ȣ̃ Σȣσιάνοι, are that Authors words; perhaps more truly than to Memnon: and unto whom the Originall of the Coſſai, whom Ptolomy placeth in this tract, is referred by Euſebius. 5. Tarſiana, another of the Cities mentioned by Ammianus (who takes notice onely of the chiefeſt) the ſame no doubt which Ptolomy calls Tiriana, and joyns next to Sela. 6. Agra, upon the banks of Tigris, not far from Erech. But there is little left of theſe, but what is to be found in the antient Writers, now hardly viſible in their ruines. The Towns of moſt note now remaining, being 1. Jaaroone, inhabited for the moſt part by Jewes, of which here are no fewer than a thouſand Families; ſuppoſed to be the deſcendants of thoſe whom Salmanaſſar tranſplanted out of the Kingdom of Iſrael. 8. Saum. 9. Caſa, of which little memorable.

The firſt Inhabitants hereof were the Chuſites, of the houſe of Havilah, the ſon of Chus; the Coſſai and the Suſiani deſcended from Sala the ſon of Arphaxad; and the Elymai, the poſterity of Elam the Son of Sem. Betwixt the two laſt Nations long and frequent wars; till the Kings of Babylon or Aſſyria compoſed the differences, by making both ſubject to their Empire. After this, nothing memorable in the ſtory of it, till the tranſplanting of the ten Tribes into the Regions of Aſſyria, and the Cities of Media. At which time, as many of the Iſraelites were removed hither; ſo many of this Nation were ſent out (with others) to poſſeſs themſelves of the void places of thoſe Tribes. Called Cutbeans by the Jews, becauſe the moſt conſiderable number of them came from this Province, called in the Scriptures Cuſh, by Joſephus Cutha; and by him reckoned for a Region of Perſia, as indeed it was, the time wherein he lived conſidered; different onely in the Dialect or form of ſpeech; that Countrey which the Hebrews called Chus, being named Cuth by the Chaldæans; by the Perſians, Chuzeſtan: that name continuing to this day.

2. PERSIS.

PERSIS hath on the Eaſt, Carmania; on the Weſt, Suſiana; on the North, Media; and on the South, ſome part of the Perſian Bay or Sinus Perſicus, which took name from hence. The reaſon of the name we have had before; this being the predominant Province which in fine gave both name and Law to the reſt of this Empire. It had antiently been called Cephene, but now moſt commonly by the name of Fars, or Farſiſtan; more neer to Pharas, the old name of it, both in the Arabick and Hebrew.

Such

Perſis. Such parts hereof as lie towards the North are cold and hilly, not apt to bear either fruit or corn in any plenty. Some Emeralds they find there, but not very cleer. Thoſe parts which lie towards the Perſian Gulf, of as bad a nature, though of different quality, ſandy, and hot, and beareth little fruit, but Dates, and few trees, but Palms. But betwixt both, there lyeth a rich and pleaſant Countrey, abounding with Corn, Fruit, and Cattell; great ſtore of Roſes, of Roſe-water conſequently: wherewith and with thoſe skins which we call commonly by the name of Cordovans from another occaſion, they uſe to furniſh all the adjoyning Provinces. And to make up the Character of a happy Countrey, to which nothing wanteth, it is well ſtored with Lakes and Rivers; the chief whereof are, 1. Bagradas, which divideth this Province from Carmania. 2. Rhogomanes, by ſome called Araxes, now Bindimir, on whoſe banks ſtood the renowned Perſepolis. 3. Orontes, dividing Perſis from Suſiana, where it falls into the Bay. 4. Briſoana, ending its courſe in the ſame Sea alſo.

Mountains of note I finde not any, but thoſe which part this Region from Suſiana. Not known by any ſpeciall name (for ought I can find;) but of ſufficient note for the difficult paſſages out of one Countrey into the other, called Pylæ Perſidis, defended by Ariobarzanes, a Noble Perſian, againſt Alexander the Great, who was here very handſomely beaten, and forced to ſave himſelf by a cloſe retreat. And though Alexander was ſhewed a By-path afterwards, whereby he fell on Ariobarzanes ere he was aware: yet he was taught by this hard leſſon, that if thoſe who kept the ſtraits of Cilicia, and the banks of Tigris and Euphrates, had made like reſiſtance, he had not bought the Perſian Monarchy in ſo cheap a Market.

It was divided antiently into Paraticine, bordering on Media. 2. Mardiene, joyning on the Gulf or Bay of Perſia. 3. Miſnia, lying betwixt both. Each of which, with the ſeverall Nations intermingled here as in other places, had their ſeverall Cities. The chief whereof, 1. Auſinza, ſeated on the Bay betwixt the mouths of Bagradas, and Briſoana. 2. Jonacapolis, on the ſame Bay alſo, neer the influx of Rhogomanes, or Araxes. 3. Axima, more within the land, now called Lanſilla. 4. Marraſium: 5. Obroatis, or Orebatis, as ſome Copies have it. 6. Paſarracha, in the Greek text of Ptolomy called Paſacgada, and Paſagrada, by Qu. Curtius. Memorable for the Sepulchre of Cyrus the firſt Perſian Monarch. Which violated by a Souldier of Alexanders, in hope of finding ſome rich booty, he met with nothing but this modeſt inſcription, Cyrus ego ſum qui Perſicum regnum conſtitui: quicunque ades mortalium, ne mihi tantillum telluris invideas, qua corpus meum obtegitur. The ſacrilegious Souldier, though a Macedonian, put to death by Alexander. 7. Perſepolis, the chief City of this Province, and of all the Eaſt, called therefore Regia Orientis, by Qu. Curtius, ſcituate neer the banks of the River Araxes, and built, for the moſt part, of Cypreſs wood, the walls of the houſes being made of Marble, digged out of an adjoyning Mountain. Affirmed by Diodorus Siculus, who at large deſcribes it, to be the richeſt and goodlieſt City in all the world. And well we may believe him for the richneſs of it, Alexander finding here 120000 Talents, in ready mony, for his own ſhare, after the Souldiers had made what ſpoil they liſted, of coin, Plate, Bullion, Images of Gold and Silver, and Jewels of unſpeakable value. But the chief beauty of it was the Royall Palace, built on an Hill, invironed with a treble Wall, the firſt of 16 Cubits height; the ſecond of 30. and third of 60. all of them of black poliſhed Marble, with ſtately Battlements, and in the Circuit of the whole Palace an hundred Turrets, which gave to the beholders far and neer a moſt goodly proſpect. Nor was the inſide of leſs beauty, than the outſide of Majeſty: the Roof thereof ſhining with Ivory, Silver, Gold, and Amber; and the Kings Throne being wholly compoſed of Gold, and the richeſt Pearls. But rich and ſtately though it were, and one of the greateſt Ornaments of the Eaſtern world, it was by Alexander in a drunken fit conſumed with fire, at the inſtigation of Lais that infamous ſtrumpet, as in revenge of ſo many Cities of the Greeks, which the Perſians had formerly burnt in the Grecian wars. And though Alexander in his ſober ſenſe did repent him of it, and gave order that it ſhould be re-edefied, yet did it never riſe to its former height: the Conquerour dying ſhortly after, and that purpoſe with him. So ruined in the age of Qu. Curtius, (who lived in the time of Claudius Cæſar,) that he profeſſeth, veſtigium ejus non inveniri niſi Araxes amnis oſtenderet, that no footſteps of it had been found, if not ſhewn and pointed out by the River Araxes, on whoſe banks it ſtood. But by the fall thereof roſe, 8. Shyras, now the chief City of this Province, ſcituate in a fair large plain hemmed about with mountains, under one of which it is pleaſantly ſeated; in compaſs about nine miles, well built and beautified with fair Gardens and magnificent Moſques: two of which larger than the reſt, are made more eminent by the addition of two Spires or Steeples covered with a painting of Gold and Azure; the fabricks for the moſt part of Moſaick work, as light alſo by night as day, by reaſon of a thouſand Lamps burning nightly in them. A City (as is ſaid by a modern Traveller) which for good wine, pretty women, pleaſant fruits, and a gallant People, may hold compariſon with the beſt in Perſia. 9: Moyown, on the North-eaſt of Shyras, delightfully ſcituate amongſt woods and fruitfull paſtures, and bleſſed not onely with good wine, but wholſome waters; of which laſt, few parts of Perſia have much cauſe to brag. 10. Bannaraw, on the South-weſt of Shyras, towards Carmania, chiefly remarkable for the ruines of an ancient Caſtle, ſcituate on the top of a lofty Mountain.. 11. Goyaam, a Town of a thouſand houſes. 12. Berry, of no great bigneſs, but of moſt eſteem, by reaſon of a fair Moſque, a School for the Arabick tongue, and the Sepulchre of one of their falſe prophets; of which the Perſians, beſides Mahomet, and Mortis-Ali, do acknowledge many.

The firſt Inhabitants here were of the poſterity of Elam the ſon of Sem, and ſuch who under his conduct were ſetled here; called from hence Elamites in the uſuall ſtile of holy Scriptures, by the Greeks and Latines, Elymai: who ſpreading themſelves into Suſiana, and by degrees alſo into other Provinces, became ſo conſiderable, that the name of Elamite and Elam were of great renown: having a language to themſelves diſtinct from that of the Medes and Parthians, as is apparent, Acts 2. and comprehending under that appellation, the adjoyning Regions, as appears plainly in the eighth of the Prophet Daniel, here Suſa is ſaid to be in the Province of Elam. How the name was changed into that of Perſia, hath een ſhewn before. Such as continued in this Province, divided into the Tribes of the Meſabatæ, apſii, Hippophagi, Suzai, Megores, and Stabai, were at firſt under the command of their own Prin-es onely: amongſt which Cherdorlaomer is of greateſt fame, who having the conduct of ſome Adventu-rs of this Nation, aſſociated himſelf with Amramphel the Leader of ſome Aſſyrian Troops: and by the ame of the Kings of Elam and Aſſyria invaded Paleſtine, ſubdued the City of Sodom, took Lot priſo-er, and in the end were overthrown by the forces of Abraham. Of no note after this expedition, till e time of Perſes the Father of Achamenes, who being Provinciall Governor of theſe Countreys under ardanapalus, joyned with Arbaces and Belochus in the war againſt him: and by the victory, got for imſelf the dominion over thoſe eſtates, which he had formerly ruled for the Aſſyrians, with reference o the Kings of Media as the Supreme Lords. Whoſe Succeſſors till the time of Cyrus, take in order hus.

where

Carmania.

The Kings of Perſis..

1. Perſes, from whom perhaps the name of Perſis may be more properly derived, than either from Perſeus the ſon of Danae; or the ſon of that Perſeus by Andromeda.
2. Achæmenes, from whom the Perſians had the name of Achemanii, and the ſucceeding Kings were called Achamenides.
3. Cambyſes, in ſome places of Herodotus called alſo Darius.
4. Cyrus, from whoſe ſecond ſon named Teiſpeus, deſcended that Darius, the ſon of Hyſtaſpis, one of the ſeven Perſian Princes, who got the Kingdom on the expiration of the preſent Line, and the extirpation of the Magi; of which more hereafter.
5. Cambyſes II. the ſon of Cyrus.
6. Cyrus II. ſirnamed the Great, ſon of Cambyſes, and of Mandane the daughter of Aſtyages, King of Media: who joyning with Cyaxares, or Darius Medus, overthrew the Babylonian Empire; and tranſlated thereby the Supreme power to the Medes and Perſians. Of which more hereafter.

CARMANIA.

CARMANIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Gedroſia, and ſome part of Aria; on the Weſt, with part of Perſis, and the Gulf of Perſia, from hence called alſo by the name of Sinus Carmanicus, on the North, with Parthia, and on the South, with the main Indian Ocean. So called from the Carmani, a chief people of it: but the reaſon of that name I find not. It is now generally called Chyrman; thoſe parts of it which lie next to Parthia, which Ptolomy calleth Carmania Deſerta, being now named Mingia, and by ſome Dulcinde.

The Country for the moſt part barren, and but ill inhabited. That part which Ptolomy calleth Carmania Deſerta, being truly ſuch; a wilderneſs or very Deſart, having in it neither Town nor Village, but ſome ſcattered houſes, and thoſe but ill provided of food and neceſſaries; full of unprofitable Sands, deſtitute of Water, and of a very hot and unhealthy air. And though the other part hereof which lyeth towards the Ocean, hath a Sea-coaſt of above 200 Leagues in length, and many Rivers emptying themſelves into it, yet are they not the richer by it: the ſhores being full of Rocks, and the Rivers ſmall, ſo that they neither have good Port, nor ſafe coming to it. The beſt Commodities hereof (beſides their Manufactures) are Dates, Myrrhe, Arſenic, ſome few Mines of Silver, more of Braſs and Iron, and good ſtore of Alabaſter. In which regard the Inhabitants hereof were anciently called Ichthyophagi, becauſe they lived wholly upon Fiſh, the Country yielding little elſe for the life of man. Carmani ſine veſte ac fruge, ſine pecore ac ſedibus, piſcium cute ſe velant, carne neſcuntur, præter capita toto corpore hirſuti. The Carmans (ſaith Pomponius Mela) have neither fruits, nor rayment, nor houſes, nor cattel; but cloath themſelves with the skins, and feed themſelves with the fleſh of Fiſhes; hairy not only on their heads, but over all their bodies alſo. Where by the way, Ammianus Marcellinus muſt be out in his Informations, who telleth us of theſe very Carmans, that their Country, though far leſs than that of Arabia Felix, and far more obſcure, was as well repleniſhed with Rivers, and for fertility of ſoyl not inferior to it. But we muſt underſtand the one of the beſt parts of Carmania; the other of Deſerta only.

Amongſt the Rivers which he reckoneth of greater name than the reſt, he mentioneth, 1. Saganis, 2. Sagareus, and 3. Hydriacus. Of which Saganis only is named by Ptolomy, the other Rivers or the ſame under divers names, being 1. Dara, 2. Andanius, 3. Cathrappis, 4. Achindana, 5. Salarus (the Sagareus as I take it of Ammianus) 6. Caudriaces, 7. Zoramba, and 8. Samidace, moſt of them falling into the Gulf of Perſia, few Navigable, or of any uſe in the way of Trading.

Mountains of moſt note, 1. that called Semiramis, from ſome exploit of that great Lady. 2. Strongelus, ſo named from the roundneſs of it; and 3. a continued ridge of hills, dividing this Countrey from Gedroſia.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Cantharis, 2. Agris, 3. Tiſa, honoured by Ptolomy with the names of Cities. 4. Cyrza, and 5. Gocharta, two Port-Towns. 6. Alexandria, bearing the name of that great Conquerour, who here or hereabouts kept his Bacchanalia, whereof more anon. 7. Portoſpana, by Ammianus called Ortoſpana, and by him reckoned amongſt the faireſt and richeſt of all the Country. 8. Armuza, (or Armuzium as Pliny calleth it,) on the ſhore of the Gulf, giving name to a Promontory neer-adjoyning, and to the Noble Iſle of Ormus, of which more anon. 9. Gunbroone, Carmania.

not long ſince a poor village; but ſince the fall of Ormus (from which not above nine miles diſtant) grown a populous Town, conſiſting at the leaſt of a thouſand houſes. 10. Jaſques, at the opening of the Perſian Gulf into which it looketh, whence the Promontory of it, called Carpella, is of late named Capo Jaſques. 11. Carmania, the Metropolis or mother City of the Province, in former times of good eſteem, and now of paſſing good repute both for cloth of gold, and the making of the beſt Scimatars. A weapon of ſuch value amongſt the Mahometans, and ſo eſteemed of by the Turks, that at the overthrow of their Navy at the battle of Corfu, Anno 1574. moſt of them who were taken priſoners, threw their Scimatars into the Sea, for fear the Chriſtians ſhould be maſters of ſuch excellent weapons. It is now called Chyrman, by the name of the Province, as in former times; with very little difference from the ancient name. 12. Lar, more within the land towards Perſis, ſeated in a barren and inhoſpitable Country, full of huge heaps of ſands, both looſe and dangerous, moved and removed as the wind ſitteth, into plains and Mountains: without graſs, water, herbs, or any other neceſſary for the uſe of Travellers; the City being ſerved with rain-water only, entertained with great joy when it falleth, and kept in ciſterns. The City notwithſtanding large, and of good capacity, containing not long ſince to the number of 5000 houſes; of which the greateſt part, in the year 1590. were thrown down by an Earthquake: now moſt remarkable for a fair Market-place of about 180 paces ſquare; a goodly Moſque, adorned with Moſaick work, and a ſtrong Caſtle ſeated on the top of an hill, furniſhed with great plenty of Ordnance brought hither from Ormus. This once a Kingdome of it ſelf, or the head City of a Kingdome, acknowledging no ſubjection to the Perſian Sophies, till conquered to that Crown by Emangoli Chawn Duke of Shyras, who ſent hence as much treaſure as was ſaid to load 700 Camels, and put to death the poor King with his whole poſterity, Anno 1604. or thereabouts. 13. Tecoa, or Deachow, a Town of the juriſdiction of Lar, not farre from that which is a huge wall cut out of the ſolid rock by incredible labour; which ſerved formerly both for the boundary and defence of that ſandy Kingdome againſt the Perſians.

The antient Inhabitants hereof were the poſterity of Sabta, the ſon of Chus, who wanting room on the coaſt of Arabia Felix, where they were firſt planted, paſſed over into Sophta (from them ſo named) an Iſland of the Perſian Gulf; and afterwards into the main land of Carmania, where they built and gave name to the City of Sabis, which we find in Ptolomy. Divided in ſome tract of time into the ſeveral Nations of the Sazotæ, Aræ, Charadra, Chelonophagi, Cabadinæ, and Paſagardæ.

Neither the People nor the Countrey memorable in the way of ſtory; but by Accident onely: it being here, that Alexander being returned out of India, kept his Bacchanalia, in imitation of Bacchus, who firſt conquered that Nation. Night and day he was continually feaſting with his friends, on a ſcaffold drawn with eight horſes; his Companions following in their Chariots: ſome adorned with Purple and Silk, others with Flowers and green Boughs; themſelves wearing Garlands on their heads, and carrying their carrowſing Cups in their hands. In this Army there was neither Helmet, Sword, Arrow, or Buckler ſeen: all their Armour was Cups, Barrels, and Flaggons; their Skirmiſhing Eating, Drinking, Laughing, and Singing. Attended they were by Minſtrells, playing on their Fluits; by Women, dancing; Boyes, ſhouting; all playing the drunken Fools moſt naturally. Thus march they through the Countrey of Carmania, in as great diſſoluteneſs, as if BACCHUS himſelf had indeed been there, and led the Mummery; and for ſeven whole days this ſottiſhneſs continued. So that Curtius well obſerveth, Si quid victis ſaltem adverſus comeſſantes animi fuiſſet, mille hercule viri, modò & ſobrii, ſeptem dierem crapula graves in ſuo triumpho capere potuerunt: a thouſand Perſians, ſober and well provided, had their hearts been anſwerable to ſo good an opportunity, might have deſtroyed this drunken Army, and redeemed at once the honour of their Countrey, and their own liberty.

4. ORMUS.

ORMUS, not ſo much memorable for the greatneſs, as the wealth, and the conveniency of the ſcituation of it, is an Iſland ſcituate in the entrance of the Perſian Gulf: commanding not long ſince over ſome part of the Continent of Carmania, and ſome few Towns of Arabia Felix, and moſt of the Iſlands of the Bay. And therefore before we come to ſpeak of the Iſle it ſelf, we muſt take a brief ſurvey of the Sea or Bay called Sinus Perſicus, according to our method in other places.

SINUS PERSICUS, the Gulf or Bay of Perſia, ſo famous, ſo full of Iſlands, and ſo much frequented (I uſe the words of Ammianus Marcellinus) beginneth at Harmozonta, (the name which Ptolomy calls Armuza) a Cape or promontory of Carmania: from which unto a Cape or foreland of Arabia Felix, which the Inhabitants call Maces, the paſſage is ſo ſtrait and narrow, that one may very eaſily ſee to the oppoſite ſhore. The Strait once paſſed, the Bay beginneth to open and inlarge it ſelf, as far as the City of Teredon (now called Balſora) where Euphrates after many downfalls is loſt in the Sea. The whole Gulf meaſured by the ſhores, of Orbicular form, in compaſs 20000 Furlongs, (or 2500 Italian miles) in all the coaſts and ſides whereof the Villages and Towns ſtand exceeding thick, affording frequent paſſage to and fro for ſhipping. So farre, and to this purpoſe he. To which deſcription of his, ſo exact and punctual, our late Navigations have not added much, but the change of names: the whole Bay being now called Mare Elkariffe, and the entrances thereunto the Streits of Balſora; theſe laſt ſo called becauſe they opened the way to the Town of Balſora, the moſt noted Empory of thoſe parts in the times foregoing.

Chief Iſles hereof, beſides thoſe on the Arabian ſhore, of which we have already ſpoken, are, 1.

Taxiana, on the coaſt of Suſiana. 2. Tabiana. 3. Sopthiba, and 4. Alexandri, or the Iſle of Alexander, on the ſhores of Perſis. Of which that which is called Sopthiba, ſeems to take name from Sabta the Son of Chus, planted upon the oppoſite ſhore of Arabia Felix; and therein giving name to the City of Sapkta, which we finde in Ptolomy: And finally joining to Carmania, there are the Iſlands called 5. Sagdana, the chief Town whereof was antiently named Miltus; and 6. Vorochtha, ſcituate at the very mouth of the Straits, now called ORMUS, by the name of the Town and Promontory of Armuza, in Carmania, near adjoyning to it, and unto which it did in former times belong.

Gedroſia.

The Iſland ſcituate as is ſaid at the mouth of the Gulf or Bay of Perſia, is in compaſs about 20 miles, ſtony, and full of rocks, in a manner barren of all neceſſaries except ſalt, wherewith their very Rocks are covered, and of ſalt-ſtones many houſes built. So deſtitute of all things fitting for the life of man, that the Inhabitants had all their victuals, even the very water which they drank, from ſome of the adjoyning Countries. The air is ſo hot in time of Summer, that the people reſt themſelves in caves, covered over with wood, where they ſtand or ſit in water up to the chin; and have loop-holes in the tops of their houſes to let in the wind. Which notwithſtanding, in regard of the ſcituation, it was of late one of the richeſt Empories in all the world, the wealth of Perſia and Eaſt-India being brought hither, and conveyed hence up by water to the River Euphrates, and ſo by boats or on camels backs, to Aleppo, Alexandretta, Tripolis; from whence diſperſed into all the Countreys on the Mediterranean, and to ſome beyond.

The people hereof in their perſons, habit, and Religion, participate ſomewhat of the Arabians, but moſt of the Perſians. Mahometans for the moſt part, or the Sophian Sect: the reſt, but few in number, of the Chriſtian faith; to which converted by the preachings of Father Gaſper, a Portugal Jeſuite, ſince the ſetling of that Nation there.

The chief and onely City was of the ſame name with the Iſland, founded ſome ſeven hundred years ago by one Mahomet Dranku, deſcended from the King of Saba, in Arabia Felix: who with many families of the Sabaans, paſſed over the Straits into Carmania, and the Iſles adjoyning, and liking the ſcituation of this Iſland, built this City in it; which he called Ormus, or Armuzium; according to the name of the Town and Promontory upon which it lieth, The City ſeated at one end of the Iſle, about two miles in compaſs; well built and adorned with a fair market-place, ſome Churches, and a well-fortified Caſtle furniſhed with all neceſſaries to maintain a Siege. By reaſon of its wealth and reſort of Merchants, grown to ſuch eſteem, that it gave occaſion to this Diſtick,

Si terrarum Orbis quaqua patet annulus eſſet,
Illius Ormuſium gemma decuſque foret.

That is to ſay,
Were all the World a Ring, this Iſle alone
Might of that Ring be thought to be the Stone.

It was firſt under its own King, whoſe dominion extended alſo into ſome part of the Continent on either ſide, and over all the reſt of the Iſlands within the Gulf. His Revenue of no great yearly value till the coming of the Portugals hither, by whom it was diſcovered under the conduct of Albukerque, anno 1506. Who having fortified ſome part of it for their own defence, and made it the Staple of their trade for the Indian Merchandiſe, ſo enriched the ſame, that the Revenue of thoſe Kings (though Vaſſals and Tributaries to the Portugals) amounted to 140000 Seriffs yearly. In this flouriſhing ſtate it ſtood till the year 1622. when Abas the Sultan of Perſia having received ſome affront at the hands of the Portugueze; or deſirous to remove the trade of Ormuz, to ſome Port of his own; gave order to Emangoly Chawn, the Duke of Shiras, to lay ſiege unto it, with an Army of 15000 men. Who ſeeing no hopes of maſtering it by his land-forces onely, furniſhed himſelf with the Ships and Cannon of ſome Engliſh Merchants, to whom he promiſed many things which he never performed. For being once maſter of the City he deſtroyed it utterly, removing the Ordnance to Lar, the wealth thereof to his own treaſury of Shiras, the materials of the houſes to Gambroon ſpoken of before: the Portugueze, and Chriſtian natives paſſing over unto Muskabat, in Arabia Felix. Since which time though the Engliſh Captains that adventured in it were diſappointed of the ſpoil which they did expect; yet ſo much honour hath been given by the King of Perſia to the Engliſh Nation, that their Agent who reſideth at Gambroon takes Cuſtome of all ſtrangers which do traffick thither.

5. GEDROSIA.

GEDROSIA is bounded on the Weſt, with Carmania; on the Eaſt, with Cambaia or Guzarat, a Province of India; on the South, with the main Indian Ocean; on the North, with Drangiana, and Aarachoſia.. The reaſon of the name I finde not. Now by Mercator, called Geſt; by Caſtaldus, Circan.

The Countrey deſolate and barren; like the worſt part of Carmania, much deſtitute of freſh water, and covered over with looſe ſands, dangerous to the native and ſtranger both. Some rain they have, but not ſufficient to allay the heat and drough which they ſuffer under; and yet by reaſon of that heat it affordeth in ſome places Nard and Myrrhe, with ſome other ſpices. Some Brooks here are, or rather Torrents, which falling from the hills do ſomewhat qualifie the indiſpoſition of the ſoyl, and make it habitable, The chief of which was called Arbius antiently; the chief Mountain, Batius.

Towns of moſt note in it, 1. Rhagiana, honoured by Ptolomy with the name of a City; and 2. a Port or Harbor called Mulierum portus, or the Haven of women. 3. Arbis, upon the banks of the Drangiana. River Arbius, preſented to us alſo by the name of a City. 4. Muſarna, the chief of the Muſarnæ, a chief tribe of this Countrey. 5. Parſis, or rather Eaſis, as the Greek text hath it, the Metropolis of the whole Province in the time of Ptolomy. 6. Geſt, the chief City at the preſent; but for nothing memorable.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Naſarnæ bordering on Arachoſia, the Parſiræ towards Carmania, the Rhamnæ on the borders of India, and the Orbitæ, or Arbituri, on the ſhores of the Ocean. The Countrey of no note in preceding times, till made famous by the follies of Alexander. Who finding by the hard bout which he had with Porus, that there was little hopes of the Conqueſt of India, would needs make a fruitleſs voyage to ſee the Ocean. And having ſatisfied himſelf with the ſight of that furious Element (as if his very ſeeing it had ſufficiently ſubdued it to him) landed his Army on this coaſt. Where in his march, for want of victuals, water, and other neceſſaries, he loſt more men in the vaſt and uncomfortable Deſarts of this Countrey, than in all the military ſervices he had put them to: the Army which he carried with him into India, amounting to 15000 Horſe, and 120000 Foot; whereof hardly the fourth part came back to Babylon. So dearly did he pay for his indiſcretion.

6. DRANGIANA.

DRANGIANA hath on the South, Gedroſia; on the North, and Weſt, bounded with Aria; on the Eaſt, with Arachoſia. So called from Drangius, now Ilment, the chief River of it; the modern name thereof being Sigeſtan, from Sige, the now principal City.

The Countrey very hilly, and ſo cloſed with Monntains, that the River above-named is ſcarce able to force its paſſage thorow them. Of no great beauty to invite, or reward a Conqueror, yet with the reſt, brought under the great Perſian Monarchs; the fortunes of which Crown they have alwaies followed. So meanly planted, that Ptolomy findeth in it but ten Towns of note: the chief whereof, 1. Ariaſpe, miſtook perhaps for Agriaſpe; and if ſo, then the mother-City of the Agriaſpæ, whom Curtius placeth in this Tract. 2. Propthaſia, by ſome of the Antients called Phradag, the Metropolis of this poor Province: much boaſted of by the old Inhabitants hereof who had ſeen no better, (as Countrey-villagers uſe to brag of the next Market-Town) and ſaid by Ammianus to be rich, and of high renown, the quality of the place conſidered. Still of ſome note amongſt the Natives, by whom called Siſtan. 3. Arivada, 4. Pharazana, of which nothing memorable. 5. Sige, now of moſt credit in this Countrey, from hence called Sigeſtan, 6. Tim cani. 7. Mulebet, the chief ſeat of the Kingdom of Aledine, or Aleadine, who had here a Fools-paradiſe of his own; of which more anon.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Batrii, and the Darandæ, from which laſt, the greateſt of the two, the Countrey might perhaps be called originally Darandiana; abbreviated to Drandiana; and at laſt corrupted eaſily into Drangiana But I offer this onely as conjectural. They were called alſo by ſome Writers by the name of Arabians, and that, as Ammianus thinks, becauſe they deſcended from that people; but I think rather from a branch of the River Arabius, which parteth this Countrey from Gedroſia. For I conceive the Arabians were too wiſe, to forſake their own Countrey, and go ſo far, to get ſo little by the bargain. Together with the reſt of the Perſian Provinces, ſubdued by Alexander; who being in this Countrey, hapned on the diſcovery of the treaſon intended againſt him by Philotas the Son of Parmenio, the moſt renowned of all his Captains. After this little memorable till theſe later days, when it grew famous by means of Aladine a ſeditious Perſian, Lord of the valley of Mulebet, ſpoken of before; who there made a terreſtrial paradiſe, which he promiſed to all his Partizans: but the company growing too great for the ſafety of the Kingdom, they were quickly diſperſed; and Aladins, with his Fools-paradiſe, both, taken away together, Anno 1262. Some attribute this fiction of Paradiſe to Aladeules, the Mountain King of Taurus; vanquiſhed by Selim the firſt. The whole ſtory is this, out of Paulus Venetus. Aladine inhabited a valley in this Countrey, the entrance into which he fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle called Tigadi. Hither he brought all the luſty youths and beautifull maidens of the adjoyning Provinces. The women were confined to their chambers, the men to priſon; where having endured much ſorrow, they were ſeverally caſt into dead ſleeps, and conveyed to the women; by whom they were entertain'd with all the pleaſures, youth and luſt could deſire, or a ſenſual minde affect. Having injoyed this happineſs a whole day, they were in a like ſleep conveyed to their irons. Then would Aladine inform them how they had been in Paradiſe, and that he could ſeat them there eternally, if they durſt hazard themſelves in his quarrels. This when they had ſworn to do, they were deſtinated to the maſſacre of ſuch Princes as were like to prove his bad neighbours: and they accordingly did execution. But neither he, nor Aladeules, were the firſt who trained up their followers in the Arts of murder. One there was before either of them, whom the Writers of thoſe times call the Old man of the Mountains, inhabiting the mountainous parts of Tyre and Sidon; and from thence ſending his Diſciple, on the like Temptations, to make away the Weſtern Princes whom he ſtood in fear of, during the courſe of the Holy Wars. For out of his School came thoſe Wretches who murdered the Count of Tripolis, being in the Church at his Devotions; and deſperately ſlew Conrade Marqueſs of Montferrat, walking openly in the Market-place at Tyre; and with like careleſneſs of their own lives, dangerouſly wounded Prince Edward (after King of England) ſitting in his Tent. Theſe the Italians call Aſſaſſines, (whence the word to Aſſaſſinate) intimating thereby a deſperate Cut-throat, but the reaſon of that name is not yet agreed on: miſtakingly by ſome Latine Writers of the darker times, called Arſacidæ, and their commander Rex Arſacidarum; as if deſcended from Arſaces, the founder of the Arſacidan race of the Kings of Perſia.

7. ARACHO-

Arachoſia. and Parapomiſus

7. ARACHOSIA.

ARACHOSIA hath on the Weſt, Drangiana; on the Eaſt, the great River Indus; on the South, Gedroſia, and Parapomiſus, on the North. So called from Arachoſia, the cheif City of it; but now beſt known by the name of Cabul, the name of the chief City at this preſent.

Of the Country I finde little ſpoken, but that it is watered with a branch of the River Indus, or rather with ſome nameleſſe River which falleth into it. By the overflowings wherof is made a Lake, which Ammianus calleth Arachotoſcrene, by Ptolomy called Arachotos; after the name of Arachotos the chief Town of it, neer unto which it is.

Towns here were once thirteen, whoſe names and ſcituation we finde in Ptolomy; but little or nothing of them in other Writers. The principall, 1. Arachotos, on the Lake ſo named, ſaid to be built by Semiramis in her march towards India, and by her to have been named Cephene. 2. Alexandria, or (for diſtinctions ſake) Alexandria Arachoſia, the work of Alexander the Great in his like march againſt the Indians: built at the foot of one of the branches of Mount Taurus, ſhooting towards the South, and peopled with a Colony of 7000 old Macedonian Souldiers, foreſpent with age, and with the travel of the wars, whom he left there to in habit it: his Army being here recruited with the forces which had ſerved under Parmenio, conſiſting of 12000 Grecians, and Macedonians. It is now called Cabul, accounted the chief City of it, and in that capacity gives the name of Cabul unto all the Province. 3. Arbaca, ſeeming by the name, to be the work of one Arbaces, but whether of Arbaces the great King of Medes, I am not able to ſay. 4. Choaſpa, near ſome River of that name, as I conjecture; there being beſides Choaſpes, the chief River of Media, another of that name alſo in India, and probably another here abouts, to give name to this Town. 5. Phoclis. 6. Sigara. 7. Dammana, of which I finde nothing but the names. 8. Sin, now a Town of name amongſt them, but not much obſervable,

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Pargyetæ, called alſo Arimaſpe, and Euergete, a powerful Nation of themſelves, brought under the command of Alexander by means of Amenides, ſometimes the Secretary of Darius, whom he made their Governor. And beſides them the Syeri, Rophitæ, and the Eoritæ; which three made up the main body of the Arachoſians, committed by Alexander to the Government and Command of Menon. Following after this the fortunes of the Perſian Empire, they changed their Maſters as that did, till the coming in of the Tartars. Since that time governed, for the moſt part, by a King of their own, eſpecially ſince the dividing of the Kingdome of Perſia amongſt Tamerlanes children: ſome of which held it as a diſtinct eſtate, by the names of the Kings of Cabul; till growing great by the Conqueſt of ſome parts of India, they took unto themſelves the name of the Great Mogul; Now Lords not onely of this Country, but of the greateſt part of India on this ſide of Ganges; of whom we ſhall ſpeak more when we are in India, that being the chief Seat of their Power and Empire.

8. PARAPOMISUS.

PARAPOMISUS is bounded on the South, with Arachoſia; on the North, with Bactria; from which parted by the main body of Mount Taurus, which is here called PARAPOMISUS, by the name of the Country: on the Eaſt, with ſome part of India; on the Weſt, with Aria. So called quaſi Paraponeſus, from the reſemblance which it hath to an Iſland, begirt on all ſides almoſt with Rivers: in which reſpect by Ptolomy called Paropaniſus, and not Parapomiſus; by which laſt name the Latines for the moſt part call it; ſome of them Parapomiſſus, with a double ſſ. But that name being loſt long ſince, it is now by ſome called Daches, by others Candahor, but moſt commonly Sableſtan.

The Countrey mountainous, and hills here and there intermixt with Valleys: the Mountains of great height, and exceeding barren; the Valleys indifferent fruitful, but ſo over-ſhadowed with thoſe hills, that the cleereſt day, in ſome places, ſeems but like a twilight. The people as obſcure as their Countrey, ſcarce known to any of their Neighbors, in the time of Alexander; the barbarous Nations neereſt to them eſteeming them unworthy of their acquaintance. Agreſte hominum genus, & inter Barbaros maxime inconditum, as it is in Curtius.

Rivers of moſt note herein, 1. Oxus, (of which before) which riſing out of Mount Caucaſus, paſſeth Northwards, and afterwards divideth Bactria from Sogdiana. 2. Dargamanis. 3. Coacus, both owing their original to ſome of the branches of Mount Taurus, which chain of hills beginning here a bouts to draw towards their end, are towards the Weſt called Paroetes: where they give being to the river Dargamanis, before named; more Eaſtward they have the name of Parapomiſus; and Caucaſus they are properly called where they are thwarted by Imaus, in the very point, as it were, where Scythia, India, and the Perſian territories do encounter each other. The hills in that place mounted to ſo great an height, that from the tops thereof the Stars appear much greater than in other places; the riſing and ſetting of which are from hence eaſily diſcerned: made memorable by the fable of Prometheus, who is ſaid to have been bound here by command of Jupiter; on which, vinctum Promethea fuiſſe antiquitas tradit, ſaith the Hiſtorian. Prometheus is indeed by the Poets feigned to have ſtoln fire from heaven, and to have made a man of clay: for which preſumptuous fact, Jupiter bound him on the hill Caucaſus; where a Vulture continually fed on his Liver. But according either to the truth of the Story, or their gueſs at leaſt, who make ſome Story the ground of every Fable; Prometheus being a very wiſe man, inſtructed the dead and clayie carcaſſes of others with wiſdome; and that being very deſirous to learn the nature of the Stars, which is the fire he ſtole from heaven) he made the higheſt part of Mount Caucaſus his ſtudy: where the inward care he had to accompliſh his deſire, might juſtly have been compared to a Vulture gnawing on his entrails; and of this opinion is St. Auguſtine. But far more memorable is it made, for being the reſting place of the Ark of Noah, whereof we have alreadie ſpoken in our generall Preface.

Places of moſt conſideration in it. 1. Naulibis, and 2. Ortoſtpana, both named by Ptolomy, and reckoned by Ammianus for the moſt famous of this Country. But in what their fame conſiſted I cannot finde. 3. Parſiana, 4 Gazaca, 5. Daroacana, 6. Bagarda; all named by Ptolomy; but not elſe obſervable, 7. Candahor, now the Metroplis of the Country, a Town of great Trade, by reaſon of the ſcituation of it on the borders of India; in that reſpect giving to the whole Country the name of Candahor. By which name reckoned for a Kingdome, and uſed among the many Titles in the Stile imperiall. Nothing conſiderable of it in the courſe of Story, but that being once brought under by the Perſian Monarchs, it followed the fortune of the reſt, till theſe latter times, when the Perſians being overlaid by the Tartars, it became ſubject to ſome Kings of the race of Tamerlane, reigning in this Province, till brought under by the Kings of Cabul, of the ſame extraction. Finding thoſe Kings intent on the conqueſt of India, they freed themſelves from all ſubjection to that Crown, and had Kings of their own, till the year 1600 or thereabouts; when the laſt King unable to defend themſelves againſt Abduxa, King of the Uſbeques (a Tartarian people, but ſubject, in ſome ſort, to the Crown of Perſia) ſurrendred his Kingdom to Echebar the Great Mogul (deſcended from the old Kings of Cabul) whoſe dominions border cloſe upon it. Recovered to the Perſian Crown by Mirza, the Son of Abas, and Father of Soffie, the now Sultan; a Prince of much gallantry, but of more misfortunes; the Perſian Sophies, ſince that conqueſt, uſing the Title of Kings of Candahor, in the Regal ſtile.

9. ARIA.

ARIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Parapomiſus; on the Weſt, with Parthia; on the North, with Margiana; and on the South, with Drangiana; from which laſt parted by the Mountain Bagoas. A name in old times given to the Province of Media, eſpecially by the Gracians; till changed (as they ſay) into Media, on the coming thither of Medea. For ſo Pauſanias, amongſt others, Παραγενομένη δὲ εἰς τὴν λεγομένην τότε Αρίαν, τοῖς ἀνθρώποις ἔδωκε τὸ ὄνομα καλεῖσθαι Μήδους ἀπ' αὐτῆς, i. e. coming into Country then called Aria, ſhe cauſed it after her own name to be called Media. But the name of Aria was not loſt, though it were removed; remaining proper to this Countrey till theſe latter ages; now changed with little alteration, into that of Eri.

The Country much ſubject unto heats, environed with Deſarts, Heaths, and Foreſts; yet near the mountains, which defend them from the heat of the Sun, they have ſome fruitfull Champaignes; bearing very good fruits, and amongſt others, a ſtrong wine and of long continuance; keeping both taſte and colour above 80 yeares. They have alſo here a Drug ſomewhat like to Myrrhe, and a kind of Saphir, but not right.

Rivers of note I meet with none, but that which Ptolomy calleth Arias, by the name of the Province, making a Lake of the ſame name. The Fountain of which River he maketh to be in Parapomiſus, and the fall thereof in the ſaid Lake: the watters of it firſt increaſed by a nameleſs Streame, falling from the Mountains called Seriphi; being that part of Taurus, which divideth this Country from Margiana.

Antiently it was populous and well-inhabited, containing above 30 Towns of name and note. Thoſe of moſt conſequence, 1. Aria, on the banks of the River Arias, the ſeat of the Arii, whom Pliny ſpeaketh of in this tract: but whether they received this name from the Province, or beſtowed their own name upon it, I determine not: 2. Bataxa, 3. Sotera, 4. Orbitana, 5. Sormagana, 6. Artacanda, by Strabo called Artacana, 7. Niſibis, mentioned both by Ptolomy and Ammianus, 8. Alexandria, bearing the name of the Great Conqueror, by whom planted and made a Colony of his Macedonians, for the better awing of the Country, which by ſome former rebellions had been troubleſome to him. But theſe, and moſt of thoſe remembred by Ptolomy, being grown out of knowledge, there remain now of ſpecial note, 9. Heri, or Eri, ſeated not far from the place of the ancient Aria, but much ſuperiour to it in ſtrength and greatneſſe. Said by Maginus to be in compaſs thirteen miles, and ſo plentifully ſtored with Roſes, that the inhabitants of the Country call it the City of Roſes. Naturally of a ſtrong ſcituation, compaſſed about with a very good Wall, and watered with deep Channels, conveyed unto it by Tamerlane, that moſt puiſſant Tartar, by whom either founded or repaired. 10. Saſuar, a place of good importance, and the ſecond in eſteem next to Heri it ſelf.

The old inhabitants were the Maſderami, Niſæi, Aſtareni, the Caſſirotæ, Obares, Drachamæ, Borgi, Paranti. &c. united all together in the name of ARIANS, by that name ſubject to the Perſians, and ſubdued by Alexander. Againſt whom when they had rebelled, and were worſted by him, they were compelled to betake themſelves to the ſtrength of a Cave, ſeated on the top of an inacceſſible Rock, and with ſmall force eaſily defended. But to Alexander nothing was impoſſible. For piling up a great maſſe of Timber, equall unto the mouth of the Cave, when the wind ſerved opportunely, he put fire unto it; and by that meanes ſo filled the Cave with fire and ſmoak, that ſome of them where ſtifled, ſome half-burnt, and the reſt forced to yield to the Victors mercy. Nor was this the onely Action of note during that Rebellion though it was the greateſt. The Common Souldier alſo had his honour in it. Sarlibarzanes, a Perſian whom Alexander had truſted with the command of this Province, had drawn them unto this Revolt, and became their head. Who to expreſs his conrage, in the fight of the Arians, challenged the proudeſt He of the Macedonians to a ſingle combat. The challenge cheerfully accepted by one Eriguis, one of the moſt Aged in the Army: and ſaying aloud, oſtendam quales milites Alexander habet, he valiantly charged upon the Rebell; and at the ſecond venew ſlew him. The Arians after the trial of their diſabilities remained in quiet, taking the ſame fortunes as the reſt of the Perſians did, in their change of Maſters. Of late, by Mahomet Codubanda it was aliened for a time from the Crown of Perſia, and given to Sultan Abas, his ſecond Son; who took unto his ſelf, in his Fathers life-time, the title of the King of Heri. But coming to the Crown by the murder of his elder Brother, and the death of his Father, he united Heri once again to the Regal Diadem; but kept as a diſtinct title in the Royal ſtile.

10. PARTHIA.

PARTHIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Aria; on the Weſt, with Media; on the North, with Hyrcania; and on the South, with that part of Carmania, which by Ptolomy and others of the Antients, was called Deſerta. The reaſon of the name we ſhall ſee anon. But that name being laid aſide, it is now called Arach.

The Country walled, as it were, round with Mountains, and in moſt parts over-grown with Woods: by which defended from thoſe heats, to which otherwiſe it would be ſubject, it produceth many things of neceſſary uſe, for the life of the people; but nothing for riot and exceſs. In other places, where the ſhade of the wood is wanting, the whole Country is in a manner but a ſandy Deſart, dangerous to Travellors, and impaſſible even with the help of Guides; the ſands continually driven from one place to another, taking away all tracts of a beaten way. For which cauſe there be certain Caſtles at each three miles end, built at the Kings charge, as well for the direction, as the reception of Paſſengers; and Cawſeys of many miles in length, in ſome other places, for their better travelling; for the ſands on each ſide of them ſo looſe and light, that if a man ſhould fall aſide, he were loſt remedileſſe.

The people antiently were very couragious and ſtout, as commonly they are in all barren Countryes, and were withall of a Scythian extract and originall. Exceeding ſpare of diet, and good reaſon for it, the Country not affording any ſuperfluities; but otherwiſe much given to pleaſure, allowing themſelves plurality of wives and Concubines. Good horſemen, and to that ſo uſed, that they conſulted of all buſineſs both private and publike, when they were on horſe-back. Such lovers of the wars, that they accompted no man happy after his deceaſe, but who died in battel; eſteeming of all others but as fools or Cowards. Their Souldiers for the moſt part Slaves, whom they trained up unto their weapons, and to manage horſes: inſomuch as of 50000 horſe which the Parthian King had in the field againſt Marcus Antonius, there were not above 800 Free-men, But their greateſt fame conſiſted in the handling of their Bow and Arrows, eſteemed the beſt Archers in the world, and not undeſervedly; having the Art of ſhooting backwards, and making their Retreat or flight more terrible, then their charge or onſet. Whence that of Seneca.

Terga converſi metuenda Parthi.
The Parthian flight
Doth moſt affright.

Which, with the manner of their fight, is more curiouſly deſcribed by Lucan, thus;

Pugna levis, bellumque fugax, turmaque fugaces,
Et melior ceſſiſſe loco quam pellere miles.
Illita terra dolis, nec Martem cominus unquam.
Auſa pati virtus, ſed longè tendere nervos.

Which I finde thus Engliſhed to my hand.

Light ſkirmiſh, fleeing war, and ſcattered bands,
And better Souldiers when they run away,
Than to cut off an enemy that ſtands.
Their Crafty Gall-thraps on the ground they lay,
Nor dares their courage come to down-right blows,
But fight beſt furtheſt off, moſt truſting to their bows.

From hence it was, that M. Craſſus, in his expedition againſt them, being told by an Aſtrologer, that his enterpriſe would prove unproſperous, by reaſon of ſome ill aſpect which he had found in Scorpio; Tuſh (ſaid he) I fear not Scorpio, but Sagittarius. And to theſe warlike exerciſes of horſe and Archery, the temper of the Air and Soyl gave no ſmall advantages; the dry Air ſeaſoning their bow-ſtrings, and their large fields affording them ſufficient room to train their horſes. Cœlum enim quod ſiccum eſt, nervos intentos facit; Regio tota plana eſt, et ob eam rem equis accommodata, as it is in Dion. But this is to be underſtood, not of Parthia onely, but the whole Country of Perſia; ſubject at that time to the power of the Parthian Kings. Next to theſe Parthians, the Engliſh have been looked on, formerly, as the ableſt Bow-men; having gotten by their bow and arrows as many notable victories, over the French, as the Parthians ever did obtain upon the Romans. But at this time Archery, both here, and elſewhere, is quite laide aſide, the Gun ſilencing all offenſive weapons; how juſtly I determine not. The point hath been long ſince debated betwixt Sir John Smith, and Sir Roger Williams; many great wits appearing upon either ſide; and the ſome of their ſeveral Arguments drawn up together by Sir Clement Edmunds, in his judicious obſervations upon Caſars Commentaries, to which the Reader may repair for his ſatisfaction. All I

ſhall

Partbia. ſhall ſay is onely this, that victories as great as any in thoſe elder dayes, have been obtained with far leſs bloodſhed ſince the Gun came up, than in any of the times before it.

The Religion of this People hath ſuffered under the ſame changes with the reſt of Perſia, but they have a language of their own, mixt of Mede and Scythian. For which, beſides the teſtimony of humane Authors, we have the Authority of Scriptures; where the Parthians, Elamites, and Medes, are named as Nations of a ſeveral language, or a different Dialect, at the leaſt, Acts, 2.

Rivers of note I finde not any, nor any Mountains proper and peculiar to them: Coronus, part of the great Mountain Taurus, lying in common betwixt them and Hyrcania; as Maſdoramus doth betwixt them and Aria, and the hills called Parchoatras, betwixt them and the Deſarts of Carmania. So that for want of ſuch known Landmarks, the finding out of their antient Cities will be very difficult; if any learned Antiquary ſhould undertake it.

The Country antiently more populous, the Towns and Villages thicker ſet then they be at the preſent; many Cities, and 2000 villages having been overthrown with Earth-quakes. In Ptolomy we finde the names of 25 of the Cities, diſtributed into the four Provinces or Tetrarchies of Camiſene towards Hyrcania; Parthiene bordering on Media; Paracanticene, confining on Aria; Tabiene, neighbouring on Carmania. The principal of which and of thoſe that are now in being, 1. Genonia. 2. Charax. 3. Artacana 4. Apamia, which by the name ſeems to have been the foundation of Seleucus. 5. Dardamana, 6. Syndiga. 7. Paſacarta. 8. Hecatompyle, the Royal City, ſo called from the number of an hundred Gates in the walls thereof; by which we may conjecture at the antient greatneſſe: the Parthians, which had ſeen no greater, calling it by the glorious name of Halſe the world. 9. Hiſpaan, commonly called Spahan, or Spawhawn, raiſed out of the ruines of Hecatompyle; and as, that was, the Regal City for theſe parts. In compaſs about nine miles, of figure round, and ſeated in the midſt of a large and capacious Plain, beautified with many pleaſant Gardens, goodly Bathes, and handſome Moſques. But the greateſt glory of it lieth in the Market place or Midan, quadrangular in form, but the ſides unequal; cloiſtred about and well ſtored with merchandiſe of all ſorts, but drugs eſpecially: the Court, or Quadrangle, ſerving for horſe-races, and other warlike exerciſes, which are done on horſe-back. On the Weſt ſide a magnificent Moſque, built of white marble, five yards high, and the reſt above that of Brick; curiouſly interwoven with Arabick poeſies. In the middeſt a fair Conduit, wherewith they purifie themſelves, when they go to their prayers. On another ſide the Royall Palace, wrought in the front with Antique works; the Floors on the inſide covered with rich Perſian carpets, and the Roofs chargeably emboſſed with Gold and Azure. 10. Jelphea, on the otherſide of the River on which Spawhawn is ſeated, as the Burgh of Southwark is to London; wholly inhabited (at this time) by Armenian Chriſtians, from hence called Jelphelines; who live here in great freedome, both for Perſon, and conſcience, but that their Poll-money is taxed at an higher rate. 11. Croom, a right pleaſant and wealthy City, wel built, of large ſtreets, and ſeated on the banks of a ſmal but delightful River, iſſuing out of the Coronian Mountains, near to which it ſtandeth. Conſiſting at the preſent of 2000 Families, but antiently, as may be gathered from ſome ruines, of far greater compaſs. Much honoured by the Perſians for the Sepulchre of Fatima, the daughter of Mahomet; from whom the Sophian Sect, and Princes do derive their Pedigree. 12. Caſham, a rich and pleaſant City; about 60 miles from Spawhawn, well built and peopled by a number of Artizans; who for the making of Silks, Sattins, and Cloth of Gold, are in great eſteem. Beautified amongſt other things with a ſtately and magnificent Caravans ſera, built by Sultan Abas, for the reception of Strangers, whether Merchants or other travellers, but fit to entertain any Prince of Aſia. The City of no great age, the worke either of Vſſan Caſſanes, the Armenian, who got the Crown of Perſia, in the year 1470, or at the higheſt, of Caſſam, the Son of Axan, and Grand-ſon of Tangrolipix, the firſt Turk here reigning; from one of which it had this name. 13. Tawgebawt, where the Perſian Kings have a houſe of pleaſure, of no great receipt; but for the coſt and ornaments of it, and the delectableneſs of the Gardens adjoyning to it, not yeilding to any in this large Empire: and for Grots, Ecchoes, Labyrinths, and the other excellencies of Art, perhaps not fellowed in the world; eſpecially conſidering, that it ſtandeth in the middle of a ſandy Deſart.

The Parthians were originally a Scythian Nation, baniſhed their own Country, and glad to plant themſelves in this barren Region; calling themſelves by the name of Parthians, which in their language ſignifieth as much as Exiles. A People ſo obſcure and poor, either not knowing, or not caring for the uſe of money, that none of Alexanders great Captains would vouchſafe to be their Governor; but let it lie as an Appendix to Media, to the Kings whereof it had originally been Subject; till one Philip, a man of ſmall regard, took the place upon him. Falling, at laſt, with the reſt of Alexanders Aſian purchaſes, into the hands of Seleucus, it was governed by the Leivtenants of the Syrian Kings, till the time of Seleucus Callinicus, the fourth of that houſe. During whoſe reign Arſaces, a noble Parthian, provoked by ſome indignities, ſlew the Governor, and took the eſtate upon himſelf; perſwading all the reſt of the Provinces to doe the like: and thrived ſo well in his deſign, that he not onely gained the Kingdome of Parthia, but united to it all the provinces lying on the Eaſt of Euphrates. Of whom, and his Succeſſors, more in the ſtory of Perſia. After this nothing ſingular which concerns this Province, but that, as this Arſaces did recover the Perſian liberty from the power of the Greeks; ſo Gempſas, one of the Sultans of this Province alſo, redeemed (though but for a little time) this Parthia, and the parts adjoyning, from the yoak of the Tartar; as ſhall be ſhewn in the proſecution of the Perſian Hiſtory.

11. HYRCANIA.

HYRCANIA is bounded on the South, with Parthia; on the North, with the Hyrcanian, or Caſpian Sea; on the Eaſt, with Margiana; and on the Weſt, with Atropatia, or Atropattone (as Ammianus calleth it) the North part of Media. Divided from Parthia by the interpoſition of Coronus, part of the main body of Mount Taurus. The way thorow which, ſaid by the Perſians to be cut out at one blow, by the Scymitar of Mortis Haly, their ſecond Mahomet, is not above forty yards in breadth, in the broadeſt parts of it; the hills on both ſides towring to the very clouds: With ſmall ſtrength eaſily defended againſt mighty Armies, and poſſibly may be the ſame which the Antients called Porta Caſpiæ, before deſcribed.

It took the name of Hyrcania, from Hyrcana, a large and ſpacious foreſt betwixt it and Scythia; ſometimes called Caſpia alſo, from the Caſpii, a chief People of it: of whom it is reported, that when their Parents came to the age of 70 years, they uſed to ſhut them up, and ſtarve them; as being then no longer uſefull to the Commonwealth. But both thoſe names growing out of uſe, it is by Mercator called Diargument; by ſome late Travellers, Mezendram; by ſome others, Corcam.

Thoſe parts hereof which lie towards the South, are ſaid to yield abundance of Wheat, Wines, Figs, and Fruit; thoſe towards the Caſpian Sea, as plentifull of Graſs and Paſture. But betwixt both, nothing in a manner but continual Foreſts, and thoſe ſo intricate and thick, that it is a matter of no ſmall difficulty to finde paſſage thorow them. Full, as moſt other Foreſts are in thoſe Eaſtern parts, of Panthers, Leopards, Lions, Tigers: theſe laſt of ſuch an horrible fierceneſs, that it grew into a common Proverb uſed of cruel men, that they had ſucked an Hyrcanian Tiger; Hyrcanæque admôrunt ubera Tigres; as it is in Virgil.

Principal Rivers of this Countrey, 1. Zioberis, ſpoken of before. 2. Maxera, or Mazeras, mentioned by Pliny, Ptolomy, and Ammianus; and 3. Secanda; all falling into the Caſpian or Hyrcanian Sea. A Sea which had the names of Caſpian, and Hyrcanian, from the Caſpii and Hyrcani, bordering next unto it; now from the Town of Bochu, in Atropatia, called Mare di Bochu. Faſhioned in an Oval form, the length thereof from North to South 700 miles, and 600 miles from Eaſt to Weſt. Stormy, and troubleſome, by reaſon of thoſe many great Rivers which fall into it, from all the Provinces adjoyning: which notwithſtanding it hath no viſible commerce with the Ocean; nor doth it at any time overflow its banks; finding ſome paſſage under ground, to diſcharge it ſelf of thoſe vaſt ſtreams of water which are poured into it. Well traded by the Moſcovite Merchants, who having the command of the River Volge (which with 70 mouths doth open into this Sea) ſail over it, and land at Farabant, or ſome other of the Port-Towns, where they trade for ſilks. Some Iſlands here are in it, but not many, or of any great fame, but onely that they ſerved the Nations which lay near it for a place of retreat, in time of the Tartarian tempeſt under Tamerlant; as the Iſles of Venice did to the Italians, at the coming of Attila.

Places of moſt conſideration, 1. Hyrcania, once the Metropolis of the Province; and ſo called by Ptolomy; ſtill extant, but of leſs eſteem, and ſtill called Hyrcan. 2. Tambrace, in old times of the greateſt ſtrength, and moſt defenſible; but taken by Antiochus Magnus in the war againſt Arſaces the Parthian, for the recovery of thoſe Countries then revolted from him. 3. Adrapſa, 4. Maſaca, 5. Anaroſa; of which we finde the names, amongſt others, in the antient Writers. 6. Aſharaffe, two miles from the Sea, in a ſpacious Plain, containing about 2000 houſes, and now of moſt reputation of all this Province, by the long reſidence therein of Abas, the late Perſian Sultan; who built there a magnificent Palace, and another two miles off, at a place called Abaſſebant. The furniture whereof, beſides coſtly Carpets, in Plate and Jewels, at ſuch time as Sir Dodmore Cotton was there Ambaſſador, is ſaid to have been valued by a knowing Merchant, at 20 millions of pounds. But I fear the Merchant had more skill in Silks than Jewels: ſuch a vaſt ſumme to be expended on the furniture of one Palace onely, being beyond the poſſibility of the Revenue of the Perſian Sophies; hardly amounting towards all charges to five millions of Crowns. 7. Farabant, on a navigable Arm of the Caſpian Sea; for beauty, wealth, and greatneſs, of moſt note in this Countrey. Well traded from all parts of this Inland Sea, eſpecially by the Ruſſian Merchant, as before is ſaid: whoſe ſhips come hither in March, and return in July; it being from hence to Aſtrachan but ten daies ſail. Beautified with goodly Gardens, a Royal manſion of the Kings, and a ſpacious Market-place. 8. Chiacoporo, near the Sea alſo, but on the banks of a River; the water whereof is ſaid for eleven moneths to be freſh and ſweet, and for the twelfth moneth very ſalt. 9. Barfruſhdee, twelve miles from the Sea, well furniſhed with wood and water. 10. Omoall, a Town of about 3000 houſes, ſeated on the North ſide of the Taurus, in a pleaſant and fruitfull ſoyl; reſorted to by the people of ſo many Nations, that ſeven languages are there commonly ſpoken. Once larger, as appeareth by ſome ruines than it is at the preſent; by ſome conceived to be the Nabarca of the Antients, honoured in thoſe times with an Oracle. 11. Strava, a Town of great traffick, for raw ſilks eſpecially. 12. Meſandre, whence the whole Province (or rather the parts adjoyning to it) hath the name of Mezendrum.

The old Inhabitants hereof, beſides the Caſpii, were the Maxera, Aſtabeni, Chrindi, and the Arſitenſes; united in the name of Hyrcans, in the time of the Perſians; and by that name well known at the coming of Alexander. Againſt whom they ſo defended themſelves, by tying the boughs and twigs of their Trees together, that it was impoſſible for him to come at them; till with incredible pains and labour he had cauſed their Woods to be cut down: at ſight whereof the People, who ſuppoſed the King had too much other buſineſs, and of more importance, than to put himſelf unto that trouble, did ſubmit unto him. Falling to the ſhare of Seleucus, they were the firſt people that were gained by Arſaces, and joined with him in recovering their former liberty; though they got nothing by the bargain but the change of their Margiana and Bactria.

Maſter. In all times ſince, they have been looked upon as Members of the Perſian Empire, till the conqueſt of it by the Tartars: in the diſtractions of whoſe great Empire, after Tamerlanes death, it fell to ſome Princes of his houſe, who governed here under the vaſſallage and protection of the Tartars of Zagathay. Recovered not long ſince to their old obedience, by Sultan Abas: who for the better ſetling the affairs hereof, removed the Seat royal from Spawhawn, to which before he had transferred it from the City of Casbin, to Aſharaffe, then a ſmall Town, now the chief of this Countrey.

12. MARGIANA.

MARGIANA is bounded on the Weſt, with Hyrcania; on the Eaſt, with Bactria; on the North, with part of Tartary, from which ſevered by the River Oxus; on the South, with Aria, divided from it by the Mountains. So called from the River Margus, which runs thorow the Countrey: but is now named Tremigen.

The Countrey environed with Mountains, and in moſt places of it full of ſandy Deſarts. But where it is watered with the Rivers, Arias, and Margus, it is very fruitfull, ſtretching it ſelf into a large and ſpacious plain, containing in the circuit near 200 miles. The Plain once compaſſed with a wall by Antiochus Soter, King of Syria: more memorable for the huge ſtocks of Vines which are ſaid to be in it, as big in bulk as two men can fathom, and ſometimes bearing branches of grapes two Cubits long. The more to be admired, in regard there is no other place near unto it, where the vine will grow. And if the Ark reſted on the top of Mount Caucaſus, as it is moſt probable it did, why may not this be ſome of the remainder of that firſt Vineyard which was planted by Noah, when he deſcended from theſe Mountains, as is affirmed by the conſtant tradition of the people which inhabite here?

The people mixt of Scythian and Perſian breed, partaking of the fierceneſs of the one, and the behaviour of the other. Conform unto the Perſians, in Religion, Language, and Apparel; diſtinguiſhed from them in the colour of their Turbants onely, which are commonly Green: and therefore by the Perſians called Jeſelbas, or Green-caps; the Turbants of the Perſian being alwaies red.

Chief Rivers of this Countrey are, 1. Maigus, the peculiar River of it, which riſing out of the foot of the Mountains, and paſſing thorow the middeſt of the Province, receiveth into its channel the River, 2. Arias, haſtning out of Aria; and ſo together loſe themſelves in 3. Oxus, dividing the Margians from the Tartars. Out of the joint ſtreams of which ſeveral Rivers, is made a large Lake now called Sabacamber, but antiently Palus Oxiana, from the principal River.

Places of moſt obſervation in it. 1. Alexandria, or Alexandria Margiana for diſtinction ſake; one of the ſix Towns built by Alexander for defence of this Countrey: called afterwards Seleucia from Seleucus; next Antiochia from Antiochus Soter King of Syria, by whom fortified with a very ſtrong wall. It is now called Indion, and eſteemed for the chief of the Countrey. 2. Jaſonium, ſeated on the confluence of Margus with a nameleſs River iſſuing from the Seriphian Mountains. 3. Nigaa, as the printed books of Ptolomy call it; but miſtook for Niſſa, or Nyſaa. 4. Argadina. 5. Rhea; of which nothing memorable. 6. Maran, near to which Iſmael the firſt of the Sophian race, diſcomfited the forces of Saba the Cham of Zagathay.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Maſſagetes, and the Parni, taking up the midlands; the Derbicca, bordering upon Oxus; and the Tapyri, dwelling towards the Eaſt. United by the name of Margians, they were ſubdued by the Kings of Perſia, from whom won by Alexander to his Empire: who to aſſure himſelf hereof, built ſix Cities in it, two towards the South, and four towards the Eaſt; all ſcituate on the tops of hills, and built at ſuch convenient nearneſs that they might afford ſuccour to each other, as occaſion ſerved. After this nothing ſingular in the ſtory of them; involved in the ſame fortunes with the reſt of Perſia, till Perſia was conquered by the Tartars. Since which time, though the reſt of the Perſian Provinces were freed from the Tartarian yoak by Genopſas, the Soldan of Parthia, and King of Perſia, for a time; yet part of this Province, and of Bactriana, are ſtill ſubject to them.

13. BACTRIA.

BACTRIA or BACTRIANA, is bounded on the Weſt, with Margiana; on the Eaſt and North, with the River Oxus, dividing it from Sogdiana; on the South, with Paropamiſus, from which parted by the hills ſo named, and the Mountain Caucaſus. It took this name from Bactria, the chief City of it; and is now called Choraſſin, but by ſome named Batter.

The Countrey towards the River Oxus is for the moſt part well manured, and affordeth plenty of Wheat, and all ſorts of fruits excepting Olives; rich metals, and ſome precious ſtones, as Emeralds, Chryſolites, and Jacinthes. Plenty of Paſtures there be alſo, well ſtored with Cattel, and thoſe of bigger bulk than in other places. But the greateſt part hereof, to the South and Weſt, is nothing but a ſandy Deſart; and by reaſon that the ſands are driven up and down by contrary winds, no tract or beaten way is to be diſcerned: inſomuch as Travellers reſt all day, and take their journey in the night; that they may guide themſelves by the courſe of the Stars, as upon the Sea; not without great danger of being loſt or buried, whilſt alive, in that ſandy Ocean.

The people heretofore a puiſſant and warlike nation, not without great difficulty conquered by the Aſſyrians, nor with leſs by the Perſians; always in arms, cruel, and reſembling the Scythians, whoſe near neighbours they were, and (which may very well paſs for their greateſt vertue) multum à Perſarum luxu abhorrentes, abhorring naturally from the Perſian luxuries. But withall unnaturall to their Parents, whom when old they caſt unto their dogs, kept for that purpoſe; and called Canes Sepulchrales, or burial dogs. The women gorgeous in apparel, and proud of geſture, but prodigal of their bodies to their meaneſt ſlaves. The men to this day do retain their antient ſtoutneſs; but hard beſet betwixt the Perſians and the Tartars, who ſeverally pretend a dominion over them.

No Province of the Perſian Empire hath ſo many Rivers. The principall of which are, 1. Artamis, and 2. Zariaſpes, mingſing ſtreams together; as do alſo 3. Ochus; and 4 Orgomanes: all four contributing their waters to the River Oxus. Of Oxus, being rather a boundary betwixt the Perſian and the Tartar, than rightly proper unto either, we have ſpoke already.

Towns of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Bactria, the Metropolis or chief City of it, ſcituate at the foot of the Mountain Sogdii; giving the name of Bactria unto all the Province. It is now called Boohor, and ſtill keeps the dignity of the Metropolitan, the ſeat of the Chief Prieſt or Biſhop of the Mahometans of Zagathay (to which this City, and great part of the Country alſo doth now belong) having here his reſidence, in power and reputation equall to the King himſelf. Well fortified, and ſtored with all military proviſions: the birth-place (as Maginus ſaith) in theſe latter Ages of Avicenna, that learned Philoſopher and Phyſician; and in the firſt Ages of Zoroaſter, the more learned Aſtrologer. 2. Ebuſmi, once the Regall ſeat, and therefore honoured by Ptolomy with the name of Regia. 3. Zariſpe, or Chariſpe, the chief City of the Chariſpa, a great Tribe of this Countrey. 4. Charracharta, mentioned by Ptolomy and Ammianus: theſe two, upon the River Oxus. 5. Eucratidia, built or repaired by the Macedonians; as the name, being meerly Greek, doth ſeem to intimate. 6. Alicodra, as antient as the reſt, but of no great note in the courſe of buſineſs. 7. Iſtigias, of a later date, but of greater beauty than any of thoſe before ſpoken of: ſuperiour to Bochor in elegancy, ſtate and greatneſs, though not in dignity, and held by ſome to be the pleaſanteſt of the Eaſt.

This Countrey was as ſoon peopled as any ſince the generall Deluge. It had not elſe been poſſible that Zoroaſter King hereof in the time of Ninus, and by him aſſaulted, ſhould bring into the Field an Army of 400000 men of this, and perhaps ſome other of the neighbouring Provinces, as moſt credible writers ſay he did. Encountring Ninus with this Army he prevailed at firſt, and ſlew of the Aſſyrians neer an hundred thouſand. But Ninus having better opportunities of recruiting his forces, invaded him a ſecond time with an Army of 1700000 foot, and 200000 horſe (the greateſt on record in all ages ſince that time, except that of Semiramis): with which he overcame Zoroaſter, ſlew him in the field, and united Bactria to his Empire. Unto this Zoroaſter is aſcribed the invention of Aſtronomy, but on no good ground; that Art or Science being ſtudied before the flood, (if Seths pillars mentioned by Joſephus be of any credit): and therefore probably no otherwiſe to be aſcribed to Zoroaſter, than as to the Reviver of it; or becauſe he firſt committed that unto writing which he had received by tradition; or becauſe he brought thoſe confuſed notions which he had received from others, into rule and method. He being ſlain, and Bactria his chief City taken by the wit of Semiramis, then the wife of Menon (but on the merit of that ſervice made the wife of Ninus) the Bactrians became ſubject unto the Aſſyrian Kings, after to the Monarchs of the Medes & Perſians. In the expiring of which great Monarchy, Beſſus a falſe and cruel Traitor, did command this Province: and having villanouſly ſlain Darius, his Lord and Maſter, aſſumed unto himſelf the title of King of Perſia, under the name of Artaxerxes. But being betrayed by Spitamenes, one of his Confederates, by him delivered unto Alexander, and by Alexander put to a cruell death, the Bactrians became ſubject to the Macedonians, and in that right unto Seleucus and the Kings of Syria. But long it held not in that State; one Theodatus, who formerly had the government of it for the Syrian Kings, taking unto himſelf the title of King, and the poſſeſſion of the Countrey, about the ſame time that Arſaces and the Parthians made the like revolt. Wreſted from his poſterity by one Euthydimus, the recovery of it was attempted by Antiochus Magnus: and the whole cauſe put to the triall of a battel. In which, though Antiochus had the better, and ſhewed more perſonal valor in it than any time after: yet he was glad to come to a compoſition, and left to Euthydimus both the Crown and the Countrey. Made not long after an acceſſion to the Parthian Kingdome, it continued part thereof whileſt that Kingdome ſtood. And in the time of Ptolomy (as long time before) had for the chief tribes or nations of it, the Salatara, and Zariaſpa towards the North; the Comani, or Coamoni (as Pliny calleth them) dwelling in South, the middle parts being taken up by the Thocari, ſaid to be gens magna; the Scorda, Savadii, Marica, Tambyzi, Amariſpe, and others of as little note. In the often changes and alterations of the Perſian State, one of the laſt Nations which ſubmitted to the new Pretenders: and at this time ſo neutrall betwixt the Perſians, and the Cham of Tartary, that it is not wholly under the power of either. More averſe from the Perſian government, ſince the alteration of Religion made there by Hyſmael, and the reſt of the Sect of Mortis Hali: theſe Bactrians being of the old race of Mahometans, which adhered to Haumar, Oſmen, and Abubecher, as the true Succeſſors of their falſe Prophet; and therefore ill-affected to the Sophian faction, whom they call commonly Caphers, or Hereticks, for the innovations by them made in the Law of Mahomet.

Thus having taken a ſurvey of thoſe ſeverall Provinces, which conſtitute the Perſian Empire, and ſhewn by what means they were firſt united into one eſtate: we muſt next look upon the names and actions of thoſe mighty Monarchs, who have ſucceſſively, and from time to time enjoyed the Soveraignty. By what good chance Arbaces from a Deputy or Lieutenant of Media, obtained the Diademe for himſelfe, we have ſhewn before: and we have ſhewn how liberally he enfeoffed the Vice-Roys of the ſeverall Provinces (which in the diviſion made betwixt him and Belochus, fell unto his ſhare) in the propriety and command of thoſe Countreys, which before they held. Nothing reſerved unto himſelf, and his poſterity, but the title onely; and perhaps ſome acknowledgements made to them, as the Lords in chief. Now left he leſs liberty to his own Medians, than to the reſt of the Provinces; which turning to licentiouſneſſe, was ſo hurtful to them, that they were glad at laſt of that wholſome ſeverity, which Dioces, a more Lordly King, began to exerciſe: who taking to himſelf a guard, building the Royall City of Ecbd- tana, and fortifying ſome other places of importance, firſt brought the people under the command of law; in that regard not unfitly called by Herodotus, the firſt King of the Medes.

Kings of the Medes.

A. M.

3146. 1. Arbaces, at firſt Governour of the Medes, under Sardanapalus the Aſſyrian; but joyning with Belochus, overcame his Maſter, and was the firſt founder of the Median Monarchy.

3174. 2. Mandanes, the Son of Arbaces. 50.

3224. 3. Siſarmus. 30.

3254. 4. Medidus, by ſome called Artyras. 25.

3279. 5. Cardicceus, whom ſome call Arbianes. 13.

3292. 6. Deioces, the founder of Ecbatana, and the Legiſlator of the Medes, whom he firſt brought under the command of Law, and a Regal Government; the former Kings having left the reigns ſo looſe on the necks of the people, that they ſeemed to reign by curteſie onely; and had no more authority amongſt their Subjects, than any of the mean Lords had upon their Vaſſals.

3303. 7. Phraortes, a man of great prowess and fortune: He made all Aſia ſtand in fear, and compelled the Perſians to be his tributaries; but was was after overtopped by the Scythians. 22.

3331. 8. Cyaxares, united to his Empire the Saracens, and the Parthians. The King was ſo overlaid by the Scythians, who in the reign of Phraortes, had broke into Media; that he was little better then their Rent-gatherer. But having endured them for above two years, he plotted their final extirpation, and committed his deſign to the Nobles, who willingly gave ear to it. One night, they invited the chief of the Scythians to a banquet; where having well liquored them, and put them all to the ſword, the baſer ſort willingly returned homeward. 40.

3371. 9. Aſtyages, the Son of Cyaxares, who having married his Daughter Mandane to Cambyſes the Tributary King of Perſia; dreamed that ſhe had made as much water as drowned all Aſia: hereupon he commanded Harpagus, one of his Noble men, to ſee the Child killed; but he loathing ſo cruel a fact, committed the charge of executing the Kings commandment to Mithridates the Kings Heard-man. He preſerved the life of the young Infant, to whom he gave the name of Cyrus, whoſe fortune at laſt lifted him up to the Kingdome of Perſia: when abhorring his Grand-Father for that intended cruelty, he both bereft him of his Kingdome, and confined him to Hyrcania, when he had reigned thirty five years. A. M. 3406.

3406. 10. Cyaxares II. in the Scripture called Darius Medus, Son to Aſtyages, at the age of 52 years ſucceeded his father. For Cyrus pretending no quarrel to his Unkle who had never wronged him, left him the kingdome of Media, and took unto himſelf the Soveraignty of Perſia, which before was tributary to the Medes; not making any other alteration in the State of Media.

At this diviſion of the Median Empire, as Torniellus in his Annals, (and that not improbably) is of opinion, it was alſo agreed on, that Cyrus ſhould take the daughter and only child of Cyaxares to wife; that they ſhould both joyn together in ſubduing of their neighbours; that whatſoever they won, ſhould belong to Cyaxares, (who was even then an old Prince) during his life; and that Cyrus ſhould be his heir. In the twentieth year of their ſeverall reigns, they took Babylon, ſlew Baltazar, and deſtroyed the Empire of the Chaldæans. This action, the Scriptures attribute wholly to Cyaxares, who is by them called Darius Medus; whereof Hierome alledgeth three reaſons: 1. Ordo ætatis, 2 Regni, 3. Propinquitatis. 1. Darius was the elder; 2. the Empire of the Medes was more famous than that of the Perſians; and 3. the Unkle ought to be preferred before the Nephew. We may add to theſe three, the compoſition above-mentioned, made between theſe Princes, at the beginning of their reigns on the death of Aſtyages. The Greek Writers attribute the victory onely to Cyrus, and that on three reaſons alſo. The Perſians deſirous to magnifie Cyrus their own Countrey-man, gave him all the glory of their action; and from the Perſians the Greeks had it. Secondly, Cyrus was onely imployed in the ſiege, (Darius then being abſent) and by his valour and conduct was the Empire of the Chaldæans ruined. And thirdly, Darius lived not fully two years after this great victory; ſo that before remote Nations had taken notice of the conqueſt, Cyrus was actually in the Throne. Joſephus onely in the 11 Chapter of his Book, cutteth the thread even between theſe two Princes; and telleth us that Darius, with Cyrus his Ally, deſtroyed the eſtate of the Babylonians. That this Darius Medius of Daniel is the Cyaxares of the Greeks, is more than manifeſt. For Joſephus in the place above-cited telleth us, ὃς ἦν Ἀςυάγου υἱὸς καὶ ἕτερον παρὰ τοῖς ἕλλησιν ἐκαλεῖτο ὄνομα: That he was Aſtyages Son, and is otherwiſe called by the Greeks: now ask the Greeks what was the name of the Son of Aſtyages, and Xenophon will tell you, that it was Cyaxares. As for the name of Nabonidus, which Joſeph Scaliger in ſpight of reaſon, and the whole world of Chronologers, would thruſt upon this Darius Medus; we have already refelled it: though we are not ignorant that Helvicus and Calviſius, two moſt worthy Writers, have followed him, as in all his Canon, ſo alſo in this particular error. But to proceed unto the courſe of the Perſian Hiſtory; after the death of this Cyaxares, Cyrus ſucceeded in his Throne, and the Empire of the Medes was incorporated in that of the Perſians, (as it hath ever ſince continued) if not ſubject to it.

The Firſt Dynaſty, or Race of the Perſian Monarchs, of the houſe of Achamenes.

3406. 1. Cyrus, who having vanquiſhed Aſtyages, united to the Empire of Perſia the whole Kingdome of Media; the Countreys of Armenia, Phrygia, Lydia, ſome part of Arabia, and all the Provinces poſſeſſed by the Babylonian, and Aſſyrian Monarchs. After which victories, he was ſlain by Tomyris a Queen of the Scythians, as ſome Writers ſay: others affirming that he eſcaped alive (but wounded) out of the battel, died in his own Kingdom, and was buried at Paſagarda, a Town of Perſis. This Cyrus is magnified by Xenophon, as Æneas is by Virgil, and Ulyſſes by Homer. 29.

3434. 2. Cambyſes, the Son of Cyrus, ſubdued Pſamniticus King of Ægypt, which Country he united to his Empire. Having a mind to marry his Siſter, he was told by his Lawyers that they knew no law which admitted ſuch marriages; but that there was a law, that the Perſian Kings might do what they liſted. This King was a very bloody Tyrant.

The Inter-Regnum of the Magi.

Cambyſes at his expedition into Ægypt, conſtituted Patizithes, one of the Magi, Viceroy in his abſence. He hearing of the Kings death, conferred the Kingdom on his own Son Smerdis, making the people believe that he was the brother of Cambyſes: a matter of no difficulty, conſidering how retirement from the publique view was a chief point of the Perſian Majeſty. But the Nobles either knowing the true Smerdis to be ſlain, or ſuſpecting the over-much retiredneſſe of the new King, began to ſearch out the matter. Otanes had a daughter, which was one of the Kings Concubines. Her he commanded when the King took next his pleaſure with her, to feel whether he had any ears: for Cambyſes (in I know not what humour) had cut off the ears of this Magus. This commandement ſhe obeying, found out the falſhood. The ſeven Princes informed of this impoſture, joyned together, and ſlew this Pſeudo Smerdis, in the eighth moneth of his Reign. This done, to avoid contention, they agreed among themſelves, that the ſeven Princes meeting on the Palace green, ſhould acknowledge him the King, whoſe horſe before the riſing of the Sun, firſt neighed. The evening before the day appointed, the horſe-keeper of Darius the Son of Hyſtaſpis, brought his maſters horſe into the green, together with a Mare, which the horſe then covered. In the Morning the Princes met; and Darius his horſe knowing the place, and longing for his mare, neighed luſtily: on which the Princes preſently acknowledged Darius for their King.

The Reſtoring of the Kingdom.

3443. 3. Darius Hyſtaſpis, one of the ſeven Perſian Princes, deſcended from Cyrus the fourth King of the Perſians, thus elected King, took Babylon (which had revolted) by the ingenious fetches of Zopirus; and over-ran all Aſia, and ſome part of Greece, where he was overthrown at the Battel of Marathron. 46.

3479. 4. Xerxes, to revenge the overthrow at Marathron, attempted to ſubdue the Greeks, : by whom he was overthrown by the naval Battel of Salamis, and that famous and honorable exploit of the Gracians, at Thermopylæ. 21.

3500. 5. Artaxerxes Longimanus, was he who ſent Eſdras to re-build the temple of the Lord; and received Themiſtocles, being baniſhed from Athens. This alſo is he, as ſome would have it, whom the Scriptures call Ahaſuerus, the Husband of Heſter; though others chooſe rather to place that ſtory in the time of Xerxes. 44.

3544. 6. Darius II. ſurnamed Nothus, in whoſe time the Egyptians revolted, and choſe a King of their own. 19.

3563. 7. Artaxerxes II from the greatneſs of his memory ſurnamed Mnemon; under whom hapned that famous retreat of Xenophon, with a handfull of his Gracians, thorow moſt of the Provinces of this Empire; by which they ſhewed the way to the Macedonians, how eaſie a Conqueſt they might make of that mighty Empire. 36.

3599. 8. Ochus, a great Tyrant, but a valiant Prince, recovered Egypt, ſubdued Syria, Cyprus, and ſome part of India; and was at laſt ſlain by Bagoas, one of the Eunuchs of his Chamber.

3625. 9. Arſes, the Son of Ochus, moſt villainouſly murdered by the ſame Eunuch, for fear he ſhould revenge the death of his Father.

3629 10. Darius III. Governor of Armenia, and Couſin German of Ochus; before his coming to the Crown named Codamannus; by the meanes of the ſaid Bagoas made ſole Monarch of Perſia. But being vanquiſhed by Alexander the Great, in three battells of Granicus, Cilicia, and Arbela, the Empire of the Perſians was transferred to the Gracians, A M. 3635.

The certain Revenues of this great Monarchy ſeems to have been 14560 Talents; for ſo much the laſt Darius received yearly. But what the caſual and extraordinary Intrado was, is not eaſie to ſay; though manifeſt it is, and demonſtrable by many ſtrong and evident reaſons, that they farre exceeded the certain. For firſt, the Perſian Monarchs were Kings of 127 Provinces; Secondly, Darius offered to Alexander for the ranſome of his mother and two daughters, 30000 Talents of Gold. Thirdly, Alexander found in the Treaſury of Damaſcus, 2600 Talents; in that of Suſa, 50000 Talents of Gold uncoined; in that of Paſagardis, 60000 Talents; in that of Ecbatana, 26000 Talents; in that of Perſepolis, 120000 Talents; in all 204600 Talents; beſides the infinite riches of the Treaſury of Babylon, yielded into his hands by Bagophanes, and other places of note, not particularly ſpecified: An huge and moſt unſpeakable ſumme. Fourthly, in that the gold and riches which Alexander, now a Conqueror, ſent from Perſia to Macedon and Greece, (beſides that which every Captain and common Souldier had provided and laid up for his own maintenance) loaded ten thouſand Mules, and five thouſand Camels.

After this overthrow of the Perſian Monarchy, the Perſian Nation lay obſcure 535 years, viz. from the 3635 year of the World, to the 228 year of CHRIST; of which time they were 83 years under the Syrian Succeſſors of Alexander; and 452 years under the Arſacidan Kings of Prathia, Μετὰ γὰρ Δαρεῖον, &c. as Herodian. "For after Darius had loſt his Kingdom to Alexander the Macedonian, and after "the Victor himſelf was dead alſo; the more potent Captains divided Aſia among them. But diſcords "often ariſing, and the Macedonians puiſſance by theſe often broils not ſmally broken, Arſaces one "of the Parthian Nobility perſwaded the barbarous people of the Eaſt, and among them the Perſians, to "caſt off the Greek yoak, and ſtand for their liberty: he himſelf taking upon him the title of King, and "inveſting himſelf with a Diadem, A.M. 3718. The Perſians by this revolt got little or nothing, having indeed not changed the Tyranny, but the Tyrant onely: theſe Parthian Princes lording it with as high an inſolency, as ever the old Perſian Monarchs, or the Kings of Syria, did before. From this Arſaces, all the reſt of his Succeſſors, and thoſe too of the family of Artabanus, or the ſecond Race of Parthian Kings, took that name upon them: as the Roman Emperors that of Cæſar, or the old Ægyptian Kings the name of Pharaoh. Their uſual ſtile was Rex Regum, or King of Kings: and by that ſtile, with arrogance and inſolence enough, Vologeſes thus inſcribed his letters to Veſpaſian the Roman Emperor, viz. Arſaces, Rex Regum, Flavio Veſpaſiano: giving himſelf the title of King of Kings, but the other nothing but his bare names onely. To which Veſpaſian, without taking notice of the Parthians pride, returned his anſwer to him with this ſuperſcription, Fl. Veſpaſianus Regi Regum Arſacidi: whether with more ſcorn, or modeſty, is hard to ſay. They alſo called themſelves the Brethren of the Sun and Moon, which were the chiefeſt Gods they worſhipped. Great Princes queſtionleſs they were, and kept the Romans harder to it, than all the Kings and States in the world beſides: whoſe names and acts occurre in theſe following Catalogues of

2. The Arſacidan or Parthian Race of the Kings of Perſia.

A.M.

3718. 1. Arſaces, the founder of the Parthian Family.

3741. 2. Mithridates, or Arſaces the 2d. aſſaulted by Antiochus Magnus with an Army of 120000 men; but without ſucceſs.

3761. 3. Pampatius.

3773. 4. Phraartes, the Son of Pampatius.

3783. 5. Mithridates II. brother of Phraartes, ſubdued the Medes, and extended his Empire to Euphrates.

6. Phraartes II. ſlain in a war againſt the Scythians.

3857. 7. Artabanus, Uncle to Phraartes the 2d.

8. Pacorus, the Son of Artabanus.

9. Mithridates III. brother of Pacorus.

3903. 10. Horodes, brother of Mithridates, whom he overcame, and cauſed to be ſlain in his own ſight. He alſo vanquiſhed M. Craſſus, and ſlew 20000 Romans: and becauſe Craſſus was reported to be wondrous covetous, he cauſed molten gold to be poured down his throat, A miſerable death, but in reſpect of the divine Providence, a moſt juſt revenge upon him for his ſacriledge, in robbing the Temple of Hieruſalem, as he marched towards the Parthians. The overthrow, and the diſgrace which thereby hapned to the Romans, was not long afterwards recompenſed by Ventidius, one of the Lieutenants of Mark Antony the Triumvir; who ſlew great numbers of them in a pitched field, and amongſt others, Pacorus the Kings Son: the day of the battel being the ſame in which Craſſus had before been vanquiſhed. After this victory, for which Ventidius had the honour of a Triumph (and the firſt Triumph that ever the Romans had held for a Parthian Victory) he was in a faire way to have ruined this Kingdom, to have ſhrewdly ſhaken it at the leaſt; had not Antony in an envious humour called him from that ſervice. Finally; Horodes was ſlain by his Son Phraartes.

12. Phraartes III. a valiant Prince, but wicked and cruel, as the murther of his own father and many of his brethren doth clearly evidence. Againſt him marched Marcus Antonius with a populous Army, which wanted little of an abſolute overthrow; of 16 Legions, ſcarce ſix returning home in ſafety. This King ſubmitted himſelf and Kingdom unto Auguſtus, reſtoring the Roman Enſigns, and freeing the Captives taken at the defeat of Craſſus. The onely mark of the Parthians ſubjection, was their receiving Kings at the appointment of the Senate and Emperors of Rome; which alſo was of no long continuance.

12. Phraartes IV. Son of Phraartes the 3d. whom he ſlew and ſucceeded.

13. Orodes II. Son of Phraartes the fourth, ſlain in a conſpiracy.

14. Voxon,

14. Vonon, ſubſtituted in the place of Orodes, but outed by

15. Tiridates, who was alſo diſpoſſeſſed of his life and Kingdome by Artabanus, the people flocking to him as a man of Courage, and being offended with the two laſt Kings, becauſe they either had received the Kingdome, or at leaſt a Confirmation in it, from the Roman Emperours. Which Artabanus, though deſcended either from a female, or ſome of the Collaterall line of the former family, yet not being the direct heir thereof, he is looked on as a ſtranger to the blood of the Arſacida, the family of the Arſaces giving place to that of this Artabanus, of which family we have the names of twelve Kings ſucceſſively reigning, the moſt conſiderable of them being Choſroes, the 8th King of this line, from whom the Emperor Trajan gained Armenia, and Meſopotamia, adding them to the Roman Empire. Members whereof they did continue till regained to the Perſian Crown, by Sapores the ninth King of the next Perſian Dynaſty. But for thoſe twelve Kings of this houſe, they are theſe.

6 Artabanus II.
7 Pacorus.
8 Choſroes.
9 Parmaſpates.
10 Vologeſes II.

12 Artabanus III. the laſt King of this new race of the Parthians, whoſe overthrow by the valour of Artaxerxes the firſt Perſian King of the 4th. Dynaſty, occaſioned the tranſlation of the Diadem to the naturall Perſians; after it had continued in two Parthian families, for the ſpace of 470 years. Which Tranſlation, as it was wrought by the unreſiſtable power of God, who onely hath the diſpoſing of Crowns and Scepters; ſo in the way of ſecond cauſes it may be principally referred to the barbarous maſſacre of this people, by Antonius Caracalla the Roman Emperour. Who having negotiated a marriage with the daughter of this Artabanus, and going (as he gave it out) to ſolemnize the Nuptials, was met by the old King, accompanied with the flower of his Nobility, and the choiceſt of his Souldiers, and other Subjects, in Tirumphal Ornaments. Which honourable train was no ſooner come neer his Army, but he commanded his Souldiers (on a watch-word given) to put them all to the ſword, the King hardly eſcaping with his life. Caracalla being dead, and Macrinus ſucceeding in the Throne, the Parthians ſet upon him to revenge that ſlaughter. But underſtanding after a long fight, of three daies continuance, that Macrinus had ſlain Caracalla, they made peace with him: but were ſo weakned and unable to hold their own, that it made the Perſians once more think of recovering to their own Nation the Regall power. For Artaxerxes, a noble and generous Perſian (his name perhaps ſuggeſting ſome high thoughts unto him) did ſo well husband the opportunity, that he ſlew Artabanus the laſt King of the Parthians, and once more brought the Royall ſeat into Perſia. Yet was not this ſo eaſily effected, the Parthians, notwithſtanding their former loſſes, maintaining a cruell fight for three days together: ſo difficult was it to vanquiſh that Nation, when their Forces were broken, impoſſible when they were entire. Artaxerxes proud of this ſucceſs, ſent a peremptory embaſſie to Alexander Severus, the then Roman Emperor, to have all the Provinces of Aſia, which had formerly belonged to the Perſian Monarchy, re-delivered to him: a matter not ſo eaſily granted as demanded. For Severus to ſuppreſs ſo inſolent an enemy, marched towards Perſia with an Army Romanly appointed; which, to find his Eemy more work, he divided into three parts: whereof the firſt was to march into Media, the ſecond into Perſia, the third himſelf led in the mid-way between both, to ſuccour both as occaſion required. But his device ſucceeded not happily; for his two Armies being by the Perſians broken, he with much danger and haſte retired back with the third. This was a good beginning for the Perſian Kingdome, the eſtabliſhment followed not long after, Valerianus the Emperor being vanquiſhed, and taken priſoner by Sapores, the ſecond King of this race. So that now the name of the Perſian grew ſo terrible to the Romans, that Conſtantine the Great tranſplanted many of the Colonies and Garriſons of the North-weſt part of the Empire, into the Eaſt, to keep the Perſian from growing too far upon the Roman Provinces: and removed alſo the ſeat of the Empire nigher unto them, from Rome to Conſtantinople. And thus having ſhewn the beginning and eſtabliſhment, the foundation and building of the new Kingdome of the Perſians: take along with you the Catalogue of their Kings, untill they once more loſt the ſoveraignty of their own Nation, and became ſlaves again to more barbarous Maſters.

630 28 Hormiſda II. the 28 & laſt King of the race of Artaxerxes, or the fourth Dynaſty: of whom beſides the two firſt Kings, whoſe Acts are ſpoken of before, the moſt remarkable were, 1. Vararanes the ſecond, in whoſe time Carus the Emperour paſſing over Euphrates, and laying ſiege to Cteſiphon, was there ſlain by a Thunderbolt. 2. Narſes, the ſon of Vararanes, who firſt diſcomfited Galerius, one of the Cæſars, in the Empire of Diocleſian, and totally ruined his Army: for which Galerius being forced to lacquey it by the Emperours Chariot in his purple Robes, was ſo highly ſhamed, that to recover his credit he ſet upon Narſes once again, routed him, and took priſoners his wives and children. 3. Sapores the ſecond, the ſon of Miſdates, who began his reign before his birth. For his Father dying without iſſue, left his wife with Child: which Child the Magi having ſignified by their Art to be a male, the Perſian Princes cauſed the Crown and Royall Ornaments to be ſet upon his Mothers belly, acknowledging him thereby for their future King. A great and puiſſant Prince he proved, holding continuall war with Conſtantine, and his Succeſſors, till the death of Valens; and gaining from them the beſt part of Meſopotamia: but withall a great perſecuter of the Chriſtians, of whom no fewer than 20000 are ſaid to have ſuffered in his time. 4. Iſdigertes, a Prince ſo eſteemed of by Arcadius the Eaſtern Emperor, that he made him Protector of his Empire, during the minority of his Son Theodoſius: which truſt he royally performed, and was a great friend unto the Chriſtians in his own dominions. 5. Cabades, firſt outed of his Kingdome by Zamaſpes, and reſtored again, was the firſt Perſian King who permitted the free exerciſe of the Chriſtian Religion. He ſlew Zeliobes a King of the Hunnes coming to his aid againſt the Romans, becauſe he had before promiſed to aſſiſt the Emperour, and rooted the Manichean Sect out of his eſtate. 6. Coſroes the Son of Cabades, ſirnamed the Great, a conſtant enemy of the Romans, from whom he conquered a great part of Syria, and took and ſacked the City of Antioch. But finding the war brought home to his own doors, by Mauritius, who was afterwards Emperour, and his own Countries in a flame; he took ſuch thought of it, that he died of a feaver. 7. Coſroes the ſecond, as great an enemie to the Emperour Heraclius, from whom he took all that was left of Meſopotamia, Syria, and the Holy Land, with the City of Hieruſalem it ſelf; moſt of it recovered by Heraclius: in deſpight of whom he cauſed all the Chriſtians in his Kingdome to turn Neſtorians. 8. Hormiſda the ſecond, the laſt of this Dynaſty, who being firſt weakned by Civill and domeſtick diſſentions, was vanquiſhed by Haumer and his Saracens, Anno 634. burying ſo the glory of this renowned Nation in the grave of oblivion, or at leaſt ſubjection.

The Saracenicall Caliphs having added this Kingdome to their huge Empire, appointed here their Deputies, whom they honoured with the name of Sultans: not one ſupream for the whole Kingdome, but ſeverall Governours or Sultans for each ſeverall Province, called by new names, and moulded into many Toparchies, as Chorazan, Mauzenabar, Usbeck, and I wot not what; the Sultans acting of themſelves, and warring one upon another, as their humours led them, without relation to the Caliph or Lord in chief. During which buſtles it ſo hapned, that Mahomet the Sultan of Perſia (ſo called becauſe he was the chief in command and power) picking a quarrell with his neighbour the Sultan of Babylon, (Biſaſiris he is called in ſome Chriſtian Writers, by whom taken or miſtaken for the Caliph himſelf) made War upon him. But finding him countenanced and ſupported by the power of the Caliph, invited the Turks, then poſſeſſed of ſome part of Armenia Major, to come in to his aid: by whoſe means he overthrew the Caliphs forces, and might have got the Soveraignty of Perſia unto himſelf, if he had uſed his victory and his friends with any tolerable diſcretion. But denying to pay theſe Turks their wages, and ſend them home, he occaſioned them to make head againſt him, under the conduct of Tangrolipix their principall Leader; to whom being once in Arms, ſeverall diſcontented perſons of the naturall Perſians, did unite themſelves. Encouraged with which additions, and being furniſhed with Horſe and Armour, and other neceſſaries by the ſpoil of the Countrey, they give battel to the Sultan himſelf: whom having vanquiſhed and ſlain, Tangrolipix by the joint conſent of both Armies is made King of Perſia, the Founder of

2. Axan, the Son of Tangrolipix, by whom Cuthu Muſes, his neer kinſman, was ſent with great forces againſt the Chriſtians, whom he diſpoſſeſſed of a great part of Aſia Minor.

3. Balak, Sultan of Perſia, in the beginning of the wars in the Holy Land, undertaken by the Weſtern Chriſtians, againſt whom he is reported to have ſent his forces. Of whoſe Succeſſors I find nothing till the time of 1198. 4. Caſſanes, the laſt King or Sultan of the Turks, vanquiſhed in the year 1202 by the Cham of Tartary. Which makes me very apt to think, that after the death of Axan, or his next Succeſſor, the Turks loſt the ſoveraignty of Perſia, though they kept the poſſeſſion of ſome parts of it; the Soveraignty thereof being recovered by the Caliphs of Babylon: and that it was ſo held by both, till the Tartars diſpoſſeſſed the one, and deſtroyed the whole progeny of the other, as before was noted. And this I find to be the opinion of Benjamin Tudelenſis, a learned Jew, which had travelled moſt part of the Eaſt; to whoſe judgement herein I ſubſcribe, as moſt ſound and rationall.

The

The Sixth Dynaſty, or the Tartarian race of the Kings of Perſia.

1260. 1. Haalon, or Ulah-Kuhkan, by Occata the great Cham made King of Perſia; exterminated the whole race of the Caliph of Bagdet.

1266. 2. Habkakaihon, the ſon of Haalon.

1282. 3. Nicador Oglan, by Haiton called Tangador, who made himſelf a Mahometan; and was named Hamed; the brother of Habkakaihon.

1284. 4. Argon-Khon, the eldeſt Son of Habkakaihon.

1292. 5. Geniotnkhon, brother of Argon-Khon.

1295. 6. Badukhan, the Unkle of the laſt; of which three there is little memorable.

1296. 7. Gazhun, the Son of Argon; who made Casbin his Imperial ſeat.

1305. 8. Alyaptu, who transferred the Court to Tauris, and is ſaid to have been the founder of Sultania, a chief City of Media; the brother of Gazhun.

1317. 9. Abuſaid, Son of Alyaptu, the laſt of the race of Haalon, that reigned in Perſia. After whoſe death, Anno 1337 (being the 736 of the Mahometan Hegira) the more Potent Princes of the Tartars ſeized on the ſeveral parts and Provinces of it; every one calling himſelf King of that part or Province which he was poſſeſſed of. And amongſt them Gempſas the Sultan or Souldan of Parthia, (though a Perſian born) put in for a ſhare, and made himſelf maſter of his own Province, and ſome parts adjoining: made on that ground by ſome of our Chriſtian writers (who very imperfectly have tranſmitted to us the affairs of this Country) the ſole King of Perſia. In this confuſion it continued till the coming of Tamerlane, who like a furious Whirlwind driving all before him, compoſed the differences, by getting all unto himſelf. But as Philoſophy doth teach us, that no violent motion is of long continuance, ſo the courſe of buſineſs and the ſucceſs of actions may inſtruct us alſo, that a Kingdome forced to bow under the command of a proſperous Army, is not well aſſured to the Victor; but that the fury of the war once paſt, it may return again to its former liberty, or open a more eaſie paſſage to ſome new Invador; and ſo it fared with the conqueſts and ſucceſſes of Tamerlane whoſe iſſue quickly loſt this Kingdom, and almoſt all the reſt of his other purchaſes: leaving but little memory of their names and actions. For partly, by his own prudence, in cantoning his Eſtates amongſt his Children; and partly, by the weakneſs of his Succeſſors in the Realm of Perſia: this Kingdome did relapſe immediately to the ſame confuſions in which he found it; having almoſt as many ſoveraign Kings, as Provinces. Moſt of them Homagers, perhaps to the Kings of the houſe of Tamerlane; and thoſe who afterwards ſucceeded in the Title of Kings of Perſia, of the Turcoman or Armenian Dynaſty, not yet reduced unto this Crown, notwithſtanding the great and proſperous ſucceſſes of the Sophian Family. But for the Kings of the race of Tamerlane, who onely in their times had the honor to be called Kings of Perſia (and well enough content with that:) ſuch as they were, we finde them in this order following.

1405. 10. Mirza Charok, the fourth ſon of Tamerlane, ſucceeded by his appointment in the Realm of Perſia.

1447. 11. Oleghbeg, Son of Mirza Charok, vanquiſhed and ſlain by his own ſon.

1450. 12. Abdalatiſe; ſlain not long after by his own Souldiers.

1451. 13. Abdula, the Son of Oleghbeg, and Brother of Abdalatiſe, vanquiſhed by 1453. 14. Abuſaid II. deſcended from Moroncha, the third ſon of Tamerlane, ſucceeded on the death of Abdula.

1461. 15. Zeuzes, whom ſome call Pooncha, others Malaonches, diſcomfited and ſlain in Battel by Uſſan Caſſanes, Anno 1472. which was about 70. yeares from the death of Tamerlane.

The ſeventh Dynaſty of the Turcoman, or the Armenian race of the Kings of Perſia.

1472. 1. Uſſan Caſſanes, by ſome called Aſymbeius, by others more truely Ozem Azembec, was the Son of Tracheton, one of thoſe poor Armenian or Turcoman Princes, diſpoſſeſſed by Bajazet the firſt, and reſtored by Tamerlane. Encroaching on his neighbours, he was warned to deſiſt by Zeuzes laſt Perſian King; with whom encountring in a pitched field he overcame him, and got that Kingdom by the victory.

1478. 2. Jacub the ſecond Son of Uſſan Caſſanes, having put by his elder Brother, attained the Throne, and repulſed the Mamalucks out of Meſopotamia and Aſſyria, which they had invaded. He was after poiſoned by his wife.

1490. 3. Julaver, a Kinſ-man of Jacubs, ſucceeded him in the eſtate, which he held only three years, and then left it to 1493. 4. Baiſinger, a Prince of the ſame blood; who living in adultery with the wife of Jacub, had conſpired his death. 2.

1495. 5. Ruſtan, aſſaulted by Aider, or Secaider, of the Sophian faction, who then began to be of power.

1498. 6. Alamat, or Hagaret, the laſt King of this Turcoman or Armenian race; firſt vanquiſhed Secaider at the battle of Derbent, and cut off his head: But was afterward overthrown and ſlain by Hyſmael the Son of Aider; upon the quarrel and occaſion which here followeth.

Mahomet the Impoſtor, and firſt Emperor of the Saracens, by his laſt will and Teſtament, bequeathed the ſucceſſion unto that Eſtate, to Hali his neer Kin-ſman, and Husband of Fatime, his Eldeſt Daughter. But Abubezar, Haumar, and Oſmen, three powerfull men, and the Chief Commanders of the Army in the time of Mahomet, ſucceſſively followed one another in the ſupream Dignity. After their death, Hali enjoyed that honour for a little while, ſupplanted firſt, and afterwards vanquiſhed and ſlain by Muhavias, a great man of war, who ſucceeded in it; and to ſecure himſelf therein, ſlew Haſim or Oſſan, the ſon of Hali, and eleven of the ſons of that Oſſan; the twelfth, called Muſa Ceredine, eſcaping with life. From him deſcended lineally one Guiene, the Lord of Ardoville in Media; who conſidering that there had been no Caliph in long time before, began to plot the eſtabliſhing of that high honor in his own family, as the right Heirs to it. A man of ſo great reputation among the people, that Tamerlane having made a Conqueſt of Perſia, thought it no diſhonour to his greatneſs to beſtow a friendly viſit on him. Dying, he left his hopes and projects to his Son, called Aider, who afterwards, for the purity of Religion pretended by him, had the adjunct of Sophy; the word ſo ſignifying in that language: who alſo proved of ſuch eſteem and power with all ſorts of men, that Uſſan-Caſſanes, the firſt King of the Armenian, or Turcoman race, thought fit to make him husband unto one of his Daughters. But on the contrary, Jacub the ſon of Uſſan, and ſome of his ſucceſſors, ſeeing him grow unto ſuch power and eſtimation with the common people; and fearing what he could do, and not what he would do, endeavoured to depreſſe him by all means that might be. Which he not able to remedy, as the Caſe then ſtood, practiſed to adde unto his party, under the popular pretence of reforming things that were amiſs in their Religion; and grew ſo powerful in the end, that he gave battel unto Ruſtan and Alamat, the two laſt Kings of the former race. But Alamat having got the victory, cauſed him to be ſlain; and delivered Hyſmael and Solyman, his two ſons, into the hands of Amazar, a Chief Commander of his own, by him to be kept in perpetual priſon. But Amazar a man of a more ingenuous diſpoſition, afforded them not onely liberty, but alſo good education: inſomuch that Hyſmael Sophi, a towardly young Gentleman, undertooke revenge for the death of his Father; which work he fulfilled, having overcome and ſlain King Alamat, and his ſon Elvan. After this Victory, he being Crowned King, or Shaugh, of Perſia, altered the form of Religion: making Hali, and himſelfe, the true Succeſſors of Mahomet; but condemning Abubezar, Hanmar, and Oſmen, with the Turks, as Rebels and Schiſmaticks.

Hence proceeded the divers Wars, which to the Perſians lois hath happened between them and the Turks: the Perſians burning whatſoever book or Monument they finde concerning thoſe three; and the Turks holding it more meritorious to kil one Perſian, than ſeventy Chriſtians. Surius, in his Commentaries, writiug purpoſely of the Acts of Hyſmael, ſaith, that the Jews, on ſome fond conceit, were perſwaded that he was the Meſſiah they had ſo long looked for: but it proved quite contrary, there never being Prince that more vexed and greived them.

The eighth Dynaſty, or Sophian race of the Kings of Perſia.

1505. 1. Hyſmael Sophi, the founder of this family, over thrown by Selimus the firſt, in the Calderan fields. 20.

1525. 2. Tamas, the Son of Hyſmael, vanquiſhed by Solyman the Magnificent, who took from him the Countreys of Chaldaa, Aſſyria, and Meſopotamia, with ſome parts of Media. 53.

1571. 3. Aider, the ſecond Son of Tamas, obtained the Kingdome, impriſoning his elder brother; but his cruelty being too much feared, he was made away, by the practice of Periancona his own Siſter, having reigned only fifteen dayes.

4. Hyſmael II. eldeſt ſon of Tamas, reſtored unto his Fathecs Throne; but murdered with the privity of his Siſter alſo, who found him of too rough a nature for her to govern; having reigned neer two years.

1579. 4. MahometCodabanda, advanced unto the throne by his Siſters faction (as being of a milder and more tractable natu e) at his firſt entrance cauſed her to be beheaded for the former murders. During his time, not fully ſetled in the State, Amurath the 3d. by his Leivtenants won from him almoſt al Armenia, Media, and great part of Gorgia. 7.

1485. 6. Abas, the ſecond ſon of Mahomet, having treacherouſly practiſed the death of Mirza, his elder brother, ſucceeded his Father, recovered almoſt all which the Turks had gained, and added the Kingdomes of Ormus, Heri, Candahor, and Hyrcania, to the Crown of Perſia.

7. Soffie, the Nephew of Abas by his ſon Mirza, (whoſe eyes he cauſed to be put out, on a falſe ſuſpition) at the age of fifteen years ſucceeded: committed by his Grand-father, during his minority, to the protection of Emangoly, Chawn, or Duke of Shiras. A Prince, who ſince he came to age, hath had a good hand againſt the Turks, attempting the recovery of Bagdat and other places, which had been taken from them in the time of Abas.

The Government of theſe Perſian Kings, though it be deſpotical and ſevere, hath a great deal leſs of the Tyrant in it, then any other of the Mahometan Kings or Princes: theſe cheriſhing their Brethren, maintaining Nobility amongſt them, and incouraging induſtry; which makes them to be better ſerv'd than the Turk, or Tartar; to both whom they are far inferiour, both in power and Treaſure. Their Officers of State, and men of principle imployment, for the moſt part Eunuchs (as generally in all the Empires of the Eaſt:) ſuch Perſons being thought moſt truſty, becauſe abſtracted from the obligations of wife and children, they ſtudy more the Princes ſervice then their own advantages. Their forces conſiſt moſt of Horſe, to which they are inclined more generally, then to ſerve on foot; and yet the greateſt body of horſe which they have brought at any time into the field, came not to above 30000; but thoſe well furniſhed and appointed, maintained on Lordſhips and eſtates, after the manner of the Turkiſh Timariots. The Foot-Souldiers of his own Countries, but poor and raw, and very ſeldome ſtand their ground, that defect being for the moſt part ſupplied by Mercenaries. The inconvenience of which being found by Sultan Abas, he ſerved himſelf of children bought of Chriſtian Parents, neer the Euxine Sea (from whence the Egyptian Sultans had their Mamalucks) whom they call by the name of Cozel-Baſſas, or Red caps, ſo named from the colour of their Turbans: trained up by them in their Religion, & warlike diſcipline, as the Turks, their Janizaries; yet farre inferiour to the Turks, againſt whom if they have prevailed ſince the time of Abas, they may aſcribe the greateſt part of their good fortune to thoſe diviſions and Rebellions which in theſe late times have been frequent in the Turkiſh Empire. And as for their Sea-forces, they are inconſiderable. For though they have a large Sea-Coaſt both on the Perſian Bay, the Caſpian Sea, and the Southern Ocean; yet are they very poor in ſhipping: ſuffering the Moſcovite to ingroſs the trade of the Caſpian Sea; the Portugals, to manage that of the Southern Ocean; as formerly that alſo of the Perſian Bay, till the taking of Ormus.

The Revenues of this Kingdome, in the time of Hyſmael the firſt Sophy, were exceeding great: inſomuch that Tamas his Succeſſor, to ingratiate himſelf with all ſorts of people, releaſed them of all kinds of Cuſtomes impoſed on Merchandiſe, either imported or exported. And this, they ſay, amounted to the ſum of 90000 Tomans yearly: which, reckoning every Toman at 20 Crowns, made up a million and 800000 Crowns of annual income. Which, notwithſtanding, his Revenue was computed at four or five millions of Crowns yearly; raiſed out of Demeaſn lands, the tenth of fruits, the profit of mines, and the fine payed by every Subject when he ſets up ſhop. But Tamas finding this not to be ſufficient to maintain his Royalty, doubled the value of his money, and thereby for the preſent his Revenues alſo. Since that they have been much impaired by the Conqueſts made upon them by the Turks; who had got from them ſo much land as maintained 40000 Timariots, and yielded to the Grand ſignieur on million of yearly income; whether improved again, or not, to their former height, I am not able to determine.

And ſo much for PERSIA.

TARTARIA.

TARTARIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with China, the Orientall Ocean, and the ſtreights of Anian (if ſuch ſtreights there be) by which parted from America; on the Weſt, with Ruſſia, and Podolia, a Province of the Realm of Poland; on the North, with the main Scythick or Frozen Ocean: and on the South, with part of China, from which ſeparated by a mighty wall; the River Oxus parting it from Bactria and Margiana, two Perſian Provinces; the Caſpian Sea, which ſeparates it from Media, and Hyrcania; the Caucaſian Mountains interpoſing betwixt it and Turcomania; and the Euxine, which divideth it from Anatolia, and Thrace. So called from the Tartars, a puiſſant and mighty people, now poſſeſſed hereof; the reaſon of whoſe name we ſhall ſhew hereafter.

It containeth all thoſe great and ſpacious Provinces, which the Antients called Seres, Scythia extra Imaum, Scythia intra Imaum, Sacæ, Sogdiana, the greateſt part of Sarmatia Aſiatica, and part of Sarmatia Europæa: extending it ſelf the whole length of Aſia, from the River Tanais, to the Eaſtern Ocean; taking in Taurica Cherſoneſus, and ſome other parts of Europe alſo. So that if we meaſure it by miles, it is ſaid to contain 5400 from Eaſt to Weſt, and 3600 from North to South; a greater quantity of ground than the Turkiſh Empire, but of leſſe fertility and accompt.

In meaſuring by the way of degrees, it reacheth from the 50 degree of Longitude, to the 195 which is 145 degrees from Weſt to Eaſt; and from the 40th degree of Northern Latitude, unto the 80. which is within ten degrees of the Pole it ſelfe. By which accompt it lieth from the beginning of the ſixt Clime, where the longeſt day in ſummer is 15 houres, till they ceaſe meaſuring by Climates; the longeſt day in the moſt Northern parts hereof, being full ſix moneths; and in the winter halfe of the year, the night as long.

The Country lying under ſuch different Meridians, and ſuch diſtant Climes, muſt needs be ſuch, as no generall Character can be given of it; and therefore we ſhall deferre that, with the names of the Rivers and Chief Mountains, to the deſcription of the ſeveral and particular Provinces. But for the People, being much of the ſame nature in every part, we may take the meaſure of them here. Affirmed to be of ſquare Stature, broad faces, hollow eyes, thin beards, thick lips, flat noſes, ugly Countenances; ſwart of complexion, not ſo much by the heat of the Sun, (which keeps far enough off) as their naturall ſluttiſhneſs. Barbarous every where in behaviour, eſpecially in thoſe parts, which they call Aſiatica, and Antiqua: but withall very ſtrong of body, ſwift of footmanſhip, vigilant in time of ſervice, and patient of all extreamities both of cold and hunger. The women ſuitable unto the men, ſcorning or wanting ornaments to ſet themſelves out, or when they do, they ſeldom go beyond copper, feathers, or ſuch precious gu-gaws.

In behaviour they are rude and barbarous, as before was ſaid; eating their Enemies when they take them, as in way of revenge; firſt letting out their blood, which they receive into Cups, and uſe it as wine unto their feaſt. Though ſwift of foot, yet generally they love to ride, though it be but on Oxen; about whoſe necks, as about their horſes, when they travell, they uſe little bells, with which muſick they are much delighted. Their ſpeech, even in their common talk, is a kind of whining; and their ſinging little better then the howling of wolves. They eat commonly with unwaſhed hands, the durt and greaſe about their fingers ſerving for ſawce to their meat, which they devour greedily, and with little chewing; and for their ordinary drink uſe mares milk; homely of Habit, made of the courſeſt ſtuff, and reaching no lower than the knee: and if they go to the charge of furrs, contrary to the cuſtome of other people, they wear the hairy ſide outwards, and the skin next their own bodies, onely to ſhew the richneſs of their Apparel. And yet ſo proud in this beggary, that they account the Chriſtians but as dogs, contemn all the reſt of the world, and think their Cham the onely conſiderable Prince; by whoſe name they ſwear, as by their Gods.

In matter of Religion, it is hard to ſay, whether Mahometaniſm, or Paganiſm, be of moſt extent: ſome parts hereof being wholly Pagan, ſome wholly Mahometan, and ſome mixt of both. But of the two the Pagan is the better Gentleman, as being of the elder houſe, and of more Antiquity: the Sect of Mahomet not being entertained amongſt them, till the year 1246.

And yet theſe have not ſo prevailed, as to extinguiſh the remainders of Chriſtianity, of which there are amongſt them many ſeveral Churches. The Chriſtian faith firſt planted amongſt the Scythians, by the preaching of Saint Andrew, and Saint Philip, two of the Apoſtles. Overgrown in theſe latter Ages by the Sect of Neſtorians, either by the diligence of their Preachers, or for want of others to inſtruct them in more Orthodox Tenets. Before the prevaling of the Tartars, beſides the Circaſſian Chriſtians of whom more anon, there are in the moſt remote parts of Tartarie, whole Kingdomes of that Religion; as namely that

that of Tenduch, then the chiefeſt of all: beſides ſome numbers of them in Tanguth, Cauchinteles, Caſſar, Samarchan, Karthim, Suchair, Ergimul, and Caraiam; where in the time of Paulus Venetus, who ſurveyed theſe parts about the year 127. they lived intermingled with the Pagans. Not ſo diminiſhed ſince the Conqueſt of thoſe Countries by the Tartars, but that they are of a conſiderable number, eſpecially in Cathay it ſelf: where they are ſaid to have a Metropolitan in the City of Cambalu (the principal City of that Empire) and he ſo honoured by the great Cham, that for a time they receive their Crowns from no hands but his.

As for the Tartars, they are by the Chronologer Genebrard ſaid to be the off-ſpring of the Ten Tribes, whom Salmanaſſer led away captive, and that eſpecially for three reaſons. The firſt is, that the word Tatari, by which name (ſaith he) they ought rather to be called, than by that of Tartari, ſignifieth in the Syriack and Hebrew tongues, a Remnant. But unto this it is anſwered, that the name of this people is derived from the River Tartar, as ſome; or from the Region called Tartar, where they firſt dwelt, as moſt think: and again, that though the Hebrew and תרתר ſignifie a remnant, yet can it not properly be applyed to the Tartars; who ſo infinitely exceed the Jews, that they cannot be thought to be a remainder of them. Secondly, he alledgeth for proof thereof, that this people uſe circumciſion, the character of the Jewiſh Nation. And hereunto it is replyed, that circumciſion was common to many people, beſides the Jews, as to the Ægyptians, Æthiopians, &c. and that rather as a national cuſtome, than a religious ordinance; and again, that the Tartars cannot be proved to have received circumciſion, before they received Mahometaniſm. Thirdly, there is brought to confirm this opinion, a place of Eſdras, cap. 13. lib. 2. where it is ſaid, that the Ten Tribes (that they might the better keep Gods Statutes) paſſed over the River Euphrates; and after a journey of one year and a half, came into a Countrey called Arſareth. To refell which, thoſe of the contrary opinion find no better courſe, than by ſhewing the impoſſibilities of it. For the Tartars (when their name was firſt known) were meer Idolaters, had no remembrance of the Law, obſerved not the Sabbath, nor any other point of Jewiſh religion: and ſo the Ten Tribes retired not hither to keep Gods Statutes. Secondly, Euphrates lyeth quite Weſt from Aſſyria, and thoſe places to which Salmanaſſer tranſplanted the Iſraelites: and ſo it could not be paſſed over in a journey towards the North. And Thirdly, it is very improbable, that the Ten Tribes ſhould either be ſo ſimple, as to leave Aſſyria, where they were peaceably ſetled; or ſo valiant, as to force a paſſage through thoſe Countries of Scythia, which neither Perſians, Greeks, or Romans were able to withſtand in the beſt of their fortunes.

To let paſs therefore all imaginations of a forrein Pedegree, the truth is, that they were no other than a Ruder and more Northern brood of Scythians; who preſſed by want, or otherwiſe oppreſſed by the King of Tenduch, unto whom they were ſubject, armed themſelves againſt him, obtained a memorable victory, and ſetled Cingis their chief Captain in the Royal Throne, Anno 1162. After which, growing of more power, and inlarging their dominions further, they united in the name of Tartars all the Scythian Nations: as Mahomet did thoſe of the three Arabia's, in the name of Saracens; or as in former times, the many ſeverall Tribes of the German Nations, were united in the names of Franks, or Alemans. Not known in Europe by this name, till their many great and ſignall victories had made them formidable; which was about the year 1212. within very little of which time they had made themſelves Maſters of a larger Empire than that of Macedon, or Rome, in their greateſt glories. But being of a haſty growth, it decaied as ſuddenly; the greateſt part of their Europæan purchaſes being conquered from them by the Dukes of Muſcovy, and the Kings of Poland; as their acqueſts in Aſia and Africk, by the Turks and Perſians. Yet ſtill they are poſſeſſed of ſo large a Territory, that were they not diſtracted into ſeveral States; or did thoſe ſeverall ſtates depend upon one Supreme: that one Supreme might very eaſily give law unto all his Neighbours, and make the Turks and Perſians tributaries, as in former times. But laying aſide theſe ſpeculations, of what they might do if united under one command: let us now look upon them as they are divided into theſe five parts, that is to ſay, 1. Tartaria Precopenſis, 2. Aſiatica, 3 Antiqua, 4 Zagathay, and 5. Cathay.

1. TARTARIA PRECOPENSIS.

TARTARIA PRECOPENSIS is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Tanais, now Don; on the Weſt, with the River Boryſthenes, now called Nerper, by which laſt parted from Podolia, a Province of Poland; on the North, with part of Ruſſia, and on the South, with ſome part of the Euxine Sea: by this account lying totally within Europe.

It had the name of Precopenſis, from Precopia a chief Town thereof. By ſome called Tartaria Minor, to diſtinguiſh it from the greater body of that people: the Inhabitants hereof moſt commonly paſſing by the name of Crim-Tartars, from the Town of Crim, in which their Cham or Emperour doth reſide moſt uſually. The Countrey by them now poſſeſſed, part antiently of Sarmatia Europæa, was inhabited by a warlike nation called the Tauri: from whom thoſe parts hereof which lie betwixt the Empire of Ruſſia, and the two Rivers Tanais, and Boryſthenes, were called Tauro-Scythia; that which ſhooteth out into the Sea, encompaſſed with the Euxine on the one ſide, and Palus Mœotis on the other, being called Taurica Cherſoneſus. In the deſcription whereof at this place and time, as formerly I made bold with ſome part of Aſia, to lay together the eſtate of the Ruſſian Empire: ſo now to ſatisfie for that treſpaſs, I ſhall make bold with part of Europe, to lay together the diſcourſe and affairs of Tartary.

The whole Countrey plentiful of fruits, and the ſoyl indifferently diſpoſed to tillage and grazing, though more accuſtomed unto the laſt: the people more delighting in their herds of cattell, than in the fulneſs of their Garners. Camels, Horſe, Oxen, Sheep, and Goats they have plenty of; great ſtore of delicate

licate fowl, and abundance of fiſh, bred in the large Fens of Mœotis, and in their Foreſts plenty of all ſorts of Veniſon. Which Character as it belongeth generally to all the Country, ſo moſt eſpecially to the Cherſoneſe or Demy-Iſland. United to the main land with ſo narrow an Iſthmus; that the Tartars once went about to dig it thorow: from whence ſome ſay they had the name of Precopenſes, Precoph in the Sclavonian tongue, ſignifying a deep trench, or a digging thorow. In length not above 24 German, or 96 Italian miles; in breadth but 60 of the one, or 15 of the other. Bleſt with a very temperate Air, and a gentle winter: which beginning with the laſt of December, ends the firſt of March. Never extream, and when the froſts are at the ſharpeſt, but of ſhort continuance. Divided in the midſt with a chain of hills, extended from Eaſt to Weſt; the boundary of the Dominions of the Turk and Tartar.

The people of the ſame complexion and compoſition, as the reſt of the Tartars; and not much different in manners. Their diet, Roots, Cheeſe, Garlick, and of the poorer ſort, for the moſt part, horſe-fleſh (none but the better ſort preſuming upon Beef or Veniſon, though of both abundance) which they eat without bread or any thing elſe: and therefore when they go to wars, every Souldier takes two horſes with him, the one to ſerve upon, and the other to kill. And yet for all this havock which they make of horſe-fleſh, there are few years in which they ſell not 40 or 50000 in the fairs of Moſco. Towns they build none, ſcarce willing to maintain thoſe which were built to their hands. Nor have they (except men of trades and manufactures) any ſtanding houſes; removing up and down with their Droves of Cattell, moving their houſes with them (which they build on wheels) from one place to another. Of money they make no eſteem, preferring braſs and ſteel before other metals, becauſe more uſefull to them for ſwords and knives. Good Souldiers for the moſt part, eſpecially at the Bow and Arrows; to which ſo accuſtomed from their child-hood, that they can ſhoot as readily backward as forward. Trained alſo of late times to the Harquebuſe, well skilled in handling the Turkiſh Scimatars, and their horſemens ſtaves. Not to be vanquiſhed but by death, as men that are reſolved rather to die than be taken Priſoners: and if victorious, more intent upon taking Captives (eſpecially young Boys and Girls, whom they ſell to the Turks) than upon any other booty or ſpoil of war.

The Religion moſt embraced and countenanced is that of Mahomet, mingled with ſome of their old principles of Chriſtianity: for they confeſs that CHRIST ſhall be the Judge both of the quick and dead, in the day of Judgement, and puniſh thoſe that ſpeak irreverently of him. In that regard more favourable to the Chriſtians, than other Mahometans, which makes great ſtore of Grecian and Armenian Chriſtians to dwell amongſt them. The language which they ſpeak is their own Tartarian, but intermixt with much of the Arabick, and Turkiſh Tongues; and when they write, they uſe either Chaldaan, or Arabian Characters.

Rivers of moſt note in it, are 1. Boryſthenes, and 2. Tanais, which though they have their ſpring-heads in the Empire of Ruſſia (as was there declared) have their falls in this: the firſt in the Euxine Sea, in the 57th. the other into Palus Mœotis in the 67th. degree of Longitude, by which we may conjecture ſomewhat of the length of the Countrey. 3. Hipanes, 4. Carcimitis, falling into the Euxine. 5. Agaris, and 6. Byces, which loſe themſelves in the Fens of Mœotis; as alſo do 7. Paſiaſcus, 8. Gerus, 9 Lycus, from the main land, and 10. Iſtrianus from the Taurican Cherſoneſe. By the confluence of which waters, and many others falling from the Aſian ſide, the Lake or Fens of Mœotis are of great extent, in compaſs at leaſt a thouſand miles, well ſtored with fiſh, and ſtill retaining ſomewhat of the ſweetneſs of thoſe many Rivers which are emptied into it. So called from the Mœota, who formerly inhabited on the banks hereof, and giving name to an excellent kind of fiſh which were called Mœotides by the Antients. At this day generally called Mar delle Zabahe, by the Italians commonly Mar delle Tana, the ſea of Tanais; and ſometimes alſo Mer Bianeo, or the White Sea; to difference it from the Euxine, which they call the Black, for the reaſons formerly delivered. Paſſing directly towards the South, it is ſtreightned by a narrow Channel, not above four miles in breadth, though about 24 in length, called antiently by the name of Boſphorus Cimmerius: Boſphorus, becauſe Oxen did uſually ſwim over it; Cimmerius from the Cimmerii who poſſeſſed the adjoyning Countrey on the Aſian ſide: but known at this day by the name of Strotto di Caffa, from the City Capha neer unto it; and by the Inhabitants, Veſpero, more neer the Original. Out of this Streight that confluence of waters which do meet in the Mœotick Fens, do make their way into the Euxine. According to that of Lucan.

Quaque fretum currens Mœotidas egerit undas.

Chief Cities of it at the preſent, 1. Capha, or Caffa, in the Cherſoneſe, not far from the Streight called hence Stretto di Caffa, a flouriſhing Empire, and furniſhed with a large and capacious Haven. Heretofore poſſeſſed by the Genoeſe, who by the benefit of this Port, and the Plantation which they had in Perah on the North ſide of Conſtantinople, engroſſed into their own hands the whole Trade of the Euxine. Taken by Mahomet the Great, Anno 1475. it became ſubject unto the Turks, and drew into that thraldom all the Southern parts of the Cherſoneſe, which depended on it: deprived thereby of the greateſt part of its former luſtre, the Chriſtian Churches being deſtroyed, the Towers and publique buildings razed, the houſes of the Genoa Merchants which were fair and beautiful, deſtroyed and ruined: yet ſtill the principall of this biand, or Demy-Iſland, and antiently better known by the name of Theodoſia, and by that name remembred in Ammianus. 2. Precoph, in Latine called Precopia, a Town and Caſtle ſcituate in or neer the place where ſtood the Eupateria of the Antients: called alſo Pompeiopolis, Heraclea, and Achillis, Curſus, 3. Corſunum, the Cherſoneſus of Ptolomy, anciently a Greek Golony; and then accounted for the chief of the

the whole Peninſula : rich, populous,and well traded, by reaſon of the Haven which was ſafe and large; and of great beauty and magnificence, as the ruins teſtifie. By the Turks at this day called Sari Germanum, or the yellow Tower, the ſoyl about it being of a Saffron colour. 4. Cremam, or Crim, the antient Seat of the Chams or Princes of theſe Tartars; and at that time the faireſt and greateſt of this Biland. Situate in the middeſt thereof, fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle; for the height of the walls, and depth of the ditch eſteemed impregnable : ſuppoſed to be the Taphre of Pliny, or the Taphros of Ptolomy. Mentioned by Florus, as then lately taken by ſome Roman Empire, and ſo moſt likely to be Trajan; the firſt that ever extended the Roman Empire beyond Dannbius, and the Euxine. Scituate in the very Iſthmus, and ſo commanding both the Euxine, and the Lakes of Mæotis; as Corinth betwixt the Ægean, and Ionian Seas. 5. P*anticapæum*, ſcituate on the very Boſphorus, and now called Voſpero by the natives: the antienteſt City of this P*eninſula*, and ſaid by Ammianus to be the mother of all the Greek Colonies which were planted in it. 6. Tanas, The Tanais of P*tolomy*,and other antients,becauſe ſcituate on the mouth of the River; or rather betwixt the two mouths of it, diſtant from one another a degree of longitude. A town of great trade, and well frequented by the Merchants of all thoſe Countries which border on the Euxine Sea : but ſubject to the Turks who have here a Garriſon, and by them called Azac. 7. Ingermenum, ſcituate on a large and lofty Mountain, and fortified with a Tower or Caſtle of ſtone; under which there is a Church, with great charge and art cut out of the Rock : formerly of great wealth and fame,now decayed and ruinous. 8. Jamboli,by ſome called Balachium. 9. Mancopia, by the Turks called Mangutum, 10 Circum; all boaſting of their ſeverall Caſtles. 11. Oczakow, or Oczacovia,ſcituate neer the influx of the great River Boriſthenes, into the Bay of Carcimitis, and ſo moſt like to be built in the place of that which P*tolomy* calleth Olbiah, P*liny Olbiopolis*. Honoured of late times (ſince the taking of Taurica by the Turks) with the reſidence of the Great Cham : from whence theſe Tartars are by ſome called Olſanenſes. 12. Metropolis, as P*tolomy*, or rather Miletopolis,as P*liny* calleth it; a Colony in old times of the Mileſians, not farre from Olbiah. Beſides all which, and many others mentioned by the antient Writers,of which there is nothing now remaining;the Court of the great Cham in Summer time makes a moveable City; built upon Wheel-houſes, and tranſported from one place to another, as occaſion ſerveth : which houſes at every ſtation are orderly diſpoſed of into Streets, and lanes, and by the Tartars are called Agara, or a Town of Carts.

The antient inhabitants hereof were of the Scythian race;for by that name ſome elder writers call not onely the true and proper Scythians, lying on both ſides of Imaus;but even the Sauromatæ or Sarmatians alſo:and thoſe not onely of Sarmatia Aſiatica, bordering next unto them; but even ſuch Europæan nations, as lived on the Northern Banks of Iſter, and the Euxine Sea; and ſo they are affirmed to be by P*tolomy* himſelfe; though otherwiſe more exact then any, in diſtinguiſhing Sarmatia Europæa, from Aſiatica; and Aſiatica from the Scythians. For ſpeaking of the nations of Sarmatia Europæa,inhabiting on the P*alus Mœotis*, he ranks them thus : Καὶ παρ' ὅλην τ̃ πλευρὰν τῆς Μαιώτιδος, &c. And all a long the Coaſts of Mœotis dwell the Jazges (diſtinct from thoſe called Metanaſtæ) and the Roxolani; and more within the Land, the Hamoxobii and Alani, Scythians. More towards the banks of the Euxine,and in the Cherſoneſe it ſelf,dwell the antient Tauri, ſubdivided into the ſeveral Nations of the Sinchi, Napæi,and Arinchi,by the ſaid P*tolomy* included in the general name of Tauro Scythi. To none but theſe,of all the Europæan Sarmatians,doth he give this name. And therefore I conceive them to have been thoſe Scythians,againſt whom Darius King of P*erſia* made his fruitleſs war. Picking a quarrel with this people, becauſe their King had denied to give him one of his daughters to wife; or to revenge, as others more improbably ſay, the inrode which the Scythians formerly had made into Aſia;he drew together an army of 700 thouſand, Paſſing over the Thracian Boſphorus, he came at laſt to the Banks of Iſter, where it parteth Moldavia,and Bulgaria; and there,for the paſſage of his men,cauſed a bridge to be built;to the keepers whereof he left a Cord of 60 knots : commanding them every day to untie one knot; and if he came not back before all were untied, to return to their houſes. This done he marched towards his enemies, who ſtill fled before him; leading him into the moſt deſert and unhabitable parts of their Country : and when they had brought him into a ſtreight, ſent Embaſſadors to him with a Bird, a Mouſe, a Frog, and an handfull of Arrows;willing the P*erſians*,if they could,to expound that Riddle. Darius willing to hope the beſt of his deſigne,conjectured that the Scythians did ſubmit unto him;by delivering into his hands their Air, E*arth*, Water, and Arms, Hieroglyphically ſignified in their preſent. But Gobrias, one of the ſeven P*rinces*,made this expoſition, that if the P*erſians* could not fly like a Bird thorow the Air, or like a Mouſe creep under the Earth, or like a Frog ſwim over the Water, they could by no meanes ſcape the S*cythian* Arrows. And to ſay truth,this Commentary beſt agreed with the Text. For theſe Scythians following cloſe upon him, or rather driving him before them, and vexing him with continual skirmiſhes,forced him to make ſuch haſte to get over the River,that he loſt 80000 of his men in the fight and flight. This was the only Memorable action of theſe Europæan S*cythians*, in thoſe Elder ages: more memorable in the times ſucceeding, for their horrid cruelty, than any argument of their valour. For it is ſaid of theſe Tauri, or Tauro-Scythæ, that for the pleaſing of their Gods, eſpecially of Diana, whom they called Orſiloche, they uſed to ſacrifice all ſuch ſtrangers as they could lay hands on, and with their heads moſt barbarouſly adorned the walls of her Temples. An inhumanity with which the Chriſtian Advocates of the Primitive times did much uſe to upbraid the Gentiles;taunting them with the ſacrifices of Di*ana Tanrica* (ſo named from hence)as inconſiſtent with the nature of a God or goodneſs; moſt rightly giving them this Brand or cenſure, that they were not ſacra, but S*acrilegia*. Et præſtat prophanus eſſe, quam ſic religioſus. Better it was,to be of no Religion, then of one ſo cruel.

But to go forwards with the ſtory, in the actions of the Greeks and Romans we hear nothing of them, unleſs it were that the Emperor Trajan (as Florus ſeems to intimate) took the City of Taphre. Which if he did, he added by that action ſomething to his own honour, but nothing to the Roman Empire: this people being never reckoned amongſt their Provinces. Nor hear we any thing by name, of their infeſting the Roman territories (as the other barbarous Nations did:) except they paſſed in the account of the Gothes, Alani, Hunnes, Avares, or other of the Scythians, or Sarmatian people; by which the Majeſty of that Empire was trod under foot. But what the Perſians, Greeks, and Romans were not able to do, was with eaſe affected by the Tartars. Who in the time of Jocchata, or Hoccata, the next to Cingis, under the conduct of Bathu, or Roydo, one of their moſt renowned Commanders, ſubdued all theſe parts, together with Ruſſia, on the North, Bulgaria, and Hungary on the Eaſt. Subject at firſt to the command of the Great Cham of Cathaia, as the reſt of the Tartarians were; they came at laſt to have a Prince of their own; one Lochtan Cham, deſcended from the aforeſaid Bathu, and (as it was pretended) of the blood of Cingis. They grew at laſt of ſo great power, by Conquering the Aſiatick Tartars, which lay neereſt to them, that Mahomet the Great thought fit to keep them down before grown too ſtrong for him: and therefore under colour of taking in the City of Capha, then poſſeſſed by the Genoeſe, made himſelf Maſter of the greateſt part of the Taurican Cherſoneſe, and the Port of Tanais; thereby commanding both Mœotis and the Euxine Sea. In the time of Selimus the firſt, who had married the daughter of this Crim-Tartar (for ſo they called him) and was aided by him with an Army of 15000 men againſt his Father; the Turks and theſe Tartarians grew into a League. The chief conditions of it were, that the Tartar ſhould aid the Turk upon all occaſions, with 60000 horſe, if it were required; that they ſhall not make war with any of their neighbors, (except the Muſcovite) without leave of the Turk; that they ſhall pay yearly to the Grand ſignieur, in the way of Tribute, 300 Chriſtians; that the new Cham, upon the death or depoſition of his Predeceſſor, ſhall receive from the Great Turk a Royal Banner, in token of his Conſirmation in that eſtate; that in reward of theſe ſervices, the Crim-Tartar ſhall have yearly from the Grand-ſignieur 5500 Ducates, in the way of penſion; and ſucceed finally in the Turkiſh Empire, if ever the male iſſue of the houſe of Ottoman ſhould chance to fail. According unto this agreement, the Tartars have been aiding to the Turks from time to time, againſt the Perſians, Polanders, Hungarians, Moldavians, and indeed whom not; and that with great and puiſſant Armies; the Great Cham ſometimes arming 150000 of his own Subjects (leaving but one man in an houſe to attend their cattel;) and ſometimes adding 50000 Circaſſians; and others of the Aſian Tartars. And for the Muſcovite, whom he is left at liberty to aſſault by this Capitulation; he hath had ſo hard an hand upon him, that in the year 1571. they pierced as far as to the City of Moſco, and ſet fire on the ſuburbs: which flaming into the City built moſt of wood, and then reckoned to be 30 miles in compaſs; within the ſpace of four houres burnt the greateſt part of it, and therein no fewer then 800000 of all ſorts of people: A quarrel not to be compoſed; the Tartar not onely laying claim to the Kingdomes of Caſſan and Aſtrachan, which the Ruſſe poſſeſſeth; but even to Moſcovie it ſelf, as hath there been ſhewn. Nothing ſo punctual is the Turk, on his part, to performe the contract; who not content to have the Tartar for his friend, or at the worſt his Homager, hath of late times attempted to make him his ſlave or Vaſſall. For Amurath the third, quarrelling Mahomet the Crim-Tartar for a deſign to intercept Oſman Baſſa, in his way from Perſia to Conſtantinople, authoriſed the ſame Oſman to war upon him: by whom the poor Crim and his two Sons, betrayed by ſome of his own Counſellors (corrupted with Turkiſh Gold) were ſtrangled with a Bowſtring; Iſlau a brother of the Crims, firſt ſworn a Vaſſal to the Turk, put into the place; and over him a Turkiſh Beglerbeg or Baſſa, to command in chief. What hopes he hath of ſucceeding in the Turkiſh Empire, if the houſe of Ottoman ſhould fail, hath been already taken into conſideration, in our diſcourſe upon that ſubject.

What the Revenue of this Prince is, it is hard to ſay; his ſubjects having little money, and living moſt upon the bartery of their Cattel. But beſides what he hath in lands or Cuſtomes, and the 5500 Ducats yearly which he receiveth from the Turk; he hath the tenth of all the ſpoils which are got in the Wars, and a Checkine for every captive, for ſome, two or three, (whoſoever taketh them) according unto their eſtates,

As for his power, what he can do in horſe we have ſeen already; and as for foot, and Ammunition, and other neceſſaries, he is ſupplied with them by the Turk, (who doth ſometimes eſpouſe his quarrels;) by whoſe aſſiſtance they have brought the Moſcovites to ſome extremities. And upon confidence of the favour and protection of the Grand Signieur, the Cham then being, upon the death of Stephen Bathori whom Amurath the 3d. commended to the Crown of Poland) ſent Embaſſadors to negotiate his election to that Kingdome: and to induce them thereunto promiſed them in his letters amongſt other things, that their Pope ſhould be his Pope, their Luther his Luther; and that rather than put them unto any charge to finde his Table, he could live with Horſe-fleſh. His Embaſſie entertained with Laughter, as it well deſerved.

2. TARTARIA DESERTA.

TARTARIA DESERTA is bounded on the Weſt, with Precopenſis, and the Empire of Ruſſia; on the Eaſt, with Antiqua, and Zagathay; from which laſt parted by the River Spane, which falleth into the Caſpian Sea about the middle of it, and with the great Lake of Kitay, from Eaſt to Weſt: on the North, with the Scythick or frozen Ocean; and on the South, with part of the Euxine Sea, the Caucaſian Mountains, and ſome part of the Caſpian.

It took this name from the many Deſarts which are in it; and is called alſo Aſiatica, to difference it from Precopenſis, which is wholly in Europe: or becauſe it taketh up the whole Continent of Sarmatia Aſiatica, according to the bounds thereof laid down by Ptolomy, except ſome part hereof incorporated to the Ruſſian Empire.

The Countrey of it ſelf ſufficiently fruitful, if well manured; and were it in the hands of a laborious d induſtrious people, would yield large increaſe: as appears by the ill husbandry of the Tartars, who w nothing on it but Mill and Punicum (grains unknown to us) and yet without giving it any tillage, ceive very plentiful returns of both. But the Tartar being a Nation that hateth Agriculture, & laugheth the Chriſtians for living on the tops of Reeds, (ſo they call our bread); neglect all that which is not of rank paſture for their Herds and Cattel: moving from one place to another, as the Graſs faileth em, which maketh it ſo full of Deſarts, and ſo empty of Towns, as to deſerve the name of Tartaria eſerta.

Deſerta.

The people or Inhabitants of it are of ſeverall ſorts; derived from three ſeverall Originals, and diſ-oſed of in three ſeverall parts. 1. The Samoyeds, dwelling towards the Northern Ocean, who are holly Idolaters. 2. the Circaſſians, bordering on the Euxine, for the moſt part Chriſtians; and 3. the artars, planted betwixt both, being all Mahometans. Theſe again ſubdivided into ſeverall Tribes, hich they call their Hordes: of which the moſt conſiderable are, 1. the Nagaian Tartars, 2. the Za-olbenſes, 3. the Thumenenſes, 4. the Kergeſſi; beſides the Hordes or Kingdomes of Caſan, and Aſtra-han, added unto the Empire of Ruſſia, were deſcribed already; and others of inferiour note, not here onſiderable.

But before we come to ſpeak of theſe people in their ſeverall places, we muſt firſt look upon the hole Countrey, as preſented to us under the name of Sarmatia Aſiatica: bounded by Ptolomy as be-ore, ſave that it did extend more Weſtwards, and was unknown to him in the Northern parts of it; now oſſeſſed by the Moſcovite. So populous in the time of that Author, that he giveth us the names of forty everall Nations which did then inhabit it, and of about as many Towns of good eſtimation. Of which here are but few or none remaining; and for the names of ſome of the principall of them, we ſhall have hem preſently.

Rivers of moſt note in it, 1. Marabius, 2. Rhombitus the Greater, and 3. the Leſs; 4. Antichus, 5. Theophanius, 6. Pſathis, 7. Theſyris, 8. Corax, and 9. Vardanes; all of them falling into the Eux-ine, and Mœotick Fennes. 10. Udonis, 11. Alnuta, and 12. Rha, paying their tributes to the Caſpian or Hyrcanian Sea. Of theſe the principal is Rha, by the modern Latines called Volgo, by the Tartars Edi; riſing in Ruſſia, not far from the City of Moſco (where we have deſcribed it.) Moſt memorable, beſides he ſeventy mouths or Channels, wherewith it openeth into the Caſpian, for a medicinable and wholſome root growing on both ſides thereof; which the Phyſicians call Rha, by the name of the River; and for diſtinction ſake Rha-Pontick, to difference it from Rhubarb, or Rha Barbarum, as of a different nature from it; this laſt being purgative, and the other more apt to bind. 13. Ob, a River unknown to Ptolomy, riſing out of the lake of Kitay, a Lake in bigneſs like the Sea, and full of many little Iſlands (moſt of them inhabited.) Which River at its firſt parting from this Lake, is ſaid to be of 8 miles breadth; and growing ſtill bigger and bigger, emptieth it ſelf at laſt in the Northern Ocean, the preſent boundary betwixt the Ruſſian, and the people in the North of this Countrey.

Principall Mountains of this part, 1. Corax, giving name unto the River iſſuing out of it. 2. Montes Hippici, extended towards the Caſpian Sea. 3. Montes Ceraunii, lying in the furtheſt parts hereof (then known unto my Author) to the North and Eaſt. 4. Caucaſus, or Caucaſii Montes, extended from the Euxine to the Caſpian Seas, and parting Sarmatia Aſiatica, from Colchis, Iberia, and Albania. A chain of hills of which Ariſtotle ſaith, acumine & latitudine omnium maximi, &c. that for height and breadth they are the greateſt of the Eaſt; the tops whereof are lightned by the Sun-beams in midnight till almoſt day-break, when it is dark night in the valleys beneath. Not paſſable for horſe or foot (except they creep along by the Euxine ſhore) but at one place onely, called Sarmatiæ Pylæ, or the Gates of Sarmatia; by others named Caucaſiæ Portæ, from the hills adjoyning. Scituate in the 81 degree of Latitude, and not far from the Caſpian Sea: but that ſo intricate and narrow, that very ſmall force may keep it againſt ſtrong Armies. So carefull did Almighty God in his heavenly providence, ſhut up this fierce and barbarous people, from the reſt of Mankinde, by ſuch unfordable Waters, and unpaſſable Mountains: not to be freed out of their priſon, till he thought good to uſe them, as the executioners of his wrath and vengeance, for the puniſhment of ſinfull and impenitent Nations. This ſaid, we will conſider thoſe particular Nations, which before we named, and are now poſſeſſed of it in their ſeverall places.

1. Oppoſite to the Precopenſes lie the CIRCASSIANS, extended from the Cimmerian Boſphorus and the Fennes of Mœotis, towards the Eaſtern ſhores of the Euxine Sea, for the ſpace of 500 miles, and reaching 200 miles towards the North. The name impoſed on them by the Tartars: whereas before they were called by Pliny, Zigæ. by ſome Writers Zychi, conceived to be the Zinchi of Ptolomy.

The Countrey very fitly ſeated for trade and merchandiſe, as having a fair and large Sea-coaſt, with many Rivers opening into it (nine of thoſe ſpoken of before paſſing thorow theſe tracts): and not a few capacious Baies, and commodious Havens. Of which the principall were Sinus Cerceticus, or the Bay of Cercetis; Synda, and Bata, two known Havens, and ſpecified by my Author with the adjunct of Portus. But theſe conveniences not much looked after by the preſent Inhabitants, who are more inclined to the wars, than to trades, or merchandiſe. A ſtout and military people, trained to their weapons from their child-hood, and ſold as ſoon as trained to it by unnaturall Parents. For from theſe parts did the Mamalucks of Ægypt fetch their firſt Originall; from hence ſupply themſelves with a perpetuall ſeminary of ſlaves and Souldiers raiſed by degrees unto the higheſt dignities of that ſlaviſh Empire. And from theſe parts the Perſian Sophies are ſupplied with their Cozzel-Baſſas, diſciplined and inſtructed by them like the Turkiſh Janizaries.

Serica.

The Chriſtian faith was here planted in the year 860 or thereabouts, by the Miniſtry of Cyrill (or Chiarill) and Methodus; employed in that ſervice by the Patriarch of Conſtantinople. In which reſpect their Churches are of the Greek Communion, conform thereto in rites and doctrine, and of the juriſdiction of that Patriarch: but differing from them very much in matters practicall. For it is ordinary with theſe half-Chriſtians, not to baptize their children till eight years old; to hear divine ſervice ſtanding without their Churches, into which they very ſeldome enter (eſpecially the Gentlemen) till the 40th. or (as ſome ſay) the 60th. year of their age: dividing the whole courſe of their life between God and the Devil, in dedicating their youth unto Theft and Robbery, their old Age (when they can no longer commit thoſe villainies) to the difficult buſineſs of repentance.

Places of moſt obſervation among the Antients, 1. Cimmerium, a Town and Promontory, ſo called from the Cimmerii, once the chief people of theſe parts, of whom more anon; ſcituate on the very ſhore of Boſphorus, from hence denominated. 2. Phanagoria, in old times a well-traded Empory; ſcituate on a little Iſland raiſed out of the Sea, by the care and induſtry of the Greeks, who had here a Factory. 3. Apathurgus, by Pliny called Apaturum, memorable for a Temple of Venus, firnamed Apaturia (which name ſhe gave unto this place): becauſe (ſaith Strabo) when the Giants aſſaulted her, ſhe craved help of Hercules, who ſlew them all one after another. 4. Geruſa, by Ptolomy honoured with the title of Civitas; the Gargaza of Diodorus, now called Saint Georges. 5. Oenuntia, neer the mouth of the River Theſyris. 6. Araza, more within the Land, which with 7. Ampſacis, hath the name of a City alſo. The names of their chief Havens we have ſeen before. But few of theſe, or any other mentioned by the antient Authors, being now viſible in their ruines: the chief of thoſe which are now extant, are 1. Locoppa, 2. Coniuce, but of no great note.

The people antiently though divided into the ſeverall Tribes of the Therſagetæ, Zigæ, Turcæ, the Hunnes, Avares, and Mœotæ, all noted Nations; beſides the Coaxtræ, Zinchi, Tyrambæ, Pſelii, and others as obſcure as they; were better known by the name of Cimmerians, in which thoſe ſeveral Tribes concentred. Deſcended in the right of that common originall, from Gomer the Son of Japhet, firſt planted in the mountainous places of Albania: his poſterity known by the name of Gomerii, afterwards Cimmerii, left there a memorial of themſelves in the mountains called Cimmerini. But that Country proving both too barren. and too narrow for them, ſome of them paſſed into Phrygia Major, where they built the City Cimmeris, not unknown to Pliny, in whoſe time it was extant: and others in ſome tract of time, keeping the Euxine on their left hand, fixed themſelves in theſe parts; here giving name to the Town and Promontory Cimmerion, to the Cimmerian Boſphorus, & generally to all the people deſcended of them. From theſe, particularly, as the ſtout and valiant Nation of the Cimbri do derive their pedegree: ſo from theſe and the children of Meſech, Magog, and Tubal; the Sarmatians both of Europe and Aſia, the Moſcovites, and perhaps the Scythians are to fetch their Original: all of them great and puiſſant Nations, and all involved promiſcuouſly in the name of Scythians. Renowned for no other action more than the memorable expedition which they made into Media in the Greater, and Lydia in the Leſſer Aſia: the Cimmerians by themſelves alone, or by them as principall; the reſt of theſe Sarmatians in a body together, as a Scythian people. Diſtreſſed with want, or to diſburden their ſmall Country of ſuperfluous multitudes, theſe Cimmerii in the time of Nabulaſſar, or Salmanaſſar, King of Aſſyria, communicating their deſign with the reſt of the Scythians, to enlarge their quarters; holding along the courſe of the Euxine Sea, and paſſing thorow the Countrey of Colchis, firſt ſeized on ſome parts of Pontus and Paphlagonia. Where having fortified the Promontory on which Sinope was after built; and leaving there their carriages and the weakeſt of their train, with ſufficient Guards, they marched into Lydia, reputed (as it was indeed) for a wealthy Region. There they poſſeſſed themſelves of Sardis, the royall City, and after of the reſt of the Country, or the moſt part of it; Ardis, the Son of Giges, who then reigned in Lydia, not being able to withſtand them. Both beſides being wearied with long War, and growing more pliant by degrees unto one another (as in like caſe between the Saxons and the Danes) it proved no difficult matter for Halyattes, the Grand-child of Ardis, to compound the buſineſs: aſſigning to the Cimmerians all thoſe parts of his Dominions which lay beyond the River Halys, and ſetling his Lydians in the reſt. By this tranſaction there were ſo good correſpondences betwixt the Nations, that when Cyaxares King of the Medes invaded the Country of theſe Cimmerians, under colour of the invaſion which the Scythians had made in Media, Halyattes did eſpouſe the quarrel, and appeared in their aid. In following times, growing into confidence of one another, and mixt in Marriages and blood, they became one people; or at leaſt paſſed not under the accompt of ſtrangers, or the name of Aliens. Such end had this moſt notable expedition of theſe Cimmerians, not much remembred after this for the like undertakings. Yet here they held their own, though in other names, governed by many petit Princes, but all aſſociated with Mithridates againſt the Romans: that King being ſo great amongſt them, that his ſon Machares having married into ſome of their families, was made King of Boſphorus. But Machares having made his peace with Lucullus, the Romans never looked this way. Nor hear we much of them in ſucceeding times, till the invaſion of the Tartars, by whom ſubdued, they acknowledged at firſt the great Cham for their Soveraign Lord: whoſe power declining, they have ſucceſſively been ſubject to the Crim-Tartar, the Turk, & Moſcovite: but moſt commonly to the Crim-Tartar, as their neareſt neighbour, and moſt able to hurt them. And him they furniſh, on command, with 50000 horſe for the Grand Signieurs ſervice: yet ſo that they ſupply the Perſian with his Cozzel-Baſſas, and ſometimes ſerve under him for pay, as they do under any which entertain them. Governed like the Suiſſers, by their ſeverall Commonalties: yet ſo, that every Commonalty hath ſome principall man (which the Suiſſers have not) whom they call Morſeys, (that is, Dukes) to direct and order them.

2. Betwixt theſe and the River Volga dwell the ZAVOLHENSES, one of the greateſt

Hords or Tribes of all the Tartars; and therefore called Horda Magna. Of theſe the Crims, or Percopenſes were a Caſtling only, proceeding out of this great Swarm or Neſt of Hornets, though afterwards they became their maſters. Of the Countrey or the People we ſay nothing here, having ſufficiently ſpoken of both already. Their chief Town hath the name of Bolgar, ſcituate on the River Volga, and from thence ſo named; Volgar, and Bolgar differing but little in Orthographie, and not much in ſound.

This Countrey, as I take it by the ſcituation, ſhould be that which Ptolomy calleth Mithridatis Regio: whether ſo called in honour of him, by the Princes of the neighbouring Cimmerians, with whom he had contracted alliance; or that he had made any conqueſts there, or from ſome other Prince of the ſame name, I determine not. And in this tract were thoſe two Pillars, advanced unto the honour of Alexander, in Ptolomy called Columnæ Alexandri in whoſe time they ſtood without defacement: there being alſo Altars erected to him, or in memory of him, neer the Banks of Tanais; occurring in the ſame Author by the name of Aræ Alexandri. Which probably occaſioned the error of Qu. Curtius, who brings Alexander, in purſuit of the Scythian war, as far as Tanais: whereas it is apparent by the courſe of his actions, that he never got beyond the River Jaxartes, diſtant from Tanais no leſs than 2000 miles.

This Tribe firſt governed by its own King, whom they called Ulu-Cham, or the Great Cham, was in in the year 1506. ſubdued by the Crim-Tartar, and made ſubject to him. Afterwards conquered by Baſilius the Great Duke of Muſcovy, who thereupon aſſumed the title of King of Bolgar; which his Succeſſors ſtill preſerve, with the Town it ſelf; well garriſoned to keep open the whole courſe of the River Volga, by which they mannage the great trade of the Caſpian Sea. But for the main body of this people, they returned again to their obedience to the Crim, as being a limb of the ſame body with him, and are ſubject unto his commands: though by reaſon of their neighbourhood to the Moſcovite, and commerce with that Nation, they frame themſelves both to their language, habit, and behaviour.

3. Eaſt of the Zavolhenſes, on the other ſide of the Volga, dwell the NOIHACENSES, or NAGAIANS, ſpreading as far as the borders of Zagathay, and declining Southward towards the Caſpian Sea, and the Montes Hippici. Accompted the beſt men of war of all the Tartars, but more fierce and cruell than the reſt: void of all Arts, not having, or contemning money, or the uſe of Corn. Horſe-fleſh and Mares Milk their beſt diet; the fleſh either roſted by the Sun, or heated by continuall hanging at their ſadle-bow. And with ſuch cheer (nor worſe nor better) did Azim Can, one of the Princes of this Tribe, entertain Jenkinſon and other Engliſh men in their Travels to the Caſpian, from the River Volga. Their chief Town, if poſſibly it deſerve that name, is called Scharayirzik, the Reſidence of one of their Princes; & the next, Selliſture, where the ſaid Jenkinſon found the Cham, as in the prime place of his abode. The Government is by ſeverall Morſeys, the Heads or Chiefs, no doubt, of their ſeverall Clans: agreeing well enough together againſt the Moſcovite, whom they infeſt with frequent inrodes, and put him to the charge of continuall Garriſons, at Caſan, Aſtrachan, and Wiathka. Their wars for the moſt part only prædatorie, rather to get ſome preſent booty, than out of any hope to enlarge their dominion: and therefore commonly pacified, and ſent home with preſents. The Great Duke is ſo good a Stateſ-man, as to think the expence of money cheaper than that of blood; eſpecially when he hath to deal with ſuch an Enemy, who hath neither any Town of conſequence, or fixt place of dwelling, and conſequently nothing to be got but blows. Their Morſeys, formerly more in number, were of late times reduced unto three; of which he of Scharayirzik was the Chief, to whoſe direction and appointment (eſpecially in matters which concerned the publique) the other two do commonly ſubmit themſelves.

4 Betwixt theſe Nagaians, and the Circaſſians, lie thoſe Tribes which they call the KIRGESSI, ſpreading as far as to the mouths or influx of the River Volga: but intermixt with the Heſelites, and Baſchurides, two other of the Tartarian Tribes, but of leſs power. Their life, for the moſt part in continuall motion, removing with their wives and families from one place to another; and governing themſelves in their removes, by the ſight of the Pole-ſtar. Partly Mahometan, partly Gentiles; but the Gentiles make the greater number: not burying their dead bodies, as in other places, but hanging them upon a tree, though they ſtink again: certain enough that they will be devoured or ſweetned, before they return back to the ſame Station. Much reverence yet they give their Prieſts, by whom ſanctified and beſprinkled in their publike meeting, with a certain mixture, compounded of blood, milk, earth, and Cow-dung, a moſt ſweet confection, but good enough for them that deſire no better. And yet with theſe the Moſcovite is fain to hold fair compliance, and to ſend them every year ſome preſents, for fear they ſhould joyn with the Nagaians, or otherwiſe diſturb him in his Caſpian Trade down the River Volga.

5 The THUMENSES or THUMEN TARTARS, lie more North than any of theſe Tartarians; having on the South, the Zavolhenſes, and the territory of Viatka in the Empire of Ruſſia. A warlike people, and living neer a dangerous neighbour: for which cauſe they do not ſtraggle ſo abroad in petit companies, as the others do, but keep together in great bodies: For the moſt part much delighted in Necromancy, and conjurations. In which the Devill ſo befools them, that he ſuffereth them to raiſe tempeſts; and ſometimes by Diabolicall illuſions to defeat their enemies. The only Hord of all Deſerta, which ſtill continue in obedience to their naturall Lord, the great Cham of Cathay. And unto theſe we may adjoyn the Molgomozans, all Gentiles, and the moſt barbarous of all: living in Caves, and feeding upon worms, and mice, and Serpents, and ſuch other Vermine as would be poiſon to any but ſuch Molgomozans, who are more poiſonous than thoſe creatures.

Theſe Hords, together with the Kingdomes of Caſan, and Aſtrachan, and ſuch of the Ruſſian Provinces as lie on the Eaſt of Tanais and the River Duina, make up that Countrey which anciently paſſed under the name of Sarmatia Aſiatica: inhabited originally by the Deſcendants of Gomer, Meſech, Tu- bal, Magog, the ſons of Japhet; ſpreading themſelves more Northwards as they grew in numbers, out of Albania, Iberia, Colchis, and the Pontick, or Cimmerian Nations. Divided into the Tribes or Families of the Olandæ, Gerri, Samocolchi, Socani, Seci, Scimnitæ, Agaritæ, Merdi, Conapſeni, Chanides, Baſilici, Hyperborei, Hippophagi, and others of as little note: theſe laſt ſo called from their eating of horſes, which dyet they have left unto their Succeſſors. So like in manners and conditions to the neighbouring Scythians, that they paſſed commmonly by that name: and by that name are memorable for the great expedition by them made into Aſia the Greater, at ſuch time as the Cimmerians fell into Aſia Minor. For paſſing without oppoſition through the Sarmatian Streights, where they might have been eaſily kept out; and leaving behind them the more barren Countrey of Albania, they fell into Media: where they were encountred (but victorious) by Phraartes, then King of the Medes. Who finding that he was not able to remove them by force, aſſayed it by cunning; and firſt perſwaded them to look towards the South, as into richer Countreys, and more like to yield them full content. Hereupon full of prey, and preſents, they marched towards Ægypt, but were met in Syria by Pſamniticus the Ægyptian King, who had heard of their coming: and thought it beſt to entertain them on the way, and not to bid them welcome at home to his greater coſt. Out-vying the Median (as of the two, the richer Prince) he loaded them with gifts and treaſure, and ſo ſent them back again into Media, from whence they came: where for many years they afflicted that people, and the neighbouring Provinces, doubling their tributes, and uſing all kind of inſolencies: till in the end Cyaxares, the Son and Succeſſor of Phraartes, acquainting ſome of his moſt faithfull ſubjects with his deſign, cauſed the better part of them to be plentifully feaſted, made them drunk, and ſlew them, recovering thereby the poſſeſſion of his whole eſtate. Afterwards, imitated by the by the Engliſh in their Hock-tide ſlaughter. Such of them as eſcaped this blow, and were not willing to be ſubject to the Kings of Media (as many of them were) were ſuffered to return home by the ſame way they came; where at their coming, they found foul work made by their wives and their ſlaves, the ſtory whereof we had when we were in Ruſſia. After this we hear nothing of them in the ſtories of the Greeks, and Romans, unleſs thoſe Amazons, who attended their Qu: Thaleſiris, when ſhe beſtowed a viſit on Alexander, were rather of theſe Sarmatian Amazons, than of thoſe of Pontus and Thermodon, as I think they were: the neerneſs of their dwelling to Hyrcania, in which place they found him, inducing me to his opinion. But poſſible enough it is, (though it be not certain) that ſome of theſe Sarmatian Tribes, though by other names, hearing of the ſucceſſes of the Hunnes, Avares, and other barbarous nations, which made havock of the Roman Empire, might joyn themſelves unto them, and make up their numbers: thoſe nations being elſe too ſmall to compound ſuch Armies as by them were brought into the field againſt the Romans, without ſuch like helps. What their eſtate hath been ſince ſubdued by the Tartars, hath been ſhewn already.

3. ZAGATHAY.

ZAGATHAY is bounded on the Eaſt, with the mountain Imaus, by which it is parted from Cathay; on the North, with the main Scythick, or Frozen Ocean; on the Weſt, with Tartaria Deſerta, from which ſeparated by the River Soane, and the Lake of Kitay; and on the South, with the Caſpian Sea, and the River Oxus, by which divided from the Empire of Perſia. So called from Zagathay, a brother of one of the great Chams, on whom it was conferred for his better maintenance; the Scythia intra montem Imaum, of the antient writers.

The Countrey ſpreading out ſo far on all ſides, as before appeareth, comprehendeth all thoſe Povinces and tracts of ground, which antiently were called 1. the Countrey of the Sacæ, 2. Sogdiana, with 3 Zagathay, ſpecially ſo called, 4. and Turcheſtan, included antiently in the name of Scythia intra montem Imaum; and 5. the Terra incognita, which Ptolomy makes to be the Northern boundary of that part of Scythia. By taking a ſurvey of all which particulars, we ſhall find the temper of the whole.

1. SACÆ, or the Countrey of the Sacans, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Mountain Imaus, on the Weſt, with Sogdiana; on the North, with Zagathay, properly and ſpecially ſo called; on the South, with the River Oxus, by which parted from Bactria. So called from the Sacæ, the Inhabitants of it; but the reaſon of their name I find not.

The Countrey antiently either barren, or ill manured, full of vaſt Foreſts, wide Deſarts, and the like unhabitable places. Few or no Cities in it, and not many villages (civitates autem non habent, as my Author hath it) the people lived for the moſt part in Caves, or otherwiſe wandring up and down with their droves of Cattel. Called for that reaſon Nomades by ſome antient writers. The name not proper to theſe onely, but common to all thoſe who followed the like roving life; as the Sarmatians, wilde Arabians, Saracens, and the Inhabitants of Lybia and Numidia in Africk. Onely one fortified place they had, which from the materials of it had the name of Turris Lapidea, (λίθινὸς πύργος, in the Greek) or the Caſtle of Stones; Part hereof being peopled for the moſt part by Camels, or travellable onely with thoſe Creatures, had the name of Camelorum Regio.

Divided it was antiently into many Tribes, the Caratæ, and Comari, neer the River Jaxartes; the Maſſagetæ, and Comedæ, neer the hills called Aſcatancas; the Bylcæ and Grynæi, more within the Countrey. All joyned in one by the name of Sacæ, and by that name made a very fortunate Progreſs into Armenia (to which they had an eaſie paſſage by the Northern banks of the Caſpian Sea) and therein gave name unto the Province called Sacaſena. But proceeding into Cappadocia, and there ſlain by the Perſians in the middeſt of their Feaſtings, they left there alſo ſome reſemblance of their name, in an annuall feſtivall called Sacea; celebrated by the Perſians, in memoriall of their good ſucceſs in the warre againſt them. Such as ſtaid here, being overcome by Cyrus the firſt Perſian Monarch, did ſo good ſervice to that prince, that Amorges the King of theſe Sacæ, is ſaid to have reſcued him from the hands of theſe Scythians, by whom otherwiſe he had been ſlain, or taken Priſoner. In the declining of that Kingdome, they were ſubdued by Alexander at the end of his Scythian, and Sogdian warres; who hereabouts, by Cohortanes a noble Perſian, was preſented with a Bevy of beautiful Ladies; one of which was that Barſine, whom he made his wiſe, and had by her that Hercules, whom Polyſpercon and his faction proclaimed King of Macedon. Not memorable in the following times for any thing which they did or ſuffered; as they have been made by the miſtake or opinion of others, Who building Caſtles in the Air, will needs derive the Saxons (our famous Anceſtours) from this original: as if they were called Saxons: quaſi Sac--ſonnes, or the Sonnes of Sacæ. A fancy in my poor conceit, of no ground at all. For either the number of theſe Sacæ, when they left theſe parts, muſt be great, or little. If little, how can we conceive it poſſible, they ſhould force their way thorough thoſe valiant Nations of both Sarmatias; who to the laſt maintained their liberties and eſtates againſt the Romans. If great enough to force their paſſage (for ſtout and provident Nations uſe not to give paſſage to great Armies, but they pay dear for it) how can we think it poſſible they ſhould be ſhut up in a corner of Germany, betwixt the River Albis and the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe. The Saxons then, whatſoever they were, were no Sons of the Sacæ; and what in likelyhood they were, hath been elſe were ſhown.

Prince,

Sogdiana,

2. SOGDIANA hath on the Eaſt, the Sacæ; on the North and Weſt, with Zagathay ſpecially ſo called; on the South, the River Oxus, parting it from Margiana. So called from a chain of Mountains named Montes Sogdii, being the chief of all this Country, though of themſelves a ſpur or branch of the Mountain Caucaſus.

The Country indifferent fruitfull, and very rich in paſturage, becauſe they were well watered. For beſides Oxus, and Jaxertes, which are common unto them and others; they have many Rivers of their own. The principall of which, 1. Dymus. and 2. Araxates, both navigable, and capable of very good ſhips; both alſo running down the hills with a head-long courſe and paſſing thorow the champain Country, empty themſelves at laſt in a Lake called Oxiana; as is affirmed by Ammianus, but as Ptolomy ſaith, into Jaxartes.

Places of moſt conſideration are, 1. Darepſa, the Metropolis or Mother-City of this people. By Pliny called Panda, by Solinus Carapſa: ſcituate on the River Oxus. 2. Oxiana, on the ſame River, and from thence denominated. 3. Maruca, on the ſame River alſo. 4. Alexandria, called for diſtinctions ſake, Alexandria Oxiana; which name declareth both the founder and the ſituation 5. Alexandria, for the ſame cauſe of diſtinction, named Alexandria ultima: either becauſe the laſt City which he built in theſe parts; or becauſe it lay furtheſt off on the borders of the Scythians; againſt whoſe Invaſions or irruptions it was ſaid to be built. 6. Tribarra, one of the chief hereof in the time of Ammianus Marcellinus. 6 Cyroſchata, more memorable, and not leſs ancient, then any of thoſe named before, by Qu, Curtius called Cyropolis, built by Cyrus, to ſortifie his borders againſt the Scythians. It held out againſt the great Macedonian, a long time: and he himſelf coming nigher to the walls then diſcretion would permit an ordinary General, had ſuch a blow on the neck with a ſtone, that he fell on the ground, his eyes ſwimming in his head, and his whole Army giving him for ſlain. But reviving he took the Town by a Mine, and level'd it with the ground, in revenge of ſo great a danger.

The antient Inhabitants hereof were the Oxcydracæ, and Candari, dwelling at the foot of the Sogdian Mountains; the Oxiani, and Cheraſmii, near the banks of Oxus; the Jaſii, and Tachori, near the River Jaxartes; the Drepſiani in the Eaſt parts bordering on the Sacæ; whoſe chief City was Drepſa: deſcended from their ſeveral rootes, but all called Sogdians. Conquered by Alexander, not without danger to his own perſon, as before was ſaid, at the ſollicitation of Spitamenes a Noble Perſian, it rebelled again. Who being ſuppreſſed, and the Country in ſome meaſure quieted, Armiazes a Native of the Province, renewed the war. Who followed with 30000 men, encamped on the top of a hill, in a place of ſuch notable advantage, that Alexander, neither by force nor fair words, could get him out of it. He therefore dealt with 300 of his youngeſt and moſt active men, on the promiſe of a great reward, to climb the hill; and without any noyſe, to ſhew themſelves at the back of the Enemy. Which having performed with the loſs of 30 of their Company, Alexander ſent one Cophes to Arimazes, to let him know that the whole Army of Macedon was at his back; who terrified with what he ſaw, more with what he feared, gave up the place, and was ſcourged and crucified for his labour, So neceſſary in the Art of ware-fare is a peece of wit. After this time, it ran the ſame alterations and change of fortunes, as the Perſians did; till they were conquered by the Tartars, unto whom ſtill ſubject.

3. ZAGATHAY ſpecially ſo called, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Cathay; on the Weſt, with Turcheſtan, and part of the Caſpian Sea; on the North, with the Counry of Samoyedes, the Terra Incognita of the Antients; on the South, with the Sacæ, and Sogdiana. Anciently part of Scythia intra montem Imaüm; and took this new name from Zagathay, the firſt Prince hereof, ſince the time of the Tartars.

The Country reaſonable fruitfull, but not ſo rich in the naturall temper of the ſoyl, as the induſtriouſneſs of the people, more civill far than any other of the Tartars; ſtudious of good letters, lovers of Arts, as well ingenuous as Mechanick; well skilled in manufactures, and very ſeldome without the confluence of forrein Merchants. Populous and well ſtored with Towns and Villages; both for their own more handſome dwelling, and the entertainment of others.

Chief Rivers of it, 1. Jaxartes, now called Cheſel, the principal of all this Country: great of it ſelf, but made much greater by the waters of 2. Diax, another River of good note, riſing out of the mountain called Noroſus, and falling with many others into Jaxartes; mixt with whoſe ſtreames they are diſchannelled in the Caſpian Sea. 3 Jartus, and 4. Polytimetas, falling into Oxus. Others there are Zagathay. whole names I finde not in my Authors, deſcending from the mountains of this Nothern Region, which are great and many. As viz. 1. Noroſus, ſpoken of before. 2. Aſpiſii, on the north of that. 3. Toporus more unto the North. 4. the Mountains called Sychi, more northward ſtill. 5. thoſe called Anarai, beſides 6. Imaus, and of moſt name, common unto Cathay, as well as Zagathay.

Cities of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Aſpabota, the only Town aſcribed by Ptolomy to this Country, and by him honoured with the Title of Civitas. 2. Zabaſpia, of leſs antiquity, but of greater eſtimation at the preſent time. Scituate on the mouth of the River Oxus (now called Abias) on the brink of the Caſpian; and much frequented by the Merchants of forreign Countries, chiefly from India, and Cathay. 3. Marachanda, antient, and of fame, but placed by Ptolomy (why I know not) amongſt the Cities of Bactria: differing herein from the common and received opinion of other Authors, by whom this City is affirmed to be on the North-ſide of Oxus, and conſequently not within that Province. Made good by Spitamenes, (who having delivered the Traitor Beſſus into the hands of Alexander, revolted from him) againſt the Macedonian Army; by which beſieged under the command of Menedemus. But Menedemus being ſlain with ſome of his Souldiers, Spitamenes eſcaped hence to Bactria, where he was ſlain by his own wife, and his head preſented to the Conqueror. Here was it alſo that Alexander, being then Maſter of the Town, in a drunken fit ſlew his dear friend Clytus; who at the Battel of Granicus had ſaved his life, by receiving a blow which was aimed at him. It was afterwards called Samarchand, the Seat-Royall of Tamerlane, by whom enriched with all the ſpoils and treaſures he got in the wars; there being brought thither from Damaſcus onely (and by that one inſtance we may gueſs at the reſt) 8000 Camels laden with the choiceſt moveables. Still the chief reſidence of the Chams of Zagathay, but far ſhort of that magnificence which once it held. 4. Bichend, of no Antiquity, nor of ſuch great name as the Regall Samarchand, but at this time of greater wealth: ſituate ſomewhat in the mid-land, but populous and a well-traded Town. 5. Azara, memorable for being made the Rendezvous of that mighty Army which Tamerlane raiſed againſt the Turks, conſiſting in the totall of 1200000 fighting men when it was at the biggeſt. 6. Maranis, from which place the ſaid Tamerlane, having received his aids from China, began his march.

Theſe Tartars, called Zigathayans, by the name of their Country, are of a different government from that of the Great Cham of Cathay, though ſubject to him at the firſt: and have ſo been ever ſince the time of Zaicham or Bathu, the third great Cham; who gave it unto Zagathay a younger Son, whence it had the name. To Zagathay ſucceeded Og, by ſome called Zain-Cham, (the Father of Tamerlane) a peaceable and quiet Prince, who rather ſtudied to preſerve then enlarge his Empire. But Tamerlane being of a fiercer and more warlike nature, made the firſt proof of his valour and good fortune againſt the Moſcovite (for ſpoiling a City which had put it ſelf under his protection) whom he overthrew with the ſlaughter of 25000 foot; and 15000 of his horſe. Moved with this notable exploit, and the hopes of greater, Gino Cham, the great Emperour of the Tartars, gave him to wife his onely daughter, and therewithall declared him his heir apparent. Incouraged and enabled with this advancement, he firſt brake down the wall of China, encountred with the King thereof, overcame him in battel, and impoſed on him the ſumme of 300000 Crowns of yearly tribute. Having left things quiet at his Back, and taking with him a great part of the forces of China, he advanced forwards towards Bajazet, the fourth King of the Turks; of the greatneſſe of whoſe growing Empire he began to be jealous. Paſſing a long the left-hand ſhores of the Caſpian Sea; and ſo through Albaina, and the reſt of the Provinces which lay in his way (which he took and Conquered as he went) he came at laſt into Aſia Minor: where neer the City of Sebaſtia, he encountred with Bajazet, vanquiſhed him, ſlew 200000 of his men, and carried him away captive in an iron Cage. Reſtoring thoſe Princes diſpoſſeſſed by Bajazet unto their eſtates, and taking to himſelf al the Turkiſh Provinces of Anatolia; he beſtowed a private viſit on Conſtantinople: which ſeen, he marched towards Syria, ſubdued both that province and the Kingdom of Egypt, then poſſeſſed by the Mamalucks; viſited Hieruſalem, and did honour to the Holy Sepulchre; returned by Babylon, and won it, and with it the whole Countries of Babylonia, and Aſſyria. And taking Perſia in his way, impatronized himſelfe of that Kingdome alſo; and ſuch parts of India as either lay neer Perſia or his own dominions: now made the Soveraign Lord of all the Regions and Kingdomes in both Aſias, excepting India; for which the rich Kingdom of Egypt may be put in balance. Come home at laſt to Samarchand, he there died in peace. A Prince of ſtrong Body, but lovely lineaments, his eyes bearing in them ſuch raies of majeſty, that ordinary men could ſcarce indure to look upon them. His Hair long, contrary to the cuſtome of the Mahometans, (for the moſt part ſhaved on their heads) for which he pretended a deſcent from Samſon. Perfect in the Arabian learning, and a lover of all learned men, a hater of Idols, and Polytheiſm, and a great friend of the Chriſtians. More fortunate in the Conquering of ſo many Kingdomes than in laying any ſure foundation to maintain his conqueſt. For by holding his Seat-Royal in Samarchand, Cambalu, and other of the chief Cities of Cathay; he gave the remote Provinces the opportunity of returning to their former Governors: and by parcelling his eſtate among his Children, and kindred, this mighty flood which had ſo quickly overflown both Aſias, returned in very little time within its own proper and originall banks. Even Zagathay it ſelf, divided from the Empire of Cathay, had its King apart (hardly acknowledging the great Cham, for the Lord in chief) the moſt conſiderable of whom was that Saba, who in the beginnings of the unſettledneſſe of the Sophian Empire invaded Perſia: But inſtead of recovering that Kingdome into the Power of the Tartars, he loſt ſome Provinces of his own: Hyrcania, Margiana, and ſome part of Bactria, being ſince ſubdued by Abas the lat Sultan. Nothing ſince memorable, that I meet with, in the affairs of this part of the Empire of Tartary.

4. TURCHESTAN is bounded on the Eaſt, with Zagathay eſpecially ſo called; on the Weſt, with the River Soane, parting it from Deſerta; on the North, with thoſe deſarts which Ptolomy blindeth under

under the name of Terra incognita; and on the South with the Caſpian Sea. So called from the Turks ſome of which people when they left their firſt Seats near the Fens of Mœotis, ſettled in this County, and here ſtill continue.

The Country as deſart and ill planted, as the reſt of Tartary, not ſo much out of any defect in the ſoyl it ſelf, as in the humor of the people: who though originally Turks, yet do compoſe themſelves unto the lives of the Scythian or Tartarian Nomades, neglecting tillage, and abiding in no place longer then that place affords them paſturage for their Cattel: huge herds of which they keep as their greateſt treaſure, but more to cloth their backs with their skins, then to fill their bellies with their fleſh.

Amongſt the Rivers of moſt note we may reckon, 1. Rhymnus, mentioned by Ptolomy, which by the poſition of it in the 91 degree of longitude, ſeems to be of this Tract, It riſeth out of the Mountains called Montes Rymnici, giving name to the River, or taking name from it 2. Ardock, not known by that name amongſt the Antients, or whether known at all or not I am not able to ſay. Shaping its courſe towards the North, and weary of ſo cold a clime, and ſuch barbarous people; after a long and ſwift courſe of a thouſand miles, it hideth it ſelfe under the Ground, for five hundred more: but breaking out again, and finding little or no hope of a better fortune, loſeth it ſelfe for ever in the great Lake of Kitay,

To look for Towns amongſt a people which delight not in ſetled houſes, were a labour loſt: yet ſome I finde aſcribed unto them, The principal, but of no great note, 1. Calba, and 2. Ocerra. Then there is 3. Cruſtina, ſcituate on or neer the Lake of Kitay, never without the company of Ruſſian and Tartarian Merchants: the Ruſſians ſailing to it by the River Ob; and the Zagathayan Tartars travelling to it by land. By theſe two Nations more peopled to maintain their traffick, than by the Turcomans themſelves, in whoſe land it ſtandeth.

Theſe Turcomans are of the poſterity of ſome of thoſe Turca, who wanting room, or otherwiſe oppreſſed with want, forſooke their ancient dwelling neer the Fens of Mœotis, and the Coaſts of the Euxine Sea, to ſeek new ſeats, Anno, 844. That their whole body ſetled here, and from hence made their Conqueſt of Perſia, as ſome very induſtrious men are of opinion, I by no means grant. For when the Sultan of Perſia, having by the means of Tangrolipix, and thoſe mercinary Turks whom he invited to his aid, obtained the Victory, and thought it fit for his affairs to detain them longer in his ſervice: it is ſaid he ſhut up the paſſages of the River Araxes, to hinder them from returning to their habitations. The ſhutting up of which River, and fortifying againſt them all paſſages and bridges of it, had not ſerved his turn, if the Turks had come from this place: for then he muſt have manned againſt them the River of Oxus, and ſuch as lay betwixt them and him in the common rode; nor is it probable, that the Turcomans dwelling if this Province, on the Eaſt-ſide of the River Volga, would undertake the foarding of that dangerous and violent water; and force themſelves a way thorow Albania and Armenia, with no greater numbers, than 3000 men, which was the whole ſtrength which they carried with them. So that it is not to be doubted, but that they came firſt into Perſia out of Turcomania, and not out of Turcheſtan: and probable enough, that when they firſt left their own abode, and came unto the Northweſt ſhores of the Caſpian Sea, they might here divide themſelves. Some of which leaving that Sea on the left hand, and paſſing thorow the Sarmatian or Albanian Streights, made their way into Armenia, and thoſe parts of Iberia, which from them are now called Turcomania. The reſidue keeping that Sea on the right hand, and croſſing the Volga, where they found the paſſage moſt eaſie for them, ſetled themſelves in theſe parts of Scythia which they found leſs peopled, now from them named Turchiſtan. Some of which hearing of the good ſucceſſe of their Country-men in the Conqueſt of Perſia, might afterwards joyn with them to aſſure that purchaſe. Governed ſince their firſt coming hither by the chiefs of their ſeveral Clans, whom they honour with the title or name of Cham; but all of them tributaries and Vaſſals to the Cham of Zagathay.

5. That part of the Kingdome of Zagathay, which anciently paſſed under the name of TERRA INCOGNITA; and was accounted the Northern limit of Scythia intra Imaum; hath on the South Turcheſtan, and part of Zagatha, ſtrictly and ſpecially ſo called: extending northwards to the Scyhick or Frozen Ocean; and bounded on the Weſt, with the River Ob.

The Inhabitants of this Northern tracte are now called by the name of Samoyedes; neither the people, nor Country known to the ancient Romans: and indeed neither of them worth the knowing. The men black haired, naturally beardleſs, and not to be diſcerned from women, but that the women wear a long lock down to their ears. Clad from the head to the feet in Deer-skins, or Seil-skins, with the hairy ſide outwards; (nothing more wiſe in that than the other Tartars.) Their kind of life more rude than theirs, if more rude may be, ranging from place to place, without any propriety of houſe or dwelling; the Leader of each company their Prieſt, whom they call their Popa, who at every one of their Removes is to offer ſacrifice, Idolaters they are all and moſt of them Witches, eſpecially ſuch as live more towards the Eaſt, and furtheſt off from the Moſcovite, who many times deſtroy their Idols, and rob them of the skin of Beavers, Black Foxes, and Sables, wherewith thoſe Idols are ſet forth to the publick view; but beſtow on them greater heats in a good fire; into which they commonly uſe to caſt them.

Theſe Zagathayan Provinces, with thoſe of Margiana, and Bactria, before deſcribed, made that part of Scythia, which was once called Scythia intra montem Imaum: though in the time of Ptolomy, when Margiana, Bactria, Satæ, and Sogdiana, were reckoned of as Provinces of the Kingdome of Perſia, this Scythia was reſtrained within narrower bounds, and comprehended onely Turcheſtan and the Special Zagathay. Inhabited beſides the ſeveral Nations dwelling in the four Perſian Provinces, by many fierce and ſavage Tribes, as the Alani, Alanoeſi, Saubeni, and Maſſai, towards Terra incognita; the Tectoſages, and Aſiotæ, neer the Mountain Imaus; the Jaxartæ on the banks of the River ſo called; and the Mologeni, not far off; the Zaratæ, and Saſones, neer the Mountaines Alani; the Galactophagi, or milk-eaters, more towards the Eaſt; the Taporei, and the Sychi, by the hills ſo named; and many other not material to be here remembred. All now united under the general name of Tartars, by whom firſt ſubdued.

And now we are at laſt come to Scythia, truely ſo named; Sarmatia Europaa and Aſiatica being called ſo onely by way of participation and reſemblance; becauſe the Inhabitants thereof had ſo much in them of the manners and conditions of the natural Scythians. Here therefore we intend to ſpeak ſomething of them, their names, antiquity, diſpoſition, and cuſtomes, and the moſt memorable actions relating to them as far as we go by light of ſtory.

Firſt, for the name, the Gracian Fablers have derived it from one Scythes, the Son of Hercules, begotten by him on a Monſter, halfe woman, halfe Viper. The Grammarians ἀπὸ τοῦ σκύζεσθαι ſignifying to be fierce and angry; whence it is ſaid that the Jewiſh puritans, who faſted to be ſeen of men, σκυθρωποὶ ἀφανίζουσι that they looked with a ſower, ſevere, and a disfigured countenance. Goropius Becanus doth derive it rather from the Dutch word Schutten, ſignifying to ſhoot: agreeable enough to the cuſtome and exerciſe of the Scythians; who are obſerved by Herodotus, Pliny, Lucian, and other of the ancient Writers, to be very good Archers. But that the word Schutten ſignified the ſame in the ancient Scythick; or that the High-Dutch was originally the tongue of the Scythians, will not eaſily appear.

Letting that paſs therefore as a matter not to be defined, let us look on the antiquity of theſe Scythian Nations, and we finde it to be great, if not greateſt of all. Scytharum gens ſemper antiquiſſima, That the Scythians were of all others the moſt ancient people, was received from an Oracle, in the elder ages of the world: and ſo reſolved by way of Verdict, when the great controverſie touching the Antiquity of thoſe Nations, was to be determined, betwixt the Egyptian and Scythian, who contended for it. And this hath paſſed with ſuch a general approbation, that it is not now to be diſputed. In which regard I am ſo far in the judgement of Becanus in that particular, as to conceive that the Countries lying on the North of the Mount Caucaſus (on which the Arke is thought probably to have reſted) were peopled by the Sons of Noah before they travelled towards the Weſt, or ſet themſelves on building the Tower of Babel. We had elſe no doubt heard ſomewhat amongſt our Antiquaries, of the ſetling of ſome of thoſe Adventurers in theſe Northern Regions; when giving off that enterpriſe, and falling upon new plantations, they either went themſelves, or ſent for their Colonies, into all places of the world. But of any ſuch plantations ne gry quidem, not one word ſay they. Nor can it probabely be ſuppoſed, that Zoroaſter the King of Bactria ſhould have raiſed 400000 fighting men out of that one province, (though ſome of the adjoyning Provinces were took into the reckoning) in thoſe early dayes, in which he did encounter Ninus the great Aſſyrian; had the Bactrians and the reſt of thoſe Scythian nations, being but a Caſting as it were of ſome ſecond ſwarme, and not coaval with the firſt. But beſides theſe preſumptions we have other poofs: viz. an old and conſtant tradition of this ſide the Mountains, that the great Vineyard of Margiana was of Noahs planting; and 2 the affirmation of Porcius Cato, (though one of the writers of Frier Annius) in Scythia Saga renatum mortale genus, that mankind was repaired in theſe parts of Scythia, ſo called from Sabatius Saga, an Armenian King, whoſe dominions did extend thus far. So that I look upon it as a matter of ſtrong preſumption, if not demonſtrably concludent, that theſe people were of the firſt plantation which was made after the flood, before the reſt of the world was peopled by the Confuſion of Languages: Scytharum gens ſemper antiquiſſima, could not elſe hold good.

As for their diſpoſitions or natural inclinations, they are ſaid by Trogus, or his Epitomator Juſtine, to be Gens & laboribus & bellis aſpera, " A Nation patient of labours, and fierce in war; of bodily "ſtrength immenſe and vaſt; yet ſo much maſters of their affections, that they made no uſe further of their " greateſt victories, then the augmentation of their fame. Theft they eſteeme the greateſt crime, and " that they puniſhed ſo ſeverely that their Flocks and herds might and did ſafely wander from one place " to another, without fear of ſtealing. In them we placed their greateſt wealth, feeding themſelves " with the milk thereof, and making their raiment of the ſkinnes. Silver and gold they contemned as " much as it was coveted by others; there being no deſire of riches, where there was no uſe. Meum, and " Tuum, thoſe common Barretors, and authours of debate amongſt other men is not knowne amongſt " them; and therefore did not care for tillage, or made any incloſures, not troubling themſelves with the " care of building. But putting their wives and Children upon waines, or wagons covered with hides " againſt the weather, they removed from one place to another, no longer ſtaying upon one, than they " found graſs and herbage to ſuſtain their Cattel. So juſt in al their actions, that they heeded not the " reſtraint of Lawes, and had attained to ſuch an eminent degree of humane perfection, as not to covet. " In a word, that moderation which the Greeks endeavoured to attain unto by the help of learning " and Philoſophy, was to theſe ſo natural, that the ignorance of vice did as much contribute to their wel- " fare, as the knowledge of virtue. Such are the famous Scythians affirmed to be. And being ſuch, it was a wonder, that the great Monarchs of the world who had wealth at will, ſhould make war upon them; amongſt whom there was nothing to invite an Army, or reward a Conqueror. Yet either on deſire of glory, or to adde unto the former multitudes over whom he reigned, they were firſt invaded by Cyrus the great Perſian Monarch: who quarelling with Tomyris Queen of the Maſſagetes, a warlike Nation, inhabiting on both ſides of the River Oxus, diſcomfited her Army, and ſlew her ſon Spargapiſes, who commanded it. In revenge whereof, the Queen having in the ſecond battel obtained the victory, and took Cyrus priſoner, is ſaid to have cut off his head, and caſt it into a boul of blood, with this ſcornfull taunt, Satia te ſanguine quem ſitiiſti, dow drink thy fill of blood which thou haſt ſo thirſted. But others tell us otherwiſe of the ſucceſſe of this fight. By whom it is reported that the horſe of Cyrus being diſordered on the ſight of ſome Elephants, which came from India to her aid, and himſelf dangerouſly wounded; the Scythians had won the victory, but for the coming in of Amorges King of the Sacons, (who of a conquered Enemy was become his Confederate :) by whom he was reſcued, and by the 20000 freſh men which he brought with him, obtained the honour of the day; though long he lived not to enjoy it, dying not long after of the wounds he had received. With Alexander they are ſaid to begin the war, as loth to be behind hand with him ; arming themſelves upon the building of Alexandria ultima, ſo neer their borders, which they conceived rather intended for a curb to hold them down, than for a bridle to keep them in. But being repulſed, and wiſe enough to ſuffer what they could not hinder, they ſued for peace, and had it granted ; Alexander being called away by the revolt of the Bactrians, a matter of more conſequence than theſe Scythian brabbles. With Alexanders Succeſſors they had nothing to do, nor with the Perſian Kings of the Parthian Race ; the Parthians being their Allies, and of Scythian breed. And for the Romans, it is well obſerved by the Hiſtorian, Romanorum arma audivere magis quam ſenſere, that they had heard much of their valour, but never felt it : Remaining undiſturbed in their honeſt poverty, till the Tartars, an obſcure and beggarly people brake out of their Priſon, and carried the whole World before them.

As for their Kings, I finde ſome of their names laid down, but without any note of time in which their reigns might be ſuppoſed to begin or end. Nor can I think that the Kings occurring in that Catalogue, did either reign in the ſame place, or over the ſame Nations, or that they ſucceeded one another : Howſoever we will take their names as they come before us, in this liſt of 17 Lanthinus, the laſt of all thoſe Scythian Kings who are conceived to have the government of theſe warlike Nations. But for my part, I dare not ſay that ever any one King did command the whole people generally : each Tribe or Nation having their particular Kings, as in other places not reduced into form and order. And therefore for thoſe Kings, if ſuch Kings there were (as for ſome of them I durſt venture to ſwear the contrary) they muſt be ſuch as in their ſeverall Countries were of greateſt fame, moſt taken notice of in the world, or imployed in the conduct of their joynt and united forces, and ſo conceived to be the Kings of the whole Scythian Nation : as Caſſibeline, King of the Trinobantes, and perhaps not that, is by ſome writers ſaid to be the King of the Britains, becauſe he had the conduct of their Forces againſt Julius Caſar.

CATHAY.

CATHAY is bounded on the Weſt, with Zagathay, from which parted by the Mountain Imaus ; on the Eaſt, with the Oriental Sea, and ſome part of China ; on the North with Tartaria Antiqua ; and on the South, with part of India. So called from the Proper or ſpecial Cathay, the principal Province of the whole, the other parts into which it is commonly divided, being 2. Altay, 3. the Countries of the Eaſtern Tartars.

1. CATHAY, more properly and ſpecially ſo called, is bounded on the Eaſt with China ; on the Weſt with the mountain Imaus by which parted from Zagathay ; on the North with Altay ; and on the South with India extra Gangem : So called from the Chata an old Scythian people, who having conquered the Seres, and the reſt of the neighbouring Nations, gave their name unto the whole, according to the Cuſtome of victorious people.

This Countrey is exceeding long, if it be meaſured by the Scale, and Rules laid down by Ptolomy; who placeth Anzacia, the moſt weſtern Town of Scythia extra montem Imaum, in the longitude of 144 degrees, and Sera the Metropolis and moſt Eaſtern City of Serica in the longitude of 177 degrees and 15 minutes; as on the other ſide he placeth Sera the moſt Southern Town of Scythia extra montem Imaum in the latitude of 35 degrees, and 20 minutes, and Damna the moſt Northern Town of Serica, in the latitude of 51 degrees, and 40 minutes. By which accompt, ſuppoſing theſe four Towns to be placed in the very extremities and out-parts of this Countrey, it muſt extend from North to South 960 miles, and ſomewhat upwards, and about 1500 miles from Eaſt to Weſt in the length thereof; which as it ſheweth the dimenſions and extent of it to be very great, ſo it may probably infer that the Country is not in all places of the like fertility; the Weſt parts of it being very mountainous and barren, and conſequently not very fruitfull, as being overgrown in moſt places with the ſaps and branches of Imaus. But in thoſe parts thereof which lie towards the Eaſt, it is ſaid to be abounding in Wheat, Rice, Wool, Hemp, Silk, and Musk ; Great ſtore of that medicinall Root called Rhubarb, or Rha-barbarum, to difference it from the Rha-Pontick, growing on the banks of Volga. They have alſo great herds of Camels, of whoſe hair they make thoſe ſtuffs which are hence called Camelets, or Chamlets ; and ſuch an infinite breed of horſes, as beſides thoſe which they preſerve for their own uſe, they furniſh the whole Realm of China with ſuch multitudes of them, that at one time there were ſent no fewer then 80000 for a preſent to the King of that Realm by the Princes of theſe Weſtern Tartars, as the Chinois call them; of which he that writ the Book called Bellum Tartaricum affirmeth himſelf to have been an eye-witneſs, and to his credit I refer it; That the great Cham feedeth yearly 10000 white Mares, which he keeps for their milk. Some of their Rivers are reported alſo to yield golden ſands. But whether it be ſo or not, certain it is, that it is ſo well provided of all things both for neceſſary uſe, and the pleaſures of life, that it is thought to be inferiour to few Countries of Europe. The air indeed not ſo temperate, as in many places; in Summer-time extreamly hot, and in winter miſerably cold: the thunders and lightnings being here ſo terrible, that in Summer many men die for fear when they hear it. The winds, no leſs violent than the thunder, do ſometimes tear up trees by the roots, and beat men from their horſes; but ſeldom bring with them any ſtorm of rain; the greateſt ſhowers which they have hardly wetting the ground.

The people are generally very warlike, ſtrong of body, quick of action, fearleſs of the greateſt dangers, patient both of want and labour: of mean ſtature, little eyes, ſharp ſight, and thin beards. Induſtrious they are in ſeveral manufactures, of a good wit for diſpatch of buſineſs: more honourable than the reſt of the Tartars, as loving to dreſs themſelves gorgeouſly, to fare ſumptuouſly (if there be occaſion) to live in handſome houſes, and to frequent the moſt populous & beſt traded Cities. All which civilities or effeminacies, call them which you will, together with the greateſt part of their Arts and Manufactures, they firſt learned of the Chineſe, during the time that the Chinois lived as Subjects under the great Cham, and the Nations had continual entercourſe one with another. They accompt not any for a wife till ſhe bear them children, nor till then do meddle with their dowrie; but repudiate them at a certain time, if they finde them barren. They reverence their Cham, or Emperour, even to adoration; not ſuffering any Stranger to come in his preſence, except he be firſt purged: if any otherwiſe preſume, it is preſent death.

The Religion publiquely allowed and countenanced, is that of Mahomet, but ſo that they retain the Pentateuch of Moſes, and obſerve many things therein commanded. It was much laboured by Pope Innocent, and King Lewis of France, that they ſhould receive the Chriſtian Faith; and they found ſome inclinations in the people, and chief Princes, to it. But finding by the Mahometan Agents, who then laboured to bring them to their ſuperſtition, that Mahomet allowed of many wives, and other things more agreeable to their fleſhly luſts; they conformed to that: Yet ſo, that there are many Idolaters in Cathay it ſelf (I mean Cathay ſtrictly ſo called) and ſome Chriſtians alſo; the ſtate of whoſe affairs we have ſhewn before.

Chief Rivers of the whole, 1. Palyſanga, which falling into the Eaſtern Ocean is navigable up to the City of Cambalu, to which it is a means of conveying great ſtore of Merchandiſe. 2. Caromoram, ſo broad and deep that no bridge can be made over it. 3. Quiam, one of the greateſt in the world; in length about an hundred days journey; for breadth, in moſt places ſix miles, in many eight, and in ſome ten. 4. Quiantu, about half a mile over, and well ſtored with fiſh: of all which we ſhall ſpeak more fully when we come to China. Here are alſo very many Lakes, both large, and uſefull, as 1. the Lake of Caniclu, in which are ſaid to be ſo many pearls as would make them of no value, if every man might have leave to fiſh for them: which is therefore interdicted (without ſpecial licence) upon pain of death. 2. The Lake of Caraim, about an hundred miles in circuit, and ſo full of fiſh as might ſuffice for all the Countrey, did they love to eat of it. Their mountains we ſhall climb over in their ſeverall places.

Principal Cities of the whole at this preſent time under the notion of Cathay, are 1 Cambalu, ſuppoſed to be the Iſſedan Serica of the Antients, and like enough to be that City of the Cathayans, which made that notable reſiſtance unto Cingis the firſt King of the Tartars, in his firſt attempts upon this Country, of which more anon. Made afterwards in regard of the pleaſantneſs of the ſcituation, and extream fertility of the ſoyl, the chief ſeat of his Empire; and being exceedingly enlarged and beautified, had the name of Cambalu, that is to ſay, the Seat or City of the Cham, in the ſame ſence as the chief City of China had the name of Pequin, ſignifying in that Language the Court or City of the King. Built of Free-ſtone, and ſcituate in the midſt of the Country, as the heart and center to the reſt. It is ſeated on the River Palyſanga, honoured with the great Chams reſidence, and enriched with a mighty confluence of Merchants of all ſorts. Beſides other Merchandizes, there are every year 10000. Carts loaded with ſilk ſent thither from China. Affirmed to be in compaſs 28 miles beſides the Suburbs, in which beſides other Inhabitants of all ſorts are 50000. Aſtrologers or rather Fortune-tellers. 2. Xaindu the Royal Palace of the Emperour, of a fourſquare figure, every ſide extending eight miles in length: within this Quadrant is another, whoſe ſides are ſix miles long, and within that another of four miles ſquare, which is the Palace it ſelf; between thoſe ſeveral Walls are Walks, Gardens, Orchards, Fiſhponds, places for all manner of exerciſe, and Parks, Forreſts, and Chaſes for all manner of Game. 3. Caraio, where the women are ſaid to gild their teeth: 4. Gonza a fair City and a great, adorned with many Idol Monaſteries. 5. Careanſu, near which there groweth an herb called Chiny-Cathay, of admirable effect againſt many Diſeaſes, and ſo eſteemed of by the Natives, that they value one ounce of this at a ſack of Rubarb. 6. Segni, the reſidence of a Neſtorian Biſhop.

Having thus took as good a view of the preſent face of this Countrey, as the times afford us, we will next look upon it in thoſe integrall parts of which it ſpecially conſiſteth, comprehending (as before was intimated) thoſe two long and ample Provinces, which the Antients called 1. Serica, and 2. Scythia extra montem Imaum, according to thoſe bounds and Characters which are given us of them.

1. SERICA hath on the Eaſt ſome part of China; on the South, India extra Gangem, and ſome part of the Country then inhabited by the Antient Sina: on the North, Altay: on the Weſt, the mountains of Imaus. In which I followed not the bounds laid down by Ptolomy, who for want of that knowledge in theſe remote Countries which theſe latter ages have afforded, is fain to ſhut it up on the North and Eaſt, with a Terra incognita. At the preſent it is called CATHAY, and that moſt probably from the Chata, a Scythian People, who ſubduing the old Inhabitants, became Maſters of it.

Deſerta.

But for the name of Serica, it was derived originally from Sera the chief City of it; whence the people had the name of Seres, very induſtrious in their times, and amongſt other things in the making of ſilks (made of a fine wool growing on the leaves of trees) from hence named Serica. Of great eſteem amongſt the Romans, as is ſaid by Pliny, Tam multiplici opere, tam longinquo orbe potitur, ut in publico matrona tranſluceat; being far fetched, and dear bought, they were good for Ladies. Nor were they induſtrious only, but chaſte and temperate. The names of Thieves & Whores were not known amongſt them. They eat not any unclean fleſh; nor uſed the company of their wives, either after conception, or during their menſtrual purgations. So moderate of diet, that they lived commonly to the age of 200 years, the quietneſs and mildneſs of their diſpoſition helping much thereto. Of yellow hair, watchet or Sea-green eyes, and good compoſure. Men of few words, but very juſt in all which they ſaid or did. Governed by a common Council of five thouſand men, every one of which was to finde an Elephant for the uſe of the State.

If you will take the character both of the Country and People from Ammianus Marcellinus, he will give it thus "First of the Country, that it is plentifull and large, circled about with a chain of moun" tains, the two famous Rivers, Oechardis and Banthiſis, with a ſtill and ſlow ſtream running thorow the " middle of the incloſed plain, ſpaciouſly ſtretched out to the ſides of the precipices: in one place large
" and open, in another lying flat and low with an eaſie deſcent; in which regard they have abundance
" of Corn, ſtore of Cattel, and plenty of Orchards. The temperature of the air pleaſant and wholſom, the " conſtitution of the weather clear and pure, the blowing of gentle winds moſt commodious, and the " woods with a pretty glimmering of light, both within and under them: from whence the people with " much ſprinkling of water, ſoftning that which the trees bring forth like a kind of Fleece, kemb a moſt
" fine and tender matter which they ſpin into ſilke, ſerving in former times for the Nobility and gentry,
" now become common to thoſe alſo of inferiour rank. Then for the People, he ſaith that they are a
" frugall Nation, lovers of quiet, not troubleſome unto their Neighbours, without the uſe of Armes,
" and the knowledge of battels, declining the company of Strangers; and ſo far from covetouſneſs, or
" curioſities, that when any Merchants come unto them to buy their ſilks, without much beating of
" the price, they let them have ſuch things as are bred amongſt them, without looking after the " Commodities of other Countries. So he. And if he did not over-act the Panegyriſt (as I ſee no reaſon why he ſhould) never were people happier in the place of their dwelling, nor Countrey happier in its people.

Chief Mountains of it (and mountains they had very many) were 1. the Montes Caſii, and 2. Auzacii towards the Eaſt. 3. the Anniba, environing a great part of the Countrey. 4. the Aſmirai, 5 and thoſe called Serica, neer the City Sera. 6. Tagurus. 7. Ennodorus, and 8. Ottorocorus: But all of them probably the ſpurs and branches of the great Mountain Imaus; but by what names now called it is hard to ſay; and no leſs hard to ſay how to accommodate the names of the Rivers ſpoken of before, to thoſe which we finde mentioned in the antient Writers; the principall of which (all flowing out of theſe great Mountains) are, 1. Oecharde, by Pliny called Cambris, riſing out of the montes Auzacii; 2. Pſitara, iſſuing out of the Aſmiri; 3. Bautiſus, whoſe Fountain is in the montes Caſii; and 4. Lanos.

Towns of chief note amongſt them, 1. Sera, which gave the name of Serica, and Seres to the Province and People. 2. Ottorocora, neer the hills ſo called, whence it had the name. 3. Iſſedon, for diſtinctions ſake called Iſſedon Serica, to difference it from another of that name in Scythia, called Iſſedon Scythica; the chief City of the Iſiedones, gens magna, one of the greateſt Nations in all the Countrey, as is ſaid by Ptolomy, and like enough to be that City of the Cathayans, which made that noble reſiſtance unto Cingis (which before I ſpake of) in his firſt attempts upon this Country. 4. Oroſana. 5. Draſache, 6. Daxata, of which little memorable. Some other Cities there were in it (about nine other being named by Ptolomy) of which we finde nothing but the names, and therefore I ſhall paſs them over without further mention.

But here it is to be obſerved, 1. that Ptolomy gives unto this Country, and to ſome of the Towns or Cities of it, ſuch a Northernly latitude (ranging the furtheſt parts thereof in the ſame parallel with the Iſle of Thyle) as cannot poſſibly agree with that fertility of ſoyl, and delightfull temper of the ayr, which is given to Serica. 2. That he tels us of a Promontory called Tabyn ſcituate in extrema terra, in the extremities of the Country between North and Eaſt, which I cannot but extreamly wonder at, conſidering that he ſhuts up this Country on the Eaſt and North with a Terra incognita, & extends not any part thereof towards the Sea, rendring it thereby uncapable of any ſuch Promontory. 3. That ſome of our late Writers both in their Tables and their Maps, have placed the Regal City of Cambula, ſo farre towards the North, as very ill agreeth with that pleaſantneſs and ſweetneſs of ſcituation, which induced the great Chams to make choice thereof for the Seat Royal of their Empire. But as we may eaſily pardon theſe miſtakes of Ptolomy in places ſo far diſtant from him, and then but little known to the Greeks and Romans; ſo we may as eaſily pardon thoſe of the latter times, who grounding on the authority of ſo eminent an Author, have in ſome things been miſguided by him: it hapning very many times (which I find ſome where mentioned on the like occaſion) Magnis erroribus, magnorum virorum authoritate, tranſmiſſis, that great errors are often entertained upon the credit of their Authors.

The old Inhabitants hereof, in thoſe parts which lay next the Scythians, are ſaid to have been Anthropophagi, or man-eaters, moſt probably a Scythian Nation, that cuſtom being ſo abhorrent from the mild-neſs of the Serican temper. Or elſe, we muſt correct the Copies of Ptolomy, by the Hiſtory of Ammianus Marcellinus, who inſtead of Anthropophagi, placeth the Alitrophagi in the ſelf-ſame tract. The other Nations not diſtained with the like reproaches, are the Syziges, and Anabi, not far off the Auzacian mountains; the Piala neer the River Oechardes; the Geranai, and Rhabbanai, their neareſt neighbours; the Throani dwelling towards the Eaſt, the Bata and Ottocorora more towards the South. Theſe with the reſidue, governed by a Common-Council of 5000 men, every one of which was to find an Elephant for the ſervice of the Common-wealth, as was ſaid before. And more than this we hear not of them in the way of Story; the Natives never going abroad to vend their wares, and having little ſpeech with ſtrangers when they come amongſt them. Being vanquiſhed by the Chata, a Scythian Nation, from whom it is likely that it took the name of CATHAY; (for in this we go but by conjecture) they continuing under Kings of their own, till ſubdued by the Tartars, againſt whom they made ſuch ſtout reſiſtance, being beſieged by Cingis in their principall City, that when they wanted ſtones to caſt out of their Engins, they ſupplied that want with molten ſilver; and held it out ſo long, that Cingis finding victuals to grow ſhort in his Camp, commanded that every tenth man ſhould be eaten. But at the laſt being undermined, the Town was taken, the Citizens maſſacred, and their King or Emperor (as ſome call him) ſlain: after whoſe death, and not before, Cingis aſſumed the title of Cham, or Emperor. The reſidue of their Story we ſhall have hereafter.

SCYTHIA EXTRA IMAUM was bounded on the Eaſt with Serica, on the Weſt with Imaus, on the South with India extra Gangem; and on the North, with the Countreys comprehended in the name of Altay, Which Ptolomy hath given us in the notion of the Terra Incognita. Called Scythia, becauſe planted by a brood of the Scythians. Extra Imaum was put to it, to difference it from that part of Scythya which lay on the Weſt ſide of that mountain; neereſt unto the Greeks and Romans. But now the Mountain and the Country have the name of Altay.

To look upon it as it ſtandeth by the name of Scythia extra Imaum, we find not any thing delivered of the Rivers or Mountains of it, but what is common unto them with the neighbouring nations: the mountains called Auzacii, Caſii, and Ennodorus, being common unto this with Serica, as Imaus joyntly to both the Scythia's, which it divided antiently the one from the other: though now this laſt be reckoned to belong to Cathay alone, becauſe the Tartars on both ſides of it profeſs themſelves ſubject to that Cham. This the moſt famous mountain in the Eaſt of Aſia, beginning at the ſhores of the Scythick or Frozen Ocean; and extending thence directly Southwards unto Cape Comari, a Promontory of the Southern or Indian Seas. By which account it divideth the Greater Aſia into Eaſt and Weſt, as Taurus doth into North and South, which Mountain it croſſeth in right Angles, about the Longitude of 140, as before was ſaid. That part hereof which lyeth on the South of Taurus, was by the Antients called Bitigo; and by the modern is named Gates: of which we ſhall ſpeak more when we come to India. That on the North of Taurus, called Imaus properly, was anciently moſt memorable for dividing the vaſt Countries of the Scythians, into Scythia intra Imaum, and Scythia extra Imaum; a diviſion much obſerved by the old Geographers: now chiefly memorable for being the Sepulchre of ſome of the Chams of Tartarry; moſt generally known by the name of Altay, but by ſome called Belgion.

Chief Towns hereof were 1. Auzacia, at the foot of the hills ſo named. 2. Chaurana, the chief City of the Chauranai. 3. Sata. 4. Iſſedon Scythica, ſo called to difference it from the other of that name in Serica. Theſe with the reſt, and all the Country, as far as it was known in the days of Ptolomy, inhabited by the Abii, Hippophagi, or horſe-eaters, a diet ſtill uſed by the Tartars or modern Scythians. 2. The Iſſedones, who are ſaid by Pomponius Mela to make carouſing cups of their Fathers heads, firſt trimmed and gilded, 3. the Chauranai, and 4. the Chata, who being (as it ſeemeth) the moſt potent Nation, cauſed all the reſt to be called by the name of Cathay, communicating that name alſo to the conquered Seres. Beſides the poſſeſſions of which Tribes, there was alſo the Regions of Acbaſſa Cuſia, and Auzuatis; theſe laſt ſo called from the mountains upon which they ſtand. More than this we have not to ſay of this Country by the name of Scythia, there being nothing memorable of it in the courſe of ſtory, or worth the obſervation in the way of Corography.

ALTAY is bounded on the South with Cathay, ſpecially ſo called, and part of China; on the North with Tartaria Antiqua, on the Weſt with the great Mountain Imaus, and on the Eaſt with the Nations or Countries of the Eaſtern Tartars: So called from its neighbourhood to that mighty mountain, which the Tartars in their Language call by the name of Altay.

The Country utterly unknown to the Antient Writers, and not much canvaſſed or travelled by our Modern pens. In which reſpect I ſhall now trouble my ſelf no further, than by giving a brief touch on the ſeverall parts of it. Of which the moſt that can be ſaid, will be but little for the information of the judicious Readers; who are not to be bettered by the names of places, if there be not ſomething in them of further uſe. Now for theſe Provinces, the principal of them are, 1. Caſcar, 2. Cheſmur, 3. Lop, 4. Camul, 5. Tainfu, 6. Caindu, 7. Carazan, 8. Cardandan, 9. Erginul, 10. Taguth.

1. CASCAR, bordering on the North-weſt of China, a Mahometan Countrey, but admitting of ſome Chriſtians alſo; the largeſt Kingdom in all Altay, except Tanguth only, and furniſhed with many Towns or Cities both of Trade and Note, the principal whereof are, 1. Hiachan, the Royall City of this Countrey, and a Mart famous for concourſe of Merchants, and variety of Merchandiſes. 2. Cialis, the chief Town of a Province or Kingdom ſo named, but ſubject to the King of Caſcar, who in the year 1603. was called Mahomet Chan, a Prince of ſome credit in thoſe parts, but neither equal in Port or Power to the Kings of Targuth. The people generally rude and barbarous, inſomuch that in ſome parts hereof, both ſexes do indulge themſelves this mutual priviledge, that if the husband or the wife be abſent above twenty days, the other party is at liberty to marry again.

2. CHESMUR, the inhabitants whereof are generally both Idolaters, and Inchanters, cauſing the dumb Idols to ſpeak, the winds to riſe, and the ſun to be darkned. For ſtudying which black Arts (if thy come to them by ſtudy) they have many Monaſteries, in which their Hermits or Monaſticks live a ſtrict kind of life, and are very abſtemious.

3. LOP, memorable for a great Deſart of 30 days journey; ſo true a Deſart, that whoſoever doth not mean to be ſtarved, muſt carry all his victuals with him. Dangerous to travellers, if not before-hand made acquainted with their danger: the evill ſpirits uſing to call men by their names, and make them go aſtray from their company, where they periſh with famine, or are devoured with wild beaſts. The chief Town hereof called Lop, giving name to both.

4. CAMUL, an Idolatrous Countrey, the people whereof account it a great honour to them, to have their wives and ſiſters at the pleaſures of ſuch as they entertain. From which brutiſh cuſtome when reſtrained by Mango Cham, they petitioned him at three years end to be reſtored again to their former liberty; proteſting they could never thrive ſince they left that cuſtome. Which deſire of theirs was at laſt granted, and is ſtill in uſe.

5. TAINFU, more civill than the reſt, the people being very induſtrious, and good Artificers: making the moſt part of the Arms which are uſed by the Cham; and ſome alſo which they ſell to Merchants.

6. CAINDU, with a Town in it of the ſame name, of great reſort by Merchants (ſuch as we commonly call petit Chapmen) for the Womens veils here made, with very great Art, of the barques of trees. And it is well that they have veils to hide their ſhameleſsneſs, the women of this Tract being proſtituted unto every Traveller.

7. CARAZAN, inhabited by a barbarous and ſavage people, who in the day-time live in dens for fear of Serpents, with which (and ſome of them ten paces long, and ten ſpans in thickneſs) they are much infeſted; and in the night go forth to prey upon Wolves and Lyons. They have an uſe, that when any ſtranger cometh into their houſes, of an handſome ſhape, to kill him in the night: not out of deſire of ſpoil, or to eat his body; but that the ſoul of ſuch a comely body might remain amongſt them.

8. CARDANDAN, neer Carazan, and as ſavage as that. The people whereof draw black lines on their bodies, which they count for the greateſt Ornament. In caſe of ſickneſs they ſend not to the Phyſician, but the next Inchanters: who taking Counſell of the Devill, apply ſome remedy; or if they think the man paſt cure, they tell him that his offences are grown too great to admit of help, and ſo put him off.

9. ERGINUL, poſſeſſed by an Idolatrous people, but mixed with ſome Mahometans and Neſtorian Chriſtians. In which Countrey they have certain Bulls as big as Elephants, with mains of fine white hair like ſilke, ſome of which they tame; and betwixt them and their Kine engender a race of ſtrong and laborious Beaſts, not inferiour in that kind to Oxen. Here is alſo found a Beaſt of an exquiſite ſhape, but not bigger than a Goat; which at every full Moon hath a ſwelling under the belly; which being cut off by the Hunters, and dryed in the Sun, proveth to be the beſt Muſk in the World.

10. TANGUT, the greateſt and moſt potent of all the reſt, bordering on the North of Cathay ſpecially ſo called, and (like to that) inhabited by an induſtrious and laborious people, amongſt whom the Art of Printing is ſaid to have been extant a thouſand years. Bleſſed heretofore with a great increaſe of Chriſtians; but now the Gentiles or Idolaters make the greateſt part, with ſome Mahometans amongſt them. And for the ſerving of thoſe Idols, they have not onely many large and beautiful Temples, built in the manner of Chriſtian Churches, and capable of 4 or 5000 perſons; but alſo many fair Monaſteries for the uſe of their Votaries, and Recluſes. They are poſſeſſed of many Towns, moſt of them well fortified, and planted with great ſtore of Artillery. The chief of which, 1. Sachian, bordering on the Deſart of Lop, inhabited by ſome of all the three Religions; in which it is affirmed that they firſt uſed the Art of printing. 2. Campion, the Metropolis, or Mother City of this Countrey, where the Chriſtians in the time of Paulus Venetus, had three fair Churches: now over-numbred by the Gentiles, who have here many Monaſteries for the uſe of their Idols, and many Religious perſons dedicated to their ſervice only. Who though they live more honeſtly than the reſt of their Order, and hold it an impiety to tempt a Woman to the act of Luſt; yet if the woman make the offer, they hold it no ſmall ſin to refuſe her courteſie. 3. Sauta, a Town in the middle way betwixt Campion and Succuir, as beng 5 daies journey from the one, and 6 daies journy from the other; by which we may conjecture at the long extent of this Kings Dominions. 4. Succuir, ſcituate amongſt Mountains clothed with Rhubarb, from whence conveyed by Merchants over all the World; but ſo neglected by the Natives, that did not the forrein Merchant bring it into requeſt, they would ſcorn to gather it. This once a Kingdome of it ſelf, made ſubject afterwards, with Tanguth, to the Cham of Cathay, or the Great Cham of Tartary: But the fury of this Tartarian being over-blown, the Kings of Tanguth did not only recover all their antient Royalty; but by degrees poſſeſſed themſelves of the moſt part of Altay, and perhaps part of Cathay alſo, being looked on at the preſent as the greateſt and moſt puiſſant Prince betwixt the Mountains of Imaus, and the Eaſtern Tartars, to the deſcription of whoſe Countries we do next proceed.

The Countries of the Eaſtern Tartars are bounded on the Weſt with Altay; on the Eaſt with the Orientall Ocean; on the North with Tartaria Antiqua, and on the South with China; ſo called from their Eaſtern ſcituation, in regard of thoſe of Cathay and Altay, which by the Chineſe are called commonly the Weſtern Tartars.

Altay. The Countrey not very fruitfull, becauſe ill cultivated, ſo that the chief Commodities which they ſend abroad, are, the Root called Ginſem ſo much eſteemed amongſt the Chineſes, and all ſorts of precious skins, as thoſe of Caſtor, Martrois and Zibellens; and alſo Horſe-hair, of which the Chineſes make their Nets, and the men (though madly) uſe it in tying up their Hair, as the handſomeſt dreſs they can appear in. With theſe Commodities they Traffique into Leaotong, a Province of the North-Eaſt of China (from which they are parted only by an Arm of the Sea) where commonly they make good Markets, their Merchandize being thence diſperſed into all parts of that Kingdome. The people are generally of broad Faces, their colour white, but their Noſe is not ſo flat, nor their eyes ſo little as the Chineſes are, ſparing of ſpeech, and ſomewhat penſive, but neither ſo unſociable as their Neighbours of China, or ſo barbarous and rude as the Tartars of Europe. They ſhave both the Head and Beard, reſerving only the Muſtachoes, which they extend to a great length, and in the hinder part of their head they leave a Tuffe, which being curiouſly woven and plaited, they let hang down careleſly below their ſhoulders; they have a round and low Cap, which is always garniſhed round with ſome precious skin three fingers broad, of Caſtor or Zebellin, and ſerveth to defend their Temples, Eares, and Fore-heads from Colds and other Tempeſts. That which appears above the skin being covered over either with curious Red Silk, or elſe with Black and Purple Horſe-hair, which they dye and dreſs moſt curiouſly; ſo as their Appurtenances being handſomely joyned together, makes the Cap commodious and handſome. Their Garments are long Robes falling down to the very Foot, but their Sleeves are not ſo long and large as the Chineſes uſe, but rather ſuch as are uſed in Poland and Hungarie, onely with this difference, that they faſhion the extremity of the ſleeve ever like a Horſes hoof. At their Girdle there hangs on either ſide two Handkerchiefs to wipe their Face and Hands; beſides there hangs a knife for all neceſſary uſes, with two purſes, in which they carry Tobacco, or ſuch like Commodities. On their left hand they hang their Scymitars, but ſo as the point goeth before, and the handle behind, and therefore when they fight they draw it out with the right hand behind them, without holding the Scabbard with the other. They ſeldome wear Shooes, and uſe no Spurs to their Boots, which they make either of Silk or of Horſe-skin very neatly dreſſed; but they often uſe fair Pattens, which they make three fingers high. In riding they uſe Stirrups, but their Saddles are both lower and broader than ours. In matters of Warre they are very nimble, never carrying any baggage with them, nor taking care for proviſion, but filling themſelves with what they finde; yet commonly they eat fleſh, though half waſhed or half boyled, and if they finde none, they fall upon their Horſes and Camels. The Earth covered with their Horſe-Cloth is their Bed, for they care not for Houſes, and Chambers; but if they be forced to dwell in houſes, their Horſes muſt lodge with them, and they muſt have many holes beaten in the Walls to let in the Air; but their Tents are moſt beautifull, which they fixe and remove with ſuch Art and dexterity, as they never retard the ſpeedy march of an Army.

They inhabit, amongſt many other Provinces, thoſe of Sumahania, Tanius gupi Niulham, and Niuche; of which I am able to ſay nothing in the way of Corographie, or of the four firſt in way of Hiſtory, onely I finde that thoſe of Niulham were aiding to the King of Niuche, in the Conqueſt of China; and of the Gupy it is written, that they are ſo called, by reaſon they make their Coats of defence or Breaſt-plates of Fiſh-skin which grow (as is affirmed) in a manner impregnable.

Yet either terrified by the noyſe of their great ſucceſs, or willing to partake of ſome part of their fortunes, they not onely aided them in their Warres on that ſide of Imaus, but were content to take their very name upon them, never invaded nor ſubdued till the time of Hembu King of China, who having driven the Weſtern Tartars, then lording it over that Kingdome from one Port of it to another, compelled them finally to betake themſelves unto thoſe Ports and Provinces of the Eaſtern Tartars, which now make up the Kingdome or Province of Niuche, where the War followed after them alſo, till by little and little they became more quiet; compelled to beg their peace of the Conquering Enemy; divided into ſeven Hordes or Tribes, aud Governed for a long time by their ſeverall Chiefs, they became at laſt united into one Kingdome called the Kingdome of Niuche, Anno 1550. or thereabouts. Oppreſſed by the Prefects of Leaolong in the way of their Trade, and ſuffering amongſt many other indignities the death of their King, whom thoſe Prefects had entrapped and murthered, they make complaint of thoſe outrages to the King of China; and finding no remedy at his hand, put themſelves into Arms, invade the Province of Leaolong take the City LEAOTUNG, and having beſieged the King himſelf in the Royall or Imperiall City of Peking, they returned home (finding no hope of taking it at that time) with the ſpoil and plunder of all thoſe parts through which they marched. The War thus firſt begun was managed for many years with great loſſe on both ſides, the Tartars having got nothing by it, but the Eaſtern parts of the Province of Leaolong, and the honour of having ſhewed themſelves twice more at the Walls of Peking, till in the year 1544. Being invited into CHINA by Uſangurins to ſupport the then falling fortune of the Royall Family, they husbanded the opportunity ſo well, as to make themſelves the abſolute Maſters of that mighty Kingdome. The whole ſtory and ſucceſſes of that notable action, we ſhall ſum up in brief when we come to China. In the mean time take here the Catalogue of,

The Kings of Niuche

1550. 1, 2. N.N. advanced into this Kingdome after the reducing of the ſeveral Hordes into one main body, and Father of the King ſuccedning, who was ſlain at laſt by the treachery of the Prefects of Leolong, as before was ſaid.

1616. 3. Thienmingus, who to revenge his Fathers death, invaded China, took the City of Leogang, braved the great Emperour at the walls of the Regall City, and having enrichd himſelf with the ſpoils of the Country, returned home again.

1637. 4. Thienzungus, the ſon of Thienmingus, followed the War with the ſame fortune as his Father did, both of them growing greater in Renown and Riches then in Power and Patrimony.

1636. 5. Zungteus, the Son of Theinzungas ſecretly brought up among the Chineſe, by means whereof he grew not only acquainted with the conditions of that people, but their weakneſs alſo, and conſequently was the better prepared to lay the foundation of that greatneſs to which the Tartars have attained by the conqueſt of it. Called into China by Uſangueirs, as before is ſaid, he poſſeſſed himſelf of the City of Pequin: and though he died aſſoon as he was Maſter of that City onely, yet left he ſuch inſtructions to his Brothers, and the reſt of his Council, that very eaſily and ſpeedily they poſſeſſed themſelves of all the Kingdom.

1644. 6. Xunchius the ſon of the former, of the age of nine years only at the death of his Father, the management of his affairs both for war and peace being committed to his Unkle, but chiefly unto Amavangus the eldeſt of them, by whom ſo prudently conducted, that within the ſpace of four years he was quietly ſetled in that throne, all oppoſition and pretenders to the Royal Succeſſion being beaten down, of which more hereafter.

5. TARTARIA ANTIQUA.

TARTARIA ANTIQUA hath on the South Altay, and the Countreys of the Eaſtern Tartars on the Weſt, and North, the main Scythick Ocean; on the Eaſt the Streights of Anian, (if ſuch Streights there be) by which parted from America. So called, becauſe the firſt habitation of the Tartars; who from this Den or Jail, made their firſt eruptions, and have ſince over-grown ſo much of Aſia.

The Countrey cold, and comfortleſs, as lying under the Polar Circle, and in part beyond it; not fit for any but ſuch as can live no where elſe: yet heretofore a receptacle of many Chriſtians (though thoſe of the Neſtorian Sect) who here enjoyed that liberty of their Religion, which the Perſians and Saracens denyed them in more pleaſing Countries. It containeth many Regions, ſome not conſiderable. Thoſe of moſt note, are 1. Thebet, 2. Tabor, 3. Tenduc, 4. Bargu, 5. Anian, and 6. Tartar.

1. THEBET, a fenny Region, and full of woods; rich in Coral which they finde on the Sea-ſhore, and uſe it inſtead of money. So named from the chief City of it, the ordinary Seat of the Abaſſi, or Pope of this Idolatrous people; much reverenced, and having in his power the diſpoſing of all Offices, which concern the ſervice of their Idols; They have alſo ſome good ſtore of Musk, and abundance of wild beaſts which are bred in their Forreſts. But no beaſts wilder than the people, who in times paſt (if not at the preſent alſo) uſed to bury their Parents in their own bowels, and to make drinking cups of their ſkuls; for fear leſt in the midſt of their jollity they ſhould forget their Progenitors. Yet not more barbarous than immodeſt, it being contrary to their cuſtom to take a wife that is a Virgin. And therefore the mothers uſe to proſtitute their daughters to the Merchant-Strangers, who having had their pleaſure of them, gratifie them with a Jewel or ſome other preſent, which they wear on their wedding-day: ſhe being the moſt acceptable Bride to her husband, who bringeth the greateſt Dowry with her of thoſe baſe rewards. It contained once petit Kingdoms, (Homagers to the Kings of Tenduc) with many Cities; but now laid deſolate by the Tartar.

2. TABOR, once a diſtinct Kingdome alſo. One of the Kings whereof in the year 1540 came to the Courts of Charles the fifth, and Francis the firſt, where he found Princely entertainment. But upon proof that he was a Factor for the Jews, and ſecretly ſolicited many unto that Religion, by the command of Charles, he was burnt at Mantua.

3. TENDUC, a populous Kingdom of it ſelf, but greater in name and power; the Kings hereof commanding all theſe North-Eaſt parts, as far as the borders of Cathay. Chriſtian in Religion, till the Conqueſt of it by the Tartars, though according to the Neſtorian tendries: but now Mahometan for the moſt part, with ſome remainders, and but few, of Chriſtianity. Divided into many large and ſpacious Provinces, as Chinchintales, Cerguth, Egregaiah, Carcham, others of leſſe note: ſo called according to the names of their principall Towns, or having ſome Towns in them of the name of the Provinces.

Antiqua. Thoſe of moſt note in Tenauc it ſelf, 1. Coras, the ordinary ſepulture of the Kings of Tenduc, before it was ſubdued by the Tartars, and ſince that alſo. 2. Caracoras, where Cingis was firſt honoured with the title of King. The Kings hereof bearing the port of Kings, and the office of Prieſts, were antiently called by the name of Presbyter Johannes, or Preſter John: a title now erroneouſly conferred by ſome on the Emperour of the Abaſſines, or Æthiopians in Africk. Concerning which it is a wonder, that Joſeph Scaliger, a man of ſuch infinite reading, ſhould be ſo deceived: and by the authority of his judgement deceive ſo many. For finding that there was a Presbyter Johannes in the North of Aſia: and hearing vulgarly that title given unto him in Africk, he fell upon a fancy that this Abaſſine Emperour was formerly of ſo great power, as to extend his power over India, and the North of Aſia; and in this laſt, for the aſſurance of his conqueſts, to hold his reſidence. A monſtrous and undefenſible fancy. For beſides that all Hiſtories, even thoſe of the Abaſſines themſelves, are ſilent in it: how improbable is it, that a King reigning in the heart of Africk ſhould reduce the moſt remote parts of Aſia, and there keep his Court: ſo many great States and moſt puiſſant Nations being interpoſed, or that ſo memorable an exploit ſhould be buried in ſilence, and found in no record but in Scaligers head. Beſides, it well known, and generally granted, that the Presbyter John of Aſia was by Sect a Neſtorian; but he that is ſo called in Africk, of the Sect of the Jacobites: and further, that the Chriſtians of Æthiopia are circumciſed, which never was reported of thoſe of Aſia.

Letting this paſs therefore as an unwarrantable, and ill-grounded fancy, we are to know, that formerly this province of Tenduc was under the old Kings of Cathay, till the time of Cin-Cham, the King thereof. After whoſe death a certain Neſtorian ſhepherd (that is to ſay, the maſter of great flocks of ſheep) being Governour of the Taymans, a People of Tenduc, took to himſelf the title of King of Tenduc, whom they called by the name of Praſt John, or Prince John (the ſame word in their language, as in the Hebrew, ſignifieth both Prieſt and Prince.) Dying he bequeathed his eſtate and flocks to his brother Unt-Cham, (commonly called in one word Uncham) a greater ſheep-maſter than he; whoſe flocks ranged over all the paſtures of the Moles, or Moguls and Tartars, though dwelling 14 days journey off, whom he had in ſubjection: the title of Prieſt John, or Presbyter Johannes, going along with the dignity and Royal eſtate. And though afterwards this Uncham was ſubdued by the Tartars, yet his poſterity for long time were ſuffered to enjoy the title of Kings, and Presbyters; (but Vaſſals, and Homagers to the Great Cham): the Great Chams, in regard of their nobility, and royall parentage, beſtowing their daughters on them in marriage, as is ſaid by William de Rubraquis, who travelled in thoſe Countries, Anno 1253. the King hereof being then named George (the fourth from Uncham) but commonly called Presbyter Johannes, as his Fathers were.

4. BARGU, on the extream North-weſt, bordering on both thoſe ſides the cold Scythick Ocean, ſcituate under the North-Star, of the ſame nature, both for the ſoyl and people, as that of the Tartars. And

5. ANIAN, on the North-eaſt, oppoſite unto it, giving name unto the Streights of Anian, lying betwixt Tartary and America; which Streights (if any ſuch ſtreights there be) the Tartars, and ſome other of theſe Northern nations, are thought to have paſſed over, and to plant that Countrey.

6. TARTAR, ſo called of the great River Tartar, the principall of this Northern Tract, and giving name unto the Tartars: this being their Original Countrey, where they lived like beaſts, having neither faith, nor letters, nor habitation, nor the uſe of Arms, nor any reputation amongſt their neighbours. In matter of Religion, the worſt ſort of Gentiles, worſhipping the Sun, Moon, Fire, and the very Earth; to which they offered in the morning faſting, the firſt of their meats and drinks.

Their Idols made of Felt, and placed on both ſides of the doors of their tents or booths, as the preſervers of their Cattel, and the Authors of milk. Divided into five Clans, or Tribts, denominating ſo many Towns and Territories in which they dwelt, that is to ſay, 1. Mongul. 2. Teka-Mongul, or the Great Mongul. 3. Sommongul, or the water-Mongul, 4. Mercat, 5. Metrit: each of them governed by its Chief, as commonly it is amongſt barbarous Nations, though all thoſe Chiefs ſubordinate to ſome higher power. Oppreſſed by Uncham, or Unt-cham, the King of Tenduc, who invaded their Paſtures, and compelled them to pay unto him the tenth of their Cattel; with joint conſent they removed ſomewhat further off, and denied their Tribute. This opportunity was taken by Cingis, one of the Tribe of the Teka-Monguls, and ſo well husbanded, that they admitted him for their King. For publiſhing abroad amongſt the credulous people, that an armed man appeared to him in his ſleep, with a white horſe, and ſaid, O Cingius, or Cingis, it is the will of the immortal God, that thou be Governour of the Tartars, and free them from bondage, and paying tribute; he found a generall belief, eſpecially amongſt thoſe of his own Clan, who joyning themſelves to him, followed him as their Ring-leader, in all his actions. Thus backed and ſtrengthned, he made war againſt the Sommonguls, ſlew their Commander, and ſubdued them: and by their help, ſucceſſively aſſaulted the Mercats, and Metrits, whom he alſo vanquiſhed. And having thus ſubdued all the Clans of the Tartars, and added the eſtates of Thebet, and Tanguth, unto his Dominions, he was by the conſent of the ſeven Princes, or Chiefs of their Clans, (Thebet, and Tanguth being added to the former number) placed on a ſeat on a piece of Felt, (the beſt throne they had or could afford) and ſaluted King, with as great reverence and ſolemnity as their ſtate could yield. And firſt to make triall of his power, and their obedience, he commanded the ſeven Chiefs or Princes to ſurrender their places, and each of them to cut off the head of his eldeſt Son, which was done accordingly. Had John of Leiden been a Scholar, as he was but a Botcher, I ſhould think he had ſtudied the Acts of Cingis, and proceeded by them. Aſſured by this of their fidelity and obedience, he ſet upon the Naymans, a people of the Kingdom of Tenduc, whom he overcame. And now conceiving himſelf fit for ſome great alliance, he ſent to Uncham, & demanded one of his daughters for his wife, which Uncham with ſome threats, but more ſcorn, denying; he marched againſt him, ſlew him in the field, and poſſeſſed his daughter, and with her alſo his eſtate. Proud with this good ſucceſs, and encouraged by ſo great an increaſe of power, he invaded the Kingdom of Cathay; pretending for that alſo the authority of an heavenly viſion, in the name of the immortall God: in which attempt, diſcomfited at firſt with a very great overthrow, but at laſt victorious; conquering the ſeverall Nations of it by one and one, till in the end he brought the war to the chief City of that Kingdom, which at laſt he took, and therewithall the title of Cham or Emperour. Continuing in this dignity for the ſpace of ſix years, and every year adding ſomewhat to his dominions, he was at laſt wounded in the knee at the Caſtle of Thaygin, of which wound he died, and was honourably buried in Mount Altay.

This is the beſt accompt I am able to give of the beginning of this great Empire, the originall of this ſpreading Nation, and the deſcription of the Countrey of their firſt habitation. They that have chriſtned ſome of the moſt Northern parts of it by the names of the Tribes of Dan, and Nepthalim, and accordingly placed them in their Maps, might with more credit have ſupplied thoſe vacant places, which they knew not otherwiſe how to fill, with the pictures of wilde beaſts, or monſtruous fiſhes; which might well enough have pleaſed the eye, without betraying the judgement of the looker on. Of his Succeſſors I am able to make no certain Catalogue; their names being doubtfully delivered, and the ſucceſſion much confounded amongſt our Writers: the names of the Provincial Sultans being many times impoſed upon us, inſtead of thoſe of the Chams themſelves. But we will wade through thoſe difficulties as well as we can, and exhibit as perfect a Catalogue of them, as the light of ſtory will direct me: firſt adding (what ſhould have been before remembred) that it is recorded, that Cingis before he joyned battell with Uncham, conſulted with his Diviners and Aſtrologers, of the ſucceſs. They taking a green reed, cleft it aſunder; writ on the one the name of Cingis, and Uncham on the other: and placed them not far aſunder. Then fell they to reading their Charms, and conjurations; and the reeds fell a fighting in ſight of the whole Army, Cingis Reed overcoming the other: whereby they foretold the joyfull news of victory to the Tartars, which accordingly hapned. And this was the firſt ſtep, by which this baſe and beggarly Nation began to mount into the chair of Empire and Soveraignty; whereas before they lived like beaſts, having neither Letters, nor faith, nor dwelling, nor reputation, nor valour, nor indeed any thing befitting a man, as before was ſaid.

The great Chams of Tartars.

A.C.

1162. 2. Cingis, Cinchius, Zingis, or Changius, was made King or Cham of the Tartars; he ſubdued Tenduch, and Cathaia, changing the name of Scythians and Scythia, to Tartarians; and Tartaria. 6.

1168. 2. Jocuthan Cham, or Hoccata, ſucceeded. In his time the name of Tartar was firſt known in Europe, Anno 1212. in which year they drove the Poleſockie from the banks of the Euxine Sea. By his Captain Bathu, or Roido, he ſubdued Moſcovia; planted his Tartars in Taurica Cherſoneſus; waſted Hungary, Boſnia, Servia, Bulgaria; and by his other Captains took Perſia from the Turks.

3. Zaincham, Bathu, or Barcham, ruined the Turks Kingdome of Damaſcus, and Aſia the leſs.

4. Gino Cham, whoſe daughter conveyed the Empire unto her husband Tamerlane, or Tamberlane.

1370. 5. Tamir-Cutlu, Tamir-Cham, or Tamerlane, a great tyrant, but withall an excellent Souldier. It is thought that he ſubdued more Provinces in his life-time, than the Romans had done in 800 years. Of whoſe acts we have ſpoken at large. Dying, he divided his great Empire amongſt his Children; as Perſia to Miza-Charok his fourth ſon, Zagathay to another (perhaps unto Sautochus his eldeſt ſon) and ſo to others.

1405. 6. Lutrochin, the ſecond ſon of Tamerlain, ſucceeded in Cathay, though the eldeſt was at firſt proclaimed, which his Father had before prognoſticated: who when his ſons came to him before his death, laid his hand on the head of Sautochus who was the eldeſt, but lifting up the chin of Lutrochin, who was the ſecond. He lived not long, ſucceeded to by

7. Allan, who added little to his eſtate.

8. Mango Cham, to whom Haiton an Armenian Prince (and the chief Compiler of the Tartarian Hiſtory) went for ayd againſt the Caliph of Bagdat. By whoſe perſwaſion the ſaid Mango Cham is ſaid to have been chriſtned, with all his houſhold, and many Nobles of both Sexes.

9. Cublay Cham, the ſon of Mango.

10. Tamer Cham, the Nephew of Cablay by his ſon Cingis.

11. Demyr Cham, the great Cham of Cathay in the year 1540. or thereabouts. What the names of the Chams are, who have ſince reigned, we cannot learn; nor what memorable acts have been done among them. The great diſtance of Countries, and difficulty of the journey, have hindred further diſcoveries. For the great Cham, and his next neighbour the King of China, will neither ſuffer any of their ſubjects to travell abroad, nor permit any forreiners to view their dominions, or enter into them: unleſs either Embaſſadors or Merchants, and thoſe but ſparingly, and under very great reſtraints, to avoid all giving of intelligence touching their affairs; ſaving that in theſe latter times the Jeſuits have found ſome footing in China, by whom notwithſtanding we have received little or no intelligence in matters which concern this Country.

The Government is tyrannicall, the great Cham being Lord of all; and in his tongue (beſides which they have almoſt no Laws) conſiſteth the power of life or death. He is called by the ſimple vulgar, The ſhadow of ſpirits, and ſon of the immortall God: and by himſelf is reputed to be the Monarch of the whole world. For this cauſe every day aſſoon as he hath dined, he cauſeth his Trumpets to be ſounded; by that ſigne giving leave to the other Kings and Princes of the earth to go to dinner. A fine dream of univerſall Monarchy. At the death of the Cham, the ſeven chief Princes aſſemble to crown his ſon; whom they place on a black coarſe cloth: telling him, if he reign well, heaven ſhall be his reward; if ill, he ſhall not have ſo much as a corner of that black cloth to reſt his body on: then they put the crown on his head, and kiſſing his feet, ſwear unto him fealty and homage. And at the Funeral of theſe great Monarchs, they uſe to kill ſome of his guard Souldiers, whereof he hath 12000 in continuall pay; ſaying unto them, Ite & domino noſtro ſervite in alia vita. Paulus Venetus reporteth, that at the obſequies of Mango Cham, no fewer than 10000 were ſlain upon this occaſion.

Theſe Chams are for the moſt part ſevere juſticers, and puniſh almoſt every ſmall fact with ſudden death; but theft eſpecially: Inſomuch that a man in Cambalu taking a pail of milk from a womans head, and beginning to drink thereof, upon the womans out-cry was apprehended, and cut aſunder with a ſword, ſo that the blood and the milk came out together. Nor are Adultery or Lying puniſhed with leſs than death, and ſo ordained to be by the Laws of Cingis, their firſt Emperor: a wiſer man than poſſibly could be expected from ſo rude a Country, and of ſo little breeding in the knowledge of Books or Buſineſs; the Tartars being utterly without the uſe of Letters, till the conqueſt of the Huyri, a Cathaian nation, but of Chriſtian faith.

What forces the Great Chams, in the height of their power, were able to draw into the Field, may be conjectured at by the Army of Tamerlane, conſiſting of 1200000 horſe and foot, as was ſaid before. And looking on them as confined within Cathay, we ſhall finde them not inferiour to the greateſt Princes. For Cublay Cham, long after the diviſion of this great eſtate, which was made by Tamerlane, had in the field againſt Naian his Unkle, and one Caidu, who had then rebelled, an Army of 100000 foot; and 360000 horſe: there being 500000 horſe on the other ſide, which made almoſt a million of men in both Armies. And this is probable enough, if report be true touching the Chams of Zagathay and thoſe of Turcheſtan, (before reduced under the obedience of the other) of which the firſt is ſaid to have been able to raiſe 300000 horſe, and the laſt an hundred thouſand more. For ſtanding forces, he maintains 12000 horſe, diſtributed amongſt four Captains, for the guard of his perſon; beſides which he hath great forces in every Province, and within four miles of every City, ready to come upon a call if occaſion be: ſo that he need not fear any outward invaſion, and much leſs any homebred Rebellions. But on the other ſide, admitting this for truth which before is ſaid, we finde him of no power at Sea, without which great Princes are expoſed moſt commonly to the invaſions and affronts of ſuch as are ſtrong in ſhipping: For either the Eaſtern Tartars interpoſed betwixt him and the main Ocean, whereby he is landlocked (as it were) from all Trade at Sea; or if he hath any Port in the North-eaſt parts of this long Country, where it joyneth on Tartaria Antiqua, and ſo far off, and ſo much out of the way, that it adds nothing to his power, and not much to his purſe.

Of the Revenues of the Cham, I can make no eſtimate, but may conclude them to be what he liſt himſelf: he being the abſolute Lord of all, the Subject without any thing he can call his own. But that which ordinarily doth accrew unto him, is the tenth of wool, ſilk, hemp, corn, and Cattell. Then doth he draw into his own hands all the gold and ſilver which is brought into the Countrey, which he cauſeth to be melted, and preſerved in his treaſury: impoſing on his people inſtead of money, in ſome places Cockleſhels, in others, a black coyn made of the bark of trees, with his ſtamp upon it. And beſides this he hath to himſelf the whole trade of Pearl-fiſhing, which no body upon pain of death dare fiſh for, but by leave from him. So that his Treaſury is conceived to be very rich, though his Annual in-come be uncertain, or not certainly known.

Hitherto I have proſecuted the affairs of this mighty Monarch upon the common credit of approved Authors; yet muſt confeſs I am not very well ſatisfied in the truth and reality of the thing it ſelf: it being rather my opinion, that there is no ſuch man at this preſent time as a great Cham of Tartary, with Soveraign Power and Juriſdiction over all the other Members of that vaſt body; but that this Empire being ing broken in pieces by the Sons of Tamerlane, the conquered Countries did a little and little return again to their former Governments, or elſe were ſeized on by the Viſi-Chams of Governors or the ſeveral Provinces. For firſt I conſider, it is impoſſible, that there ſhould be ſuch a mighty Monarch, of ſuch abſolute authority, ſuch an infinite power, and ſuch unlimited Revenue; and yet that for the ſpace of an hundred years and more we ſhould hear neither tale nor tidings of them, no not ſo much as of their names, eſpecially in an active age, and when this great building of the world hath ſuch Caſements in it. For it muſt needs ſeem ſtrange to a rational man, that neither Jenkinſon who paſſed into Perſia by the Caſpian Sea, nor Sir Robert Sherley who ſpent much time in the Perſian Court, nor Sir Thomas Roe, or Sir Dodmore Cotton (the firſt Embaſſador to the great Mogul, the other to the Perſian Sophie) ſhould tell us any thing of this Prince, if ſuch Prince there be; or that the Travellers of our Nation who have rambled over all parts of India the next neighbouring Country, ſhould bring us home no tidings of him, or the Jeſuits with all their diligence ſhould not finde him out. Secondly, I conſider it is a thing improbable, that if there were any ſuch mighty Prince, keeping his Royall Court in the City of Cambalu, ſo near unto the Kingdome of China, he ſhould permit the beggarly Nation of the Eaſtern Tartars to conquer that rich and mighty Empire in ſo ſhort a time, he in the mean ſeaſon ſitting ſtill as a dull ſpectator, neither conſidering his own danger, nor putting in for a ſhare of ſo great a booty. Thirdly, I obſerve, that in the treating of a Marriage between Xunchius the great King of the Eaſtern Tartars, now reigning in China, with a daughter of the King of Tanguth; the King of Tanguth is called Prince of the Occidental or Weſtern Tartars, by which name the Chineſes call all the Tartars inhabiting the vaſt Countries of Altay and Cathay, ſpecially ſo called, as being Weſtward of themſelves, and the Eaſtern Tartars, which title the King of Tanguth had not merited or durſt have aſſumed to himſelf, if there had been any ſuch great Cham then reigning in Cathay, and reſiding in Cambalu as our Author ſpeaks of. And 4ly, I obſerve it as a matter probable, that as at the breaking of this Empire into pieces at the death of Tamerlane; the Precopenſes, or Europæan Tartars ſubmitted to a Prince of their own Nation, under the power and Government of whoſe Succeſſors they do ſtill continue; and much of the Aſiatick Tartary being ſubdued by the Moſcovites, the neighbouring Tartars did return to their ancient Government by Hordes or Tribes; that ſo the Kings of Tanguth might not only recover their own Inheritance, but by degrees poſſeſs themſelves of the greateſt part of all Altay, if not of ſome part of the Proper Cathay alſo. And therefore that ſome of the laſt great Chams mentioned in the former Catalogue, are no other then the Kings of Tanguth or the Chams of Zagathay, in whom (if any where) remaineth the ſucceſſion of the houſe of Cingis.

From theſe Premiſes I conclude, that all which hath before been ſpoken touching the great power, authority, and revenue of the great Chams of Tartary, muſt either be referred unto the times of their greateſt glory, when their Empire was entire, or not much diſmembred; or elſe relate, with ſome qualifications, to the Chams of Zagathay, or the Kings of Tanguth. But theſe my obſervations and conſiderations, with the concluſion iſſuing from them, I willingly ſubmit unto better Judgements.

OF

OF CHINA.

CHINA is bounded on the North with Altay, and the Eaſtern Tartars, from which ſeparated by a continuall chain of hills, part of thoſe of Ararat; and where that chain is broken off, or interrupted, with a great wall extended 400 Leagues in Length; built as they ſay, by Tzaintzon, the 117th King hereof: on the South, partly with Cauchin-China, a Province of India, partly with the Ocean; on the Eaſt with the Orientall Ocean, and on the Weſt with part of India, and Cathay; from which no otherwiſe ſeparated then by ſuch naturall bounds and Ramparts as commonly divide great Countries from one another.

The Northern parts hereof were utterly unknown unto the Antients, both Greeks and Romans; But for the Southern parts hereof, they make up that Countrey which Ptolomy called Sina, or Sinarem Regio, by which name the whole Countrey is called at the preſent by our modern Latiniſts, and from whence that of China ſeems to be derived. By Paulus Venetus called Mangi, by the neighbouring Countries Sanglai, by the natives Taine, and Taybinco: which laſt ſignifies no other then a Realm; or by way of excellence, the Realm. By the Arabians it is called Tzinin; and the inhabitants call themſelves by the name of Tangis.

It is ſaid to contain in circuit 69516 Diez of China meaſure, which reduced to our Europaan meaſure will make a compaſs in the whole of 3000 Leagues: the length thereof extended from the borders of India, to the moſt Northern Provinces of this Continent, 1800 Leagues. But they that ſay ſo, ſpeak at random. For beſides that 1800 Leagues in length muſt needs carry a greater compaſs than 3000 leagues; they make it by this reckoning to be bigger than Europe, which I think no ſober man will grant. And anſwerable to this vaſt compaſs, it is ſaid alſo to contain no fewer than 15 Provinces, every of which is made to be of a greater Continent than the greateſt Realm we know in Europe: Yet not a Continent of waſte ground, or full of unhabitable Deſarts, as in other places; but full of goodly Towns and Cities. The names of which Provinces, and the number of their Towns and Cities, I have thought fit, once for all, to lay down in this Diagramme following.

By which it doth appear, that in theſe fifteen Provinces there are 591 Cities, 1593 walled Towns; and beſides them 1154 Caſtles, 4200 Towns unwalled; and ſuch an infinite number of Villages, that the whole Country ſeems to be but one City onely. But here we are to underſtand that theſe great Provinces are divided into many leſſer, and ſome of them preſented to us (in late ſtories) under other names, according to the Languages and appellations of theſe ſeverall Nations, which either have recourſe unto them, or do traffique with them; which the Reader may take notice of with leſs doubt or wonder, in regard that the main Country of China it ſelf is called by ſo many ſeverall names, as before was ſhewn.

It reacheth from the 130th, to the 160th Degree of Longitude: and from the Tropick of Cancer, to the 53d degree of Latitude. So that it lyeth under all the Climes from the third to the ninth, incluſively: the longeſt Summers day in the Southern parts, being thirteen hours and fourty minutes; increaſed in the moſt Northern parts to 16 hours, and 3 quarters. Enjoying by this ſight an air ſomewhat of the hotteſt, eſpecially in thoſe parts which lye neer the Tropicks, but withall very ſound and healthy, and fit for the production of the choiceſt fruits.

The Countrey very rich and fertile, inſomuch that in many places they have two, and in ſome three harveſts in a year, well cultivated, and ſowed with all manner of grain, and planted with the beſt kind of fruits; which do not onely come to a ſpeedy maturity, but to more excellency and perfection than any of theſe Weſtern parts. The like is alſo ſaid of their Pearls, and Bezoar, fairer and of greater vertue than thoſe of America, or any other part of the world beſides. Particularly it aboundeth with Wheat, Barley, ley, Rice, Wool, Cotton, Olives, Vines, Flax, Silk, all kind of metals, Fruits, Cattel, Sugar, Honey, Rhubarb, Camphire, Ginger, all kinds of Spices, medicinall woods called China-wood, by the name of the countrey, Musk and Salt: the cuſtome for which laſt, in one City onely, which is that of Canton, amounteth to the yearly value of 180000 Crowns. It yieldeth alſo an Herb, out of which they preſs a delicate juice, which doth not onely ſerve them inſtead of Wine, but preſerveth their health, and freeth them from many of thoſe inconveniences, which the immoderate uſe of wine doth breed to others. Such ſtore of Poultry of all ſorts, but of Ducks eſpecially, that in the Town of Canton onely before mentioned, it is thought there are 12000 eaten every day, one day with another.

The people are for the moſt part of ſwart complexion, but more, or leſs, according to their neerneſs to the heats of the Sun; ſhort-noſed, black-eyed, and of very thin beards. They wear their garments very long, with long looſe ſleeves, and their hair much longer then the neighbouring Tartars; who wear their hair exceeding ſhort, and their cloaths much cloſer; to which two faſhions ſo addicted, that more of them took up Arms for their hair and habit, (when required to conform in thoſe particulars to the will of the Conquerour) then had done either for their King, or their common liberty. So much delighted with their own faſhion and compoſure, that as the Negroes uſe to paint the Devil White, as a colour contrary to their own: ſo when theſe Chinois uſe to draw the picture of a deformed perſon, they ſet him forth in a ſhort coat, broad eyes, long noſe, and a buſhy beard. They are much given unto their bellies, and eat thrice a day, but then not immoderately: drink their Drink hot, and eat their Meat with two ſticks of Ivorie, Ebonie, or the like, not touching their meat with their hands at all, and therefore no great foulers of Linnen. The uſe of ſilver forks with us, by ſome of our ſpruce Gallants taken up of late, came from hence into Italy, and from thence to England. Their marriages they celebrate moſt commonly in the New-Moon, and many times put them off till March, when the year beginneth with them as it doth with us: in which ſolemnity they ſpare for no coſt or charge, Muſick, and Stage-playes, and good cheer many days together. Yet doth not this take them off a jot from their naturall induſtry, and their proficiency in Manufactures and Mechanick Arts. For the Son is bound to follow his Fathers occupation: which law preventing the roaving about of idle penple, and exciting in each breaſt an emulation of every Art, maketh the Inhabitants excellent Artificers. In giving Almes they are bountiful to the maimed, and the lame; but reject the blinde, as being ſufficiently able to get ſuſtenance for themſelves by corporall labour, as grinding of Corn, &c. They have long enjoyed the benefit of Printing, before it was known in Europe: but print not as we do, from the left hand to the right, nor as the Jewes, from the right hand, to the left; but from the top of the leaf, downward to the bottom. Guns alſo have been uſed among them time out of minde: whence they are ſo well conceited of themſelves, that they uſe to ſay, They themſelves have two eyes, the Europaans one, and the reſt of the people of the world not one. A pretty flouriſh of ſelf-praiſing. Now that Guns were in uſe in theſe Eaſtern Countries, and conſequently alſo amongſt them, even when Bacchus made his expedition into India (which was ſome three or four years before, or after the departure of Iſrael out of Ægypt) Sir Walter Rawleigh ſeemeth to affirm: becauſe Philoſtratus in the life of Apollonius Tyanaus, telleth us how Bacchus was beaten from a City of Oxydracæ by thunder and lightning, which he interpreteth to be the Cannon. But certainly himſelf in another place of his moſt excellent Book, acknowledgeth this Philoſtratus to have written fabulouſly; and therefore no fit foundation for a conceit ſo contrary to probability, and the opinion of all times. Beſides, whereas Dion telleth us, that by the benefit of Thunder and Lightning from Heaven, Severus diſcomfited Peſcinius Niger, and by the ſame means was himſelf repulſed from the wall of Petra in Arabia: we may (if this interpretation hold good) as eaſily maintain, that Severus had great Ordnance in his Camp; and the Arabians in their Town. As for Printing, whether John Guttenberg learned it of the Chinois; or whether good inventions, like good wits, do ſometimes jump, I dare not determine: ſure I am that he firſt taught it in Europe; and as ſome ſay, in the year 1440. at Harlem a Town of Holland, it is firſt ſaid to be practiſed, and at Mentz, perfected. Now whereas it is by ſome doubted, whether the Art of Printing be available to the proficiency and advancement of Learning, or not; I muſt not herein be both a Judge, and a party: but muſt leave the deciſion of the point to men unintereſſed. Onely this I dare boldly ſay, that this moſt excellent Invention hath been baſely abuſed, and proſtituted to the luſt of every fooliſh and idle Paper-blurrer: the treaſury of Learning being never ſo full, and yet never more empty; over-charged ſo with the froth and ſcum of fooliſh & unneceſſary diſcourſes. In which (though all Nations have their ſhare therein, and we of late as much as any) the Dutch have been accompted the moſt blame-worthy: who not content to ſcatter their poor conceptions amongſt themſelves, and print them in their own Tongue onely (as our Engliſh Paper-blurrers do); publiſh them in Latine to the eye of others, and ſend them twice a year to the publick Marts, though neither worth the Readers eye, nor the Printers hand. Scriptorum plus eſt hodie quam muſcarum olim cum caletur maxime; the complaint once of an old Comedian, was never truer than at the preſent.

But not to dive too deep into this diſpute, the people, as before was ſaid, are good Artificers, ingenious and excellent in all things which they take in hand: the porcellan diſhes, curious carvings, and the fine painted works which we have in Tables, Leathers, Stuffes, being brought from thence. Effeminated with much eaſe and pleaſure, they are not much given unto the Wars, which make them the more eaſy prey to the neighbouring Tartars, whoſe very name hath bred more terrours in them, then their Armes, and Conqueſts. Inſomuch that when Uſangueius requeſted aid of Zungters King of the Eaſtern Tartars, againſt Licungius, and his rabble of Rogues, which ſacked the City of Peking, and placed himſelf in the Throne Imperiall; The Tartarian having but few men in readineſs, adviſed him to array a good part of his own Souldiers with the Armes and Colours of the Tartars, that on the terror of that ſight he might obtain the cheaper, and more certain victory; which prudent Councell was purſued, and it proved accordingly; but what they want in courage they ſupply with wit, being ſaid to be a politick and judicious people; but withall very jealous of their women, and great tyrants over them, not ſuffering them to go abroad, or ſit down at the Table if any ſtranger be invited, unleſs he be ſome very neer kinſman. A tyranny or reſtraint, which the poor women give no cauſe for, being ſaid to be very honeſt, and much reſerved; not ſo much as ſhewing themſelves at a window for fear of offence: and if they uſe painting, as moſt of them do, it is rather to preſerve themſelves in the good affection of their husbands, than for any other lewd reſpects. For the moſt part of a fair hair, whereof very curious: binding it about their heads with Ribbands of ſilk, garniſhed with pearls and precious ſtones. Neat in their dreſs, and very coſtly in their apparel, with reference to their eſtates, and the degrees of their husbands: the richer ſort wearing Sattin ſtriped with Gold, and interlaced with very rich Jewels; the poorer in Serge, and razed velvets. They have moſt of them little feet, which they take great pride in, and for this cauſe bind them up hard from their very infancy: which they endure patiently, though it be very painfull, becauſe a ſmall foot is counted for ſo great a grace. And yet it is conceived that this proceedeth not ſo much from their own curioſity; as from the jealouſie of the men, who have brought it in: to the end that they ſhould not be able to go but with a great deal of pain; and that going with ſo ill a grace, and ſo little eaſe, they ſhould have no deſire to ſtir much abroad. A cuſtome ſo antient and received, that it hath got the force of law; and if any mother ſhould do otherwiſe in breeding their daughters, they would undergo ſome cenſure or mark of infamy. If a deſire to ſee their Parents get them the freedom of a viſit, they are carried to them in cloſe chairs, and attended by ſo many waiters, that it is not poſſible for any man either to ſee them, or hold any diſcourſe with them.

Of both Sexes it is thought that this Countrey containeth no fewer than 70 millions. Which though it ſeem to be a number beyond all belief; yet it is knowingly averred, and may be thought probable enough, if we conſider the ſpaciouſneſs of the Countrey. 2. The ſecret goodneſs of the ſtars, and temperature of the ayr. 3. The abundance of all things neceſſary to life. 4. That it is not lawfull for the King to make any war, but meerly defenſive, and ſo they enjoy perpetual peace. 5. That it is not lawfull for any Chenois to go out of the Countrey; and 6. That here the Sea is as well peopled as whole Provinces elſwhere. For the ſhips do reſemble a City, in which they buy, ſell, are born, and die. And on the River which watereth the walls of Nanquin, up to Paquin, which are ſaid to be 300 leagues, the ſhips are ſaid to be ſo thick ranked, that it ſeemeth to be a continual ſtreet.

The people hereof, in matters of Religion, are generally all Gentiles, and conceive thus of the creation; viz. That there was one Taine, who created Panzon, & Panzona, whoſe poſterity remained 90000 years: but they for their wickedneſs being deſtroyed, Taine created Lutitzam, who had two horns; from the right came men, from the left came women. When any of them dieth, they cloth him in his beſt apparell, all perfumed, ſet him in his beſt chair, and there all his neereſt kindred kneeling before him, take their leave with tears. When he is coffined, they place him in a room richly furniſhed, and ſet by him a table full of viands and good cheer, with candles continually burning on it. Not much unlike to which Ceremonies, we finde, how whilſt the Funerall was preparing for Francis the French King, his Statua apparelled in royall robes, with the Crown, Scepter, &c. was laid on his bed; whither dinner and ſupper was daily ſerved in, with the like ſtate and ſolemnity as when he was living. But to return again to my dead Chinois; when he had lain, as is above ſaid, 15 dayes, he is carried forth to his Funerall, the place wherof is in the fields; for to be buried within the walls, were a thing of all others the moſt wretched. Hither, when they are in the manner of a proceſſion come, they burn his body, and with it men, cattell, and other proviſion, for his attendance and ſuſtenance in the other world; as they uſe in the funeralls of Tartary. As great Idolaters as any, ſacrificing to the very Devil, and that upon the ſame reaſon, as the moſt ignorant ſort of the Gentiles do; becauſe forſooth he is a wicked and miſchievous creature, and would otherwiſe hurt them.

Yet in the middle of this darkneſs there appeareth ſome light, whereby we may perceive that Chriſtianity had ſome footing here in the times foregoing: For they believe that God is an immortall ſpirit; that by him the firſt man was made of nothing; that the ſoul dieth not wirh the body, but is capable of reward and puniſhment in another life, according to the works it hath done in this. Which leſt they ſhould be thought to be onely ſome remainders of the light of nature; (the learned men amongſt the antient Greeks and Romans, having ſo much divinity as this without the Goſpel): we may here add, that the Idol moſt generally worſhipped by them, is painted with three heads looking one on other; ſignifying, as themſelves affirme, that they have all but one Will: which makes ſome think they had been antiently inſtructed in the doctrine of the holy Trinity. They have alſo the picture of a very fair woman holding a Child in her Arms, who as they ſay, was daughter of ſome great King; and that ſhe was delivered of that Infant when ſhe was a Virgin. And as ſome add, they have portraitures of the faſhion, and with the marks or Characters of the twelve Apoſtles (as uſually painted in ſome part of the Chriſtian Church): of whom they are able to ſay nothing, but that they were great Philoſophers who lived vertuouſly here, and were therefore made Angels in heaven. And finally they hold that there is a great number of Saints, or men eſtated in an eminent degree of happineſs, who in their times exceeded others in knowledge, induſtry, or valour, or lived an auſtere life without wronging any man; or otherwiſe deſerved nobly of the Commonwealth, as the Authors of ſome ſignall benefit unto their Countrey. Theſe I conceive to be ſome evident remainders of Chriſtianity, or the Remembrances rather of that Chriſtianity, which formerly was known amongſt them: Firſt planted here (as may be probably collected) by Saint Thomas, or ſome of his Diſciples; an antient Breviary or Liturgy of the Indian Churches, giving good hint to it: Where it is ſaid, Per D. Thomam regnum cœlorum volavit & aſcendit ad Sinas: i. e. that by Saint Thomas the Kingdom of Heaven was preached unto thoſe of China. Some Characters here were alſo of it, in the time of the Tartars, tars, though now obliterated, and not viſible but in theſe defacements. And in this ſtate it ſtood till the time of our Fathers, in which the Jeſuites (commendably induſtrious in the propagation of the Chriſtian faith) not without great danger to themſelves, have endeavoured, and in part effected, their converſion. For though they have gained but few Proſelytes, (in regard of thoſe infinite numbers of people which are ſaid to live here) yet ſome Converts they have made amongſt them; and thereby ſown thoſe ſeeds of that ſaving truth (though mingled with ſome Tares of their own) which may in time increaſe and ſpread over all the Countrey. For at the preſent they have not only got footing in the Ports and Sea Towns, but alſo in many mid-land Cities, and in ſome alſo very far diſtant from the Sea, in all of which they have both Churches for their followers, and Cells or Monaſteries for themſelves; and finally, have gained ſo far upon the Court, as not only to have their doings well approved of by authority Royall; but have alſo gained unto the Faith, the Mother, Wife, and eldeſt Son of Jungly the laſt declared Emperour of the Chineſe, which eldeſt Son they have baptized (and be it an happy Omen, for the good of Chriſtendome) by the name of Conſtantine.

Hills of great note here are not many, here being but one Mountain touched upon by Ptolomy, in his deſcription of the Countrey called Sinarum Regio, which we conceive to be the Southern part of this China: agreeable unto the obſervation of modern Writers, by whom it is affirmed to be ſo plain and levell, and ſo unſwelled with hills at all, that they have Carts and Coaches driven with ſayles, as ordinarily as drawn with horſes, in theſe parts. Not the leſs deſtitute of Rivers for this want of mountains, Ptolomy naming in it, 1. Aſpthara. 2. Senus. 3. Ambactu, and 4. Cotiaris; all which had here their fount and fall: and yet he knew the out-skirts of the Countrey onely. But becauſe the Countrey of the Sini of which Ptolomy ſpeaks, makes but a South-part of this great Country, and that the Rivers which before we mentioned in Serica, paſſed into it alſo, it's poſſible enough that we may finde them all amongſt the chief Rivers of this Countrey, whenſoever we ſhall come to have a more perfect Corographie hereof then former times have given unto us. In the mean ſeaſon we may know, that the names by which the principall Rivers are now called, are Yalo, which riſing in the Northeaſt part of the Countrey, and paſſing by the Southern skirts of Leaotong, falleth into the Ocean over againſt the Iſland of Carea, making a little Iſlet at the Influx of it fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle called Xainghai, to ſecure that entrance. 2. Croceus, which ariſing in the Weſt Borders hereof, firſt boundeth its courſe to the Northeaſt, watering the Citie of Kaianchen, and after paſſeth directly Eaſtward till it falleth into the Yalo. 3. Palyſangas which iſſuing out of ſome of the branches of Mount Imaus, firſt paſſeth by the great Citie of Cambalu, and falls at laſt into the mighty Lake of Quinſay, and finally again contracted to its proper chanell, doth either loſe it ſelf in the Eaſtern Ocean, or in the great River of Kiang, of which more anon. 4. Cacamaton, another of theſe great Rivers, which falleth into the Lake of Quinſay, and poſſibly may be the ſame which the Chatayan Tartars call by the name of Caromoram. 5. Kiang (or Quiam, as the Tartars calls it) which having its originall from Mount Imaus, and paſſing thorow the whole breadth of Cathay, cutteth thorow the middle of this Countrey which it divideth (like an Equator) into North & South, watering therein the ſtately Cities of Nanguin, and Caſung, where it is no leſs then 4 miles broad, increaſing more and more in breadth by the falling in of many other principall Rivers till it came at laſt to be ten miles over, and caſting up ſuch mountains of water, that the Chineſe call it not undervedly, The Son of the Sea. 6. Cienthany, the ſame (I think) which the Tartars call Quiantu; which riſing out of ſome other ſpors or branches of the Mount Imaus, falleth at laſt into this Countrey; and paſſing by the goodly City of Quanychen on the North, and the fair Town of Xaoking on the South, endeth its courſe at laſt in the Eaſtern Ocean. 7. Quei, a River of the Southern parts; but not much obſervable. Here are alſo many great Lakes, not inferiour to ſome Seas in bigneſs; ſo plentifull in fiſh, as if they contended with the ſoyl, which ſhould be moſt profitable: and yet ſo little ſwelled with winds, (though the winds many times blow ſtrongly) that both upon theſe Lakes, and on the Rivers and Sea-coaſts; they paſs up and down in ſmall Barques, with no other ſail than a bough ſet up an-end in the middeſt of them; by the help whereof they make good ſpeed in their Navigations. Nor do theſe Lakes or Rivers uſe to overflow their banks, or endamage the Countrey: but when they do, it brings ſome fatall ruine with it; as in the year 1557. when the Lake of Sancey breaking out overwhelmed ſeven Cities, many Towns, and Villages, and Countrey people, almoſt infinite numbers.

Towns of moſt note amongſt the Sinæ, though nothing but the names be remaining of them, 1. Bramna, and 2. Rhabana, honoured with the title of Civitates. 3. Aſpithra. 4. Achatara, more within the land, but all four under ſome degree of Northern Latitude[illegible]5. Thine, the Metropolis of the Country, by ſome called Sinæ. 6. Sarata. 7. Catonaragara; theſe on[illegible]e South-ſide of the line. But in this Ptolomy was miſtaken, it being found by the more certain obſervations of our later writers, that no part of China comes within 20 degrees of the Æquinoctial, and ſo not capable of having any Towns or Cities of a Southern Latitude. Here was alſo a large bay called Sinarum Sinus, a Promontory named Notium, in the 4th degree of Northern Latitude; and another named Satyrorum, lying under the Equinox. More than this of the Cities of the ancient Sinæ, I have nothing to ſay, which I dare offer to the Reader.

But to behold them as they are preſented to our view in the modern China, it hath been ſaid, that for number there are no fewer than 591 Cities, and thoſe ſo uniformly built, ſo conformably one to another, that they differ not in form, and faſhion, but in quantity only. Much like the Cities of Utopia mention'd by Sir Tho. Moor, Idem ſitus omnibus, eadem, quatenus per locum licet, rerum facies; ſo neer reſembling one another, that he who knoweth but one of them, may conjecture at all. And this is the manner of their building. Moſt of their Cities have the benefit of ſome navigable River, neer which they ſtand: the waters whereof ſerve them both for navigation, and domeſtick uſes. Two great Streets croſſing one another in the very middeſt, ſo broad, that ten horſemen may ride abreſt in the narroweſt of them; ſo ſtrait, that a man ſtanding in the middle may ſee either end, each end being ſhut up with a Gate of great ſtrength and beauty; and thoſe Gates fortified and ſtrengthned with thick plates of iron. Generally greater and more ſtately than thoſe of Europe, but defective in that point of elegancy which the Magnificent Churches, and more ſumptuous buildings for the diſpatch of publique buſineſſes, in theſe parts abound with. Their private houſes for the moſt part are alſo low, and deſtitute of Porches, Windows, Galleries, the principal ornaments and graces of Architecture. Nor are their Cities built onely for reſort, or trade, but for ſtrength and ſafety, environed with deep and broad ditches, the walls of brick or ſtone, ſtrong above belief, planted with Ordnance and Artillery in convenient places: and every-night the Gates not only locked but ſealed; not to be opened till unſealed by the principal Magiſtrate. So like they are to one another, that we may ſay with Ovid on the like occaſion;

——Facies non omnibus una,
Nec diverſa tamen, qualem decet eſſe ſororum.

Which I finde thus Engliſhed by G. Sandis.

Amongſt them all no two appear the ſame,
Nor differed more then Siſters well became.

But not to reſt our ſelves on this generall Character, let us take a more particular view of ſome of the principall. And in that liſt we finde, 1. Quinſay, called Suntien by the Natives, ſcituate ſomewhat towards the South, on the Weſtern borders of this Kingdome, where it confineth on Cathay. Of this Town many things are reported beyond all belief, as namely, that it contained once in circuit an hundred miles, and had in the middeſt of it a Lake of 30 miles compaſs; in which Lake were two goodly Iſlands, and in them two magnificent Palaces, adorned with all neceſſaries either for majeſty, or convenience; in which are celebrated the publique feaſts, and the marriages of the better ſort; The Lake nouriſhed with divers Rivers, the chief being Polyſango, and Cacamacan; on which Rivers 12000 bridges are ſaid to have lifted up their ſtately heads: and under whoſe immenſe Arches, great ſhips, with ſails ſpread abroad, and top & top-gallant, might and did uſually paſs. It is alſo ſaid to have had ten market-places, each of them four miles aſunder, and every one in form quadrangular, the ſides thereof half a mile in length. Here were ſaid alſo to be twelve Companies of Tradeſmen or Artizans, each company having 12000 ſhops, and in all a million and 600000 Families. But whatſoever it was in the former times, certain it is, that at this time (if it hath at this time any being at all) partly on the removal of the Court from hence to Cambalu by the Tartars; and ſince to Nanquin and Paquin by the Princes of the houſe of Hombu, and partly the fury of the Wars, and partly by the violence of Earth-quakes, it hath loſt no ſmall part of her ancient beauty and renown. 2. Vnguen, famous for the abundance of ſugar there made. 3. Nanquin, ſeated 9 leagues from the Sea, on the great River of Kuny, whereon ride for the moſt part no fewer than 10000 of the Kings ſhips, beſides ſuch as belong to private men. The Town in compaſs 30 miles, being girt with three fair brick walls, having large and ſtately Gates: The ſtreets in length two leagues, wide, and paved; the number of houſes is about 200000. ſo that it may equal four of the faireſt Cities of Europe. 4. Paquin or Pagnia, in the middle of the Province ſo named (being one of the four Northern Provinces, which take up the whole breadth of this mighty Kingdome) where the King continually reſideth; and that, either becauſe the air hereof is more healthfull and pleaſant than any of the other; or becauſe it lieth neer unto the Tartars, with whom the Chinois are in perpetuall warre: ſo that from hence the dangers which may from their invaſions happen unto the Countrey may with more convenience be either prevented, or remedied. The City ſaid to be inferiour to Nanquin for bulk & beauty, but to exceed it in multitude of Inhabitants, Souldiers, and Magiſtrates, occaſioned by the Kings abode. Environed on the South, with two walls, of ſo great breadth that twelve horſemen may run abreſt upon them; on the North, with one wall onely, but that ſo ſtrong and vigilantly guarded, that they fear as little annoyance on that ſide, as they do on the other. But the greateſt Ornament hereof is the Royall Palace, compaſſed about with a triple wall, the outwardmoſt of which would well inviron a large City, within which ſpace, beſides the many lodgings for Eunuchs and other Courtiers, are Groves, hills, fountains, Rivers, and the like places of pleaſure, larger in circuit, but not comparable for the Arts of Architecture to the Royall Palaces of Europe: Firſt built by ſome of the Tartar Kings of this Countrey in imitation of the Royall Palace of Xaindu, mentioned in Chatay, honored ſometimes with the reſidence of the Chams themſelves, which as it gave unto the Citie the name of Pequin, that is to ſay, the Court or Citie of the King, in the language of China, ſo gave it occaſion unto ſome Writers to make this and Cambalu the ſame, both names being of the ſame ſignification, though in divers languages. 5. Canton, ſuppoſed to be the Caltigara of Ptolomy, by the Chinois called Quamch n, the leaſt of the Metropolitan Cities of this Countrey, but beautified with many triumphant Arches, a navigable River, large ſtreets, and many goodly bridges. Fortified with deep trenches, 83 Bulwarks, and ſeated in ſo rich a ſoyl both for Fowl and Cattell, that here are ſaid to be eaten daily 6000 hogs, and 12000 Ducks, beſides proportionable quantity of other victuals. If this be one of the leaſt of their Metropolitans, what may we think of the greateſt? A Town wherein the Portugals drive a wealthy Trade, being permitted in the day-time to come within the City it ſelf, but at night excluded, and forced to find lodging in the Suburbs. By reaſon of which reſtraint they have ſetled their Mart at Macao the Port Town to this, where they have their Factor and many Families; the Town being almoſt wholy peopled by them. 6 Leaogang the chief Citie of Leaolong (another of the four Northern Provinces) and the firſt Town taken by the Eaſtern

Tartars in their attempts upon this Kingdome, by this door making themſelves an entrance into all the reſt. 7. Ningaiven, made the Metropolis of Leaolong after the taking of Leaogang by the Eaſtern Tartars. 8. Sigan or Singan, the chief City of Xenſi, another of the four Northern Provinces, and honoured ſometimes with the Kings reſidence. 9. Xoaking on the ſouth ſide of the ſaid River, one of the faireſt Cities of China, ſo invironed with ſweet Waters, as a man may contemplate its beauty as rounding it in a Boat; conſiſting of large and fair ſtreets paved on both ſides with white ſquare ſtones, and in the middle of them all runs a Navigable Channel whoſe ſides are garniſhed with the like ornament; and of the ſame ſtone there is alſo built many fair Bridges and triumphant Arches; the houſes being all of the ſame ſtone alſo, which render it the neateſt (though not the biggeſt) Citie in this mighty Kingdom. 10. Suchean ſeated in Mariſhes like Venice, but more commodiouſly, becauſe thoſe Mariſhes are of freſh water; the ſtreets and houſes founded upon Piles of Pine-tree, with many bridges, and conveniences for paſſage both by land and water. Well traded, as the fitteſt Center for diſperſion of Merchandiſe from all the other Parts of the Kingdom: by the multitude and frequency of ſhips, almoſt denying faith to the eyes, which would think all the ſhips of China to be here aſſembled. So infinitely rich, that the ſmall Region whereof it is the head containing but eight Cities more, payeth 12 millions to the King, of yearly income. 11. Hamſeu, or Hangcheu on the North ſide of the River Cinithang, out of which furniſhed with a Channel of great length and breadth, by which it trades into the Northern parts of this Kingdom; the Metropolis of the Province of Chequian, about two days journey from the Sea (of which diſtance from the Sea is Suchean alſo) in compaſs leſs than Nanquin, but better builded: no place in it taken up with Gardens, Orchards, or other pleaſures; but all employed for houſes, ſhops, and other edifices. So beautified with Triumphant Arches, erected to the honour of deſerving Magiſtrates, that in one ſtreet there are 300. of great maſs or workmanſhip. The Temples magnificent and many; the bank-ſides of the Channels watering every ſtreet, beſet with trees of ſhade, and moſt excellent fruits: and in the middle of the City a round high mountain, which gives the eye a gallant proſpect into every ſtreet. And not far off a pleaſant Lake, of great breadth and length, the banks whereof are beautified with groves and gardens, and the Lake it ſelf even cloathed with veſſels of all ſorts, on which the Citizens uſe to feaſt, and entertain their idle time with plays and ſpectacles. Two Cities ſo repleniſhed with all kinde of pleaſures, that the Chinois uſe it for a proverb, Thien Xam, thien thum, ti Xamſu hum, that is to ſay, Look what the Hall or Preſence Chamber is in heaven, that Hamſeu and Sucheau are on earth. 12. Fochea, beautified, amongſt many other ſtately Structures, with a magnificent Tower erected on 40 marble pillars, of great elegancy, coſt, and bigneſs, every pillar being forty ſpans in height, and 12 in breadth: not to be paralleld, as ſome ſay, by any the like work in Europe. 13. Lochiau, in which are 70000. Families. 14. Colans, famous for the beſt Procellane. 15. Schianhay, by ſome called Thiencin, a ſtation to which an incredible number of ſhips reſort, both by Sea and River from all parts of this Kingdome, ſeated within 24 hours ſail of the Iſle of Japan, and therefore defended with a ſtrong Garriſon, and a Navy. Scituate in a pleaſant and wholſome ſoyl, the whole Countrey ſo ſet forth with trees, as if it were one continued Orchard. So populous, that it containeth 40000. houſholds, moſt of which get their livelihood by weaving Cottons: it being ſuppoſed that here are 200000. perſons which attend that Manufacture. 16. Chinchiamſu, whence by a River made by hand, there is a paſſage to Sucheau, the water of which never freezeth, and for that cauſe ſo clogged with ſhips in time of Winter, that the paſſage is ſtopped with the multitudes of them. 17. Zuangcheu, a moſt rich and beautifull City environed with large waters, and the only Southern Port within the Land, to which Ships or Boats may have acceſs. 18. Caiton or Caiſung, ſeated upon the River Kiang, a City once of three Leagues in compaſs, whoſe Harbour was ſeldom without 500 ſhips, and ſometimes honoured with the Seat or Reſidence of the Kings themſelves; moſt miſerably deſtroyed, Anno 1642. by Zunchinius the late King of this Countrey, who breaking down the dams and ſluces to let in the River, for the diſlodging of Thieves and Out-Laws, who had then beſieged it, gave it ſo great and forcible a paſſage towards the Town, that it bare down the greateſt part of the houſes of it, and therein drowned above 300000. of the natural Citizens; before which time the Metropolis or chief City of the Province of Honon. 19. Kaiangchen on the South-ſide of the River Croceus, the richeſt and the faireſt City in theſe parts of the Countrey, commodiouſly ſeated to command that River. 20. Chatking, the head City of the Province of Guangtuang, for the ſtrength and conveniency of its ſcituation thought fitteſt for the ſeat of Jungly, the laſt declared Emperour of the Chinois againſt the Tartars. 21. Queilin, the chief City of the Province of Quaingſi. 22. Taitung, the Metropolis or chief City of Xanſi or Canſay, another of the four Northern Provinces, but not elſe obſervable for any thing I finde of it, either in point of Trade or Story. 23. Nancheng, a chief City of the Province of Xianſi, of which little memorable; and leſs of 24. Cergiron, but that it is like unto the reſt in form and ſtructure.

Beſides the Provinces before mentioned, there are three others, not directly under the dominion of the Kings of China, though depending on it, that is to ſay, 1. the Province of Suchuen, 2. the Iſland of Coreas, 3. the Iſland of Cheuxan.

1. The Province of Suchuen lyeth on the South-weſt of this Kingdome; of the ſame nature both for ſoyl and Air with the reſt of China, but poſſeſſed by a more warlike people; the women here being trained up to feats of Armes, and ſo well practiſed on their weapons, that when the Queen hereof went to the aid of the Emperour Vanley againſt the Tartars, Anno 1618. ſhee took with her a ſmall Army of 3000 women, performing Actions not unworthy the braveſt men: the chief City hereof is called Cingtu, of great capacity, and ſo exceeding populous withall, that Changhienchungus (that moſt barbarous Tyrant) cauſed no fewer then 600000. of them, men women and children all indifferently, to be ſlaughtered in one day before his face; the whole Countrey governed for a long time by its own Kings of the ſame Tai- mingian race with the Kings of China, from whom having received their inveſtiture, they were afterwards of abſolute authority over their own ſubjects, who acknowledge no other King but him. And in this ſtate it did continue, till the year 1644. when Changienchungus whom before I named, entring into this Country with his rabble of Rogues made a Conqueſt of it, murdered the young King, Son to the Amazonian Queen, which before we ſpake of: diſpeopled the great City of Cingtu, butchered at one time twenty thouſand Prieſts, at another time eighteen thouſand Students; and finally committed ſuch unſpeakable outrage, that the Tartars in meer pity to that wretched people ſent an Army againſt him, by which he was vanquiſhed, and ſlain; this Province thereupon ſubmitting to the Tartars as their great deliverers.

2. Corea, is an Iſland of the Eaſtern Ocean, not far from the North-eaſt of China, over againſt the fall of the River Galo. The quality of the ſoyl, the dimenſions of it, and what Cities it containeth in it, I have no where found. The people far more warlike than thoſe of China, by reaſon of the ill neighbourhood of the Japonites, with whom they have always either open wars, or uncertain peace. Invaded by thoſe Iſlanders, and in danger to be conquered by them, they made an offer of their Countrey to the King of China; who having repulſed the Invaders, reſtored their Country freely to them, without laying any other Impoſition on them, then of love and gratitude, which obligations thoſe of Corea have diſcharged moſt fully. For when Vanley the late Emperour of China was firſt invaded by the Tartars, they ſent unto his aid twelve thouſand men well armed, and exerciſed in the Wars; increaſing their ſupplies in the time of Theinkius, who next but one ſucceeded Vanley; drawing the whole ſtorm upon themſelves by thoſe friendly aids, they were accordingly aſſiſted by the King of China, whoſe forces came ſo ſeaſonably in the heat of a Battel between the Coreans and the Tartars, that the Tartars after a long and terrible fight, were driven out of the Iſland, but with ſuch incredible loſs on all ſides, that few or none eſcaped of the Army of China, ſeventy thouſand of the Coreans ſlain, and the Tartars leaving fifty thouſand of their men behind them; after this they were unmoleſted, till the fatall and final conqueſt of the Kingdom of China, when ſeeing the Tartars Lords of all, and no poſſibility of reſiſtance, they ſubmitted to them, about the year 1648. upon condition of retaining their Hair and Habit, which no extremity of perſonall danger, or fear of publique deſolation, could compel them to alter.

3. Cheuxan, is an Iſland of the ſame Seas, on the South of Corea, oppoſite to the City of Nympus in the Main Land of China; an Iſland which being heretofore a dwelling place of poor Clowns and Fiſhermen, is now become a potent Kingdome. For Lu. Regulus, choſen by a party of his own to ſucceed to the broken Crown of China, and finding no hopes of withſtanding the great power of the Tartars, retired himſelf into this Iſland with his friends and followers, followed not long after by great multitudes of the Natural Chineſe, who choſe rather to forſake their Countrey, then to conform in hair and habit to the will of the Tartars; Inſomuch that there are now found in this Iſland threeſcore and ten Cities, with a ſtrong and formidable Army, which hitherto hath contemned all the Tartarian Power and Forces, and watch for ſome happy occaſion to advance again their Kingdome in China.

The ancient Inhabitants of the Sinæ, in the time of Ptolomy, were towards the North, the Semantini, bordering on a mountain of that name, and the only one remembred in all this Countrey: more Southward, the Archadæ, and Aſpithræ; Towards the Sea the Anabaſtæ and Ichthyophagi (the laſt ſo called from living wholly upon fiſh.) United into one body by the name of Sinæ, and known by that name to the Romans, in the time of Ptolomy, who boundeth them on the North with Serica, on the Weſt with India extra Gangem, and on the Eaſt and South with a Terra Incognita: which though it make up the leaſt part of the Modern China, Serica touching only on a corner of the North-weſt of it, and the main Ocean waſhing it on the Eaſt and South: yet the Arabians in their Tzinin, and our late Latine Writers in their Sina and Sinenſium Regnum, do from hence give the denomination to this mighty Kingdome. How far they ſtretched beyond the bounds laid down by Ptolomy, and whether they ſubdued the Eaſtern and more Northern Nation, and were Conquered by them, it is hard to ſay; nor is it eaſie to reſolve, from what originall theſe and the reſt of the Inhabitants do derive themſelves, whether from the Indians, or the Scythes: or that it was primitively planted by ſome of the poſterity of Noah, before the enterpriſe of Babel: which laſt may probably be concluded from the extream populouſneſs of the Countrey, the many magnificent Cities; their Induſtry and Ingenuity in all Arts and Sciences, not to be taught them by their Neighbours, more ignorant in thoſe things than themſelves. And hereunto the Chronicles of China ſeem to give ſome ground, which tell us of three hundred and fourty Kings, which for the ſpace of four thouſand years have therein reigned. For as their Chronicles inform us, (if they may may be credited) the Countrey being without Rule or ſetled Government, was firſt reduced into order by one Vitey, the Son of Ezolem; by whom the people were inſtructed in Phyſick, Aſtrology, Divination, and the Art of Tillage: to which, this Vitey, having found out the way of cutting or ſawing Timber, added the uſe of Ships and Houſes, and many other the effects of Mechanical hands. Having by the valour of Lincheon one of his Commanders, ſubdued a great part of the Countrey, he drew them into Towns and Villages; diſtributed them into Offices, and ſeverall Trades, diſpoſing thoſe of the ſame Trade into Streets by themſelves: and commanding that no man without leave from himſelf, or his Officer, ſhould follow any other Trade than that of his Father. He preſcribed them alſo the faſhion of their Garments, taught them the Art of making and dying Silks: and having reigned an hundred years, left the Kingdom well eſtabliſhed unto his poſterity. Of this race there are ſaid to have bin 217 Kings, who held the State 2257 years.

The laſt of them was that Tzaintzon, who being ill-neighboured with the Scythians (not yet called Tartars) is ſaid to have built that vaſt wall ſpoken of before: extended 400 leagues in length, and at the end of every League a ſtrong Rampart or Bulwark, continually garriſoned, and well furniſhed with all warlike neceſſaries. He being ſlain by ſome of his Subjects, burdened and waſted with this work, the race of Vitey ended; and that of Anchoſan ſucceeded, a Prince of much prudence, but greater courage. In his line it continued under 25 Kings, but ſhrewdly ſhaken towards the cloſe by a Civil War, betwixt Trunibey the 23^{d} of his houſe, and his Nephew Laupy. Hardly well ſetled under Quiontey the laſt of this houſe, when Tzobu, a great Tyrant of the other Faction, ſet upon him, and ſlew him. And ſo the majeſty of the blood-royal being trod under foot, the Crown was alſo toſſed from one hand to another, and made a prey unto the ſtrongeſt: there being of the race of this Tzobu, eight Kings, reigning 62 years; Of the race of Dian, five Kings, who reigned thirty one; of the race of Tzoy, three only, who reigned thirty ſeven; Of the race of Tenco, one and twenty, who held the Crown 294 years; and eight there were who reigned 120 years, of the houſe of Tautzom. Of other upſtart families to the number of five, were fourteen Kings alſo, who governed only for the ſpace of 66 years: And then one Zaitzon, deriving himſelf from Vitey, the firſt King of this Countrey, obtained the Kingdome; which he, and ſeventeen of his poſterity, for the ſpace of 320 years, governed with much peace and honour. Forfar, the laſt King of that Royal Family, foretold by prophecy that he ſhould be deprived of his Kingdome by one who had an hundred eyes, neglected the Advertiſement, as unworthy credit: but it fell out agree able to that prediction, when vanquiſhed by Chiſan-baan (which word ſignifieth an hundred eyes) Lieutenant unto Uſan a Tartarian Prince, but Feudatary and Vaſſal to the Great Cham. China thus made a Province of the Tartarians, was governed for the ſpace of 93 years, under nine Tartar-Kings, Tributaries to the Great Cham, and dependants on him: the Chams themſelves many times paſſing into China, and abiding there according as their pleaſures or affairs did invite them to it, which occaſioned ſuch a continuall entercourſe betwixt thoſe of China and Cathay, that they have much participated, ever ſince that time, of the manners and cuſtomes of each other. But here it is to be obſerved, that the Tartars ſpent almoſt as much time in the conqueſt of China, as they did in the poſſeſſion of it; the War being firſt begun, Anno 1206. finiſhed 1268. the Tartars being totally outed when they had reigned here 90 years only, that is to ſay, Anno 1358. or thereabouts. For then it hapned that a mean perſon called Hugh, conſidering with himſelf the diſcontentedneſs of the Chineſe under ſo long bondage, the luxury of the Tartars effeminated with the pleaſures of that Country, and the unwarlike temper of Ciina Cham, then reigning over all in the City of Cambalu, raiſed to himſelf ſo ſtrong a party, that in ſhort time he drave the Tartars out of all, forcing them to betake themſelves to thoſe parts of the Eaſtern Tartars, which now make up the Kingdom of Niuche.

1. Finally turning towards the Weſt, he not only recovered back to China ſuch parts thereof as had been layd unto Cathay, and incorporated with it by the Tartars, but growing thereby a formidable neighbour to the Cham himſelf. Advances for this great ſervice to the Crown of China, Anno 1269. he took unto himſelf the name of Hunguus (our late Writers commonly call him Hombu) which ſignifieth as much as the famous Warriour, and gave unto his children, and their poſterity, the name of the Taimingican Family, which they ſtill continue for the recovery of this Country; great Tamerlane muſtreth up his Forces: and though Hombu brought into the field 350000. Horſe and Foot, yet nothing could reſiſt this powerfull genius of that mighty Conquerour, who obtained a ſignall victory, with the death of 60000. Chineſe. But wiſely moderating his proſperity, and mainly bent upon his war againſt the Turks, he thought it his beſt and ſafeſt way to let the people of China have a King of their own; impoſing on him a fine of 300000. Crowns in ready money, a certain annual Tribute (long time after paid) with certain other conditions; which as they were pleaſing to the Victor, ſo they were not deſtructive to the vanquiſhed. By means hereof it comes to paſs that ſuch a long communication in affairs of ſtate having paſſed between China & Chathay (thoſe of China in old times lording it over part of the Cathayans, as the Cathayans in late times did over the Chineſe) there grew a great reſemblance between both Nations in manners, conditions, arts and manufactures, as before is ſaid; which circumſtances laid together, may afford ſome reaſon why ſome Writers eaſily miſguided by ſuch probabilities, Cathay and China have been reckoned to be one and the ſame. Nor did the Empire of the Chinois extend in thoſe times, onely over part of Scythia, but alſo over part of India, and moſt of the Orientall Iſlands. But the Princes of the houſe of Hombu finding their own Kingdom large enough to content their deſires, abandoned all the Acceſſories and Out-parts of their Dominions: prompted thereunto, not onely by their own moderation, but by ſome misfortunes which befell them. For as we finde that the Romans having by the fury of two violent tempeſts, loſt no fewer than 206 of their ſhips and Gallies, reſolved to abandon (and for a long time did forbear) the Seas, which had uſed them ſo unkindly: So the Chinois having received a great overthrow, and loſs of 800. ſhips, nigh unto Zeilan, they freed all the Iſlands from obedience unto them, and contented themſelves with the bounds which nature had beſtowed on them. And of their moderation herein, we have a very rare example. For when the people of Corea, a ſmall Iſland abutting on the confines of China, were invaded by the Japonites; they ſubmitted themſelves unto the King of China: who having repulſed the enemy, and thereby cleared his own Country from danger, preſently redelivers over unto the Coreans their Town and liberty. A rare fact of a contented people. Which whether it favoured of greater moderation or magnanimity, I am not able to determine. In this Family hath the Realm continued under 15 Kings, for the ſpace of 266. years and upwards, reckoning from Hombu unto Boneg: who being the twelfth of this line, ſucceeded his elder brother, unfortunately ſlain with a fall from an horſe. Reported for a Prince of good diſpoſition, great judgement, and a ſevere Juſticiary. This Boneg (otherwiſe called Vanly) began his Reign, Anno 1573. governing this Kingdom dome in great proſperity.and glory for the ſpace of 40 years and upwards ; when cauſing the Chriſtian Subjects and the Jeſuits their Converters to be hardly dealt with , and denying Juſtice to the Eaſtern Tartars, for the many wrongs done them by his prefects in the Province of Lealoung , he drew that people into Armes , as if marked out for Executioners of Divine diſpleaſure. Stript by them in the year 1618. of a part of Lealong, and braved by their Forces within ſight of Peking, he contracted ſome melancholick diſtempers , of which he died ſome two years after , leaving the Crown to his Son Tiachangus, who having held it but four moneths left it , and all the troubles of it, to his Son Tkeinkius, a valiant Prince,and fortunate againſt the Tartars, but of ſhort continuance. For dying in the year 1627. he was ſucceeded in that Kingdome by his brother Zonchinius, a Prince of contrary diſpoſition , cruelly bent , a great Oppreſſor of his Subjects , and for theſe cauſes ill beloved ; yet they continued in obedience: (though for fear rather of the Tartars, then for love of him) untill the year 1640. or thereabouts. At what time the people in many places oppreſſed with Taxes , and in the Northern parts with Famine ariſe in 8. Companies or Armies , which growing wanton by ſucceſs, and warring upon one another , they are at laſt reduced under two chief Leaders, that is to ſay , Lycungzus and Changhienchangus.

Theſe two being come to an agreement took their ſeveral wayes,the laſt of them falling into Suchmen, whoſe villanies and deſerved deſtruction we have there related. Lycungzus the more fortunate villain, in the year 1641. beſieged Caiſung the chief City of the Province of Honan, a place of great ſtrength , but far greater riches,on the ruine whereof by the Kings improvidence, and his ſubduing the whole Province of Kenſi , he took to himſelf the title of King, and would be called Lycungzus the Proſperous ; and not long after eaſing the people of the Taxes which the avaritious King had impoſed upon them , putting the Tax-maſters to death, and gaining upon all ſorts of men by his courteous uſage, he took unto himſelf the title of Emperor. Zunchinius ſucceeds his brother, hindred by factions in the Court , from ſending ſeaſonable forces againſt the Rebels , who paſſing over the great River Croceus without any reſiſtance, prevailed in all places where they came , even to the taking of the great City of Peking , and the Palace Royall ; at the hearing whereof, the Emperour ſeeing no way to eſcape their hands , hanged himſelf in his own Orchard , Anno 1644. his example herein followed by the Empreſs and his principall ſervants. The body of the Emperour cut in pieces , his two younger Sons beheaded , the principall Magiſtrates murdered , and that City ſacked by command of the Victor. Forced to remove back again to Kenſi by Uſangueius Commander of the Army in Leaolong , who called in the Tartars to revenge theſe Out-rages , the Rebels taking with them all the wealth and treaſure which the Emperours of the Taimingian Family amaſſed together in the ſpace of 260 years and upwards. Zungleus the King of the Tartars having thus got the City of Peking died preſently after , leaving his Son at nine years old to ſucceed him in that glorious fortune. By him commended to the care and protection of Uncles , who very faithfully diſcharged the truſt repoſed in them ; Infinite numbers of Tartars thronging into China upon this occaſion , and theſe not only of the Eaſtern but the Weſtern Nations.

By theſe the Infant King was proclaimed Emperour of China , by the name of Xanchius , ſtiling the new Imperial family by the name of Tailing , the eldeſt of the Uncles whom the Tartars called Amavangus, having the chief conduct of Affairs.

Uſangueius by the Tartars not long after is proclaimed King of Kenſi , out of which he ſhortly drove the Rebels , and poſſeſſed hmſelf of it ; Lycungzus being either killed in the fight, or elſe otherwiſe loſt. Hungquengus Nephew to Varley, and Couſin German to Zunchinius elected Emperour by the Chineſes of the Southern parts , is oppoſed herein by one that pretended himſelf to be the eldeſt Son of Zunchinius ; which diviſion gave the Tartars a notable victory over all their Forces , and the great City of Nanquin in reward thereof.

The new Emperour being ſhortly after betrayed into the hands of the Tartars , is by them hanged on the walls of Peking ; which death the Tartars count moſt noble. The pretended Son of Zunchinius diſcovered & ſerved in the ſame ſort alſo. And though Loangus firſt,and afterwards Jungly, and Lu Regulus , were choſen and declared Emperors by their ſeverall parties , Anno 1648. yet nothing could prevail againſt the fortune of the Tartars , Loangus being forced to put himſelf into their power, Jungly to flee into the Mountains , and Lu Regulus to ſecure himſelf in the Iſle of Cheuxan.

What hath ſucceeded ſince that year,future times will ſhew.

The Government of this Kingdom is meerly tyrannicall ; there being no other Lord but the King, no title of dignity or nobility ever known amongſt them;nor toll or duty paid unto any but to him:the younger Princes of the blood being maintained by ſtipends, and annual penſions,large enough to ſnpport their trains , but without any Lands or Tenants , for fear of drawing on them any great dependances. The King alone is the generall Landlord, and him the Subjects do not only reverence as a Prince , but adore like a God. For in the chief City of every province,they have the Kings portraiture made of Gold, which is always covered with a veil : and at every New-moon , the Magiſtrate and other inferiour Officers uſe to kneel before it, as if it were the King himſelf. By theſe and other artifices of the like contrivement the common people are kept in ſuch awe and fear , that they are rather ſlaves than Subjects : calling their King the Lamp of the world , and Son of the everſhining Sun , without whoſe light they were able to ſee nothing.

In every Province except Pequin and Tolenchia onely, he hath his Deputies or Vice-Royes, maintained by liberal ſtipends from the publick treaſury : but thoſe he governeth by himſelf. Some Laws they have and thoſe affirmed to have been written 2000 years ſince, as is like enough they were. So ſtrongly do they ſavour of the ignorance and Atheiſm of the darkeſt times: the manner of life by them allowed, moſt obſcene and ſhameleſs; their Idolatries, moſt groſs and palpable; their Exorciſms ridiculous, and the proſtitution of their Virgins moſt abhominable; and the variety of ſenſual prophanations, to an illuminated mind moſt baſe and contemptible. In a word, nothing commendable in their courſe of life (notwithſtanding the brags which they make of themſelves) but their Arts and Induſtry.

The forces which this King is able to draw into the Field muſt needs be infinite, conſidering that incredible number of ſubjects under his command. For whereas France is thought to contain 15 millions of people; Italy, with the Iſles, as many; Germany, with the Switzers and Belgick Provinces, about that proportion; Spain, not above ſeven Millions, and the Kingdome of England about four : this Country onely is Computed at 70 millions; which is more by 15 millions then all together. Proportionably his Levies muſt be ſo much greater, than can be ordinarily raiſed out of thoſe Countries. But becauſe it may be thought that his ſubjects, though more in number, may be leſs trained to the warres, than thoſe of Europe; the contrary is affirmed by ſuch as have taken an eſtimate of the forces, which every Province is bound to entertain in continuall readineſs. And by that eſtimate it appeareth, that in the year 1557 (though a time of peace) there were diſperſed in the fifteen Provinces of this Realm, to the number of five millions, 846500 Foot, and 948350 Horſe. Which notwithſtanding it may be ſaid, and not unfitly, that he is able to bring into the field, amongſt ſuch multitudes of men, but few good Souldiers, the people being generally unwarlike, and of no great courage, as was before obſerved of them, in their generall Character. Nor is he leſs powerfull for Sea-ſervice, having continually great Fleets for the guard of his Coaſts, in continuall attendance; and many more ready to ſet out when there is occaſion: inſomuch that the Chinois uſe to ſay in the way of a Proverb, that their king is able to make a bridge of ſhips from China, to Malaca, which are 500 leagues aſunder. Some of theſe ſhips(whereof the King hath above a thouſand of his own, beſides thoſe of his ſubjects) of great magnificence and beauty; the Officers and Souldiers in all which are exceeding well paid, and rewarded anſwerably to their merits. And as this King is able to raiſe greater forces then any, from his own eſtates; ſo doth he alſo de facto do it, when the urgency of his affairs do require it of him : his ordinary ſtent being 300000 foot, and 200000 horſe; without which compleat number (not onely in the muſter rols, but in bodies of men) he vouchſafes not to goe into the field.

Anſwerable unto theſe great Levies of men, muſt be his Revenue : which they who have travelled in this ſearch, (if they tell us true, and doe not build upon a hope of not being confuted, as for my part I fear they do) affirme to be 120 millions of Crowns: anſwered unto him out of the profit of the mines of Gold, ſilver, and other metals; the tenth of all commodities which the earth brings forth; the tolls impoſed on that unſpeakeable quantity of merchandiſe, which paſſeth on ſo many navigable Rivers from one Town to another; the cuſtomes taken of all thoſe rich wares which are brought into Europe, and the Gabell laid on Salt in all parts of his Kingdome. out of which ſum, the payment of his Fleet diſcharged, the entertainment of the Souldiers ſattisfied, and his Court defrayed; there remaineth 40 millions of crowns de claro to be diſpoſed of, either in his treaſury, or private pleaſures, or the works of magnificence, and oſtentation.

And thus far alſo, according to the generall current of received opinions, have I followed the deſcription and affairs of China, as a diſtinct Countrey from Cathay, : not ignorant that there are many probable reaſons that might incline us to believe them, to be one and the ſame; for it is alleadged in favour of this opinon, that it is neither new nor ſtrange, for one and the ſame Countrey to be called by divers names, according to the languages and fancies of ſeverall Nations; that Countrey which we call Germany being by the Natives called Dutchland, not long ſince known moſt commonly by the name of Almaine; that part of Britain which we call Wales being by the French called Galles, and Cambria by the Latine Writers; thoſe mountainous people which the Romans know by the name of Rhœti, being by ſome of our Northern Latiniſts called Confederati Cani, Campi Camini, by Ammianus Marcellinus, Grauntpuntnor, by the neighbouring Dutch; and finally Griſons by the French; which four laſt names do carry all the ſame ſence and ſignification, though in different words: that China it ſelfe is by the Natives called Tabinco, Tzinin by the Arabians, Mangi by Paulus Venetus, and by the neighbouring Nations Sanglag; that as it can not be enforced from the like diverſity of appellations that Almaine, Germany, and Dutch-Land make three ſeveral Countries (& ſic de cæteris) ſo neither can it be concluded on the ſame grounds, that China and Cathay make two ſeveral Empires. In the next place it is alleadged, that ſince by latter voyages and navigations, this mighty Kingdome hath been diſcovered, and made known unto us of Europe by the name of China; the name and Empire of Cathay hath grown out of knowledge [illegible]r proofe whereof they bring in the Itinerarie of Benedictus Goes, a Jeſuit, who in the year 1605 croſſing from the Northeaſt parts of Perſia, to the Realme of China, naming all the ſeverall Countries, and Towns of any note, which lay in his way, makes no mention of any ſuch Countrey as Cathay, or any ſuch Prince as the Great Cham thereof : telling us alſo that Martin Martinius, who had lived long in China, in his Books entituled Bellum Tartaricum, comprehended all the Countries betwixt China and Mount Imaus, under the generall name and Nation of the Weſtern Tartars, not taking notice of any ſuch Country as Cathay; nor of any greater Prince amongſt them, then the King of Tanguth; and that Ramuſio in his notes on Paulus Venetus, reporteth ſome conference which he had with Chaggimemet a Perſian Monarch, who told him that he had ſeen Campion and Succuir, Cities of Cathay, in the reign of Deimercan, which muſt be underſtood of Cathay in the generall Nation, as it comprehended all the Tartarian Countries beyond Imaus, it being well known that Campion and Succur are two Cities of Tanguth, and not of the proper Cathay, or Cathag eſpecially ſo called. In the third rank of proofes they inſtance in the ſimilitudes, or reſemblances betwixt both Countries,and both people,which are ſo great and viſible in the temperature of Air, fertility of Soyl, and pleaſantneſs of ſituation,in cuſtomes, in ingenuity, arts and Manufactures,as may be thought to carry an Identity,or ſameneſſe with them; which ſameneſſe or Identitie they do alſo finde, in Pequin the Chief Citie of China, and Cambalu, the ſuppoſed chief City of Cathay, being two words of the ſame ſence, and ſignification though of divers ſounds;for Pequin ſignifieth the court or City of the King in the Chinian language, and Cambalu ſignifieth the Court or City of the Cham, in the language of Tartary. The like they alſo have obſerved of the Royall Palaces, adjoyning to the ſaid two Cities,ſo like in the vaſt greatneſſe and extent of the outer walls,the Parks and Forreſts intermingled, the magnificent form and ſtructure of the inner Palaces,with all the reſt of the particulars before recited, that a man might very well conclude them to be one and the ſame, adding withall that ſuch an immenſe, and unparalleld a work,as the Great Chams Palace called Xaindu,muſt needs require more hands and a longer time, then the great Chams(conſidering their continual wars,and little intervals of leaſure,could beſtow upon it.But their four head proofes, which ſeemes indeed to be the ſtrongeſt,they derive firſt from the Teſtimony of Benedict Goes above mentioned, who without taking notice of any ſuch Country as Cathay, in ſo long a Journey, telleth us that at Giales, a City of the Kingdom of Caſcar, and not far from China, he was firſt informed that Cathay and China were the ſame; 2^{ly}. from the Teſtimony of an old Mahometan Pilgrime, who returning from Meca by Lahor (the Royal ſeat and City of the great Mogul) affirmed there that he had lived long in Cambalu the chief City of Cathay,which Kingdome hath in it one thouſand and fifty Cities, the King thereof being a very mighty Prince, and having the ſtrength of 400 Elephants brought thither from Malaca,and Pegu,and that much Merchandiſe was brought into that Country by Sea:which if it be not meant of China, to which the ſtory may agree in all particulars) muſt needs be one of the loudeſt lyes that ever came from the Mouth of a Mahometan, or a Pilgrim either; our Geographers finding very few Cities or Towns of note in Cathay eſpecially ſo called, no acceſſe thither by Sea for any Merchandize, nor any way to bring thoſe Elephants from Pegu to Malaca, which the Pilgrime dreamt of 3^{ly}. a clearer Teſtimony of ſome other Mahometans repairing to Pequin every fift year, either as Merchants or Embaſſadors,or as both together; by whom the Jeſuits there living were informed, that in the Dominions of the Perſian, and the great Mogull, from whence they came, the Kingdome of China was called by no other name, then by that of Cathay, they knowing no other Country of that name, but China only. And 4^{ly}. from the aſſeverance of Pantogal, another Jeſuite, who in his letters dated from Paquin much blamed our ordinarie Maps for placing Cathay next to China, whereas (ſaith he) China or Sinai is Cathay,and this Paquin where we now are is the City of Cambalu, which two laſt evidences coming from the pen of one who had lived many yeares in China;and not conducing any way to the advancement of the Catholick cauſe,muſt needs be thought to carry ſome great credit, and authority with them.

Theſe reaſons if they be of force and moment to the point in hand, we muſt then act Penelopes part, and ravelling all the web which before was woven, Atque iterum in lanas omne redibit opus, in the Poets language; which that we may the better do, and with as little defacements to the whole peice as poſſibly we can,I ſhall thus proceed. Firſt then it is to be conceived that Cathay ſpecially ſo called was an aggregate body, containing many ſeveral Kingdomes, and diſtinct eſtates, though Homagers to the Kings of Cathay, or dependants on them: as antiently in the Realm of France, beſides the Kings of France themſelves there was a King of Burgundy,a King of Metz,a King of Saiſtons,a King of Orleance; and after that a Duke of Normandy, a Duke of Britaine, a Duke of Aquitain, and Earle of Champaign, and Earle of Tholouſe, all abſolute and uncontrollable in their own eſtates. And then the Kingdome of Tanguth which we placed in the Southern parts of Altay,muſt be made one of the Kingdomes of Cathay; and Deimercan whom we ranked in the Catalogue of the Chams of Tartary,muſt be brought a peg lower and looked on as a King of Tanguth only,and no more then ſo. Secondly,it muſt be taken for granted,that the Tartars having conquered the Realm of Cathay, and afterwards by the help of that people ſubdued China alſo, cauſed all the Northern parts of China to be called Cathay, as being in the ſame latitude, and parallels with it, and much of the ſame nature and complexion, both for Soyl and Aire, giving unto the Southern parts (which was the true and proper Country of the Sinæ) the name of Mangi, transferred afterwards by the Tartars to the Country generally:and having thus extended the name and Territory of Cathay, the firſt foundation of their greatneſs, they fixed their Regal Seat in the City of Naguin,which by a new Tartarian name (but of the ſame Seal and ſignification) was from thence called Cambalu. Thus in the firſt place the French Kings of the Caroline family, communicated the name of France (Eaſt France it was moſt commonly called) to the greateſt p[illegible] of Germany, then conquered by them; the Caſtilians of Spain extended the name of Caſteile on e[illegible] ſide, as they gat ground upon the Moores,till it became the largeſt Province of any one name in all that Continent; and Roger Earle of Cicilie, having conquered the Eaſtern parts of Italy (which now make up the Kingdome of Naples) commanded it to be called the further Cicily, and himſelfe to be Crowned King of both, by the name of King of both Cicilies, And in the ſecond place, the Dukes of Zweibrucken in high Germanie, are by the French called Dukes De Deux ponts, by the late Latine Writers Duces Bipontani, all in the ſame ſence and ſignification; the Town of Shertzogen Boſch is by the French called Bois le Duc, by Latine Writers Siloa ducis;and here at home the Military Towns or Stations of Lectodurum, Colonia, Praſidium, Papidem, and Portus Magnus, were turned by the Conquering Saxons (the former ſignifications being ſtill retained) into Bedford, Colcheſter, Warwick, Stoneham, and Portzmuch, commonly now called Portſmouth; Caſtrum Alatum into Edinborg by the Picts unconquered Britaines. 3ly. We may take it for a truth unqueſtioned, that Hombu having expulſed the Tartars out of Mangi, or the Southern parts, and fixed his Royall Seat to Nanquin, on the South ſide of the River Kiang (though paying both fine and tribute to victorious Tamerlane) did afterwards on Tamerlanes engagements beyond the Mountaines and the cantonizing of that great Empire amongſt his Children, expelled them out of the North parts alſo; his ſucceſſors there upon removing his Court to Pequin (from hence forth known again by its true, proper, and Chinian name) the better to attend the motion of that dangerous Enemy. Jeruſalem, commanded to be called the Elia by the Emperor Adrian, and London, named Auguſta Trinobantum by ſome other of the Roman Emperors; returned to their old names again, as ſoon as that authority failed which impoſed the new. And 4ly. as from this time forwards the Northern parts of China might ſtill retain the name of Cathay, and being moſt traded by the Perſian and Indian Merchants, might be beſt known by that name in their ſeverall Countries: ſo by dividing this great Empire into ſo many parts, removing the Imperial Seat to Samerland, on the other ſide of the Mountains, erecting many new ſtates out of the antient Præfectures, and Governments of Cathay it ſelf, and parcelling the remainder of it between the Kings of Tanguth, Caſcar, and ſuch other Princes of the Tartars, as were not wanting to themſelves in thoſe opportunities, the true Cathay might loſe that name by little and little, which formerly it had communicated to thoſe parts of China. Thus the Burgundians Lombards, Vandals, Hungars, left thoſe names at home, in their native and ancient habitations, which ſtill remain unto thoſe Countries that were conquered by them. Theſe reaſons and conſiderations I willingly ſubmit to the Readers Judgement, being my ſelf ſo great a Sceptick in this point, that I dare determine nothing poſitively on either ſide. It is enough that I have laid the cauſe open without partiality, or byaſſing on either hand, before the Jurors; let them give up their verdict in it as they like the evidence.

OF INDIA.

INDIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Oriental Ocean, and ſome part of China; or as ſome others ſay, with a great Country called Mauge (not much knowne unto us of Europe) interjected betwixt it and China; on the Weſt, with the Perſian Empire; on the North, with ſome branches of Mount Taurus, which divide it from Tartary; and on the South, with the Indian Ocean. So called from the River Indus, the neareſt of eſteem and note in all the Country, towards theſe parts of the world.

It is conceived to be the largeſt country of any one name in the world, except China and Tartaria; affirmed by Pomponius Mela, to be of ſuch a great extent on the Sea-coaſts of it, that it was as much as a ſhip could Sail in 40 dayes. Extended from 106, to 159 degrees of Longitude; and from the Æquator to the 44th degree of the Northern Latitude. By which accompt it lieth from the beginning of the firſt, to the end of the Sixt Clime: the longeſt Summers-day in the Southern parts being 12 houres onely, and in the parts moſt North, 15 hours and an halfe.

Concerning the Monſtrous Fables which the ages foregoing have delivered to us of this Country, give me leave to ſay, that as the Poets uſed of old to fill up the times of which they were ignorant, with ſtrange fixions, and prodigious Metamorphoſes; or as our Modern Geographers, in the Maps of the world, fil up thoſe unknown parts thereof, of which they can give us no certain deſcription, with ſtrange pictures and uncouth ſhapes of beaſts and Trees; ſo alſo the Writers in former ages have filled the more remote Countries, of which they knew little, with ſuch impoſſible and incredible relations. Hence there have been attributed to this India, the fables of men with dogs heads; of men with one leg onely, yet of great ſwiftneſs; of ſuch as live by ſcent; of men that had but one eye, and that in their fore heads; and of others, whoſe ears did reach unto the ground. It is reported alſo that this people by eating a dragons heart and liver, attain to the underſtanding of the languages of beaſts; that they can make themſelves when they liſt inviſible; that they have two tubs, whereof the one opened yields wind, and the other rain, and the like. But theſe relations, and the reſt of this ſtrain, I doubt not but the underſtanding Reader knoweth how to judge of, and what to believe. For my part I am of the ſame mind with Curtius, Plura equidem tranſcribo quam credo; nec enim affirmare auſus ſum quæ dubito, nec ſubducere ſuſtineo quæ accepi: I may perhaps relate ſome things which I doe not credit, but ſhall not let them paſs without ſome cenſure; that ſo I neither may impoſe any thing on the Readers belief, nor defraud him of any thing conduciable to his contentation.

The Country (to report no more of it then it doth deſerve) enjoyeth an exact temperature of the air; two Summers, (or one as long as two) and a double encreaſe; bleſt with all things which are either neceſſary to the life of man, or of convenience and delight; particularly with mines of Gold and Silver, and with pretious ſtones; with ſpices of all ſorts, and Civetts; with the beſt medicinable drugs, metals of all kinds, except Coper and Lead; abundance of all ſorts of Cattell, except horſes. Somewhat defective alſo in Wheat and Vines, that ſo this Country might be beholden unto others, as well as others unto this. Famed alſo for abundance of Camels, Apes, Serpents, Rhinocerots, Elephants. Theſe laſt more ſavouring of reaſon and humane ingenuity, or elſe more tractable and docile, then any brute Creature whatſoever. Of this we have a fair inſtance in the ſtory of the acts of Alexander. The Elephant which King Porus ſate on, finding his Maſter ſtrong and luſty, ruſhed boldly into the thickeſt of the Enemies Army; but when he once perceived him to be faint and weary, he withdrew himſelf out of the battel, kneeled down, and into his own trunk received all the Arrowes which were directed at his maſter. The greatneſs of the Creature makes it yet more admirable, that either he ſhould have ſoul enough of his own to actuate ſo vaſte a body; or being of ſuch ſtrength and bigneſs ſhould ſubmit himſelf to the inſtructions of another: ſome of theſe Indian Elephants, as Ælianus hath affirmed, being nine Cubits high, and as many long; and in breadth or thickneſſe about five Cubits. Nor doth the Sea afford leſſe plenty or variety, then we finde on ſhore: yielding abundance of the richeſt and faireſt Pearls, huge ſholes of fiſh, and amongſt them the Whale or great Leviathan; exceeding the proportion of that land monſter the Elephant. For though the ordinary dimenſion of the Whale be but 36 Cubits in length, and eight in thickneſſe: yet Nearchus in Arianus is ſaid to have meaſured one, in the Indian Seas, which was of the length of 50 Cubits, and of breadth proportionable: not to ſay any thing of that uncredible report of Pliny, who ſpeaketh of ſome Indian Whales, which were nine hundred and threeſcore foot, or four Acres long.

The people are of five ſorts, and as many Religious; that is to ſay, the naturall Indians, derived from the Original Inhabitants of it. 2ly. Moors, or Arabians, who more then two hundred yeares ago, poſſeſſed themſelves of ſome Sea-Towns, driving the Natives up higher into the Countrey. 3ly. Jews, ſcattered and diſperſed (as in other places) into all parts of it; 4ly. Tartars, in thoſe parts and Provinces which are under the Great Mogul; and 5ly. Portuguez, who have many Colonies and Factories in the Ports and Iſlands, but brag as if they had made a conqueſt of all the Countrey. Which notwithſtanding, conſidering that the Naturall Indians are by far the greateſt number, we muſt relate to them onely in the Character which is made of this people. Affirmed to be tall of ſtature, ſtrong of body, and of complexion inclining to that of the Negroes: of manners civill, and ingenious, free from fraud in their dealings, and exact keepers of their words. The common ſort but meanly clad, for the moſt part naked, content with no more covering than to hide their ſhame. But thoſe of greater eſtates and fortunes (as they have amongſt them many antient and Noble families) obſerve a majeſty in both Sexes, both in their Attendants and Apparel; ſweetning the laſt with oils, and perfumes, adorning themſelves with Jewels, Pearls, and other Ornaments befitting. They eat no fleſh, but live on Barley, Rice, Milk, Honey, and other things without life.

The Women not of much fairer complexion than the men, yet of lovely countenances, wear their hair long and looſe, but covered with a thin veil of Calicut Lawn. Their ears hung with many rings, ſo great and heavy, that they are torn, and ſtretched to much diſproportion; their noſes alſo ringed, and behung with Jewels according to their eſtate and quality. Servilely obſequious to their Husbands, whoſe affections they divide amongſt them without jarre or jealouſie: the men allowed here, as in all the Eaſt, the uſe of many wives, whom they buy of their Parents for a yoke of Oxen; and many marry as often as they liſt. In which they have too great a priviledge above the women, who after the deceaſe of their common husband, do either burn in the ſame flame with him, or elſe are forced to doom themſelves to perpetuall Widow-hood. But of this we may ſpeak more hereafter, when we come to the particulars.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt planted in theſe Countries, by Saint Thomas, from whom the remainders of Chriſtianity take denomination; and unto whom the Records and Monuments of that Church do aſcribe their converſion. For in one of their Breviaries written in the Chaldæan tongue, & tranſlated into Latin by Father John Maria Campanin a Jeſuit, we finde it thus, Per D. Thomam evanuit error Idololatriæ ab Indis, &c. i. e. By Saint Thomas, the errors of Idolatry vaniſhed out of the Indies; by Saint Thomas, they received the Sacrament of Baptiſme, and the adoption of Sons; by Saint Thomas, they believed and confeſſed the Father, the Son, and Holy-Ghoſt; by Saint Thomas, they kept the faith received of one God; and finally by Saint Thomas, the ſplendour of ſaving Doctrine did appear to all India. His body, as they ſay, intombed in the City of Muliapar, upon the Coaſt of Choromandell; the truth of which tradition I diſpute not here. But this plantation of the Goſpel by the hand of Saint Thomas was not univerſal over all the Countrey, but in ſome parts and Provinces only: or elſe was forced to give ground a while to prevailing Heatheniſm. For in the reign of Conſtantine, we read how the Indians living on the further ſide of the River Ganges (for ſo I underſtand the Indi interiores of my Author) were converted to the Faith by the miniſtry of one Frumentius, of the City of Tyre; who having ſpent the greateſt part of his time amongſt them, was employed in that ſervice, and conſecrated the firſt Biſhop (for thoſe Churches) by the great Athanaſius of Alexandria. But being the foundation of this building was laid by Saint Thomas, the remainder of Chriſtians here being, aſcribe the whole work to him; called therefore Chriſtians of Saint Thomas. Governed originally by their own Biſhops, ſubordinate to an Archbiſhop of their own alſo, reſiding at Augamale, fifteen miles from Gochin, one of the chief Cities of this Countrey: who for a long time acknowledged obedience to the Patriarch of Muſal, by the name of the Patriarch of Babylon, as by the Chriſtians of India he is ſtill termed. The number of the Chriſtians computed at 15 or 16 thouſand families; or at 70000 perſons in the accompt of other: inhabiting for the moſt part in that large tract of ground, which beginning at the outlets of Indus and Ganges, ſtretcheth unto the Cape or Promontory called Cape Comari. The points wherein they differed from the Church of Rome, 1. Their adminiſtring the Sacrament of the Euchariſt in bread ſeaſoned with ſalt; 2. Adminiſtring in both kinds, but uſing inſtead of wine (which is ſcarce or not at all to be had in this Country) the juice of Raiſins ſoftned in water over night, and ſo preſſed forth; 3. Not baptizing children untill 40 dayes old, except it be in danger of death; 4. Permitting no Images in their Churches, but that of the Croſs; 5. Allowing one marriage to their Prieſts, but debarring the ſecond; 6. In painting God with three heads on one body, to denote the Trinity; 7. Denying the uſe of extreme Unction; and 8. Not acknowledging the Popes ſupremacy: but beſides theſe remainders of thoſe antient Chriſtians, there are ſome others now of late of a new plantation, by the pains and travell of the Jeſuits, though not with ſuch ſucceſs here, as they found in China: many of the Inhabitants partly by the diligence of the Arabians, and partly by power of the great Mogul, having embraced Mahometaniſme; and being conſequently leſſer inclinable to admit the Goſpel, then when they were in the condition of their neutrall Gentiliſme. Yet have they made ſuch good progreſs in it, that Echebar the Mogul not only founded a fair Church for the uſe of the Chriſtians in the Citie of Agra (the Regall Citie of that Empire) but committed to the care of the Jeſuites the education of two Princes of the Regal Familie. And poſſibly they might have made a great increaſe of Chriſtians before this time, had they not been oppoſed therein, by Sultan Coroen, a bitter enemie to their proceeding, in the reign of his Father, and no great favourer of them ſince. Inſomuch that hearing a Jeſuite, called Franciſco Carſi, his report unto his Father how miraculouſly a wooden Croſs of his had eſcaped the fire; he was very urgent with his Father to have a great fire preſently made, and the ſame Croſs to be thrown into it, upon theſe conditions, that if the Croſs conſumed not, his Father and himſelf would become Chriſtians; but if it did, the Jeſuite ſhould be burned in the ſame fire with it. A fiery tryall, which the poor Jeſuite had much ado to put off, and preſerve his credit. Howſoever by their practiſing amongſt the old Chriſtians they have gained one point of very great conſequence and importance to the Church of Rome. For in the year 1599. by the ſolicitation of the Jeſuits and the other Indian Chriſtians, renounced their obedience to the Patriarch of Muſal, and ſubmitted their Churches to the juriſdiction of the Pope of Rome, in a Nationall Synod held at Liamper, not far from Maliapar, by the Arch-biſhop of Goa (the Primate of the Portugals in thoſe parts) not only rejecting all opinions contrary to the Romiſh Tenets, but delivering all their Books and Liturgies to be altered and reformed by the ſaid Arch-biſhop according to the Rites and Doctrines of the Church of Rome, which was done accordingly.

But theſe comparatively to the reſt, come not to an handfull; the main body of the people wallowing in their Gentiliſm; and ſtill retaining many of thoſe ancient Cuſtoms, which they uſed of old: as viz. 1. Not knowing their Wives after they have born them two children: 2. Nor keeping them, if after five years cohabitation, they can raiſe no iſſue by them, but then exchanging them for others: 3. Rewarding none for any military exploit, if they bring not with them in their hands the head of an enemy: 4. Killing their Friends, before they were withered or decayed by Age, or ſickneſs. To theſe they have ſince added others of a larger invention, perhaps more barbarous: of which we may have opportunity to ſpeak anon. Their Prieſts or learned men, in the time of old, were called Brachmanes from one Brachman, the preſcriber of their Rites and Laws, by whom inſtructed in the Rudiments of their Philoſophy; ſome of which, from their going naked, had the name of Gymnoſophiſts; who were to them as the Chaldæi to the Aſſyrians; the Magi to the Perſians; and the Druides to the ancient Britains. Had in great reverence by the People, and lived for the moſt part an auſtere and ſolitary life, in Caves and Deſarts; feeding on herbs, poorly apparelled, and for a time abſtaining from all carnall pleaſures; but that time paſt, they may indulge themſelves more liberty, and admit the company of women. Others of them live together with the common people, as being their ordinary Prieſts. Of theſe the great Alexander, when he was in this Country ſurprized ten; one of them called by the name of Calanus, with whom he had a great deal of communication: propounding to him many ſtrange queſtions, and receiving back to many of them, (as himſelf confeſſed) ſome not unſatisfying though ſtrange anſwers. To theſe Gymnoſophiſts, or Brachmans, the Bramines do now ſucceed, both in place and authority; but differ from them moſt extremely in point of learning, and the civilities of their lives; theſe Bramines being the moſt impure, libidinous, and ſenſuall beaſts in all the Countrey; priviledged with the firſt nights lodging of every Bride, which when ſatiated with their filthy luſt, they ſell, or traffique with, to ſtrangers; ſerving as Stallions to old men, and as Pandars to young: ſo fleſhed in wickedneſs, and ignorant of all good Letters, that they have nothing of a man but the voice and ſhape. Mahometaniſm is alſo entertained in a great part of the Countrey, firſt brought in by the Tartars, and neighbouring Perſians, unto whom conterminous, but much increaſed by the victories of the Great Mogul: who being originally a Tartar, and of that Religion, hath cauſed it to be propagated in moſt parts of his large dominions.

Mountains of moſt note in it, beſides Caucaſus, and ſome other of the branches of Taurus, or Ararat, common to this, and the Tartarian and Perſian Empires. 1. Sardonix, full of Mines of thoſe precious ſtones which are called after the name of the Mountain. 2. Vindius. 3. Bittigo. 4. Adiſathras. 5. Thoſe called Apocopi, & 6. thoſe named Orodii. And on the further ſide of Ganges, 7. Bepyrrus. 8. Mæandrus. 9. Thoſe called Damuſi, and 10. Semanthinus; part of this laſt extending alſo unto China. All of them very fruitfull to the production of Mines and Rivers, as will appear by looking over the particulars when we come unto them.

But the Mountain of chief note of all, is that which Ptolomy calls Bittigo, and is now named Gates; the Southern part of the great Mountain Imaus ſpoken of before: extended from Mount Caucaſus, where it croſſeth the Taurus in right Angles, to Cape Comari, a known Promontory of Induſtan, or the hither India (which it divideth into Eaſt and Weſt) for the ſpace of 400 leagues and upwards. Conceived by Poſtellus a learned Writer, to be that of Mount Sephar, mention whereof is made in the 10th of Geneſis, where it is ſaid to be the utmoſt Eaſtern limit of the ſons of Joktan, Gen. 10. v. 30. with probability enough for ought I can ſee; the ſons of Joktan being ſetled in theſe parts of India, and the Provinces of the Perſian Empire which lie neareſt to them. And ſo far Stephanus doth concur with Poſtell, as to affirm of this Mount Sephar, that it is Mons Indiæ, an Indian Mountain: both of them grounding on S. Hierom, who expreſly ſaith, Sophera mons Orientis in India, juxta quem habitaverunt filii Joctam, i.e. that Sephar, or Sopher, is the name of a Mountain of the Eaſt in India, neer to which dwelt the Sons of Joktan. More probably, without doubt, than that we ſhould transfer it into America, as I ſee ſome do, and make it there to be the great Mountain of the Andes, which runneth the whole length of Peru, from one end to the other, and thence as ſome will have it to the Streights of Magellan. Which ſhould we grant, we muſt not look for Joktan, or the ſons of Joktan, either in Arabia Felix, where Bochartus placeth them; nor in the Eaſtern parts of Aſia, where moſt probably they may be found; but we muſt croſs the vaſt Orientall Ocean, and look for them in a place where they never were; beſides, that granting this for true, we muſt allow America to have been known in the time of Moſes, which no Author that ever I met with did ſo much as dream of.

Rivers of moſt note are, 1. Indus, which ariſeth out of that part of Taurus, which the Antients call Paropamiſus, the Moderns, Naugrocot; and having received into it 19 other Rivers, after a courſe of 900 miles,, falleth into the Ocean at ſeven Mouths, that is to ſay, 1. Sagappa, being the moſt Weſtern, 2. Sinthum, 3. Aureum, 4. Cariphi, 9. Sappara, 6. Sabalaſſa, 7. Lonibare, the moſt Eaſtward. But five of theſe being choaked with Sands, or drawn into the neigbouring Channels, there now remains but only two. A River famous in Records and ancient Stories, for giving name unto the Countrey, and that ſo celebrated voyage of Alexander, who ſailed down it towards the Indian Ocean: the voyage holding

holding above five moneths, of which there is ſaid to have paſſed no day wherein he ſailed not 15 miles, or 600. Furlongs. 2. Ganges, which riſeth as ſome ſay from the Mountain Imaus, (or rather from that part of Taurus, where Imaus falleth right upon it,) and falling headlong down the Rocks, is firſt collected into a Lake, or Pool (ſuppoſed by others for the fountain and original of it) whence with a gentler pace it paſſeth towards the Ocean; taking in by the way, as is ſaid by Pliny, 30 navigable Rivers. In the narroweſt place of eight miles breadth, in the broadeſt 20. ſeldom ſo ſhallow but that the depth thereof is 100 foot, or 20 Geometrical paces. Parted into five great Channels it falleth at laſt into the Sea; the firſt of which moſt towards the Weſt, is called 1. Cambyſum, 2. Magnum, 3. Cambericum, 4. Pſeudoſtomum, and 5. that which lyeth furtheſt towards the Eaſt, called Antiboli. This River erroneouſly ſuppoſed to be that Piſon which watered Paradiſe: and to encreaſe the reputation of the errour, we finde it countenanced by Joſephus, and other no leſſe eminent names, and alſo backed by ſome traditions of the people which inhabit neer it. By whom it is affirmed that ſome of the Bengalan Kings ſent men up the River, who came at laſt to a pleaſant place, bleſt with a fragrant Earth, ſweet Air, and quiet waters; beyond which they could go no further. The truth and reality whereof doth ſo poſſeſs them, that at the mouth of this River called Gangaſagie, ſuch as are weary of this world uſe to caſt themſelves into the current, and are preſently devoured by a fiſh called Sea-dogs, by whom they hope to finde a quick paſſage to Paradiſe. The occaſion of which error among the Ancients, proceeded from thoſe words of the Scripture, in which it is affirmed of Piſon, that it compaſſed the land of Havilah: which granting that it did, inferreth not that either this River muſt be Piſon, or that India is intended by that Havilah. For beſides Havilah the ſon of Jocktan, planted in ſome part of India; there was another Havilah, the ſon of Chus, ſetled in the land of Havilah or Chuſiana, not far from Babylon: this laſt indeed watered by the River Piſon, and the firſt by Ganges; too far aſunder, and divided by too many Nations, to be taken and miſtaken one for another. But not leſs famous, becauſe none of thoſe which neighboured the Garden of Eden, perhaps of greater fame than any of thoſe which did. For to this River do the ſuperſtitious Indians make their ſolemn Pilgrimages; vainly conceiving that they ſhall be ſure of their eternity, if at the time of their death they may drink of this water. To the overflowings of this River do the People aſcribe the fertility of the Countreys adjoyning, as the Ægyptians do to Nilus. And finally, by this River was the whole Countrey anciently, and at this preſent is divided into two main parts, (each ſubdivided into many particulars Provinces) viz. 1. India intra Gangem. 2. India extra Gangem. Of each of which we will take a brief ſurvey, with reference to the ſtate and ſtory of it in preceding times; and then conſider them with reference to the preſent age.

INDIA INTRA GANGEM.

INDIA INTRA GANGEM, is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Ganges, till the fall thereof into the Sea, and after that with the large and ſpacious Bay, called anciently Sinus Gangeticus, now the Gulf of Bengala: on the Weſt, with Paropamiſus, Arachoſia, Gedroſia, Provinces of the Perſian Empire, and part of the Arabian Seas: on the North, where it is broadeſt, with Mount Taurus, branched into Paropamiſus, Caucaſus, and other parts: and on the South, where it endeth in a ſharp point or Promontory, by Ptolomy called Commaria extrema, but now Cape Commari, with the Indian Ocean. So named from being ſcituate on this ſide Ganges; by the moderns, Indoſtan.

The Country of the ſame nature formerly, as it is at the preſent, not altered but by changing of the channels of Indus; which being ſhifted by an Earthquake, turned a great part of the once neighbouring Region to a ſandy Deſart: Indus (as many other of the Indian Rivers) fatning and enriching all the land which it overfloweth. The people of thoſe elder times, much like the Scythians, eſpecially in their courſe of life; living without Cities, Temples, Houſes, in their moveable Tents: their food the bark of a tree called Tala, which ſerved for bread; and the fleſh of Bucks, Does, and other Veniſon, with the skins whereof they made their Garments. All of them Free-men, but no Slaves to be found amongſt them. Leſs warlike then the Scythians, but as great contemners of death as they: the women contending eagerly amongſt themſelves, which ſhould accompany their Husband (one husband having many wives) to his Funeral Pile. Of which thus Saint Hierome, Hæ igitur contendunt de amore viri, & ambitio ſumma certantium eſt ac teſtimonium caſtitatis dignum morte cenſeri. A Cuſtome ſtill retained amongſt them; of which ſomewhat hath been ſaid already, and more is to be ſaid in another place.

Principall Rivers of this part, 1. Hydaſpes, by Ptolomy (and by him onely) called Bidaſpes, one of the furtheſt bounds of Alexanders Conqueſts. 2. Suaſtus, 3. Coa, 4. Aceſines, very memorable in the Geſts of Alexander. 5. Sandabilis. 6. Zaradrus: all coming from the Northern Mountains, and all falling (Hydaſpes with three other Rivers firſt received into it) into the greater bed of Indus. 7. Diamna, 8. Sorabus, and 9. Soa, falling from the Northern Mountains, into the main Channel of Ganges. 10. Naragonas, iſſuing from Mount Vindius. 11. Baris, from Bittigo. 12. Chaberis, from Adiſathris. 13. Tindis, from the hill called Uxentius: and 14. Tina, from the Orodian Mountains, with many others of leſs note. By what names called at the preſent, I determine not; nor finde I any which have dared to adventure on it. But doubtleſs to be found in 1. Catamul, 2. Cebcha, 3. Ray, 4. Chenao, 5. Rebeth, all tributaries unto Indus, which is now called Schind. 6. Taphi, 7. Harunda, 8. Chambel, 9. Jamena, which empty their water into Ganges; the which, with ſuch others of the principal Rivers which are now known by name to us, ſhall occaſionally be touched on in that which followeth. Beſides which Rivers, here is a famous Lake mentioned in the Geſts of Alexander, ander, (but the name occurreth not) not much above a mile in circuit, but exceeding pleaſant, ſhaded on every ſide with woods; memorable for the great refreſhment which it gave to Alexanders Army, when even pined with thirſt.

The Country ſo exceeding populous in the time of Ptolomy, that it afforded him the names of more noted Cities, than any one Countrey in the world. Of which, 1. Cottiara, 2. Nigama, 3. Sageda, 4. Raraſſa, 5. Maſopelle, and 6. Pityndra, are honoured with the name of Metropoles, as being the head Cities of their ſeveral and reſpective Nations. 7. Ozene, 8. Sora, 9.. Palibothra, 10. Gange, 11. Batana, 12. Hippocnra, 13 Garara, 14. Modura, 15. Orthura, and 16. Malanga, mentioned as the Royal ſeats of ſeveral Princes, by the name of Regiæ. 17. Bardaxema, 18. Tyndis, 19 Argari, 20. Curula, 21. Chaberis, on the River ſo called. 22. Palura, on the ſhores of the Gulf of Bengala, and 23. Palura, on the banks of Cambyſum, 24. Tilegramocum; marked out above the reſt with the name of Civitates (Cities) and therefore probably of more note than others not ſo diſtinguiſhed. And finally, 25. Monogaſſum, 26. Simylla, neer a Promontory of the ſame name, 27. Nitra, 28. Maziris, 29. Elancorum, 30. Colchi, 31. Salur, 32. Sobura, 33. Poduca, 34. Melange, 35. Maliarpha, 36 Contaciſſyla, 37. Noſygne, 38. Barygaza. Specified as the moſt noted and celebrious Empories; Beſides, 39. Canthymus, 40. Stathmus, (and 41. a Road oppoſite to Chryſas) two commodious Stations or Roads for ſhipping. The names and ſcituation of theſe places is the moſt we finde of them, which makes me paſs them over with a bare recital, only to ſhew how populous and well planted this Country was in the time of my Author.

Of leſs name, but of more note in the courſe of ſtory, 1. Myſa, built by Bacchus at the time of his Indian Conqueſt, and called thus by the name of his Nurſe, to preſerve her memory; his mother dying in Child-birth of him. Repleniſhed by him with his ſick and wounded Souldiers, whoſe poſterity continued here till the time of Alexander, who ſpared the City and the people for his love to Bacchus, who was therein worſhipped in a Temple of his own foundation, planted about with Bayes, Vines, and Ivy, whoſe ſhady branches covered the roofs of it. In the midſt thereof an Image, with all the Inſtruments belonging to a plentifull Vintage, all of gold or ſilver. 2. Taxilla, or Taxiala as Ptolomy calleth it, ſeated betwixt Indus and Hydaſpes, in the Region called Varſa; and built moſt probably by Taxiles a puiſſant King of India, in the time of Alexander. Adorned in elder times with a Temple dedicated to the Sun, and therein with an Ivory image of Ajax, a golden Statua of Alexander, and the portraiture of King Porus, made in Copper. The floor of Moſaicall work pouldred with Pearls, the walls of red marble interlayed with gold, which made it ſhine afar off, like a flaſh of lightning. 3. Nagara, called alſo Dionyſiopolis; in memory of Bacchus, who was alſo called Dionyſius, and Liber Pater. 4. Adorne, by Diodorus called Aornos, and Avernus by Strabo; ſo ſtrongly ſeated on a Rock, that Hercules was not able to force it: which made Alexander, imitatating, and therein out-going the acts of Hercules, aſſault it with the greater force, and at laſt he carried it. Bucephala, built by Alexander on the banks of Hydaſpes, and named thus in memory of Bucephalus his beloved Horſe, which had ſerved him in all the courſe of his Fortunes, and died hereabouts, being then thirty years old. 6. Pireta, another of his Foundations, ſo called by the name of his dog, whom he dearly loved. 7. Aelexandria, on the banks of Indus, another of his foundations alſo. 8. Mazage, on the Weſt of Indus, one of the firſt Towns of India taken by the Macedonians, though garriſoned within, and environed without by an hoſt of 300000 men: but yielded after ſome reſiſtance, with the uſe of her own body, by Cleophe the Queen thereof; who received it back with other favours from the hands of the Conquerour. 9. Nora, a ſtrong City on the ſame ſide of Indus, taken by Polyſperchon, one of his Commanders. 10. Samus, on the banks of the ſame River, taken by Alexander in the courſe of his Navigation down that Sea of Waters; the Inhabitants whereof fought againſt him with poiſoned Arrows, with one of which Ptolomy, afterward King of Ægypt, was dangerouſly wounded, and cured with an herb which Alexander dreamt he had ſeen in the mouth of a Serpent. 11. Oxydrace, the chief City of the Oxydracans, at the ſiege whereof Alexander is ſaid to be the firſt that ſcaled the walls, and the laſt that could do ſo: the Ladder breahing aſſoon as he was at the top. Standing thus alone as a mark to all their Darts, he was by the Souldiers deſired to leap down amongſt them; but he in a daring bravado leaped into the Town among his enemies, where it was not only his good hap to light upon his feet, but to have an old tree at his back to defend him behind. In this poſture he is ſaid to have maintained the fight a long time againſt all the Souldiers of the Town; killing two of them with his own hands, and by that example teaching the reſt to be more mannerly; till being wearied, aud dangerouſly wounded, he was forced to leave his feet, and commit the weight of his body to his knees. In this caſe Leonatus, Peuceſtes, and ſome other of his Captains, came to aſſiſt him; who defended their dying Maſter, till the whole Army entred the Town, and put all the people to the ſword in revenge of their King, whoſe life they had little hope to enjoy, though he with much danger did afterward recover. For my part I give little or no credence to this ſtory, ranging it in the ſame Catalogue of truth with the Adventures of Donzel d'l' Phœbo, Roſicleer, Belianis, Amadis, and the reſt of the rabble of Knights errant. Neither is this the firſt time that Curtius hath diſgraced the ſoundneſs of Alexanders judgement, and the truth of his actions, with the like idle and impoſſible Fables: though indeed, in that particular, he ſaith, that it was multo magis ad temeritatis quam ad gloriæ famam. And 12. Nicaa, built by Alexander on the banks of Aceſines, in memory of his many great and ſignall victories. Not far from which, finding how unwilling his Souldiers were to paſs further Eaſt, he purpoſed to leave behinde him ſome Monument of his great exploits, and to make his fame immortall amongſt the Indians. And to that end he cauſed the form of his Camp to be enlarged, and the Cabbins to be made bigger than ſufficed for his men to lodge in; the Mangers to be ſet higher than his horſes could reach; Armour and Bits for horſes of too great a ſize (made not for uſe, but oſtentation of his might) to be ſcattered up and down the Camp; for the ſavage people to wonder at in the times to come. By means whereof he got nothing amongſt knowing men, but a ſuſpicion that his actions were intended leſs memorable than they are reported to have been; ſince he ſo vainly laboured to have them thought greater than indeed they were.

Gangem.

The old Inhabitants hereof, were the Indo-Scythæ, inhabiting on the North-Weſt of Indus, the Mazagæ, Sadani, Piratæ, Limyrices, Aii, the Soringi, Arvari, Oxydracæ, Malli, and Lambaæ, the Gandarides, or Gangarides, near the mouth of Ganges, the Caſpirai, under the ſhades of Mount Vindius. The Muſicani, Chatziai, Polindæ, Phyllitæ, Bittigi, Chadramotitæ, Pezuari Adiſathri, Mandalæ, Dryllphitæ, Sabaræ, Pandioni, with many others to the number 122 ſeveral Nations, if Megaſthenes be not out in his reckoning; too many and too impertinent to be muſtered here.

Originally deſcended from the Sons of Noah, before they left theſe Eaſtern parts to go towards the unfortunate valley of Shinaar. We could not elſe have found this Country ſo full of people in the days of Semiramis, the wife of Ninus: who leading an Army compounded of ſeveral nations, to the number of four millions and upwards (if Cteſias, and Diodorus Siculus who reports it from him, be of any credit, but certainly the greateſt Army that ever was raiſed) was encountered by Staurobates, a King of India, with greater forces made up of natural Indians onely; by whom ſhe was vanquiſhed and ſlain. A matter beyond all belief, though neither Army could make up a fourth part of that number, if the Indians had been no other than ſome one of thoſe Colonies, which were ſent from BABEL; or rather a ſecond or third Swarm of thoſe former Colonies, which went thence under the command of the firſt Adventurers. For that any of the firſt Adventurers, who were preſent at the building of the Tower of BABEL, travelled ſo far Eaſt, is not affirmed by any who have laboured in the ſearch of their plantations. So that I take it for a matter undeniable, that the plantation of India preceeded the attempt of BABEL; though by whom made, there is nothing to be ſaid, for certain. Yet if I might have liberty to expreſs my own conceptions, I am inclinable to believe that all the Eaſtern parts of Perſia, with China, and both the Indiaes, were peopled by ſuch of the Sons of Sem, as went not with the reſt to the Valley of Shinaar. For otherwiſe I can ſee no reaſon, that the poſterity of Japhet ſhould plant the greateſt part of the leſſer Aſia, and the whole Continent of Europe, with the Iſles thereof; and that the ſons of Cham ſhould ſpread themſelves over Babylonia, Paleſtine the three Arabiaes, and the whole Continent of Africk: the poſterity of Sem being ſhut up in a corner of the greater Aſia, hardly ſo big as ſome one of the Provinces taken up by the other Adventurers. And therefore that I may allow to the ſons of Sem an equal Latitude, I think it not improbable to fix them in theſe Eaſtern Countries; ſpreading themſelves this way as they grew in numbers, before the reſt of the Adventurers went to ſeek new fortunes at the Tower of BABEL. And being that (the Country was large and wealthy, and might have room enough to ſpare for ſome ſecond commers eſpecially deſcending from the ſame root with them:) I doubt not but to place here all the ſone of Jocktan, Havilah, Chatſarmaveih, Saba, Abimail, who have left here ſome tract or monument of themſelves, as hath been ſhewn at large in our GENERAL PREFACE; and as concerning Ophyr, ſhall be ſhewed hereafter. To proceed therefore to our Story, the next who made any invaſion on this Country, after that of Semiramis, was Bacchus or Liber Pater, the ſon of Jupiter and Semele, accompanied with Hercules Ægyptius; not much more fortunate than ſhe: the forces of Bacchus being defeated, and Hercules forced to throw away his Golden Shield. But what they could not do by Arms, they effected by Arts. Bacchus inſtructing them in the uſe of Wine, Oyl, Sacrifices, and the Art of Architecture, and drawing them into Towns and Cities; for that cauſe honoured as a GOD. To Hercules they aſcribe the Nation of the Pandioni, proceeding from a daughter of his called PANDÆA: the memory of both preſerved in Statutes and Pillars errected by them.

After this, unattempted till the time of Alexander, who having made a full conqueſt of the Perſian Empire, invaded India with an Army of an 120000 fighting men. Beginning with CLEOPHE, Queen of the Mazagæ, a people of Indo-Scythia, he brought her to conformity, poſſeſſed himſelf both of her perſon and eſtate; on whom he begat a ſon called Alexander, who is ſaid to have ſucceeded in her Dominions. Being paſſed over the River Indus, Taxiles (by ſome called Omphis) a prudent Prince, whoſe Kingdom is affirmed to be bigger than Egypt, ſubmitted of his own accord: offering his ſervice and aſſiſtance to promote his conqueſt, and preſenting him with a Crown of Gold, and 80 Talents of ready money. This King made welcome, but his money not ſo much as looked on: the Macedonian being ſo far from fingering of this Indian gold, that gave him a thouſand Talents of his own treaſure. Encouraged by this Royal dealing, Abiajares, another puiſſant Prince of the oppoſite faction unto Taxiles, ſubmitted alſo, and was as graciouſly received: Porus, whoſe Kingdom lay on the other ſide of Hydaſpes, would not be ſo conquered, and therefore muſtereth up his forces, and valiantly made good the banks of the River. But vanquiſhed at the laſt, not without much difficulty, he was made a Priſoner to the Victor; who honouring the man for his brave reſiſtance, gave him his liberty and Kingdom with a great enlargement. The Conqueror had a great deſire to go further Eaſt, but the Souldiers would not be perſwaded: ſufficiently taught by Porus, what they were to look for, if the Indians ſhould unite their forces. Unable to prevail, he erected in the place twelve Altars, as high as Towers, where he obſerved many ſolemn Games and Sacrifices: and having ſacrificed to Hydaſpes, Indus, and Aceſines, he ſailed down Indus towards the Southern Ocean; which ſeen at diſtance, he turned towards Gedroſia, and thence to Babylon, where he died.

After his death Eumenes raiſed ſome part of his forces hence. But the Macedonians being plunged in a Civil war, one Androcottus, ſtirred up the Indians, to recover their freedoms; making himſelf at firſt their Captain, but at laſt their King. Poſſeſſed of all that had been conquered by the Greeks, he was encountred by Seleucus, who had then got the command of Aſia: againſt whom he brought an army of 600000 fighting men. Frighted wherewith, Seleucus made peace with him, and contracted a ſolemn League betwixt them; continued with the interchange of friendly Offices amongſt their poſterity; and more confirmed by an interview betwixt Antiochus the Great, and Saphagaſenus, one of the Succeſſors of Andracottus; by whom Antiochus was preſented with 150 Elephants, and the promiſe of ſome treaſure to be ſent after him. By the poſterity of Andracottus was the Kingdom held, till the proſperity and full hight of the ROMAN Empire. The power whereof though they rather knew by report, then trial, yet was it not amiſs to entertain a potent, though remote State, in tearms of amity. Therefore they ſent Embaſſadors unto Auguſtus, who preſented him with a number of Tigers, (which beaſts) (ſaith Dion) till then, the Romane people had never ſeen) and which was the moſt pleaſing, a little Boy born without arms; who with his feet could bend a bow, ſhoot and play on wind inſtruments, as exactly as others with their hands. Trajan the Emperor had a great deſire to ſee this Country, but was diverted from that purpoſe by matters of more neceſſary importance to the State of his Empire. Moved with the fame of Antonius, the Romane Emperor, they ſent a ſolemn Ambaſſie to him; making him Umpire in ſome Controverſies which they had with the Bactrians: from which Ambaſſadors it is probable that Ptolomy the Geographer who then lived, might receive his informations of the eſtate of this Country. The like they did to Julian the Apoſtate alſo, then ſetting forwards on his expedition againſt the Perſian; deſiring his friendſhip and alliance. How it was with them in the time of Conſtantine and Juſtinian, hath been ſhewn already. After theſe times by little and little, hiſtories have been in a manner ſilent concerning the affairs hereof; but for ſome conqueſts made on the parts next Perſia, by the Caliphs of Bagdet. For notwithſtanding that there was continual traffick from the Red-Sea hither; and between the Perſians, Turkiſh, and Indian Merchants for ſpices, and the other commodities of this Region: yet were not theſe Merchants acquainted with the ſtate of the Country, becauſe they entered not into it; but were met by the Indian Merchants at Sarmachand, being as it were the common Emporie. Neither did the Egyptians at all enter into India, but were met by the Indians at Ormus, or ſome other Iſland: even as now the Chinois, make ſome of the Philippina, the ſtaple of their trade with the Spaniards; whom they licence not to come into the Continent among them. But our modern Travellers navigators have withdrawn this mask of obſcurity, and ſhew us her lively protraiture in as lively colors. One of the firſt which brake the ice, and gave us any certainty of their affairs, was Sir John Mandeville; accompted at his coming back, for the greateſt Fabler in the world: ſo incredible ſeemed his reports of the magnificence of thoſe Kings, and the wealth of their Countrys, and the many rarities which he found amongſt them. But better thought of by our neighbours, he obtained a monument in a Convent at Leige (where he ended the long courſe of his life and travels, 1372) the Friers of which keep ſome things of his, Comme pour honorable memoire de ſon excellence, for an honourable memorial of his Excellencies. Many of his Relations ſince confirmed by the Portugals, who under the conduct of Vaſquez de Gama firſt diſcovered this Country, by the new way of the Cape of good hope, Anno 1499 or there abouts. For ſo it hapned, that the Portugals having diſcovered all the Coaſts of Africk, as far as to Cape Verd, by the encouragement, and at the charge of Henry Duke of Viſe, one of the younger ſons of King John the firſt; began to think upon ſome way to the wealth of India, and getting into their own hands the rich trade of that Country. To which end it was firſt thought, that Pedroid Cannanibla, and Alphonſo de Pagua, ſhould make a journy into the Eaſt parts, to learn the certainty of the ſpice trade, and make report of ſuch other commodities, as theſe Countries yeilded. Being come at laſt by long journies to the City of Calicute, and having ſatisfied themſelves in the inquiry which they came about, they prepare for their return to Portugal. Pagua dying in the journey, and Cannanilla though detained by the Hebbaſſine Emperor, (commonly but corruptly called Preſter John) ſends home a full relation of his ſucceſſes; inflamed with which King John the ſecond ſends out Bartholomew Diaz, Anno 1587 to find out a way into the Indies by the back of Africa: who having ſayled as far as the Cape of good hope, without giving end to the Adventure, returned back to Portugal: Undertaken with better fortune 10 years after; at the command of King Emanuel, by Vaſquez de Gama above mentioned; who doubling the Cape, and ſayling Northward, all a long the ſhores of Africk, as far as the kingdom of Melinde, received from the King thereof both Pilates, and inſtructions to bring him to Calicute, where he found all true which Cannanilla had before reported. Full of good news at the end of 26 moneths, from his firſt ſetting out he returns to Lisbone, received for the preſent with joy and triumph, & about two years after (that is to ſay 1502) furniſhed with 13 Ships, and 3 Caravels, he ſets forward again, followed by Stephen de Gama the ſame year with 5 Ships more, by which great ſtrength he made himſelf Maſter of ſome Ports, & by that means layed the foundation of that great command, which the Portugals have attained unto in theſe Eaſtern Countries. Seconded in this great enterpiſe by Ferdinando de Almeda, and Alphonſo de Albuquerque, and other noble Adventurers of the Realm of Portugal, as after them by ſuch of the Europæan Nations, as had the benefit and trade at the Weſtern Ocean.

If it be asked, why the Caſtilians, or Spaniards, being ſtrong in ſhipping bent not themſelves to the diſcovery of theſe wealthy Countries; it may be anſwered. 1. That they were buſied at the ſame time in the diſcovery and Conqueſt of the new world, which they looked on as a nearer, and no leſs profitable booty then this of India. 2 ly, The commodities of this Country, being brought home by the Portugals, were ſold to them at far cheaper rates; then they could have fetched them in their own bottoms. 3 ly, And chiefly, becauſe by the definitive ſentence of Pope Alexander the 6, both the Caſtilians, and the Portugals, were ſo limitted in their Navigations, that the Caſtilians might not intermeddle in the Eaſtern, nor the Portugals in the diſcovery or Conqueſt of the Weſtern parts, beyond the bounds which he

he had ſet to thoſe ſeveral Nations before mentioned, and by ſome later obſervations we have been informed, that in this part of India were no fewer than 47 Kingdoms, whereof ſome few have ſtill their own natural Kings; the reſt all ſubject to the power of the Great Mogul. Contracted into a leſſer number by joyning many leſſer territories into one Diviſion, we ſhall look on it as diſtributed into 15 Provinces. Some have reduced them unto five, but give us neither the bounds nor extent of any of them. And others in the deſcription of their travels, ramble up and down with ſuch uncertainties, (moſt of them being men of trades and ignorance) that though they tell us where they lodged, and what entertainments they did meet with; yet we ſhall hardly know by them (for I think they did not know themſelves) in what Province they were: or to what part the ſeveral Towns thorow which they paſſed, did of right belong. So that our paſſage thorow theſe Countries (having ſuch blind guides to follow) will be full of difficulty, and not ſo ſatisfactory to the Reader as he might expect. Howſoever I deſire him to bear me company, whileſt I take the beſt ſurvey I can of theſe 15 Provinces, to which the whole may be moſt handſomely reduced: that is to ſay, 1. Dulſinda, 2. Pengab, 3. Mandao, 4. Delly, 5. Agra, 6. Sanga, 7. Cambaia, 8. Decan, 9. Canara, 10. Malabar, 11. Narſinga, 12. Oriſtan, 13. Botanter, 14. Patenaw, and 15. Bengala.

1. DULSINDA.

DULSINDA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Indus; on the Weſt, with Paropamiſus, and Arachaſia two Perſian Provinces, but for the moſt parr, under the command of the Great Mogul; on the North, with Caucaſus, by which parted from Tartary; on the South, with the Kingdom of Cambaia. So that it taketh up all the Northern parts of this Eſtate, which lie upon the Weſt of the River Indus: from which River called by the Natives Sinda, moſt probable it is that it took this name: and therefore I have written it with an ſ, Dulſinda, and not Dulcinda, with a c, as I ſee ſome do, but on no good reaſon, for any thing that I am able to underſtand.

The Country by reaſon of the Northern ſcituation of it, more temperate, but leſs fruitful than the reſt of India. The ſeat, in antient times, of the Mazagæ, and Indo-Scythæ, when ſubdued by Alexander. Made up at preſent, of many leſſer Kingdomes, and ſmaller Provinces; denominated, for the moſt part, from the principal Towns and Cities of them, as in other places.

Amongſt which thoſe of moſt eſteem, are 1. Caximir, Caſcimir, or Chuſmur, (for by all theſe names it is called) the chief of a Kingdom once, unto which it gave name, till ſubdued by Echebar the Mogul; who in a pleaſant Iſland, (in the midſt of a great and deep Lake, about three leagues off the City) beſet round with Trees, built a Royal Palace: which he honoured ſometimes with his Court, removed hither from Lahor, partly the better to aſſure this new conquered Kingdom; but principally becauſe his Palace at Labor, and therein an infinite deal of Treaſute, had but newly been conſumed by fire. The City it ſelf ſcituate in the moſt healthy Country of all India, encompaſſed with high Mountains, covered for the moſt part of the year with ſnow: the reſt a delicate, goodly plain, diverſified with Paſtures, Woods, Corn-fields, Meadows, Parks, Gardens, and Rivers; even to admiration. The air hereof, and of the Country round about, by reaſon of the Northern ſcituation of it, and the ſnowie Mountains, very cool and temperate. The ſoil abundantly productive of Wheat, Rice, and Vines; which laſt they plant at the foot of the Mulberry-tree, which ſeemeth by this means to bear double fruits. Both Town and Kingdom ſubdued by Echebar, the Mogul, about the year 1597. their own diſſentions more conducing to that ſubjugation, than any viſible force which he brought before it. 2. Roree, a Fort of the Moguls towards Paropamiſus; but bordering upon the Country of Multan, to which People it properly belongeth: garriſoned not ſo much for fear of the Perſian, (for Paropamiſus, now called Cabal, is his antient Patrimony,) but to preſerve the People from the ſpoil of Thieves, who always hang about the Mountains. 3. In the moſt Northern parts hereof, ſtood the Nagara of Ptolomy; miſtook by ſome for the modern Agra, of which more anon. 4. Seſtan, the chief City as I take it, of the Kingdom of Rebat; ſcituate on the Eaſt of Caximir, betwixt it and the Indus: in the ſame Latitude with that, but not of ſo temperate an air; the ſnowy Mountains much conducing to the Temperature of the Realm of Caximir. 5. Multan, a great and antient City, and the chief of a Kingdom; on the South of Caximir, or Cheſmur; and about three French leagues from the banks of the River Indus. The ordinary thorow-fare of the Caravans, in the way from Lahor to Spahan, (the chief Seat of the Sophy or King of Perſia) forced to abide there divers days, ſometimes ten or twelve, to enrich the Town; which of it ſelf is of no great trading, nor otherwiſe able to ſubſiſt but by this device; famed moſt eſpecially for many excellent Bows and Arrows made in it. The Bows made of horn; excellently glued and put together: the Arrows of ſmall Canes or Reeds, both of them ſet off by rich Paint and Varniſh. They which are made here being more neat and good than in any part of Eaſt India beſides. There is another Town and Kingdom of or near this name on the other ſide of the River Indus, of which we ſhall ſpeak more in its proper place. 6. Duckee, a Fort or Garriſon, ſcituate in the Streights of the Mountains to ſecure the Caravans, and protect other Paſſengers from the danger of Robbers, hovering in theſe hill-countries, the out-parts of this Empire.

2. PENGAB.

OPpoſite to Dulſinda, on the Eaſtern ſide of the River Indus, but more inclining towards the South, lieth the Country, or Diviſion rather, which my Author calleth by the name of PENGAB: bounded on the Weſt, with Indus, which divideth it from Dulſinda; on the South, with the Kingdom of Mandoa; on the North, and Eaſt, with thoſe many Kingdoms, which we have comprehended under the name of Botanter.

The reaſon of the name I find not,nor any thing memorable of the Country; but that it was divided in the time of Ptolomy, into the Provinces of the Lambata, Caſpiria, Cylindrine, and Sauſtene; ſubdued by Alexander in his expedition into India: the famous Rivers of Aceſines, and Hydaſpis (but by what names now called I find not) having here their courſe. So that it ſeemeth to have been a part of the Kingdom of Porus, or that the Kingdom of Porus was a part of this.

Places of moſt importance in it. 1. Lahor, on the Eaſtern banks of Indus, affirmed to be the faireſt and moſt antient City in both the Indies; of moſt eſteem for wealth and greatneſs. In compaſs about ſixteen miles,and honoured for a while with the ordinary Reſidence of the Great Mogul; till on the burning of his Palace: ſpoken of before, he removed his Court to Caximir, from thence to Fatipore, and at laſt to Agra. Since that time made the Seat of the eldeſt ſon, or heir apparent, ſent hither for avoiding all occaſion of factions, which their living in the Court might breed. A City of exceeding trade, as being the chief Staple for the Spices in theſe parts,and other commodities of India, from hence tranſported into Perſia by the way of Candahor, the principal Town of Arachoſia; and ſo to Spahan the chief City of the Sophian Empire; where they are ſold,by reaſon of ſo long and chargeable a journey, at exceſſive rates. It is ſaid that 12000 camels at the leaſt,paſs every year thorow it with their lading, beſides what is ferried down the River, and brought up by the Portugals, who therewith traded unto Ormus till that Town was taken. By this we may conjecture at the wealth hereof, but more by that great Maſs of treaſure which a late Governour hereof did leave behind him. At whoſe death Echebar the Mogul (for the Mogul is the heir General unto all mens wealth) found in his Coffers three millions of Gold ready coined, great quantity of Gold and Silver uncoined,& ſome ſtore of Jewels: beſides Horſes,Elephants,Houſhold-furniture, and other goods almoſt invaluable. 2. Sultan-puare, of more antiquity than beauty; yet of good eſteem. 3. Athec, in the common Road from Lahor to China; reported in the deſcription of the travels of Benedictus a Goes, a Portugal Jeſuite, to be a moneths journey from Lahor, and yet in the ſame Province with it. Which if it be true,either the Province muſt be large,or his journies ſhort: or if not true, we muſt remember that we had it from the pen of a Jeſuite. And yet as great as this Province or Diviſion is affirmed to be, we do not find the names of any more Towns, of conſideration which may be ſaid with confidence to belong unto it; unleſs perhaps we may reduce under this Diviſion the Kingdoms of Haiacan and Buchor, of which laſt the chief City is called Bucorſuccor, enriched by the neighbourhood of the Indus, but not elſe obſervable.

3. MANDAO.

THe Kingdom of MANDAO is bounded on the North, with Pengab; on the South, with the Realm of Agra; on the Eaſt,with Delly; and on the Weſt,with the River Indus. So called from Mandao, the chief City of it.

The Country more mountainous and rugged than the reſt of theſe Provinces by reaſon of the many branches of Mount Bittigo (the Southern part of the Imaus) which do over-run it: in other things partaking of the riches of India. The men, as moſt of thoſe who live in ſuch mountainous tracts, of a warlike temper, comparatively with the reſt of the Indians: the women here antiently as valiant as the men in other places; riding aſtride, and practiſed in the Arts of Horſemanſhip; for that cauſe called Amazons; ſome of which are ſaid to be ſtill remaining. Inſomuch as it is written in the ſtories hereof, that the King of this Country not long ſince going to the wars, was accompanied by the Queen his Wife, marching in the Front of two thouſand women, all well mounted and prepared for ſervice.

Chief Cities hereof, 1. Mandao, ſeated on the banks of the River Mandavo, (the Manda of Ptolomy and the Antients) whence it had the name. A City of great note, ſaid to be 30 miles in compaſs; yet ſo well fortified, and furniſhed with all neceſſaries for defence and reſiſtance, that it held out twelve years againſt Mirumudius, or Merhamed, the Great Mogul, who then beſieged it. Surrendred at the laſt, and with it the Kingdom. Memorable for the great battel fought before it, betwixt the ſaid Merhamed, then coming to the relief thereof; and Badurius King of Cambaia who had then diſtreſſed it: in which Badurius loſt his tents and Treaſures,and was fain to flie diſguiſed unto Diu, to crave aid of the Portugals. 2. Moltan, which being miſtaken for another Town, of or neer the ſame name, on the Weſtern ſide of the Indus, is by ſome writer ſaid to have been once the chief City of a Kingdom, or a Kingdom rather of it ſelf, but of no great note: the women whereof though not ſo good ſouldiers as their Anceſtors of the female ſex, yet to come as neer them as they can, uſe boots and ſpurs when they take a journey, and ſo fitted ſit aſtride the ſaddle. 3. Scernus, on the River ſo called, of more Antiquity than greatneſs; as is alſo, 4. Polymbothie, the Palibothra of Ptolomy and others of the antient writers; then the chief Town of the Palibothei (by Plini and Strabo, called Praſii) a people of as great authority and power as any in India.

This once a Kingdom of it ſelf of great power & wealth,till Badurius King of Cambaia having conquered the Realm of Citor,and therewith a great part of Sanga, made an attempt upon this alſo. Galgee then King of Mandao finding himſelf too weak for ſo ſtrong an Enemy, craved aid of Merhamed (or Miramudius as the Latines) the Mongul Tartar; then reigning in Chabul or Arachoſia, and poſſeſſed of ſome parts of India alſo ſince the times of Tamerlane. Who compounding an Army of his own ſubjects, ſome mercinary Perſians, and a great body of Zagathatan Tartars, from whom originally deſcended, came in accordingly: diſcomfited the vaſt Army of Badurius, conſiſting of 150000 horſe, and 500000 foot, in two ſet battels, the firſt at Doceti,the next at Mandao; and following his blow poſſeſſed himſelf of the whole Kingdom of Cambaia. But not content with that ſucceſs, quarrelled the Mandoan King in whoſe aid he came; beſieged him in his principal City,which at laſt he won, and therewithal the Kingdom alſo: the wretched King ſhewing hereby a fair both evidence and example to ſucceeding ages, that the eaſieſt way for a Prince to ruine his own eſtate, and endanger his neighbours, is to admit a Forrein power into his own Dominions; which he cannot as eaſily thruſt out, as he hath brought them in.

4. Delly.

4. DELLY.

DELLY is bounded on the Weſt, with Mandao; on the Eaſt, with the Kingdom of Botanter; on the North, with the Eaſtern parts of Pengab; on the South, with the Eaſtern parts alſo of the Kingdom of Agra. So named from DELLY the chief City of it, by ſome called Delin.

The Country, beſides what is common to it with the reſt of India, is ſaid to be more abundantly ſtored than any other part of it, with Horſes, Elephants, and Dromedaries. Of the people nothing ſingular, except it be that many of them taking more delight in theevery than honeſt trades, live for the moſt part upon ſpoil: but thoſe eſpecially whom they call by the name of Belemi, being ſuch of the nobility or better ſort, who ſince the conqueſt of their Country by the Great Moguls, have lived like Out-Laws on the Mountains. Of the ſame temper with the Reſbutes in Cambaia, and the Agwans in Sanga and Dulſinda; who rather than ſubmit themſelves to a Forrein yoak, (as they count that of the Mongul) chooſe to forſake their proper dwellings, and all honeſt ways and means of living.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Delly, A City not onely honoured heretofore with the reſidence of the great Moguls, who from hence paſs in common appellation, by the names of the Kings of Delly, and that amongſt their moſt knowing Subjects; but beautified with many ſepulchres of their ancient Kings, whoſe funerals and Coronations were herein celebrated. And though deſerted of late times, by the Great Moguls, moving their Courts from place to place, as they inlarged their Empire, and increaſed their conqueſts: yet ſtill a great many of the Nobles, and not a few Captains and Commanders, do frequent the ſame; and have their houſes and pleaſure of retirement in it. 2. Tremel, upon the Weſtern ſide of the River Mandova; but not much obſervable. 3. Doceti, memorable for the great battle fought, neer unto it, in which Merhamed the Mongul overthrew the forces of Badurius, and thereby opened a fair way to the Realm of Cambaia.

This Country governed a long time by its natural Princes, was at laſt conquered by ſome Moores, or Saracens, coming from Perſia and Arabia, but I find not which; who grew to ſo great power and wealth, that Sanoſaradine, a Mahometan, one of their Deſcendants, dreamt of no leſs than the conqueſt of all India, if not of the whole Continent of Aſia alſo. Having about the year 1300 (memorable for the beginning of the Ottoman Empire) ſubdued by little and little all the neighbouring Princes, which made head againſt him; he pierced at laſt into Canora, now called Decan: and conquering a great part of it returned back to Delly. The purſuit of his victories he left unto one Abdeſſa his Lieutenant there, who added the reſt of that Country to his Maſters Territories; but kept the poſſeſſion to himſelf: confirmed therein by Sanoſaradine, with the title of Regent. But Sanoſaradine dying in a war againſt the Perſians, left for his Succeſſor a ſon ſo unlike his Father, that the conquered Provinces revolted from him unto other Maſters, more able to govern and protect them. Confined unto its former bounds, it remained notwithſtanding of ſufficient power to preſerve it ſelf, from any of their equal neighbors, till the riſing of the Great Monguls: whoſe puiſſance being unable to withſtand, it ſubmitted at the laſt to Adabar, the ſon of Merhamed, the ſecond Emperor of this line: who to aſſure himſelf of the peoples loyalty, and confirm his conqueſts, ſettled his Court a while at Delly, the chief City of it; from whence removed on the next proſperous emergency, as before was noted.

5. AGRA.

THe Realm of AGRA is bounded on the North, with Delly, and Mandao; on the South with Sanga, and Cambaia; on the Weſt, with Indus, which parteth it from the Province of Sinda, a part of the Kingdom of Cambaia; on the Eaſt, with Oriſtan, or Orixa. So called from Agra the chief City of it, and the Seat-Royal, of late times, of the Great Monguls.

The Country ſaid to be the beſt and moſt pleaſant of India, plentiful in all things, and ſuch a delicate, even piece of ground, as the like is hardly to be ſeen. Well watered, as with other Rivers, ſo moſt eſpecially with thoſe of Tamlico. and Jemena; which laſt runneth thorow the middeſt of it, North and South, or rather from the North-weſt to the South-eaſt, from whence bending more directly Eaſt-wards, it falleth at laſt into the Ganges, or that which is ſuppoſed to be Ganges, for the bed of that great River is not certainly known. The people for the moſt part Gentiles, Mahometaniſm coming in with the Great Moguls and generally inclining ſomewhat to the Pythagorean. For ſuch as live upon the banks of the River Jemena neither eat fleſh, nor kill any thing. The waters of which River they eſteem ſo ſacred, that thereof they uſually make their Temple, and ſay their prayers therein, but naked (in which poſture they both dreſs their meat and eat it) lodging upon the ground, being impoſed by them as a penance, and ſo conceived.

Places of moſt eſteem herein, 1. Fatepore, or Fettibarri, on the Weſt-ſide of the River, a very fair and goodly City; once beautified with a Royal Pallace here built by Echebar (after the removal of his Court from Caſcimer) with many ſpacious gardens belonging to it; but much decaied, ſince the fixing of the Court at Agra, to which moſt of the ſtones are carried, and no ſmall quantity of Corn ſowed within the Walls. 2. Agra, on the North bank of the River Jemena, inferiour to Lahor for wealth and greatneſs, but far more populous: the conſtant reſidence of the Court here in theſe latter times, drawing to it great reſort of all ſorts of people. By ſome ſuppoſed to be the Negara of Ptolomy, but ſuch a ſuppoſition as is built on no better ground, than ſome reſemblance of the names. For Ptolomies Nigara is by him placed on the Weſtern-ſide of Indus, in the Latitude of 33. whereas this Agra ſtandeth on the Eaſt of the River Jemena, five degrees more Southwards, in the Latitude of 28. But what it loſeth in Antiquity, it hath got in honour: the Town and Territory being a peculiar Kingdom, till Echebar the Mogull ſubdued it, Anno 1598. in his paſſage from Lahor to Decan. But it loſt nothing by the hand. For Echebar delighted in the ſcituation of it (and that withall it ſtood in the middeſt of his Kingdoms) made it the Seat Royal of his Empire; fixt there, for the moſt part ever ſince: by means whereof exceedingly increaſed in wealth, beauty and greatneſs: the very Caſtle in which the Mogul uſually reſideth, being two miles in compaſs, invironed with moſt high and unſcalable wals, and fortified with great ſtore of Ordnance. The whole ſpace betwixt it and Fatipore, being 18 miles, beautified with many Mahometan Temples, and with one alſo built by Echabar, for the uſe of ſuch Chriſtians, as had been gained unto the faith, by the care and diligence of the Jeſuits for the ſupply hereof with victuals, and other neceſſary proviſions, and the ſecurity of ſuch as reſort unto it, affirmed to be a continual Market: and all the Intervall from hence to the Town of Lahor (from which diſtant 400 miles towards the South) adorned with continual Rows of Trees on both ſides of the waies, moſt of them bearing a kind of Mulberry; and at every ten miles end, houſes erected by the King or ſome of the Nobles, for beautifying the way to the Regal City, for preſerving their own memory, and the ſafe lodging of Paſſengers, in danger otherwiſe by night, of Theeves and Cut-throats. 3. Hendee, a Town more towards the South, beautified with a fair Caſtle of the Kings, cut out of the main Rock, and wrought with carved work round about; fortified with 50 pieces of Ordnance, and thought impregnable: for that cauſe made a Priſon for great perſons. Here are alſo two Hoſpitals for ſuch Captains (and Captains only) as are maimed in the Wars. 4. Biani, twelve courſe or 18 miles from Pattipore; the moſt noted place for Indico in all the Indies; for the making whereof they have here twelve Mills: Which Indico (by the way) groweth on a ſmall ſhrub like our Gooſe-berry-buſhes, bearing ſeed like a Cabbage-ſeed; which being cut down, are laid in heaps for half a year, and when rotten, brought into a vault, to be troden with oxen from the Stalks; and being ground ſmall and fine at the Mills, is laſt of all boyled in Furnaces, refined, and ſorted, and ſo ſold to the Merchants.

To this diviſion alſo we may reduce the Kingdom of Gwaliar, ſo called of Groaliar the chief City, where the Mogul hath a very rich treaſury of Gold and Silver; kept in a very ſtrong Caſtle, wherein his Priſoners are ſecured likewiſe; And for thoſe reaſons, continually guarded by a ſtrong Company of ſtout and well-appointed Souldiers.

6. SANGA.

SANGA is bounded on the North, with the Eaſt parts of the Realm of Agra; on the South, and Weſt, with Cambaia; from which parted on the Weſt, by the Mountain Gate; and on the Eaſt with Oriſtan. The reaſon of the Name I find not: this Country being too far South to be ſo called from Sangalaſſa, a Town of chief note near the Fountains of INDUS, where placed by Arianus, Lib. 5.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Azmere, or Agimer, 180 miles from Agra. At the end of every courſe (each courſe a mile and a half) a fair pillar erected, and at every tenth courſe a fair Seraglio, (ſuch as we call Inns) for the entertainment of Travellers. All built by Echebar, who wanting children, is ſaid to have gone in pilgrimage, on foot from Agra to Azimere; ſaying his prayers at the end of every courſe, and lodging all night at the tenth. 2. Citor, the chief City of Sanga, and once a Kingdom of it ſelf, or the chief of that Kingdom. Scituate in the middle way betwixt Surat, a known Port of Cambaia, and Agra ſpoken of before; and moſt magnificently built on the top of a rocky hill, to which the paſſage is ſo narrow, and ſo well fortified (there being in it three Gates, at the top, the middle, and the bottom) that thereby, and by other advantages of Art and Nature, it was thought impregnable. Affirmed to be 12 miles in compaſs, beautified with many goodly buildings both publick and private; but once more glorious then it is; here being to be ſeen the ruines of 100 Temples, and above 100000 houſes, either demoliſhed by the wars, or ſuffered to decay by the Great Moguls, who would not willingly have any thing in the Indies of more Antiquity then themſelves; and therefore are rather inclined to build new Cities, then uphold the old. The greatneſs and Antiquity of it have made ſome men think, that it was the Royal ſeat of Porus. Others affirm the ſame of Delly, but neither rightly: the Kingdom of Porus lying more towards the River Indus, and not ſo far South. Governed not long ſince by a Queen called Crementina, not more fair then valiant, who revolting from Badurius King of Cambaia, to whom ſhe formerly had paid tribute, was diſpoſſeſſed of the Town of Citor, where ſhe had fortified her ſelf with 30000 Foot, and 2000 Horſe: the people in a deſperate reſolution, laying all their treaſures on a heap, which they burnt together with themſelves; in which flame it is ſaid that there periſhed 70000 perſons. But the Cambaian did not long enjoy his victory. For not long after, both the City and a great part of the Country, was conquered by the Great Mogul; the mountainous parts hereof being held againſt him by Ramee, the Son or Succeſſor of Q. Crementina: till ſeeing himſelf deſtitute of all better helps, he put himſelf into the hands of one of the Sons of the late Sultan, by whom reconciled unto his Father. Some other Towns there are in this Province, and in the reſt before mentioned, and thoſe of good eſteem perhaps among the natives; but of no obſervation or importance in the courſe of buſineſs. Under this name we may alſo comprehend the Kingdom of Nagracol, ſo called of the chief City of it; and that moſt memorable for a rich and ſumptuous Chappel, ſeeled and paved with Plate of pure Silver, moſt curiouſly imbaſſed over head in ſeveral figures, which they keep exceeding bright, often rubbing, and continual burniſhing. Malway, another of theſe Kingdoms, ſar as near neighbourhood to Citer, may be placed here alſo, affirmed to be a fruitful Province, and the chief City of it to be called Rantipere.

7. CAMBAIA.

CAMBAIA hath on the Eaſt, Delly, and part of Mandao; on the Weſt, Gedroſia a Province of the Perſian Empire, on the North, Dulſinda, and the reſt of Mandao; on the South, the main Ocean; and ſome part of Decan. It lieth on both ſides of the Indus; and is ſo called from Cambaia, the chief Province of it. The whole divided into. 1. Sinda. 2. Guzarate, and 3. Cambaia eſpecially ſo called.

1. SINDA (by ſome called the Kingdom of Tatta, from Tatta the chief City of it) hath on the Eaſt the River Indus, by which ſeparated from Mandao; on the North, that part of India which is called Dulſinda; on the Weſt, parts of Gedroſia, and Guzarate; and on the South, the reſt of Guzarate only: coaſting along the Weſtern Banks of the River Indus, whence it had the name; that River being now called Sind, as was ſaid before. And for this reaſon, as I take it, the Weſtern part of India lying North of this, took the name of Dulſinda, and not Dulcinda (with a C) as moſt commonly written.

The Country for the generality very rich and fertile; but in ſome places nothing but a ſandy Deſart, inhabited for the moſt part by wild Aſſes, Foxes, Deer, and ſome wilder beaſts: but none ſo wild as the Calies, a robbing Nation, ſo numerous withal, that they ſomtimes rob whole Caravans as they paſs that way; notwithſtanding the many Forts and Caſtles built on purpoſe to ſecure thoſe paſſages.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Tutta (or Gutn Negar Tutta) on the banks of Indus, a Town of great Trade, but moſt frequented by the Portugals; who here receive ſuch Indian Commodities as come down the water from Labor; returning Pepper in exchange, which they bring up the River from their other Factories. 2. Lawribander, at the mouth or out let of the Indus, three daies journey from Tutta, the Port-town unto which it is, notwithſtanding that diſtance. Suppoſed to be ſcituate in or near the place of that Alexandria which Alexander built in memory of his Navigation down this River to the Indian Ocean. An Haven much frequented, becauſe free from worms; which about Surat, and other Havens on theſe Seas, ſo infeſt the Ships, that without much coſt and care beſtowed upon them, they make them unable to return. 3. Calwalla, memorable for the Tenure; as given by Echebar the Mongul, to a Company of Women and their Poſterity for ever, to bring up their Daughters to Dancing, and more wanton exerciſes. 4. Radempoore, a great Town with a ſtrong Caſtle, ſeated at the edge of the Deſarts: through which thoſe that are to paſs, uſe here to provide themſelves of water and other neceſſaries for their journey. 5. Nuraquemire, a pretty Town on the further ſide of the Deſarts, eſteemed a Paradiſe by ſuch as have paſſed through thoſe dangerous and uncomfortable ſands, for the ſpace of ten or twelve daies journey. 6. Sarrama, a large Town, twenty miles from Tutta; the Center in which all lines meet, and from whence the diſtances of all Towns in Sinda, are accuſtomably meaſured.

The Countrey anciently ſubject to the King of Cambaia, and in the right of that Crown to the Great Mongul: but the people for the moſt part ſo untamed and maſterful, that except in ſome of the greater Towns, they pay no Tributes; and in ſome places even within half a daies journey of Tutta, will acknowledge no King, but rob and ſpare whom they pleaſe. If at any time the Mongul ſends a force againſt them (as he doth ſomtimes) they fire their houſes, made like a Bee-hive of ſtraw and mortar, which are ſoon rebuilded; and retire themſelves unto the Mountains. Yet one good quality they have amongſt many ill ones. When they have robbed a Traveller, took money of him in the way of toll or cuſtom for his paſſage by them, they will conduct him honeſtly to the end of the Deſarts, leſt any ſhould rob him but themſelves.

2. GUZARATE hath on the North, Sinda; on the South, the main Ocean; the River Indus on the Eaſt; on the Weſt, Gedroſia, which the Indians call Nawatacos, but the Perſians, Circam.

The Soyl of the ſame temper and fertility with that of Cambaia, ſpecially ſo called; and there we ſhall ſpeak further of it. The common people whom they call Guzorates, of the ſame diſpoſition generally with the reſt of the Indians: but the greateſt part of the Countrey is poſſeſſed by the Resbutes or Rasboocbes, the ancient Inhabitants of this tract. Who when their Countrey was ſubdued by the Moores or Saracens, retired into the Mountains and faſtneſſes of it; ſtanding upon their guard, and were never yet ſubdued by the great Monguls. Who though poſſeſſed of the Sea-ſhores, and moſt Towns of conſequence, are fain to leave the In-land parts and open Countries to the power of theſe Out-lawes: who either prey upon the people, or force them to compound for their peace and quiet at uncertain prices. Their Arms moſt commonly a Sword, Buckler, and Launce; well-horſed, and reſolute in any thing which they undertake: which made one of the Moguls ſay of them, that no men in the world knew to die, but they.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Diu, in a Peninſula looking towards Perſia, but on the Eaſt-ſide thereof, near the mouth of Indus. Poſſeſſed by the Portugal, and by them fortified with a ſtrong and impregnable Citadel; built with the leave and liking of King Badurius, thereby to buy their aid againſt Merhamed the Mongul, who had newly vanquiſhed him. A matter of ſuch conſequence to the Crown of Portugal, that John Botelius confined to India for ſome Crimes by him committed, undertook (in hope by the merit of that ſervice to obtain his pardon) to carry the firſt news of it in a ſmall veſſel, not above 18 foot long, and but 6 foot broad (the beſt which for the preſent could be provided) which with great courage he performed, and thorow that large, wide and tempeſtuous Ocean came in ſafety with his news to Lisbon; to the great joy of the King, but greater admiration of all ſorts of people. Scarce ſettled in their new poſſeſſion, when beſieged by Solyman Baſſa, Admiral to Solyman the Magnificent, with a Fleet of 80 Ships and Gallies, Anno 1537. offended with the Portugalls for aiding the King of Perſia, more for diverting the Spice-trade from Alexandria. In which he had ſo ill ſucceſs, that having aſſaulted it in vain with his Land-forces, he was fain to raiſe his ſiege in ſuch haſt and tumult, that he left his great Ordnance behind him. 2. Sauran, a Town and Caſtle of the Resbutes, ſpoken of before; and by them held againſt the power of the Great Mongul. 3. Boldra, a very fair and beautiful City, but of no great compaſs. 4. Ardovat, not far from the banks of the Indus, on the North of this Region towards Sinda. 5. Madabat: by ſome called Amadabat, aſſirmed to be both for wealth and greatneſs the chief of Guzarate, near as big as London; well walled, and ſcituate on a plain near the Rivers ſide: ſeldom without Merchants of all Religions: Jews, Gentiles; Chriſtians, Moors, ſome of all, and neither. 6. Saringa, 7. Periano, 8. Serkeſſe; this laſt remarkable for the Sepulchres of the old Kings of Cambaia; fair, and well kept, and viſited from all parts of the Kingdom.

Nothing conſiderable in this part of the Countrey: as to point of ſtory, but what is common to them with the reſt of Cambaia; but that the Resbutes, or Rasboothes ſtill remain unconquered. Poſſeſſed not only of the hills and Mountains, but of ſome ſtrong holds; and governed by the Heads of their Caſts or Tribes, all which acknowledge the Mongul for their Superiour in regard of his power, but none of them obey him as their Lord or Soveraign: conceiving it to be ſome abaſement of their own authority, if they admit of him as an Umpire to compoſe their differences, which they ſometimes do.

3. CAMBAIA ſpecially ſo called, hath on the North, Mandao, on the South, the main Ocean, and ſome part of Decan; on the Eaſt, Surat, from which parted by a ridge of Mountains; on the Weſt, the Main Ocean, with ſome part of Guzarate. It ſtandeth on the Eaſt-ſides of the out-lets of Indus, running along the Sea-ſhore for 500 miles, and took this name from Cambaia the chief City of it.

The Countrey ſaid to be the moſt fruitful of all India, abounding in Rice, Wheat, Sugar, Spices of all ſorts, and choiceſt fruits: of Silk and Cotton ſo great plenty, that they fraught yearly forty or fifty ſhips with thoſe commodities. In the mountains they find Diamonds, Chalcedonies, and a kind of Onyx-ſtone, which are called Cornelines, and corruptly Cornelians. Amongſt the rarities hereof, they reckon the Abades, a great Beaſt, twice as big as a Bull, having on their ſnowts a little horn, and the hide ſo hard, as no man can pierce it with a thruſt; which is the Rhinoceros of the Antients.

The people effeminate and unwarlike, and therefore not much uſed by the Moguls in a war of conſequence; to ſupply which defect he furniſheth himſelf with Souldiers out of Perſia, of which his ſtanding bands conſiſt; moſt of their Sultans and Commanders of that Nation alſo. More given to Merchandiſe than war, and therein thought to be as cunning (if not deceitful withal) as any people in the world: treacherous in their truſt, proud in their carriage, bloody upon advantage, and much given to Venerie; ignorant of letters, but well practiſed in Mechanical Arts. In matters of Religion for the moſt part Gentiles, not knowing or contemning the Law of Mahomet; but very punctual in their own heatheniſh ſuperſtitions. The Bannians in this Countrey: being natural Indians, nuſled in Paganiſm, and ſo wedded to their old Idolatries, that no perſwaſions can prevail with them, make the greateſt number, and ſeem to be all Pythagoreans in ſome opinions, for they eat not any thing that hath blood or life, but feed on Rice, Roots, Plantons and ſuch natural fruits; paying a large Revenue yearly to the Great Mogul, that no Oxen may be killed amongſt them. And becauſe new opinions ſhould not grow amongſt them, they marry in their own Tribes onely, and never out of their own Trades; ſecure thereby as they conceive from all innovations.

Cities of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Cambaia, three miles from the Indus, and as many in compaſs, one of the neateſt and beſt built in all the Eaſt. So populous withal, that it is thought to contain 130000 Families, and is therefore called the Caire of the Indies. Of moſt eſteem in all this Kingdom (though far leſs than Modabat) to which it doth impart its name. 2. Barocho, Southwards of Cambaia on the top of an hill, with a fair River underneath it: well-walled, and noted for the beſt Calicuts (a kind of linnen Cloth ſo called from the City of Calicut, where it was firſt made) not to be matched in all the Indies. 3. Swalley, ſtill more unto the South, and about a mile from the Sea ſhore; but giving name unto a large and capacious Bay, where the ſhips ride which trade at Surat. 4. Surat, about ten miles from the Bay of Swalley, from whence the River navigable but by Boats and ſhallops fortified with a Caſtle of ſtone well ſtored with Ordnance. The houſes for the moſt part of Sun-dried bricks, very large and laſting: built with flat roofs, but battlemented on all ſides for fear of falling; and beautified with goodly Gardens of Pomegranates, Melons, Figs, and Limons, interlaced with Riverets and Springs. Made of late years a Factory for the Engliſh Merchants, who have here their Preſident, and a magnificent houſe for the reception, and ſtaple of their Commodities. 5. Neriand, a great Town, and as remarkable for the making of Indico, of the matter and making whereof we have ſpoken already, when we were at Biani, Town or City of the Kingdom, or Diviſion of Agra, as memorable for that commodity as this Neriand, or any other of all India. 6. Daman, upon the Sea-ſide over againſt Diu, and poſſeſſed as that is by the Portugals. A beautiful and pleaſant Town fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle at the North-end of it, of white chalky ſtone, well planted with Ordnance: oppoſite whereunto on the South-ſide of the Town, a goodly Church, edged a top with white. Which with the houſes for the moſt part of the ſame colour alſo: afford a pleaſant proſpect to the Sailors by. 7. Campanel, ſcituate on the top of an high mountain, and environed with a ſeven-fold wall, once the ſeat Royal of the Kings of Cambaia. 8. Dacaiotote, a place of ſuch ſtrength, that the great Moguls could never get it by force. Rendred at the laſt upon compoſition, conditioned they ſhould ſtill be governed by a King of their own. 9. Netherby, a great market of brazen ware, beaſts, and Armour. 10. Bandore. 11. Tanai, &c.

This Kingdom taken in Guzarate and Sinda, as parts hereof, is extremely populous; ſaid to contain 60000 Towns and Villages, very well inhabited: but the people not accuſtomed to, or unfit for wars. Antiently governed by Kings of their own, it was firſt ſubdued by the Arabians or Moors, Anno 1423 under the conduct of one Mahomet or Machamut; who having forced the Resbutes or naturals of the Country to betake themſelves unto the Mountain, was made King hereof. To him ſucceeded his ſon Mamudius, one of no great action. But what he wanted was ſupplied by his ſon Badurius; who having conquered the Kingdom of Citor, invaded that of Mandao alſo. His Army for that war conſiſted of 500000 foot, 150000 horſe, 1000 great pieces of Ordnance, 500 wagons loaded with powder and ſhot, and as many wain-loads of gold and ſilver to pay his Army. But being diſcomfited in two great battels by Merhamed the Mongul Tartar, whom Galgee the Mandoan King had called in to his aid; he ſhaved his beard, and fled in a diſguiſe to Diu then poſſeſſed by the Portugals, whom he licenced in that diſtreſs to build the Citadel: ſlain afterwards by a mean Mariner, at his return from the Portugal Vice-Roy, whom he had viſited on ſhip-board. And though Mamudius his Succeſſor endeavoured to free his Kingdom from both pretenders; yet weakned with the loſs of ſo great an Army, he was not able to effect it. Firſt driven from Diu, which he had beſieged both by Sea and Land, to his great diſhonour; and after vanquiſhed in battel by Adabar the ſon of Merhamed, not far from Serkeſſe, the antient burial-place of the Kings of Cambaia, but then the Sepulchre of the Kingdom; which by that victory fell to the Great Monguls, who have ſince enjoyed it.

8. DECAN.

D*ECAN* is bounded on the Eaſt, with Narſinga; on the Weſt, with the Indian Ocean; on the North, with Cambaia; on the South with Malavar, and Canara. The reaſon of the Name we ſhall have anon.

It lieth along the Sea-coaſt, for the ſpace of 250 miles, betwixt Aliga, and Bate, two noted Rivers; extending Eaſt, as far as the Mountain Gates, and afterwards thruſting into the North betwixt Cambaia and thoſe mountains, till it meet with Cambaia. The ſoil much of the ſame nature with the reſt of India, but not ſo flouriſhing as Cambaia. The people for the moſt part Mahometans, which Religion was firſt planted there by the Conqueſts of Sa Noſaradine, 350 years ago; yet not without ſome entermixture of their antient Gentiliſm.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Bider, the Seat Royal of Mamudza, once ſole King of this Country, Who to beautifie and adorn this City, commanded every one of his Prefects, or ſubordinate Governors, being eighteen in number, to build here a Palace, and to reſide therein certain moneths in the year; each one to leave a ſon there in perpetual hoſtage. Scituate in the moſt Northern parts of the Country more neer the borders of Delly: from the King whereof Mamudza had then newly revolted; and therefore would make ſure of this place, as moſt in danger. 2. Viſapore, bordering on Cambaia, the Princely Seat of Idalcan, one of the Kings of Decan, after it was diſmembred into ſeveral Kingdoms. 3. Danager, confining on Canara, a beautiful and flouriſhing City, once the chief Seat of Niſalamoccus, or Nizolmoxa, another of the Kings hereof, after that diviſion. 4. Decan, ſo called by the name of the Province, of which the chief City next to Bider, the Imperial Seat. Six miles from which there is an hill encompaſſed with an high wall, and kept by a ſtrong Garriſon, becauſe of the great ſtore of Diamonds which are digged out of it. The town ſo wealthy, that the people generally are attired in ſilks, or the pureſt tiffany. 5. Sinracora, on the mouth of the River Aliga, where it falleth into the Sea. 6. Goa, a Sea-town alſo, ſcituate in a little but moſt pleaſant Iſland called Ticuarinum, fifteen miles in compaſs; oppoſite to the mouth or out-let of the River Mandavo. A noted Empory, and one of the chief keys which unlock the Indies; for number of Inhabitants, magnificent buildings, and pleaſantneſs of ſcituation, one of moſt note in all this Country. Poſſeſſed by the Portugals, who have here their Arſenal, and harbour for their Indian Fleet; by which they do command theſe Seas. So ſtrongly fortified withal, that though beleagured by Idalcan (of whom before) with 35000 horſe, 6000 Elephants, and 250 piece of Ordnance, Anno 1573 yet he could not force it. Made in regard of the convenient ſcituation and ſtrength thereof, the ordinary Reſidence of the Portugal Vice-roy, who hath here his Counſel, Chancellor, and other Officers, for the government of ſuch parts of India as belong to that Crown: as alſo of the Arch-Biſhop or Primate of the Indian Churches planted by that Nation, who is hence called the Arch-Biſhop of Goa. 7. Chaul, a Sea-town, in the hands of the Portugals alſo, and by them well fortified: Inſomuch as Niſamalocco, aſſaulting it at the ſame time with a very great Army, was fain to leave it as he found it. 8. Balaguate, in the uplands or Hill-Country, whence it had the name: Bala in the Perſian language ſignifying a top, or ſummit of a mountain; and Guate an Hill. 9. Brampore, once the chief ſeat of another Kingdom, called the Kingdom of Chandis, now the chief City of thoſe parts of Decan which are ſubject to the Great Mongul. Scituate on a great River in the midſt of a ſpacious Plain, beautiful, and of very great trading; in bigneſs equal unto Paris, yet yielded to Echebar the Mogul, without any reſiſtance, Anno 1600. Miram then King thereof forſaking it, and betaking himſelf to 10. Syra, a ſtrong hold both by Art and Nature. Scituate on the top of an hill, which is in compaſs five leagues, and environed with a triple wall: furniſhed with victuals, and all other neceſſary proviſions, ſufficient to maintain 60000 men many years; 3000 great pieces of Ordnance planted on the walls. Beſieged herein by Echebar with an Army of 200000 fighting men, he held out againſt him, till overcome by promiſes of fair correſpondence, drawn out of his hold (ſome of his Counſellers being bribed to perſwade him to it) he was detained by the Mogul: and the Commanders won by rewards and hopes yielded up the Fort, and therein all the Princes of the Royal family, accuſtomably kept therein when the Throne was full; which vacant, the next Heir was taken hence, to ſucceed unto it. Of the ſame nature, as it ſeemeth, with the hill Amara in Ethiopia, or the Abaſſive Empire.

The Country formerly inhabited by a people called Venazarari, by Religion Gentiles, and held by them till the year 1300, when overcome by Sanoſaradine, a Mahometan, and King of Delly: who driving the Inhabitants into the Hill-Countries, poſſeſſed himſelf of a great part of it, compelling them to ſubmit unto his Religion, The reſidue hereof ſubdued by Abdeſſa, whom Sa Noſaradine left here to purſue the war, was by him governed with great juſtice for 20 years; when dying, he left his government to his ſon Mamudza, confirmed by the Succeſſor of Sa Noſaradine in his Fathers Regency, on the payment of an annual Tribute. Mamudza ſoon finding that the young King was of no great Spirit, not only refuſed to pay the tribute impoſed upon him, but took unto himſelf the title of K. of Decan: giving this name unto the country (before called Canara) in regard that he had filled it with a Mungril body of Chriſtians, Mahometans, and Gentiles, acknowledging no common Parent, nor agreeing in Language, Cuſtoms, or Religion; the word Decan ſignifying in that Tongue, as much as an illegitimate brood, or a body of Baſtards. Out of theſe he made choice of twelve (others ſay eighteen) whom he appointed Governors of ſo many Provinces: not daring to truſt any of the old Nobility, or of the Natives of the country; and hoping that theſe Slaves thus prompted by him, would be more ſubject to command. But here his ſilly hopes deceived him. For theſe Slaves either governed by their maſters example, who had done the like unto the Son and Heir of Sa Noſaradine; or preſuming on their own ſtrength, and ſome forein aids, left to their maſter nothing but an empty title; each one becoming abſolute in his ſeveral Province. Nor did his Succeſſors for any long time enjoy that title; Daquem the laſt of them being taken at Bidor his chief City: and thereupon the name of King uſurped by every one of thoſe petit Tyrants. Reduced at laſt into fewer hands, ſuch of them as were left became conſiderable Princes; as appeareth by the great Army raiſed by Idalcan for the ſiege of Goa. But in the end, diſtreſſed on the one ſide by the Portugals, who embarred their trade, and invaded on the other ſide by the Great Mogul with moſt puiſſant Armies; Melic entituled K. of Decan, and Miram K. of Brampore, were in fine ſubdued by Echebar, about the year 1600. Againſt whom and his Succeſſors, though the Venazararii ſtill hold out, as the Resbutes or Rasbooches do in the Realm of Cambaia; and that the King of Amdanager, and perhaps ſome other petit Princes, are not yet brought under: yet we may look on the Mongul as the Lord of this Country; the reſidue of theſe Roytelets, and petit Princes, (if any of them be remaining) being Homagers or Vaſſals to him. Againſt whoſe further Progreſs to the Cape of Comari, which Echebar ſo greedily aimed at, the puiſſant Kings of Narſinga, and thoſe of Malabar, have oppoſed their power: whoſe Kingdoms and Eſtates we muſt next ſurvey, before we take a view of thoſe other Provinces, which are now under the command of that mighty Monarch.

9. CANARA.

CANARA is bounded on the North, with Decan (whereof anciently it was a part) on the South, with Malabar; on the Eaſt, with Narſinga, from which ſeparated by the Mountain Gates; on the Weſt, with the Ocean. The reaſon of the name I finde not, nor much worth the ſearching.

The Countrey hath a fair Sea-coaſt, with many capacious Harbors to it, which cannot but add much to the wealth thereof; as liberally furniſhed in the in-land parts, with Rice, Figs, and Sugars; but deſtitute of Wheat, Pulſe, and Barley. Not much the poorer for that want, the people either not knowing or not regarding the uſe of bread; but living on ſuch fruits as the earth produceth of it ſelf, without the charge or care of the husband-man. In other things, but little differing, if at all, from the reſt of the Indians: their Religion for the moſt part Paganiſh, but intermixt with Mahometans.

Principal Towns and Cities of it, 1. Melinde, a commodious Haven. 2. Onor. a Port-Town of good note, ſometimes held by the Portugals. 3. Baticalia, ſcituate in the richeſt part of all this Country; never poſſeſſed by the Portugals, but under contribution to them. 4. Mangalor, a Town of great wealth and Trade; fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle, once deſtroyed by the Portugueze, but recovered and repaired by the King of Narſinga, who is Lord of this Country. 5. Mayendre, more within the land. And ſo is alſo, 6. Liſpor, famous for her Quarries of Adamant. 7. Selſette, in a Peninſula of 20 miles compaſs, containing 36 Villages, and 80000 Inhabitants; the Town about 9 miles from Goa, and ſubject with the whole Peninſula, to the Portugals.

This Country is now ſubject to the Kings of Narſinga; but formerly under the command of its own Princes: the name of Canara, comprehending in thoſe times all that Countrey alſo, which is now called Decan. Conquered by Sa Noſaradine and Abdeſſa, and by Mamudza cantoned into many Præfectures, this part reverting to its old name, fell to the Narſingan, who taking his advantages, in the minority of one of their Princes, became Maſter of it. And when the Idalcan, (for I take that not ſo much for the name of a man, as a Title of dignity) quarrelled his poſſeſſion of it, as appertaining properly to the Kingdoms of Decan; Chriſmarao then King of Narſinga, brought a powerful Advocate to defend his right; that is to ſay, an Army of 606000 Foot, 29650 Horſe, and 537 Elephants; every Elephant having a Tower on his back with four men in it; With which ſtrong Argument the Idalcan being confuted in the Schools of War, with much difficulty ſaved himſelf, though he loſt his cauſe: the Narſingan ever ſince continuing quiet in the poſſeſſion of this Country; except only ſome of the Sea Towns in the power of the Portugals. Who in the year 1567 deſtroyed in thoſe few places by them poſſeſſed, no fewer than 200 of their Idol-Temples, with many of their Pagodes, or Idols in them; converting the Rents and Lands which belonged unto them, with the Revenues raiſed from the ſeveral Ports which they hold herein, to the maintenance of a College of Jeſuites in Salſette, and other Religious houſes founded by them, in their other Cities.

10. MALABAR.

Malabar.

10. MALABAR.

MALABAR is bounded on the North, with Canara, from which parted by the River Gangeraco; on the Eaſt, with the great Mountain Gates, by which divided from the Realm of Narſinga; on the Weſt and South, with the main Ocean. On the Coaſt whereof it doth extend for the ſpace of 300 miles, that is to ſay, from the River Gangeraco, to the Cape Comori: which I conceive to be the Commaria Extrema of Ptolomy, though others take it for the Promontory by him called Cory. But the breadth hereof is nothing anſwerable to the length, not above 50 miles where broadeſt, and ending towards the Cape in a point or Conns.

The Country more populous, for the bigneſs, than any in India, enjoying a very temperate Air, and a fruitful Soyl; well watered, and indented with many Creeks: unfit for Corn, but plentiful in Rice, and all manner of Spices, as Ginger, Cinnamon, Caſſia, Pepper, and moſt excellent fruits. Amongſt their Trees, there is one whoſe name my Author ſpeaks not, which bears Dates like unto the Palm; out of which they have not onely wood for Fewel, but they draw from it Wine, Sugar, Oyl, fine Cloth and cordage; another tree, which beareth Cotton, and Cypreſs, or Cobweb-lawn, of the leaves whereof they make a fine ſtuff like to Sattin or Taffata. They have alſo great ſtore of Apes, and Monkeys, Parats, Paraquitoes, and other Creatures not known in theſe parts but from thence: not to ſay any thing of their Lions, Elephants, Bears, Bugles, common to them with others of their Indian neighbours. The flowers there always in their Verdure, and the Trees perpetually green, by reaſon that the Air is ſo ſweet and temperate.

The people are of coal-black colour (differing therein from the reſt of the Indians, ſwarth and complexioned like the Olive) well limbed, and wearing their hair long and curled: about their heads an hankerchief wrought with gold and ſilver; and about their middle a cloth, which hangeth down to conceal their nakedneſs. Of manners treacherous and bloody, more properly to be termed deſperate than ſtout and valiant; and for more ſurety in their wars, they uſe poiſoned Arrows, as they do alſo in their thieving both by Sea and Land, to which more addicted. In Religion for the moſt part Gentiles, and more beſotted generally on their Idolatries, than the reſt of theſe Nations. The Pagode, or Idol which they worſhip, ſeated upon a brazen throne, and crowned with a rich Diadem. From his head iſſue out four horns, from his mouth four Tusks; his eyes fiery like a Glow-worm, his noſe flat and ugly, his viſage terrible, his hands like claws, his legs and thighs like thoſe of a Lion. In a word, we cannot paint the Devil in a more ugly figure, than they do their God. Unto this Pagode, or his Prieſt, they offer the virginity of all their daughters: the Pagode having in the place of his privy parts a Bodkin of gold or ſilver, upon which the Bride (married moſt commonly at ten or twelve years of age) is forcibly ſet; the ſharpneſs of it being ſuch, that it forceth out the blood in great abundance: and if ſhe prove with child that year, it is ſaid to be of his begetting, and more eſteemed. Others with more humanity, inſtead of torturing their daughters on this wretched Idol (parallel almoſt to the offering of their ſons to Moloch amongſt the Syrians) preſent them to the Bramini, or Idol-Prieſt, to be deflowred the firſt night of the wedding: and without one of theſe two hand leſs, no man is ſuffered to enjoy the uſe of his wife, not their Kings themſelves, More priviledged yet than many women neighboring on them, in that they are not compelled to burn themſelves with their husbands bodies: but may have many husbands either ſucceſſively or at once, as they liſt themſelves: and if at once, ſhe ſends her children to that husband (as we know who did) who ſhe thinks to have the beſt right to them.

The Country very well watered, as we ſaid before, and parted by large Rivers into many Provinces; as if intended naturally to be cantonned into many Kingdoms. Divided at preſent, and long ſince, into thoſe of 1. Cononor. 2. Calecut. 3. Granganor. 4. Cochin. 5. Cai-Colam. 6. Coulan, and 7. Travancor.

1. CONONOR, joyneth to Canara, extending Southward on the ſhore about 20 miles, where it bordereth on the Kingdom of Calicut. The chief Cities of which, 1. Cononor, giving name to the whole Kingdom, well built, and beautified with a very fair Haven, no more ſafe than ſpacious, capacious of the greateſt veſſels, and for that cauſe much frequented by forein Merchants; but eſpecially by the Portugals, who for the aſſuring of their trade have here a Citadel, erected and well garriſoned with the Kings conſent. 2. Cota, not far from Cangeracco, the border betwixt this and Canara, 3. Peripatan, on the confines of Calicute. 4. Marabia. 5. Tramopatan. 6. Main, intermediate Towns, but not much obſervable.

2. CALICUTE, South from Cononor, extending on the Sea-ſhore 25 Leagues, and ſcituate in the moſt pleaſant and fruitful part of all Malabar. Chief Towns whereof, 1. Pandarane, on the skirts of Cononor. 2. Tanor, a retiring place of the Kings. 3. Partangale. 4. Chatua, on the borders of Cranganor. 5. Chale, a ſtrong piece, once in the hands of the Portugueze, but in the year 1601 recovered by the King of Calicute, who had beſieged it with an Army of 90000 men. 6. Capacote, the Haven of Calicute. 7. Calicute, the chief City of the Kingdom, to which it gives name, in length upon the Sea three miles, and a mile in breadth; containing about 6000 houſes, but ſtanding ſome of them far aſunder; mean and low built, few of them exceeding the height of a man on horſe-back; the ſoil being ſo hollow and full of water, that it is not capable of the foundation of an heavier building; for that cauſe unwalled. Inſomuch that Merchanrs houſes are here valued but at 20 Crowns, thoſe of the common ſort at no more than ten. Which notwithſtanding, of great trading, and much frequented by Arabians, Perſians, Syrians, Indians, yea the very Tartars; theſe laſt from the furtheſt parts of Cathay (taking Cathay in that general ſenſe, as it comprehendeth all the Countries of the Tartars, between the Malabar. the mount of Imaus, and the Eaſtern Ocean) being 6000 miles diſtant from it, inſomuch, that it is ſaid by ſome of the Spaniſh-writers, that when Vaſquies di Gama, the firſt diſcoverer of the way to the Eaſt Countries by the Cape of good hope firſt arrived in this Haven, he found in it no fewer than 1500 Merchants Ships of all ſorts, but without anchors and the compaſs, few of them fit for a Sea-fight, nor able to ſail (in regard they had not the uſe of the compaſs) but by fore winds onely. The common Staple in thoſe times of all Indian Merchandiſe, till diſtracted into ſeveral Ports by the power of the Portugals: who being more induſtrious, and better Architects, have forced a foundation on the Shore for a very ſtrong Caſtle; by which they do command the Haven, and receive cuſtom of all Merchandiſe going in and out. The inconvenience whereof being found by the King of Calicute, he beſieged it with 100000 men: and though the Portugals held it out a whole winter together, yet in the end they were fain to quit it; but firſt demoliſhed it to the ground, that it might not be made uſeful to thoſe of Calicute. A City of exceeding wealth, and of no leſs wantonneſs; the men here uſing to change wives with one another, to confirm their Amities: and the women ſpending their whole time in adorning themſelves with Rings and Jewels, about their ears, necks, legs, arms, and upon their breſts; though going naked for the moſt part, one would think that a little dreſſing might ſuffice them. If covered, it is onely with a ſmock of Calicute, a kind of linnen cloth here made, and from hence ſo called: and that not uſed but by thoſe of the better ſort.

3. CRANGANOR, lieth on the South of Calicute, a ſmall Kingdom, and affording little worth the ſpeaking of: but that a great part of the Inhabitants of it are of thoſe old Chriſtians, whom they call Chriſtians of Saint Thomas. Cranganor, the chief City, which gives name to the whole, affirmed to be ſo full of them, that they amount unto the number of 70000; vexed and expoſed to publick ſcorn both by the Idolaters and Mahometanes, amongſt whom they live. The City rich, commodiouſly built for trade, at the mouth of a River, which watering with his crooked ſtreams the moſt part of the Country, makes it fat and flouriſhing.

4. COCHIN, more South than Cranganor, extended on the ſhore for the ſpace of 40 leagues: and therein many Chriſtians of the firſt plantation, beſides ſome converts made of later times by the Jeſuites. Towns of moſt note herein. 1. Augamale, the Arch-Biſhops See of thoſe ancient Chriſtians, fifteen miles from Cochin. 2. Cochin, a Biſhops See, but of later erection; and the chief City of this Kingdom, which takes name from hence. Scituate on the mouth or out-let of the River Maugat, by which almoſt encompaſſed like a Demy-Iſland. Of great trade in regard of its Haven, very ſafe and ſpacious; as alſo by the friendſhip of the Portugal Nation. By whoſe power and favor they have not onely freed themſelves from the King of Calicute, to whom before they did acknowledge ſome ſubjection; but drawn from thence a great part of the traffick alſo: this King permitting them to erect a Caſtle on the Haven, to ſecure their trade, which the other on good reaſons of State forced them to deſtroy. The King hereof in ſome reſpect ſuperior unto him of Calicute, when a Vaſſal to him: this King being the Pope or chief Biſhop, as it were of all the Bramines: for which cauſe reverenced by all the Kings of Malabar, (as the Pope by many Princes of theſe Weſtern parts) who look upon him as the head of their ſuperſtition, and pay him many annual duties.

5. CAI-COLAM, is on the South of Cochin, with which agreeing both in the temper of the Air, and fertility of the Earth: which notwithſtanding, the King hereof is not ſo rich as his other neighbours. Here live alſo many of the old Chriſtians, taking name from Saint Thomas: but thoſe ſo deſtitute of Prieſts and Miniſters to inſtruct them in the Principles of Chriſtianity: that once in three years there came ſome formerly from the Patriarch of Muzal in Aſſyria, to baptize their children. Better I hope provided for in thoſe later days, ſince their emboſoming and reconcilement to the Church of Rome. Their Chief Town of the ſame name with the Country, hath a very fair Haven, in the faſhion of a Semi-Circle; well traded till deſtroyed by the Portugals, but ſince that re-edified. Of leſs note there are many both Towns and Villages, but ſuch as do deſerve here no particular mention.

6. COULAN, upon the South of Cai-Colam, extended 20 Leagues more Southwards upon the Shores; is ſaid to be deſtitute of corn, but plentiful of pepper, and moſt ſorts of Spices. So ſtored with Horſes, and fit Riders to ſerve upon them, that the King hereof keeps 20000 Horſe in continual readineſs either for invaſion or Defence. This Kingdom, as the reſt before, takes name from the chief City of it, which is called Coulan, 24 miles from Cochin, and once a Member of that Kingdom; of great reſort by foreign Merchants, by reaſon of the fair and commodious Haven. In former times the ordinary ſeat of the Cobritin, or chief Prieſt of the Bramines, till removed to Cochin: and held to be the Metropolis or Mother City of all Malabar; the reſt being thought to be but Colonies of this. Both in the City and the Country there are many Chriſtians, as well of the original foundation of Chriſtianity, as of the late improvements which are made by the Jeſuites.

7. TRAVANCOR, called alſo TRANCANOR, reacheth from the Kingdom of Coulan, to the Cape of Comarim, and turning towards the Eaſt, bendeth again unto the North, as far as Cael in the Kingdom of Biſnagar or Narſinga. By which accompt it hath the benefit of the Sea on all ſides except towards the North; reaching in breadth from the Weſt Seas unto the Eaſt about 90 miles. The Country as the reſt before, inhabited by many with the name of Chriſtians, if they may be called ſo which want Sacraments: the condition of theſe Thomaan Chriſtians in former times being ſo unhappy, that in 50 years before the coming of the Jeſuites, (if the Jeſuites may be believed from whom we have it) they had ſeen no Prieſt, nor other Miniſter of the Goſpel. Chief Towns hereof, (for of thoſe many others of leſs note I ſhall make no mention) are 1. Travancor the chief City, which gives name to the Province, but neither well-built, nor of very much trading. 2. Quilacare, the head City of a peculiar Signeury, but held of the Kings of Trancanor, as their next and immediate Lords, though all thoſe Kings alſo Feuditaries of the Crown of Narſinga. And were that the worſt Tenure by which they hold, it might be tolerable: but there is a matter of worſe conſequence which attendeth theſe beſotted Princes. The Kingdom here is but a pomp of 12 years continuance, and then endeth in a ſad Cataſtrophe. For at the end of thoſe twelve years, the King repairs to Quilacare, prayeth before the Idol above mentioned, then mounteth on a Scaffold covered with Silk or Tapeſtry, and in the ſight of all his people, gathered together to behold this ſtrange Solemnity, cutteth off his noſe, ears, lips and other parts, which he caſts towards the Idol, and in concluſion cuts his own Throat for his final Sacrifice: his deſigned Succeſſor being preſent at this bloudy Sacrifice, who at the twelve years end is to do the like. Never was Scepter bought at ſo dear a rate: For though all Crowns be lined with Thorns, yet here the pomps of Soveraignty be leſs laſting, then in other places; the entrance full of fears, and the end, of horrors.

Theſe Kingdoms heretofore but one, till the year 900. or thereabouts, were branched and cantoned into theſe ſeven, by Sarama Pereimal, the ſole Monarch. He by the ſollicitation of ſome Arabians, trading to his Ports, became Mahometan; and therein ſo devout, that he reſolved upon a Pilgrimage to Meccha, there to end his daies. At his departure he divided his eſtates into theſe ſeven parts, diſtributing them amongſt the neareſt of his kindred: aſſigning unto him of Coulan, the preheminence in Sacred matters, and the Imperial dignity unto him of Calecute, with the title of Samorin, that is to ſay, Chief Emperor, or as ſome write, a God on earth. He only priviledged with the right and power of Coynage; the reſt to be ſubordinate, if not ſubject to him. From Pereimals ſetting forwards to the City of Meccha, the Malabars accompt their reckonings and begin their years; as the Chriſtians from the Birth of their Lord and Saviour. And for a time his Heſts were punctually obſerved. But the Kingdom of Calicute being weakned by the power of the Portugals, the other Kings began to free themſelves from that ſubjection, and in the end to caſt off all relation to him, and to his Prerogatives. Yet ſtill he is eſteemed of more power and Majeſty, then any of the reſt of the Kings of Malabar: and looked on with more reverence then any of them. The certainty of his Revenues I have no where met with, but conjecture them to be very great; firſt in regard of that infinite trading which is managed from moſt parts of the world in his Port of Calicute; the cuſtoms and Impoſts upon which muſt needs be of exceeding value; and ſecondly in reference to the wealth of private Merchants, many of which are ſaid to equal ſome Kings in Africk, and Dukes in Europe not a few.

> Quid Domini facient? audent cum talia Fures
> And if the man ſuch riches have,
> Then what muſt he that keeps the Knave?

What Forces he is able to raiſe may be fully ſeen by that which hath been ſaid before; wherein we find him with an Army of 90000 men beſieging and taking in the fort of Chalen, with another of 100000, beleaguring the Caſtle which the Portugals had built near his City of Calecute. And when the ſaid Portugals ſtirred up the King of Cochin to make head againſt him, he fell upon them ſuddenly both by Sea and Land, with 60000 Land-Souldiers, and 200 good Veſſels of War for the Service at Sea. Sufficient Force to reduce the reſt of thoſe petit Kings to their old acknowledgments, but that ſome of them to avoid the danger, have put themſelves under the Vaſſallage, or protection at the leaſt, of the Great Monguls: others by ſuffering the Portugals to build Forts in their Kingdom, have engaged them in defence of their eſtate againſt this pretender. His forces conſiſt moſt of Foot, Horſe being unſerviceable in theſe Countries, by reaſon of thoſe many Rivers which interlace it. and theſe Foot are compounded moſt of Gentry, which they there call Nairos, trained to their weapons when they are but ſeven years of Age; every one to that weapon which he moſt delighteth in; which makes them very expert and nimble at them: much priviledged for that cauſe by the Laws of the Country; and ſo eſteemed of by the King, that out of them his Siſters chuſe what men they pleaſe to their Husbands; ſome of them by that means being made the Fathers of the King ſucceeding.

Nothing elſe memorable touching the affairs of Calicute, but the way of Succeſſion to the Kingdom: the Crown deſcending upon none of the Kings Children, but on the Son of his Eldeſt Siſter, or neareſt Kinſwoman. For being that one of the Bramines hath alwaies the Maydenhead of his Queens, and that ſome of theſe Stallions are continually allowed to keep them company; it is preſumed, or very probably ſuppoſed, that the Queens Children are the Bramines, and not the Kings.

8. NARSINGA.

NARSINGA is bounded on the South, with Travancor; on the Weſt, with the Mountain Gates; on the North, with Oriſtan or Orixa; on the Eaſt, with the Gulf of Bengala. So called from Narſinga the chief City of it, and the Royal Reſidence of the King.

The Country is ſaid to be in length 600 miles, or as ſome ſay, of as much extent as can be travelled in ſix moneths: plentiful in the ſame commodities which the reſt of India doth afford, except Pepper and ſome other ſpices which are proper to Malabar. Not ſo well furniſhed with Rivers as ſome other places: which want is liberally ſupplied by water falling from the mountains, & received into trenches, meers, and Lakes, which do wonderfully cool, moiſten and enrich the Land, cauſing the Corn and Cattel to proſper above all imagination. Moſt deſtitute in this kind is the Province of Choromandel, in which if any year paſſeth without rain, they fall into ſuch extremities, that they are fain to ſell their Children.

The people in religion Gentiles, ſo worſhipping one God, as the Lord of all, which is taught them by the light of nature, that they joyn the Devil or their Pagodes in Commiſſion with him, whereto induced by the perſwaſion of their beaſtly Bramines, who thereout ſuck no ſmall advantage. Some Chriſtians there are intermixt, of the old Plantation, eſpecially in Maliapur, and the Region of Choromandel: but not ſo well inſtructed in the Principles of their own belief, as to be able to convince or convert the Gentiles, nor to diſſwade them from the uſe of ſome heatheniſh cuſtoms, though barbarous, inhumane, and againſt all reaſon; not uſed in any place, but amongſt the Indians. Amongſt which I reckon for moſt ſavage, the forcing of poor women to burn themſelves with their husbands bodies, the womens kindred, not the husbands thruſting them on theſe hard conditions, who reckon it a diſgrace to their family, if ſhe ſhould refuſe. And becauſe they will be ſure not to have that infamy ſtick upon them, they have ordered that the woman who ſhall ſo refuſe, muſt ſhave her head, and break her Jewels, and not be ſuffered to eat, drink, or ſleep, or company with any body till her death. A life more miſerable then the Flames which they ſeek to ſhun. This makes them leap into the fire with joy and greedineſs, and to contend which ſhall be formoſt: ſhe being thought to have been moſt loving during his life, which is now moſt willing to accompany him in his death, and offer her ſelf to his Manes, at the funeral pile: whereunto thus alludeth the Poet.

Et certamen habent lethi, quæ viva ſequatur.
Conjugium; pudor eſt non licuiſſe mori.
Ardent victrices, & præbent pectora flammæ.
Imponuntq; ſuis ora peruſta viris.

A ſhame 'tis not to die: they therefore ſtrive,
Who may be fam'd to follow him alive.
The Victor burns, yields to the flame her Breaſt;
And her burnt Face doth on her Husband reſt.

Chief Cities of this Country, 1. Cael, on the borders of Travancer, belonging anciently to the Kings of Coulan, now to thoſe of Narſinga; the people whereabouts called Paravi, are a kind of Chriſtians, who live for the moſt part by fiſhing for Pearl, which they ſell to the Portugals, and Bengalan Merchants. 2. Golconda, the chief City of the Province called Muſulipatan, the Lord whereof is a Moor, of the Sophian Sect; but a Vaſſal to the Kings of Narſinga. 3. Chamdagrin, one of the Seat-Royals of the King. 4. Prepeti, three miles from Chamdagrin, memorable for a yearly Feaſt here celebrated in honour of Pereimal (once ſole King of Malavar) reckoned for a Saint at leaſt in theſe parts of India: the Offerings at which accuſtomably amount unto 200000 Crowns. 5. Chadambaram, the Mother City of thoſe Pagan Solemnities, which are done to Pereimal, who hath here a Temple endowed with 30000 Ducats of annual Rent, all conſumed by the Bramines belonging to it, who pretend to have been born out of Pereimals Head. 6. Madura, honoured with the reſidence of the Chochanada, or the Chief Prelate of the Bramines of this Kingdom; ſo numerous, that in this Town, and the Territories of it only, are thought to be no fewer then an hundred Thouſand. The Seat alſo of one of three Naichi, or tributary Kings of the Crown of Narſinga: The other two reſiding at 7. Gingi. and 8. Tanajor, the chief Towns of their Principalities, but not elſe obſervable. 9. Maliapur, called alſo St. Thomas, from an Opinion that the Body of the Apoſtle was here interred: martyred here by the Idolatrous Indians, whoſe poſterity in other things like unto other men, are ſaid to have one Leg and Foot as big as an Elephant: a Puniſhment inflicted on the whole Generation for ſin of their Anceſtors: How true this is, I cannot ſay, But ſure I am that Dorotheus ſaith, that he reſteth at Calamina, where he was ſlain with a dart. However the Portugals to make ſome uſe of the old Tradition, removed ſome Bones from this place, which were ſaid to be his, and enſhrined them in Goa, their own City; much viſited by profitable Pilgrimes, to their great enriching. The City once ſo large and populous, that it contained 330 Temples, for the uſe of divers Nations which reſorted thither. In theſe latter dayes deſolate and forlorn, inhabited only by ſome old Chriſtians, till the Portugueze began again to people it with new Colonies. 10. Choromandel, giving name to a large Sea-Coaſt, lying on the Weſt ſide of the Gulf of Bengala. 11. Caſta, a Town of Choromandel, in which the woman is not burned with her Husband, as in other places of this Countrey, but buried quick in the ſame Grave with him. 12. Negapatau, in the ſame Region, inhabited for the moſt part by Saint Thomas Chriſtians. 13. Tarnaſſari, once the head City of a Kingdom ſo called, the King wherof was able to bring into the Field, 100000 Horſe and Foot, and 100 armed Elephants, but now ſubject to the King of Narſinga. The people black, but ſo out of love with their own colour, that they willingly proſtitute their wives or daughters to any people of a whiter and more clear complexion. 14. Biſnagar, once the chief City of this Kingdom, whence the King is ſomtimes called the King of Biſnagar. In thoſe times 24 miles in compaſs, with nine Gates in it (amongſt others) continually guarded with Souldiers; and a magnificent Palace, not elſewhere equalled. In the year 1565. ſacked by four of the Mahometan Kings of Decan, who with their joynt Forces had invaded this Kingdom, it became deſolate and forſaken; and the Court removed to 15. Penegardo, eight daies journey within the Land (Biſnagar being ſeated on the Borders of Decan, but long it had not ſtaid there, when removed to 16. Narſinga, where it hath ever ſince been fixed, which is now the chief City of this Kingdom, unto which it gives name; though the King many times cals himſelf by the name of that City where he reſideth for the preſent.

Of the Antiquity of this Kingdom I have little to ſay, theſe Eaſtern parts not being known at all till theſe latter times, nor well known in theſe. About the year 1550. their King then reigning was impriſoned by 3 of his Captains or Commanders; who ſhewed him only once a year to his Subjects, parting the power and government amongſt themſelves. He being dead, and his Son kept in the like reſtraint, Romaragio the firſt Capt. aſcended the Throne, Timaragio managed the Eſtate, and Bengahe commanded the Army. But theſe Uſurpers being overthrown by the Kings of Decan, in the year 1565. Timaragio the

Survivor

Oriſtan.

Survivor took the charge of all; whoſe ſon, to make himſelf ſure of the Kingdom, murdered his impriſoned Soveraign (the life and liberty of Kings being much of a date) whence followed many broils and troubles touching the ſucceſſion, till ſetled in the perſon of Chriſmarao, the undoubted Heir; who did not onely reſtore peace and quiet to Narſinga it ſelf, but recovered Canara out of the hands of the Idalcan, who had before endangered his eſtate therein. Of the great Army which he led againſt this Idalcan, we have ſpoke already: adding here onely, that before he went upon this enterpriſe (called the journey of Rachiol) he ſacrificed in nine days 2036 Beaſts to the Countrey Idols, the fleſh whereof he cauſed to be diſtributed amongſt the poor. Routed at firſt, and being perſwaded by ſome about him to go out of the field, he is ſaid, to have made this Noble Anſwer, that he had rather the Idalcan ſhould boaſt that he had ſlain him, than vanquiſhed him. And thereupon leaping into the thickeſt of his enemies, and well followed by the valianteſt of his Friends, he obtained the victory. But this vaſt Army of 600000 foot, 30000 Horſe, 537 Elephants, with neceſſaries anſwerable to ſuch infinite multitudes, ſpeaks onely what he can do on extreme neceſſity: or when he hath ſome long time of preparation, as he had in that Action. The power of Kings is better meaſured by their ſtanding forces, than by premeditated Levies. And herein this Prince comes not much ſhort of his greateſt neighbours: his ſtanding bands conſiſting of 40000 Nairo's, or Gentlemen of his own Kingdom, which ſerve on foot; 20000 Horſe, who are either Perſians or Arabians, and 200 Elephants; well paid, and kept in continual readineſs: his foot defraied out of his Revenues, his Horſe maintained like the Turks Timariots, out of certain Lands diſtributed amongſt his Captains (ſome of which are ſaid to have a million of Crowns per Annum) to furniſh him with theſe ſtable bands of Horſes and Elephants.

As for his Revenue it is reckoned at 12 millions yearly, out of which he is thought to lay up three; defraying with the reſt the expence of his houſhold, and the entertainment of his Foot. This ſum amaſſed together out of the Lands, mines, and forreſts of the Countrey: which are wholly his; and the waters of ſome Rivers (ſold by him to his Subjects) which he monopolizeth; the common people having nothing but their Arms and Labour. Of which the mines, forreſts, and one third of the lands, he retaineth to himſelf; the other two being divided amongſt his Captains. So that it is no marvel if ſo rich a Countrey yield him ſuch an income, conſidering it is all his own. I do rather wonder (of the two) it ſhould yield no more.

9. ORISTAN.

ORISTAN or ORIXA, is bounded on the South, with Narſinga; on the Weſt, with Delly and Sanga; on the North, with the Kingdoms of Botanter; on the Eaſt with the Gulf of Bengala, and part of Patanaw or Patane: ſo called from Oriſſa, the chief City of it.

The Countrey hath plenty of Rice, cloth of Cotton, and a fine ſtuff like ſilk, made of graſs, and there called Yerva; with which together with Long Pepper, Ginger, Mirabolins, and other commodities here growing, they uſe to load 25 or 30 Ships from the Haven of Oriſſa onely. The people ſo well governed, or ſo hating theft; that in the time of their own Kings, before they came under the Moguls, a man might have travelled with Gold in his hand without any danger. In other points, of the ſame temper and religion, with the reſt of the Indians ſubject to that Prince.

It is generally well watered, and interlaced with many Rivers, which do much moiſten and refreſh it; but none ſo beneficial to the Kings hereof, as the River Guangen (of old called Chaberis) the waters whereof eſteemed ſacred by the Kings of Calicute and Narſinga, and much uſed by them in their ſacrifices and ſuperſtitious purgations; are wholly ingroſſed by this King, who ſelleth them to thoſe Princes at exceſſive rates. Beſides which Rivers it is watered with a fair Sea-coaſt, of 350 miles in length; that is to ſay, from Cape Guadarino in the South, which divides it from the Realm of Narſinga; to Cape Leegora in the Eaſt, which parts it from Bengala. But for all that not very much traded, becauſe not ſo well provided of commodious Havens, as many other Indian Provinces of a far leſs Territory.

Towns of moſt note herein, 1. Oriſſa, on the Sea-ſide, or not far from it, the beſt traded Port of all this Kingdom; to which the name thereof is to be aſcribed, as the Head-City of the Countrey. 2. Cateoba, ſix days journey within the land, the ordinary reſidence of their Kings, before it was ſubdued by the Great Monguls. 3. Angeli, a well-frequented Port, at the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala; from whence many Ships are yearly laden with Indian Wares. 4. Bacolli or Bacola, more within the land, and once the head City of a Kingdom, but a very poor one. 5. Simergan, where they held it an impiety to eat fleſh, or kill any beaſt. 6. Senerpate, of which little memorable. Nor do I find any thing which deſerves much memory in the affairs of this Kingdom; but that the Kings hereof were Gentiles, ſubdued not many years ſince by the King of Patanaw: and both, grown weaker by that war, by Echebar, the Great Mongul.

10. BOTANTER.

BOTANTER (under which name I comprehend all thoſe petit Kingdoms which are crowded together in the North and North-Eaſt of this part of India) hath on the South, Oriſtan and Patanaw; on the Weſt, the River Guenga or Chaberis, by which parted from the Realms of Penout on the North, the Zagathaian Tartars, divided from it by ſome branches of Mount Taurus; on the Eaſt, the famous River Ganges. So called from Bottia, the principal City of Botanter, which is the chief of theſe ſmall Kingdoms.

The Countrey great, of three moneths journey in extent, full of high Mountains, one of which may be ſeen five dayes journey off; in which are ſaid to dwell a people with ears of a ſpan long or more, whom otherwiſe thoſe of the Valleys count as Apes. In thoſe parts which are next Bengab, they are white, and Gentiles; in others, more enclined to the Olive colour. Their garments they wear cloſe to their bodies, ſo ſtreight that one cannot ſee a pleit or wrinckle; & thoſe they never put off by night nor day, whilſt they are able to hang on: nor do they waſh at any time, for fear of defiling ſo pure a Creature as the water. Content with one wife (deſerved to be held a miracle in theſe Eaſtern parts) and yet cohabit not with her after two or three Children. When any of them die, the Sooth-ſayer is to tell them what to do with his body; according to whoſe direction (firſt conſulting his Books) they burn, bury, or eat it. Few Towns of note there are amongſt them. The principal, 1. Bottia, the Metropolis of it. 2. Clamur, of which little memorable. 2. Kukares, the ſecond Kingdom of this rank, large, but exceeding mountainous, as Being over-run by the branches of Mount Caucaſes, which divides it from Tartary. So named of Kakares the chief Town thereof, by ſome called Negariot, their Staples for the ſale of their cloth, (moſt of the people being Weavers) bought of them by the Chinoys; and Tartarian Merchants, who reſort frequently to thoſe markets. This is a diſtinct Kingdom of it ſelf, the Kings whereof are called Dermain, but Vaſſals to the great Mongul. And ſo is he of 3. COUCHE, another Kingdom of this Tract, frontiring upon Cauchin China, beyond Ganges; ſo called from Couche, the chief Town of it. The Country rich, by reaſon that it may be drowned, and dried up again, when the people will: full of good paſtures by that means, and thoſe well ſtored with Sheep, Goats, Swine, Deer, and other Cattel; though the people neither kill nor eat them, but on the contrary build Hoſpitals for them, in which when lame and old they are kept while they die. Yet many times they eat their money, and I cannot blame them; their ſmall money being Almonds.

4. GOUREN or Citor the moſt Northern Realm in this General diviſion, ſo called of Goror, Goren the chief Town of it. The Country in ſome parts mountainous, out of which ſpringeth the River Sitilly, one of the Tributaries unto Ganges; the reſt a kind of Deſart or unpeopled Country, joyneth cloſe to Couche. In which are few Villages, graſs (or reeds rather) longer than a man, and therein many Buffes, Tigers, and other wild Beaſts; none wilder than the Thieves, who frequent the wilderneſſes.

In this Tract alſo are the Kingdoms of 5. RAME; and 6. RECON, joyning upon Zagathay, or enclining towards it; poſſeſſed by the Morgul Tartars from the time of Tamerlane, if not before: but Feuditaries to the Kings of Chabul or Arachoſia, who commanded in the North Eaſt of Perſia, and theſe North parts of India; and from thoſe places drew his Army or the greateſt part of it, when called unto the aid of Galgee, the King of Mandao. Here is alſo the Kingdom of 7. TRIPPURA, naturally fenced with hils and mountains; and by that means hitherto defended againſt the Mongul Tartars, their bad neighbours; with whom they have continual wars. But of theſe Northern Kingdoms lying towards Tartary, there is but little to be ſaid, and that little of no certain knowledge; thoſe parts being hitherto ſo untravelled, that they may paſs in the Accompt of a Terra Incognita.

11. PATANAW.

PATANE or PATANAW, is bounded on the North, with the Realms of Botanter; on the Eaſt, with Ganges; on the Weſt, with Oriſtan; and on the South, with the Kingdom and Gulf of Bengala. So called from Patane the chief City of it. There is another Kingdom of this name in the further India: but whether it were ſo called becauſe a Colony of this; or from ſome reſemblances in the nature of the ſeveral Countries, or from the ſignification of the word in the Indian language; I am not able to determine. Certain I am, that though they have the ſame name, yet they are under ſeveral Governments, and ſcituate in far diſtant places: no otherwiſe agreeing than in ſome reſemblances, as Holland in the Low-Countries doth with Holland in Lincolnſhire.

The Country yieldeth veins of Gold, which they dig out of the pits, and waſh away the earth from it in great Bolls. The people tall, and of ſlender making, many of them old: great Praters, and as great diſſemblers. The women ſo bedecked with ſilver and copper, eſpecially about the feet, that they are not able to endure a ſhooe. Both Sexes uſe much waſhing in the open Rivers, and that too intermixt together in their natural nakedneſs; eſpecially ſuch as live neer the banks of the River Jemena (eſteemed more holy than the reſt) which from Agra paſſing thorow this Country falleth into Ganges.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Patane, a large town and a long one, built with very broad ſtreets; but the houſes very mean and poor, made at the beſt of earth and hurdles, and thatched over head. The Metropolis of this Kingdom, becauſe the antienteſt and that which gives the name unto it. 2. Bannaras, a great Town on Ganges, to which the Gentiles from remote Countries uſe to come in Pilgrimage, to bathe themſelves in the holy waters of that River. The Country betwixt this and Patanaw, very fair and flouriſhing, and beautified upon the Rode with handſome Villages. 3. Sirbpur, the chief Seat of one of the old Princes of this Country; not yet ſubdued by the Great Monguls. 4. Ciandecan, on the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala; the Seat of another of their Kings. One of which memorable for a trick put upon the Jeſuites when blamed by them for the worſhip of ſo many Pagodes, as contrary both to the law of God and nature. For cauſing them to rehearſe the Decalogue, he told them that he did offend no more againſt thoſe commandments in worſhipping ſo many Pagodes, than they themſelves in worſhipping ſo many Saints. 5. Satagam, a fair City (for a City of Moores) once part of Patanaw, ſince aſcribed to Bengala.

The people of this Country properly called Pataneans, but corruptly Parthians, were once of great command and power in theſe parts of India. Lords for a time, of a great part of the Kingdom of Benga- la, into which driven by Baburxa, the Mongul Tartar, the Father of Emanpaxda, and Grand-father of Echebar. Their laſt King being ſlain in that war, twelve of their chief Princes joyned in an Ariſtocracy, and warring upon Emanpaxda had the better of him. After this, their ſucceſſors attempted Oriſtan, and added that alſo to their Eſtate, but they could not long make good their fortunes; ſubdued by Echebar the Mongul, and made ſubject to him. Three of them, viz. the Prince of Siripur the King of Ciandecan, and he whom they call Mauſadalim, retain, as yet (for ought I can learn unto the contrary) as well their antient Paganiſm, as their natural liberty. The other nine, together with Mahometaniſm, have vaſſaled themſelves to the great Mongul, now the Lord Paramount of the Country.

12. BENGALA.

BENGALA is bounded on the North; with Patanaw; on the Eaſt, with the Kingdoms of Pegu; on the South and Weſt, with the Gulf of Bengala. So called from Bengala the chief City of it. It containeth in length on the Gulf and River 360 miles, and as much in breadth into the Land. A Country ſtored with all things neceſſary to the life of man, great plenty of Wheat, Rice, Sugar, Ginger, and Long-Pepper. Such aboundance of Silk, and Cotton, and of Fleſh and Fiſh, that it is impoſſible that any Country ſhould exceed it in thoſe commodities. And which crowns all, bleſt with ſo temperate and ſweet an air that it draws thither people of all ſorts to inhabit it. Here is alſo, amongſt other rarities, a Tree called Moſes, which beareth ſo delicate a fruit, that the Jews and Mahometans who live here, affirm it to be the fruit which made Adam to ſin.

The natural Inhabitants for the moſt part, are of white complexion, like the Europæans, ſubtil of wit, and of a curious diſpoſition; well skilled in dealing in the world, much given to traffick, and intelligent in the way of Merchandize, if not ſomewhat deceitful. Not ignorant of other Arts, but with ſome ſmattering in Philoſophy, Phyſick, and Aſtrology. Stately and delicate both in their Diet and Apparel: not naked as in others of theſe Indian Provinces, but clothed in a ſhirt or ſmock reaching to their feet, with ſome upper Garment over that. The women of an ill name for their unchaſtity, though Adultry be puniſhed with cutting off of their Noſes. Neat, if not curious and too coſtly in this one cuſtom, that they never ſeeth meat twice in the ſame Pot, but for every boyling buy a new one. In Religion, for the moſt part Mahometans, eſpecially on the Sea-ſhores, which lay moſt open and commodious to the Arabians, by whom Mahometaniſm was here planted many ages ſince.

Of Rivers we need take no care having ſpoken of Ganges. That with its many channels may abundantly ſerve to water ſo ſmall a Province. But hereof more anon in a place more proper. Proceed we now unto the Cities. The principal whereof, 1. Bengala, which gave name to the whole Kingdom, ſcituate on a branch of the River Ganges, and reckoned for one of the moſt beautiful Towns of all the Indies. Exceedingly enriched by trade, but more by Pilgrimages; by reaſon of the holineſs and divine operations aſcribed by the Indians to the waters of it; there being few years in which not viſited by three or four hundred thouſand Pilgrims. 2. Gouro, the ſeat Royal of the ancient Kings. 3. Catigan, on the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala, a well-traded Port. 4. Taxda, once a Town of great traffick, and ſcituate in thoſe times on the banks of Ganges; now by the changing of the Channel (occaſioned by the frequent over-flowing of it) above a league off from the River. 5. Porto Grande, and 6 Porto Pequeno, two Towns of the Portugals; but without Forces for defence, or rules for Governments. Places like the Aſylum, which was built by Romulus: whereunto ſuch as dare not ſtay in their own Countries, or any well-regulated Cities, uſe to make their reſort; priviledged here to live in all kind of licentiouſneſs.

Here is alſo in the North parts of this Province, or adjoyning to it, the City and Kingdom of ARACHAN. Lying along the banks of Ganges, but ſo remote from the Sea, that it is 50 miles diſtant from the neereſt branch of it. Wealthy and populous withal; governed heretofore by a King of its own, ſo wallowing in wealth and ſenſual pleaſures, that he had in this City and the parts adjoyning twelve Royal Palaces or Seraglio's, all ſtowed with women for his luſt. Now ſubject with Bengala and Patanaw, betwixt which it lyeth, to the Empire of the Great Monguls.

There are alſo ſome ſmall Iſlands in the Gulf of Bengala, which I account unto that Kingdom. 1. Bazacata, now called Baſſe. 2. Baraſſæ, of which name there are five in Ptolomy, three of them by Mercator ſaid to be Mindanao, Cailon, and Subut. 3. Two, called the Iſlands of Good fortune, by him placed under the Æquator, and ſaid to be inhabited by Anthropophagy, or man-eaters; as alſo were three more which he calls. 4. Sadadibæ, now named Cainam. 5. Inſula Satyrorum, or the Iſles of Satyres, three in number, the people whereof were reported to have tails like Satyres. And 6 thoſe called Maniolæ, in number ten, (now Iſlas de Parcel) reported by Ptolomy to be ſo ſtored with Adamant ſtones, that they violently drew to them any ſhips or veſſels, which had iron in them; for which cauſe they which uſed theſe Seas faſtned the planks of their ſhips with wooden pins. But our later Navigators find no ſuch matter, unleſs perhaps it may be in the exploits of Sir Huon of Bourdeaux, where indeed we meet with ſuch an Iſland, in the courſe of his Errantrie.

But to return again to the Kingdom of Bengala, we finde it of a different conſtitution from the reſt of the Kingdoms of theſe parts. Not governed by a family of Succeſſive Princes, deſcended from the Stem of a Royal Anceſtrie, as the others are. Chance, or neceſſity, had brought thither many Ambaſſines, or Æthiopians, who made a conqueſt of the Country; and choſe a King out of themſelves. To keep what they had gotten, and perpetuate the Regal honour to the Ambaſſine Nation, they procured thence yearly certain thouſands of Slaves; whom they trained up unto the wars, advanced unto the higheſt commands in civil and military ſervice; and out of them elected one for their Lord and Soveraign: as the Mamalucks in the Kingdom of Egypt, whom herein they followed. By ſome Arabians trading with them, Mandao.

they came in time to admit Mahometaniſm amongſt them; on the Sea-coaſts eſpecially. Diſpoſſeſſed firſt of ſome part of their Kingdom, lying about Satagan, by the Pateneans; when driven to ſeek new dwellings by Baburxa, the Mongul Tartar: and of their whole Kingdom, by the valor and good fortune of Echebar, who added it unto the reſt of his eſtate.

Thus have we drawn together all the Indian Provinces on this ſide of Ganges (the Kingdoms of Malabar and Narſinga being but a Parentheſis in the conſtruction of this ſentence) into the hands of the Mongul. So called for his diſcent from the Mongul Tartars, one of the five great Tribes or Nations into which that people were divided. Derived originally from the famous and mighty Tamerlane, who having added almoſt all the greater and leſſer Aſia, unto his eſtates: left Perſia, with the parts of India which lay neereſt to it on the North, to Myrza Charrok, his fourth ſon. But his iſſue failing in Abdula, the 4th. of that line, thoſe eſtates fell to Abuſaid, deſcended from Maromcha, the third ſon of Tamerlane: Whoſe ſon and Succeſſor called Zeuzes, by ſome Malaoncres, being deſſeized of the greateſt part of the Kingdom of Perſia, by Uſſan-Caſſanes: the rights of all, with the poſſeſſion of Arachoſia (now called Cabul) and Paropamiſus (now Candahor or Sableſtan) together with ſo much of India as was held by thoſe Princes, remained in Hamed, one of the younger ſons of Abuſaid: whoſe poſterity laying hold on ſuch opportunities as were offered to them, have made themſelves Maſters in few years of this mighty Empire. Whoſe Succeſſors and their atchievements we ſhall here preſent.

1473. 1. Hamed, the ſon of Abuſaid, of the race of Tamerlane, after the Conqueſt of Perſia by Uſſan-Caſſanes, ſucceeded in Chabul, Candahor, and the parts of the Realms of India ſubject to the Tartars.

1500. 2. Babor, or Baburxa, in danger to be diſpoſſeſſed of moſt of his Eſtates by the neighbouring Usbeques, living upon the borders of Perſia, Tartary, and India, whom at laſt he quieted; enlarging his dominions by the Conqueſt of ſome part of Patanaw, and other Kingdoms in the North.

1532. 3. Hamoyen, the ſon of Babor, or Baburxa, commonly called Emanpaxda, vanquiſhed by the Parthians, or Pataneans, and their confederates, craved aid of Tamas, the 2d. Perſian Monarch of this line, on promiſe to conform to the Sophian Sect: and by that aid confirmed and ſetled his affairs, but held himſelf to the former Principles of his Irreligion.

4. Merhamed or Miramudius, ſon of Emanpaxda, called in by Galgee the King of Mandao, againſt Badurius the Cambaian, vanquiſhed the Cambaian King in two pitched fields, and conquered the Kingdoms of Mandao, and Balaſſia, with ſome other Provinces.

5. Adabar, the ſon of Merhamed, added the Realms of Delly and Cambaia, unto his Dominions.

1550. 6. Mahomet Selabdin, commonly called Echebar, brother of Adabar, the moſt fortunate and victorious Prince of all this family; ſubdued the Kingdoms of Caximir, Agra, Decan, Oriſſa, Bengula, Patanaw, and divers other of leſs note.

1605. 7. Selim, ſurnamed Jangheere, the ſon of Echebar, who added nothing that I hear of, to his fathers conqueſts.

1627. 8. Blockie, the grand-child of Selim by his eldeſt ſon, (wickedly murdered by the practice of Curroon at Agra) proclaimed King on the death of his Grand-father; but ſhortly after made away by Aſaph Chawn, ſo to make room for 1627. 9. Curroon, the third ſon of Selim or Jangheer, and ſon-in-law unto Aſſaph Chawn; having by his own Miniſters, and the hands of his Father-in-law, murdered the proclaimed King his Nephew, and all the other Princes of the Royal blood, ſucceeded into the Eſtates, and was crowned at Agra. A wicked and bloody Prince, ſtill living for ought I hear to the contrary.

To look a little on theſe Princes, their eſtate and power; in matters of Religion they have generally been Mahometans, that Religion being long ſince embraced by the Tartars, from whom they originally deſcended. But not ſo ſcrupulous or preciſe in that profeſſion, as to endeavour the ſuppreſſing of any other opinions: both Echebar, and his ſon Jangheere, being ſo inclined unto Chriſtianity, that they permitted the Jeſuites to build Colleges and Churches in Agra it ſelf, the Imperial City, and many other chief Cities in his dominions. Of Echebar it is reported, that being doubtful what Religion to adhere unto, he cauſed 30 Infants to be ſo brought up, that neither their Nurſes nor any body elſe ſhould ſpeak unto them; reſolving to addict himſelf to the Religion of that Country, whoſe language ſhould be ſpoken by them, as moſt agreeable to nature: and he did accordingly. For as thoſe Children ſpoke no language, ſo was he poſitive, and reſolved in no Religion. Able to ſee the vanities of Mahomet, and the horrible impieties of the Gentiles, but not willing to conform unto the ſtrictneſs of Chriſtianity. And though Selim who ſucceeded, to content his Mahometan Subjects, declared himſelf for that Religion; yet his affairs being once ſettled, and his Throne confirmed, he became as Neutral as his Father. Sultan Curroon now Reigning, of the ſame Neutrality, and tis well he is ſo; there being no Religion ſo impure and bloody, which he would not diſhonour by his known ungraciouſneſs.

India, &c.

The Language ſpoken by theſe Princes, and their natural Subjects the Magores, or Mougul-Tartars, is ſaid by ſome to be the Turkiſh. But I think rather that it is ſome Language near it, than the very ſame: And that the Language which they ſpeak is the ancient Scythian or Tartarian, from which the Turks (a Scythian people) differ but in Dialect, a ſprinkling of the Perſian intermixt amongſt them. A mixture not to be denied, in regard of their long dwelling in that Country, the entercourſe which their Subjects of thoſe parts have with theſe of India; and that the greateſt part of their Souldiers, Officers and Commanders, are ſupplied from thence.

Their Government is abſolute, if not Tyrannical, the Great Mongul being Lord of all, and heir to every mans eſtate which is worth the having: the perſons and purſes of his Subjects at his ſole diſpoſing; ſo that he may amaſs what treaſures, and raiſe what forces for the Wars his need requireth, or the Avarice or Ambition of his Miniſters ſhall ſuggeſt unto him. Firſt, for his Treaſures, it is conceived that his Revenue doth amount yearly to fifty Millions of Crowns, and there are reaſons to perſwade that it may be more. The Country very rich, and notably well traded from all parts of the world, the Impoſt upon which is of infinite value; beſides the vaſt ſums of money brought into his Dominions from all Countrys whatſoever, which hold traffick here; their commodities not being to be parted with but for ready coin. The whole land being alſo his, he eſtates it out for no term certain, retaining a third part of the profits to himſelf, and leaving two thirds to the Occupants, to be held by them during pleaſure. Who if they thrive upon their bargains, they thrive not for themſelves, but him: it being in his power, if he want patience to expect the Incumbants death, to enter on the whole eſtate of the Tenant by the way of Eſcheat: but if he tarry till the death of the Occupant, it falls to him of courſe, the wife and children of the deceaſed being fairly dealt with, if he content himſelf with the perſonal eſtate, and leave the Land to them to begin anew. For inſtance, of thoſe huge ſums which in ſo rich a Country may be had this way, it is ſaid that when the Vice Roy of Lahor died, he left to Echebar three millions of Gold, beſides Silver, Jewels, Horſes, Elephants, Furniture and Goods, almoſt invaluable: And of one Raga Gagnar, another of his great Officers, that at his death the Great Mogul ſeized of his into his hands 3300 pound weight of Gold, beſides Plate and Jewels. Beſides theſe means of heaping treaſure, all the Mines of the Country are wholly his, and the Preſents given by all ſorts of Suters, hardly to be numbered; none being admitted to his preſence which comes empty handed. Finally, if Badurius, which was King of Cambaia only, could bring into the field at once 500 Tun of gold and ſilver to pay his Army; and after the loſs of all that treaſure, advanced upon the ſudden the ſum of 600000 Crowns, which he ſent to Solyman the Magnificent to come to ſuccor him; both which it is well known he did: What infinite Treaſures muſt we think this Prince to be maſter of, who hath more than four times the eſtate of the King of Cambaia, and far more trading now than in former times.

By the like Parallel we may conjecture ſomewhat at his Forces alſo, Badurius the Cambaian brought into the field againſt Merhamed, and the King of Mandao, as was partly touched upon before, 150000 Horſe, 500000 Foot, 2000 Elephants armed, 2000 pieces of braſs Ordnance, of which were 4 Baſilisks, each of them drawn with 100 yoke of Oxen; and 500 Carts loaded with powder and ſhot. What then may we conceive of this Prince, who is Lord of ſo much a greater eſtate then he, but that his Levies may be raiſed proportionably to ſo great Dominions? But becauſe poſſibly Badurius did extend himſelf to the utmoſt of his power, and having loſt two Battels, was never able to recruit again, which no wiſe Prince would do but in great extremities: It is conceived that the Mongul, without running any ſuch hazards on the loſs of a Battel, can in an inſtant raiſe 50000 Elephants, 300000 Horſe, and Foot proportionable, and yet have ſtock enough for an After-game, if that he ſhould chance to loſe the firſt. But it is ſeldom that he hath advanced to ſo high a Muſter. For in his action upon the Kingdoms of Decan, he had but an Hundred thouſand men, and a thouſand Elephants for fight; though poſſibly of all ſorts of people there might be more than double that number. For in his ordinary removes in time of Progreſs, it is ſaid that his followers of all ſorts amount unto two hundred thouſand; and that his Tents do uſually take up as much ground as the City of London. Yet notwithſtanding this great power, the fortunes of this Empire have not onely been at a ſtand, ſince the death of Echebar; but the Rasbooches in Cambaia, the Venazarari in Decan, and other puiſſant Rebels in other parts of his Dominions, hold out ſtill againſt him; ſome of them being ſaid to command as much land as a pretty good Kingdom, and to have always in readineſs 20000 Horſe, and 50000 foot, to make good their Mountains. Nature or Divine Providence hath given to Empires, as to men, a determinate growth, beyond which there is no exceeding.

2. INDIA EXTRA GANGEM.

INDIA EXTRA GANGEM is that part of the great Continent of India, which lieth on the further ſide of the River Ganges, from the ſpring or fountain of it, whereſoever it be, to the fall thereof into the ſea by the fift and laſt mouth thereof, which is called Antiboli: The other four being reckoned into the other part of India, on this ſide of that River. From hence extended Eaſtward as far as China and the Oriental Ocean, on other parts bounded as before.

The Country in thoſe elder times ſo renowned for wealth, that one Tract of it had the name of The Silver Region, and another of The Golden Cherſoneſe: this laſt ſuppoſed to be the Ophir of Solomon, of which more hereafter. The People of the ſame nature and diſpoſition, in the elder times, as thoſe which did inhabit on the hither ſide of the Ganges: not ſo well known to the Greeks or Romans as the others were, by reaſon of the remoteneſs of their ſcituation; nor ſo well diſcovered at the preſent. So that the beſt accompt we ſhall be able to give of it, will not be ſo exact and punctual as of that before; with Bramia. reference either to the ſtate hereof in the times of the Ancients, or the affairs of it in theſe days.

Mountains of moſt note in it, 1. Bepyrrus, 2. Mæandrus, 3. Semanthinus; and 4 thoſe called Damaſi, touched upon before, in our general diſcourſe of India. Out of which, and from other ſprings, flow theſe following Rivers, 1. Catabeda, 2. Bocoſanna, 3. Sadus, 4. Temala, 5. Beſynga, 6. Chryſaoras, 7. Polandas, 8. Attabas, theſe three laſt in the part hereof called the Golden Cherſoneſe, 9. Daonas, and 10. Dorias, riſing out of the Mountains called Damaſi. Others there are whoſe names I meet with in my Author, but of no great note: by what names any of them now diſtinguiſhed, it is hard to ſay. Nor find I any who have dared to adventure on it.

Of the chief Towns, 1. Balanga, 2. Cirtatha, 3. Taſale, 4. Tagma, and 5. Malthura, have the name of being the Metropoles of their ſeveral Nations. 6. Triglyphon, onely honoured with the name of Regia: more memorable perhaps for the white Crows, and bearded Hens, which are ſaid to have been thereabouts, than for being the Seat-Royal of ſome petit Prince. After theſe 1. Sada on the banks of the River Sadus, 2. Samba, 3. Sabara, 4. Coli, 5. Zaba, and 6. Sinda, have the name of Cities. 7. Baracura, 8. Berabonna, 9. Bebynga, 10. Tacola, 11. Sabana and 12. Thibonobaſtus: are marked out for the moſt noted Empories, or Towns of trade; the memory of Sabana being ſtill preſerved in the Frith of Sabaon, betwixt this Cherſoneſe and Sumatra. Others there are not noted by thoſe ſpecial Adjuncts, of which, 1. Cocconagara, and 2. Balonca, in the Golden Cherſoneſe; 3. Rhandamarcotta, in the Midlands, 4. Pentapolis, near the mouth of Ganges called Antibolum; 5. Aganagara, near the Bay called Sinus Magnus; and 6. Corygaza, one of the principal Towns of the Marande, may be ſome of the chief.

The old Inhabitants hereof, beſides the Maranda laſt ſpoken of, were the Gangarides, and Gangani, inhabiting on the banks of Ganges; the Tacorei, bordering on the Mountain Bepyrrus; as the Tiladæ on Meandrus; and the Animachæ, and Cabocæ, near the hills called Damaſi. The Baſada, ſaid to be crooked, ſhort, and thick; but of a cheerful aſpect, and clear complexion: of which compoſition alſo the inhabitants of the Golden Cherſoneſe were obſerved to be: the Barræ, and Cudutæ, on the Bay called Sinus magnus; the Leſtori, a thieviſh and Piratical people, who lived in Caves, and were affirmed to be of ſo hard a skin, that it was not penetrable by an Arrow. Theſe, with the reſt, too many to be here recited, the iſſue in moſt likelyhood of Chavilah and Saba the ſons of Jocktan; of whom we find ſo many footſteps in Sabara Civitate, Sabaraco, Siam, Sabana Emporio, Sobanus Fluvio; and in the Countrys now called Ava, and the Kingdom of Cavelan. Of any of their actions we find little in ancient ſtories, or of the power of any of their former Kings: but that it was given out in the time of Alexander (that beyond the Ganges lived a Prince called Agramenes (the moſt powerful King of all thoſe Countryes) able to bring into the field 200000 Foot, 20000 Horſe, 3000 Elephants, and 2000 armed Chariots. With which report though Alexander was the more inflamed to try Maſteries with him; yet his Souldiers were ſo terrified with it (remembring the hard bout which they had with Porus) that no perſwaſions could prevail with them to go further Eaſtward. Nor hear we much of them after this, unleſs the converſion of the Indians in the time of Conſtantine, may be applyed to thoſe on that ſide of the River, as perhaps it may.

As for the later obſervations and diſcoveries of it, we find it (as moſt barbarous Countryes elſe till reduced to Order) diſmembred and ſubdivided into many eſtates; almoſt as many Realms as Cities, and diſtinct governments amongſt them, as Tribes and Nations. Moſt of them Gentiles in Religion, with whom the name of Chriſt and Chriſtianity not ſo much as heard of, till the coming of the Jeſuites thither; who have not only obtained leave, but ſome invitations, for the promoting of the Goſpel. And for Mahometaniſm, though it had got ſome footing on the Sea-coaſts of the Gulf of Bengala, as lying moſt convenient for the trade of the Arabian Merchants: yet on the North, and midland parts, and thoſe towards China, and the Oriental Seas, it was as little heard of as Chriſtianity. But for the Kingdoms of this part, I mean the chief of them, to which as many of the reſt as are worth the looking after are to be reduced, they are thoſe of, 1. Brama, or Barma, 2. Cauchin-China, 3. Camboia, 4. Jangoma, 5. Siam, and 6. Pegu.

BRAMA.

THe Kingdoms of BRAMA or BARMA have on the Weſt, the River Ganges; on the North, part of Cathay in Tartary; on the Eaſt Cauchin-China; and on the Sonth, the Kingdom of Pegu. So called from the Brachmanes, Bramanes, or Brames, poſſeſſed for many ages paſt of theſe North-Weſt Countryes. By the tranſpoſing of a Letter, they are now called the Kingdoms of Barma.

The Country of theſe Brames or Bramanes, extendeth Northwards from the neareſt of the Peguan Kingdoms, for the ſpace of 150 Leagues, but far more from Weſt to Eaſt: watered with many great and remarkable Rivers, iſſuing from the Lake Chiamay, which though 600 miles from the Sea, and emptying it ſelf continually into ſo many Channels, contains four hundred miles in compaſs, and is nevertheleſs full of waters for the one or the other.

By the overflowing of which Rivers, and the commodiouſneſs of the Lake, the Country is wonderfully enriched, as Ægypt by the overflowings of Nilus. Which notwithſtanding, there are in it many huge forreſts, in the Weſt eſpecially; and therein many Lyons, Tigers, Ounces, Serpents, and other Creatures of a miſchievous and hurtful Nature.

The whole Country containeth the Kingdom of 1. Calam; 2. Prom, 3. Melinta, 4. Miranda, 5. Bacan, 6. Tangu, 7. Ava, and 8. Brama.

Of 1. MELINTAY and 2. MIRANDA, I find little written, but that they were conquered with the reſt, by the Vice-Roy of Tangu, in the firſt riſing of his fortunes; becoming the foundation of his following greatneſs. Of 3. BACAM, it is ſaid that it is plentifully enriched with Mines, both of Gold and Silver. In 4. CAVILAN, commonly and contractedly called GALAM, we find apparent foot-ſteps of the name of Cavilah the ſon of Jocktan. Of the reſt more is to be ſaid, not much.

5. PROM, though it be a little Kingdom, is exceeding populous, and ſtored with a warlike people. Given by the ſecond King of Pegu of the Tangum Race, to a younger ſon; who being by his Father commanded to the ſiege of Marmolan which had then revolted, not only did decline the ſervice, but rebelled againſt him; and by the ſtrength of this ſmall Kingdom held it out three years. But ſeeing his Fathers fortunes in a manner deſperate, he repented of his diſobedience; and went unto his aid, with an Army of 50000 men of his Natural Subjects. Treacherouſly poiſoned on the way by his chiefeſt Counſeller, for fear the Crime of his Revolt would be charged on him.

6. TANGU, is the name of one of theſe Bramain Kingdoms, ſo called from the chief Town thereof: formerly ſubject with the reſt of the Kings of Pegu, and governed by their ſeveral Vice-Royes. One of which taking his advantage of the wars between the Kings of Pegu and Siam, began to ſet up for himſelf; and husbanded his affairs ſo well, that he became ſole Lord of theſe Bramain Kingdoms; as afterwards of all the reſt in this part of India. Not long enjoyed by his Succeſſor, when diſpoſſeſſed and ſlain by one whom he married to his Siſter, and made Governour of this very Province. In which he bore himſelf ſo ſtiffly, that being ſent for by his King to aid him againſt ſome of his Rebels, and to bring all the Inhabitants of the Country with him: he anſwered that he would ſend one half; to ſend all, unreaſonable. Incenſed with which denial, the King armed againſt him; but he put the Leaders to the ſword, and ſeized their followers. After this being now in Arms, and diſpairing of reconcilement, he took upon himſelf the title of King of Tangu; and to ſecure himſelf therein, joyned with the King of Arrachan againſt his Soveraign; whom he moſt barbarouſly ſlew (after he had put himſelf into his hands) with his wife and children. Neither enjoyed he long the fruits of his villany, ſubdued not long after, with the reſt of theſe Indian Princes, by the King of Barma; of which more hereafter.

7. AVA, another of theſe Kingdoms, and one of the plantations of Cavilah alſo; is liberally furniſhed with all things neceſſary for the life of man. It affordeth alſo ſtore of Rubies; which they dig out of the Mountains; a certain creature which breeds Musk, together with great plenty of horſe and Elephants. Their chief City is called Ava, which name it giveth to the River upon which it is built, iſſuing out of the Lake of Chamay, and communicates the ſame to the whole Province. Subject for many ages paſt to the King of Pegu, till conquered by the Vice-Roy of Tangu, as before is ſaid; and by him given, with the Title of King, unto one of his brothers. Who rebelling againſt the ſon and ſucceſſor of his Benefactor, and by him ſlain in ſingle Combat; this Kingdom was conferred on a ſon of the Conqueror. A Prince of more vertue than his Brother; and one which grew at laſt unto ſo great power, that in the buſtle or cumbuſtions of the Kingdom of Pegu, he ſurpriſed or forced the Fort of Siriangh, formerly given unto the Portugals by the King of Arrachan; ſlew all the Souldiers, and ſpitted Philip de Britto, who commanded it. After which, gathering together the diſperſed Peguans, and repairing part of the City for them, he was likely to have made himſelf a good bargain by it; if the ſudden coming of the King of Barma, had not ſpoiled his markets.

8. BRAMA or BARMA, the moſt Southern of theſe Bramain kingdoms, the King whereof was Feudatarie to the Kings of Pegu, or of their appointment. Of no accompt when the Portugals came firſt acquainted with India, nor in many years after; now of moſt renown. For ſitting ſtill when all the reſt of their neighbours were embroiled in wars, they gathered ſo much power and ſtrength, that in the end, one of the later Kings hereof obſerving how the forces of his neighbouring Princes were conſumed, and their treaſures waſted; levying an Army of 300000 fighting men, 40000 Elephants, with all things ſuitable. And with this power ſubdued the kingdoms of Macin, and Arrachan; conquered the Cities of Pegu and Odia, (the two chief Cities of theſe parts) invaded the Kingdom of Siam, and poſſeſſed himſelf of it; making in little time all the leſſer Princes to become his Tributaries; as they ſtill continue.

CHAUCHIN-CHINA.

CHAUCHIN-CHINA is bounded on the Weſt, with the Kingdoms of Brama; on the Eaſt, with part of the Great Realm of China; on the North extending towards Tartary; on the South, bordering on Camboia.

The Country aboundeth with Gold, Silver, Aloes, and great ſtore of ſilks, of which the Inhabitants make Taffata, and other ſtuffes. It affordeth alſo plenty of Porcellane Earth, which being made into Cups, Diſhes, and other Utenſils of houſhold, is ſold by the name of China-ware: well counterfeited of late amongſt us, by putting a white cruſt on our Potters earth, as neat for uſe and ſhew as the natural China.

The people very ſtout and warlike, eſpecially for Foot-ſervice, though they have many horſes here, and thoſe fit for war. Well-practiſed on their Peeces alſo, on which they ſpend great ſtore of powder, but not ſo much in war, as in ſports and triumphs: yet making much more than they ſpend, the earth in ſome parts yielding very fit materials for that commodity. Trained up to Manufactures, eſpecially to the make-

ing

Camboia. ing of Powder, Silks, and Precellane, which they ſell to the Chineſe. Idolaters, for the moſt part, as are thoſe of China, whoſe Characters and language they alſo uſe: but ſo that there appear ſome inclinations unto Chriſtianity, in many of them, who have erected many Croſſes, and do admit the pictures of the Bleſſed Virgin, and the final judgement. Men not unlikely to have made a further Progreſs in the Goſpel, if they had met with better Teachers than theſe Laymens-books.

The chief City hereof is called Chauchin-China by the name of the Province, ſituate on a River coming out of China; and paſſing hence into the bottom of a large and capacious Bay. The whole Country divided into three Provinces, and as many Kings, over which one Paramount: but he and they the Tributaries of the King of China. Belonging hereunto is a little Iſland called Ainao, ten miles from the land, where the Inhabitants have a great trade of fiſhing for Pearls. The only Province of the Indies, which is wholly ſubject to the power of a foreign Prince; the Portugals holding in this Continent many Towns and Cities, but no whole Provinces.

3. CAMBOIA.

CAMBOIA is bounded on the North, with Cauchin-China; on the Eaſt and South, and the Ocean; on the Weſt, with parts of the Kingdom of Siam, and the Realms of Jangoma. So called from Camboia the chief City of it. Divided commonly into the Kingdom of Champa, and Camboia ſpecially ſo called.

1. CHAMPA, the Northern part hereof bordereth Chauchin-China, and is liberally provided of all neceſſaries: beſides which, there is plenty of Gold, and of the wood called Lignum Aloes, prized at the weight thereof in ſilver, much uſed in Bathes, and at the funerals of great perſons. This a diſtinct Kingdom of it ſelf, but ſubject with the reſt to the King of Barma. The chief City of it, called by the name of Champa, which it communicates to the Country, is ſcituate near the Sea-ſide, and of very good traffick.

2. CAMBOIA ſpecially ſo called, lieth South of Champa, a very great and populous Countrey, well ſtored with Elephants and Rhinocerots, which laſt the Indians call Abades. It yieldeth alſo great plenty of a ſweet-wood, which they call Calumba, as precious and as much eſteemed of as the wood of Aloes, (if not the ſame, or ſome Species of it, as I think it is) together with abundance of Rice, Fleſh, and Fiſh; Well-watred with the River Mecon, which iſſuing out of China, and having received many leſſer ſtreams falleth firſt into a great Lake of 200 miles compaſs, and thence into the Indian Ocean; making betwixt the Lake and that an hundred Iſlands.. By the overflowings of this River the whole Country is enriched (as Egypt by the like overflowing of Nilus:) the inhabitants at thoſe times betaking themſelves to their upper Rooms, and paſſing altogether by boats from one place to another.

The people are conceived to be ſtrong and warlike, though more enclined to merchandiſe and navigation than to deeds of Arms: Idolaters of the worſt kind, eſteeming Men and Beaſts of a like condition in regard of any future judgement: of late beginning to ſet up, and adore the Croſs, which is (it ſeems) the firſt Principle of Religion, in which the Friers are wont to inſtruct their Converts. Not weaned as yet, by theſe new Teachers, from burning the women with their Husbands, common to them with many other Indian people, nor from burning their Nobles with the King, uſed only here; but voluntarily to expreſs their loves, not upon conſtraint.

The chief Towns of it, 1. Camboia, one of the three prime Cities of this part of India; the other two being Odia and Pegu, of which more anon. Scituate on the River Mecon before deſtroyed: where it hath its fall into the Sea; well traded, as the Staple for all this Country, the commodities whereof are brought hither, and here ſold to the Merchant. 2. Cudurmuch, twelve leagues from Camboia, on the ſame River alſo. 3. Coul, on the Sea-ſide in the very South-weſt Angle of all the Country. The Kings whereof, once abſolute, and at their own diſpoſing, till invaded by a vaſt Army of the neighbouring Laos: in which their King being ſlain, and his forces weakned, his ſon and Succeſſor was conſtrained to become a Vaſſal to the crown of Siam. But fearing the loſs of his eſtate, when that Kingdom was made ſubject to the Kings of Pegu, in the year 1598. he applied himſelf unto the Portugals, offered them a Peninſula (part of his dominions) extending three leagues into the Sea; and ſent to the Jeſuites for ſome of their Society to live and preach amongſt his people. Not able for all theſe honeſt Policies to preſerve himſelf from being made a Feudatary of the King of Barma.

4. JANGOMA.

IANGOMA or the Country of the LAOS, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Camboia and Champa, from which parted by the River Menon; on the Weſt, with the River of Pegu, by which divided from that Kingdom; on the South, with the Realm of Siam; on the North, with Brama.

It took its name from Jangoma the chief Province of it; the other two (for here be three of them in all) being thoſe of Lavea, and Curroy, All of them joyned together called the Country of Laos, by the name of the people, a mighty Nation and a ſtout, by Religion Gentiles, naked from the middle upwards, and truſſing up their hair like a cap. Their Country very rich and level, but very ill neighboured by the

Gueoni

Siam.

Gueoni (Paulus Venetus giveth them the name Gangigu) who poſſeſs the mountains: whence falling in great companies to hunt for men whom they kill and eat, they commit cruel butcheries amongſt them. Inſomuch as this people, not able to defend themſelves againſt their fury, or rather wanting good Leaders to conduct and order them (for it is ſaid that they can make a million of men) were fain to put themſelves under the protection of the King of Siam, whom they obeyed no further than the humour took them.

Towns they have none of any note, except thoſe three which give name to the ſeveral Provinces; and thoſe of no note neither but for doing that. The people for the moſt part live on the banks of their Rivers, where they have Cottages of Timber; or elſe upon the Rivers in boats and ſhallops, as the Tartarians of the Deſarts in their Carts or wheel-houſes. One of their Rivers (commonly called River of Laos) ſaid to extend 400 leagues within the land, as far as Tartary & China; and from July to September to invert its courſe, and flow back ſtrongly toward its fountain. Not governed by any certain Rule or Order, till they ſubmitted to the patronage of the King of Siam; and then no other then they liſted; though for their ſakes, that King engaged himſelf in a war againſt the Cannibals, their moſt deadly enemies, accompanied with 25000 foot, 20000 Horſe and 10000 Elephants. Secured by his protection from the teeth of thoſe Cannibals (of whom otherwiſe they had been devoured) in the year 1578 they deſcended the River in great multitudes, to the number of 200000, and fell into the Realm of Camboia. But they made an unproſperous adventure of it. For though the King of Camboia loſt his life in the battel, yet he gave them ſuch a fatal blow, that they were almoſt all ſlain, drowned, or captived in the fight. Weakned wherewith, they became an eaſie prey to the Vice-Roy of Tangu, when he firſt made himſelf ſole maſter of this part of India. Who giving to his Brother the Kingdom of Ava, and leaving to his eldeſt Son the Kingdom of Pegu, with the Soveraignty over all the reſt, conferred this Country, with the title of King of Jangoma, on a younger Son. But he, begotten on a daughter of the King of Pegu, and born after his Father had attained this whole Indian Empire, was eaſily perſwaded by the Talapoies (ſo they call their Prieſts) that his Title was better than that of his Elder Brother, who was born before it. Prevented in his Claim, by the Kings of Arrachan and Tangu, by whom that King was ſlain, and his Kingdom waſted. How he ſped afterwards, I find not. But probable it is, that he ſubmitted with the reſt to the King of Barma.

5. SIAM.

SIAM, is bounded on the North, with Jangoma, and part of Pegu; on all other parts, with the wide Ocean, ſave that it toucheth on the Eaſt, with a part of Camboia, and on the Weſt, with a point of Pegu. So called from Siam the chief of all thoſe Kingdoms which paſs under this name, as that from Siam the chief City of it.

The Country of greater length then breadth, ſtretcheth it ſelf South-wards into the Sea many hundred miles, in form of a Peninſula or Demy-Iland, called anciently Aurea Cherſoneſus, or the Golden Cherſoneſe: One of the five famous Cherſoneſes or Peninſulaes of the elder Writers; the other four being Peloponneſus in Greece, the Thracian Cherſoneſe near Propontis, the Taurican Cherſoneſe in the Euxine, and Cimbrian Cherſoneſe in the North of Germany, now part of Denmark. It had the name of Aurea, or the Golden, ſuper-added to it, from its plenty of Gold, for which much celebrated by the Ancients, both Greeks and Romans (and therefore not improbably thought by ſome to be Solomons Ophir) ſtill famous with the reſt of the Countries of the Kingdom of Siam, for abundance of Gold, Silver, Tin, and other metals; great quantity of Pepper ſent yearly thence, with ſtore of Elephants, and Horſes: the whole Country very fat, and fertile, well ſtored with Rice, Corn, Graſs, and all other Neceſſaries.

The people generally much addicted to pleaſures, if not to Luxury; delighted much with Muſick and rich apparel; and ſuch as ſtand much upon their honour. For their inſtruction in good Letters they have publick Schools, where their own Laws, and the myſteries of their own Religion, are taught them in their natural Language; all other Sciences in ſtrange tongues, underſtood by none but by the learned. To tillage they can frame themſelves, and are painful in it; but by no means will follow any Mechanical Arts, which they put over to their Slaves. In Religion for the moſt part Gentiles, worſhipping the four Elements amongſt other gods; to each of which as they are ſeverally affected, ſo are their bodies to be diſpoſed of: either burnt, buried, hanged, or drowned, after their deceaſe; as in their lives they were moſt devoted to the Fire, Earth, Air, or Water. Some Chriſtians here alſo in and about the parts poſſeſſed by the Portugals; but more Mahometans: who poſſeſſing two hundred Leagues of the Sea-coaſts of this Country, have planted that Religion in moſt parts of the Country now by them poſſeſſed.

It containeth in it many Kingdoms, ſome of little note; thoſe of moſt obſervation, 1. Malaca. 2. Putane. 3. Jor. 4. Muantay. and 4. Siam, properly and eſpecially ſo called. Of which Malaca is now in the hands of the Portugals, Jor and Putane are poſſeſſed by the Arabians or Saracens, the other two have followed the fortunes of the Kings of Siam.

1. The Kingdom of MALACA taketh up the South part of the Golden Cherſoneſe, extended towards the North from the Cape or Promontory which Ptolomy calleth Malanconin, in the extreme South-point hereof near unto Sabana, then a noted Emporie, for the ſpace of 270 miles. So called from Malaca the chief City of it, of old times called Muſicana, or built very near it, from whence this Tract is called by Strabo, Muſicani terra. The City ſeated on the banks of the River Gaza, which is here ſaid to be 15 miles in breadth; by the frequent overflowings whereof, and the nearneſs of it to the Line (being ing but two degrees in the North) the Air hereof, and all the territory belonging to it, is very unwholſom; and for that cauſe the Country but meanly populous. In compaſs it is ſaid to be 20 miles, of great wealth, becauſe of almoſt infinite trading; for Spices, Unguents, Gold, Silver, Pearls, and precious Stones, the moſt noted Empory of the Eaſt. Inſomuch that it is ſaid by Ludovico Barthema, who was there before the Portugals knew it, that it was traded by more Ships then any one City in the world, more by far ſince the coming of the Portugals to it, then it was before. The people (as in all this Tract) of an Aſh-colour, with long hair hanging over their faces; bloudy and murderous, eſpecially when they meet one another in the night. Few other Towns of any note in a place ſo unhealthy, except 2. Sincapura, ſcituate Eaſt of Malaca, near the Promontory of old called Magnum; ſuppoſed by ſome to be the Zaba of Ptolomy; and that more probably then that it ſhould be his Palura, as Maginus would have it; Palura being a City of the Hither India, and different at the leaſt 20 degrees of Longitude from any part of this Cherſoneſe. But whatſoever it was called in the former times, it was in theſe latter Ages the Mother of Malaca; the greateſt part of the trade and people being removed from thence to this newer foundation; before which time it was the beſt frequented Emporie in theſe parts of the Eaſt. 3. Palo Zambilan 120 miles on the Weſt of Malaca, from whence to Sincapura, coaſting about the Southern Cape (now called Cape Liampo) we have a Sea-ſhore of 270 miles, as before was ſaid. No other habitation of any reckoning, but a few ſheds upon the ſhore for the uſe of Fiſhermen, and ſome ſcattered Villages in the Land: the people dwelling moſt on trees for fear of Tigers.

This Tract in former times poſſeſſed by the Kings of Siam, about the year 1258 became a Kingdom of it ſelf; founded by Paramiſera, and ſome other of the Javan Nobility, who flying the tyranny of their own King, came into this Country, where they were lovingly received by Sangeſinga, then reigning under the Siamite, in Sincapura. Him they perfidiouſly ſlew, and inveſted Paramiſera in his Dominion. Outed of which by the King of Siam, he was forced to ſeek a new dwelling, and after two or three Removes, fell upon the place where Malaca now ſtandeth, which City, pleaſed with the commodiouſneſs of the ſcituation, he is ſaid to have built. The trade of Sincapura in ſhort time removed hither alſo, which ſo increaſed the wealth and power of the Kings thereof, that joyning with the Moores who began to plant themſelves on the ſhores adjoyning, and receiving withal the Law of Mahomet, they began to caſt off all ſubjection to the Kings of Siam, to whom the Son and Succeſſour of Paramiſera had ſubmitted his new-raiſed Kingdom, and became their Homager. Incenſed wherewith, the Siamite about the year 1500 ſent out a Navy af 200 Sayl to diſtreſs it by Sea, and an Army of 30000 men and 400 Elephants to beſiege it by land. But before he was able to effect any thing, hindred by Tempeſts, and the Inſolencies of ſome of his Souldiers, the Portugals, in the year 1511. under the conduct of Albuquerque had poſſeſſed themſelves of it, who built there a Fortreſs and a Church. And though Alodinus the Son of the expelled King whoſe name was Mahomet) endeavoured the regaining of his Eſtate, and that the Saracens, Hollanders, and the Kings of Jor and Achen (two neigbouring Princes) envying the great fortunes of the Portugals, have ſeverally and ſucceſſively laboured to deprive them of it: yet they ſtill keep it in defiance of all oppoſition which hath been hitherto made againſt them.

2. North unto that of Malaca lieth the Kingdom of YOR, JOR, or JOHOR; ſo called of Jor, or Johor, the chief City of it. Inhabited for the moſt part by Moores, or Saracens, Mahometaniſm by their means prevailing on the Natives of the Country alſo. A Kingdom of no great extent, but of ſo much power, that joyning his Land-forces with the Navy of the King of Achen, he beſieged Malaca, and built a Royal Fort before it: in which, when taken by Paul de Lima, by the defeat of this King, were found 900 pieces of braſs Ordnance. After this, picking a quarrel with the King of Pahan, he burnt his Houſes, Barns, Proviſions, and the Suburbs of the City it ſelf, but in the courſe of his affairs, was interrupted by the King of Achen (one of the Kings in the Iſle of Sumatra) his old confederate, who after 29 daies ſiege took the City of Jor. What afterwards became of this King or Kingdom, I am not able to reſolve. In former times it did acknowledge him of Siam for the Lord in Chief.

3. More Northward yet lieth the Kingdom of PATHANE, denominated from Patane the chief City of it: but different from Patane, in the other India, as Cleveland in York-ſhire from Cleveland in Germany; or Holland in the Low-Countries from Holland in Lincolnſhire, as hath been fully ſhewn before. The City made of Wood and Reed, but artificially wrought and compoſed together: the Meſquit only (moſt of the people being Mahometans) is built of Brick: The Chinois make a great part of the Inhabitants of it, inſomuch that in this ſmall City there are ſpoke three Languages, viz. the Chineſe, uſed by that people, the Malayan (or Language of Malaca) which is that of the Natives; and the Siam, to the King whereof this ſmall Crown is Feuditary. Built of ſuch light ſtuffe and combuſtible matter, it muſt needs be in great danger of fire; and was moſt miſerably burnt in the year 1613. by ſome Javan Slaves in revenge of the death of ſome of their Fellows: at which time the whole City was conſumed with fire, the Meſquit, the Queens Court, and ſome few Houſes, excepted only. The Country governed of late years by Queens, who have been very kind to the Engliſh and Hollanders, granting them leave to erect their Factories in Patane. Not memorable for any great exploit by them performed, but that a late Queen a little before that diſmal fire, offended with the King of Pan or Pahan, who had married her Siſter, and reigned in a little Iſland not far off, ſhe ſent againſt him a Fleet of 70 Sail, and 4000 men: by which compelled to correſpond with her deſires, he brought his Queen and her Children with him to make up the Breach.

4. The Kingdom of SIAM, ſtrictly and ſpecially ſo called, is ſcituate on the main-land (the reſt before deſcribed being in the Cherſoneſe) betwixt Camboia on the Eaſt, Pegu on the Weſt, the Kingdom of Muntay on the North, and the main Ocean on the South. The Chief Cities of it, 1. Socotai, memorable for a Temple made wholly of mettal 80 ſpans in height, raiſed by one of the Kings; it being the cuſtom of this Country, that every King at his firſt coming to the Crown, is to build a Temple; which he adorned with high Steeples, and many Idols. 2. Quedda, renowned for the beſt Pepper, and for that cauſe very much frequented by forraign Merchants. 3. Tavay, upon the ſea-coaſt, where it joyneth to Pegu. Whence meaſuring along the ſhoars till we come to Champa before mentioned; being all within the Dominions of the King of Siam (not reckoning the Cherſoneſe into this Accompt) we have a Sea-coaſt of the length of 600 leagues. 4. Lugor, upon the Sea-ſide alſo, near that little Iſthmus, which joyneth the Cherſoneſe to the land; from whence to Malaca is 600 miles ſail all along the Coaſt. 5. Calantan, the head City of a little Kingdom, but ſubject to the Crown of Siam. 6. Siam, the chief City of this part of the Kingdom, which it giveth this name to. A goodly City, and very commodiouſly ſeated on the River Menam, for trade and Merchandiſe. So populous, and frequented by forreign Nations, that beſides the Natives, here are ſaid to be thirty thouſand houſholds of Arabians. The Houſes of it high built, by reaſon of the Annual deluge, during which time they live in the upper rooms; and unto every houſe a Boat for the uſe of the family. thoſe of the poorer ſort dwell in little ſheds, made of reed and timber; which they remove from place to place for the beſt convenience of their markets. And yet ſo ſtrong, that being beſieged by the Tanguan Conqueror, then King of Pegu. Anno 1567. with an Army of fourteen hundred thouſand fighting men, for the ſpace of twenty moneths together; it reſolutely held good againſt him: not gained at laſt by force but treaſon, one of the Gates being ſet open to him in the dead time of the night, and by that means the City taken. The people hereof are thought to be inclining to Chriſtianity; but hitherto ſo ill inſtructed in the principles of it, that they maintain amongſt many other ſtrange opinions, that after the end of 2000 years (from what time I know not) the world ſhall be conſumed with fire; and that under the Aſhes of it ſhall remain two Eggs, out of which ſhall come one man and one woman, who ſhall people the world anew.

5. MUANTAY the laſt of theſe Kingdoms, lieth betwixt Jangoma and Siam; memorable for nothing more than the City of Odia, or Udie, the principal of all the Kingdoms of Siam, and the uſual reſidence of thoſe Kings. Scituate on the banks of the River Caipumo, and containing in it 400000 Inhabitants, of which 50000 are trained to the wars, and in continual readineſs for preſent Service. For though this King be Lord of nine ſeveral Kingdoms, yet he uſeth none of them in his wars, but the natural Siamites, and thoſe of this City, and the reſt of his Subjects of Muantay. It is ſaid that for the uſe of this City only (being ſeated like Venice upon many little Iſlands not bridged together) there are no fewer than 200000 skiffes, and ſhallops; ſerving to waft the people from one place to another. By means hereof of great ſtrength, and almoſt impregnable. But being beleagured by the Tanguan or Bramain Conqueror with ten hundred thouſand fighting men (an Army big enough to have buried a greater City than this; if every man had but caſt a ſhovel full of earth upon it) it was wonne at laſt.

The Government of theſe Kings of Siam, was abſolute heretofore, if not tyrannical, he being ſole Lord of all the Land in his Kingdoms; which he either gave to his Nobles, or Farmed out to Husbandmen, during life or pleaſure, but never paſſed over unto any, the right of Inheritance. And theſe he grants unto his Subjects, beſides rents in money, upon condition to maintain a determinate number of Horſe, Foot, and Elephants: thereby inabled without further charge unto the Subject, to levy 20000 Horſe, and 250000 Foot for preſent ſervice; beſides far greater numbers out of the reſidue of his people, if occaſion be. And for his ordinary Guard he was ſaid to keep 6000 Souldiers, and 200 Elephants, of which beaſts he is reported to have 30000, of which every tenth Elephant is trained up to the war. By reaſon of ſo great a power he became Maſter of the Realms of Camboia, and Champa; held thoſe of Malaca, Jor, Pahan, and Patane, as his Vaſſals and Tributaries; with that of Jangoma and the Laos, under his Protection. But when the fatal time was come, and that his City of Siam was betrayed to the King of Pegu; he poyſoned himſelf upon the news: his Son becoming Tributary to the Peguan Victor. This Son of his, too much a Prince to be a Subject, revolted from a Son of the Peguan, a vicious and tyrannical King (degenerating from the gallantries of ſo worthy a Father, by whom he was beſieged in Siam with 900000 fighting men. Unable to reſiſt his Army if he had preſently declared ſuch a reſolution, he entertained the King with Treaties, and promiſes of delivering the City to him, till the third moneth after (which was March) when ordinarily the River was to overflow all the Countrey, for 120 miles about; by which ſudden and violent inundation, and the ſword together (the Siamites waiting diligently for the opportunity) there periſhed all of this great Army except 70 thouſand. After this blow, the conquering Siamite, Anno 1600 beſieged and endangered the City of Pegu, of which more anon: and dying in the year 1605. left his eſtate unto his Brother. Whoſe Son ſucceeding, ſetled a Factory in Siam of the Engliſh Merchants, Anno 1612. and was in a fair way of obtaining the ſoveraignty of Pegu, then deſtroyed and waſted; if the violent and unreſiſtable coming of the King of Barma had not croſſed him in it: to whom now ſubject with the reſt of the Indian Princes, on that ſide of the River.

6. PEGU.

PEGU is bounded on the Eaſt, with Jangoma, and a part of Siam: on the North, with the Kingdoms of Brama; on the Weſt and South, with the Kingdom and Gulf of Bengala. So called from Pegu the chief City, as that is by the name of the River upon which it ſtandeth. Divided commonly into the Kingdoms and eſtates of 1. Verma, 2. Macin, 3. Orrachan, 4. Martavan, and 5. Pegu ſpecially ſo called.

Pegu.

1. VERMA is the name of a ſmall Kingdom bordering upon Bengala; and ſo denominated from Verma, the chief Town thereof. A Kingdom which hath no Port or Haven at all; and therefore wholly freed of Moores and Mahometans, which can be ſaid of no other of theſe Indian Kingdoms.

The people black, naked about the Waſte, and covered beneath it only with a veil of Cotton: in matter of Religon Gentiles, and in war right valiant. This laſt apparent by the long and frequent wars which they had with the Peguans; to whom made tributary in concluſion, but not fully conquered.

2. MACHIN, ſo called from Macin the chief City thereof, is another of theſe Peguan Kingdoms. Of ſmall eſteem but for the great quantity of the ſweet wood, by the Latins called Lignum Vitæ, by the Natives Calamba, ſo much in uſe for Funerals and Baths (as was ſaid before) held alſo by the Indians for a ſoveraign and unparallel'd Medicine againſt many dangerous diſeaſes; great quantities whereof are brought hence yearly by the Merchant. One of the firſt Kingdoms which was conquered by the King of Barma (upon whom it bordereth) in the beginning of his Fortunes.

3. ORACHAN or Arrachan, lieth on the Weſt of Macin, and the South of Verma; environed round with mountains, and impaſſable woods. Chief Towns thereof, 1. Dianga, taken and deſtroyed by the Portugals, in the quarrels betwixt them and the King of Arrachan, Anno 1608. 2. Sundiva, ſcituate in an Iſland unto which it gives name, ſix leagues off from the continent of Bengala, to which it formerly belonged. Subdued by the Portugals, Anno 1602. and from them taken by this King about two years after, and made a Member of his Kingdom. The Iſland 30 Leagues in compaſs, very ſtrong, fruitful, and the Town well fortified. 3. Arrachan the head City, which gives name to all, diſtant from the Sea 45 miles, but ſeated on a large and capacious River. The King and Kingdom of no note, till the ruines of Pegu, to the Crown whereof it once pertained. In the deſolation of which State the King hereof combining with him of Tangu, beſieged the ſecond Peguan King in the Caſtle of Mecao; and had betwixt them the whole pillage of that wealthy City, together with the poſſeſſion of the beſt Towns of it. After this Victory, he returned to Arrachan in triumph, leading with him the white Elephant of the King of Pegu, ſumptuouſly adorned; the brother and two ſons of the Peguan following in the Pageant. A ſolemn and magnificent entry. The better to aſſure himſelf of his new dominions, this King beſtowed upon the Portugals the Fort of Siriangh, on the River of Pegu. For which favour, ill-requited by the Portugals, who had taken his Son, and put him to a grievous ranſom; they brake out into open wars. In the purſuit whereof, after many loſſes, the King recovered from them the Iſle of Sundiva; and manning out a Fleet of 1200 ſail (of which 75 were of ſo great burden, as to carry every one, twelve pieces of Ordnance) and in that Fleet 30000 Souldiers, 8000 hand-guns, and 3500 greater Pieces, beſieged the Fortreſs: aſſiſted in that action alſo by the King of Tangu. And though he failed in his deſign, yet like enough he had prevented the King of Ava, who took it in the year 1613. as before is ſaid, had he not been outed in the mean time of his own Kingdom, by the King of Barma: of whoſe great riſe, the conquering of the Realms of Macin and Arrachan, were the firſt foundation.

4. MARTAVAN, the richeſt of theſe Kingdoms lieth South to Arrachan, a little turning towards the Weſt. The Soyl ſo fertil, that it yieldeth three Harveſts in a year; and ſent annually 15 ſhips to Cochin, and as many to Malaca, laden with Rice. Rich alſo in Mines of Iron, Lead, Steel, Braſs, Silver, Gold, and Rubies, and very liberally provided of Springs and Rivers. The Forreſts well-ſtored with Harts, Boars, and Buffoles; ſtore of Pines and Palms: the woods with Sugar-Canes, many excellent fruits; the ordinary herbs and ſhrubs either Medicinal or odoriferous. The principal City of it called alſo Martavan, ſcituate on an Haven open at all times of the year, and not choaked with Sands, as uſually other Havens are in the Indian winter: of great trading, much ſplendor, and a temperate Ayr. Faithful unto the laſt to the Crown of Pegu, to the Kings whereof their own were ſubject; and in that conſtancy they twice repulſed the King of Siam, who then had conquered the moſt part of the Kingdom of Pegu. Angry whereat, the Siamite cauſed two of his cowardly Captains to be caſt into a chaldron of ſcalding Oyl; and at the third Aſſault became maſter of it. Bannalaius the old King hereof (99 years old) with his heir apparent, and 200000 of his Subjects being compelled to hide themſelves in the woods and Deſarts.

5. PEGU, the moſt predominant Kingdom, lieth like a Creſcent or half moon on the Gulf of Bengala; extending on that coaſt from Negrais unto Tavan, the next Town of Siam, for the ſpace of three hundred miles, and upwards; but little leſs in breadth, if not quite as much. So called from the River Pegu, which runs through the midſt of it, and gives this name alſo unto Pegu the moſt Noted City.

The Soyl hereof exceeding fruitful, by reaſon of the annual overflowings of the River, which do yearly fatten it, fit to bear Wheat, and of Rice yielding an incredible quantity. It affordeth alſo many Rubies, great numbers of Civet-Cats, plenty of Lacca, (a Gum there made by Ants, as here Bees make Wax) ſtore of Elephants, and abundance of Parats which ſpeak plainer, and are much fairer than in any place elſe.

The people of a mean ſtature, ſomwhat corpulent, and naturally beardleſs. If any ſtragling hair thruſt forth, they alwaies carry Pincers with them, to pull them out. Nimble and ſtrong, but yet not very fit for War; ſpending too much of their ſtrength in the love of women, to which moſt paſſionately addicted. They black their teeth, becauſe they ſay that dogs teeth be white; and wear no cloaths but on their heads, and about their nakedneſs. Said by the Jews to be deſcended from ſome of the Tribes of Iſrael, confined hither by Solomon: but by the Peguans themſelves, to be begotten of a dog and a China woman, which were

were ſaved here upon a Shipwrack. By Religion for the moſt part Gentiles, imagining innumerable worlds one after another, and a determinate number of gods for every world: more Orthodox, in aſſigning after this life according to the merits of the party deceaſed, one place of Torments, and another of Delights and pleaſures, if they had not added a third alſo for Satisfaction.

Chief Cities of this Kingdom, 1. Coſmi, ſeated in a territory full of Woods, as thoſe Woods of Tigers, Wild Bores, Apes, and Parats; the houſes made of Canes, which ſerve here for timber (ſome of them being as big as Hogs-heads) covered over with Thatch. 2. Jocabel, a great City on the River Pegu, 3. Dian, on the ſame River alſo, where they make Barks or Veſſels as big as Galeaſſes; which ſerve both for Trade and habitation. 4. Coilan, a City four-ſquare, and each ſquare four miles. 5. Lanagon, a pleaſant Town, and full of Palm-trees. 6. Dala, in which were the Kings Stables for his ordinary Elephants: his four White Elephants (for ſo many he had) being alwaies kept about the Court, not ſeen abroad, but in great ſolemnities, when trapped in Furnitures of Gold, and no leſs honoured by the people, than the King himſelf; called therefore King of the White Elephant, by the neighbouring Princes. 7. Silvanpede, where many victualing Barks are made to ſerve for dwelling on the Sea. 8. Meccao, where they uſe to unload ſuch Goods, as are to paſs by Land to Pegu. Neighboured by the ſtrongeſt Caſtle in all this Kingdom, and therefore choſen by the King for his place of Retreat; when diſtreſſed by the Kings of Arrachan and Tangu. To the laſt of which, making choyce to yield up his Perſon, with his Wife and Children, becauſe he had married him to his Siſter; he was by him perfidiouſly and baſely murdered. 9. Siriangh, a ſtrong piece on the mouth of the River, given by the King of Arrachan to the Portugals, and by them committed to the keeping of Philip de Britto, in the year one thouſand ſix hundred, or thereabouts. Who having made it good againſt him, and the King of Tangu his Aſſociate, for the ſpace of Thirteen Years together: was at laſt forced to yield himſelf Priſoner to the King of Ava, by whom cruelly tortured on a Spit. 10. Pegu, the Glory of theſe Parts, great, ſtrong, and beautiful: Divided into two Towns, the Old and the New; the Old inhabited by Merchants, the New by the King and his Nobility. The Houſes made of Wood, but covered with Tiles; a Coco-Tree before every Houſe, yielding a comfortable ſhade, and a pleaſant ſhew. The Streets as ſtraight as any Line, and ſo broad that ten or twelve men may ride abreſt in the narroweſt of them. In Figure ſquare, each ſquare having five Gates, beſides many Turrets; all of them beautifully guilded. The whole well walled with Wals of Stone, environed on all ſides with great Ditches; and in the midſt the Royal Palace, walled and ditched about, moſt ſumptuouſly guilded: but ſpecially the Temple or Idol-Chappel, the Wals were hid with Gold, the Roof tiled with Silver.

In this magnificent Palace lived the Peguan Kings, in as much pomp and pleaſure as the world could yield: his Empire not extending only over theſe Kingdoms now deſcribed, but over all the Provinces or Kingdoms of the Bramanes alſo; which he governed by his ſeveral Vice-Roys, or rather TRIBUTARY Kings. A happineſs too great to continue long. For in the year 1567. the Vice-Roy or Tributary King of Tangu, by the aid of his faction, and reputation of his Vertues, entred into rebellion, and ſlaying the Nobles of the Land, uſurped that Kingdom. After this he ſubdued the cities and kingdoms of Calam, Melintay, Prom, Miranda, and Ava, inhabited all of them by the Brames and Bramanes, and therefore taking to himſelf the title of the King of Brama, becauſe his fame and Fortunes took their Riſe from his Victories over them. Following the courſe of his ſucceſſes, he firſt aſſailed the Cities of Odia and Siam, but repulſed with loſſe. To make amends for which misfortune, he beleagured Pegu, and ſubdued it; and by the reputation which he got in that action, returning to the Siege of Siam, had it yielded to him. Dying, he gave the Kingdom of Ava unto one of his Brothers; that of Prom, to one of his Grandſons, the Kingdom of Jangoma to a younger ſon, but born after the time of his obtaining the Crown of Pegu; and finally that of Pegu, with the Soveraignty over all the reſt, to his eldeſt Son, a Prince of vicious and tyrannical nature; and not more cruel to his Subjects, than they diſobedient to him. Whereupon preparations are made on both ſides, the people to defend their liberty, the King to preſerve his Royalty. During theſe civil diſcords, the [illegible] King of Siam, whoſe late overthrow was not yet fully digeſted, came violently into the Countrey of Pegu; burning Corn, Graſs, and Fruits, killing man, woman, and child, and having ſatisfied his Fury, returned to his home. This ſpoyl of the Fruits of the Earth, was but a prologue to an unſupportable famine, which conſumed all the inhabitants of this flouriſhing Kingdom, except ſuch whom the Granaries of the City of Pegu preſerved, Anno 1598. For here the Fathers devoured their children, the ſtronger preyed upon the weaker; not only devouring their more fleſhy parts, but their Entrals alſo: nay they broke up the skuls of ſuch as they had ſlain, and ſucked out their brains. This calamity incited another Tributary Prince of Tangu, to make his beſt advantage out of his neighbours affliction; though made his Brother-in-law, and advanced to great honours by his Father. For juſtly fearing the diſpleaſure of his angry Prince, to whoſe aid he had refuſed to come, when ſent for by him; he joyned himſelf with the King of Arrachan, beſieged his Lord and Soveraign in the Fort of Meccao. Brought to extremities, the unfortunate Prince, thought beſt to put himſelf into the hands of his brother Tangu; who aſſaulted and entred Pegu, where he found as much treaſure as 600 Elephants, and as many horſes could conveniently carry away, this havock being made, he villanouſly murdered the King, Queen and their Children, and departed; leaving the Gleaning of his Spoil to the King of Arrachan: who Anno 1600. was expelled by the King of Siam, who enjoyed it not long. For the King of Barma having with an Army of an hundred thouſand fighting men, and fourty

Pegu. ty thouſand Elephants, ſubdued the Kingdoms of Macin, and Arrachan, followed the Currents of his Victories; conquered Siam, drove the King thereof from PEGU, where he hath built a moſt Magnificent Palace: and is now the ſole Monarch of the twelve Kingdoms of this India.

A more particular relation of this King, and his new-ſettled Eſtate, we cannot yet underſtand: what his Revenues are, what his Government, what his Forces. Merchants, whoſe inquiſitiveneſs into the State-Matters of other Princes, is dangerous to their trading, cannot give us any full ſatisfaction: Scholars and Statiſts are not permitted to obſerve; and ſuch of the Natives as could give us the moſt light, are not ſuffered to travel. Only we may conjecture by the great wealth of thoſe ſeveral Princes, and the vaſt Armies by them raiſed in their ſeveral Territories; that his Annual Revenues, Caſualties, and united Forces muſt be almoſt infinite.

And ſo much for INDIA.

OF THE ORIENTAL ISLAND.

THE ORIENTAL ISLANDS, ſo called from their ſcituation in the Oriental or Eaſtern Seas, may be divided into the Iſlands of 1. Japan, 2. the Philippinæ, and Iſles adjoyning, 3. the Iſlands of Bantam, 4. the Moluccoes, 5. thoſe called Sindæ, or the Celebes, 6. Java, 7. Borneo, 8. Sumatra, 9. Ceilan, and 10. certain others of leſs note

1. JAPAN

JAPAN is an aggregate body of many Iſlands, ſeparated by ſmall Gulfs, Streights, and turnings of the Sea; but taking name from Japan, the chief of all. Some reckon them to be 66. in all; others aſcribe that number to ſo many Kingdoms, into which theſe Iſlands (be they in number more or leſs) uſe to be divided. But whatſoever the number be (the certainty whereof I can no where find) there are three only of accompt, to which the ſeveral petit Kingdoms are now reduced: that is to ſay, I. Japan ſpecially ſo called, which containeth 53 Kingdoms; of which 26 are under the King of Meaco, 12 under the King of Amagunce, the other 15 under other Princes of inferior note. II. Ximo, which containeth in it nine Realms, the principal whereof are thoſe of Bungo and Figen. III. Xicoum, which comprehendeth four only of theſe petit Seigneuries.

JAPAN, the chief of all theſe Iſlands, to which the reſidue may be accompted of but as Appurtenances, is ſcituate over againſt the ſtreights of Anian, towards which it looketh to the North: diſtant from New Spain on the Eaſt 150 leagues, or 450 Engliſh miles; and 60 leagues from Cantan, a Province of China, oppoſite to it on the Weſt. On the South it hath the vaſt Ocean, and thoſe infinite ſholes of Iſlands which are called the Phillippinæ, and the Iſles neighbouring upon them. Extending in length from Weſt to Eaſt 200 leagues, but the breadth not proportionable thereunto: in ſome places not above ten leagues over, and in the broadeſt parts but thirty.

The Country Mountainous and barren, but of a very healthy air, if not too much ſubject unto cold: yet in ſome places they have Wheat ripe in the moneth of May; but their Rice, which is their principal ſuſtenance, they gather not before September. The ſurface of the Earth clothed with woods and forreſts, in which ſome Cedars of ſo tall and large a body that one of them onely is ſufficient to make a Pillar for a Church: the bowels of it ſtored with divers metals, and amongſt others with ſuch inexhauſtable mines of gold, that Paulus Venetus reporteth ſome of the Palaces of their Kings to be covered, in his time, with ſheets of gold, as ours in Europe are with lead. But I find no ſuch matter in our latter travellors. Their fields and Medows full of Cattle, but hitherto not made acquainted with the making of Butter; their fens much viſited by wild Ducks, as their houſe-yards with Pigeons, Turtles, Quails, and Pullen.

The People for the moſt part of good underſtanding, apt to learn, and of able memories; cunning and ſubtile in their dealings. Of body vigorous and ſtrong, accuſtomed to bear Arms until 60 years old. Their complexion of an Olive-Colour, their beards thin, and the one half of the hair of their heads ſhaved off. Patient they are of Pain, ambitious of glory, uncapable of ſuffering wrong, but can withal diſſemble their reſentments of it till opportunity of revenge. They reproach no man for his poverty, ſo it come not by his own unthriftineſs, for which cauſe they deteſt all kinds of gaming, as the ways of ill-husbandry and generally abhor Slandering, Theft, and Swearing. Their mourning commonly is in white, as their feaſts in black; their teeth they colour black alſo to make them beautiful; they mount on the right ſide of the horſe, and ſit, (as we are uſed to riſe) when they entertain. In Phyſick they eat ſalt things, ſharp and raw; and in their ſalutations, they put off their ſhooes. The very Antipodes of our world in cuſtoms, though not in ſite: and the true type or Figure of the old Engliſh Puritan, oppoſite to the Papiſts in things fit and decent, though made ridiculous many times by that oppoſition. In other things they do much reſemble thoſe of China, if not the more ceremonious of the two: waſhing their Infant-children in the neareſt River, as ſoon as born; and putting off their ſhooes when they go to meat.

The People have but one language, but that ſo intermingled with the words of other Nations, that it ſeems rather to be many languages than one. They have long uſed the Art of Printing, which probably enough they might have from China: the Characters whereof are a kind of Brachygraphy, and ſignifie not only letters, but ſome whole words alſo. In matter of Religion, Gentiles, adoring antiently the Sun, Moon, and the Stars of Heaven; and giving divine honor to wild beaſts, and the Stags of the Forreſts: but ſpecially worſhipping ſome of their deceaſed Prieſts and Princes, by the names of Fotoques, and Cames; to the firſt of which they uſe to pray for goods of the other world, and to the laſt for Temporal bleſſings. Their Prieſts they call by the name of Bonzes, ſetled in goodly Convents, and endowed with very large Revenues: who though divided into eleven different (if not contrary) Sects, do well enough agree in denying the providence of God, and the immortality of the ſoul. Of late times by the care and diligence of the Jeſuits, Chriſtianity hath begun to take footing here; whether with ſuch a large increaſe as their letters, called Epiſtolæ Japanicæ, have been pleaſed to tell us, I am ſomewhat doubtful. They tell us there of ſome Kings of theſe Iſlands, whom they have converted and baptized; that within 50 miles of Meaco, they had 50 Churches, 200 at the leaſt in all; and that in the year 1587 the number of their Converts was two hundred thouſand. Of this, if the one half be but true, we have great cauſe to praiſe God for it, and to give them the commendation of their pains and induſtry: not letting paſs the memory of the firſt Adventurer, who was Father Xavier, one of the firſt foundation of this Society, (employed in this buſineſs by Ignatius, the firſt founder of it) who landed here about the year 1556.

Rivers of note I find not any, though the Iſland be generally well-watered: more memorable for two mountains in it, than for all the Rivers. One of which called Figenoiama, is ſaid to tranſcend the clouds in hight; the other (but without a name) uſeth to caſt forth dreadful flames, like Sicilian Ætna: on the top whereof the Devil environed with a white and ſhining cloud, doth ſometimes ſhew himſelf unto ſuch of his Votaries, as live about this hill an abſtemious life, like the ancient Hermits.

Chief Cities of the whole Iſlands, 1. Meaco, ſeated in Japan, and the chief of that Iſland, formerly 21 miles in compaſs, but now by reaſon of their wars, ſcarce a third part of it. The ordinary reſidence of the Triumviri, or three principal Magiſtrates, which ſway the affairs of all theſe Iſlands: of whom the firſt entituled Zazo, hath the chief care in ſacred matters; the 2d named Voo, doth preſide in Civil; and the third called Cabacuma, manageth the concernments of Peace and War. At this time it is uſed for the common Empory of the trade of China: that people not permitting Merchants to come amongſt them, but bringing to this place their merchandiſe, as the common Staple; where they are ſure to meet Chapmen to buy it of them. 2. Oſſacay, a great and renowned City, conceived to be the richeſt in all the Eaſt; of ſo great trade, that every ordinary Merchant is ſaid to be worth 30000 Crowns. 3. Fenoiama, or Figenoiama, at the foot of the hill ſo called, and about nine miles from Meaco. An Univerſity of Bonzes, for whoſe convenience and ſtudy, one of the Kings of Japan is ſaid to have founded in this Town, and about that Mountain, 3800 Convents, and to indow it with the third part of the Revenues of the Kingdom of Vorn. Theſe Colledges or Convents now reduced to 800 only: but ſtill the Univerſity of ſuch fame and credit, that they give not the command or government of it unto any but the Kings ſon, or his neareſt kinſman. 4. Banoum, another of their Univerſities, where they give degrees; affirmed to be as big as Paris. 5. Bongo, the chief of all that Province; in which the Jeſuites have a Colledge; the Japonites learn the Portugal language, and the Europæans that of Japan. 6. Coia, the ſepulture of their Princes, or of ſome part of them: it being anciently ordained, that if their whole bodies be not here interred, they muſt at leaſt ſend one of their teeth. 7. Fiongo, about 18 leagues from Meaco, the ſubject of many great misfortunes. Deſtroyed in part by Nabunanga one of the Kings of Meaco, the ſubject of many great misfortunes. Deſtroyed in part by Nabunanga one of the Kings of this Iſland, who lived Anno 1550. that which he left, terribly ſcattered by an Earth-quake, Anno 1596. moſt of the ruins of it ſince conſumed by fire. 8. Amangaſaqui, five leagues from the Sea. 9. Surungo, as big as London with the Suburbs. 10. Edoo, a much fairer then that, and the chief ſeat of one of their Kings. 11. Firando, a Seat-Royal alſo of ſome other King, where, in the year 1613. there was a Factory eſtabliſhed for the Engliſh Merchants. 12. Ochinoſamanus, one of their moſt noted Havens. 13. Toſa, or Touſa, giving name to one of the Iſlands.

Theſe Iſlands utterly unknown to the Antients, were firſt diſcovered by Antonio Mota, a Portugal, in the year 1542. I know Mercator taketh it for the Aurea Cherſoneſus ſpoken of by Ptolomy; and I cannot chuſe but wonder at it. The ſituation of it ſo far diſtant from that of the Cherſoneſe, that either Mercator muſt be groſſely out in his conjecture; or Ptolomy as much miſtaken in his informations; which no man hitherto can juſtly accuſe him of. But paſſing by the improbability of Mercators fancy, we are to know, that in former times theſe Iſlands were ſubject to one Prince, whom they obeyed & reverenced with great affection; which government continued, as themſelves report, 1600 years in great State and Majeſty. But in the end, the Dairi, (ſo they call their King) addicting himſelf wholly unto pleaſures, and laying the burden of Government upon other mens ſhoulders; his Deputies or inferiour Officers uſurped Regal power, plumed themſelves with the Eagles feathers, uſed in their ſtile the name of Jucatas, or Kings; and in a word, left nothing but the name of Dairi, to their Lord and Soveraign. His iſſue to this day do enjoy that title, but little elſe: the Princes bordering on Meaco, once his Royal-ſeat, hardly allowing him ſufficient means to find himſelf Victual and Apparel; but otherwiſe befooling him with as glorious titles, as if he were poſſeſſed ſtill of his ancient power. Only they let him execute the place of an Harald, in giving Arms, & ſelling dignities and honours; which brings him in the greateſt profit he hath to trnſt to. Of all theſe Kings, he which can make himſelf Lord of Coquinai (which are the five Realms about Meaco) is called Prince of Tenza, and eſteemed Soveraign of the reſt. Which hight of dignity, Nabunanga before mentioned, in his time attained to; after him Faxiba, and ſince him Taicoſuma: that ſovereignty being now in a likely way to become hereditary. For Faxiba having brought under his command moſt of theſe ſmall Kingdoms; tranſported the vanquiſhed Kings, & the chief of their Nobles, out of one Country into another: to the end that being removed out of their own Realms, and amongſt ſtrange ſubjects, they ſhould remain without means to revolt againſt him. A merciful and prudent courſe. Having reduced into his power at leaſt 50 of theſe petit Kingdoms, he divided the greateſt part of the conquered territories, amongſt his own faithful friends and followers: binding them to ſupply him with certain numbers of men upon all occaſions. By which, and other politick courſes, he ſo ſetled himſelf in thoſe eſtates, that Taicoſuma his ſon ſucceeded without oppoſition; who had he lived would have aboliſhed the vain title of the Dairi, or took it to himſelf as he had the power; ſolicited thereto by the King of China. But dying in or about the year 1607. Fereiciſama his ſon ſucceeded; and may be ſtill alive for ought I can learn.

What the Revenues of this King are, it is hard to ſay. I gueſs them to be very great, in regard he maketh two millions of Crowns yearly, of the very Rice which he reſerveth to himſelf from his own demeaſn. The ſtore of Gold, and precious ſtones which theſe Iſlands yield, being wholly his, muſt needs add much unto his Coffers. And for his power, it is ſaid that Faxiba was able to raiſe ſo good an Army out of the eſtates demiſed by him to his faithful followers; that he reſolved once on the Conqueſt of China: and to that end had cauſed Timber to be felled for 2000 veſſels for the tranſporting of his Army. And had he lived a little longer, tis probable enough he might have ſhaken that great Kingdom, the Japonois being ſo much the better Souldiers, that a ſmall party of them would defeat a good Army of Chineſe. The fear whereof made the King of China after his deceaſe, correſpond ſo fairly with his Succeſſour.

2. The PHILIPPINÆ, and Iſles adjoyning.

South of Japan, lieth a great fry of Iſlands which are now called PHILIPPINÆ, in honour of Philip the ſecond, King of Spain; in whoſe time diſcovered by Legaſpi a Spaniſh Captain, Anno 1564. Strangely miſtaken by Mercator for the Baruſſæ of Ptolomy, thoſe being placed by him in the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala, five degrees South of the Æquator; theſe ſcituate on the Eaſt of China, in 13 or 14 degrees of Northern Latitude: thoſe being only five in number, theſe reckoned as above ten thouſand.

The Air in all of them generally very mild and temperate, eſpecially in the mid-land parts; that on the ſhores, ſomewhat inclining unto heat. The ſoil abundantly fruitful of all Commodities both for neceſſity, and delights; that is to ſay, Rice, Pulſe, Wax, Honey, Sugar Canes, many pleaſant Fruits, the faireſt Figs of all the world, plenty of Fiſh, variety of Birds and Beaſts, as well wild as tame, great ſtore of Cotton-Wool, ſome Mines of Gold, and of other Mettals great abundance.

Of all theſe Iſlands there are only fourty in poſſeſſion of the King of Spain, belonging properly to Aſia, but by him placed under the Government of New Spain in America; becauſe Diſcovered by Legaſpi at the inſtigation or procurement of Don Lewis de Velaſco, who was then Vice-Roy of that Province. In theſe fourty Iſlands there are thought to be at the leaſt a million of people, ſubject to that Crown; many of which have been converted by the Friers and Jeſuites unto Chriſtianity. Of theſe the principal in account are, I. LUSSON, affirmed to contain in compaſs 1000 miles; beautified by the Spaniards with a fair City, ſeated on a commodious Haven, which they call Manilla; in which reſides the Deputy or Lieutenant Governor for all theſe Iſlands; and the Biſhop of the Philippines for ordering all affairs of thoſe Churches. II. MINDANAO, 380 Leagues in compaſs; in which are many good Towns, as 1. Cailon, 2. Pavados, 3. Subut, 4. Dapiro, and ſome others, III. TANDAIR, more fruitful then any of the reſt, and of good extent, 160 Leagues in circuit; more ſpecially called Philippina, becauſe firſt diſcovered and ſo named. IV. PALLOHAN, as much miſtaken by Mercator for the Bazacata of Ptolomy.

Theſe, with the reſt, ſubject in former times to the king of China, till they did voluntarily abandon them, and confine their Empire within the Continent. On this relinquiſhment the people fell into Civil Wars, every man getting what he could for himſelf, and the ſtronger preying on the weaker: which factions and diviſions gave great help to the Spaniard, in the conqueſt of thoſe few which are under their power. Iſlands of more importance to the Spaniards, than is commonly thought, and therefore furniſhed by them at their firſt Plantations, with Bulls, Kine, Horſes, and Mares, which before they wanted, and do now reaſonably abound with. For beſides the abundance of victuals, and ſome plenty of Gold which they find therein, the ſcituation is very fit to ſubdue the reſt of the neighbouring Iſlands; to ſettle the commerce betwixt China, and Mexico; to bring on a continual Trade betwixt the Iſlands of this Sea, and thoſe of America; and finally to prevent the Moors or Arabians from planting their Mahometaniſm any further Eaſtwards.

Not far from theſe, on the South of Japan bending towards the weſt, is another great heap of Rocks and Iſlands. Some of them rich in Gold, and furniſhed with very choiſe fruits, and other neceſſaries; and peopled with a ſtout and warlike breed of men, well skilled in Archerie. The chief whereof have the names of 1. Lequin Major, 2. Lequin Minor, 3. Hermoſa, 4. Reix Magos, &c. of which little memorable, but that Hermoſa, as the Spaniards, or Formoſa as the Latines call it, hath lately got the name of New-Holland, becauſe not long ſince taken, planted, and ſtrongly fortified by ſome Adventurers of that Country. And not far off are thoſe called 5. Ciumbabon, in which is ſaid to be a Plant-animal, or ſenſible tree; 6. Mattan, unfortunately remarkable for the death of Megallanus, ſlain there in a battel with the Natives, in favor of the king of 7. Sebat, an adjoyning Iſland; by the King whereof he had been kindly entertained, and whom by his perſwaſions he had gained to the Chriſtian Faith, and baptized him by the name of Charles, in honor of Charles Emperor and king of Spain, under whom he ſerved in this preſent voyage. But long this miſcreant King (Hamabar he was called before his Baptiſm) continued not in this good opinion; treacherouſly killing John de Serran chief Pilot of Magellanus's ſmall Navy, with about 70 of his men, and probably relapſing to his former Gentiliſm.

Bandan.

3. The Iſles of BANDAN.

THE Iſles of BANDAN are in number ſeven, that is to ſay, 1. Mira, 2. Roſalargium, 3. Aii, 4. Rom, 5. Nerra. 6. Ganuape, the leaſt of all, continually burning, and for that cauſe deſerted of its inhabitants, and 7. Bandan, bigger than any of the reſt, and therefore giving name to all. Scituate South of the Philippines, in the ſeventh degree of Southern Latitude. More fruitful of Nutmegs, than any other of all theſe parts, for which cauſe never without the concourſe of foreign Merchants from Java, Malaca, and China; and of late times from theſe Northen Countries of Europe alſo. Where by the way, the Nutmeg-tree is like a Peach, or Peach-tree, the innermoſt part whereof is the Nutmeg it ſelf, covered over with a thin film or coat, which we call by the Arabian name of Maciz, or Mace; and over that the fruit it ſelf, as it is in Peaches, Malacotons, and ſuch fruits as thoſe.

The People barbarous and rude, ſlothful, of weak bodies, and dull of wit; living confuſedly together without rule or order. Some of them ſtill continue in their ancient Paganiſm; but the greateſt part are thought to be Mahometans; in which Religion very zealous, and ſo devout, that they will not go unto their work or worldly buſineſſes, till they have viſited the Meſquits, and done their devotions. A ſhame or Pattern ſhall I ſay in this, unto many Chriſtians. All of them bloody and revengeful; but yet ſo far from wronging the body of a Dead Enemy, that they uſe to Bury with ſweet Odours.

Some Towns they have, of which the principal, 1. Nera, and 2. Lontoor, joyned in a league againſt the reſt; the quarrel riſing from the cutting down of certain trees, proceeding to the butchery of one another, and ending in the loſs of their common liberty. Subject in ſhew to the King of Botone, one of the Moluccoes, but too much at their own diſpoſing. They had not elſe entred into quarrels with one another. Which opportunity being taken by the watchful Hollanders, they did not only ſettle four Factories there; but for the ſecurity of their trade, and to aw the Natives, they have built three Forts. They had alſo turned one of their Meſquits to a Fortreſs. Whereat the people were ſo incenſed that they promiſed liberty to their Slaves, to get them out of it: who falling deſperately on, fired it over their heads, and killed every man of them. The Engliſh Merchants have ſome trading in theſe Iſlands, more acceptable than the other, becauſe not ſo inſolent, and grounding their poſſeſſion on a better title; the people of Lantore, voluntarily ſubmitting themſelves to the protection of King James, the firſt Monarch of the Britiſh Iſlands, and to his uſe giving poſſeſſion of their Country to Captain Robert Hayes, November 24. 1620. The like done at the ſame time by the Inhabitants of Wayre, and Roſingeng, two other Iſlands, which if they be not the ſame with thoſe of Mira, and Roſolorgium ſpoken of before, are probably ſome leſſer Iſlands, neighbouring to Poleron and Poolaway, of which more hereafter.

There is not far off another Iſland, not in this accompt, called Timor, ſcituate in the tenth degree of Southern Latitude; the chief of many little Iſlands which lie round about it; but not elſe obſervable; except it be for that abundance of Sanders both white and yellow, which growing there, is greedily exchanged by the Inhabitants, for Iron, Hatchets, Swords, Knives, and the like commodities.

4. The MOLUCCOES.

THE MOLUCCOES are in number many, the King of Terenate which is one of them, being ſaid to have dominion over 70 Iſlands; but the determinate number of them I do no where find. Scituate on both ſides of the Æquator, and conſequently of an hot and intemperate air: the ſoyl ſo dry and ſpongious, that it ſucketh up the greateſt ſhowre of Rain that doth fall amongſt them, before it can paſs into the Sea. Not very well furniſhed with neceſſaries for the life of man; but that defect ſupplied with the abundance of ſpices which are growing here, Cinnamon, Ginger, Nutmegs, Maſtick, Alloes, Pepper, and the like commodities; for which, the Merchants bring them all things that the Country wants. But tis the Clove, which is the great Riches of theſe Iſlands, and peculiar in a manner to them. A Spice, which groweth on Trees, like Bay-trees, yielding bloſſoms, firſt white, then green (at which time they yield the pleaſanteſt ſmell in the world) and laſt of all Red and hard, which are the Cloves. Of nature ſo extreme hot, that if a Pail of water ſhould only ſtand in the Room in which they are cleanſed and ſorted, the Cloves in two days would dry it up. Of which nature the unſpun ſilks of China are affirmed to be.

The People for the moſt part Idolaters, intermixt with ſome Mahometans dwelling on the ſhores; and of late times with Chriſtians in their ſeveral Factories. Of ſeveral Originals, and different languages, but all in general fraudulent, perfidious, treacherous, inhumane, and of noted wickedneſs. Few of them clothed, nor much caring to hide their ſhame. Not civillized by the cohabitation of more modeſt and civil Nations. Pitty ſuch ill conditions ſhould be lodged in ſuch handſome bodies: the people being ſaid to be better proportioned than the other Indians; and for ſtrength and valour not followed by any of them.

Of all the Iſlands which paſs under this name, there are not above five or ſix of any reckoning: that is to ſay, 1. Terenate, 2. Tidor, 3. Macir, 4. Rachian, 5. Machian, and 6. Botone: none of them above ſix leagues in compaſs, many not ſo much; the whole cluſter of them thronged together in a girdle of no more than 25 leagues in the circumference, yet of ſuch conſequence and importance, that the two famous voyages of Americus Veſputius, and Ferdinand Magelanus the firſt, employed by Emanuel King of Portugal,

Selebes.

gal, the other by Charles Emperor and King of Spain, were undertaken only to find out the next way unto them.

Of the reſt, Kachian and Tidore have their proper Kings; So hath Botone alſo, if that be one of them: the King whereof had anciently ſome title and authority over thoſe of Bandan, Macir, and Machian, are ſubject to the King of Terenate, who is a Mahometan in Religion, and ſaid to be the Lord of 70 Iſlands. This the moſt puiſſant Member of this ſcattered body; and for that cauſe moſt aimed at by all Competitors; the Spaniards having here one Fortreſs, and the Hollanders three: both Nations hated by the Natives, whom they conſume and waſt in the wars betwixt them, but of the two, the Spaniard looked on by the people as the more a Gentleman; the other ſtomached and deſpiſed for their ſordid dealings. Nothing elſe memorable in the ſtory of Chorography of them, but that they were diſcovered by the conduct of Magellanus, in the Reign of Charles the Fifth, who employed him in it, Anno 1519. And that there is in Ternate a prodigious Mountain, in height above the clouds of the Air, and in nature agreeing with the Element of Fire, which it ſeems to mount to; huge flames whereof, with dreadful thunders, and a dark ſmoak, it ſends forth continually. Reckoned by ſome amongſt theſe Iſlands, but howſoever neighbouring near them are thoſe of Polerone, and Poolaway; the firſt more plentiful of Cloves, the ſecond more proper for the Nutmeg, but both acknowledging the Soveraignty of the Kings of England; for Polerone by the general and voluntary Act of all the chief men of the Countrey, was ſurrendred into the power of King James, the poſſeſſion of it being given for his Majeſties uſe to Captain Courtop, December 23, Anno 1616. no other Nation at that time having intereſt in it, or Pretenſions to it, which notwithſtanding, it was not long after ſeiſed on by the inſolent and ungrateful Hollanders, who being to reſtore it upon compoſition, cut down all the Clove-trees, ſo to deprive the Engliſh of the benefit of them; Poolaway made the like ſurrender at the ſame time alſo, declared by ſetting up the Engliſh Colours on the top of their Caſtle, giving to Courtop a green Turf (whereby as by livery and ſeiſin) to take poſſeſſion of the Countrey, promiſing the annual Tribute of a Branch of Nutmegs, and that they ſhould ſell neither Mace nor Nutmegs to any, but to theſe of the Engliſh Nation. The like done alſo at or near the ſame time, by Wayre and Roſingen, two other Iſlands of theſe Seas, which if they be not theſe two of Bandoo pointed at before, muſt needs be brought within the number of this ſcattered Company.

5. The SINDÆ or SELEBES.

NEar the Moluccoes, and almoſt intermingled with them, are a ſet of Iſlands which Ptolomy calleth SINDÆ, and the Moderns, SELEBES; many in tale, but not above four of any weight, that is to ſay, 1. SELEBES. 2. Gilolo. 3. Amboina. 4. Macaſſer; of which the two firſt are ſcituate under the Æquator, and the laſt ſomwhat on the South of it: all of them in the time of Ptolomy inhabited by Anthropophagi, and a long time after; inſomuch as the Kings of the Moluccoes, did uſe to ſend their condemned perſons into theſe Iſlands, there to be devoured. Which ſaid in general, we will take a more particular view of them, as they lie before us.

1. SELEBES, which gives name to the reſt, and hath under it many leſſer Iſlands, is large and rich. The Soyl thereof exceeding fertile, the people tall and comly, and of colour, not ſo much black as ruddy, much given to Piracy, and all Idolaters till of late. Governed by many Kings or petit Princes, the cauſe of much contention, and many quarrels: three of which are ſaid to have been converted to Chriſtianity, and for that cauſe much hated by their heatheniſh Subjects, who thereupon rebelled againſt them. It is ſcituate Weſt of the Moluccoes, and hath therein a Town called Sion, honoured with the abode of one of their Chriſtian Kings: but poſſibly not ſo called until their converſion; the proper name thereof being Cian. 2. Nibon, in the South, and 3. Terolli in the North parts of it.

2. GILOLO, called alſo Batachina, is one of thoſe Iſlands, which our late Navigators include under the name of Del Moro. Of large extent, conceived to be half as big as Italy. By that accompt (the truth whereof I do very much doubt) greater then Zeilan is in compaſs, though of leſs reputation; that being governed by its own Princes, this ſubject for the moſt part to the King of Ternate. Scituate Eaſt of the Moluccos, exceeding plentiful of Rice, well ſtored with wild Hens, and on the ſhores, Provided of a kind of Shell-fiſh, which in taſt much reſembleth Mutton. A Tree they have which they call by the name of Sagu, of the pith whereof they make their Bread; and of the ſap or juice of it they compoſe a pleaſing drink, which ſerveth them in ſtead of Wine. The Air intemperately hot; the People well proportioned, but rude and ſavage; ſome of them Gentiles, ſome Mahometans, of which laſt Religion is their King; the chief Town of it is Batchame, or Batachina (whence the new name unto the Iſland) in which the Hollanders have a Fort to defend their Factory.

3. AMBOINA South of the Æquator, and the third of the Sindæ, hath many Iſlands of leſs note, which depend upon it, and do communicate in the name. In compaſs about five hundred miles, ſaid by Maginus to be extreamly rough and barren; which muſt be underſtood with reference to ſome kinds of Grain. For otherwiſe it is very fertile, abundantly productive of Rice, Citrons, Limons, Orenges, Coquo-nuts, Sugar-Canes, and other Fruits; and very plentiful of Cloves. Which laſt, as it makes ſome to reckon it amongſt the Moluccos, ſo may it be the Reaſon why the Iſland is defective in ſuch Fruits as require much moyſture: the Clove being of ſo hot a temper, as before was noted, that it draweth to it all the moyſture of the Earth, which is near unto it.

The people much given to Piracy, wherewith they do infeſt all the neighbouring Iſlands. Defamed for Cannibals, or man-eaters: it being here a conſtant cuſtom, that when their Parents were grown old, or ſick of any incurable diſeaſe, they give them to one another to be eaten by them. They have one Town of more note then other, which they call Amboyna, by the name of the Iſland. Firſt taken by the Portugals, gals, and by them ſecured with a ſtrong Fortreſs: during whoſe power here, the Jeſuites who had in it their ſeveral Reſidences, converted many to Chriſtianity. But in the year 1605. the Iſland and the Fort both were conquered by Stephen of Hagan, for the States of the United Provinces: who having cleared the Country of the Portugal Forces, poſſeſſed themſelves of it. Received by the Natives at their firſt coming, with Joy and Triumphs: but they got little by the change, as they found ſoon after; their new Maſters being more burdenſom, and inſufferable, than the old had been. For claiming in the right of Conqueſt, they think they may oppreſs the Natives by the Law of Arms; and ingroſs all trade unto themſelves as the true Proprietaries. Infamous even amongſt the rude and ſavage Indians for their barbarous inhumanity executed upon ſome of the Engliſh (the greateſt Patrons under God which they have in the world) whom in the year 1618. they moſt cruelly tortured, and moſt wickedly murdered; under colour of ſome Plot to betray their Fortreſs: but in plain truth for no other reaſon but becauſe they were more beloved by the Inhabitants, and began to gain upon their Trade.

4. Weſt of Amboina, and South-weſt of Celebes, lieth the fourth of theſe Iſlands called MACASSAR, ſaid to contain from Eaſt to Weſt 600 miles; plentiful of Rice, Fleſh, Fiſh, Salt, and Cotton-wool; not deſtitute of Gold and Pearls, and well ſtored with Sander (Sandalum it is called in Latin) a medicinal Wood, growing like a Nut-tree: of ſeveral colours, white, red, yellow, but the red, the beſt: the fruit in making like a Cherry, but of no eſteem. In ſome parts overgrown with Woods, in which certain fiery Flies make nightly ſuch ſhining light, as if every twig or bough were a burning Candle. In the middle covered with high Mountains, out of which flow many navigable Rivers.

The people for the moſt part Gentiles, intermixt on the Sea-coaſts with ſome Mahometans. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Senderem, the Kings Seat, Scituate near a large Lake, very commodiouſly for traffick. 2. Macaſſar, an Engliſh Factory, ſo called according to the name of the Iſland.

Near to theſe Iſlands, and ſomwhat North to Batachina, are ſome other Iſles, plentiful of all things neceſſary for the life of man, but inhabited by a thieviſh and Piratical people: the principal of which 1. Torrao. 2. Sanguin. 3. Solor. 4. Moratay, in which laſt they eat Battata Roots in ſtead of bread, beſides ſome others of leſs note. Moſt of the people Gentiles, except thoſe of Sanguin, the King whereof being gained to the Chriſtian Faith, by ſome of the Jeſuites, hath brought many of his Subjects to the ſame Religion.

6. BORNEO.

WEſt of theſe Celebes lieth BORNEO, of more note and greatneſs, than any hitherto deſcribed, in theſe Indian Seas. In compaſs after their accompt who ſpeak moſt ſparingly, 2200 miles; but as ſome ſay, no leſs than three moneths ſayl about. Scituate under the Æquator, which parteth the dominions of the King of Borneo, and the King of Laus oppoſite on the North to Camboia; on the South, to Java; on the Eaſt, to Celebes; on the Weſt, unto the Iſle of Sumatra.

The Country ſaid to be provided naturally of all things neceſſary; yet ſaid withal to be unfurniſhed of Aſſes, Oxen, Herds of Cattel, except only Horſes, and theſe but of ſmall ſtature neither: the greateſt riches of it being Camphire, Agarick, and ſome mines of Adamants, erroneouſly conceived by Mercator to be the Inſula bona fortuna ſpoken of by Ptolomy; that being ſeated oppoſite to the out-lets of Ganges, in the Latitude of a hundred fourty five degrees, and fifteen Minutes; this Eaſtward ſome degrees of the Golden Cherſoneſe, and conſequently twenty Degrees diſtant at the leaſt from that Iſland in Ptolomy.

The people generally more white than the reſt of the Indians, of good wits, and approved integrity, though all Mahometans or Gentiles. Divided betwixt two Kings, and two Religions; the King of Borneo and his Subjects being all Mahometans; thoſe of Laus ſtill remaining in their ancient Gentiliſm. Theſe think the Sun and Moon to be man and wife, and the Stars their Children; aſcribing to each of them divine honours, to the Sun eſpecially; whom they ſalute at his firſt Riſing with great Reverence, ſaying certain Verſes. Their publick buſineſſes are treated of commonly in the night, at which time the Counſellers of State meet, and aſcend ſome tree, viewing the Heavens till the Moon riſe, and then go to the Senate-houſe. The ſame Apparel generally of both Religions; but thin, by reaſon of the great heat of the Air: A ſhirt of Silk, or of Calicut, or ſome ſuch ſlight ſtuffe, worn more for modeſty than for warmth.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Borneo, ſcituate in the North-weſt, part of the Iſland near a goodly Bay, but in the middle of the Fens like the City of Venice, and ſeated as that is, on Piles, the building ſumptuous, of hewed Stones, covered with the leaves of the Coco-Tree. The Town ſo large as to contain 25000. 3. Taiopura. 4. Tamaoratas. 5. Malano; all of them noted for fair Cities, or commodious Havens. 6. Sagadana, a Factory of Engliſh. 7. Lavi, on a large Bay in the South-Eaſt part of the Iſland, the ordinary Seat of the King of Laus. 8. Paro, on another capacious Bay, not far from Lavi, and directly oppoſite to Borneo: that being ſeated on the North-weſt, and this on the South-Eaſt of the Iſland. Betwixt theſe two Kings is the whole divided; but ſo that he of Borneo hath the greateſt part of it, and therefore keeps the greater State: not to be ſpoken with, but by the mouth of ſome of his own Interpreters; and in his Palace ſerved by no other Attendants, than Maids or Women.

7. JAVA.

OPpoſite to Borneo towards the South lie the Iſles of JAVA, two in number; both ſcituate South of the Æquator, both of great Circumference, and commonly diſtinguiſhed into Major and Minor, or the greater and the leſſer Java.

Java.

1. JAVA MAJOR, the more Northward of the two, and by much the bigger, is ſaid to be in compaſs 3000 miles, and that by them who elſewhere reckon Borneo for the biggeſt of theſe Seas. But the truth is, that the South-parts of this Iſland not being perfectly diſcovered, make the ameaſurement thereof to be very uncertain. Conceived moſt probably to be the Jabadin of Ptolomy, the moſt Northern part whereof is placed by him in the eighth degree of Southern Latitude: ſaid by him to afford much gold and ſilver, to be exceeding fruitful of all other neceſſaries; and finally that the name did ſignifie κριθῆς νῆσον, or the Iſland of Barly. All which agreeth punctually with the preſent Iſland, the word Jabad ſignifying a kind of Grain much like our Barly; and Din in the Perſian and Indian Tongues ſignifying an Iſland, And ſo in Jabadin, we have found the Iſland of Java, the mutation of B. into V. being very ordinary.

Then for the riches and fertility of it, it is ſaid to yield great plenty of Fruits, and Corn, but of Rice eſpecially; fleſh of all ſorts, ſalted, and ſent from hence into other Countries; great ſtore of Fowl, both wild and tame; plenty of Gold, ſome precious Stones, and the beſt kind of Braſs; Silks in abundance, and great quantities of Pepper, Ginger, Cinamon, and ſome other Spices. In a word ſo befriended by the bounty of Nature, that Scaliger calleth it Epitomy Mundi, or the whole World contracted in a leſſer Volume. But withal it is much expoſed unto ſtorms and Tempeſts, rom which ſeldom free.

The people of a middle ſtature, corpulent, and of broad Faces, moſt of them naked or covered only with a ſlight ſilken ſtuffe, and that no lower than the knee: accompted the moſt Civil people of all the Indians, as fetching their deſcent from China: but withal treacherous, very proud, much given to lying, and very careleſs of their words; to which ſo uſed, that they count it not amongſt their Faults. And therefore when a King of theirs had broke promiſe with the Hollanders, and was challenged for it, he anſwered that tongue was not made of bone. Cruel they are alſo ſaid to be, and implacable, if once offended: accuſtomed of old to eat the bodies of their Friends: accounting no burial ſo honourable, nor obſequy, ſo applauſive. This alſo a cuſtom amongſt many of the reſt of the Indians, ſo hath been ever ſince the beginning of the Perſian Monarchy. Herodotus reporteth how Darius Hyſtaſpes underſtanding of this Cuſtom, and withal knowing how the Gracians uſe to burn their dead; ſent to the Greeks, that it was his pleaſure they ſhould eat the bodies of their dead: But they uſed all means of perſwaſion and entreaty, not to be forced to ſo bruitiſh and barbarous a cuſtom. Then commanded he the Indians to conform themſelves to the faſhion of the Gracians; but they all more abhorred to burn the dead, than the Greeks did to eat them. So impoſſible it is for a cuſtom either to be ſuddenly left off, or to ſeem undecent and inconvenient, if once thorowly ſetled.

In matter of Religion they are all Mahometans, or Gentiles, according to the fancy of their ſeveral Kings, whereof in this Iſland there are very many; one for every great Tribe, or more powerful Family. Zealous in their Religion which ſoever it be, as appears by the ſad Story of the Daughter of the King of Ballambua; murdered by her Husband the King of Paſſarva, the ſecond night after her wedding, with all her Attendants, becauſe they would not be Mahometans, which was his Religion. Yet in ſome common Principles they agree well enough, puniſhing Adultery with death; in which caſe the woman chuſeth her neareſt Kinſman for her Executioner: but otherwiſe ſpending the day and night in much Sloth and Dalliance. Of the two Gentiliſm is the more diffuſed, becauſe moſt ancient; the Sect of Mahomet not being introduced till the year 1560. though of a very ſwift growth, and of a great encreaſe for ſo ſhort a time.

Their chief Towns, 1. Panarucan, near a burning hill, which in the year 1586. brake forth exceedingly, oppreſſed infinite numbers of men, and caſt great Stones into the City for three daies together, 2. Jortam, a Town of 1000 Houſholds, the Inhabitants whereof are Gentiles, and have their Temples in the Woods: the Chief-Prieſt of whoſe Superſtition hath his dwelling here, of great authority and power over all the Iſland. 3. Ballambua, 4. Paſſarva, 5. Taban. 6. Matara. 7. Daunia, 8. Taggal, 9. Surrabaia, 10. Catabaon; the Seats of ſo many of their Kings; ſome of them alſo furniſhed of convenient Havens, 11. BANTAM, the ſeat alſo of a King, but of moſt trade in all the Iſland, ſeldom without the company of Engliſh, Portugals, and Hollanders; the principal Factory of the Engliſh in all the Indies, though they have many beſides this, the Town unwholſomly ſeated in a mooriſh ground, and much ſubject to fire. 12. Sunda, ſcituate in a place abounding in Pepper. 13. Agracan, a convenient Port; here was alſo in the time of Ptolomy a Town called 14. Argyropolis, or the Silver City, long ago deſtroyed. And now there is, 15. Sura, a new Town in the territories of the King of Bantam, built by ſome of the Subjects of the King of Paſſarva, who being oppreſſed by their own King, came into this part of the Country, where they got leave to build this City. The people whereof live quietly according to their own Laws, follow their Husbandry abroad, but never marry; and yet do not want a conſtant Succeſſion; adopting ſome of the other Javans into their Society, as they find their number to diminiſh.

Of the Story of this Iſland I can ſay but little. Divided into many petit and inconſiderable Kingdoms; and thoſe divided too by Mountains; croſſing the Iſland in the middle from Weſt to Eaſt, which cut off all commerce and correſpondence betwixt one another. Some of theſe Kings Mahometans, ſome Gentiles, as before was ſaid; all ſubject or Homagers at leaſt to one of the Kings of the Gentiles, who hath his dwelling in the midſt of the Iſland. Next him, the King of Tuban was conceived to be the richeſt, and the King of Ballambua of the greateſt territory; whoſe Family, after long war and blood-ſhed, begun in the murder of his Daughter, is ſaid to be wholly rooted out by the King of Paſſarva. Theſe Kings much reverenced by their Subjects, and ſo well obeyed, that whatſoever they command, is done, be it never ſo dangerous.

Java. 2. JAVA-MINOR, ſcituate on the South of the other, is ſaid to be 2000 miles in compaſs, and to be very near the firm land Terra Auſtralis incognita, or the Southern Continent. Not very well known to any of our late Adventurers; but generally affirmed (not ſo much on certain knowledge as unſure conjecture) to be of the ſame nature and condition with the greater Java. The Inhabitants hereof in the time of Paulus Venetus, who had travelled in it, reported to be Cannibals, Idolaters, devourers of their Parents and deareſt friends, and to worſhip all day whatſoever they ſaw firſt in the morning. Divided then into eight Kingdoms, diſtinguiſhed by the names of their principal towns. Six whereof he had ſeen, which are theſe that follow. 1. Felech, where the Townſmen were Moores, and the Paiſant Gentiles. 2. Baſma, which did acknowledge the Great-Cham of Tartaria for Lord in chief; but without paying of any Tribute. 3. Samara. where none of the North-ſtars could be ſeen. 4. Sambri, in which ſome men were ſaid to have tails like dogs. 5. Fanfur, in which they have a Tree, the wood whereof put in water, will ſink like Iron; of which they uſe to make Launces that will pierce an Armour. And 6. Dragorian, of which there is nothing memorable or prodigious, but that the people of it uſe to eat their neareſt kinſmen; and that no Prodigy at all, becauſe uſed by others.

To theſe two we may joyn MADURA, on the North of the greater Java, fertile of Rice, but otherwiſe of ſo wateriſh and moiſt a Soyl, that the men and Cattel uſe to go knee-deep when they ſow it. The chief Town whereof is called Arosbay. And on the Eaſt of the ſame Java the Iſland Baly, exceeding populous for the bigneſs, ſuppoſed to contain 600000 Inabitants; and very well provided of Buls, Buffals, Goats, Horſes Swine, many kind of fruits, and ſome ſtore of mettals.

8. SUMATRA.

SUMATRA lieth on the North of the Greater Java, betwixt it and the Streight of Sincapura the moſt Southern Town of the Golden Cherſoneſe. The Streight in that place ſo ſtreight and narrow, not above a Musket ſhot in breadth; that ſome conceive this Iſland to have been formerly joyned unto, it by ſome little Iſthmus; ſince worn away by the violence and working of the Sea: and that this Iſland and not the Land of Malaca, was that Golden Cherſoneſe, which we find in Ptolomy. More probably by far, than that we ſhould run after to the Iſle of Japan, ſcituate on the Eaſt of China, ſo far from any part of India, where it is placed by the Author of the Atlas Minor.

The length hereof, extended from the North-weſt to the South-Eaſt, is ſaid by ſome to be 900. by others but 700 miles, the breadth 200. and the whole compaſs one and twenty hundred. Strangly affirmed by ſome writers to be the biggeſt of all the Eaſt; who yet aſſign a greater circuit unto Java, and as great to Borneo. Scituate under the Æquator, which divideth it into two parts, very near an equality: that on the North-ſide reaching unto five degrees, that on the South-ſide but to ſeven degrees from the line it ſelf. By which account there is little difference betwixt the length of a day and night; both much at one in all times of the year whatever.

The air hereof by conſequence muſt be very hot, but withal unwholſom: not ſo much in regard of the extreme heats, as by reaſon of the groſs vapours drawn from the many Fens and Rivers, which are found to be in it; and the thick woods which intercept the free courſe of a purging wind. The ſoyl not capable of ſuch grain as in other places, except Rice or Millet (for I know not otherwiſe how to render the Latine, Milium) but yielding Ginger, Pepper, Camphire, Agarick, and Caſſia, in great abundnace. It affordeth alſo great plenty of Wax and Honey, ſtore of Silks and Cottons, rich mines not only of Tin, Iron, Sulphur, and other Minerals; but of Gold ſuch quantity, that ſome conceive this Iſland to be Solomons Ophir. And if Pedrunka Sirie one of the Kings of this Iſland, in a Letter written to King James did not brag too impudently, it may be probable enough. For by that Letter it appeareth that all the Furnitures of his Houſe, and trappings of his Elephants, and Horſes, with all his Armour, were of pure Gold, and that he had in his Dominions a whole Mountain of Gold; King of which Golden Mountain he entituleth himſelf in his Regal Stile.

The Inhabitants are many of them good Artificers, cunning Merchants, or expert Mariners. All of them Gentiles till about two hundred and thirty years ſince, at what time by the diligence of ſome Arabian Merchants trading to this Iſland, Mahometaniſm began to ſpread upon the Coaſts. But in the inland parts of the Country they are Gentiles ſtill, and ſtill retain amongſt them their old barbarous cuſtoms. The moſt loving men unto their enemies that were ever known; for otherwiſe they would never eat them. Having eaten they uſe their skuls in ſtead of money, which they exchange or barter for ſuch neceſſaries, as their wants require: and he is thought to be the wealthieſt man amongſt them, who hath moſt of this coyn. Thoſe of the other Religion though in moſt points and cuſtoms they agree with the reſt of the Mahometans, have this one ſingular to themſelves: which is, that once every year on a certain day they go ſolemnly unto their Meſquits to ſee if Mahomet be come; leading a ſpare horſe for him to ride upon: which (miſſing him) is mounted at their coming back, by the beſt man in the company. Of any great progreſs that Chriſtianity hath made here, I have no good evidence.

That here are many and great Rivers, hath been ſaid before, but their names I find not. Here are alſo many Mountains, and thoſe great and high; that of moſt note called Balalvanus, ſaid to burn continually. Out of which, or not far off, do ariſe two Fountains, of which the one is ſaid to run pure Oyl, and the other the beſt Balſamum: which I bind no man to believe but ſuch as have ſeen it.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Achen, the Seat-Royal of that Kingdom, beautified with the Regal Palace.

Seilan.

lace, to which they paſs thorow ſeven Gates one after another, with green Courts between the three outermoſt; thoſe three continually guarded with women expert at their weapons, and uſing both ſwords, and Guns; the only ordinary guard that he hath for his perſon. The materials of this Palace, mean, but the furniture, coſtly; the walls thereof being hanged commonly with Velvet and Damask, and ſometimes with cloth of Gold. 2. Pedir, 3. Pacem, 4. Cambar, 5. Menantabo, 6. Aura, and 7. Andragide, the ſeats of ſo many of their Kings, 8. Paſſaman, a Town of great Trade; but ſituate in a Mooriſh and unhealthy place; found ſo experimentally by too many of the Engliſh, who have there their Factory, 9. Priamon, and 10. Tecoo, of a more healthy air, but not ſo commodious in their Havens as is that of Paſſamane theſe three Towns ſtanding in that part of the Country where the Pepper groweth.

All that we know touching the ſtory of this Country, is, that the Portugals, when they firſt came hither, found in it nine and twenty kings; reduced ſince to a ſmaller number. For Abraham, ſometimes a Slave, afterwards King of Achen, having turned Mahometan, by the help of the Turks and Arabians ſubdued the Realms of Pedir and Pacem. Aladine who ſucceeded him, being once a Fiſherman and grown famous for his exploits at Sea; was by this King preferred to the marriage of one of his Kinſwomen, made his Lord Admiral, and by him truſted with the protection of his ſon and heir: of whom inſtead of a Protector he became the murtherer, and uſurped the State unto himſelf. When King, he added to his Crown the Kingdoms of Aru, or Aura, and Manncabo; and almoſt all the reſt in the North part of the Iſland. In this kings time, the Engliſh were firſt ſetled in their Factory there. Grown old (an hundred years at leaſt) he was impriſoned by his eldeſt Son, impatient of a longer ſtay, alledging that his age had made him unfit for Government, Anno 1604. The name of the New King Sultan Pedrucka Sirie, who in his Letter to King James ſpoken of before, ſtiles himſelf the Sole King of Sumatra: either with greater brags, than truth, or elſe becauſe the Kingdoms of Tecoo, Priaman, and Baronſe, being conquered by him, all the reſt were become his Tributaries. Aſſociated with the forces of the King of Ior, or Iohor, who had married his Siſter, he beſieged Malaca, and diſtreſſed it: But being beaten from it by the Portugals, he turned the tide of his diſpleaſure upon his Confederate, and ſubdued that Kingdom; who with the King of Siak (ſome other petit Prince near Ior) and two of their brethren, were in the year 1613. brought Priſoners to Achem.

The Government of this King is abſolute, and meerly arbitrary, executing what he hath a mind to, without form of Law. So cautelous, that without his Placard no ſtranger can have Ingreſs into his dominions, or free Egreſs out of them. Nor is admittance to his preſence granted unto any whom he firſt ſends not for by an Officer with a Gilded-Staff. He is conceived to be ſtrong both by Sea, and Land, his Country populous, his Elephants many and well trained; able to put to Sea 120, or if need be 200 Gallies and Frigots fit for any ſervice, moſt of which carry Demi-Cannon, Culverin, Sakar, Minion, and other the like Ordnance of Braſs. So great a Maſter of his Subjects, that in 21 days he had a goodly Channel drawn about his Palace, from a River which was eight miles off. Of his Revenues I am able to make no conjecture, but think him to be full of Gold, by that great quantity of Golden Furnitures which he hath about him.

And now I am fallen on this Kings Gold, I cannot but take notice of ſome Iſlands on the Weſt of Sumatra, called Aurea Inſula, or the Golden Iſlands; the chief of which named Andramania, is poſſeſſed by Cannibals, or Man-eaters. Oppoſite unto which on the Eaſt ſide of this Iſland, are thoſe called Linga, Banca, and Bintam; which laſt is ſaid to be very woody, well watered, and to afford a commodious Station for ſhipping. The houſes built of ſtone, but thatched, except that of the King (for even theſe ſorry Iſlands love to have a King of their own, whoſe houſe more eminently ſeated, is more handſomly covered.

9. ZEILAN.

WEſt of Sumatra, ſomewhat inclining to the North, is the Iſland of ZEILAN, ten Degrees diſtant from the Æquator, and near adjoyning to the Promontory in the hither India which Ptolomy calleth by the name of Cory. The length hereof computed at 250 miles, the breadth at 150 miles only; the whole circumference at 700 or 800 miles. Conjectured by the ſituation, and other probable inducements, to be the Taprobane of the antient Writers. Ortelius and moſt other intelligent men of theſe latter times are of that opinion. Only Mercator, who hath carried the Golden Cherſoneſe to the Iſle of Japan; and fixed Taprobane in that of Sumatra, (in which laſt I muſt confeſs he hath many Partners) will have this Iſland to be that which Ptolomy calls Nanigeris, though that be four Degrees more Weſt than the Promontory of Cory, to which this Iſle in former times ſeems to have been joyned.

Taking it therefore for an evident and undoubted truth, that this Zeilan or Ceilan is the Taprobane of the Antients, we will a little look on the State of that Iſland, with reference to the times when thoſe Authors lived. By Ptolomy affirmed to be plentiful in Rice, Honey, Ginger, Gold, Silver, Precious, Stones, and all kind of metals; By Pliny, that the Gold is purer, and the Gems fairer than any in India; that there were alſo Groves of Palm-trees, and great ſtore of Elephants, is declared by Ælian and ſome others. Watered with many fair and pleaſant Rivers, viz. 1. Soana, 2. Azanus, 3. Baracus, 4. Gandes. 5. Phaſis: the hills in many places having a full proſpect over the adjoyning Vallie; the chief of which were Malea, and thoſe called Calibi, the vales perpetually enriched with the choiceſt fruits. Exceeding populous for the bigneſs, and ſtored with many Towns of note. Of which Magrammum only hath the name of a Metropolis. 1. Margana, 2. Jogana, 3. Sindocanda, 4. Hodoca, 5. Nabartha, 6. Dogana, 7. Dionyſiopolis, 8. Bocana, 9. Abaratha, 10. Procurum, 11. Nagadiba, Seilan. and 12. Anubingara, have the name of Cities. 13. Moduttum, and 14. Talacorum, noted for the Town of traffick; 15. Priapis, 16. Mardus, 17. Rhizala, 18. Spatana, and 19. that of the Sun, for commodious Havens, 20. Anurogrammum being honoured with the Title of Regia, or the Royal City. As for the name, it is ſaid by Ptolomy to have been firſt called Taprobane, then Simondi Inſula, and finally in his time Salice; and the People Sala; from whence the name of Selan or Seilan ſeems to be derived.

To take a view of it at the preſent, I find it ſaid to be of an Oval form, divided from the main land by a narrow Channel, the Heavens refreſhing it with their dews, the Air with a fragant freſhneſs, and the waters with their many Rivers and Fountains; the Earth diverſifyed into lofty hills, and lowly valleys; her inward Chambers filled with Metals, and Jewels, her outward Coat of the pleaſanteſt colour, ſtored with whole woods of Cinnamon; beſides Fruits, Limons, Oringes, &c. bettering thoſe of Spain. Of Fouls and Beaſts great plenty both wild and tame; and the beſt breed of Elephants in all the world. Deſtitute only of the Vine, the want of which ſupplied with a pleaſant drink made of the juyce of fruits, more natural to them than the other, and ſo preſervative of life that the people are reported to be longer lived than in any other parts. In a word ſo abounding in all contentments, that the Indians hold it to be Paradiſe, and take upon them to point out ſome of Adams footings, left for a memorial in ſome parts of it. And to confirm them in their Error, they have an Hill there which the Spaniards call by the name of Pico de Adam, affirmed to be ſeven Leagues in height, from whence Adam aſcended into Heaven: for that cauſe viſited by the Moors or Arabians, with continual Pilgrimages.

The people for the moſt part tall and ſtrait of body, naked from the girdle upwards, unwarlike, and much given unto eaſe and pleaſures; So queaſie ſtomached that the pooreſt of them will not eat that meat which another hath touched; inclined to bravery, and therefore make wide holes in their ears, which they ſtretch out with Jewels to their very ſhoulders. Cunning Artificers in all metals, one of them making a Crucifix of ſuch exquiſite workmanſhip, that it ſeemed to give life to the dead; and was ſent by the Archbiſhop of Goa to the King of Spain, as the rareſt Jewel which had ever graced his Royal Cabinet. They are alſo very active, and well ſkilled in Jugling, both men and women, travelling thorow India with their tricks and Hobby-horſes, by which they get themſelves both delight and money. In matter of Religion, they are generally Idolaters, eſpecially the Natives, whom they call Cingalas, which live in the Inlands; the Sea-coaſts (as in other Ilands) being filled with Mahometans. No Chriſtians that I hear of but in Columbo, a Town of the Portugals.

Cities of moſt repute amongſt them, 1. Candie, the Seat of one of their Kings, ſuppoſed to be the Sindocande of Ptolomy, memorable for the ſtatues of their ſuppoſed Adam, moſt artificially wrought, of five or ſix Fathoms high, Symetrically proportionable to the print of his foot, which they conceive to have amongſt them, 2. Ventane, of great renown for an Idol-Temple, in compaſs 130 paces, of great height, and all white except the top, which hath the Spires thereof ſo gilded, that when the Sun ſhines, men are not able to look upon them. 3. Janaſipatan, 4. Triqui Lemale (ſuppoſed to be the Tarichi of Ptolomy, 5. Batecolom, 6. Vilaſſem, 7. Tanamaca, 8. Laula, 9. Galle, the Seats of ſo many of their Kings, 10. Nagarita, conceived to be the Nagiri; as 11. Agena, the Jogana of Ptolomy, 12. Colmuchi, the Seat Royal of the chief King of this Iſland, ſituate on a capacious Bay in the Southweſt of it, aud of moſt trade in all this Country: many great ſhips laden with Cinnamon, Gems, Elephants, and other Indian commodities, going yearly hence. Fortified by the Portugals (by whom called Columbo) with a very ſtrong Caſtle, built with the Kings leave at firſt, to ſecure their trading; but ſince uſed by them as a curb to hold him in with, and to compel him to pay tribute.

This Country firſt diſcovered to be an Iſland by Oneſicritus, Admiral of Alexanders Fleet, was in the time of Ptolomy inhabited by ſeveral Nations. The principal of which were the Galthi, and Mudutta dwelling in the North, the Rhogandani, and Nanigiri in the South; the Sindocanda in the Weſt, and the Tarachi in the Eaſt; the middle parts being taken up by the Anurogrammi, Nagabdi, Soani, Semni. But little or nothing is ſaid of them in the way of ſtory, but that they were good Mimicks, did imitate the tunes of Birds, and could ſpeak to two at once, as if double-tongued; that they were very ſtudious of Aſtrology, and worſhipped the Sun and the Hoſt of Heaven; that ſome of their Ambaſſadors coming to Rome, in the time of Claudius Cæſar, Solem à Læva oriri mirati ſunt, &c. admired to ſee the Sun riſe on the wrong ſide of them; and finally that the King was choſen by the people with reſpect had to his age and clemency; who being inthroned, appointed thirty Judges to adminiſter Juſtice to the Subject, without the Major part of whom, ſentence of death was to paſs on no man. In following times this Monarchy (for ſuch it was in the time of thoſe Authors) was broken into many pieces: the Portugals finding nine Kings in it, at their firſt coming hither, all Homagers or Tributaries to the King of Colmuchi. After that this their chief King was wickedly murdered by his Barber, who drove the other Kings out of the Country, and for a while uſurped the Monarchy to himſelf. Since which time, having once again recovered their Kingdoms, ſix of them (as I have ſomewhere read, but remember not where) put themſelves under the protection of the Great Mogul, and became his Feudataries.

Neer hereunto on the Coaſts of Malabar, are the Iſlands which they call Maldiva, many in number, but ſo called from the principal of them, as that from Maldiva, a noted and well-traded Empery, where the King reſideth: Not very plentiful of neceſſaries for the uſe of man, did not the Palm alone ſupply them in all other wants. Inhabited by an induſtrious and ſober people, who make themſelves long garments of Silk or Flax brought from other places, wherewith more modeſtly adorned than the reſt of the Indians: and by their Fiſhing draw up ſhels of ſuch mingled colours, that they ſerve amongſt the Siametes inſtead of mony.

10. ISLANDS of leſs note.

BEſides theſe Iſlands repreſented to us by their ſeveral names, and ſome who have nothing but their names to take notice of; there be many thouſands of leſs note which we find in groſs: theſe Indian Seas being ſo prodigiouſly full of Iſlands, that it is almoſt impoſſible to believe there ſhould be ſuch multitudes; but utterly impoſſible to credit what is told us of them. Some of the moſt remarkable of them we have touched upon, as Acceſſories or Appurtenances to ſome greater Iſlands. The reſt we ſhall preſent only in the general muſter, together with a taſt of ſome of thoſe ſtrange reports, with which ſome men have fouled their Papers, and abuſed their Readers. Of the Philippines, there are ſaid to be 11000 though but 40 of them in poſſeſſion of the King of Spain. More South, but over againſt China, is another frie of them, affirmed by Mariners to be no fewer than 7448 and (as if nature had delighted to diſport her ſelf by ſowing Iſlands in theſe Seas) another Shoal of them about India, no fewer in number than 127000. all which laid together would make a Continent as large as three or four parts of Europe; and are ſtill groaning under the burthen of Heatheniſm. Theſe Iſlands ſtand ſo nigh unto one another, that they ſeem not only to ſuch as are afar to be all but one firm Land; but whoſoever alſo paſſeth between them, may with his hands touch the boughs of the trees on the one ſide, and on the other. Of theſe and the other Indian Iſlands, Travellers relate many incredible fables; viz. that here be hogs that have two teeth growing out of their ſnowts, and as many behind their ears, of a ſpan and a half long; a tree whoſe Weſtern part is rank poiſon; and the Eaſtern part an excellent preſervative againſt it. They tell us alſo of a Fruit, that whoſoever eateth, ſhall for the ſpace of 12 hours be out of his wits; and of a ſtone, on which whoſoever ſitteth, ſhall ſuddenly have a rapture in his body. We are told alſo that hereabouts are taken Tortoiſes of that bigneſs, that ten men might ſit and dine within one of the ſhells; And that there is a Tree, which all the day time hath not a flower on it, but within half an hour after Sun-ſet, is full of them. All huge and monſtrous lies, and not fit for credit. Galvano reporteth alſo, that in ſome of theſe Iſlands there is a fruit, of which if a woman that is with child eat, her child will preſently move; that there is a River plentifully ſtored with fiſh, whoſe water is yet ſo hot, that it doth immediately ſcald off the skin of any beaſt that is caſt into it; that ſome of the men have tails; and moſt of their ſwine horns; that they have oyſters which they call Braſs, the ſhells whereof are of ſo large compaſs, that they Chriſten Children in them; that in the Sea there are ſtones which grow and increaſe like fiſh, of which the beſt Lime is made; that there is a bird called Monicodiata, which having no feet is in a continual motion: and that there is a hole in the back of the Cock, in which the Hen doth lay her eggs, and hatch her young ones. I bid no man to believe theſe Relations: for my part I ſay with Horace,

Quocunq; oſtendis mihi ſic, incredulus odi.
What ever thus thou tell'ſt me, I
Will always hate it as a lye.

And ſo much for theſe Eaſtern-Iſlands.

An Advertiſement to the Reader touching the Errata of this part.

I*N the firſt place the Reader is to be advertiſed that Fol.* I have adventured to prove the Alamatha of Ptolomy to be the Chamath, or Hamath-Sobab, *of the Holy Scriptures: The place ill pointed, but the judicious Reader will eaſily find out the ſcope and meaning. COSMOGRAPHY,

The fourth Book.

PART I.

CONTAINING THE CHOROGRAPHY and HISTORY OF AFRICK, And all the principal Kingdoms, Provinces, Seas, and Iſles thereof.

OF AFRICK.

AFRICK is bounded on the Eaſt by the Red-Sea, and Bay of Arabia, by which parted from Aſia; on the Weſt, by the main Atlantick Ocean, interpoſing betwixt it and America; on the North by the Mediterranean Sea, which divides it from Europe and Anatolia: and on the South, with the Æthiopick Ocean, ſeparating it from Terra Auſtralis incognita, or the Southern Continent, parted from all the reſt of the World, except Aſia only, to which joyned by a narrow Iſthmus, not above 60 miles in length, and memorable for the great deſign which Cleopatra the laſt Queen of Egypt had upon it, which in brief was this. When Mark Anthony was encountred by Auguſtus in the Naval battel of Actium, Cleopatra fearing the ſucceſs, fled through the midſt of all his Fleet, with the 60 Gallies which were appointed for her guard. Being come to the North part of this Iſthmus, ſhe gathered together all her portable treaſures, and intended to hoiſt her Shippping out of the Mediterranean, and hale them over the Land to the Red-Sea: whence ſhe had purpoſed to take ſail, and together with her Sweet-heart Anthony, and ſome other choiceſt friends, to ſeek out ſome other place of dwelling far enough from the Romans. But from this, Anthony, who fled after her, and vainly hoped for a change of fortunes, did at laſt diſſwade her.

The Form hereof is like a Pyramis reverſed; the Baſis of which, from Tanger on the Streight of Gibraltar, to the point where it joyneth unto Aſia, is reckoned at the breadth of 1920 Italian miles, the Conus of it very narrow. But from the Conus or Pyris to the moſt Northern part of the Baſis, it extendeth it ſelf the ſpace of 4155 miles, being much leſs then Aſia, and far bigger then Europe.

By the Grecians it is called moſt commonly Libya (of which more hereafter) part of it taken for the whole: by the Æthiopians, Alkebulam; by the Indians, Beſecath. But the moſt noted name thereof is Africa, which Joſephus out of Cleodemus and Polyhiſtor, deriveth from Epher or Apher, one of the Nephews of Abraham, by Midian the Son of Keturah. The Arabians, by whom it is called Iſrichea, derive it from the Verb Faraoh, ſignifying to divide; becauſe more viſibly divided both from their own Country, and the reſt of the World, then any other part thereof which was known unto them. Some of the Greek Fablers fetch it from one Aſer, a Companion of Hercules, whom he attended unto Spain; Some fetch it out of Aphar, an Hebrew word, ſignifying Duſt, agreeable to its ſandy and duſty ſoyl: Feſtus an old Grammarian, from A Privativum, and the Greek word φρίκη, which imports a Country void of Cold, as ſutable to the fiery temper of the Air. By Bochartus, who brings all from the old Phœnician, it is ſaid to be derived from Peruc, Spica, an ear of Corn; which mollified into Feric, came at laſt to Africa, that is to ſay, a Country plentiful in Corn. Which Etymology of his may receive ſome countenance, from that great plenty of Corn, which was bred in this Country: eſpecially in thoſe parts thereof which the Romans called the Proper Africk, whereof we ſhall ſpeak more when we come to Barbary: the whole Continent taking from that Province the name of Africk. But in my mind (if that from the Hebrew Epher or Aphar, be not worth accepting) I ſhould prefer the Etymon of Feſtus before any other: unleſs we might be ſure that Carthage anciently was called Africa, as Sudias telleth us it was; for then without all peradventure we would ſeek no further. For other more particular names by which it hath been called in ſome elder Writers, i. e. Olympia, Oceanica, Eſchatica, Coryphe, Ammonis, Heſperia, Ortygia, and perhaps ſome others; it is enough to our deſign to take notice of them.

It is ſcituate for the moſt part under the Torrid Zone, the Æquator croſſing it almoſt in the very midſt: and for that cauſe ſuppoſed by many of the Ancients not to be inhabited at all, or but very thinly, in the middle and more Southern parts of it; or if at all, with ſuch ſtrange people, as hardly did deſerve to be counted men. Pomponius among others was of this opinion, gueſſing the inward parts thereof to be taken up by ſuch ſtrange Bruits, as the Cynophanes, who had heads like Dogs; 2. The Sciapodæ, who with the ſhadow of their foot, could, and did uſe to hide themſelves from the heat of the Sun; 3. The Gamoſaphantes, a naked people, ignorant of the uſe of weapons, and therefore fearfully avoiding the ſight of men; 4. The Blemmyæ, who being without heads, had their eyes and mouths in their Breaſts; 5. The Ægypani, who had no other humane quality to declare them to be men, but the ſhape and making of their bodies. Theſe people (as they thought) poſſeſſed ſome ſmall portion of the midland parts of this great Country; the reſt they know not, or conceived to be uninhabitable, in regard of the great heats thereof. But late diſcoveries and navigations have found the contrary; the Country proving in moſt parts to be well inhabited; and the coolneſs of the nights, by miſts, dews, and gentle gales of wind, to mitigate the heat of the day.

> Quodq; die Solis vehementi excanduit æſtu, > Humida nox reficit, paribuſq; refrigerat horis.
> That is to ſay,
> What the Sun burns by day, the night renews.
> And doth as much refreſh with moyſtning dews.

For notwithſtanding that it be in ſome places full of ſandy deſarts, a diſeaſe incident to ſome parts of Arabia, Perſia, and other Countries of a more Northerly ſcituation: yet it is ſaid by ſome, who ſpeak it upon knowledge, that the greateſt part of thoſe Regions which lie under the Line, or near it (both in America and here) have ſo many goodly Fountains, Rivers and little Brooks, ſuch abundance of Cedars and other ſtately Trees of ſhade, ſo many ſorts of delicate Fruits ever bearing, and at all times beautified with Bloſſoms; as may make them hold compariſon with any others, ſuppoſed to be of a more temperate ſcituation.

But as was ſaid before, the Ancients knew not much of this Countrey, and therefore ſpoke upon conjecture, or more doubtful hear-ſay. For though Hanno a noble Carthaginian, employed by that State, diſcovered much of the Weſtern Shores of this great Peninſula, yet he ventured not much into the Land: nor did his Journal (either ſuppreſſed by the Romans, or not much took notice of) give any great light to other Nations to purſue thoſe Voyages; being writ in the Carthaginian tongue, but ſince tranſlated into Greek, and publiſhed at Baſil by Sigiſmund Gelenius, Anno 1533. As little credit did it find in former times, that ſome Phœnicians in the daies of Pharao Neco, paſſing down the Red Sea, ſhould ſail about the Coaſts of Africk to the Straights of Gibraltar, and ſo return again to Egypt by the Mediterranean; as we find in Herodotus, that they did. But what thoſe Ages diſbelieved or eſteemed impoſſible, is now grown ordinary; the Circumnavigations about this Country being very frequent, ſince firſt performed by Vaſques de Gama, an adventurous Portugal, in the year Anno 1497. being 80 years after or thereabouts, from the time that the Portugals firſt attempted the diſcovery and circumnavigation of the Coaſts of Africk, which at the laſt, to the no ſmall Glory of their Nation, was accompliſhed by them. For ſo it happened, that having extended their Dominions as far as they could upon the Continent of Spain, and having withal a large Sea-coaſt, and fit for ſhipping, they turned their Forces on the Moors, which dwelled in Africk, from whom they took many of their beſt Towns which lay along upon the ſhores of the main Atlantick. Encouraged by this good ſucceſs, Henry Duke of Viſeo, one of the younger Sons of King John the firſt, reſolved to ſpend his purſe and Credit upon new Diſcoveries. And to that purpoſe, having had ſome Conference with men of Knowledge and Experience in Coſmography, he draweth together the beſt men of Action, both in Spain and Italy. By their means and his own good fortune he firſt diſcovers the Iſle of Madera, An. 1420. The Iſle of Holy-Port, Anno 1428. The Iſlands of Cape Verd, Anno 1440. the maritine parts of the Land of Guinea, Anno 1452. which fair foundations being laid, and the way opened to thoſe great diſcoveries, which after followed that Glorious Prince deceaſed in a good old Age, Anno 1463. leaving this Character behind him, that he was the firſt that made the Portugals in love with the Sea; diſcontinued after his deceaſe above 20 years, it was reſumed again by King John, the ſecond of that name, who by the conduct of Diego Con, Anno 1486. diſcovered the Realms of Angola, and Congo, with the Iſle of S. George, and thereupon reſolves in the next year following to try his fortunes for compaſſing the whole Coaſts of Africk, thereby to find a way to the wealth of India, in which he employed Captain Bartholomew Diaz, who paſſing beyond Cape Verd, diſcovered firſt the Princes Iſland, and ſailing from thence Southward to the furtheſt Promontory (ſince called the Cape of Good Hope) returned home again; either diſcouraged by croſs winds, or unruly Seas, or the untractableneſs of his Mariners, or by altogether. The man to whom the honour of this enterprize was reſerved, was that Vaſques de Gama above mentioned, employed in this ſervice by King Emanuel, Anno 1597. who having in his way, diſcovered the Iſlands of S. James, and S. Hellens, and after doubled that terrible Cape, which Bartholomew de Diaz durſt not paſs, gave it the name of Cabo di Buena eſperonza; or the Cape of good Hope, becauſe of the good hope it gave him of finding the deſired way to the trade of India, and having ſo doubled this Cape, and got Africk on the left hand of him, he kept his courſe on towards the North, till he diſcovered the Countries of Quiloa, Moſambique, Mombaza, and Melinde, with the King of which laſt he contracted an eſpecial friendſhip, and by his favours and directions, found the Port of Caliculo in Eaſt India, from whence with infinite joy and honour, he returned to Lisbone, Anno 1500. The deſign followed the next year by Alvarez Capralde, furniſhed with 12 ſhips and 1500 Souldiers, but he being loſt upon the Coaſts of Braſil, and diverting wholly in a manner, on the diſcovery of that large Country, it was purſued the next year with greater ſtrength, by Vaſques and his Brother Stephan, afterwards by Ferdinand de Almeda, and Alphonſo de Albuguerque, and divers others of that Nation, and finally by the Engliſh, Hollanders, Merchants of almoſt every Country, which have any trade upon the Ocean. By means whereof the latter Ages are better inſtructed in the particulars of it, than the former were; who knew not much beyond the limits of the Roman Empire and ſome parts adjoyning upon Egypt: more then the ſtrange Beaſts, and more ſtrange Reports which they had from hence; occaſioning hereby the By-word, Africa ſemper aliquid apportat novi.

Touching the State of Chriſtianity in this great Continent, it is very weak; moſt of thoſe Regions which Chriſtian Religion had once gained from Idolatry, Mahometaniſm having ſince regained from Chriſtianity: Inſomuch that not only the North part of Afric near the Mediterranean, from Spain to Egypt, where the Goſpel once ſo exceedingly flouriſhed; that three hundred Catholick Biſhops were at one time baniſhed thence by Genſericus King of the Vandals; is at this preſent utterly void of Chriſtians, (except ſome few Towns belonging to the King of Spain:) but even in all this vaſt Country, thrice as big as Europe, there is not any one Region entirely Chriſtian, but the Kingdom of Habaſſia only, and perhaps not that; none where the Chriſtians are intermingled with Mahometans, but only Egypt; nor where mingled with Idolaters, but in Congo and Angola, and ſome few Towns upon thoſe Coaſts in the hands of the Portugals. So little benefit have thoſe Nations gotten by our late Diſcoveries; it being Gain, not Godlineſs, which the Merchant aims at.

The Nations inhabiting this Country, or diſperſed in it, may be reduced to Africans properly ſo called, Egyptians, Habaſſines, Arabians, Jews, and ſome Europæan Chriſtians: the Europæan Chriſtians only in their Forts and Garriſons; the Jews in all the good Towns, where Trade is ſtirring; the Arabians chiefly on the Sea-coaſts bordering on the Red-Sea; but wandering in great herds or companies all about the Country with their wives and children: the Habaſſines and Egyptians, in their ſeveral Kingdoms: The Africans again ſubdivided into Moors, and Caferes: of which the Moors are wholly under the Law of Mahomet; the Caferes dwelling in the inland and more Southern parts, not diſcovered antiently, in their wonted Gentiliſm. Accordingly, the Languages herein ſpoken are different alſo; The Portugal or Spaniſh being uſed by the Europæans; 2. The Chaldee or Syriack by the Jews; 3. The Arabick, by thoſe of that Nation, and in all Barbary except Morocco only; 4. The Habaſſine, and 5. The Egyptian, in thoſe Kingdoms: 6. That called Aquel-amarig, or the Noble language, ſuppoſed to be the natural and original language of the Roman Africans, intermixt with ſome Arabian words, and ſpoken generally in Morocco, and ſo amongſt ſome of the inhabitants of Barbary, neareſt to Mount Atlas: 7. That named Sungai, uſed in Tombutum, Guinea, and others of the people of the Land of Negroes; and 8. That called Gubeo, ſpoke by thoſe of Æthiopia inferior, and ſuch of the Land of Negroes as lie next unto it.

In reference to the State of the Roman Empire, it contained only the Dioceſes of Egypt, Africk, and part of the Dioceſe of Spain. The Dioceſe of Egypt ſubdivided into the Provinces of, 1. Lybia ſuperior, 2. Libya inferior, 3. Thebais, 4. Auguſtanica, 5. Arcadia, and 6. Ægyptus eſpecially ſo called; diſtinguiſhed by other names in the Nicene Council: That of Africk, into Tripolitana, 2. Byzacena, 3. Zeugitana, 4. Numidia, 5. Mauritania Caſarienſis, 6. and Mauritania Sitifenſis; the other part of Mauritania, called Tingitana, being laid to the Dioceſe of Spain. The reſt of this Peninſula, as they never conquered, ſo it never was much taken into conſideration. But being more perfectly diſcovered now then in former times, (though not ſo perfectly as that I can be able to promiſe an exact accompt of it) it is divided commonly into theſe ſeven parts; 1. Egypt, 2. Barbary or the Roman Africk, 3. Numidia, 4. Libya, neither of which the ſame with thoſe of the antient Romans; 5. Terra Nigritarum, 6. Æthiopia ſuperior, and 7. Æthiopia inferior Such of the Iſlands as do not properly belong unto any of theſe, ſhall make up the eighth. In the Deſcriptions whereof we will follow the Method of Plantations, and begin with Egypt; as being peopled and poſſeſſed before all the reſidue.

OF

OF EGYPT.

EGYPT is bounded on the Eaſt with Idumaa, and the Bay of Arabia; on the Weſt with Barbary, Numidia, and part of Libya; on the North, with the Mediterranean Sea; on the South with Æthiopia Superior, or the Abaſſine Empire.

This Country in the holy Scriptures is called Miſraim, from Miſraim the ſon of Chus, and grandſon of Cham, by whom firſt planted after the flood; the footſteps of which name do remain amongſt the Arabians, who ſtill call it Miſre. Named in the ſame regard in the Book of Pſalms, the Land of Ham: a name retained in ſome of the ſacred offices of the old Egyptians, where (as Plutarch witneſſeth) it was called Chemia; for Chamia no doubt, as that from Cham or Ham, the firſt ſtock of their nation. In Prophane Authors it hath had the ſeveral names of 1. Aeira, from the ſerenity of the Air, which is never clouded; 2. Potamia, from the propinquity of the Sea, waſhing two ſides of it; 3. Ogygia, from Ogyges a ſuppoſed King thereof; 4. Melampodus, from the black colour of the ſoil; 5. Oſiria, from their God Oſiris, here in high eſteem: 6. and finally, it was called Ægyptus, which in the end prevailed over all the reſt, either from Ægyptus the Brother of Danaus once King hereof, (in the ſtories of this Nation better known by the name of Rameſes); or from Ægyptus the old name of the River Nilus, by whoſe annual overflowings made both rich and famous; and of the ſoil and rubbiſh which that River brought with it from the higher Countries, it was by ſome ſuppoſed to have been raiſed into firm land, and gained out of the Sea. Called therefore in ſome Writers by the name of Nili donum, or the gift of Nilus. Yet ſome there be who would have it called Ægyptus for Aiguphus, and that derived from Ai, and Coptus, which ſignifieth the Land or Country of Coptus; that being ſuppoſed to have been anciently the chief City of it. And ſome again will have the name derived from Chioth, by which the Ægyptians call themſelves to this very day.

It containeth in length from the Mediterranean to the City of Aſna, or Syene, bordering on Æthiopia, 562 Italian miles: in breadth (excluſively of Cyrene and Libya) from Roſetta unto Damiata, or from the moſt Weſterly Branch of Nilus to the fartheſt Eaſt, 160 of the ſame miles; to which the adding of thoſe two Provinces, make a great acceſſion: Situate under the ſecond and fift Climates, ſo that the longeſt day in ſummer is but 13 hours and an half.

By reaſon of this Southernly ſituation of it, the Air is here very hot and offenſive; ſo that to avoid the inſupportable heats thereof, and to have the benefit of ſome freſh wind, the Inhabitants are accuſtomed to build high Towers in all their Towns, on which they uſe to ſolace and refreſh themſelves. The ſoyl made fruitful by the overflowings of Nilus, (whereof more anon) is ſo exceeding plentifull of all ſorts of Grain, that it was called Horreum populi Romani, the Granary or Store-houſe of the People of Rome: which City it did annually furniſh with four months proviſion; inſomuch that it was ſaid by Pliny, that the greatneſs of the Roman Empire could not long continne without the corn and wealth of Egyyt, the plenty or famine of that City depending wholly on this Country. It abounds alſo with rich Paſtures, in which they feed great ſtore of Camels, Horſes, Aſſes, Oxen, Sheep, and Goats, greater of growth then uſually in moſt places elſe; and by reaſon of the mooriſhneſs of the Country, they have great ſtore of Fowls. Of Poultry they have alſo good numbers about their houſes, hatched in a different manner from all other Countries, not by the ſitting of the Hen, but the heat of Furnaces, or Ovens; in which their eggs are orderly laid in dung, and by a gentle heat brought to animation. It is alſo liberally furniſhed with great plenty of Mettals, ſome precious Stones, good Wines, and the choiceſt Fruits, as Limons, Orenges, Pomegranets, Citrons, Figs, Cherries, and ſuch as theſe, excellent both for taſt and colour. Of Palm-trees alſo great abundance; of which though we have ſpoke before, yet we ſhall here more fully declare the nature and ſtrange properties of them. They grow in couples, Male and Female, both thruſt forth Cods full of ſeed, but the Female is only fruitful, and that not except growing by the Male, and having his ſeeds mixt with hers. The pith of theſe Trees is an excellent Sallad, better than an Hartichoke, which in taſt it very much reſembleth. Of the branches they make Bedſteads, Latices, &c. of the leaves, Baskets, Mats, Fans, &c. of the outward husk of the Cod, Cordage; of the inner, Bruſhes. The fruit it bears, beſt known by the name of Dates, are in taſt like Figs: and finally, it is ſaid to yield whatſoever is neceſſary to the life of Man. It is the nature of this Tree, though never ſo ponderous a weight were put upon it, not to yield to the burden; but ſtill to reſiſt the heavineſs of it, and to endeavour to lift and raiſe it ſelf the more upwards. For this cauſe planted in Church-yards in the Eaſtern Countries, as an Embleme of the Reſurrection: inſtead whereof we uſe the Ewe-tree in theſe cold Regions. For the ſame reaſon, given to Conquerours as a token of Victory; it being the Embleme of Hieroglyphick of a Souldiers life. Hence figuratively uſed for precedency, as, Huic equidem conſilio palmam do, in Terence; ſometimes for the Victory it ſelf; as Non auferent tamen hanc palmam, in Plinie; & plurimarum palmarum homo, for a man that had won many prizes in the Fence-School, as in Tully, pro Roſcio: more naturally for the ſign of Victory, as in that of Horace,

——— Palmaque nobilis,
Terrarum Dominos evehit ad Deos.
That is to ſay,
The Palm, of Victory a ſigne,
Equal's men to the Powers Divine.

The People, though the Country lie in the ſame Clime with Barbary, are not black, but twany, or Olive-coloured, affirmed by Pomponius Mela to weep and mourn over the bodies of their dead, daubed over with dung; to have held it a great impiety to burn or bury them, but having imbalmed them to lay them in ſome inward room of their Houſes: the men to keep themſelves at home, for the houſhold buſineſſes, the women to follow merchandiſe and affairs abroad; the men to carry burdens upon their heads, and the women theirs upon their ſhoulders: Antipodes in theſe laſt to moſt other Nations. But certainly they were a witty and ingenious People, the firſt Inventers of Geometry, Arithmetick, Phyſick, as alſo of Aſtronomy, Necromancy, and Sorcery. They firſt taught the uſe of Letters to the neighbouring Phœnicians, by them imparted to the Greeks. Accuſtomed at the firſt to expreſs their conceits in the ſhape of Birds, Beaſts, Trees, &c. which they termed Hieroglyphicks; of which two or three Examples out of Orus will not be impertinent. For Eternity they painted the Sun and Moon, as things which they believed to have had no beginning, nor were likely to have any end: for a Year, they painted a ſnake, with his tail in his mouth, to ſhew how one year ſucceeding another, kept the World ſtill in an endleſs circle. For a moneth, they painted a Palm-tree, becauſe at every new Moon, it ſendeth forth a new branch. For God, they painted a Falcon; as well for that he ſoared ſo high, as that he governeth the leſſer birds. For integrity of life, they painted fire and water, both becauſe theſe Elements are in themſelves moſt pure, and becauſe all other things are purified by them. For any thing that was abominable to the Gods, they painted a Fiſh, becauſe in their Sacrifices the Prieſts never uſed them; and the like. From this manner of expreſſing ones ſelf, the invention of Letters is thought to have had its original (though learnt by them no queſtion of the children of Iſrael, when they lived amongſt them:) the "Hiſtory whereof, take briefly and word for word, out of Tacitus. Primi per formas animalium Ægy- "ptii, &c. The Egyptians firſt of all expreſſed the conceptions of the minde, by the ſhapes of beaſts; "and the moſt ancient monuments of mans memory, are ſeen graven in ſtones; and they ſay, that they "are the firſt inventers of Letters. Then the Phœnicians, becauſe they were ſtrong at Sea, brought "them into Greece; and ſo they had the glory of that, which they received from others: For there goeth "a report, that Cadmus ſailing thither in a Phœnician ſhip, was the Inventer of that Art among the "Greeks, when they were yet unexpert and rude. Some report that Cecrops the Athenian, or Livius the "Theban, and Palamedes the Græcian, did find out ſixteen Characters at the time of the Trojan War; "and that afterward Simonides added the reſt. But in Italy the Etrurians learned them of Demaratus the "Corinthian; and the Aborigines, of Evander the Arcadian. So far Tacitus. That the Phœnicians were the firſt inventers of Letters, I dare not affirm; and as backward am I to refer the glory hereof to the Egyptians; for certainly the Hebrews were herein skilled before either: yet that the Phœnicians were herein School-maſters to the Greeks, I think I may with ſafety maintain, having Lucan in conſent with Tacitus.

Phœnices primi (fama ſi creditur) auſi
Manſuram rudibus vocem ſignare figuris.

Phœnicians firſt (if fame may credit have)
Dar'd in rude Characters our words ingrave.

Of this mind alſo is Iſidore of Sevil in the firſt book of Originations, who alſo addeth, that for that cauſe the Fronts of Books, and the Titles of Chapters were written in red letters, as it is by ſome ſtill in uſe. Hinc eſt quod & Phœniceo colore librorum capita deſcribantur, quia ab ipſis literæ initium habuere, cap. 3. As for theſe leſs vulgar Letters, which the Latines call Cyphræ, and whereof every exerciſed Stateſman have peculiar to himſelf; they were firſt invented by Julius Cæſar, when he firſt began to think of the Roman Monarchy: and were uſed by him in his Letters to his more private and tryed friends, that if by misfortune they ſhould be intercepted, the contents of them ſhould not be underſtood; ὅπως ἄγνωστα τοῖς πολλοῖς τὰ γραφόμενα, ne obvia literarum lectio cuivis eſſet. Auguſtus one of the greateſt Politicians of the World, had another kinde of obſcure writing; for in his Letters of more ſecrecy and importance, he always uſed τὸ δεύτερον ἀντὶ στοιχεῖον, to put the letter immediately following in the order of the Alphabet, for that which in ordinary writing he ſhould have uſed. As for Brachigraphie, or the Art of writing by ſhort Characters, ſo uſeful for the taking of a Speech or Sermon as it is ſpoken: I find in Dion, that Mœcenas that great favourite of Auguſtus Cæſar, and favourer of Learning, did firſt invent them, ad celeritatem ſcribendi, for the ſpeedier diſpatch of writing; ϗ πρῶτος σημεῖα γραμμάτων τινὰ (they are the very words of my Author) πρὸς τάχος ἐξεῦρε. Iſidor in the ſecond Chapter of his book above mentioned, aſcribeth it to Aquila, the Libertus or freed man of his Mœcenas; and to Tertius Perſannius, and Philargius, who added to this invention. Yet had all they their chief light in it from Tullius Tito, a freed man of Cicero's; who had undertaken and compaſſed it in the Prepoſitions, but went no further. At the laſt it was perfected by Seneca, who brought this Art into order and method; the whole volume of his contractions conſiſting of 5000 words. Deinde Seneca contracto omnium, digeſtoque & aucto numero, opus effecit in quinque millia. But now I make haſt to take a ſurvey of theſe Egyptians as they ſtand at the preſent, much differing from the ingenuity and abilities of their Predeceſſors.

For ſuch as have obſerved the nature of the Modern Egyptians, affirm them to have much degenerated from the worth of their Anceſtors; prone to innovations, devoted to luxury, cowardly, cruel, addicted naturally to cavil, and to detract from whatſoever is good and eminent. In their dealing with other men more obſervant than faithful, of a wit much inclining to craftineſs, and very eager on their profit:

Of perſon, of a mean ſtature, tawny of complexion, and ſpare of body, but active and quick of foot. Such as inhabit in the Cities, apply themſelves to merchandiſe; grow rich by Trading, reaſonably well habited, and not much differing from the Turks in their dreſs and Faſhion. Thoſe in the Country, who betake themſelves to Husbandry, affirmed to be a ſavage and naſty People, cruſted over with dirt, and ſtinking of ſmoak; fit company for none but thoſe of their own condition. Nothing now left amongſt them of the Arts of their Anceſtors, but an affectation which they have unto Divinations; to Fortune-telling great pretenders: by which, and by ſome cheating-tricks in which very well-practiſed, great numbers of them wander from one place to another, and ſo get their livelyhood; occaſioning the vagabonds and ſtraglers of other Nations, who pretend unto the ſame falſe Arts, to aſſume their names. The whole body of the Inhabitants now an Hochpot or medley of many Nations, Moors, Arabians, Turks, the natural Egyptian making up the leaſt part of the reckoning.

The women of the ſame complexion with the men, but well formed and featured, did they not too much affect a ſeeming corpulency; which if they cannot get in fleſh, they will have in cloaths. Very fruitful in child-bearing, and quick of diſpatch when they are in labour: ſome of them having three or four children at a Birth; thoſe that are born in the eighth moneth living to good Age, aud not in danger of death, as in other Countries. Such of them as dwell in Cities, cover their faces with black Cypres beſpotted with red; their arms, and ancles garniſhed with bracelets and hoops of gold, ſilver, or ſome other Metal. Thoſe in the Country, for a vail, uſe ſome dirty clout, having holes onely for their eyes, which little is too much to ſee and abſtain from loathing. Both in the City and the Country, contrary to the cuſtom in all places elſe, the women uſe to make water ſtanding, and the men couring on their knees.

The old Egyptians were ſo eminent in Arts and Learning, that from them Pythagoras, and Democritus learnt their Philoſophy; Lycurgus, Solon, and Plato, their Forms of Government. Orpheus, and Homer, their Poetical fictions of the Gods. Particularly, here flouriſhed Ariſtarchus that famous and learned Grammarian; 2. Herodian, a diligent Student and ſearcher into curious Arts; 3. Ammonius, the Maſter of Plotinus; 4. Didymus, ſurnamed Chalcenteros, for his indefatigable induſtry in ſeveral Sciences; 5. Manethon, an old Hiſtorian, of whom we have nothing but ſome fragments; 6. Appianus, an Hiſtorian of later date, whoſe works are extant, 7. Didymus the Grammarian, 8. Cl. Ptolomaus, the Geographer; 9. Achilles Statius the Poet; 10. And before all, the profound Philoſopher Mercurius, ſirnamed Triſmegiſtus. And after their converſion to the faith of Chriſt, 1. Pamanus the firſt Reader of Divinity in the Schools of Alexandria; 2, Origen and 3. Clemens Alexandrinus, both ſkilled in the univerſality of Learning; 4. Dionyſius; 5. Athanaſius, and 6. Cyril; all three Biſhops of Alexandria, and the glories of their ſeveral times. Now nothing but ignorance and Barbariſm to be found amongſt them.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt here planted by S. Mark, whom all Antiquity maketh the firſt Biſhop of Alexandria. His ſucceſſors, till the time of Heraclus and Dionyſius, choſen continually out of the Presbytery or Cathedral-Clergy; afterwards out of the Clergy at large. Their Juriſdiction ſetled by a Canon of the Council of Nice, over all the Churches in the whole Dioceſs of Egypt, (taking the word Dioceſs in the Civil notion) containing Libya, Pentapolis and Egypt ſpecially ſo called: to which, though Epiphanius addes Thebais, Mareotica, and Ammoniaca, yet he addes nothing in effect; Thebais, and Mareotica being parts of Egypt, as Ammoniaca was of Libya. Afterwards the Æthiopian or Abaſſine Churches became ſubject to this Patriarch alſo, and do acknowledge to this day ſome relation to him. By the coming in of the Saracens, and the ſubjugation of this Countrey, Chriſtianity fell here into great decay; languiſhing ſo ſenſibly ſince thoſe times, eſpecially ſince the conqueſt of it by the Turks: that whereas Brochardus in his time reckoned three hundred thouſand Chriſtians; in the laſt eſtimate which was made of them, they were found to be but fifty thouſand. This ſmall remainder of them, commonly called Cophti, either from the Greek word κόπτω, ſcindo, becauſe they retained the uſe of Circumciſion with their Chriſtianity; or from Coptus a chief Town in Egypt, in which many of them did reſide; or finally by abbreviation from Ægopthi, corrupted from Ægyptii, their own National name. They are all Jacobites in Sect, from whom they differ notwithſtanding in ſome particulars, in ſome from all other Chriſtians Churches, in many from the Church of Rome. The points moſt proper to them, 1. Uſing Circumciſion with their Baptiſm, but rather as a National than Religious cuſtome; though in that ſenſe alſo laid aſide, as is ſaid by ſome, by the perſwaſion of ſome Legates from the Pope of Rome, in a Synod held in Caire, An. 1583. 2*ly*. Conferring all ſacred Orders under the Prieſthood, on Infants immediately after Baptiſm; their Parents, till they come to ſixteen years of age, performing what they promiſed in their behalf, viz. Chaſtity, faſting on Wedneſday and Friday, and the four Lents of the year. 3*ly*. Reputing Baptiſm not to be of any efficacy, except miniſtred by the Prieſt, in the open Church, in what extremity ſoever: 4*ly*. And yet not baptizing any Children till the fortieth day, though they die in the interim. 5*ly*. Giving to Infants the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, aſſoon as Chriſtened; 6. Contracting marriages even in the ſecond Degree of Conſanguinity, without diſpenſation; 7. Obſerving not the Lords day, nor any of the Feſtivals, except onely in Cities; 8*ly*. And in their Liturgies, reading the Goſpel written by Nicodemus. The points wherein they differ from the Church of Rome, 1. Adminiſtring the Sacrament of the Lords Supper under both kinds, 2*ly*. Adminiſtring in leavened bread; 3*ly*. Admitting neither Extreme Unction, nor the uſe of the Euchariſt, to thoſe that are ſick; 4*ly*. Nor Purgatory, nor Prayer for the dead, 5*ly*. Not uſing Elevation in the act of Adminiſtring; And 6. Reckoning the Roman Church for Heretical, and eſteeming no better of the Latines than they do of the Jews. In theſe opinions they continue hitherto againſt all Opponents and perſwaſions: For though Baronius in the end of the ſixth Tome of his Annals, hath regiſtred an Ambaſſage from Marcus, the then Patriarch of Alexandria, to Pope Clement the 8; wherein he is ſaid to have ſubmitted himſelf and the Churches of Egypt to the Pope of Rome: yet upon further ſearch made, it was found but a Cheat, deviſed to hold up the reputation of a ſinking cauſe. The Patriarch of Alexandria ſtill adhereth to his own Authority; though many of late, by the practiſe and ſolicitation of ſome buſie Friars, have been drawn to be of the Religion of the Church of Rome, and to uſe her Liturgies.

What their Religion was before Chriſtianity, is obvious to the eye of a vulgar Reader; even the worſt of Gentiliſm; theſe people not only worſhipping the Sun, Moon, and the Stars of Heaven, creatures of greateſt uſe and glory; nor only ſacrificing to Jupiter, Hercules, Apollo, and the reſt of the gods (many of whom were Authors in their ſeveral times of ſome publick benefit to mankind) as did other Gentiles; but attributing divine honour to Crocodiles, Snakes, Serpents, Garlick, Leeks and Onions. For which, as worthily condemned by the Chriſtian Fathers, ſo moſt deſervedly expoſed unto publick ſcorn, by the pens of the Poets.

Porrum & cæpe nefas violare, & lædere morſu,
Felices populi, quibus hæc naſcuntur in hortis
Numina.——Quis neſcit qualia demens
Ægyptus portenta colat, &c.

Which may be rendred to this purpoſe.

To bite an Onion or a Leek, is more Than deadly ſin. The Numen they adore
Growes in their Gardens. And who doth not know
What monſtrous Shapes for gods in Egypt go?

But the God moſt eſteemed by them, and by all ſorts of the Egyptians the moſt adored, was Apis, a coal-black Oxe, with a white ſtar in his forehead, the Effigies of an Eagle on his Back, and two hairs only in his Tail. But it ſeemeth his Godſhip was not ſo much reſpected by Strangers. For Cambyſes when he conquered Egypt, ran him with his ſword through the Thigh, and cauſed all his Prieſts to be ſcourged: And Auguſtus being here, would not vouchſafe to ſee him, ſaying, Θεὺς ἀλλ᾽ οὐχὶ βοῦς προσκυνεῖν εἴθισμαι, that that the Gods and not the Oxen of Egypt were the Object of his Devotions. A ſpeech moſt truly worthy ſo brave an Emperour.

Among the Rarities of this Country, ſome were the works of Nature, and ſome of induſtry and magnificence. Of this laſt kind I reckon the Labyrinth, the Pyramides, and the Pharos; all of them admirable in their ſeveral kinds, the envy of the Ages paſt, and the aſtoniſhment of the preſent. Of the Labyrinth we ſhall ſpeak anon, in the courſe of our buſineſs. Look we now on the Pyramides, many in number, three moſt celebrated, and one the principal of all; ſituate on the South of the City of Memphis, and on the Weſtern banks of Nilus. This laſt, the chief of the Worlds ſeven wonders, ſquare at the bottom, is ſuppoſed to take up eight acres of ground. Every ſquare 300 ſingle paces in length, aſcended by 255 ſteps, each ſtep above 3 Foot high, and a breadth proportionable; growing by degrees narrower and narrower till we come to the top, and at the top conſiſting but of three Stones only, yet large enough for 60 men to ſtand upon. No Stone ſo little in the whole, as to be drawn by any of our Carriages, yet brought thither from the Arabian Mountains. How brought, and by what Engine mounted, is an equal wonder, Built for the Sepulchre of Cheops, an Egyptian King (as were the reſt for others of thoſe mighty Princes) who employed in it day by day twenty years together, no fewer then 366000 men continually working on it. The Charges which they put him to, in no other Food then Garlick, Radiſhes, and Onions, being computed at a thouſand and eight hundred Talents. The next to this in bulk and beauty, is ſaid to be the Work of a Daughter of Cheops, enabled (as Herodotus writeth) both to finiſh her Fathers undertaking, and raiſe her own unto the height, by the proſtitution of her body, requiring but one ſtone towards the Work from each one of her Cuſtomers; but the Tale unlikely. Nor is it of a greater truth, though affirmed by Joſephus, and ſuppoſed by many good Divines, that the drudgery put upon the Iſraelites did concern theſe Pyramides: the Materials of theſe Works being ſtone; their employment Brick: But paſt all doubt, advanced by thoſe conſiderate Princes upon good advice, and not for oſtentation only of their power and glories. For by this means they did not only eternize their memory to ſucceeding Ages, but for the preſent kept the Subject from ſloath and Idleneſs; who being a people prone unto Innovations, were otherwiſe like enough to have fed that ſin in the change of Government, if not thus prudently diverted.

Next theſe Pyramides, I place the Iſle and Tower of Pharos, the Iſland oppoſite unto Alexandria, once a mile diſtant from the Land, but joyned to the Continent by Cleopatra, on this occaſion. The Rhodians, then Lords of the Sea, uſed to exact ſome tribute or acknowledgment out of every Iſland within thoſe Seas; and conſequently out of this. Their Ambaſſadors ſent unto Cleopatra to demand this tribute, ſhe detained with her ſeven daies, under colour of celebrating ſome ſolemn Feſtivals; and in the mean time, by making huge dams and banks in the Sea, with incredible both charge and ſpeed, united the Iſland to the Shore; Which finiſhed, ſhe ſent the Rhodians away empty-handed, with this witty jeere, telling them, that they were to take Toll of the Iſlands, and not of the Continent. A work of great rarity and magnificence, both for the bigneſs of it, taking up ſeven furlongs of ground, and for that cauſe called Heptaſtadium; and that incredible ſpeed, wherewith it was finiſhed. As for the Watch-Tower, called in Greek and Latin Pharos, by the name of the Iſland; it was built by Ptolomy Philadelphus, for the benefit of Saylors (the Seas upon that coaſt being very unſafe and full of Flats) to guide them over the Bar of Alexandria. Deſervedly eſteemed another of the Worlds ſeven Wonders: the other five being 1. The Mauſolæum, 2. The Temple of Epheſus, 3. The Wals of Babylon 4. The Coloſſus of Rhodes, and 5. the Statue of Jupiter Olympicus. This Watch-tower, or Pharos, was of wonderful height, aſcended by degrees, and having many Lanthorns at the top, wherein lights burned nightly, as a direction to ſuch as ſailed by Sea. The Materials were white Marble; the chief Architect, Soſtratus of Gnidos, who engraved on the work this Inſcription, Soſtratus of Gnidos, the Son of Dexiphanes, to the Gods protectors, for the ſafeguard of Sailers. This Inſcription he covered with Plaiſter, and thereon engraved the name and title of the King, the Founder: to the end that the Kings name being ſoon waſted and waſhed away, his own, which was written in marble, might be eternized to poſterity, as the Founder of it. Nigh unto this Pharos, Cæſar purſuing Pompey into Egypt; and having diſcontented the King thereof, by demanding pay for his Souldiers, had his Navy which here lay at anchor, aſſaulted by Achilles, one of young Ptolomies Servants, Cæſar himſelf being then in Alexandria. Hearing of the skirmiſh he haſted to the Pharos, meaning to ſuccour his Navy in perſon: but the Egyptians making towards him on all ſides, he was compelled to leap into the Sea, and ſwim for his life. And though (to avoid their darts) he somtimes ducked; yet held he ſtill his left hand above the water, and in it divers Books, which he carried ſafe unto his Ships; and animating his men, got the victory. It is ſaid that Egypt hath only two doors; the one by land, which is the ſtrong town of Peleuſium, or Damiata; the other by water, which is this Pharos: *Tota Æ*gyptus maritimo acceſſu, Phar[illegible]; pedeſtre vero, Peluſio, velut clauſtris munita exiſtimatur, ſaith Oppins.

Amongſt the rarites of Nature, we may reckon thoſe ſtrange Beaſts and Fiſhes, proper almoſt unto this Countrey, i. e. the Crocodile, the Ichneumon, the Hippopotamus (or Sea-horſe) the Ibis, the Aſpe, and many ſeveral ſorts of Serpents. To ſpeak of which particularly, were a work more proper to a Natural Hiſtory, then a Geographical. And yet the Crocodile, more proper unto Egypt then all the reſt, cannot be parted with in ſilence; A creature of a ſtrange nature, hatched of an Egge no bigger than that of a Turkie; and yet increaſing to the length of thirty foot; his tail as long as all the reſt of his body, with which he is accuſtomed to enchain his prey, and draw it into the River; his feet armed with claws, and his back with impenetrable Scales; his mouth ſo wide (of which he moveth only the upper jaw) that he is able to ſwallow a whole Heifer; equally uſed to both Elements, but better ſighted in the water, than on the land; Cowardly, though a Creature of Prey, and ſuch as uſually flies from thoſe which dare ſet upon him; and eaſily vanquiſhed by the Dolphin, who ſwimming under the water, woundeth him in the belly, where aſſaultable only. Whether ſo eaſily deſtroyed by the Ichneumon (a kind of water-Rat) skipping into his mouth, and gnawing his way out again, as old Writers ſay, hath of late been queſtioned. That which I look on as a Rarity of the greateſt moment (if not rather to be accounted ſupernatural) is that about five miles from the City of Caire, there is a place in which on every Good-Friday yearly, there appear the heads, legs and arms of men riſing out of the ground, to a very great number; which if a man draw near unto them, or touch any of them, will ſhrink again into the earth. Suppoſed by ſome to be an Impoſture of ſome Watermen, only, who ſtick them over-night in the ſands, and keeping them ſecret to themſelves, obtain thereby the Ferrying over of many thouſands of People, to behold the ſight. But Stephen Dupleis, a ſober and diſcerning man, in the opinion of Goulartius, who reports it from him, conceived otherwiſe of it: affirming ſoberly that he was an eye-witneſs of the wonder, that he had touched divers of theſe riſing Members; and that (as he was once ſo doing to the head of a Child) a man of Caire cried out unto him, Kali, Kali, ante materaſde, that is to ſay, Hold, Hold, you know not what you do. A ſtrange Fore-runner (if it be of undoubted credit) of the Reſurrection of the whole Body, preſented yearly in the riſing of theſe ſeveral parts.

Of leſs diſpute, but not leſs rarity in nature, are theſe that follow. 1. That in all this Country it never raineth, or if a cloud do ſomtimes happen to diſſolve upon them, it bringeth on their bodies innumerable ſores, and ſtrange diſeaſes. 2. The annual overflowing of the River Nilus, and the many memorable things which are ſaid to follow on the ſame. Of which it is thus ſaid by Lucan;

Terra ſuis contenta bonis, non indiga mercis,
Aut Jovis; in ſolo tanta eſt fiducia Nilo:

The earth content with its own wealth, doth crave
No Forreign Mart, nor Jove himſelf; they have Their hopes alone in Nilus fruitful wave.

This Nilus hath his head, not in the Mountains of the Moon, as the Ancients thought, but in the Lake Zembre, in Æthiopia Interior: and running in one continual Channel (excepting where it brancheth into little Iſlands, as it ſomtimes doth) till it waſheth the mid-land of Egypt, is before its influx into the Sea, divided into ſeven great ſtreams, opening into the ſea with ſo many mouths. Namely, 1. Heracleoticum, 2. Bolviticum. 3. Sebanniticum, 4. Patinicum, 5. Mendeſium, 6. Caniticum, 7. Peluſaicum. The firſt and laſt of theſe Currents (which are the only two now left) being far diſtant from other, and growing into one, at the firſt point of the Rivers diviſion, make that part of Egypt which is called Delta, becauſe to ſuch as come to this Country out of Greece, Italy or Anatolia, it reſembleth the Greek Letter Δ. The other part is called Thebais, from Thebe, the chief City of it.

This Nilus from the 15 day of June, ſwelleth above its Banks, for the ſpace of 40 daies; and in as many more gathereth his waters again to their proper bounds. If it flow not to the height of fifteen Cubits, then the earth is deficient in her abundance of increaſe, for want of moyſture: and if the waters ſurmount the ſuperficies of the Earth, more then ſeventeen Cubits, then like a drunken man, it cannot produce its natural operation, as having his ſtomack (as it were) over-laid, and ſurcharged with too much liquor: but if the mean be granted, there is no Countrey which can brag of the like fertility; the Corn being all houſed before the 20th of May. During this Inundation, they keep their Beaſts and Cattel on the tops of ſuch little hils, which either the Providence of Nature, or the Induſtry of man, hath prepared for them; where they abide till the decreaſe of the Waters: and on theſe hils alſo ſtand the moſt of their towns and villages, appearing in the time of the Flood, like ſo many Iſlands; and holding a commerce and continual Traffick by the entercourſe of Boats and Shallops, by which they do tranſport their Markettable commodities from one place to another. And if it chance at any time, that the River doth not thus overflow the Country, it is not only the Fore-runner to a following dearth, but prognoſticateth ſome enſuing miſchief to the Prince and State: Confirmed by the teſtimony of good and creditable Authors, who have told us that in the 10 and 11 years of Cleopatra, the River increaſed not at all; and that it was noted as a Foreteller of the Fall of thoſe two great, but unfortunate Princes, Cleopatra and her Sweetheart Antonius. A Second commodity which ariſeth from the overflowings of Nilus, is the health which it bringeth with it in moſt parts of the Countrey; the Plague which oftentimes miſerably rageth, upon the firſt day of the Floud, abating inſtantly; inſomuch that whereas 500 may die of that diſeaſe in the City of Caire but the day before, there dieth not one of it on the day following. A third wonder in this River, is, that keeping its waters united in a body together, after it falleth into the Sea; it changeth the colour of the Mediterranean, further then any part of it can be ſeen from the ſhore. Add unto theſe, the many living creatures which the ſlime thereof ingendreth, on the withdrawing of the River to its natural channel: whereof Ovid thus,

> Sic ubi deſeruit madidos ſeptemfluus agros
> Nilus, & antiquo ſua flumina reddidit alveo;
> Plurima Cultores verſis Animalia glebis > Inveniunt.

Which I Engliſh thus.

> So when the ſeven-mouth'd Nile the fields forſakes,
> And to his ancient Channel him betakes;
> The Ploughmen many living Creatures find,
> By turning up the mud that's left behind.

Amongſt which Creatures ſo ingendred, are ſaid to be ſuch innumerable heaps of Frogs, that if Nature, or Divine Providence rather, did not furniſh this Country with a proportionable number of Storks, by whom they are greedily devoured; the Plague of Frogs would come a ſecond time upon them, to their utter deſtruction. Now becauſe Nilus runneth in its certain Channels, and that the people have no other water to make uſe of, for all neceſſities; there are many By-trenches and deep Ditches cut in convenient places (by the care and munificence of their Kings) to receive its waters, and to communicate them to the people; who know almoſt no other drink then the waters thereof, and indeed they need not; the water of this River being of ſuch excellent, both taſt and vertue, that when Peſcominus Niger ſaw his Souldiers murmure for want of Wine; What (ſaid he) do you grumble for Wine, having the waters of Nile to drink?

On the Banks of the River ſtood that famous Labyrinth built by Pſamniticus, which we have touched upon before; ſituate on the South of the Pyramides, and North of Arſinoe, or the City of Crocodiles. It contained within the compaſs of one continued wall, a thouſand houſes, and twelve Royal Palaces, all covered with Marble; and had only one entrance, but innumerable turnings and returnings, ſometimes one over another; and all in a manner invious to ſuch as were not well acquainted with them: The building more under the ground, then above; the Marble-ſtones laid with ſuch art, that neither Wood nor Cement was employed in any part of the Fabrick; the Chambers ſo diſpoſed, that the Doors upon their opening did give a report no leſs terrible, then a crack of Thunder; the main entrance all of white-Marble, adorned with ſtately Columns, and moſt curious Imagery. The end at length being attained, a pair of ſtairs of 90 ſteps conducted into a gallant Portice, ſupported with Pillars of Theban ſtone; which was the Entrance into a fair and ſpacious Hall (the place of their general Conventions) all of poliſhed Marble, ſet out with the Statues of their Gods. A work which afterwards was imitated by Dædalus in the Cretane Labyrinth; though that fell as ſhort of the glories of this, as Minos was inferiour unto Pſamniticus in power and riches.

On the Banks of this River alſo grew thoſe ſedgy Weeds called Papyri, of which Paper was made in former times. They divided it into thin flakes (into which it naturally parteth) then laying them on a Table, and moyſtening them with the glutinous waters of the River, they preſſed them together, and after dried them in the Sun. By means of this Invention, Books being eaſier to be tranſcribed and reſerved then formerly, Ptolomy Philadelphus made his excellent Library at Alexandria: and underſtanding how Attalus King of Pergamus, by the benefit of this Egyptian Paper, ſtrived to exceed him in that kind of magnificence, prohibited the carrying of it out of Egypt. Hereupon Attalus invented the uſe of Parchments, made of the skins of Calves and Sheep; from the materials called Membranæ, and Pergamenæ from the place where they were invented. The convenience whereof was the cauſe, that in ſhort time the Egyptian Paper was worn out of uſe; in place whereof ſucceeded our Paper made of Rags; the Authours of which excellent Invention, our Progenitors have forgotten to commit to memory. Before the uſe of theſe Papers and Parchments were firſt made known, I obſerve three waies of Writing amongſt the Ancients (I hope I ſhall be pardoned this ſhort digreſſion) 1. On the inward ſide of the Bark of a Tree, which is in Latine called Liber; and whence Books have the name of Libri. 2ly. On Tables framed out of the main body of a Tree, which being called Caudex, gave the Latines occaſion to call a book Codex. 3ly. They uſed to cover their Tables over with Wax, and thereon to write what they had to ſignifie; from whence a Letter-carrier was called Tabellarius. The Inſtrument wherewith they wrote, was a ſharp-pointed Iron, which they named Stylus; a word now ſignifying (the Original derived from hence) the peculiar kind of Phraſe which any man uſeth: as Negligens Stylus, in Quintilian; and Exercitatus Stylus, in Cicero. I ſhould have alſo noted, that they uſed ſomtimes to write in Leaves; That the Sibyls Oracles being ſo written and ſcattered abroad, had the name of Sibyllæ Folia; and that from thence we have the phraſe of a Leaf of Paper. But of this Argument enough.

Having thus done with the Rarities concerning Nilus, and that great increaſe of wealth which accrued thereby to all the Country, in the improvement of the natural Commodities of the Earth: Let us next look on the Red-Sea, and the great riches which that brought unto this Kingdom, in the way of Trading. A Sea whereof we have ſpoke already, as to the reaſon of the name, the extent thereof, and the ſeveral Iſlands contained in it; and therefore ſhall not need to repeat it here. That which is proper to this Countrey, and to this alone, is the fame it hath for the miraculous paſſage of the Iſraelites through it as upon dry-land, and the drowning of Pharaoh Cenchres and all his people, at large commemorated in the books of Holy Scriptures: as alſo for that through it Spices of India and Arabia, were brought to Alexandria; and thence by the Venetians diſperſed through all Europe, Africa, and Aſia. I ſuppoſe I ſhall not do amiſs to ſet down Hiſtorically out of Galuano, a relation of the begininng, continuance, and period of the Traffick through this Sea, by which all Europe formerly received ſo great Commodity. Know then (ſaith he) that Ptolomy Philadelphus, 277 years before the Incarnation, was the firſt that ſet on foot this Navigation: Coſir (of old called Myos: Hormos) on the Seaſide being the ordinary Haven, out of which they hoyſed ſail for India; and into which they returned, full fraught with their Commodities. From hence they were by land conveighed to Coptus, and ſo down the Nile to Alexandria: by which Traffick the City grew exceeding rich; inſomuch that the Cuſtom-houſe there yielded Ptol. Auletes 7 Millions and an half of Gold yearly. The Romans being Lords of Egypt, enhanſed the Cuſtomes to double that ſum: they ſent into India every year (as Pliny witneſſeth) 120 ſhips, whoſe lading was worth 1200000 Crowns; and there was made in return of every Crown, 100. When the Vandals, Lombards, Goths, and Moors had torn in pieces the Roman Empire, all Commerce between Nations began to ceaſe. At laſt perceiving the inconvenience, they began anew; conveighing the Indian Commodities, partly by land, partly by water, unto Capha in Taurica Cherſoneſus, belonging to the Genoeſe. Next Trabezond was made the Mart-Town, then Sarmachand in Zagataie, where the Indian, Turkiſh, and Perſian Merchants met to barter wares: the Turks conveighing their merchandiſe to Damaſcus, Baratti, and Aleppo; from whence the Venetians tranſported it to Venice, making that the common Emporium of Chriſtendom. Once again, viz. Anno 1300. the Soldans of Egypt reſtored the paſſage by the Red-Sea; which having continued more then 200 years, is now diſcontinued by the Portugal, Spaniard, Engliſh and Dutch, which bring them to their ſeveral homes by the back-ſide of Africk: So that not only the Traffick of Alexandria is almoſt decayed, and the Riches of the Venetians much diminiſhed; but the Drugs and Spices have loſt much of their vertue, as impaired by too much moyſture. So much ſaith he, touching the courſe and alteration of this Trading: To which I ſhall take leave to add, That for the better and more quick return of ſuch Commodities as were uſually brought into this Sea, ſome of the Kings of Egypt attempted formerly to cut a main Channel from it to the River Nilus, paſſable by Ships of greateſt Burden; the marks of whoſe proud attempts are remaining ſtill. Seſoſtris was the firſt who deſigned the work, having before with good ſucceſs cut many Trenches from the River, and ſome Navigable, into many places of the Country; by which unprofitable Mariſhes were drained, the Country ſtrengthened, Trade made eaſie, and the people better furniſhed with water then in former times. Darius the great Perſian Monarch, ſeconded the ſame Project; ſo did one of the Ptolomies; The like is ſaid of a capricious Portugal in theſe latter times. But they all gave it over on the ſame conſideration; which was a fear leſt by letting in the Red-Sea, they might drown the Country, and perhaps make a ſecond Deluge in the parts of Greece and Aſia Minor, which lay neareſt to them: that Sea being found to be much higher then the Mediterranean, and the flats of Egypt.

But here we are to underſtand, that all which hitherto hath been ſpoken concerning Egypt, relates to Egypt ſtrictly, and ſpecially ſo called; containing only ſo much of the Country of Egypt, as lieth upon the Banks and Channels of the River Nilus: and not to all that tract of ground which lay betwixt the Red-Sea, and the borders of Libya, which was reckoned in the compaſs of the Kingdom of Egypt, much leſs as comprehending Libya and Cyrene alſo, though now accounted Members of that great body, and anciently parts or Provinces of the Dioceſe of it. For Egypt, in the largeſt ſenſe and acception of the word, may be, and generally is divided into theſe three parts, viz. 1. Egypt, in the general Notion, or the Kingdom of Egypt, extended on the Mediterranean from the borders of Idumæa, to the Roman Libya, or Marmarica, lying Weſtward of the mouth of Nilus, called Heracleoticum: and on the Borders of Æthiopia Superior, from the ſaid Red-Sea, to the Countrey of Libya Interior. 2. Libya, or Marmarica, lying betwixt Egypt properly ſo called, and the Province of Cyrene or Pentapolis. And 3. Cyrene, or Pentapolis, reaching from that Lybia, to the greater Syrtis; where it bordered with that part of the African Dioceſe, which is now called the Kingdom of Tunis. And in this firſt acception of it we ſhall now proceed to a Survey of the Mountains, and Chief Cities; which done, we ſhall deſcribe the other in their proper places; and then unite them all in the General Story.

As for the Mountains of this Countrey, there are very many: there were no living elſe for the people in the time of the overflowings of the River. The principal of thoſe, 1. Thoſe called Montes Libyci, lying in a long chain on the Weſt of Nilus; 2. Alabaſtrinus; 3. Porphyritus; 4. Troigus; 5. Baſanitus on the Eaſt thereof. Betwixt theſe Hills the courſe of the River is ſo hemmed in on both ſides, that at the upper part of the ſtream, where it firſt entreth into Egypt, the ſpace betwixt the Mountains is not above four miles broad; enlarging afterwards to eight, then about Caire to thirty ſeven; then opening wider and wider, till we come to the breaches of the Delta, as the Countrey doth increaſe in breadth. On theſe and other of the Mountains and leſſer Hills, ſtand moſt part of the Towns, the receptacles of the Countrey people in the time of the Floud, riſing when leaſt, to fifteen cubits, or ſeven yards and an half.

Rivers of note here are none but Nilus, nor indeed any one but that; that being ſufficient of it ſelf to enrich this Countrey, which otherwiſe would be nothing but a Sandy Deſart. But what they want in Rivers, is ſupplied with Lakes and Trenches, which ſerve for watering their Cattel, tempering of Mortar for their buildings, and other ſuch inferior uſes; ſometimes perhaps for drink for the poorer ſort, who cannot be conveniently furniſhed with the waters of Nile. Amongſt the Trenches (which were many, as before was ſaid) thoſe of moſt eſtimation were the Works of Ptolomy, and the Emperour Trajan; the firſt falling into that branch of the Nile, which maketh the Iſle called Heracleotis; the other into the main body of it, not far from Caire. Theſe two, by reaſon of the many freſh ſprings which fall into them, have the name of Rivers in old Authours: and betwixt theſe was ſeated the Land of Goſhen, extending from Nilus to the Red-Sea, on the Eaſt and Weſt. The chief of note amongſt the Lakes, were thoſe called, 1. Mareotis, not far from Alexandria, by Pliny called Arapotes, Maria by Ptolomy; all which names are now loſt, and changed into that of Lagodi Antacon, from a Town of that name near unto it. 2. Laccus, ſuppoſed to be the ſame which in the book of Maccabees is called Aſphar, lib. 1, cap. 9. And 3. Moeris, now called Bucheira, more memorable than the reſt. In compaſs 3500 furlongs, 50 fathom deep, in the midſt whereof were two Pyramides 50 fathoms above the water, and as much beneath it: the Fiſh of this Lake, for one ſix moneths in the year, ſaid to be worth twenty of their pounds a day to the Kings Exchequer; for the other ſix, each day a Talent. 4. The Lakes called Amari, into which the Trench, or River called Ptolomeus, doth diſcharge its waters, conveyed from thence into the Red-Sea.

The whole divided anciently into two parts onely. 1. That called Delta, betwixt the two extream branches of the River Nilus, the form of which letter it reſembleth to him who ſtanding on the Sea-ſhore could take a view of it. 2. That called Thebais, from Thebe the principal City of it, comprehending all the reſt of the courſe of that River, ſhut up on both ſides with the Mountains ſpoken of before. But this Diviſion leaving out all thoſe parts hereof, which lay on the Eaſt-ſide towards the Arabian Golfs, and on the Weſt, as far as to the borders of Libya Marmarica: the Macedonians laying it all together, divided it into 18 Cantreds, or Diſtricts, by them called Nomi; increaſed in the time of Ptolomy the Geographer, to 46. Ortelius out of divers Authours hath found 20 more. When conquered by the Romans, and made a Dioceſs of the Empire, it was divided into four Provinces, nor reckoning Marmarica, and Cyrene into the accompt;) that is to ſay, 1. Ægyptus ſpecially ſo called, containing all the Delta, and the Diſtrict or Nomus of Mareotica, bordering on Marmarica. 2. Auguſtanica, ſo called from Auguſtus Cæſar, on the Eaſt of the Delta, betwixt it and Arabia Petræa. 3. Arcadia, ſo called from the Emperour Arcadius, in whoſe time it was taken out of Thebais, lying on both ſides of the River, from the Delta to the City of Antinous. 4. Thebais, extending on both ſides of the River from the borders of Liyba Marmarica to the Red-Sea, (as the other doth) from Antinous, unto Æthiopia; Divided otherwiſe by ſome, into Superiorem, reaching from Æthiopia to the City of Aminous, Mediam, ſtretching thence to the point of the Delta; and Inferiorem, which comprehendeth all the reſt. But at this time, that part hereof, which lieth on the South and Eaſt of Caire, is called Saud, or Salid; honoured heretofore with the dwelling of the ancient Pharaohs, becauſe neareſt unto Æthiopia their moſt puiſſant neighbour. 2. That betwixt Caire, Roſetta, and Alexandria, hath the name of Errifia, wherein the Ptolomæan Princes did moſt reſide; becauſe moſt convenient for receiving ſupplies of men, from the States of Greece. And finally, that from Caire, to Teneſe and Damiata, is now called Maremna, in which the Turks and Mamalucks made the ſeat of their Empire: becauſe more neighbouring to the Chriſtians, whom they ſtood in fear of, as likelieſt to invade them upon that ſide. In the whole Countrey there was reckoned in the time of Amaſis the 2d, no fewer than 20000 Cities: but if the Towns and Villages be not reckoned in, I ſhould much doubt of the accompt. By Diodorus Siculus it is ſaid that there were 3000 in his time: but Ortelius, on a diligent ſearch, finds 300 onely.

Thoſe of moſt note in the Province of Auguſtanica, 1. Peluſium, the moſt eaſtern City of Egypt towards Idumæa, ſituate on the moſt Eaſtern Channel of Nilus, called hence Peluſiacum; by Ammianus ſaid to be the work of Peleus the Father of Achilles, commanded by the Gods to purge himſelf in the Lake adjoyning, for the murder of his brother Phocus. Accounted for the chief door of Egypt towards the Land, as Pharos was to thoſe who came thither by Sea; the Metropolis of the Province of Auguſtanica, the birth-place of Ptolomy the Geographer, and the Epiſcopal See of S. Iſidore, ſurnamed Peluſiotes, whoſe eloquent and pious Epiſtles are ſtill extant. Out of the ruines hereof (if not the ſame under another title) aroſe, 2. Damiata, memorable for the often Sieges laid unto it by the Chriſtian Armies; for none more than that under John de Brenne, the titulary King of Jeruſalem, and the Princes of Europe, Anno. 1220. During which (being of 18 months continuance) the Famine and the Peſtilence ſo extreamly raged, that the Town in a manner was diſpeopled, before the Beſiegers knew any thing of their condition; till in the end two venturous Souldiers, admiring the ſilence and ſolitude of ſo great a City, in a Bravado ſcaled the walls; but found no man to make reſiſtance. The next day the whole Army entred, where they found in every houſe, and every corner of the ſtreets, whole heaps of dead bodies, none to give them burial; A lamentable and ruthful ſpectacle! 3. Heros, or Civitas Heroum, in the Ara- bian Iſthmus, at the very bottom of the Golf; remarkable for the firſt interview betwixt Jacob and Joſeph, after his coming into Egypt. 4. Heliopolis, or the City of the Sun, now called Betſames, in the Scriptures On, of which Potiphar the Father of Aſenath (whom Pharaoh married unto Joſeph) was Prieſt, or Prince, as is ſaid Gen.41.45. Given (as Joſephus telleth us) for an habitation to the ſons of Jacob; by conſequence one of the chief Cities of the Land Rameſes, or Goſhen: and memorable in times ſucceeding for a publick Temple built for the Jews, with the conſent of Ptolomy ſirnamed Philadelphus, by Onias the High-Prieſt, then diſpoſſeſſed of his Authority and Office by the power of Antiochus: a Temple much eſteemed by the Helliniſts, or Grecizing Jews; and though Schiſmatical at the beſt in its firſt original, yet not Schiſmatical and Idolatrous too, as was that of Mount Garizim. 5. Bubuſtis, ſomewhat more North then Heliopolis, by ſome of the ancients called Avaris, by the Scriptures Pibeſeth, another City of that tract; now better known by the name of Zioth: ſuppoſed to be the ſame which the Notitia calleth Caſtra Judæorum; memorable in times of Paganiſme, for a famous Temple of Diana. 6. Arſinoe, on the ſhore of the Red-ſea, ſo called in honour of Arſinoe, ſiſter of Philadelphus, and wife to Lyſimachus King of Thrace; afterwards called Cleopatris, in honour of Queen Cleopatra; now better known by the name of Sues? Of great commerce and trading in the time of the Ptolomies; Now almoſt abandoned; and would be utterly deſerted, were it not made the ſtation of the Turkiſh Gallies, that command the Gulf: which being framed at Cair of ſuch Timber as is brought thither by ſea from the Woods of Cilicia, and ſometimes from the ſhores of the Euxine Sea; are again taken in peeces, carried from Carie unto this City on backs of Camels, and here joyned together. Conceived to be the ſame which in former times was called Baal Zephon (of which ſee Exod.14.9.) the laſt incamping-place of the Tribes of Iſrael, who from hence paſſed through the Red-ſea, as upon dry land. 7. Gleba Rubra, by the Greeks called Hiera Bolus, and ſometimes Erythra Bolus alſo, more near the Latine; the redneſs of the ſoil giving name unto it: ſituate on the River or Trench of Tralan: more memorable for a misfortune that beſel it than for any thing elſe; purpoſely burnt by Amenophis the fift, upon this occaſion: Being blind, he was aſſured by ſome of his Wizards, that if he waſhed his eyes with the Urine of a Woman, which had never known any but her own husband, he ſhould be reſtored unto his ſight. After a long ſearch and many vain trials, he met with one whoſe water cured him; whom he took to wife: and cauſing all the reſt whom he had made trial of, to be brought together to this Town, he ſet fire on the City, and burnt both it and all the women there aſſembled; which tale, if true, is little to the credit of the Dames of Egypt.

Places of moſt note and obſervation in the Province of Egypt, ſtrictly and ſpecially ſo called, are 1. Alexandria ſituate Weſtward of the Delta, over againſt the Iſle of Pharos; and built upon a Promontory thruſting it ſelf into the Sea; with which on the one ſide, and the Lake Mareotis on the other, it is exceeding well defended: the Work of Alexander the Great, and by him peopled with Greeks, immediately after his conqueſt of Egypt. The Regal Seat of the Ptolomies, whilſt Egypt did maintain the State of a Kingdom: and afterwards the Metropolis of it, when a Roman Dioceſe. Adorned with many ſtately buildings; of which moſt memorable the Serapium, (or Temple of their God Separis) for ſumptuous workmanſhip, and the magnificence of the Fabrick; inferiour to none but the Roman Capitol: and next to that, the Library erected by Philadelphus, who had ſtored it with 700000 Volums; unfortunately burnt in the War againſt Julius Cæſar? A City of great trading, and infinite Riches; μέγισον ἐμπόριον τῆς οἰκουμένης, the greateſt Empory of the World, as is ſaid by Strabo. Wanton with which, the Citizens ſo abounded in all licentiouſneſs both of life, and ſpeech, that they ſpared not the Emperour himſelf, if he came in their way. But they paid dearly for their folly. For Caracalla not ſo patient of a Contumely as ſome wiſer Princes, having felt the laſhes of their tongues, when he was amongſt them; aſſembled all the youth of the City, as if out of them he would have choſen ſome to attend his Perſon: and ſuddenly gave command to his Souldiers, to put them all to the ſword. A ſlaughter ſo great and univerſal, that the River Nilus coloured with the blood of the ſlain, might not improperly at that time be called a Red-ſea. In this City, Anno 180 Gantenus read both Divinity and Philoſophy to all ſuch as would come to hear him: which as it is conceived to give the firſt hint to the inſtituting of Univerſities, in the reſt of Chriſtendom; ſo from that ſmall beginning the Schools of Alexandria grew ſo great and eminent, that Nazianzen calleth them Παντοίας παιδεύσεως ἐργαστήριον, the ſhop, or work-houſe, as it were, of all kinds of Learning. Much ſhort of what it was even in point of trading, eſpecially ſince the diverſion of the Trading from the Bay of Arabia; and utterly diveſted of thoſe beauties which once it had. Inhabited at the preſent by a mixture of Nations, Moors, Jews, Turks, Greeks, and Chriſtian Cophtives; more for ſome little gain which they reap by Traffick, than any pleaſure in the place: Now called Scanderia by the Turks, remarkable onely for the houſe of the Patriarch (though he dwell for the moſt part in Caire) and a Church in which S. Mark their firſt Biſhop was ſaid to be buried. 2. Canopus, ſituate Eaſt of Alexandria, and on the principal branch of the Nile, called Heracleoticum: ſo called from Canopus the Pilot of Menelaus, who having ſuffered ſhipwrack upon this coaſt, was there interred by his Maſter? A Town ſo branded in old times, for varieties of all kind of beaſtlineſs, and luxury; that as Seneca very well obſerved, he that avoided the viciouſneſs and debauchery of it, could not ſcape the infamy: the very place adminiſtring matter for ſuſpition. 3. Roſetta, on the ſame branch of the River, and not far from Canopus, out of whoſe ruines it aroſe; built by a Slave of one of the Egyptian Caliphs; unwalled and deſtitute of all Fortifications, but plentifully accommodated with all ſorts of commodities, and well frequented by the Merchant. 4. Nicopolis, now called Munia, the Monument of ſome eminent Victory, and probably of the conqueſt of Egypt by the Macedonians; the name being Greek, and the Town ſtanding within 30 Furlongs of Alexandria. 5. Aphrodites and Aphroditopolis, ſo called from Venus who was here worſhipped: ſituate betwixt the two middle branches of the Nile. 6. Sais, betwixt the ſame branches of the River alſo; whence that Nomus or Diviſion had the name of Saites. It is now called Sibnit, or Signiti. 7. Plinthine, on the Sea-ſide; and 8. Hierax, more within the land: the chief Towns of the Region called Maraotica.

In Arcadia, called alſo Heptanomus, becauſe it contained ſeven of the Nomi or Diviſions, into which Egypt was diſtributed by the Macedonians, the Places of moſt note were and are 1. Memphis, on the Weſtern bank of Nile, not far from the ſharp point of the Delta, where the River firſt beginneth to divide it ſelf; the Regal City of the old Egyptian Pharaohs: by one of which who removed the Seat Royal from Thebo hither, it is ſaid to be built; and called thus by the name of his daughter. In compaſs, when it flouriſhed, about 20 miles: Great, populous, and adorned with a world of Antiquities; amongſt others with the Temples of Apis, Venus, and Serapis, beſet with Sphynxes: now nothing left of the Ruines of it, but the Statues of ſome monſtrous Reſemblances, ſufficient to ſhew that it hath been formerly. The Pyramides before deſcribed, ſtood not far from hence; to which the Poet relateth, ſaying,

> Let barbarous Memphis brag no more
> Of her Pyramides, as before.

2. Babylon, called for diſtinctions ſake, Babylon Ægyptiorum, built on the other ſide of the River, and ſomewhat more unto the North: ſaid to be founded by Cambyſes the Perſian Monarch, the firſt that made this Kingdom ſtoop to the yoke of a forreiner; and by him peopled with ſome Babylonians or Chaldæans, tranſplanted hither. Great, as appeareth by the ruines; amongſt which, many of the Chriſtian Temples and Monaſteries do lie there in rubbiſh; the Caſtle whereof ſerved long after for the Garriſon of the three Legions, appointed to defend this Countrey in the time of the Romans. This, thought by ſome to be the Babylon mentioned by S. Peter, in his 1 Epiſtle cap. ult. which the following words, and Mark my ſon, (S. Mark being the firſt Biſhop of the Alexandrians, and the Apoſtle of Egypt) may make ſomewhat probable, but the truth and reality hereof, I diſpute not now. Out of the ruines of this City aroſe, 3. Caire, now, and for many Ages paſt, the chief of this Countrey: raiſed from the aſhes of old Babylon by the Chaliphs of Egypt, and by the Mamalucks made the Seat-Royal of their Kingdom. In compaſs not above eight miles, but full of Streets, the number of which ſaid to be 18000 every one of them fortified with a Gate at each end; which being well barred, made every ſeveral ſtreet an impregnable fortreſs. Found ſo by Selymus the firſt, when he conquered Egypt, who ſpent three days in forcing his way through it, with his numerous Army. The private buildings very mean; the publique, ſpecially the Moſques, beyond thought magnificent. Viſited every ſeventh year with a dreadful Peſtilence; yet ſtill ſo populous, that it is conceived to be in good health, if there die not above a thouſand in a day, or 300000 within that year. Adorned with many delicate Orchards, both within the City, and without; full of variety of contentments, and neighboured by a pleaſant Lake; but made more pleaſant by the company which meet there in Boats, for their mutual ſolace and delights. Fortified at the South end with a ſtately Caſtle (the Palace of the Mamaluck Sultans) ſituate on the top of a Mountain; overlooking the City, and a great part of the Countrey alſo. So large, that it ſeemeth a City of it ſelf, immured with high walls, divided into many partitions or ſeveral Courts, in times paſt the places of exerciſe; and entred by doors of iron. Deſtroyed for the moſt part, by Selimus, for fear of giving opportunity to ſome rebellion; or envying the Mamalucks the glory of having been the Maſters of ſo brave a Manſion: that which is left, now ſerving for the habitation of the Turkiſh Baſſa, who hath the Government of this Kingdom. 4. Matared, or Matarea, not far from Caire; the ſoil whereof is ſaid to be ſo rich and fertile, that the People are fain to cover it with ſand or gravel, ſo moderating the extreme rankneſs of it. 5. Arſinoe, on the Weſt ſide of the Nile, and ſomewhat South of the famous Labyrinth before deſcribed; called alſo (to difference it from another of the ſame name on the ſhore of the Red-ſea) the City of Crocodiles, in regard of the divine honours there done that Monſter. 6. Nilopolis, or Nili Civitas, in the Iſland called Heracleotis, made by the imbracements of the River: moſt memorable for being the Epiſcopal See of Cheramon, a right godly Prelate; of whom ſee Euſebius in the 6 Book and 34 Chap. of his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory. 7. Troia, on the Eaſtern ſtream which makes that Iſland, not much obſervable but for giving name to the Montes Troici lying neer unto it; out of which were digged the ſtones which made the Pyramides. 8. Cynopolis, in a little Iſland up the water. 9. Hermopolis, or the City of Mercurie; called alſo Hermopolis magna, to difference it from another of that name not far from Alexandria, to which they give the Adjunct of Parva. 10. Antonius, now Antius, founded by Adrian the Emperour, in honour of Antinous his eſpecial favourite; the moſt Southern City of this Province, on the banks of the Nile. 11. Dionyſias, or the City of Bacchus, ſituate on the Southern end of the Lake of Moeris, in the Nomus or Diviſion called Oaſis parva. 12. Clyſma, upon the ſhores of the Golf, a Roman Garriſon.

Cities of moſt note in the Province of Thebais, 1. Panopolis, the Panos of Antoninus, one of the greateſt of this part. 2. Ptolomais, the foundation of one of the Ptolomies, and the goodlieſt City of this Province, ſucceeding unto Thebe both in power and greatneſs. 3. Saiet, a fair and large Town, ſix days journy from Caire, going up the water; but by what name called amongſt the Antients, I do no where find. Affirmed erroneouſly, I think) to be the dwelling-place of Joſeph and Mary, when they fled with CHRIST our Saviour from the fury of Herod. Beautified with a goodly Temple, but now ſomewhat ruinous, of the foundation of Helena the mother of Conſtantine. The City much reſorted to (on the ſtrength of this Tradition onely) by many aged Chriſtian Cophties, who deſire to die there. 4. Dioſpolis, or the City of Jupiter; all of them on the banks of the River. 5. Tentyra, in a little Iſle ſo called, made by the circlings of the Nile: The inhabitants whereof were the onely men who durſt encounter the Crocodile, A creature of a terrible name, but a cowardly nature; of which it is ſaid by Ammianus Marcellinus, that it aſſaulteth thoſe which flie from it, and flieth from thoſe who do aſſault it: In that point very like the Devil, of whom it is ſaid by the Apoſtle James, 4. 7. that if he be reſiſted, he will flie from us. Or as the good old Poet hath it,

Eſt Leo, ſi fugias; ſi ſtas, quaſi Muſca recedit.

Give ground, a Lyon he will be;
Stand to it, and away flies he.

6. Coptos upon the head of a Trench or water-courſe, which falleth into the Nilus, on the South of Tentyra, but on the other ſide of the River; in old times a moſt noted Emporie for Indian and Arabian wares: from whence not onely the Chriſtians of this Countrey, are thought to have the name of Cophties; but the whole Countrey to be originally called Ægyptus, from Ai-Coptus, or the land of Coptus.

7. Thebe, the reſidence and foundation of that great Tyrant Buſiris, in compaſs 140 furlongs, or 17 miles and an half; called alſo Hecatompylæ, from the number of an hundred Gates which were ſaid to be in it. So beautified with Coloſſes, Temples, Palaces, the Sepulchres of the old Egyptian Pharaohs, and other Ornaments of State; that it was thought μηδεμίαν τῶν ὑπὸ τὸν ἥλιον οὕτω κεκοσμῆσθαι, to be the Noneſuch of the world. Decayed on the removing of the Court to Memphis, it became a ruine ſo long ſince, that there was nothing left of it in the time of Juvenal; as he telleth us, ſaying, Atque vetus Thebe centum jacet obruta portis.

Old Thebe, yielding to the Fates,
Lies buried with its hundred Gates.

8. Abydus, now called Abutick, once the Seat-royal of Memnon, from thence called Memnonium, renowned for the Temple of Oſiris; more for the Statue of Memnon, which though made of ſtone, did at the riſing of the ſun yield a vocal ſound. 9. Elephantis, on the banks of Nile, neighboured by Crophi and Mophi, two ſharp Rocks, betwixt which the River falling down with a violent current, makes the Leſſer Cataract; of which, and of the greater, we ſhall ſpeak more fully in Æthiopia. The City ſeated in an Iſland of the River Nile, on the borders of Æthiopia ſub Ægypto, (as the Antients called it) known unto Ptolomy by the name of Elephantina, but to our Eccleſiaſtical writers by the name of Tabenna. Memorable in times of Heatheniſm for the Town and Temple of Onuchis, wherein ſtood the Nilometrium or ſtanding pillar, by which they did obſerve the increaſe of the River; removed ſince to the Caſtle of Michias, two miles from Caire: in times of Chriſtianity, for the dwellings of infinite numbers of Monks and Hermits, called from this place Tabeniſiotæ. 10. Syene, (now Aſna) a little North of Elephantis, ſituate directly under the Tropick of Cancer, and memorable for a deep Well there digged by ſome Aſtronomers; which when the Sun entred into that Sign, was wholly enlightned with his beams, without any ſhadow: ſo perpendicularly did the body of it ſtand over the pit. This the laſt City of Egypt, towards Æthiopia.

And now I ſhould proceed, according to my Method in other places, to the Story of Egypt: but being that Libya, and Cyrene, are now accompted Members of it; the fortunes whereof they have alſo followed in all or moſt of the mutations of State and Government; I ſhall firſt take a view of them as the limbs of this body, and ſhew you how they were united under that one Head, by which now directed.

2. MARMARICA.

2. L*IBYA* or MARMARICA, hath on the Eaſt, Egypt, properly ſo called; on the Weſt, Cyrene; on the North, that part of the Mediterranean Sea, which was hence called Mare Libycum, and ſometimes Parthenium; and on the South, ſome part of Æthiopia Superior.

It had the name of Libya, from the old Greek word λίβυς, ſignifying black, agreeable to the complexion of the people, which is black and ſwarthy; λίβυς, antiqua lingua Græca niger, ſaith a learned Writer: or poſſibly enough from Lub, an Arabian word ſignifying thirſt, as ſuitable unto the nature of the ſoil, which is dry and ſandy, in which reſpect called by the Greeks Xero-Libya, or Libya ſicca. From hence the South-wind, blowing from theſe Coaſts towards Greece; and Italy, had the name of Lybs, and the Promontory in Sicilie oppoſite unto it, that of Lilybæum. It was alſo called Marmarica, perhaps from the Marmarida, a chief People of it, though placed by Ptolomy in Cyrene: and ſometimes Barca, from Barce a chief City in it; of late times Barca Mamarica, by both names united.

The Countrey for the moſt part very dry and barren, and but meanly peopled; inſomuch as Alexander paſſing through part of it towards the Temple of Jupiter Hammon, in the ſpace of four days ſaw neither Man, Beaſt, Bird, Tree, nor River. Covered over in moſt places with a thick light ſand, which the winds remove up and down continually, turning vallies into hills, and hills into vallies. Found by Cam- byſes to his coſt, who as baſely eſteeming of the Gods as he did of his Subjects, ſent part of his Army into this Countrey to deſtroy the Temple above mentioned: but in the paſſage towards that prohibited place, fifty thouſand of them were overwhelmed and ſmothered in a ſtorm of Sand; the reſt with much ado eſcaping. Called therefore Xero-Libya, or Libya Sicca, as before was noted; and Libya ſitiens, thirſty Libya, (——per calidas Libyæ ſitientis arenas) in that Verſe of Lucan.

The people Neighbours unto Egypt; and conſequently much of the ſame condition. Said by Herodotus (by whom they are called Adyrnachidæ) to be governed by the like Laws and Cuſtoms, as the Egyptians were; but to differ from them in their habit. Of colour dark and black, of conſtitution lean and dry, and inclining to Melancholy; angry on every light occaſion, very litigious, and eager proſecutors of their dues. By an old obſervation among themſelves, they abſtained both from Beef and Hogs-meat. So obſtinate in denying their accuſtomed Tributes, that he who could not ſhew the marks of his ſufferings for it, either black or blue, was accounted no body: And ſo reſolved to conceal any thing diſgraceful to them, that if any of them were apprehended for a robbery, no torment could compel him to tell his name. At this time, little differing in perſon, temper, or condition, from the Egyptians, Moors, and Arabes, intermixt amongſt them.

Converted to the Faith of Chriſt, with, or not long after the reſt of Egypt, of which then reckoned for a Province, it became part of the Patriarchate of Alexandria; whoſe juriſdiction over it was confirmed by the Council of Nice: to the calling of which famous Council, this Countrey occaſionally concurred, by bringing into the world that wretched Arius; who with his Heterodoxies and contentious Cavils had diſturbed the Church. His Hereſie condemned in that famous Council, but his Perſon, by the Divine Juſtice of God, reſerved to a more remarkable puniſhment. Being ſent for by the Emperour Conſtantine to make a Recantation of his former Hereſies, he firſt writ out a Copy of his own Opinions, which he hid in his boſom; and then writing out the Recantation expected from him, took Oath that he did really mean as he had written: which words the Emperor referred to the Recantation, he to the Paper in his boſom. But God would not be ſo cozened, though the Emperor was. For as he paſſed in triumph through the ſtreets of Conſtantinople, he drew aſide into a private houſe of eaſe, where he voided his guts into the draught; and ſent his ſoul as a Harbinger to the Devil, to make room for his body.

Not more infamous for the birth of this Miſcreant, who denied the Divinity of Chriſt, then famous for the birth of one of the Sibyls, hence ſirnamed Libyca, by whom the ſame had been fore-ſhewn. Which Sibyls ſeem to have taken denomination from σιο βόλαι, i. e Jovis conſiliorum conſcia. They were in number ten, viz. 1. Perſica, 2. Libyca, 3, Delphica, 4. Cumæa, 5. Samia, 6. Helleſpontiaca, 7. Tiburtina, 8. Albunea, 9. Erythræa, and 10. Cumana; which laſt is affirmed to have written the nine Books of the Sibyls. They were all preſented by an old Woman to Tarquinius Superbus; but he not willing to pay ſo great a ſum of money as was demanded, denied them; whereupon the Old Woman burnt three of them, requiring as much money for the other ſix, as for all: which being denied, ſhe alſo burnt the other three, asking as much for the three remaining, as for the reſt; which Superbus, amazed, gave, and the old Trot vaniſhed. Theſe Books contained manifeſt Tokens of the Kingdom of Chriſt, his Name, his Birth and Death. They were burned by the Arch-Traytor Stilico. So that thoſe Prophecies of theirs, which are now extant, are for the moſt part only ſuch as have been extracted out of other writings, where their authority hath been quoted. Concerning which, though Cauſabon and ſome other of our great Philologers, conceive them to be pia fraudes; compoſed of purpoſe by the Fathers of the Primitive times, to win credit to the Faith of CHRIST: yet dare I not ſo far diſparage thoſe moſt godly men, as to believe they would ſupport ſo ſtrong an Edifice with ſo weak a prop; or borrow help from falſhood to evict a Truth. Or if they durſt have been ſo impudently venturous, how eaſie had it been for their learned Adverſaries, Porphyrie, Julian, and the reſt of more eminent note, to have detected the Impoſture; and ſilenced the Chriſtian Advocates with reproach and ſcorn? But of this enough here, more at large elſewhere.

Rivers of note I find not any. 'Tis well if in a Country ſo full of Sands, there be any at all: ſome Lakes I meet with in my Authors, the principal of which, 1. Laccus, 2. Lacus L*acomedis*, now L*inxamo*, 3. Cleartus; ſufficient to preſerve their few Cattel from the taint of thirſt. The Mountains of moſt note, thoſe called Anogombri, 2. and that named Azar; this laſt extended Weſt and Eaſt in a ſtraight Line, from the 51 degree of L*ongitude*, to the 53. 3. Aliphus, 4. Ogdomus, 5. Tmodes, 6. Alpis, not much obſervable, but that they ſerve for L*and-marks* to diſcover the Countrey.

Towns of note, there are none now in it. Of moſt eſteem in former times, 1. Batrachus, by ſome called Menelaus, an Haven-Town, 2. Phthia, and 3. Aneſiſphyra, two Port-towns alſo. 4. Tetrapyrgia, ſo called from its four Towers, the Antipyrgus of Ptolomy, 5. Meſuchis, more within the Land. 6. Mazacila, another mid-land Town. 7. Chæreola, mentioned among the chief Cities of this tract, by Ammianus. 8. Paratonium, now Porto-raſſa, which with Peluſium are by Florus called the two Hornes of Egypt; which whoſoever held faſt, would be ſure to maſter it. By ſome Old Writers it had formerly been called Ammonia, as we read in Stephanus and Strabo; from the Temple of Jupiter Hammon, ſeated very near it. So anciently honoured with an Oracle (if that were any honour to it) that Semiramis is ſaid to have come hither to enquire of her death; Perſeus, and Hercules, touching their adventures. The like, but not long after, was done by Alexander the Great: but the Oracle by that time had learned to flatter, and puffed him up with a proud conceit of being the ſon of that God whom he came to worſhip. The Temple ſeated in the midſt of a vaſt ſandy Deſart, environed with a pleaſant and delightful Grove, about ſix miles, or more in circuit; watered with wholſom Springs, refreſhed with a temperate air, and ſhaded with fruitbearing Trees, which carried in their leaves a perpetual Spring. Fortified with a triple wall, within the firſt whereof was a Royal Palace of the Kings, within the ſecond a Seraglio for his women; men, in the third Lodgings for the Officers of Court; the Oracle fitly placed (ſo the Prieſts would have it) near the Seraglio of the Ladies; Before the entrance a fair Fountain, wherein the Oblations were firſt waſhed, then offered. A place of great repute in ſacred and civil eſtimate; all the adjoyning Countrey taking hence the name of Ammoniaca, and by that name reckoned amongſt the Provinces of the Patriarchate of Alexandria. 9. Antiphra, on the Eaſt border of it, towards Alexandria. 10. Barce, called afterwards Ptolomais, by the name of one of the Ptolomies, by whom repaired and beautified. Of ſuch account, that from hence the whole Countrey had the name of Barca, and the Inhabitants of Barcæi, (——Lateq; furentes Barcæi) as in that of Virgil.

The old Inhabitants hereof, were the Libyarchæ and Baſſachitæ, in the North; the Ogdoni, Buzes, and Adyrmachidæ, in the South; the Goniatæ and Proſadita, in the mid-land parts; the Lybiægyptii, bordering neareſt unto Egypt, with the people whereof ſo intermingled, as to make up betwixt them but one name and Nation. Others there were of leſs, or as little note, but all deſcended properly of Naphtuhim, the Son of Miſraim; from whom the name of Neptune, originally a Libyan Deity, ſeems to be derived: yet ſo, that Lehabin, his Brother muſt come in for a ſhare; the Founder, as it is conceived, of the Libyægyptii before mentioned. Being then of the ſame Original with thoſe of Egypt, they followed the ſame fortunes alſo, till the times of the Ptolomies; by whom ſomtimes given for portion, with the title of a Kingdom, to their younger Children. By the laſt Will and Teſtament of Apion, the laſt King hereof, a Baſtard-ſon of Ptolomy ſirnamed Euergetes, the ſeventh King of that houſe; bequeathed unto the Senate and People of Rome. By whom firſt ſuffered to live under them, as a Free-Eſtate, till the Conqueſt of Egypt; then reckoned as a part of that, and ſo accordingly deſcribed by Ptolomy: where Libya, Marmarica, and Ammoniaca, occur amongſt the Nomi, or Diviſions of it. Afterwards made a diſtinct Province of that Dioceſe, and governed by a Lord Preſident, under the Præfectus Auguſtalis, or Supream Commander for the Emperours.

3. CYRENE.

CYRENE is bounded on the Eaſt, with Marmarica; on the Weſt, with Africa propria, or the Realm of Tunis, and ſome part of the Mediterranean, and the greater Syrtis; on the North, with the Mediterranean wholly; on the South, with Libya inferior, or the Deſarts of Libya.

It took this name from Cyrene the chief City of it, from whence ſomtimes alſo called Cyrenaica; by Pliny and ſome other Roman Writers it is called Pentapolis, from five chief Cities which were in it, viz. 1. Cyrene, 2. Ptolomais, 3. Arſinoe, 4. Darnis, 5. Berenice: by Ammianus for the ſame reaſon Libya Pentapolis, the name of Libya extending over many of theſe Roman Provinces. And finally, at the preſent, it paſſeth with that laſt deſcribed by the name of Barca, or Barca Marmarica: the whole extent whereof in length from the greater Syrtis, unto Egypt, is no leſs then 1300 miles, but the breadth not above 200.

The Countrey in the South parts deſolate and barren, ſtored with few Towns, and not many Villages; the people living up and down in ſcattered houſes, and at ſuch a diſtance, as if it were in ſo many Iſlands. Deſtitute not of Springs and Rivers only, but of Rain-water too, the Clouds not very often dropping: if any fell, it was dried up preſently by the Sands. But within fifteen miles of the Sea, indifferently fruitful, and well inhabited.

The people in old times were ſaid to have been utterly ignorant of buying and ſelling, of fraud and ſtealing, not knowing, or not caring for the uſe of money; content with little, not ſuperfluous in their Cloaths, or Buildings, their Houſes for the moſt part (except only in their greater Cities) made of Oſier-twigs. Much altered in the firſt part of their character, ſince the coming of the Arabians hither; now a Thieviſh Nation, given wholly to robbery and ſpoil. So lazy, that they will not manure, or till their Land, but provide themſelves of Corn from Sicily; laying their Children to pawn for it, till by their Thieving they can raiſe a ſufficient ſum to diſcharge the debt.

One only River I find in it, but of fame enough to ſerve for many; By Ptolomy called Lathon, by Pliny, Lethon, by the Poets, Lethe. Swallowed by the earth not far from its firſt original, it riſeth up again about Berenice; fained therefore by the Poets to come from Hell, and to create forgetfulneſs in all them that drink of it; it being the condition of the dead to remember nothing. Thence the occaſion of the fancy. Some Lakes I find alſo in it, whereof one occaſioned by this River, not far from the Sea; another more within the Land (where indeed more neceſſary) near Paliurus. With Mountains better ſtored, (though not much better for them) the principal whereof, 1. Thoſe called Herculis Arenæ, the Sands of Hercules, thwarting the Countrey Eaſt and Weſt. 2. Bucolicus, on the South of thoſe; and 3. Velpos, a long ridge of hils, bordering upon Africa propria.

Cities of moſt note in it, 1. Apollonia, in the Eaſt parts, near the Promontory called Zephyrium, in the Confines of Libya, or Marmarica. 2. Cyrene, in the Weſt of that; once of ſuch power, that it contended with Carthage for ſome prebeminencies: Then the chief Lady of this Tract, which it gave this name to. The Birth-place of Eratoſthenes the Mathematician, Callimachus the Poet, and of that Simon of Cyrene, whom the Jews compelled to carry our Saviours Croſs. 3. Ptolomais, betwixt Cyrene and Arſinoe, built or repaired by Ptolomy Philadelphus: the Epiſcopal City of Sineſius, a Learned and Religious Biſhop of the primitive times, as appears by his Epiſtles extant. 4. Arſinoe, on the Eaſt-ſide of the River Lathon; ſo called in honour of Arſinoe, the Siſter of Philadelphus, and Wife of Magas once King of this Countrey. 5. Berenice, on the Weſtern bank of the ſaid River; ſo called from Berenice the Mother, or (another of the ſame name) the daughter of Magas: the furtheſt Town of all this Countrey, bordering on the Promontory called Boreum, and the greater Syrtis. This laſt a Quick-ſand very dangerous to Mariners, in compaſs 635 miles, and by them carefully avoided. 6. Paliurus, more within the Land, but on the borders of Libya, or Marmarica, South to Apollonia. 7. Aptungis, now Lungifari, by Ptolomy called Aptuchi Fanum. 8. Herculis Turris, the Tower of Hercules, near the greater Syrtis; erected in the honour of Hercules, his killing of the Dragon, and robbing the Orchards of the Heſperides, of their golden Apples. Thoſe Eſperides ſaid to be Aegle, Arethuſa, and Heſperethuſa, the three Daughters of Atlas; their Orchard placed by Ptolomy betwixt this Tower and Paliurus; by Pomponius, in the Atlantick Iſlands; by Virgil, in Mauritania Tingitania; by Pliny, both in Mauritania and this Cyrene; and poſſibly in all alike. 9. Zemythus. 10. Acabis, in the midlands; all worn out of memory. 11. Feſſan, of greateſt name now, though ſcarce worth the naming.

The old Inhabitants of this Countrey, were the Asbeta, on the Eaſt, the Barcita near the Greater Syrtis, the Macatuta and Laganici, near the Mountains of Hercules; all probably deſcended from Naphtuhim the Son of Mizraim; of whom there ſtill remain ſome footſteps in Aptuchi Fanum, the Fane or Temple of Aptuchus. This Aptuchus by ſome miſtakingly called Autuchus, and by the Grecians ſaid to be the ſon of Cyrene, and the Brother of Ariſtaus: who being ſent out to ſeek their fortunes, Ariſtaus fell into the Iſle named Caos; and Aptuchus or Autuchus into Libya, both by them firſt planted. Neptune, the Deity of this Countrey, by the Egyptians called Neptitim; ſeems to come from Naphtuhim; moſt highly worſhipped by this people, becauſe he firſt taught them τὴν τῶν ἁρμάτων καταζεῦξιν, the Art of training horſes to the Coach or Chariot; in which the Cyreneans after grew ſo expert, that they could drive their Chariots in a Round or Circle, and alwaies keep their Chariot-wheels in the ſelf ſame tract. Of no great power, till Battus a noble Spartan landing in this Countrey, had built the City of Cyrene; and found it in ſo good a courſe of Life and Diſcipline, that in ſhort time it came to have dominion over the moſt part of this Countrey, and to contend with Carthage about their Territories. Warred on by Apryes King of Egypt, they ſued unto the Greeks for aid, and by their aſſiſtance overcame him. Long after which, falling at odds among themſelves, they craved aid of Ptolomy the firſt of that race; by whom they were finally ſubdued. Left by him at his death to Magus, a ſon of his laſt Wife by a former Husband whom he had married to Arſinoe one of his Daughters; it came again to the Crown of Egypt, by the Marriage of Berenice the Daughter and Heir of Magus, with the Son of Ptolomy Philadelphus. Alien'd from which Crown again, for the preferment of ſome of the younger Princes; and in the end given by one of he Ptolomies, the laſt King hereof, to the people of Rome. Reduced into the form of a Province by Auguſtus Cæſar, by whom united in one Government with the Iſle of Crete: but made a Province of it ſelf by the following Emperours: never ſince ſeparated from the fortune and affairs of Egypt, to which now we haſten.

That the Kingdom and Nation of Egypt was of great Antiquity, is not a matter to be doubted; the queſtion in this point, betwixt them and the Scythian, being not eaſily decided. Whether it were ſo ancient, as the Egyptians ſay, may perhaps be controverted. By them it was affirmed, that they had the memory and ſtory of 13000 years; and a Succeſſion of 330 Kings in the time of Amaſis the ſecond, who was Contemporary with Cyrus. Which number of years, if underſtood of Solary years, meaſured by the courſe of the Sun, muſt not be allowed of; becauſe it maketh them many thouſand years older than the Creation: but if of Lunary, which is moſt agreeable unto the accompt of the Egyptians, who reckoned their years by moneths: it will amount unto no more than to 1000, or 1100 years, and ſo fall anſwerably to the times following after the Floud. But for their Kings, 330 in their Reckonings, and thoſe of 24 or 25 ſeveral Dynaſties; the matter is not ſo ſoon made up. For either thoſe Kings, muſt not be all Kings, or Supreme Lords of Egypt, as the Pharaohs were, but their ſeveral Regents, or Vicegerents, armed with Regall power; thoſe Dynaſties not the Succeſſions of ſo many Regal Families, but of their Subſtitutes and Lieutenants, many of which might live ſucceſſively under one Supream: or elſe we muſt needs look on Egypt, as diſtracted in thoſe times, into ſeveral Kingdoms, amongſt the Princes of thoſe Dynaſties before remembred; or finally, we muſt look for ſome of thoſe Kings and Princes before the Floud. By either of theſe waies, the buſineſs may be well agreed. For if that moſt of them were but the names of ſeveral Regents (as probable enough it is) there might be many ſuch in the Reign of one King; according to the Kings Fancy, the merits of particular perſons, or the neceſſities of State: Changes of great Officers, eſpecially if grown too great, are not new nor ſtrange. If they were all Kings, or Supream Rulers (as is alſo probable) we find not any thing of moment to perſwade the contrary, but that many of them lived and reigned in their ſeveral parts (as in other Countries in thoſe times) till the greater had devoured the leſs. Or if they were the names of ſuch Soveraign Princes, as had the ſole command of Egypt before the Floud, (as ſome think they were) they might amount in all to ſo great a number, and ſo many Dynaſties; the iniquity of thoſe times, the ambition of great perſons, and conſequently the ſhort lives of the Kings being duly pondered. That Egypt and moſt part of the world was peopled before the Floud, hath been already proved in our General Preface: If peopled, then no queſtion under ſome form of Government: the names of which Governours (call them Kings, or Rulers, or what elſe we pleaſe) might be preſerved in Egypt on pillars of braſs or ſtone; or otherwiſe tranſmitted by Tradition unto Cham the Father of Mizraim, by whom this countrey was firſt planted after the Confuſion of Babel. But that old ſtock of Kings and people being deſtroyed in the General Deluge, the children of Mizraim ſucceeded next in their deſolate dwellings: yet ſo, that the poſterity of Chus and Lehabim, two others of the Sons of Cham, had their ſhares therein. From the firſt of which deſcended the Inhabitants of thoſe parts of Egypt, which lay along the ſhores of the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia: in which reſpect, not only one of the Nomi, or diviſions bordering on the Iſthmus, had the name of Arabia: but the people dwelling on thoſe ſhores; were called Arabes; divided into the Arabes Azarei, and Arabes Adei. And from the other came that mixture of Nations, called Liby-Ægyptii, or Libyans and Egyptians intermixt together: inhabiting in Maraeotica and the Weſtern parts. But though theſe people were derived from ſeveral Anceſtors, they made one Nation in the total: Subject to Mizraim as their Chief, and after his deceaſe, unto his Succeſſors in the Kingdom of Egypt. Concerning whom we may obſerve, that in Cham, our greateſt Antiquaries find the name of Jupiter Hammon; Mizraim they gueſs to be Oſiris the great God of Egypt. To him ſucceeded Typhon, not by right of Bloud, but by Uſurpation. Who diſpoſſeſſed by Lehabim, the brother of Mizraim (whom the Greeks call Hercules Ægyptius) the Kingdom was reſtored to Orus, the Son of Oſiris. During the time of theſe few Princes, happened all thoſe things which are recorded in the Scriptures, concerning Egypt; from the firſt going down of Abraham, in the time of Oſiris, to the advancement of Joſeph, in the Reign of Orus: in which there paſſed the 15, 16, and 17 Dynaſties of Regal Vice-Roys ; Lieutenants only, as I take it, to thoſe mighty Princes. The Kings themſelves called generally by the name of Pharaoh, though they had all their proper and peculiar Names: as afterwards their Succeſſors here had the name of Ptolomy, and the Roman Emperors, that of Cæſar. Not troubling our ſelves therefore with their many Dynaſties, we will lay down the Succeſſion of their Kings, as well as we can; the diſagreement of Hiſtorians and Chronologers, touching this Succeſſion, being irreconcileable.

Their names we find not, but that one of the lateſt of them whoſe daughter Solomon married, was called Vaphra; and perhaps Ogdoos, who removed the Royal Seat from Thebes to Memphis, might be another, and the eighth, as his name importeth.
2961.	39 Smendes, the Siſac of the Scriptures, who made War upon Rehoboam the ſon of Solomon; conceived to be the Seſoſtris of Herodotus and others of the ancient writers. Of whom it is reported, that being a King of great wealth and puiſſance, he had brought under ſubjection all his neigbouring Princes: Whom he compelled in turns to draw his Chariot. It happned that one of theſe unfortunate Princes caſt his eye many times on the Coach wheels: and being by Seſoſtris demanded the cauſe of his ſo doing, he replied: that the falling of that ſpoke loweſt, which but juſt before was in the height of the wheel, put him in mind of the inſtability of fortune. The king deeply weighing the Parable, would never after be ſo drawn in his Chariot. He alſo was the firſt that encountred the Scythians in battel; having already in conceit conquered them, before he led his Army againſt them. The Scythians much marvelled that a King of ſo great Revenues would wage War againſt a Nation ſo poor: with whom the fight would be doubtful, the Victory unprofitable; but to be vanquiſhed a perpetual infamy and diſgrace. For their parts they reſolved to meet him; as an Enemy, whoſe overthrow would enrich them. When the Armies came to joyn, the Egyptians were diſcomfited, and purſued even to their own doors by the Enemy. But the Scythians could not enter the Countrey, becauſe of the Fens, with whoſe paſſage they were unacquainted, and ſo they returned.

3600. 71 Nectanebos II. the laſt King of the natural Egyptian race, that ever governed Egypt, by the name of a King. For in the 18th. of the reign of this King, Egypt was again recovered by the valour of Ochus the eighth Emperour of Perſia. And when Alexander had overthrown Darius, he came, & without blows won this fertile Kingdom; which yielded him, during his life, the yearly value of 6000 talents. After his death, this Kingdom fell to the ſhare of Ptolmeus the ſon of Lagus, from whom all the ſubſequent Kings of Egypt were called Ptolomies.

A. M. The ſecond Dynaſtie, or the Ptolomean Kings of Egypt.

3641. 1 Ptolomy, one of Alexanders Captains, reputed the ſon of Lagus; but ſuppoſed to be the ſon of Philip of Macedon, and half brother to Alexander, 40.

3681. 2 Ptol. Philadelphus who filled the Library of Alexandria wth 700000 Volumes, and cauſed the 72 Interpreters to tranſlate the Bible.

3717. 3 Ptol. Euergetes, the ſon of Philadelphus, vanquiſhed Seleucus Callinicus, and probably had ſubdued that Kingdom, if not called back by domeſtick diſſentions, 26.

3743. 4. Ptol. Philopater, a cruel, voluptuous, and inceſtuous Prince; cruelly ſlew Cleomenes the laſt King of Sparta, who had fled to his father for relief, in the time of his exile. 17

3760. 5 Ptol. Epiphanes, at the age of five years ſucceeded his father; protected by the Romans againſt Antiochus the Great of Syria, who had an aim upon his Kingdom, 28.

3784. 6 Ptol. Philometor, the ſon of Epiphanes, by Cleopatra the daughter of the great Antiochus; protected in his nonage by the Romans alſo: cauſed himſelf to be Crowned King of Syria, but again relinquiſhed it, 35.

3829. 7 Ptol. Euergetes II. for his deformity called Phyſcon, the brother of P*tol*.P*hilometor*: A wicked Prince, and one that ſpent the greateſt part of his reign in a cauſeleſs war againſt Cleopatra, his wife and ſiſter, 29.

3858. 8 P*tol*. Lathurus reigned 16 years with Cleopatra his mother, by whom diſpoſſeſſed of his eſtate for the the ſpace of ten years; after her death was ſole Lord of Egypt. His brother Alexander being taken by the Queen-mother as her Aſſociate, in the time of his deprivation, and paſſing in the Accompt of the Kings of Egypt.

3892. 9 Ptol. Auletes, the ſon of Lathurus, ſirnamed alſo Dionyſius, whoſe brother being ſetled by him in the Iſle of Cyprus, was moſt unjuſtly ſtripped of it by the power of the Romans.: and he himſelf outed of Egypt by his own ſubjects, but reſtored by the aid and love of Pompey.

3922. 10 Ptol. Dionyſius, called alſo Junior, or the younger, together with Cleopatra his wife and ſiſter, ſucceeded Auletes in the throne, wch they held together by the ſpace of three years. In the laſt of which, Pompey was barbarouſly ſlain on the ſhores of Egypt, by the command of Achilles the young Kings Governour; and the young King himſelf unfortunately ſlain in the Alexandrian tumult againſt Julius Cæſar.

3925. 11 Cleopatra, the wife and ſiſter of Dionyſius, reſtored to the Crown of Egypt by the bounty of Cæſar; of whom exceedingly beloved for her wit and beauty. After which ſhe governed Egypt 19 years in her own ſole right, with great pomp and ſplendor: when being imbarqued in the bed and fortunes of Marc. Antony, ſhe killed her ſelf not long after his fatal overthrow at the battel of Actium; that ſhe might not be led in triumph through Rome.

Theſe Ptolomean Princes of Egypt, were for the moſt part in wars with the Kings of Syria, in which they were by turns victorious, and vanquiſhed; neither Prince having cauſe to boaſt of his bargain. After the death of Cleopatra, whoſe life and love with Marcus Antonius I will not now relate; this Countrey fell to the ſhare of the Roman Emperours, and was by them highly prized, and warily looked into. The Governour hereof was but a Gentleman of Rome; no Senator being permitted to come into it; it being a maxime of State, not to ſuffer men of great houſes to come into that Countrey, whoſe revolt may endanger the whole Empire. Of this nature was Egypt. For beſides the natural ſituation of the place, very defenſible; and beſides the abundance of money, with which it was ſtored; this Country alone furniſhed the City of Rome with Corn, for four Moneths yearly. Whence Veſpaſian being choſen Emperour by the Syrian Legions, and hearing of the defeat of his concurrent Vitellius, haſtened hither; to this end onely, that detaining the ordinary proviſion of victuals, he might by famine compel the City of Rome to ſtand at his devotion: Ut urbem quoque externa opis indigam fame urgeret, as the Hiſtorian hath obſerved. When made a Province of that Empire, it was counted as the Emperours ſole Peculiar: afterwards made (as well it might) an entire Dioceſe of it ſelf, ſubordinate to the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis. In the diviſion of the Empire allotted to the Conſtantinopolitans, whoſe Government being thought to be inſupportable by this wanton people, they called in the Saracens: by whom the Greek Garriſons were caſt out, and the Countrey made ſubject to Haumar the third of the Caliphs. Afterwards, weary of them alſo, they would have a Caliph of their own, revolting totally from the Caliph of Bagdat. So that from this time forwards we ſhall meet with two Caliphs at a time; the one reſiding at Caire in Egypt, to whom the Saracens, or Moors of Spain and Africk did ſubmit themſelves: the other at Bagdat, who Lorded it over all the reſt, at leaſt as to the ſupream title, and ſome chief Prerogatives; though the main power was cantonned and diſpoſed of among their Sultans.

being over-power'd by Almericus King of Hieruſalem, craved aid of Norradine the Turkiſh Sultan of Damaſcus; which he received under the conduct of Sarracon, or Shirachoch, a right valiant and ſtout Commander: who taking his advantages, not onely cleared the Countrey of Almericus, but got the whole kingdom to himſelf; daſhing out the brains of Elphaiz with his horſemans-mace. And though Etzar, his ſon aſſumed for a while the title of Caliph: yet the deſtruction of himſelf, and the whole Phatimean family, rooted out by Sarracon, ſoon put an end to that claim; and left the kingdom in the peaceable poſſeſſion of the Turkiſh Sultans.

The fourth DYNASTIE, or the Race of the TURKISH Kings or CALIPHS of EGYPT.

1163. 1 Aſereddin, ſirnamed Shirachoch, called Sarracon by the Chriſtian writers; the firſt of the Turks which reigned in Egypt: of the Noble family of Aiub.

1186. 2 Zeli-heddin, called Saladine by the Chriſtian writers, the ſon (or as ſome ſay, the nephew) of Sarracon or Shirachoch; confirmed in his eſtate by the Caliph of Bagdet, under whoſe juriſdiction he reduced the Egyptian Schiſmaticks. He obtained alſo the kingdom of Damaſcus, conquered Meſopotamia. and Paleſtine; & in the year 1190 regained the City of Hieruſalem. A Prince who wanted nothing to commend him to ſucceeding Ages, nor to glorifie him in the kingdom of Heaven; but the ſaving knowledge of CHRIST JESUS.

1199. 3 Elaziz, the ſecond ſon of Saladine, ſucceeded in the Realm of Egypt; which he exchanged afterwards with his brother Eladel for the Kingdom of Damaſcus.

4 Eladel, or El-Aphtzel, by the Chriſtian writers called Meledine, ſucceeded upon this exchange, in the kingdom of Egypt: and overcame the Chriſtians, without the loſs of a man, at the ſiege of Caire, by letting looſe the Sluces of Nilus; which drowned their Army, and forced them to covenant with him at his own pleaſure.

1210. 5 Elchamul.

1237. 6 Melech Eſſalach, by the Chriſtian writers called Melechſala, the ſon of Elchamul, who overcame Lewis the ninth of France: and going with that King towards Damiata, was ſlain by the ſouldiers of his guard, called Mamalucks.

1242. 7 Elmutan, the ſon of Melech Eſſalach, ſucceeded, for a time, in his Fathers throne. But the Mamalucks being reſolved to obtaine the Kingdom for themſelves, inforced him to flie to a Tower of Wood, which they ſet on fire; the poor Prince, half burned, leaping into a River (which ran cloſe by it) was there drowned: & the Mamalucks ſetled in the kingdom, An. 1245.

These Mamalucks were the off-ſpring of a People on the banks of the Euxine Sea, vulgarly called the Circaſſians: who Melechſala either bought of their Parents, or (at the ſecond hand) of the Tartars, then newly Maſters of thoſe Countries, to ſupply the want of valour in the idle and effeminate people of Egypt; and out of them ſelected a choice Band of men, for the guard of his perſon. Knowing their ſtrength, and finding their opportunity, they treacherouſly ſlew Melechſala their Lord and Maſter; appointing one Azeddin Ibek, a Turco-man by nation, and therefore by moſt Chriſtian writers called Turquimeneius, (one of their own number) a man of great ſpirit and valour, to ſucceed in the Throne. Unwilling to re-give the Supreme Authority into the hands of the Egyptians, and not permitting their own ſons to enjoy the name and priviledge of Mamalucks; they bought yearly certain numbers of Circaſſian ſlaves, whom they committed to the keeping of the Egyptians, by them to be inſtructed in the Egyptian language, and the Law of Mahomet. Being thus fitted for imployment, they were taught the Diſcipline of War, and by degrees advanced unto the higheſt Offices of Power and truſt; as now the Janizaries are in the Turkiſh Empire: in choice and ordering of whom, as the Ottoman Turks were Precedented by thoſe of Egypt; ſo it is poſſible enough that the Janizaries may make as great a Change in the Turkiſh Empire, as the Mamalucks did in the Egyptians. So unſafe a thing it is for a Prince to commit the ſole guard of his perſon, or the defence of his Dominions, to the hands of ſuch, whom not the ſenſe of natural duty, but the hopes of profit or preferment, may make uſeful to him. For thus we find, that Conſtantius a King of the Britans, was murdered by his Guard of Picts: moſt of the Roman Emperours, by the hands of thoſe, whom they intruſted, either with the guard of their perſons, or the command of their Armies: And I think no man can be ignorant, how many times the Princes and Eſtates of Italy, have been brought into the extremeſt dangers, by truſting too much to the honeſty of mercenary Souldiers and Commanders. Take we for inſtance the proceedings of Giacopo Picinino, who with his Followers firſt took Pay of Ferdinand the firſt of Naples; left him, to fight for his vowed Enemy, John Duke of Calabria, the ſon of Rene Duke of Anjou, whom alſo he forſook in his greateſt need. The like we find of Franciſco Sforza, firſt entertained by the Duke of Millain, from whom he revolted to the Florentines, from them to the Venetians; and being again received into the Pay of the State of Millain, made uſe of their own Army to ſubdue that City.

Nor can I ſpeak better of the Switzers; or their dealing in this kind with the French Kings, the Sforza's Dukes of Milan; and with whom not, (to ſay the truth) that ever truſted, or employed them.

Now as it is unſafe for a Prince to commit the cuſtody of his perſon, or the defence of his Eſtates to the faith of Forreiners; ſo is it dangerous to him to call in ſuch aids, and to commit his fortunes either wholly, or principally, unto their fidelity. A moderate ſupply of men, money, or munition, from a confederate King, is, I confeſs, in moſt caſes convenient, in ſome neceſſary: as well to ſave their Natives from the ſword, as to trie a friend, and intereſt an Allie in the ſame cauſe. But to invite ſo great a number of Succours, as from Helpers may become Maſters, and oppreſs the people whom they came to defend; is that Rock on which many Realms have ſuffered ſhip-wrack, and which a good Pilot of the State ſhould with all care avoid. For as in the ſickneſs of the body natural, it is hurtful to a mans health and life, to take more phyſick; than it may (after the effect thereof be wrought) either digeſt, or put out again: ſo in the body politick, it is a perilous matter to receive more ſuccours, than what (after they have done the deed they were ſent for) we may either with conveniency reward and ſettle with us, or at liberty expel. Of all Surfeits, this of Forraign ſupplies is moſt uncureable; and Ne quid nimis, if in nothing elſe true, is in this caſe, oracle. There is no Kingdom (I am verily perſwaded) under the Sun, which hath not been by this means conquered; no Common-wealth, which hath not been by this means ruined. To relate all examples, were infinite and tedious; to inſer ſome, pleaſing to the Reader, and to illuſtrate the point, not unneceſſary. To begin with former times, Philip of Macedon, called into Greece to aſſiſt the Thebans againſt the Phocians; brought all that Countrey, in a manner, under his command. The Romans by aiding the Sicilians againſt the Carthaginians, poſſeſſed themſelves of that flouriſhing Iſland; by aſſiſting the Hedui againſt the Sequani, maſtered Gallia; by ſuccouring Androgeus againſt Caſſibelan, ſeiſed on Britain; by ſiding with the Ætolians againſt Perſeus, united to their Empire all the Kingdom of Macedon; and by the ſame courſe what not? In after ages, the Britains called in the Saxons, and were by them thruſt out of all; the Iriſh called in the Engliſh, by whom they were in proceſs of time totally ſubdued; and the Indians called in the Mogul-Tartars, who now Lord it over them. Theſe forrein ſupplies are invited, or let into a Countrey, commonly in four caſes. Firſt, when ſome one man upon diſcontent, or deſire of revenge, openeth them a way into a Countrey: upon which motives, Narſes invited the Lombards into Italy; and Count Julian brought the Moors into Spain: the one to be revenged on the Empreſs Sophia, who had deſpitefully reviled him; the other to revenge himſelf on King Roderick, who had raviſhed his daughter. Secondly, when a weaker Faction makes way for them, to maintain their cauſe againſt a ſtronger. On which ground, the Duke of Burgundy being oppreſſed by the faction of Orleans, made way for Henry the fifth to paſs into France; and the Leaguers drew the Spaniards in, to hold up their declining cauſe againſt Henry the fourth. Thirdly, when an ambitious Prince makes uſe of a forrein power, to uſurp upon the rights of another man. And for that cauſe Ludowick Sforza perſwaded Charls the eight to undertake the Conqueſt of the Realm of Naples; that by the countenance of his Arms, he might appropriate to himſelf the Dukedom of Millain. Fourthly, when a King overburthened by a forrein, or domeſtick force, which he is not able to reſiſt, requires the help of a forrein friend: in which caſe, Plus à medico quam à morbo mali, the phyſick proves many times worſe than the diſeaſe. For thus the Kings of Naples of the houſe of Aragon, being in danger of the French, drew in the Aids of Ferdinand the Catholique, the Couſin German once removed of the King then being; And the Caliphs of Egypt, not able to withſtand the forces of Almericus, craved aid of the Turks: by which means, both thoſe Kingdoms were made a prey to their forrein friends, and by avoiding Scylla fled into Charybdis. Nay many times it ſo hapneth, that theſe forrein ſuccours joyn in deſign with thoſe, againſt whom they were called, and divide the conquered State between them. And ſo we find that the Burgundians being called by Stilico into Gaul, to prevent the breaking in of the Franks, or French; joyned with them in a common league againſt the Romans, whom they diſpoſſeſſed at laſt of all that Countrey. Onely amongſt ſo many examples to this purpoſe, we find the Low-Countrey-men to have proſpered by theſe forrein aids; who by the aſſiſtance of the Engliſh, ranſomed themſelves from that yoke of bondage, which was intended to be put upon them by the King of Spain. This I acknowledge to be true, and look upon it as a great Argument of the integrity and honeſty of the Engliſh Nation; although it be as true withal, that the Engliſh never had ſuch an Army there, as to be able to ſubdue them. But give me ſuch another inſtance, I will quit the cauſe: for the ſame Low-Countrey-men found it otherwiſe with the Duke of Anjou, brother to Henry the third of France, whom they created Duke of Brabant, and their Governour-General; permitting him to bring in as many of the French, as either his authority, or their own monies were able to raiſe: who was no ſooner ſetled in that command, but he made it his chief buſineſs to ſeize upon their ſtrongeſt Holds, and to be a more abſolute Prince amongſt them, than ever the Spaniards, or Burgundians had been before. So that I think I may conclude, that theſe forrein Succours are the laſt to be tried, and the leaſt to be truſted, of any remedies in State. But it's now more than time to return to the Mamalucks; and in them to

The fift Dynastie of the Egyptian Kings, or the Race of the Mamalucks.

1255. 1 Turquimenenis, who being promoted to the Kingdom, releaſed King Lewis, whom Melechſala his predeceſſor had taken priſoner; but performed not half of the conditions agreed upon.

2 Clothes (by ſome called Elmutabaz) taking advantage of the miſeries of the Turks, then diſtreſſed by the Tartars, ſeized on the greateſt part of Syria and Paleſtine.

1260. 3 Bandocader perfected the begun-conqueſts of Clothes, and took from the Chriſtians the ſtrong City of Antioch; carrying on his armies as far as Armenia, where he did much ſpoil.

4 Melechſait, or Melechſares, reſtored the power of the Mamalucks in Syria and Paleſtine, where it had been much impaired by Edward the ſon of Henry the 3 of England, and Henry Duke of Mecklenburgh, &c.

1289. 5 Elpis, or Alphix, recovered from the diſſenting Chriſtians the ſtrong Cities of Tripolis, Berytus, Tyre, and Sidon, all which he razed to the ground, that they might not be any more ſerviceable to the affairs of the Chriſtians.

1291. 6 Araphus, or Euſtrephus, by birth a German, releaſed Henry Duke of Mecklebourg, after he had been priſoner 26 years. He rooted the Chriſtians out of Syria, took Ptolomais the laſt Town they there held, and ſo razed it, that he made it fit to be ploughed.

7 Melechneſar, when he was Lieutenant to Araphus, was diſcomfited by Caſſanes, a great Prince of the Tartars, with the loſs of 40000 Egyptians: but Caſſanes being departed, he recovered again all Syria, and deſtroyed Hieruſalem, for which ſervice he was afterward made Sultan of Egypt.

8. Melechadel, whom I ſuppoſe to be that Sultan that governed Egypt, when Tamberlane with unreſiſtable violence conquered it; but of this I am not certain: neither can I meet with any conſtant and continued ſeries (which I dare relie on) of his Succeſſors in this Kingdom, till I come to 9 Melecnella, or Melechnaſer, who in the year 1423. ſubdued the Iſle of Cyprus, and made the Kings thereof to be from thenceforth Tributaries to the Mamaluck Sultans.

1465. 10 Cathbeyus, who much reformed the State of Egypt, and was a profeſſed enemy of Bajazet 2^{d}. the 8 King of the Ottomans.

1499. 12 Campſon Chiarſeſius, ſucceeded on the depoſing of Mahomet.

13 Zanballat, who dethroned Campſon, and not long after was depoſed by 1500. 14 Tonombeius, outed of his Eſtate by the joynt conſent of the Mamalucks, ſo to make way for Campſon Gaurus.

1501. 15 Campſon II. ſirnamed Gaurus, reformed the diſordered and factious eſtate both of Court and Countrey; and for the ſpace of 16 years governed very proſperouſly. But ſiding at the laſt with Hyſmael the Perſian Sophie, againſt Selimus the firſt of that name, the 3^{d} Emperor, and ninth King of the Ottoman family, he drew his Kingdom into a war, in which his Armies were overthrown, and himſelf ſlain in battel.

1517. 16 Tonombeſius II. ſucceeded Campſon Gaurus both in his Kingdom & misfortunes: vanquiſhed in his firſt year by the ſaid Selimus the firſt, An. 1517. Who having conquered this rich Kingdom, was uſed to ſay, That he had gotten a Farm to feed his Gomoglans, or young Souldiers. So Egypt became a Province of the Turkiſh Empire, as it ſtill continueth.

What the Revenues of it were in the time of the Pharaohs, I am not able to affirm. Great they muſt be, beyond the proportion of belief, or elſe they could never have been Maſters of ſufficient Treaſure, to finiſh thoſe vaſt ſtructures which they undertook. Twelve thouſand and five hundred Talents they amounted annually unto, in the time of the Ptolomies; which of our money makes the ſumme of Two Millions and 347750 pounds. Which ſumme Auguſtus Cæſar (appropriating this Province to himſelf) ſelf) is ſaid to have doubled: but whether he had it all in Money, or part hereof in Money, and the reſt in Corn, I determine not. Certain it is, that there was yearly ſhipped hence for Rome, in the time of that Emperor, Two hundred thouſand Meaſures of Wheat, every Meaſure weighing twenty hundred pound weight; which cometh to ſeven Millions and an hundred forty thouſand of our Engliſh Buſhels, ſold by him, or diſtributed gratis amongſt the Poor, as he ſaw occaſion. So that there might be very well ſome abatement in Money, conſidering that the Corn amounted to ſo great a ſum. Nor were they much leſs, if ought at all, when the Mamalucks ruled in this Countrey. For Campſon Gaurus, at his coming to the Throne, gave no leſs than ten Millions of Ducats, at one clap, amongſt his Souldiers. But the Turks at this day, partly through their Tyrannical Government, and partly through the diſcontinuance of the uſual Traffick through the Red-Sea, receive no more than three Millions: one of which is hoorded in his own Coffers; the ſecond is appropriated unto his Vicegerent Baſhaw, for ſupport of his charge; the third is diſtributed among his Garriſon-Souldiers, and ſuch of them as by land guard his own Million to Conſtantinople; for by ſea he dareth not venture it, for fear of the Florentine, who with a few ſhips Lordeth it in the Mediterranean.

And ſo much for EGYPT.

OF BARBARY.

BARBARY is bounded on the Eaſt, with Cyrenaica; on the Weſt, with the Atlantick Ocean; on the North, with the Mediterranean, the Straits of Gibraltar, and ſome part of the Atlantick alſo; on the South with Mount Atlas, by which ſeparated from Libya Inferior, or the Deſarts of Libya,

It containeth in it the whole Dioceſe of Africk, and part of the Dioceſe of Spain: ſubject in former times to the Commonwealth of Carthage, and the great Kings of Mauritania, and Numidia. When conquered by the Romans, they give to that part of it, which they won from the Carthaginians, the name of Africa; calling that Province by the name of the whole Peninſula; and afterwards extended it over all the reſt of the Countrey, on the North of Atlas. Which name it held till the ſubjugation of it by the Saracens, by whom called BARBARY: either from Barbar, ſignifying in their Language an uncertain murmur, ſuch as the ſpeech of the Africans ſeemed to them to be; or from the word Bar, ſignifying a Deſart, which doubled, made up firſt Barbar, and after Barbary.

It is ſituate under the third and fourth Climates: ſo that the longeſt Summers day in the parts moſt South amounteth to thirteen hours three quarters, increaſed in the moſt Northern parts to fourteen hours and a quarter. In length extended from the Atlantick Ocean to the greater Syrtis, for the ſpace of 1500 miles; in breadth from Mount Atlas to the Mediterranean, where narroweſt, 100 miles; but towards the Straits, where broadeſt, almoſt three hundred.

The Countrey in ſuch parts as lie neareſt to the Mediterranean, is full of hils, covered with woods, and ſtored with plenty of wild-Beaſts, provided reaſonably well of moſt ſorts of Fruits, but unfit for Wheat, inſomuch that moſt of the Inhabitants live of Barley-bread. Betwixt which and Mount Atlas is a Champain Countrey, watered with many pleaſant Rivers iſſuing from that Mountain, and liberally furniſhed with Cherries, Figs, Pears, Plummes: Apples of all kinds; abundance of Oyl, Honey, Sugar: ſome Mines of Gold, and that for purity and fineneſs no where to be bettered. Here are alſo beſides large Herds of Cattel, ſome Elephants, Lyons, Dragons, Leopards, and others of the like ſavage nature, and of Apes great multitudes: Horſes good ſtore, of excellent both ſtrength and beauty. But taking it in the beſt parts, it falleth extreamly ſhort of that infinite fertility, which is aſcribed to it by the Writers of elder times. For beſides the miracle of five hundred Ears of Corn growing on one ſtalk (whereof more anon) Pliny reporteth, that not far from the City of Tacape, in the way to Leptis, a man might ſee a great Date-tree overſhadowing an Olive, under the Olive a Fig-tree, under that a Pomegranate, under that a Vine, and under all, Peaſe, Wheat, and Herbs, all growing and flouriſhing at one time. It is affirmed alſo by the ſame Authour, that the Vine beareth twice a year, that ſome fruits or other are gathered in it at all times of the year, and that a piece of ground of four cubits ſquare, was uſually rented out at ſo many Denarii: by which account (as the Learned Budaus doth compute it) an Acre of that ground muſt be worth yearly, 12800 of the Roman Seſtertii, which make 320 Crowns. An infinite and unparallel'd increaſe of the fruits of the earth, if the Author were not out in his valuation.

The people are of a duskiſh colour, but inclining to Blackneſs: much of the ſame nature with the Arabians, by whoſe numerous families formerly they were overſpread; but the Africans of the two the better: active of body, well skilled in Horſemanſhip, but impatient of labour, covetous of honour, inconſtant, crafty, and unfaithful, ſtudious in matters of their Law, and in ſome of the Liberal Sciences, eſpecially Philoſophy and the Mathematicks, of which in many parts of the Mahometan Countries they are admitted to be Readers: They are alſo ſaid to be ſtately of gate, exceedingly diſtruſtful, in their hate implacable, and jealous of their women beyond all compare. The women of a comely body, and well featured, beautiful in blackneſs, of delicate ſoft skins, and in their habit and apparel beyond meaſure ſumptuous: ſo dreſt, to make themſelves more amiable in the eyes of their husbands: for otherwiſe not permitted to ſtir abroad, and ſeldom to ſee any body but thoſe of their own honſes.

The Language ſpoken at the preſent in moſt of the Maritime Towns, except thoſe of Feſſe and Morocco, is the Arabick tongue. In thoſe two Kingdoms, and moſt part of the Countrey-villages, the Punick or old African, the ancient languages of the Countrey: the Punick, ſpoken in all places where anciently the Carthaginians were of any power; the African (whatſoever it was) in the parts of Mauritania, not ſubject to them. Of the Latine there is no remainder; which though it was the Language of the Roman Colonies, yet never could it ſpread ſo far as to extinguiſh or ſuppreſs the old natural tongues: and in the Colonies themſelves ſo much degenerated in ſhort time, ſo barbarouſly and imperfectly ſpoken, that a Siſter of the Emperour Severus, who lived in Leptic, a Roman Colony, coming to Rome to ſee her Brother, ſpoke it ſo incongruouſly, that the Emperor was aſhamed to hear it. And though the Sermons of S. Auguſtine, an African Biſhop, were preached in Latin, becauſe preached in Hippo his Epiſcopal See, which was then a Colony of the Romans, yet he confeſſeth that he was ſomtimes fain to uſe ſuch words as were not Latine, to be the better underſtood of his Congrogation.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt planted, in that part hereof, which was called Africa propria, by Epenetus, one of the 70 Diſciples; by Dorotheus in his Synopſis, affirmed to be the firſt Biſhop of Carthage; In Mauritania, by S. Simon the Apoſtle, ſirnamed Zelotes. Metaphraſtes addeth, that S. Simon Peter preached here alſo, when by the decree of Claudius Cæſar he was forced from Rome; and at his going hence, left Creſcens his Diſciple to promote the work. But by whomſoever planted firſt, it found good increaſe, and was ſo propagated in ſhort time over all this Country, that in the year 250. or before, there were in it above 90 Biſhops; for ſo many were aſſembled in the Synod of Labeſitum: and in the year 398. when the faction of the Donatiſts was of greateſt power, we find no fewer than 214 Catholick Biſhops, met together in the Council of Carthage. Which as it is an argument of the great increaſe of Chriſtianity in thoſe parts of Africa, ſo it ſhews alſo that the Church was in an ill condition, ſo overpowered by the violence of that mighty faction, who had at leaſt 270 Biſhops of their own opinion, that the Orthodox party was neceſſitated to increaſe the number of Biſhops, for fear of being over-balanced by the contrary ſide, if ever the difference ſhould come to be examined in a publick Meeting. Theſe Biſhops ranked into ſix Claſſes, according to the number of the African Provinces: the Biſhops of each Province ſubject to their own Metropolitan, who in this Dioceſe (contrary to the uſage of all other Churches) had the name of Primates: but all of them ſubordinate to the Primate of Carthage, originally inveſted with Patriarchal Juriſdiction over all theſe parts. Latius fuſa eſt noſtra Provincia: Habet enim Numidiam, & Mauritanias duas ſibi cohærentes, are S. Cyprians words. Which ſhew, that Leo Africanus was a better Geographer, than an Hiſtorian or Divine. He would not elſe have told us in ſuch poſitive terms, that thoſe of Barbary remained in their old Idolatry, till 250 years before Mahomets Birth; at what time they received the Goſpel, and not before. But the good man miſtook the reviving of the Orthodox faith, in the time of Juſtinian, after it had been long ſuppreſſed by the Vandals of the Arian Faction (who at one time baniſhed hence 300 Catholick Biſhops) for the firſt planting of the Goſpel. Otherwiſe not to be excuſed. But after this Reviver, it held not long, when ſuppreſſed by the Saracens, and ſo ſuppreſſed, that except it be in ſome few Towns poſſeſſed by the King of Spain, and the Crown of Portugal, there is no tract of Chriſtianity to be diſcerned in all this Country; Mahometiſm being elſewhere univerſally embraced amongſt them.

Amongſt the men of moſt note for Souldiery, which have been born in this Countrey, we may reckon Amilcar the Carthaginian, and his three Sons, 2. Annibal, 3. Aſdrubal, and 4. Mago; men hardly to be parallel'd in any Ages: 5. Maſiniſſa, King of the Numidians, one of their Cotemporaries: and in the following times, 6. Septimus Severus, the Roman Emperor. Amongſt thoſe addicted to the Muſes, thoſe of moſt note, 1. Terence, 2. Apuleius. But for Divines, no Region in the world afforded men of more eminent note, nor better deſerving of the Church. 1. Tertullian, 2. Cyprian, 3. Julius Africanus, 4. Arnobius, 5. Lactantius, 6. Victorinus Afer, 7. Optatus Melevitanus, 8. Victor Uticenſis, 9. Fulgentius, 10. Primaſius. And above all, the moſt learned and divine S. Auguſtine, a man of ſuch admirable abilities, and indefatigable induſtry, ſo conſtant a Defender of all Orthodox Doctrine againſt the Hereticks of thoſe times, that he deſervedly got the name of Malleus Hæreticorum.

Principal Mountains of this Countrey beſides Mount Atlas (of which hereafter by it ſelf) 1. Phocra, 2. Heptadelphus, and 3. Atlas minor in Mauritania Tingitania, 4. Cinnaba, 5. Garas, 6. Madethubadus, and 7. thoſe called Gariphi, in Cæſarienſis, 8. Thambes, 9. Mampſarus, 10. Uſaletus, and 11. Zuchabarus, in Africa propria. Of which, and others, we may ſpeak more, if occaſion be, in our deſcription of the Provinces in which they are. And for the Rivers of moſt note, though none of any long courſe in ſo narrow a Countrey; we have in Tigintana, 1. Sala, falling into the Atlantick, out of Atlas Minor; 2. another of the ſame name, and the ſame exit alſo, but far more to the North, towards the Streight of Gibraltar; 3. Molochath, mollified by Salus the Hiſtorian into Mulucha, and by him placed betwixt the Numidians and the Moors; 4. Malva, the boundary at this day, betwixt the Kingdoms of Feſſe an Algiers; 5. Phthuth, of more fame than any, of which more anon: in Cæſarienſis, 6. Naſabath, 7. Siſaris, and Sorbetos: in Africa Propria, or the Kingdom of Tunes, 8. Rubicatus, which iſſuing out of Mount Thambes, falleth into the Mediterranean near Hippo Regius. 9. Triton, which iſſuing out of the hill called Uſaletus, and making the great Fen called Tritonia Palus, endeth its courſe alſo in the Mediterranean; and finally, 10. Bagradas, the greateſt in all this tract, which riſing out of Mount Atlas, firſt runneth towards the Eaſt, and then receiving from the hill called Mampſarus the addition of another Stream, paſſeth directly Northward to the City of Utica, and there ends his courſe.

Having thus laid together the chief Metes and Land-marks, I ſhould now proceed to the deſcription of the ſeveral Provinces hereof, as in other places. But becauſe each part almoſt hath had for theſe latter times its particular Hiſtory, and that it is divided at the preſent into ſeveral Governments, and under the command of ſeveral Princes, I will here lay down ſo much of the Story of it as concerns the whole, before ſuch diviſion; and afterwards purſue the Hiſtory and Chonography of the ſeveral parts. And for the whole we are to know, that this Countrey was firſt peopled by Phut the third ſon of Cham: who leaving his Brother M*izraim* well ſetled in the Land of Egypt, paſſed towards the Weſt; and leaving L*ehabim* his Nephew betwixt him and M*izraim*, poſſeſſed himſelf of all the reſt from the Greater Syrtis to the Ocean. Remainders of whoſe name we find in the River Phut (by Ptolomy called Phthuth, with but little difference, ſave that it ſavoureth more of the African roughneſs) near which Joſephus findeth a Region called the Countrey of Phut, a Nation called the Phuteans: ſeconded herein by S. Hierome, who ſpeaking of this Regis Phutenſis. in M*auritania*, (where the River Phuth is placed by Ptolomy) voucheth in general terms the teſtimony of old Writers, both Greek and L*atine*. So that, of this there is no queſtion to be made. Such Nations as deſcended of this Plantation, ſhall be hereafter ſpoke of in their ſeveral Provinces. Governed at firſt by the Chiefs of their ſeveral Families; but in the end, reduced under the command of the Kings of Mauritania, and Numidia, and the State of Carthage. The two firſt, Natives of this Countrey, of the race of Phut; the laſt deſcended alſo of the ſeed of Cham, their common Parent, by the line of Canaan: who on the conqueſt of their Countrey by the Children of Iſrael, forced to ſeek new dwellings; and having ſtore of ſhips to tranſplant themſelves and their Families, ſetled in the maritime parts of Mauritania, and Africa properly ſo called. For, that the people of thoſe parts, though loſt into other names and families, were anciently of a Canaanitiſh, or Phœnician race, may be made apparent, 1. By the nearneſs of their Language, the Punick, or Phœnician, and old Hebrew tongue, differing onely in the dialect and pronunciation. 2*ly*. By the name Pœni, or Phœni, little differing from that of the Phœnices. 3*ly*. By this teſtimony of S. Auguſtine, who telleth us in the Comment on S. Pauls Epiſtle to the Romans, begun, but not finiſhed by him, Interrogati Ruſtici noſtri quid ſint, reſpondent Punici Chanani; that is to ſay, that when any of the Inhabitants of this Countrey (he himſelf was one) were aſked what they were they anſwered, Chanaanites. 4*ly*. We find in Herodotus, how Cambyſes having totally conquered Egypt, intended a war againſt the Carthaginians, who were then a State (it ſeemeth) of ſome power: but the Phœnicians, being the onely Sea-faring men Cambyſes then had, abſolutely denied to be imployed in that ſervice; they being ſprung from the ſame Tree, that the Carthaginians were. 5*ly*. We read in Procopius, (out of which it is cited by Evagrius Scholaſticus) how on two marble pillars, ſituate nigh unto Tingis, or Tanger, there was in the Phœnician language and Character engraved, Nos fugimus à facie Joſhuah prædonis, filii Nave; that is to ſay, We flie from the face of that Robber, Joſhuah the ſon of Nun. The ſetling of this people there, a great incitement queſtionleſs unto Dido, to come thither alſo: who feared as much danger from her brother Pygmalion King of Tyre, whoſe hands had been embrued in the bloud of her huſband; as the others did from the ſword of Joſhuah. Gathering together all her Treaſures, which were very great, accompanied with her brother Barca, and her ſiſter Anna, ſhe ſet ſail for Africk; and landing in the Bay, where after ſtood the City of Carthage, ſhe obtained leave to build a Fort of no greater bigneſs, than ſhe could compaſs round about with an Oxes hide. This the beginning of that City; hence the name of Byrſa, which at firſt it had. Firſt founded in, or about the year of the world 3070. which was about 144 years after the building of Solomons Temple; 143 years before the building of Rome, and about 290 years from the deſtruction of Troy. By which accompt (I note this onely by the way) it is impoſſible that Dido, or Eliſa (for by both theſe names we find her called) ſhould ever ſee the face of Æneas, unleſs it were in picture, or imagination; and therefore as impoſſible ſhe ſhould either fall in love with him, or be got with Child by him, or finally kill her ſelf on her being forſaken. All which being delivered by Virgil in his excellent Poem, did for long time obtain a general belief with moſt ſorts of men. Hereunto conſenteth Auſonius, who honouring the Statua of this abuſed Princeſs with an Epigram of 18 verſes, among others gives us theſe four.

Invida cur in me ſtimulaſti Muſa Maronem,
Fingeret ut noſtræ damna pudicitiæ?
Vos magis Hiſtoricis (Lectores) credite de me,
Quam qui furta deum, concubituſque canunt.

Why didſt thou ſtir up Virgil, envious Muſe,
Falſly my name and honour to abuſe?
Of me let Hiſtories be heard, not thoſe,
Who to the World, Jove's theft and luſts expoſe.

Credible it is, that Æneas being driven on the Coaſt of Africk, was by ſome Prince there courteouſly entertained, as a man whoſe fame had been his harbinger: but why the ſtory ſhould be faſtened on Dido, I ſee not. Perhaps the unfortunate death of this Queen, who laid violent hands on her ſelf, gave occaſion to the Poet to fain, that it was for the love of Æneas: whereas it was indeed to avoid the luſt and fury of Jarbas, a potent King of the Getuli, a powerful Nation of thoſe parts of Africa, in which Carthage ſtood, who violently deſired to have his pleaſure on her.

But to proceed. This City thus founded in a place commodious for Trade and Merchandiſe, in ſhort time grew exceeding wealthy. And having wealth enough to hire mercenary Souldiers (of which the needy Mauritanians, and Numidians, did afford good ſtore) they conquered all the Sea-Coaſts from Cyrene to the Streits of Hercules (now called the Streits of Gibraltar:) and ſo much alſo towards the South, as was worth the conquering; within which ſpace poſſeſſed of 300 Cities. Grown to ſuch height, that all the African Kings and Princes, and amongſt them the Kings of Numidia, and Mauritania, were at their devotion: They began to caſt their eyes on Sicily, a wealthy Iſland, lying near unto their Coaſt; which queſtionleſs they had poſſeſſed, if the Romans, envious of their greatneſs, and fearing their neighbour-hood, had not took upon them the defence of the Mumertines, and under that pretence got ſome footing in it. The end of this war, after many brave exploits on both ſides, was the driving the Carthaginians out of Sicil; their abandoning all the Iſlands, betwixt them and Italy, and the payment of 3200 Talents, amounting to about two Millions of Crowns. And ſuch end had the firſt Punick war, managed for the moſt part in Sicil. During which time, and the firſt war there managed by the Carthaginians, Africk it ſelf was twice invaded; firſt by Agathocles Tyrant of Syracuſe, (or ſo commonly call'd) and afterwards by Regulus a Roman General; but with no other great ſucceſs, than the ſpoil of the Countrey. The ſecond followed not long after, but the Scene was altered; begun in Spain, proſecuted in Italy, and ended in Africk. Begun by Annibal the ſon of Amilcar, deſcended from Barca the brother of Dido or Eliſa: who having conquered a great part of Spain, and thereby both increaſed his reputation and experience, conducted his victorious Army through Gaul, and over the Alpes, into Italy it ſelf; defeated the Armies of the Romans, and ſlew ſome of their Conſuls: ſo proſperous in the battel of Cannæ, where the whole ſtrength of Rome was broken, that had he followed his good fortune, and made uſe of his victory, he might within four, or five days after have dined in the Capitol. Having for 18 years together held them work in Italy, he was called home to defend Africk from the forces of Scipio; who having driven the Carthaginians out of Spain, had very prudently tranſlated the war to Carthage. The iſſue was, that on the loſs of the battel of Nadagara, the Carthaginians were neceſſitated to ſubmit themſelves to the will of the Conquerour: that is to ſay, to deliver up all their Elephants, together with all their Ships, and Gallies excepting ten; to make no war without leave of the Romans, to pay for the charges of the war, 10000 Talents; and ſuch other extremities. So ended the 2. Punick war, An. V. C. 602. And the third followed not long after, not any way occaſioned by thoſe of Carthage, but out of the inveterate hatred of the people of Rome; who would not think themſelves ſafe whileſt that City ſtood: and therefore ſent another Scipio to lay ſiege unto it. By whom, after a long and ſtout reſiſtance, it was at laſt taken and deſtroyed: the Treaſure which was found in it, notwithſtanding their former loſſes, and the low eſtate it was reduced to, beſides what was conſumed by fire, and reſerved by the Souldiers; amounting to 470000 pound weight of ſilver, which cometh to a Million, four hundred and ten thouſand pounds of our Engliſh money.

Such end had Carthage, and therewith all the reſt of the States of Africa, who though in hatred to the Carthaginians they had armed againſt her, and aided the Romans in theſe wars; yet they ſoon found their own fortunes buried in the ſelf-ſame Grave. Subverted, one after another, as occaſion was, they became all ſubject unto Rome; their Kingdoms and Eſtates turned to Roman Provinces. Of theſe were reckoned ſeven in all, that is to ſay, 1. Africa Propria, called alſo Zeugitana; and Proconſularis, 2. Byzacena, 3. Tripolitana, 4. Numidia, 5. Mauritania Cæſarienſis, 6. Sitiſenſis, and 7. Tingitana. Of which the laſt (I know not why) was laid to the Dioceſe of Spain, called therefore Hiſpania Transfretana, Spain on the other ſide of the Sea, by ſome elder Writers: the other ſix made up the Dioceſe of Africk, ſubordinate to the Præfectus Pretorius for Italy, who had here his Vicarius, or Lieutenant. In this condition it continued, till ſubdued by the Vandals, a German Nation, inhabiting beyond the Elb, on the Coaſt of the Baltick; where now lie the Dukedoms of Mecklenbourg and Pomerania. Their memory ſtill retained there in the ſtile of thoſe Princes, who call themſelves Duces Vandalorum; and in the Confederacy of the Hanſe-towns, called by ſome Latine Writers, Civitates Vandalicæ. A Nation of great power, and numbers, (the Burgundians being onely a part of theſe) one of the five into which Pliny doth divide the Germans. In the 11th year of the Empire of Arcadius and Honorius, they were invited into Gaul, by the treacherous practices of Stilico, Lieutenant of the Weſtern Empire; and after an abode of three years, paſſed into Spain, together with the Suevi, and Alani, their Aſſociates. But after 18 years, the Goths made that place too hot for them alſo. So that they could not but willingly accept the offer of Bonifacius, the Emperours Vicegerent in Africa: who ſtomacking to ſee his Office beſtowed on Caſtinus an unworthy man, and his enemy; betrayed the Countrey to theſe Vandals, in the laſt year of the life and reign of Gundericus, an Arian in Religion, as were the reſt of the Nation, to which induced by their neighbourhood and acquaintance with the Goths: which Hereſie as they brought with them into Africk, driving thence all the Orthodox Chriſtians; ſo they continued in it till their extirpation.

The VANDAL Kings of AFRICA.

A. C.
412.	1 Gundericus, who firſt invaded Gaul, Spain and Africk. 16.
428.	2 Genſericus, who at the requeſt of Eudoxia the widow of Valentinian, invaded Italy, and ſacked the City of Rome, the ſpoil whereof for 14 days he gave to his Souldiers: but at the requeſt of Eudoxia, whom he afterward married, he did not burn it. This Eudoxia was wife to the Weſtern Emperor Valentinian; who having a minde to a Lady of Rome, the wife of one Maximus, he cunningly ſlipped the Ring of Maximus off his finger, and by that token ſent for the Lady to the Court; and when ſhe was come raviſhed her. To revenge this diſgrace, Maximus ſlew Valentinian, made himſelf Emperor, and forced Eudoxia to be his wife. But ſhe ſtomacking a match ſo unequal to her high birth, and having ſome incling of the manner of her husbands death, ſent for Genſericus into Italy. This Genſericus conquered Carthage, and Hippo, and reigned 48 years.
476.	3 Honoricus, ſon of Genſericus. 7.
484.	4 Gundebundus, ſon to Genzo the brother of Honoricus. 15.
499.	5 Traſimundus, brother to Gundebundus. 24.
523.	6 Hildericus, the ſon of Honoricus, depoſed by
530.	7 Gilmir, the ſon of Genzo, one of the Deſcendents of Genſericus; overcome by Beliſarius a worthy and politique Leader, whom the Emperour Juſtinian imployed in that ſervice.

And thus ended the Kingdom of the Vandals, (having continued in Spain, and Africa, 146 years) by the valour of Beliſarins. Who after this good ſervice, was imployed by Juſtiniap againſt the Gothes, then reigning in Italy; againſt whom he proceeded very fortunately: but being, on I know not what envy, called to Conſtantinople, his eyes were put out, and he was forced to beg his bread at the Gate of the Temple of S. Sophia. A bad reward for ſo good a ſervant. But to go on, Juſtinian having regained Africk, to honour his new Conqueſt, exempted it from the command of the Prætorio-Præfectus of Italy, to which formerly ſubject; and increaſing the number of the African Provinces by the addition of the Iſle of Sardinia, made it a Præfecture of it ſelf: appointing his Præfectus Prætorio Africæ to reſide in Carthage, as the chief City of his charge; which he then alſo raiſed to a Conſular Province, having in former times been Proconſular onely. But long it held not in this ſtate: For in the year 647 the Romans were finally expulſed by Hucba, a famous Leader, whom Oſmen, the third Caliph of the Saracens, had deſigned to this ſervice. Africk, from that time forwards, reckoned amongſt the Provinces of the Saracenical or Mahometan Empire. But in the end, the Authority of the Caliphs growing leſs and leſs, and every one of their Sultans or Provincial Officers, getting what he could for himſelf: this Countrey was diſtracted into many Kingdoms and Principalities, but all at laſt reduced to four of moſt conſideration: that is to ſay, the Kingdoms of 1. Tunis, 2. Tremeſen or Algiers, 3. Feſſo, and 4. Morocco. To the Chorography and Hiſtory whereof we do now proceed; adding hereto in the fifth place, the Iſles of Barbary.

1. TUNIS.

THe Kingdom of TUNIS (in Latine called Regnum Tunetanum) hath on the Eaſt Cyrene; on the Weſt, the Kingdom of Algeirs, or Tremeſin; on the North the Mediterranean; on the South Mount Atlas. So called from Tunis the chief City of it; extended all along the Coaſt of the Mediterranean for the ſpace of 800 miles or thereabout, but the breadth not anſwerable.

The Countrey towards the Eaſt, barren and deſtitute of water; but in the Weſtern parts, ſufficiently plentiful of Corn, and other fruits, and generally well ſet with Trees. The people more patient of labour than the reſt of Barbary, and for that cauſe perhaps more healthy: but queſtionleſs of ſo good conſtitution, that they live commonly to great Age, unleſs a violent death prevent them; and are not much afraid of ſickneſs, or much troubled with it.

It contains in it the two whole Provinces of Africa Propria (or Africa Minor, as ſome call it) and the Numidia of the Romans; called ſince Numidia Antiqua, to difference it from the preſent Numidia, lying on the other ſide of Mount Atlas. The principal Mountains of which Countries, beſides thoſe ſpoken of already, were 1. Audas, 2. Buzara, 3. Cinna, 4. Dios, or the Hills of Jupiter, 5. Gillius, by ſome named Gigion, and 6 thoſe called Thizibi. Rivers of moſt eſteem with them, though not much with others, beſides thoſe mentioned before, 1. Ampſaga, now called Collo, and by ſome Sat Gemar, which divideth this Kingdom from that of Tremeſen, 2. Catada, 3. Cyniphus, iſſuing from the hills called Zuchabarus, and falling into the Sea not far from Tripolis. Beſides which there were ſome great Lakes; the chief whereof, 1. Hipponites near Mount Cinna, 2. the Lake of Pallas, or that called Palus Tritonia, where Minerva was ſaid to have ſhewed her ſelf the Inventreſs of Spinning and of Oyl, and for that much worſhipped by this People. 3. Sylura, another great Lake, but not ſo famous as the former, becauſe not honoured by a Goddeſs.

The whole divided by the Romans into theſe four parts, viz. 1. Africa ſpecially ſo called, lying on the Sea, from the River Ampſaga to the Leſſer Syrtis, 2. Tripolitana, from the Leſſer Syrtis to the Greater, 3. Numidia, lying on the Weſt of Zeugitana, or Africa Propria: and 4. Byzacena, ſo called from Byzacium, or Byzacina, a chief City of it; the territory whereof ſo extremely fruitful, that 400 Ears of corn were ſent to Rome in the time of Auguſtus, and 360 in the time of Domitius Nero, growing on one ſtalk. But this Diviſion being long ſince worn out of memory, it is divided at the preſent into the Provinces of, 1. Ezzab, 2. Tripolis, 3. Tunis, 4. Conſtantina, 5. Bugia.

1. EZZAB is that part of this Kingdom which lieth next to Cyrene: A ſmall Region, and not very fruitful; yet the Inhabitants hereof are conceived to be rich, (the richer, in regard they are free from tributes:) their wealth not riſing from the commodities of their own Countrey, which affordeth them little elſe beſides Dates and Olives; but from ſuch merchandiſe which they buy of the Venetians, and ſell to the Numidians. The richeſt, thoſe of Meſrata, (a little Province of this Tract) which lieth near the Sea. Towns it hath ſome, but none of note: the chief of which, 1. Meſurata, 2. Sibeca, both upon the Sea; of which the firſt gives name unto that little Province ſpoken of before. Of more note in the former times was Phileni Villa, ſituate on the Greater Syrtis, near the Promontory then called Hippi, but now Cabo de Surta; memorable for the adjoyning Altars, called Phileni Aræ, erected by the Carthaginians upon this occaſion. Some controverſies being grown betwixt thoſe of Carthage and Cyrene, about their bounds; it was agreed, that two men at a ſet hour ſhould be ſent out of each City towards the other; and where they met, there to be fixed the Meer-ſtone of their ſeveral Territories. The Phileni, two brothers nominated for Carthage, were ſo quick of foot, that they had gotten a good way into the Countrey of the Cyrenenſes, before they were met; wherewith the Cyreneans much enraged, put to them this choice, either to go ſo much back again, or to die in the place. This laſt accepted by the Phileni, who preferred the common good of their Countrey before their own; for preſervation of whoſe name and honour to ſucceeding Ages, the grateful Carthaginians did erect theſe Altars.

2. Weſt of the Province of Ezzab, lieth that of TRIPOLIS, which together with Ezzab made that Province which the Romans called Tripolitana. Not much more fruitful than the other, except in Barley; but more commodiouſly ſeated in regard of the Sea, which is here more ſafe for navigation; the former lying wholly on the greater Syrtis. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Leptis Magna, ſo called, to diſtinguiſh it from another, but of leſs note, and therefore called Leptis Parva, ſituate in the (now) Province of Tunis. A town of ſo great wealth and trade, that it was worth a Talent daily to the Carthaginians. 2. Euphranta, called alſo Pyrgos Euphranta, from ſome ſtrong Tower in it on the Weſtern bank of the greater Syrtis. 3. Cinſterna, on the Eaſtern ſide of the River Cyniphus. 4. Cabis, the utmoſt City of this Province weſtward; the ſame which Ptolomy calls Tacapa, ſituate at the fall of the River Triton into the leſſer Syrtis, 5. Sabratha, and 6. Heva; not elſe obſervable, but that together with Leptis Magna they made up that one City, which the Romans called from thence Tripolis. 7. Tripolis, founded by the Romans, and by them peopled with Colonies from thoſe three Cities before mentioned. A City of great name and riches, till deſtroyed by the Saracens. By whom rebuilt, adorned with many fair Temples, Colledges, and Hoſpitals; and flouriſhing in much wealth and luſtre, it became a Kingdom of it ſelf, but ſubject to the Kings of Tunis, till taken by the Genoes with a Fleet of 20 ſail, and by them ſold to the King of Feſſe. Recovered not long after by the King of Tunis, it came once more to have a King of its own; till by the valour of Peter of Navar, it was conquered for Ferdinand the Catholique, the firſt Monarch of Spain: whoſe Nephew Charles the 5. conferred it on the Knights of S. John of Hieruſalem, then expelled from Rhodes: whom the Turks under Sinan Baſa General of Selimus the ſecond, diſpoſſeſſed by force, Anno 1551. Since that the ordinary Reſidence of the Turkiſh Begterbeg, for theſe African Provinces; and made an uſual retreat for Pyrats, who infeſt theſe Seas, and do much miſchief to the Coaſts of Sicile, Italy, and others of the Chriſtian Countries.

3. The Province of TUNIS, lying Weſtward to that of Tripolis, taketh up ſo much of this Kingdom, as antiently conteined the Province of Bizacena; and ſo much of the Roman Africk, as lieth on the Eaſt of the River called Gaudilbarbar, the Hipponites Lacus of the Antient writers. The Country antiently ſo fruitful, that it yielded uſually an increaſe of an hundred and fifty fold: For proof of which, beſides the teſtimony of approved Authors, the wonderful, if not prodigious Ears of Corn, which before we heard of, may ſerve ſufficiently. Now indigent, and ſo unprovided of all Grain for the uſe of their families, that they are fain to furniſh themſelves out of other places: the People not daring to manure or ſow their land, for fear of the Arabians; who ever and anon fall into theſe parts, and ſpoil what they meet with.

Places of moſt note in it, in the elder times, 1. Adrumetum or Adrumyſtus, now called Machometta, once a Roman Colony, and the Metropolis of the Province of Byzacena, by conſequence, in the times of Chriſtianity, an Archbiſhops See: walled and repaired by the Emperour Juſtinian; and by his command called Juſtiniana. 2. Zama, the incamping place of Annibal, before his battel with Scipio. 3. Nadagora, memorable for the great battel, betwixt the two renowned Generals of Rome and Carthage; not parallel'd ſince their own times, nor in thoſe before them. In which the great Controverſie between thoſe Cities being to be tried, the fortune of the day fell unto the Romans: For though Annibal ſhewed his ſingular judgement in ordering his Souldiers, as Scipio could not but acknowledge; yet being far the weaker in horſe, and by an Order of the Senate of Carthage to fight in a place of diſadvantage, he could do no marvels: the Romans, with the loſs of no more then 1500 of their own men, killing 20000 of the Carthaginians, in the fight and chaſe. 4. Salera the firſt place took by Scipio, after the landing of his Army. 5. Utica, a Tyrian Colony, beautified with an Haven capable of the greateſt ſhips; much ſpoke of in the wars of Carthage; and memorable for the death of Cato (hence ſirnamed Utican) who here ſlew himſelf, for fear of falling into the hands of Caſar. It is now called Biſerta. 6. Bizacium, ſeated in liberal and fruitful ſoils, as was ſhewn before; whence the Province had the name of Byzacena. 7. Ruſpinum, made by Caſar the ſeat of his war in Africk, againſt the ſons and faction of Pompey; as memorable in the times ſucceeding, for being the Epiſcopal See of S. Fulgentius. 8. Thyſtrus, remarkable for the Tragedy of the Gordiani: Of which the Father in this City was ſaluted Emperour by the Souldiers, in hatred to Maximinus then their Emperour, whoſe Procurator they had ſlain in a tumult: but his party being diſcomfited by Capellianus, whom Maximinus, ſent againſt him, and his ſon killed in the defeat; upon the hearing of the news, he here hanged himſelf. 9. Hippagreta, on a great Lake betwixt Carthage and Utica; one of the Towns which held out longeſt for the Mercinaries, in their deſperate Rebellion againſt the Carthaginians; by which the Eſtate of that great City was in danger of ruine, at the end of the firſt Punick war. 10. CARTHAGE, once the Lady and Miſtreſs of Africk, ſituate in the bottom of a ſafe and capacious Bay, the entrances whereof were very ſtrongly fortified both by art and nature, environed with the Sea, except upon one ſide only, where joyned unto the Land by a narrow Iſthmus, about two miles and an half in breadth. In compaſs 24 miles, but meaſuring by the outward wall, it was 45. For without the wall of the City it ſelf, there were three walls more, betwixt each of which there were three or four Streets, with Vaults under ground of 30 foot deep; wherein they had place for 300 Elephants and all their Fodder, with Stables over them for 4000 Horſe, and all their Provender, and Lodging in thoſe Out-ſtreets for the Riders of the ſaid Horſe, and for 20000 Foot beſides, which never came within the City to annoy or peſter it. On the South-ſide ſtood the Caſtle called Byrſa, which took up two miles and an half in compaſs: firſt built by Dido, on that ground which ſhe obtained of the Libyans, when ſhe got leave to buy onely ſo much land of them, as ſhe could compaſs round about with an Oxes hide. In that, the ſumptuous Temple of their antient Deities, Juno, Apollo, Æſculapius, Belus. On the Weſt-ſide, a ſtanding Pool made of the Sea-water, let into it by ſo narrow a paſſage, that there was but 70 foot open for the Sea to enter: On which they had a ſtately Arſenal, with their Ships and Gallies riding by it. Of the foundation and affairs of this mighty City we have ſpoke already. The Government of it firſt by Kings, thoſe abſolute enough at firſt, afterwards limited by the Senate; and finally made meerly titulary by the power of the People: which unproportionable mixture is much condemned by Ariſtotle, in the 2. of his Politicks. Their Territories, before the ſecond

Punick war, when they were at the greateſt, extended on the Sea-coaſts of the Mediterranean, from the Greater Syrtis to the Streights, and ſo unto the River Iberus, for the ſpace of 2000 miles in length: their Revenues anſwerable, and readily brought in, by reaſon of their infinite trading. Which made the Roman people think themſelves unſafe, whilſt this City ſtood. Reſolved on the deſtruction of it, they ſent againſt it L. Martius, and M. Manlius, their two Conſuls, with a puiſſant Army: to whom the Carthaginians willingly delivered up their Arms and Shipping, contracting only for the preſervation of the City it ſelf, which was faithfully promiſed. But when they had withal given up the Sons of their principal men, to be ſent to Rome for Pledges of their future Loyalty, they were told, that a City conſiſted not in wals, but in Lawes and Government. Theſe with the Corporation, ſhould remain as formerly; the Town to be removed ten miles further off, where there was no Sea to thrive and grow rich upon. Enraged herewith, it was reſolved to abide the utmoſt: but they wanted neceſſaries for reſiſtance. That want ſupplied for want of Iron to make Arms, with Gold and Silver; the Houſes pulled down to furniſh them with timber to build a Navy, the noble Ladies cutting off the hair of their heads, to make Ropes and Cordage; 25000 women liſted to defend the wals. But the fatal moment being come, a ſecond Scipio is ſent thither to diſpatch the work; by whom at laſt the Town was taken, and for 17 dayes together conſumed with fire: the Queen and multitudes of the people burning themſelves in the Temple of Æſculapius, becauſe they would not fall into the hands of the Romans. Re-edified by Julius Cæſar, and made a Colony, it recovered ſome part of her former luſtre; but ſo, that her chief glory was rather to be ſought for in her ancient, than her preſent fortunes. Populi Romani Colonia, olim Imperii ejus pertinax æmula, & priorum exidio rerum, quam ope præſentium clarior; was her character in the times of Ponponius Mela. But in this laſt Eſtate, accompted for the Metropolis of the Dioceſe of Africk, the Reſidence of the Vicarius or Lieutenant-General, and the See of the chief Primate of the African Churches; who had 164 Biſhops under him in that one Prvoince wherein Carthage ſtood. Deſtroyed in the ſucceeding times by the Vandals, and after that by the Saracens; it revived again, and had the reputation of a City of no mean importance, till the year 1270. at what time being forced by the French, under Lewis the 9th. and thereupon deſerted by its old Inhabitants, it began to languiſh, and was at laſt reduced to nothing but a few ſcattered houſes, not above five and twenty ſhops, one Temple; all the reſt a ruine. So truly ſaid the ancient Poet,

> Sic patet exemplis Oppida poſſe mori.
> Thus by examples do we ſee,
> That Towns may die as well as we.

Of chief note at the preſent, 1. Tunis, ſuppoſed to be the Themiſa, or Thumiſa of Ptolomy, of ſmall accompt till the laſt deſtruction of Carthage, by whoſe fall it roſe. Situate not far from the ruines of that famous City, in compaſs about five miles, and in that compaſs ſaid to contain 10000 houſholds. Of great traffick, and well frequented by the Merchants of forreign Nations; chiefly from Genoa and Venice. Remarkable in the Story of the Holy Wars, for the Sieges and ſucceſſes of two of our Engliſh Princes, that namely of King Edward the firſt, in his Fathers life-time; and that of Henry the fourth, then but Earl of Darby; by both which (though the laſt ſerved only under the command of the French) the City was compelled to a compoſition; Lewis the 9. commonly called S. Lewis, dying at the firſt ſiege of it, 2. Goletta, a ſtrong Fort, built for defence of the Haven of Tunis, in a Demy-Iland, divided from the main Land by two narrow paſſages, but ſo that it commands them both. Taken, but not without extream difficulty by Charles 5. An. 1535. together with the Turkiſh Navy riding in the Lake faſt by it, but again recovered by the Turks about 40 years after, An. 1574. 3. Cairoan, built by Hucba, who firſt conquered Africk for the Saracens, in a ſandy Deſart, about 100 miles from Tunis, and 36. from any part of the Sea, to ſecure himſelf from any Invaſion, which the commodiouſneſs of the Sea might bring upon him. Adorned by the firſt founder of it, with an admirable Temple raiſed on Pillars of Marble; who placed alſo in it a Colledge of Prieſts, and made it the chief Reſidence of his Poſterity for the ſpace of 170 years, who reigned here under the great Caliphs as the Sultans of Africk. Deſtroyed by the Arabians, in the 424 year of their Hegira, but regained from them by the King of Morocco, and ſtill of ſuch eſteem amongſt theſe Mahometans, that their chief men are brought thither to be buried from all parts of the Country; hoping by the prayers of thoſe Prieſts to find a ſhorter way to Heaven, than in other places.

4. More Weſtward yet lies the Province named CONSTANTINA, ſo called from Conſtantina the chief City of it. Extended from the Lake Hipponites, now named Guadilharbar, to Conſtantine a Mountain bordering on Bugia, which I conceive to be the ſame with Mons Andus in Ptolomy. The ſoil hereof ſaid to be very rich and fruitful both for Corn and Cattel, yielding abundance of Fruits, and great ſtore of Butter. Rubricatus, by Oroſius called Ordalio, now Ludog, the chief River of it.

Principal Cities of this Province, 1. Tabraca, on the Eaſt; and 2. Hippo Regius, on the Weſtern Bank of Rubricatus: both Roman Colonies, but this laſt moſt famous, in being the Epiſcopal See of renowned S. Auguſtine. 3. Bona, the birthplace of that Father, built by the Romans about an hundred miles from the Sea; but ſituate in a large plain, containing 40 miles in length, 25 in breadth: ſo rich and fertile, that the Town flouriſheth to this day; adorned with a ſumptuous Moſque, and never without the company of Merchants coming from Genoa, Tunes, and the Iſle of Zerby, for their Fruits and Butter. 4. Thuburnica, another Colony of the Romans. 5. Sicca Veneria, another Town of the ſame nature; by Solinus called Veneria only, and by Pliny, Sicca. 6. Culcua, another of the Roman Colonies, by the Moors now called Cucutina, but Conſtantina by the Latines, and moſt Nations elſe, now the chief City of this Province, ſituate near a Mountain of the ſame name, near the edge of Bugia, An ancient City, but containing ſtill 8000 families, many ſumptuous Buildings; amongſt which a large Temple, two Colledges, and three or four Monaſteries: frequently viſited by the Merchants, every Trade having here its peculiar Street; their chief Commodities, Wool, Cloth, Silks, Oyl, and ſome ſorts of Fruits, which they exchange for Dates or Slaves, who are here good Merchandiſe. The City for the moſt part, fenced about with high craggy Rocks, and where thoſe want, with ſtrong Wals, of a great height, and moſt exquiſite workmanſhip, declaring the antiquity of it. A further Argument whereof may be a fair Triumphal Arch not far from the City, and ſome Hot Bathes, after the manner of the Romans.

5. Moſt Weſtward lieth the Province of BUGIA, extended from Mount Conſtantine to the River Ampſa, now called Chollo, or Seſ-Gemar: which with ſo much of Conſtantina, as lieth on the Weſt-ſide of Rubricatus, made up that Province, which the Romans called by the name of Numidia. The length hereof 150 miles on the Mediterranean, the breadth not above half ſo much. Narrower than Mauritania, as is ſaid by Pliny; ſed ditior & magis culta, but the richer of the two, and the better peopled. The Countrey of a fat ſoyl, plentiful both in fruits and corn, but moſt fit for paſturage: to which the people were ſo addicted, that many of them cared not for building Houſes (in ſtead whereof they uſed the Hold of a ſhip with the Keel turned upwards) but removed from one place to another, as their Paſtures failed them. From thence called Nomades by the Grecians, ἀπὸ τῦ νέμειν, ſignifying to feed or graſe. The people of good mettall, ſwift of foot, and well skilled in Horſemanſhip: but better in the onſet and to give a charge, than in ſtanding to it; ſuch as the wild Arabians are now ſaid to be.

Chief Towns hereof (beſides Thuburnica, Culcua, Bona, Hippo, ſpoken of before, belonging to Numidia, thought not to Bugia) 1. Bugia, built by the Romans on the ſide of a lofty Mountain looking into the Sea; by ſome conceived to have been the Thebuaca of Ptolomy, now the chief City of this Province; adorned with many ſumptuous Moſques, ſome Monaſteries and Colledges for ſtudents in the Law of Mahomet, and many fair Hoſpitals for relief of the poor, fenced alſo with a ſtrong Caſtle. Secured by the ſtrength whereof, and growing rich by the Fruitfulneſs of the ſituation, the Citizens began to grow proud and wanton; working much miſchief to the Spaniards by their Gallies, which they had at Sea; till taught more modeſty by Peter of Navar a Spaniſh Captain, A. 1508. by whom the Town was taken, and the people plundered. 2. Chollo, upon the Sea-ſide, the Chollops Magnus (as I take it) of Ptolomy; reported for a wealthy City. 3. Nicaus, ſeated towards Mount Atlas, in a pleaſant and delightful Country: which though interſperſed with many hils, yet being thoſe hils are cloathed with woods, yield them good ſtore of Goats and Horſes, and feed the Vallies with freſh Springs, which do iſſue from them; they rather adde than detract any thing from the pleaſures of it. 4. Madaura, by ſome called Madurus, the birth-place of Apuleius. 5. Tunudromum, another of the Roman Colonies. 6. Cirta, or Cirta Julia, the Metropolis of Numidia, when a Roman Province, and formerly the Seat-Royal of Sypax King of the Maſæſyli, within whoſe Country it was reckoned in former times, though afterwards laid unto this Province. Situate near the mouth of the River Ampſaga, and memorable for the tragedy of Sophonisba, the daughter of Aſdrubal of Carthage, a Lady of moſt exquiſite beauty, and yet carried more charms in her tongue than in her Eyes. Eſpouſed firſt unto Maſiniſſa King of the Numidians, but after, upon reaſon of State, married unto Syphax, who being took priſoner by his Rival, and brought to Cirta, the Lady upon hopes of Liberty and Honour both, beſtowed her ſelf on her firſt Lover; but Scipio fearing leſt that Marriage might withdraw Maſiniſſa from the Roman party, cauſed the Lady to be ſeized on; which Maſiniſſa not being otherwiſe able to prevent or remedy, ſent her a cup of poyſon, which ſhe drank and died.

Of theſe Numidians there is much mention in the Stories of Rome and Carthage; employed by this laſt City in all their wars, both in Spain, Italy, and Sicil. Siding at laſt with Scipio againſt that State, they did good Service to the Romans in the weakning and deſtruction of that City: whoſe fall they did not long ſurvive: firſt conquered in the war of Jugurth; after the death of Juba, made a Roman Province. Their Kings, as far as I can trace the ſucceſſion of them, follow in this Order.

The Kings of the NUMIDIANS.

1 Gala, the Father of Maſiniſſa.

2 Deſalces, the brother of Gala; according to the Laws of the Countrey, which gave the Crown unto the Brother, not the Son of the former King (like the Law of Taniſtry in Ireland) ſucceeded Gala.

3 N. N. a ſon of Deſalces, in the abſence of Maſiniſſa, then ſerving under the Carthaginians in the Wars of Spain, poſſeſſed himſelf of the Throne: Slain not long after by a Rebel.

4 Maſiniſſa, ſon of Gala, recovered the Kingdom of his Fathers; but again outed by Syphax and the Carthaginians, betwixt whom and Maſiniſſa, touching Sophoniſba, there was deadly Feud. Aided by Scipio and the Romans, with whom aſſociated againſt Carthage, he not only recovered his own Kingdom, but was gratified with the greateſt part of that which belonged to Syphax. A profeſſed Enemy to Carthage (the final ruine whereof he lived to ſee) till the time of his death, being then ninety years of Age.

5 Micipſa, the ſon of Maſiniſſa, of whom nothing memorable.

6 Jugurth, the ſon of Maſtanabilis, one of the Brethren of Micipſa, having wickedly made away the two ſons of Micipſa, uſurped the Kingdom; and manifeſtly withſtood the Romans, whoſe attempts ſomtimes by force, ſomtimes by ſubtilty, but chiefly by money and bribes, he overthrew and made fruſtrate: Et fuit in Jugurtha (ſaith Florus) quod poſt

Annibalem timeretur. At laſt, being broken by Metellus, vanquiſhed by Marius, and by Bocchus delivered into the hands of Sylla; he was by Marius led in Triumph to Rome. In this Triumph was carried 3700 pound weight in Gold; in Silver-wedges, 5775 pound weight; and in ready Coyn, 28900 Crowns: it being the cuſtom of the Romans in their Triumphs, to have carried before them all the riches and money, which they had brought out of the conquered Countreys, to put into the common Treaſury.

7 Hiempſal, ſon of Bocchus King of Mauritania, gratified for his Fathers treachery in betraying Jugurth, with the Kingdom of Numidia; Relieved Marius in his exile.

8 Hiarbas, another of the Marian faction, preferred to the Numidian Crown; but vanquiſh'd and deprived by Pompey, at that time one of Sylla's Captains.

9 Hiempſal II. preferred by Pompey to this Kingdom.

10 Juba, the ſon of Hiempſal the ſecond, who ſiding with Pompey againſt Cæſar in the Civil Wars, gave a great Overthrow to Curio, one of Cæſars Lieutenants; Curio himſelf ſlain, his whole Army routed, ſuch as were taken priſoners murdered in cold bloud. But being diſcomfited by Cæſar after Pompey's death, Numidia was made a Province of the Roman Empire.

Thus by the fall of Carthage, and the death of Juba, came the whole Provinces of Africa Propria, and Numidia (containing the now Kingdom of Tunis) into the power of the Romans. Of which, the Nations of moſt note were the Nigitimi, on the Eaſtern parts of the Mediterranean, the Machyni, near the leſſer Syrtis; the Libya-Phænices and Medini, bordering upon Carthage, the Ionii, Navaira, and Cirteſii, taking up all the Sea-coaſts of Numidia. Such as inhabited more Southwards on the back of theſe, not ſo much conſiderable: none of them to be ſtaid upon, but the Libyæ-Phœnices, a mixt people of the old Libyans, and new Phœnicians, as the Liby-Ægyptii were of the ſaid Libyans and the neighbouring Egyptians. The memory of all of them ſo defaced by the violent inundation of the Arabians, that there is ſcarce any tract, or footſteps of them in all the Countrey. When conquered by the Saracens, they were at firſt ſubject to the Caliph, or Sultan of Cairoan: after the ſpoil whereof by the Arabians, ſubdued by Abdul Mumen King of Morocco, and by him added to that Kingdom. In the diſtractions of that State, made a peculiar Kingdom by ſome one of the Relicks of the Stock of the Almohades, who took unto himſelf the title of King of Tunis, that City being his chief Seat. By him tranſmitted unto his poſterity, till the dayes of our Grandfathers; when Muleaſſes, one of the youngeſt Sons of Sultan Mahomet, having firſt murdered Maimon his eldeſt Brother, and put out the eyes of twenty of the reſt, uſurped the Soveraignty. Roſetta, the only one of thoſe Princes who eſcaped this Maſſacre, upheld a while by the Arabians, and by them deſerted, was fain to put himſelf into the hands of Barbaraſſa, King of Algieres, and Admiral of the Turkiſh Navy; by whom he was carried to Conſtantinople, and ſo preſented to Solyman, who under colour of reſtoring him to the Throne of his Fathers, conquered that Kingdom for himſelf; outed thereof not long after by Charles the fifth, appearing in favour of Muleaſſes, Anno 1535. But the Tyrant did not long enjoy his ill-gotten Soveraignty, when his eyes were alſo put out by his own ſon Amida, and ſo committed to cloſe priſon, Nor did Amida enjoy it long, diſpoſſeſſed by Abdamelech his Fathers Brother. To Abdamelech. Mahomet his ſon ſucceeded: who being a child, and by affairs ill-governed by his Tutors, and other Miniſters of State, gave opportunity to Amida to regain the Kingdom. During which Broyls, the Turks again recovered footing, poſſeſſed themſelves of a great part of the Countrey, and forced Arayda into Exile, who flying to Don John of Auſtria, then newly victorious at Lepanto, invited him to the conqueſt of Tunis, but he got little by the bargain; for Don John having ſubdued the Kings, conferred the ſame on Mahomet the Brother of Amida, and carried Amida in bonds to the Iſle of Sicily, where he after died. Nor did Mahomet enjoy it long, for the next year the Turks beſieged and took the City of Tunis, with the ſtrong Fort of Galetta, with all the other Forts and holds of that Kingdom, made ever ſince a Province of the Turkiſh Empire; The poor King being carried priſoner to Conſtantinople at the end of the war, which was in the year 1574. and the laſt of Selymus the ſecond.

2. TREMESEN, or ALGIERS.

THe Kingdom of TREMESEN is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Ampſaga, (now called Major) by which parted from the Kingdom of Tunis; on the Weſt, with the Kingdoms of Feſſe and Morocco, from which ſeparated by the River Malutha, or Malva. So called from Tremeſen, or Teleuſine, the chief City of it. Called alſo the Kingdom of Algiers, from the City ſo named, ſomtimes the Seat Royal of their Kings.

In the flouriſh of the Roman Empire, it had the name of Mauritania Cæſarienſis: Mauritania, becauſe a part of the Kingdom of Juba King of Mauritania, of which more anon; Cæſarienſis, from Cæſarea the chief City of it, as that ſo called in honour of Auguſtus Cæſar, on whom the Kings hereof depended. More anciently the Kingdom of the Maſæſyli, one of the moſt powerful Nations in all this Tract, over whom reigned Syphax before mentioned, called therefore by Strabo, Maſæſylilia, with good propriety; and corruptedly, Maſſylia.

The Kingdom extended in length from Eaſt to Weſt, for the ſpace of 380 miles, but of breadth not anſwerable; Is generally of the ſame nature (as to the Soyl and Ayr) with the reſt of Barbary: ſufficiently fruitful towards the Sea, more barren and uncomfortable in the Southern parts. But meanly peopled, by reaſon of the continual ſpoyls made by the Arabians, who poſſeſs the Deſarts; and the Cities of it much waſted by continual wars. Nor have the people any peculiar Character, but what belongeth to others of theſe Africans alſo.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Guagyda, inconveniently ſeated, as paying their accuſtomed Tributes to the King of T*remeſen*, their natural Prince; and contribution to the Arabians, who are here ſo numerous and powerful, that the Kings themſelves of this ſmall Kingdom were fain to buy their peace of them at exceſſive Rates. 2. T*igedent*, ſomtimes famous, and abounding with men of Learning; now almoſt forſaken, by reaſon of the ill neighbourhood of theſe Arabians. 3. T*ebocrit*, inhabited for the moſt part by Weavers. 4. Breſch, the Inhabitants whereof uſe to paint a black Croſs on their cheek, and another on the palm of their hands: the reaſon of which cuſtom they are ignorant of, but ſome conceive it to be a remembrance of their Chriſtianity. 5. Ned-Roma, built as the people do pretend, by the ancient Romans, as an Epitome, or Abridgment of that mighty City, to which it is ſaid to have ſome reſemblance; and that imported by the name, which ſignifieth in their Language, Like to Rome. Perhaps the ſame which Ptolomy calleth Novum oppidum, or the New-Town, then a Roman Colony. 6. Batha, once a great City, ſince decayed by wars. 7. Oran, a noted Haven on the Mediterranean, ſaid to contain no fewer than 10000 Families. Powerful at Sea, and much infeſting with their Gallies the coaſts of Spain; till taken for Ferdinand the Catholick by Peter of Navar, An. 1506. ſince which time peopled and poſſeſſed by the Spaniards: In vain beſieged by the Turks, An. 1562. 8. Maſalquivir, a fair and capacious Haven on the ſame Sea alſo, and taken by the ſaid Peter of Navar, about the ſame time. 9. Hareſgol, in former times of much eſteem amongſt the Moors; but being deſtroyed by the King, or Sultan of Cairoan, it bequeathed his greatneſs unto Tremeſen, which after grew into renown. 10. Tremeſen, once adorned with many beautiful Moſques, and five ſumptuous Colledges, curiouſly wrought with Moſaick work. So populous, that there were reckoned in it 16000 Families, and ſo well fortified, that it held out ſeven years againſt Joſeph the great King of Feſſe: not taken after that, though they were very much weakned by Abulthaſen, or Albohacen his ſon Succeſſor, under a ſiege of 30 moneths. By thoſe, and the ſucceeding troubles it hath undergone, exceedingly impaired both in ſtrength and beauty. More ancient, 11. Siga, an African City, and a Roman Colony; the retiring place of Syphax and Bocchus, ſomtimes Kings of this Countrey. 12. Arſenaria, another Colony of the Romans. 13. Jol, the Seat-Royal of King Bocchus, after ſuch time as this Countrey was conferred upon him by the Romans, on the taking of Jugurth, called afterwards Cæſarea, in honour of Auguſtus Cæſar, whoſe Feudatories the Kings hereof were then accounted; or as ſome ſay, in honour of Claudius Cæſar, by whom made a Colony: the Metropolis of it alſo when a Roman Province, which from hence was called Cæſarienſis. Situate in or near the place where Oran now ſtands, which ſeemeth to have riſen out of the ruines of it. 14. Salda, a Roman Colony alſo, out of whoſe ruines roſe Algiers. 15. Algiers, by the Arabians called Gezeir, now the chief City of this Kingdom, ſituate near the Sea, in the form of a Triangle, with an Haven to it; but neither great, nor ſafe from the North-winds, which do much annoy it. The buildings very beautiful; the publick Inns, Bathes, and Moſques, exceeding ſumptuous, every Trade having a ſeveral place, or ſtreet by it ſelf. But that which is the greateſt grace of it, is the ſituation of the Houſes ſtanding in even ſtreets one above another, upon the riſing of a ſteep Hill; ſo that the Windows of one ſtreet, or row of houſing do all along over-look the tops of the other next beneath, which yieldeth to the Sea a moſt pleaſant proſpect. A City not ſo large, as ſtrong; and not ſo ſtrong, as famous. Famous for being the Receptacle and retrait-place of the Turkiſh Pirates, who domineer ſo infinitely over the Mediterranean, to the great dammage of the Merchants of all Nations, that frequent thoſe Seas. Famous alſo for the ſhipwrack which Charles the fifth here ſuffered, who beſieging this Town, loſt in the Haven of it at one Tempeſt, beſides an infinite number of Karvels and ſmall Boats, divers ſtrong Gallies, 140 Ships, a great many excellent pieces of Ordnance, ſuch a number of gallant Horſes, that in Spain the race of Horſes for ſervice had like to have been loſt for ever; and above half his men. It long enjoyed the benefit of proprietary Princes (but Homagers, or Tributaries to the Kings of Tremeſen) till ſuch time as Selimes, and Mahomet, falling out, made the firſt, and that an irreparable breach in the Government. For Selimes, to ſtrengthen his ſide, implored the aid of Hairaccius Barbaroſſa a noble Pirate, who taking his beſt advantage, ſlew the disjoynted brethren, and ſetled himſelf in the Kingdom: which he had ſcarce made warm, when he left it to Hairadine Barbaroſſa his Brother, An. 1514. This Hairadine drove the Spaniards out of Bugia, and was ſo renowned for Martial proweſs, that Solyman the magnificent made him Lord High Admiral of his Fleet: which Office, when to the prejudice of Chriſtendom he had fortunately and for long time undergone, he died lamented, and made the Turk the Heir of his Kingdom, the Kingdom of Tremeſen being made ſubject to the Turks much about that time. 16. Tetuan, and 17. Sargel, ſituate Weſtward of Algiers, towns of Trade and Pyracy.

The old Inhabitants of this Kingdom, when a Roman Province, were the Herpiditani, Taladuſii, Thaluſſii, Malchubii, Maccurebi, Chituæ, and others of as little note; the moſt predominant Nation being the Maſæſyli, over whom (and in that over all the reſt) reigned Syphax, ſpoken of before, unfortunately famous for his tragical love to Sophonisba: for whoſe ſake ſiding with the Carthaginians againſt the Romans, he was vanquiſhed and ſent priſoner to Rome. His Kingdom given to Maſiniſſa King of the Numidians, continued in his line till the death of Jugurth, and then beſtowed upon the Kings of Mauritania, part of whoſe Kingdom it was reckoned in the following times, till made a Province of the Empire by the Emperor Claudius. Won from the Romans by the Vandals, and then by the Saracens, it followed the fortunes of theſe laſt, while they ſtood and flouriſhed: But growing into many diſtractions, and every Sultan, or Provincial Governour ſhifting for himſelf, it became a Kingdom, under the ſtile and title of the Kingdom of T*remeſen*. The Majeſty of it much impaired by Abulthaſen, or Albohacen King of Feſſe, who brought it, not long after, under his command. Recovering after ſome ſhort time its former liberty, it became a Kingdom once again, and ſo continued till the time of Abuchemen: who incurring the hatred of his people, becauſe by his ſupine neglect the Spaniards had ſurpriſed and taken Oran and Maſalquivir, their two beſt Havens; made an eaſie paſſage for his brother Abuzeiden to the Regal diadem. Abuzeiden ſcarce well ſetled, loſt it to Hairadine Barbaroſo, Anno 1515. and he to Charles the fifth, by whom Abuchemen was reſtored, becoming Homager and Tributary to the Crown of Spain. But his ſucceſſor Abdulla, weary of the Spaniſh ſervitude, put himſelf under the protection of Solyman the magnificent, as a Prince of his own Religion; to whom at his deceaſe, he left the poſſeſſion of his Kingdom alſo; ever ſince ſubject to the Turks: whoſe Beglerbeg or Supreme Officer for theſe African Provinces, reſides for the moſt part in Algiers, and hath 40000 Timariots under his command.

3. FESSE, & 4. MOROCCO.

THeſe Kingdoms I have joyned in title, becauſe united for the moſt part in the ſtory and affairs thereof, and of late times making but one entire Eſtate under the Xeriffes of Morocco: and therefore handled both together in the point of Hiſtory, though of a different conſideration in the way of Chorographie.

They contain in them the whole Country of Mauritania, truly and properly ſo called; divided anciently into Tingitana, and Sitifenſis; Cæſarienſis being naturally a Numidian Region, the Maſæſyli and the reſt of the Inhabitants of it, of Numidian breed; not laid to Mauritania, nor accompted any part thereof, till the death of Jugurth; when given to Bocchus King hereof, in reward of his treaſon, for betraying that unhappy Prince into the hands of the Romans.

It took this name from the Mauri, the Inhabitants of it, when that name firſt given; the word Tania, ſignifying a Nation, being added to it; as in Britannia, Luſitania, Aquitania, and perhaps ſome others; and the name of Mauri given them ἀπὸ τοῦ Μαύρου, which ſignifieth amongſt other things obſcure or black, by reaſon of the darkneſs of their complexion. Accompted in their times, an hardy, but a bloody people; careleſs of life, fearleſs of death; implacable, if once offended, their thirſt of revenge not to be quenched but by blood. Mauri ſunt genus hominum ſuapte natura cædis avidiſſimum, nihilque non facile audens, & deſperatis ſimiles, contemptu, viz. mortis & periculorum. A character given of them in Herodians time, and it holds good ſtill: notwithſtanding the intermixture of Goths and Saracens incorporated into the ſame nation with them, and paſſing by the ſame name in the Writers of the middle time. Poſt hac Mauri totam Hiſpaniam & Provinciam Burgundiam, &c. dominio ſuo manciparunt, as my Author hath it; where by Moors we are to underſtand the Saracens, which came out of Africk.

Chief Mountains of this Country, 1. Atlas Minor, ſo called, to difference it from the greater Mountain of that name, from which it is ſeven degrees more North, but ſhooteth, as that doth, with a point or Promontory into the main Atlantick Ocean, on the South of Salla. 2. Durdus, extended alſo into Cæſarienſis. 3. Diur. 4. Phocra, of which little memorable. Rivers of moſt note, 1. Sala. 2. Subur, 3. Zilia, 4. Phuth, 5. Diur, 6. Cuſa; all falling into the Atlantick: this laſt the ſame, as I conjecture, which our modern Writers call Ommirabili. And for the reſt, we muſt find amongſt them, 1. Siſelmel, 2. Tenſift. 3. Niffis, the names of the chief Rivers, as at this time called.

The old Inhabitants hereof in the time of the Romans, were the Metagonitæ neer the Streits, giving name unto Metagonitis an adjoyning Promontory; the Succoſii, Verbicæ, Nectiberes, Vacuatæ, Voli; and on the Eaſt-ſide the Mauruſii: Theſe laſt participating of that common name, in which all united. Called by the Latines, Mauri; by the Greeks, Mauruſii: The Etymologie as before. Their deſcent originally from Phut, the ſon of Cham; whoſe memory preſerved here in the River Phut. To that, the coming of the Chanaanites, of the ſame extraction, ſerved but as an Acceſſory. From thoſe two fountains ſprang the whole Nation of the Mauri. Governed by Kings; the moſt conſiderable of which, when firſt known to the Romans, was that Bocchus, who betrayed Jugurth his friend and ſon in law, into the hands of the Romans: gratified for that treachery with the Country of the Maſæſyli, (reckoned for part of Mauritania from that time forwards) as Hiempſal one of his ſons was, not long after, with the Kingdom of Numidia. The whole Eſtates of Bocchus, Syphax and Maſiniſſa united by this means in the perſon of Juba, one of his poſterity; the moſt potent Prince of all theſe parts: who falling in the African war againſt Julius Cæſar, Numidia was forthwith made a Province of the Roman Empire; Criſpus Saluſtius being made the firſt Governour of it. But Mauritania, extending at that time from the Ocean to the River Ampſagus, he gave to Bocchus, and Bogud, two of his Confederates, but deſcended of the old Regal family. Bogud unluckily taking part with Mark Antony againſt Auguſtus, was by Bocchus, who declared for the other ſide, diſpoſſeſſed of his part, (that which now makes the Kingdom of Feſſe;) in which confirmed for his good ſervice, by the conquering Emperour. Juba, the ſon of the former Juba, grown famous for his eminent learning, was of a Priſoner made a Prince: inveſted after the death of Bocchus in all the Dominions of his father, except Numidia: and by the bounty of Auguſtus, a great Patron of Learning, advanced to the marriage of Selene, daughter of Antony and Cleopatra. After whoſe death, and the death of Ptolomy their ſon, murdered by Caligula, Mauritania was by Claudius added to the patrimony of the Roman Empire: divided into two Provinces, viz. Cæſarienſis, betwixt the two Rivers Malva and Ampſaga, now the Kingdom of Tremenſen; and Tingitana, from the River Malva to the Weſtern Ocean. This laſt divided into Tingitana, and Sitifenſis, (the River now called Ommirabili being the boundary betwixt them) by the Emperour Conſtantine: who leaving Sitifenſis to the Dioceſe of Africk. laid Tingitania (why I know not) unto that of Spain. Gained from the Romans by the Goths, after by the Saracens; they became members of thoſe Empires; in the declining of the laſt, divided into the two Kingdoms of Feſſe and Morocco, to the deſcription and hiſtory whereof we do now proceed.

3. MOROCCO.

THe Kingdom of MOROCCO hath on the Eaſt the River Malva,by which parted from Tremeſen; on the Weſt, the Atlantick Ocean; on the South, Mount Atlas; and on the North the Kingdom of Feſſe, So called from Morocco, the chief City of it; in former times known by the name of Mauritania Sitifenſis. from Sitiphis, in thoſe times the principal City, as Procopius telleth us.

The Countrey ſaid to be fruitful of all things neceſſary to life, pleaſing to the ſight, and ſweet to ſmell to: particularly, well ſtored with Grain and Pulſe, plentiful of Oyl, Honey and Sugar, liberally furniſhed with Dates, Grapes, Figs, Apples, Pears, and all ſorts of fruits: exceedingly well ſtocked with Cattel, but with Goats eſpecially; whoſe skins afford a very excellent kind of leather, and of their fleece materials for the fineſt Chamlets, which are here made in moſt of their Cities. The whole Country divided commonly into theſe ſeven parts, viz. 1. Guzzula, 2. Sus, 3. Morocco ſpecially ſo called, 4. Hea, 5. Haſcora, 6. Duccala, and 7. Tedles.

1. GUZZULA, the moſt Southern Province of this Kingdom, hath on the Eaſt, ſome part of Tremeſen; on the Weſt, Sus or Suſa, from which parted by a ridge of Mountains called Ilda; on the South Mount Atlas; and on the North, part of the territory of Morocco, and the reſt of Suſa. The Countrey rich in Mines of Braſs, Iron, and other metals,of which are made many Vtenſils for domeſtick uſes, exported hence into other places.

The People Barbarous and rude, not eaſily acknowledging ſubjection to the Kings of Morocco; and at continual wars amongſt themſelves, except only for two moneths in the year; which being the time of their publike Marts, and then much viſited with Strangers from other Countries, they lay aſide their private quarrels, and cheerfully entertain ſuch Merchants as repair unto them. Walled Towns here are not any,but ſome very great Villages: the chief whereof, 1. Guzzula, on the Northern bank of the River Sus, whence the name of the Province. 2. Tagreſſa, not far off, but on the other ſide of the water, towards the foot of Mount Atlas. 3. Tedza, inclining towards the borders of Morocco. Of theſe nothing memorable.

2. Weſt of Guzzula, lieth the Province of SUS or SUSA, ſo called from the River Sus, (with which well watered) or giving name to it. Rich in Gold-Mines, the cauſe of continual wars amongſt the people: well ſtored with Sugar-Canes, which the Inhabitants know neither how to boil nor purifie; and on the Sea-ſhores, furniſhed with great plenty of Amber, bought by the Portugals of the people at an eaſie rate. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Cape D'Aguer, on a Promontory ſo called; a place of ſuch importance to the Portugals, that the taking of it by Mahomet then King of Sus (after of Morocco alſo) made them quit all the Forts which they had in this Countrey. 2. Tagavaſt, a rich and wealthy Town; the greateſt in the Province, and ſituate in a large plain near the foot of Mount Atlas. 3. Teijent, ſituate in a ſpacious Plain alſo, but on the Banks of the River Sus: divided into three parts, each a mile from the other; which joyned together, make the exact figure of a Triangle. 4. Meſſa, or Maſſa, ſeated at the influx of the ſaid River, on the Promontory called Cape Gilon; three Towns in one: not much the better for the Sea, and but ill befriended by the Land, as ſeated in a barren and unpleaſing ſoil; remarkable for a fair Temple, the beams and rafters of which are made of the bones of Whales, which uſually are left dead on the ſhore. 5. Tarodant, a large Town, built by the Africans,before the conqueſt of this Countrey by the Goths or Saracens: the Reſidence of the Vice-Roy for the Kings of Feſſe, when the Lords of this Kingdom; but more enriched of late by the Merchants of France and England, who have here a Staple for their Sugars. By this Commerce,the people made more civil than in other parts of this Province: the whole number of them thought to amount to 3000 families. 6. Tedza, more within the land, bigger than Taradant, but leſs wealthy; the chief Ornament of it being a fair Mahometan Temple, liberally furniſhed with Prieſts and Readers of that Law,at the common charge. Not far from hence the Hill Anchiſa, where it ſnoweth at all ſeaſons of the year, and yet the people go extreme thin in the ſharpeſt Winter. Nothing elſe memorable of this Province, but that a little before the Xeriffe made himſelf King of Morocco, it had the title of a Kingdom; and gave the title of King to Mahomet the ſecond Xeriffe, made King of Taradant or Sus, before he diſpoſſeſſed his brother of the Crown of Morocco.

3. Northward of Sus, lieth the Province of MOROCCO, ſpecially ſo called, the moſt fruitful and beſt peopled part of Barbary; not much unlike to Lombardy in wealth, and pleaſures; the very Hills hereof as fruitful as the Vallies in other places. To which fertility of the ſoil, the Rivers, 1. Tenſift, and 2. Aſifinuad, give no ſmall advantage; though much defaced by the frequent incurſions of the Portugals, who have extreamly ſpoiled this Country. Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Delgumaba, built upon a very high Mountain, and environed with many other Hills; at the foot whereof the Fountain of Aſifinuad. 2. Elgiumba, a ſmall but ancient Town, on the River Siſſeva. 3. Teſraſt, a ſmall Town upon Aſifinuad. 4. Imizmizi, ſituate on a Rock, ſpacious, and ſeated neer the entrance of a narrow way leading into Guzzala. 5. Tenezze, an old Town, but very well fortified. 6. Agnet, upon the River Tenſift, all ruined except the Fort, and ſome ſcattered houſes: formerly ſecond unto none but Morocco, (from which diſtant 24 miles;) the Hills and Valley about it adorned with pleaſant Gardens, fruitful Vineyards, a fair River, and Fields ſo fertile, that they yield a fifty fold increaſe. 7. Secſina, where they have ſnow at all times of the year. 8. Temnella, an Heretical Town, differing in opinion from the reſt of the Mahometan Sect; and ſo well-grounded in their Tenets, that they challenge all their Oppoſites to a Diſputation. 9. Hantera, very full of Jews. 10. Morocco, the principal of this Province, and of all the Kingdom, ſituate in or near the place where once ſtood the Bocanum Hemerum of Ptolomy. Once reckoned amongſt the greateſt Cities of the World, at what time it was ſaid to contain 100000 families: ſince ſo defaced and waſted by the depredations of the Arabians, and the removal of the Seat-Royal to Feſſe, when that Kingdom was in the Aſcendent, that it is hardly a third part ſo great as formerly. The founder of it Joſeph, ſirnamed Teleſinus, the ſecond King of the houſe of the Almoravides; but much enlarged and beautified by Abdul-Mumen, one of his ſucceſſors. The principal buildings in it, are the Church and the Caſtle: the Church or Moſque; one of the greateſt in the World, adorned with many ſumptuous pillars, brought out of Spain, when the Mores had the poſſeſſion of that Country: and beautified with a ſtately Steeple, in compaſs at the bottom an hundred yards, and of ſo great height, that the Hills of Azati (one of the branches of the Leſſer Atlas) being 130 miles diſtant, may be thence eaſily diſcerned: the Caſtle very large, and ſtrong, on a Tower whereof ſtand three Globes made of pure Gold, weighing 130000 Barbary Duckets: which divers Kings have gone about to take down, and convert into money, but all deſiſted in regard of ſome croſs accident or other which befel them in it; inſomuch that the common people think them to be guarded with ſpirits.

4. North of Morocco, on the further ſide of Tenſift and Aſiſinnad, is the Province of HEA: rough, mountainous, and woody, yet watered with many pleaſant Rils, and would be plentiful enough in all commodities, if the induſtry of the people were not wanting to it. A ſort of people little better than meerly barbarous, without all Artiſts, either Ingenious or Mechanick; except ſome Chirurgeans, whom they keep to circumciſe their Children; and ſome few Teachers of their Law, which can hardly read. Their food a Pap made of Barley-meal, which in ſtead of Spoons, they claw forth with their fingers; the Ground they eat on, ſerving for table, ſtools and napkins. At endleſs feud with one another; yet ſo kind to ſtrangers, that in one of their chief Towns, called Tedneſt, the Gentlemen uſed to caſt lots who ſhould entertain them. A town of good eſteem in former times, ſituate in a large Plain on the River Tenſift; but in the year 1514. almoſt wholly abandoned, upon a rumor that the Arabians had a purpoſe to ſell it to the Portugals, 2. Teculeth, ſeated on a good Port, and once very well traded, there being in it at that time 1000 families, ſome Hoſpitals, and a beautiful Moſque; in the year 1514. deſtroyed by the Portugals. 3. Tenent, a Sea-town in the hands of the Portugals. 4. Elmuridin, a ſtrong peece, as the name importeth, the word ſignifying the Diſciples Fort, ſo called, becauſe a certain Heretick in the Law of Mahomet (whereof this Kingdom yields good plenty) retired hither with his Diſciples; fortified it and defended it againſt the King of Morocco. 5. Iguillinguiguil, ſeated on the top of an hill, and fortified, by the Country-people (or old African-Moors) againſt the Arabians, 6. Teſethne, beautified with a pretty Haven, but not capable of any great ſhipping. 7. Tagleſſe, a Den of Thieves and Cutthroats. 8. Teſegdelt; as courteous and civil, as the other barbarous; At the Gates whereof a Guard is ſet for entertainment of Strangers: whom, if they have no acquaintance there, they are to provide of Accommodation in ſome Gentlemans houſe, where it coſts them nothing but thanks, and ſome kind acknowledgment.

5. Northwards of Hea, ſtands the Province of DUCALA, bounded on the Weſt, with the main Atlantick; and on the North, with the River Ommirobili, by which parted from the Kingdom of Feſſe. Of three dayes journey long, about two in breadth; thruſting into the Ocean with a craggy Promontory, which ſome of the Ancients called Ulagium, others the Promontory of the Sun; but by the Chriſtians of Europe called the Cape of Cantin; by the Moors, Gebelelhudic. Populous enough, the quality of the men conſidered; ignorant both of letters and of all good manners: Yet not ſo populous as it hath been in former times, much of the Country being abandoned for fear of the Portugals; who have taken all their beſt towns on the Sea-coaſt, and deſtroyed the reſt. Amongſt theſe, 1. Azaſi, at the foot of the hills ſo called; ſurpriſed by the Portugals, under colour of making a Storehouſe for their Merchandiſe. 2. Azame, ſeated at the mouth of the River Ommirobili, the furtheſt town of this Kingdom towards that of Feſſe; the people whereof were extremely addicted unto Sodomy, till ſubdued by the Portugeze. 3. Elmedina, once the Metropolis of this Province; but now for fear of thoſe Invaders, in a manner deſolated, 4. Conte of the foundation of the Gothes, 5. Tic, built by the old African Moors, but poſſeſſed by the Portugals, 6. Subeit, 7. Teneracoſt, 8. Centpuis, 9. Terga, 10. Bulahuan; all ſacked and ruined by the ſame people, when they took Azomor (the Key of this Province) which was in the year 1513. At which time it is ſaid, that Mahomet King of Feſſe paſſing through this Province with an Army, to repreſs theſe inſolencies, at every Altar (whereof here are many in the Roads) kneeled, and ſaid unto this effect: Lord, thou knoweſt that the cauſe of my coming into this wild place, is onely to free this people of Duccola from the rebellious and wicked Arabians, and their cruel Enemies the Chriſtians, which purpoſe, if thou doeſt not approve of, let the puniſhment fall upon my perſon, but not upon my followers, who deſerve it not. With greater piety, than could be looked for from a blind Mahometan.

6. Eaſtward of Duccala, along the banks of Ommirobili, lieth the Province of HASCORA, a fruitful Country, intermixt of rich fields and pleaſant gardens: furniſhed with moſt ſorts of choiſeſt fruits; and amongſt others, Grapes of ſuch extraordinary greatneſs, that they are ſaid to be as big as a Pullets egg. Good ſtore of Honey it hath alſo, and ſome Mines of Iron: Inhabited by a more civil people than any of the reſt, and conſequently more deſerving ſo rich a ſoil. Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Ezo, an old town, ſituate on a lofty mountain, 2. Elvinina, of a later erection. Alemdine, conquered for the King of Feſſe by a Merchant, whoſe Paramour the Prince or Governour hereof had taken from him: Situate in a pleaſant, but little Valley, but begirt with hills, and well inhabited by Gentlemen, Merchants, and Artificers, 4. Tagodaſt, on the top of an hill, environed with four others of equal height.

7. More Eaſt, betwixt Haſcora and the River Malva, is the Province of TEDLES, bounded on the Eaſt, with the Kingdom of Tremeſen; and on the North, with that of Feſſe: from which laſt parted by the River Servi, which on the North-eaſt border of it meets with Ommirobili. The whole Province in form triangular, of no great either length or breadth, but ſufficiently fruitful, and well inhabited for the bigneſs. Some Towns it hath, and thoſe not meanly populous for ſo ſmall a Province; the chief whereof, 1. Teſza, built by the old African Moors, and beautified with many Mahometan Moſques; the walls of which made of a kinde of Marble, which they here call Teſza, whence the name of the Town. 2. Eſza, ſeated on the River Ommirobili, where it receiveth that of Deyme; which riſing out of Atlas Minor, and paſſing by Teſza laſt mentioned, doth here loſe its name. 3. Chythite, renowned for the ſtout reſiſtance, which it hath made from time to time againſt thoſe of Feſſe. 4. Ethiad, abounding in all ſorts of victuals.

Theſe Provinces make up the Kingdom of Morocco: infeſted miſerably while it remained ſubject to the Kings of Feſſe, by the Portugals on the one ſide, and the wilde Arabians on the other. Concerning which laſt people we are to know, that when the Saracens conquered Africk, they contented themſelves with the command, and left unto the Natives the poſſeſſion of it, forbidding the Arabians (with whoſe courſe of life they were well acquainted) to paſs over Nilus. Elcain, the laſt of the Succeſſors of Hucba in the Kingdom of Cairoan, having ſubdued the reſt of Africk, and added it unto his Eſtate, paſſed forwards into Egypt, which he conquered alſo; aſſuming to himſelf the title of Caliph: But in his abſence, the Lieutenant, whom he left in Africk, rebelled againſt him; and acknowledging the Caliph of Bagdet for his lawful Lord, received of him for this good ſervice, the Kingdom of Africa. Deſpairing to recover his loſt Eſtate, and yet not willing that it ſhould be uſeful unto his Enemies, he licenced the Arabians for a Ducat a man, to paſs over the Nile with their Tents and Families. On which agreement, almoſt half the Tribes of Arabia Deſerta, and many of Arabia Felix, went into Africa; where they ſacked Tripolis, Cairoan, and the reſt of the principal Cities: tyrannizing over all Barbary, till reſtrained at laſt by Joſeph the founder of Morocco, (of whom more hereafter.) Since which time, though they loſt their unlimited Empire, yet they ſtill ſwarm like Locuſts over all the Countrey; and neither apply themſelves to tillage, or building houſes, or any civil courſe of life; nor ſuffer thoſe to live in quiet, who would otherwiſe manure and improve the Countrey. The reſt of the Story of theſe Kingdoms we ſhall have anon, when we have taken a Survey of the Kingdom of Feſſe.

4. FESSE.

THe Kingdom of FESSE is bounded on the South, with the Realm of Morocco, on the North, with parts of the Atlantick, and Mediterranean; on the Eaſt, with Malva, parting it from the Kingdom of Tremeſen; and on the Weſt, with the Atlantick wholly.

It takes this name from Feſſe the chief City of it. Known to the ancients by the name of Mauritania Tingitana, ſo called from the City Tingis (now Tanger) then of greateſt note. Called alſo Hiſpania Transfretana, Spain on the other ſide of the Sea, becauſe a part of that Dioceſe: and by ſome (Pliny amongſt others) Bogudiania, from Bogud one of the Kings hereof, to whom given by Caſar: by others Ampeluſia, from its abundance of Vines. The Inhabitants of it, by the Spaniards, now called Alarbes.

The Countrey of good temperature in regard of the aire, if not in ſome places of the coldeſt: but very unequally diſpoſed of in reſpect of the earth; here being in it many Deſarts and large Forreſts, not well inhabited; but intermixt with many rich and delightful Fields. So that taking the eſtimate in the groſs, it may be ſaid to be a rich and flouriſhing Countrey, hardly inferior unto any. The particularities of which are to be conſidered in the Characters of the ſeveral Provinces, into which it now doth ſtand divided, that is to ſay, 1. Temeſna. 2. Feſſe, ſpecially ſo called, 3. Elchaus, or Chaus, 4. Garet, 5. Algara. 6. Erriffe, and 7. Habat.

1. TEMESNA hath on the South, the River Ommirabili, on the Weſt, the Ocean; extended in length from Weſt to Eaſt 80 miles, and in breadth 70. A champain Countrey, very level; and once ſo populous, that it contained 40 Cities, and 300 Caſtles; moſt of them ruined by the wars, and the wilde Arabians, the greater deſtroyer of the two. The principal of thoſe remaining. 1. Teyeget, near the River Ommirabili, once of greater note, but now inhabited onely by poor people, and a few Smiths compelled to live there for the making of Iron-inſtruments to manure the land. 2. Thagia, on the courſe of the ſaid River; much viſited by thoſe of Feſſe, for the Sepulchre of an holy Prophet, who was there interred; the Feſſans going thither in pilgrimage with ſuch numbers of men, women and children, that their Tents ſeem ſufficient to lodge an Army. 3. Adendun, more towards the Sea, but on a ſmall River called Guirla; well walled, and fenced on one ſide by a Lake, or Pool. 4. Amſa, on the ſhore of the Atlantick, once of great Trade, and well frequented, both by the Engliſh and the Portugals, by which laſt deſtroyed. 5. Munſor, deſtroyed in like manner by the wilde Arabians. 6. Nuchaida, ſituate in ſo fertile and rich a ſoil; that the inhabitants would have given a Camels burden of Corn for a pair of ſhooes. Nothing now left of it but one Steeple, and a piece of the wall. 7. Rabut, or Rubut, built by Manſor, or Almanſor, a King of Morocco, near the mouth of the River Burugrug; and by him made one of the beſt peopled Towns in Africk: built after the model of Morocco, but now ſo waſted, that there are not in it above 500 families; moſt of the ground within the walls being turned into Meadows, Vine-yards, and Gardens. 8. Fanzara, on the River Subu, the Subur of Ptolomy, falling not far off into the other. 9. Mahmora, in the ſame tract alſo, once poſſeſſed by the Spaniards; near which the Portugals received a great defeat by the King of Feſſe, for want of good intelligence betwixt them and the Caſtilians. 10. Sala, the Sala of Ptolomy, by the Inhabitants called Zale, in ordinary Maps by miſtaking, Cale; at the mouth of the River Rebata, which the ancient Writers called Sala, as they named the Town. Beautified by King Almanſor (who is here interred) with a ſtately Palace, a goodly Hoſpital, a fair Temple, and an Hall of Marble, cut in Moſaick works: intended for the burial-place of his poſterity. A Town much traded formerly by the Chriſtian Merchants of England, Flanders, Genoa, and the Golf of Venice. Took by the Spaniards, An.1287. and within ten dayes loſt again: and of late times made a neſt of Pirates, as dangerous to thoſe which ſailed in the Ocean, as the Pirates of Algiers to the Mediterranean. Whoſe Inſolencies the King of Morocco not able to ſuppreſs for want of ſhipping, deſired the Aid of his Majeſty Charles, King of Great Britain: by whom the Town being blocked up by Sea, and beſieged to the Landward by the King of Morocco, it was at laſt compelled to yield; the works thereof diſmantled, the Pirates executed, and 300 Chriſtian Captives ſent unto His Majeſty, to be by him reſtored to their former Liberty; to the great honour of his Majeſty, and the Engliſh Nation, An. 1632.

As for the fortunes of this Province, they have been ſomwhat different from the reſt of this Kingdom trained by a factious Prophet to revolt from the King of Feſſe and Morocco, whoſe Eſtate they very much endangered; ſending an Army of 50000 men to the Gates of Morocco; but being diſcomfited by Joſeph, ſirnamed Telephinus, he followed them into their own Country, which he waſted with great cruelty for ten moneths together; conſuming above a Million of them, and leaving the Province to the mercy of Wolves and Lions. Repeopled afterwards by Almanſor with Arabian Colonies: Given about fifty years after that, by the Princes of the Marine Family, to more civil Inhabitants; by whom the Arabians were expelled, and the Province conſequently reduced into ſome good order.

2. Weſtward of Temeſna lieth the Province of FESSE, properly and ſpecially ſo called. Extended in length from the River Burugrug, to the River Inavis, for the ſpace of 100 miles. A very fruitful Province, well ſtored with Cattel, and exceeding populous; the Villages hereof as big as the better ſort of Towns in other places: but contrary to the cuſtom of other Countreys, better inhabited on the hils than amongſt the Vallies; the people making choyce of the Mountains for their habitation, as places of defence and ſafety, but husbanding the vallies which lie neareſt to them. Places of moſt conſideration in it, 1. Macarmeda, on the River Inavis, in a goodly plain, but in a manner all ruined, except the Walls. 2. Gualili, memorable for the Sepulchre of Idris, the firſt Founder of Feſſe. 3. Peitra Roſſa, where they have ſome Lyons ſo tame, that they will gather up bones in the ſtreets like Dogs, without hurting any body. 4. Agla, where they have brought their Lyons to ſo ſtrange a cowardiſe, that they will run away at the voyce of a child; whence a Bracchadochio is called proverbially a Lyon of Agata. 5. Pharao, by reaſon of the name, thought by the vulgar to be founded by ſome King of Egypt; but the Latine Inſcriptions therein found, declare it to have been ſome work of the ancient Romans. 6. Maquille, of more antiquity than note. 7. Feſſe, the Metropolis of this Province, and the chief of the Kingdom, ſuppoſed to be the Volabilis of Ptolomy, but much enlarged and beautified by ſome new Acceſſions. Situate for the moſt part upon little hillocks, and watered by a pleaſant and gentle River (derived by Aquaducts and Conduits, into all parts of the City) which they now call the River of Feſſe, conceived by ſome learned men to be that which was anciently called Phuth, from Phut the firſt Planter of the African Nations. A City ſo beautiful and well ſeated, as if Nature and Art had played the Wantons, and brought this forth as the fruit of their dalliance. The Founder or Enlarger of it, one of the Race of the falſe Prophet Mahomet, his name Idris, who built on the Eaſt-ſide of the River; that on the Weſt-ſide, being the Work of one of his Sons: both ſo increaſing, that at laſt they were joyned together. To theſe the Suburbs being added, have made a third. The whole called Feſſe, from Fez, an Arabick word, ſignifying Gold; whereof great quantity was found when they digged the Foundations. Divided into three parts by the River, all of which contain 82000 houſholds, and 700 Moſchees, or Saracenical Temples: the chief of which is Carne or Carnuen, being a mile and a half in compaſs. It hath 31 Gates, great and high; the roof 150 yards long, and 80 broad: round about, divers Porches, containing 40 yards in length, and 30 in breadth; under which, the publick ſtore-houſes of the Town. About the wals are Pulpits of divers ſorts, wherein the Maſters of their Law read unto the People, ſuch things, as they think to pertain to their ſalvation. The Revenue hereof is 200 Ducats a day of the old Rents, for ſo it was, An. 1526. when Leo Afer wrote. The Merchants have here a Court, or Exchange, incloſed with a ſtrong wall, with 12 Gates, and 15 ſtreets. There is alſo a Colledge called Amarodoc, a moſt curious and delicate Building. It hath three Cloyſters of admirable beauty, ſupported with eight ſquare pillars of divers colours: The roof curiouſly carved, and the Arches of Moſaique work, of Gold and Azure. The Gates of Braſs, fair wrought; and the doors of the private Chambers of inlayed work. This Colledge did coſt the Founder, King Abuchenen, or Abu Henen, 480000 Crowns. Here are finally ſaid to be in it many Hoſpitals, little inferiour to the Colledges in building and beauty, all very liberally endowed; and about an hundred hot Bathes well built, with four Hals to each, and certain Galleries without, where they put off their Cloaths when they go to bath themſelves: and beſides theſe 200 Innes, built three Stories high, each of them having 120 Chambers in it, with Galleries before all the doors for their Gueſts to walk in.

3. Eaſtward of the Territory of Feſſe, lieth the Province of CHAUS, extended in length from the River Gurngrut, or Gurgnigarn, by which parted from Temeſna, and Feſſe, to the borders of Tremeſen, for the ſpace of 190 miles, and 170 miles in breadth. So that it is thought to contain one third part of the whole Kingdom: but meanly populous for the bigneſs, the Countrey being poor and barren, and the Inhabitants fierce and warlike; more given to proſecute their quarrels, than to trade, or Tillage. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Ham Liſnan, a Town built in the more mountainous parts of the Countrey, by the old Africans. Famous for the Temple of an Idol here worſhipped; to which at certain times men and women reſorted in the night; where, after their devotions ended, and the Candles put out, every man lay with the woman he firſt touched; the exact platform of the Family of Love, if all be true which is told us of them; and anciently, but falſly, charged on the Primitive Chriſtians. 2. Tezza, adorned with three Colledges, many Baths, and Hoſpitals; and ſome beautiful Temples; one of them larger though not fairer than that of Feſſe, in both Towns men of the ſame trade have a ſtreet by themſelves; for greatneſs, wealth, and numbers of People, eſteemed the third City of this Kingdom. 3. Dubdu, an ancient town, but not much obſervable. 4. Teurert, ſeated on the top of an hill, in the midſt of a Plain, but compaſſed about with Deſarts. 5. Beni Jeſſeten, neighboured by Iron Mines, in which their greateſt bravery and wealth conſiſteth: the women here wearing Iron-rings, for Ornaments to their ears and fingers. 6. Tezergui, ſubject to the Arabians. 7. Adaggia, the moſt Eaſtern Town of all this Region; ſituate in a Peninſula, made by the confluences of Muluſo and Malva. In this Country is the head of the River Subur, which riſing out of a great Lake in the woods of the Mountain Seligus, and receiving many leſſer waters, with a large and navigable ſtream falleth into the Ocean.

4. Northwards of Chaus lieth the Region called GARET, extended thence as far as the Mediterranean, and reaching Eaſt and Weſt, from the River Malva, where it bordereth on Tremeſen, to that of Nochor, where it toucheth on Errif, and Aſgara. The length hereof 25 Leagues, the breadth but twenty. The ſoyl in moſt places dry and deſart, like the Sands of Numidia: eſpecially all along the banks of the Malva, near unto which from the Mediterranean to Chaus, it is wholly deſart and unpeopled, not well inhabited in the moſt fruitful parts of it, being full of mountains, the worſe for the ill neighbourhood of the Spaniards, poſſeſſed of 1. Cheſuſa, and 2. Medela, two chief Towns hereof. 3. Pennon de Veles, by ſome called Velez de Gomera, ſituate on the ſhore of the Mediterranean, betwixt two high Mountains; built by the Africans or Gothes, but now in the poſſeſſion of the Spaniards alſo. 4. Jafferin, ſituate on the Sea alſo, founded by the Mahometans of the Marine Family. 5. Tezzora ſtanding on an hill, to which there is but one paſſage only.

5. Weſtward of Garet lieth ASGARA, extended from thence unto the Ocean: Shut up on the South eaſt-ſide with the great Mountains Zalaga, Zaron, and Gomara, out of which laſt runneth the River Luccus, called Lix by Ptolomy. The Air hereof very temperate, and the ſoyl as fertile; ſupplying with the overplus of its commodities, the mountainous parts of Feſſe, and the Deſarts of Garet. Once full of Towns, till ruined and deſtroyed by the wars. A Monument whereof, 1. Giumba, built by the ancient Africans, of which remains nothing but the Ditches. 2. Larache, in Latine Lariſſa, the Lixa of Ptolomy, ſituate at the mouth of the Lix or Luccus, and furniſhed with a good Port, but of difficult entrance; garriſoned when poſſeſſed by the Moors with 300 light horſe, and 300 Harcabuziers; but better fortified than before, ſince poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, into whoſe hands it was put by Muley-Shek, King of Morocco and Feſſe; when worſted by Muley Sidan his younger Brother, in the beginning of the civil Wars betwixt them. 3. Cuſar Elcabir, given by Almanſer to a poor Fiſher, who had entertained him unknown, one night in his cottage, when he loſt his company in Hunting: Adorned with many Temples, one College of Students, and a ſtately Hoſpital.

6. On the North of Aſgara is the Province of EL-HABAT, or HABAT coaſting along the Atlantick Ocean to the mouth of the Streights, in length 100 miles, about 80 in breadth. The Countrey very plentiful of all manner of neceſſaries, and very well peopled; the Mountains which are here of a great height, being well inhabited. In former times repleniſhed with many Cities, both of the foundation of the Gothes, Romans, and old African Moors, now much diminiſhed by the wars. Thoſe of moſt note, 1. Ezaggen, the Inhabitants whereof by an ancient priviledge granted by the Kings of Feſſe, were licenſed to drink Wine, though prohibited by the Law of Mahomet. Situate on a mountain, near the River Guarga, about 35 Leagues from Feſſe; and garriſoned with 400 Horſe for fear of the Portugals, who ſomtimes make their excurſions thither. 2. Baſra, once a walled Town, and the wals ſtill ſtanding, but very little or no Town in them. 3. Homar, ſomtimes well-peopled, but now little inhabited, by reaſon of the ill-neighbourhood of the Portugals, who command that Coaſt. 4. Banirendo, in a manner deſerted for the ſame reaſon. 5. Alcazaer, to diſtinguiſh it from another of this name, called Alcazer Guer, taken together with Arzilla and Tangier by Alfonſo the fifth of Portugal, Anno 1470. Nigh to which Town the three Kings Sebaſtian, of Portugal, Mahomet, and Abdemelech, Competitors for this Kingdom, were ſlain in a day. There was alſo ſlain at the ſame time, the great Engliſh Rebel Stuckley, who fled out of Ireland to Rome, Anno 1570. Where he was lovingly entertained by the Pope then being, as a good Son of the Church; by whom appointed for the conqueſt of Ireland, and for that end furniſhed with 800 Souldiers paid by the King of Spain, and by his Holineſs created Marqueſs of Leinſter, Earl of Wexford and Caterlogh, Viſcount Murraugh, and Baron of Roſſe. Thus furniſhed, he began his Journey toward Ireland, Anno 1578. But hearing of theſe Wars, and deſirous to make a party in them, he loſt all his Honours with his Life. 6. Arzilla, a Sea-town, 70 miles diſtant from the Streights, now poſſeſſed by the Portugals. 7. Tanger, a great Town, and very ancient, diſtant from the Streits about 30 miles, belonging to the Portugals alſo. In former times it was called Tingis, a Colony of the Canaanites, and by them built at their firſt coming thither, when they fled from the Sword of Joſuah; teſtified by the two Pillars erected near this City, which before we ſpoke of: and from that name cauſed all this part of Mauritania to be called Tingitania. Made afterwards a Colony by the Emperour Claudius, who named it Traducta Julia; but the old name prevailed, and out-lived the new. Near to this Town it is ſaid that Hercules overcame Antæus, a monſtrous Giant of 64 Cubits high, as his Legend telleth us. And not far off was an high Mountain called Abyla, oppoſite to which in the Coaſt of Spain, was another called Calpe, on which the ſaid Hercules placed his ſo famous Pillars. 8. Septa, or Seuta, ſituate on, or near that Mountain, unfortunately memorable for giving the title of an Earl to Julian, who firſt brought the Saracens into Spain; beautified in the following times with many Temples, Colledges, and Learned men: taken by the Portugals with the help of the Engliſh, An. 1415. and now in the poſſeſſion of the King of Spain. The only Town of all the Eſtates of Portugal, which in the late revolt of that Kingdom doth remain unto him. 9. Julia Conſtantia, ſo called, and made a Roman Colony, by Auguſtus Cæſar. 10. Laxus, a Roman Colony of the plantation of Claudius, in old times ſaid to have been the Court or Palace of the Giant Antæus. Not far from whence (that Antæus might not dwell alone) the old Geographers have placed the habitation of Gerion, as proper a Gentleman as himſelf, in a ſmall Iſland of the Streits, called Gerionis Inſula, and by ſome Erythia.

7. Eaſtward of Habat is the Province of ERRIF, extended from the mouth of the Streits, where it joyneth to Habat, as far as to the River Nochor (ſuppoſed to be the Meluchath of the ancient Writers) by which parted from Garit: A mountainous and cold Countrey in reſpect of the reſt of Barbary, full of Woods and Forreſts; but plentiful enough of Vines, Figs, and Olives, and not without ſome herds of Goats, though otherwiſe not well ſtored with Cattel. In length 140 miles, in breadth 40 only; inhabited by a Race of valiant men, but exceſſive Drunkards. The Towns hereof not many, though full of Villages: The chief of which, 1. Mazagon, near unto the Streits, a very ſtrong Town, and of great importance, but poſſeſſed by the Portugals: in vain beſieged by Abdalla the firſt, with an Army of 200000 men, An. 1562. 2. Mezemme, ſeated on a Mountain. 3. Beni-Jerſo, of like ſituation, once beautified with a goodly Colledge for the Profeſſors of the Mahometan Law, who here publickly taught it, as in an Univerſity; the Inhabitants whereof were in that regard freed from all Exactions. Deſtroyed together with the Library of it, by ſome wicked Tyrant, Anno 1509. the Books therein being valued at 4000 Ducats. 4. Terga. 5. Tegaſſa. 6. Gebbe, of which little memorable.

Thus having looked over the particular Provinces of theſe two Kingdoms, we muſt next look upon them alſo in the general ſtory, from the time of the Saracenical conqueſt; Firſt let into this Countrey by the Treaſon of Julian, and for a while ſubject to the great Caliph, or Succeſſor of Mahomet: afterwards to the King, or Caliph of Cairoan, who extended his Empire to the Ocean. But that Kingdom being overthrown by the coming in of the Arabians, theſe Provinces with the reſt were afflicted by them; till the riſing of the Kingdom of Fez: begun in the perſon of Idris, of the bloud of Mahomet, by Hali, and his Daughter Fatima; commonly called the Family of Alaveci; who perſecuted by the oppoſite Faction, fled into Mauritania, where he grew into ſuch reputation, that in ſhort time he got both ſwords into his hands. Dying about the 185 year of the Hegira, he left his power unto his ſon, of the ſame name with his Father, the firſt Founder of Feſſe. Oppoſite whereunto on the other ſide of the waters one of his ſons, (but his name I find not) built another City, which in time grew into emulation with it; and raiſing by that means a Faction in the Houſe of Idris, which occaſioned the ſubverſion of the Kingdom of Feſſe, after it had continued in the Family of the Alaveci, for the ſpace of 270 years. The eſtate hereof firſt weakned by Abu Teſin, or Texifien, of the houſe of the Almoravides, or Lantunes, and ſo weakned, that he thereby gave an opportunity to Joſeph Aben Teiſin, or Telephine, his Son and Succeſſor, then famous for bridling the Arabians, and founding the City of Morocca, to ſuppreſs that Family: Who killing the Princes of that Line, and 30000 of their Subjects, brake down the wals which parted the two Cities from one another, united them by Bridges, and ſo made them one. Drawn into Spain by the Diſſention of the Saracens there amongſt themſelves, he added all which they held in that Kingdom, unto his Dominions: held by his Succeſſors, as long as they were able to hold Morocco: the Catalogue of which Princes, called the houſe or family of the Almoravides, with that of the Race of the Almohades, is this which followeth.

The Kings, or MIRAMOMOLIMS of MOROCCO.

A.Ch.

1068. 1 Teiſin, Texifion, or Telephine, the firſt of the Almoravides, that reigned in Africk.

2 Joſeph, ſirnamed Telephinus, the ſon of Teiſin, founded Morocco, ſubdued the Kingdom of Feſſe; and added the Eſtate of the Moors in Spain unto his Dominions, An. 1091.

3 Hali, the ſon of Joſeph.

4 Albo-Halis, the ſon of Hali, ſuppoſed to be the Publiſher of the Works now extant in the name of Avicenne, compiled at his command by ſome of the moſt Learned Arabian Doctors: vanquiſhed and ſlain by

5 Abdelmon, or Abdel-Mumen, the firſt of the Almohades; of obſcure Parentage, but raiſed to ſo great power by the practiſes of Almohad, a jugling Prophet of thoſe times, that he overthrew the King, and obtained the Kingdom of the Almoravides, both in Spain and Africk, An. 1150. to which he alſo added the Realm of Tunis and Cairoan.

6 Joſeph II. or Aben-Joſeph, the ſon of Abdelmon.

7 Jacob, or Aben-Jacob, ſirnamed Almanſor, a puiſſant and prudent Prince, of whom much before; ſon of Joſeph II.

8 Mahomet, ſirnamed Enaſer, or the Green, the Brother of Almanſor. Diſcomfited by the Chriſtians of Spain, at the Battel of Sierra Morena, An. 1214. loſt his Dominions; there being ſlain in this battel 200000 of the Moors, as ſome Writers ſay; who add, that the Spaniards for two dayes together burnt no other fewel but the Pikes, Lances, and Arrows of their ſlaughtered Enemies, yet could not conſume the one half of them.

9 Caid Arrax, Nephew of Mahomet Enaſer, by his ſon Buxaf, ſlain at the ſiege of Tremezezir, a Caſtle of Tremeſin, which was held againſt him.

10 Almorcada, a Kinſman of Caid Arrax, outed of his eſtate, and ſlain by Budebuz, of the ſame houſe of the Almohades,

11 Budebuz, the laſt of the houſe of the Almohades, ſetled in this eſtate by the aid and valour of Jacob Aben-Joſeph the new King of Feſſe: but dealing faithleſſely and ungratefully with him, he was warred on by the ſaid Jacob Ben-Joſeph, vanquiſhed and ſlain in battel; the ſoveraignty by that means tranſlated unto thoſe of the Marine family, An. 1270. or thereabouts.

But before I do proceed further with this Marine family, I muſt again look back upon Mahomet Enaſer, whom I conceive (the putation of the time being ſo agreeable) to be the Admiralius Murmelius mentioned by Matthew Paris, to whom our King John, An. 1214. is ſaid to have ſent ſuch a degenerous and unchriſtian Embaſſage. Which ſtrange name of Admiralius Murmelius, was by that good Writer unhappily ſtumbled at, in ſtead of Miramomolim (which alſo is corrupted from Amir Elmumenim, that is to ſay, Princeps fidelium) an Attribute which the great Kings of the Saracen-Moors did much affect, and retained it long time amongſt them. The Story this, King John being overlaid by his Barons wars, and the Invaſion of the French, ſent Ambaſſadors to this great Prince (then ruling over a great part of Spain and Barbary) for aid againſt them: offering to hold his Kingdom of him, and to receive withal the Law of Mahomet. The Moor exceedingly offended at it, told the Ambaſſadors, that he had lately read the Book of Pauls Epiſtles, which he liked ſo well, that were he now to chuſe a Religion, he would have embraced Chriſtianity before any other: But every man (ſaith he) ought to die in his own Religion; the greateſt thing which he diſliked in that Apoſtle, being (as he ſaid) the changing of the Faith in which he was born. This ſaid, he called unto him Robert of London Clark, one of the Ambaſſadors (a man ill choſe for ſuch an Errand, if the tale be true) of whom he demanded the Form of the Engliſh Government, the ſituation and wealth of the Countrey, the manners of the people, the Life and Perſon of the King: in which being ſatisfied, he grew into ſuch a diſlike of that King, that ever after he abhorred the mention of him. This is the ſubſtance of the ſtory in Matthew Paris: But you muſt know he was a Monk, to which brood of men King John was held for a mortal Enemy; and therefore this Relation not to paſs for Goſpel.

But whatſoever opinion King John might have of the power of this King (to whom 'tis poſſible enough he might ſend for aid) certain it is, that he was grown ſo low in his reputation, after the loſs of that great battel in Siera Morena: that not only the Spaniſh Moors withdrew their obedience from him (as a Prince unable to ſupport them, but thoſe of Africk did revolt alſo from the Crown of M*orocco* (extreamly weakned by that blow) after his deceaſe. For Gomoranca Aben Zein of the houſe of Abdaluad, ſeized upon Tremeſen, in the time of Caid Arrax his Succeſſour; as Bucar Aben Merin of the noble M*arine* Family deſcended from a Chriſtian ſtock) did the like at Fez. Setled in his eſtate by the vanquiſhment of Almorcada the Miramomolim; he left it to Hiaja his ſon, under the governance and protection of a Brother of his called Jacob Ben-Joſeph. But the young Prince dying ſhortly after, left his new Kingdom to his Uncle; who aiding Budebuz (before mentioned) diſpoſſeſſed Almorcada of the Realm of Morocco, and afterwards having juſt cauſe of quarrel againſt this Budebuz, invaded his Dominions, overcame and ſlew him; and once again transferred the Imperial Seat from M*orocco* to Fez. In him began the Empire of the Marine Family, who held their reſidence in Fez, as the firſt Seat of their power; Morocco being governed by an under King, the reſt of the Provinces of that Kingdom cantonned into ſeveral States; the Sea-coaſts in ſome tract of time being gained by the Portugals. And in his Line (but with great confuſions) the royal Dignity remained till the year 1500. and ſomwhat after. Three only were of note in the courſe of buſineſs, that is to ſay, 1. Jacob Ben-Joſeph, the advancer of the Marine Family to the Realm of Morocco; the eſtabliſher thereof in that of Feſſe; and of great power and influence in the affairs of the M*oors* in Spain, where he held Algarir and Tariffe, Towns of great importance; ſlain treacherouſly by one of his familiar friends, at the ſiege of Tremeſen. 2. Aben-Joſeph the ſecond, a younger ſon of this firſt Joſeph (the iſſue of Bucalo his elder Brother being quite extinct) ſucceeded after Abortado, the ſixth of the M*arine* Family, in the Throne of his Father; and had added thereunto the Realm of Tremeſen, if not diverted by the revolt of Alboali his eldeſt ſon, continually in Arms againſt him. 3. Alboacen, the ſon of this Aben-Joſeph, and the eighth of the M*arine* Family, who after a ſiege of 30 moneths, took the City of Tremeſen, and with that the Kingdom. But not ſo fortunate in his wars againſt the Chriſtian Kings of Spain, againſt whom he led an Army of 400000 Foot, and 70000 Horſe, with all other neceſſaries: but vanquiſhed by the two Kings of Caſtile and Portugal, with far leſſer Forces (their Army conſiſting but of 25000 Foot, and 14000 horſe) at the River of Salado, not far from Tariffe, An. 1340. Depoſed ſoon after his return by his Son Alboanen, who loſt all which his Father and the firſt of the Aben Joſephs had gained in Spain; their Empire after this declining even in Africk it ſelf: the Kingdom of Tremeſen, and the greateſt part of the new Kingdom of Tunis, withdrawing themſelves from their obedience in the Eaſt parts of Barbary; as the Portugals prevailed upon them in the Weſt. The Kingdom of the M*arines* thus approaching near its fatal period, it fortuned about the year 1508. that M*ahomet Ben Amet* a Native of Dara, in the further Numidia, or Bilodulgerid, pretending a deſcent from their Prophet M*ahomet*, cauſed himſelf to be called Xeriffe, the name by which the kindred and Succeſſors of that Impoſtor uſe to call themſelves: and being a poor Hermit only (with which Mountebanks and the high opinion of their Sanctity, this people have from time to time been extreamly fooled) plotted to make his ſons the chief Princes of M*auritania*. To this end he ſent them in Pilgrimage to M*eccha*, whence they returned with ſuch an opinion of Sanctity, that M*ahomet* King of Feſſe, made Amet the ſecond of them Governour of the famous Colledge of Amadurach; the youngeſt called M*ahomet*, Tutor to his Children; the eldeſt named Abdel, ſtaying at home with his Father, to expect the iſſue, ſlain afterwards in the war undertaken by the other two againſt the Portugals. In thoſe dayes the Portugals grievouſly infeſted the Provinces of the Realm of M*orocco*; to repreſs whoſe Inſolencies, M*ahomet* and Amet obtained Commiſſion: though much oppoſed therein by Muley the Kings brother, who told him how unſafe it was to truſt to an armed hypocriſie: aſſuring him, that if they once came unto any power (which under colour of Religion they might quickly raiſe) it would not be eaſie to ſuppreſs them. But this good counſel was rejected, and the war went forward. Furniſhed with an Army, they diſcomfit Lopes Barriga, Commander of the Portugal forces under King Emanuel; compel that King to abandon all his footing there; they ſubdue Duccala, Sus, and Hea, three Provinces of the Realm of Morocco; enter that City, poiſon the tributary King, and ſalute Amet King thereof by the name of the Xeriffe of Morocco, inveſting Mahomet the other brother in the Kingdom of Sus. In the career of their ſucceſſes died the King of Feſſe; and Amet his ſucceſſor, an improvident young Prince, confirms his Quondam-Tutors in their new Eſtates, conditioned they ſhould hold of him as the Lord in chief; and pay him the accuſtomed tributes.

The XERIFFES of MOROCCO.

A.C.

1 Amet denied both tribute and ſuperiority to the King of Fez, whom he overthrew in a ſet field; and was after vanquiſhed and diſpoſſeſſed of his Kingdom, (upon ſome quarrel breaking out) by his brother Mahomet.

1544. 2 Mahomet King of Sus, having got the Kingdom of Morocco, united Feſſe unto it alſo by the vanquiſhment of Amet the King thereof; ſlain after all his Victories by the Turks of his Guard.

1557. 3 Abdalla, the ſon of Mahomet.

1572. 4 Abdalla II. Son of the former, had twelve Brothers, of which he ſlew ten: Hamet being ſpared by reaſon of his ſuppoſed ſimplicity, and Abdelmelech eſcaping to the Turks.

5 Mahomet II. Son of Abdalla the ſecond, expelled by Abdelmelech and the Turks, fled to Sebaſtian King of Portugal, who together with the two Competitors were ſlain in one day at the battel of Alcazar Guer, Anno 1578.

A.C.

1578. 6 Hamet II. the Brother of Abdalla the 2d. who added parts of Libya, and Numidia, to the Realm of Morocco, not abſolutely ſubdued before.

1603. 7 Muley Sheck the eldeſt ſon of Hamet, oppoſed in his Succeſſion by Boferes, and Sidan, his two younger brethren; in which War he dyed; as did alſo Boferes his Brother. From whom Abdalla, the ſon of Muley Sheck had regained Morocco.

1607. 8 Sidan the third ſon of Hamet, immediately on the death of his Father, cauſed himſelf to be proclaimed King of Fez (where he was with his father when he died) and having won Morocco from Abdalla the ſon of Muley Sheck, became maſter of that kingdom alſo. Stripped afterwards of Feſſe and Morocco both, by the oppoſite factions; diſtreſſed by Hamet Ben Abdela a Religious Hermit, who hoped to get all for himſelf; and aided by Side Hean one of like hypocriſie, who ſeemed to aim but at a Limb of that great Eſtate; by whoſe aſſiſtance he was once more poſſeſſed of Morocco. Theſe tumults on the Land being pacified in long tract of time, and the Country brought to ſome degree of peace and quietneſs, (though never abſolutely reduced under his command, as in former times;) a Rabble of Pyrats neſt themſelves in Salla, a Port-town of the Realm of Feſſe: creating thence great miſchief to him both by ſea and land; and not to him only, but to all the Merchants of other Countries, whoſe buſineſs led them towards thoſe Seas. Unable to ſuppreſs them for want of ſhipping, he craved aid of King Charles of England: by whoſe aſſiſtance he became Maſter of the Port, deſtroyed the Pyrates, and ſent Three hundred Chriſtian Captives for a Preſent to his Sacred Majeſty, Anno 1562. Nor ſtaid he here; but aiming at the general good of Trade, and Mankind, he ſent a Letter to His Majeſty to lend him the like aid againſt thoſe of Algiers, who did as much infeſt the Mediterranean, as the Pyrats of Salla did the Ocean. The tenor of which Letter, as ſavouring of more piety than could be poſſibly expected from a Mahometan, and much conducing to the honour of his Sacred Majeſty, I have here ſubjoyned.

The Letter of the King of MOROCCO, to the King of ENGLAND.

WHen theſe our Letters ſhall be ſo happy as to come to your Majeſties ſight, I wiſh the Spirit of the righteous God may ſo direct your mind, that you may joyfully imbrace the Meſſage I ſend; preſenting to you the means of exalting the Majeſty of God, and your own Reward amongſt men. The Regal power allotted to us, makes us common Servants to our Creator; then, of thoſe People whom we govern: So that obſerving the duties we owe to God, we deliver bleſſings to the World; in providing for the publike good of our States, we magnifie the honour of God, like the Celeſtial Bodies, which though they have much veneration, yet ſerve onely to the benefit of the World. It is the Excellencie of our Office, to be Inſtruments, whereby happineſs is delivered unto the Nations. Pardon me Sir! This is not to inſtruct, (for I know I ſpeak to one of a more cleer and quick ſight than my ſelf) but I ſpeak this, becauſe God hath pleaſed to grant me a happy Victory over ſome part of thoſe Rebellious Pyrats, that have ſo long moleſted the peaceful Trade of Europe; and hath preſented further occaſion to root out the generation of thoſe, who have been ſo pernicious to the good of our Nations: I mean, ſince it hath pleaſed God to be ſo auſpicious to our beginnings in the Conqueſt of Salla, that we might joyn and proceed in hope of like ſucceſs, in the war againſt Tunis, Algier, and other places (Dens and Receptacles for the inhumane villanies of thoſe who abhor Rule and Government.) Herein whileſt we interrupt the corruption of malignant Spirits of the World, we ſhall glorifie the great God; and perform a Duty that will ſhine as glorions as the Sun and Moon, which all the Earth may ſee and reverence: A work that ſhall aſcend as ſweet as the perfume of the moſt precious Odours, in the noſtrils of the Lord; A work grateful and happy to men. A work whoſe memory ſhall be reverenced ſo long, as there ſhall be any that delight to hear the Actions of Heroick and magnanimous Spirits; that ſhall laſt as long as there be any remaining amongſt men that love and honour the piety and vertue of Noble minds. This Action I here willingly preſent to You, whoſe piety and vertues equal the greatneſs of your power: that we, who are Servants to the Great and mighty GOD, may hand in hand triumph in the glory which this Action preſents unto us. Now becauſe the Iſlands which you govern, have been ever famous for the unconquered ſtrength of their Shipping, I have ſent this my truſty Servant and Ambaſſador, to know whether in your Princely wiſdom you ſhall think fit to aſſiſt me with ſuch Forces by Sea, as ſhall be anſwerable to thoſe I provide by Land: which if you pleaſe to grant, I doubt not but the Lord of Hoſts will protect and aſſiſt thoſe that fight in ſo glorious a Cauſe; Nor ought you to think this ſtrange, that I, who much reverence the Peace and accord of Nations, ſhould exhort to a War. Your great Prophet CHRIST JESUS was the Lion of the Tribe of JUDAH, as well as the Lord and Giver of Peace: which may ſignifie unto you, that he which is a lover and maintainer of Peace, muſt always appear with the terror of his Sword, and wading through Seas of blood, muſt arrive to Tranquillity. This made JAMES your Father of glorious memory, ſo happily renowned amongſt all Nations. It was the noble fame of your Princely vertues, which reſounds to the utmoſt corners of the Earth, that perſwaded me to invite you to partake of that Bleſſing, wherein I boaſt my ſelf moſt happy. I wiſh God may heap riches of his bleſſings on you, increaſe your happineſs with your dayes, and hereafter perpetuate the greatneſs of your Name in all Ages.

Such was the Letter of that King; whoſe motion in all probability might have took effect, had not the Troubles, which not long after brake out in Scotland, put off the deſign. And therefore laying by the thoughts of his future purpoſes, let us take a view of the Revenues and Forces of this mighty Empire; before the late diſtractions made it leſs conſiderable. And firſt for the Revenues of it, the Xeriffes are the abſolute Lords of the whole Eſtate, and of his ſubjects, goods and bodies. The tenth and firſt fruits of all ſorts of Fruits, Corn and Cattel, he demands of courſe; though many times contented in the name of the firſts fruits, with one in twenty. The fifth part of a Ducat he receiveth for every Acre of Land, throughout his Dominions; the other four parts for every Fire, and as much for every Head whether male or female, which is above fifteen years of age. In Merchandiſe he receiveth of every Native two in the hundred, of an Alien ten; and hath a large Impoſt alſo upon every Mill. When any of his greater Officers or Judges die, he is ſole Heir of all their Goods: and yet advanceth great ſums by the ſale of thoſe Offices. And in the levying of ſuch Taxes as are extraordinary, he uſeth to demand more than he means to take; that the People finding him content to abate ſomewhat of his Due, may think themſelves to be fairly dealt with.

As for their Forces, it is evident in matter of Fact, that Abdulla the firſt, at the ſiege of Mazagon, a Town held by the Portugals, Anno 1562. had no leſs then 200000 men; and that Abdel-Melech at the battel of Alcazar Guez, againſt King Sebaſtian, had 40000 Horſe, and 80000 Foot, beſides Voluntaries, and wild Arabians; it being ſuppoſed that he might have raiſed 30000 Horſe more (notwithſtanding the ſtrong party which was made againſt him) had he thought it neceſſary. It is ſaid alſo that Abdalla kept in conſtant pay 60000 Horſe, of which 15000 were quartered in the Realm of Sus, 25000 in Morocco, and the other 20000 in the Kingdom of Feſſe: out of which he called 5000 of the beſt and ableſt for the guard of his perſon, well mounted and as richly furniſhed. Beſides theſe he hath bodies of Horſe in continual readineſs, maintained according to the manner of the Turks Timariots: and by Penſions given amongſt the Chiefs of the Arabians, who live like Outlaws in the mountains, and up and down in the skirts of his Country; is furniſhed at his need with ſupplies from them. Well ſtored with Ammunition alſo, there being 46 Quintals of Gun-powder laid up monethly in his famous Arſenal at Morocco: and yet not able to ſtay long (not above three months) upon any action, in regard that all his Souldiers live on his daily allowance; which maketh them, when his Proviſions are conſumed, to diſſolve and ſcatter.

THE ISLES OF BARBARY.

THe ISLES of BARBARY, which make up the fifth and laſt part thereof, are ſituate neer the African ſhores of the Mediterranean, aſſigned by Ptolomy to the Province of Africa Propria. In number ſixteen: 1. Hydras, 2. Calathe, 3. Dracontias, now called Chelbi, 4. Ægymnus, by Strabo called Æginarus, and now Gnietta. 5. Larunesia, now Mollium, 6. Lapeduſa, now Lampedoſa, 7. Meſyrus, 8. Pontia, 9. Gaia; all of little note, 10. Inſula Glauconis, with a City of the ſame name in it, now called Goza, and ſubject to the Knights of Malta, 11. Æthuſa, by ſome called Ægusa, and conſequently miſtaken for Ægates, which lieth neer Sicily. Of more note are the five that follow, viz.

1. COSTRA, now called Pantalaria, equally diſtant from Africk and the Iſle of Sicil, 60 miles from each. In length about thirty miles, and in breadth not above ten: Mountainous for the moſt part, and full of a black kind of Stone: the ſoil not very proper for Corn, and void of Rivers; but plentiful of Figs, Melons, and Cotton-wool; well ſtored with Kine and Oxen, but without Horſes. The People poor; by Religion Chriſtians, and ſubject to the King of Spain: very good Swimmers of both ſexes, and in their ſpeech and habit coming neer the Moors. It hath a Town in it of the ſame name with the Iſland, ſituate on the Sea-ſide in the Northern part of it, defended with a very ſtrong Caſtle.

2. CERCINA, now with little difference called Carchana, ſituate neer the coaſt of Africk, at the entrance (as it were) of the leſſer Syrtis: In length 25 miles, in breadth half as much, but in ſome places not above five. Exceeding fruitful in old times, able to furniſh (as they did) the wants of Cæſar and his Army, when he warred in Africk; Magno frumenti numero Cercinæ invento, naves onerarias, quarum ibi ſatis magna copia, complet, atque in caſtra ad Cæſarem mittit, are the words of the Hiſtory. It hath a Town of the ſame name. Of no great note in way of ſtory, but for an handſome piece of wit here ſhewed by Annibal. Who flying from Carthage, met here ſome Merchants of that City, who had there ſome ſhipping in the Haven, and ſtanding in ſome doubt leſt by their diſcovery of his flight he might be purſued, pretended a Sacrifice to Hercules the Tyrian Deity, to which he invited all the Sailers, and borrowed all their Sails to ſet up a tent for their entertainment; which having got into his hands, and leaving them aſleep, he made on for Aſia; ſecure enough not to be purſued until out of danger.

3. LOTOPHAGITIS, now called Zerby, and by ſome Gerbe, is ſituate in the bottom of the Bay of Tripolis, divided from the main Land by a narrow Ford. The Iſland full of Bogs and Mariſhes, without other water, and in the midſt of it ſomewhat hilly; indifferently fruitful, yielding Dates, Olives, Barley, Mill and the like commodities; inhabited by 30000 men, dwelling in low Cottages, and but ſimply apparelled. It had in it anciently two Cities, 1. Meninx, which ſometimes gave name unto the Iſland called Meninx by ſome elder Writers, 2. Gerrapolis, both now deſtroyed: inſtead whereof there is now one of more note than the reſt, called by the ſame name with the Iſland, and fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle. Subject unto the Turks, but governed by a poor King of its own. Both Fort and Iſland taken by the Chriſtian Fleet, in the year 1559. for the King of Spain, to whom Caravanus the King thereof did ſubmit himſelf; conditioning to pay the yearly Tribute of 6000 Crowns, one Camel, four Oſtriches, four Sparrow Hawks, and four Falcons. But the Chriſtians were ſcarce warm in their new poſſeſſion, when beſieged in the Caſtle by Pial Baſſa, to whom after ſome extremities they were fain to yield: there periſhing in this unfortunate Action, by ſword, famine, and ſickneſs, 15000 Chriſtians.

4. GAULOS, or GAUDUS, by the Inhabitants called Gaudica, is diſtant about five miles from the Iſle of Malta; to the Knights whereof it doth belong: given to them by the bounty of Charles the fift. The Iſland 30 miles in compaſs, well watered and very fruitful. So great an Enemy to Serpents and all venemous Creatures, that they neither breed here, nor will live here brought from other places. The People Chriſtians, but they ſpeak the ſame Language with the neighbouring Saracens. The chief Town is of the ſame name with the Iſland, beautified with a Capacious Haven, lying betwixt the Weſt and South, and ſtrongly fortified. Cruelly pillaged by the Turks in the year 1551. who carried hence 3000 Souls, into endleſs thraldom.

5. MALTA, the chief of the African Iſlands, lieth betwixt Tripolis in Barbary, and the Iſle of Sicil: diſtant from this laſt about 60 miles, and from the other 180. In circuit about ſixty miles, in length 20, and in breadth 12. ſituate in the beginning of the fourth Clime, and eighth Parallel; ſo that the longeſt day in Summer is but 14 hours.

Anciently it was called Melite, and by that name occurreth not only in Ptolomy and other Writers, but alſo in the Book of the Acts, in the ſtory of S. Pauls Ship-wrack; this being the place where he and all his company were caſt on land: in memory whereof was built a little Chappel in the place of his Landing. So called moſt probably ἀπὸ τοῦ μέλιτος, from the abundance of honey which it yielded in former times: Cicero charging it on Verres, that he came home loaded with 400 meaſures of honey, and ſtore of Melitenſian Rayments: Jam non quæro unde 400 amphoras mellis habueris, unde tantum Melitenſium Veſtium, ſaith that famous Orator. The joyning of which two together, declare that he had robbed the ſame place for both; this Iſland being a neer neighbour of Sicil, which Verres governed then as Prætor. Nor is it ſtrange that an Iſland of the coaſt of Africk, and uſing for the moſt part the Phœnician or Punick Language, ſhould borrow its Appellation from the Greek: many of that Nation coming hither from the Iſle of Sicil, and inhabiting here; and the whole Iſland ſometimes ſubject to the power of the Sicilian Greeks, though for the moſt part under the command of the State of Carthage.

It is ſituate wholly on a Rock, being not above three foot deep in earth; by conſequence, of no great fertility, the want of which is ſupplied with the plenties of Sicil. Yet have they here no ſmall ſtore of Pomegranates, Citrons, Oranges, Melons, and other excellent fruits, both for taſte and colour. They have alſo great abundance of Cotten Wool (Goſſypium the Latiniſts call it) which they ſowe as we do our Corn; the growth and ordering of which Wooll, hath been ſhewn already, when we were in Syria. For the commodity of this Wool, and the cloth made of it, the Romans had this Iſland in great eſteem; thinking themſelves happy when they gained it from the Carthaginians.

The natural Inhabitants of it are ſaid to be churliſh and uncivil; of the African Language and complexion; but followers of the Church of Rome, the Religion whereof theſe Knights are ſworn to defend. The Women fair, but hating company, and going covered. The whole number of both Sexes, ſuppoſed to be 20000 poſſeſſed of 90 Villages, and four Cities. Places of note, 1. Malta, ſo called by the name of the Iland, in the middle of which it is ſituate; built on an hill, but counted of no great importance, the ſtrength and ſafety of the Iland lying in defence of the Shores and Havens. 2 St. Hermes a ſtrong Caſtle at the point of a long Languet or tongue of Rock, thruſting out betwixt the two beſt Havens, both which it notably defendeth. Took by the Turks, Anno 1565, but at no cheaper rate then 20000 ſhot of Cannon, and the loſs of 10000 of their men. 3 Valette ſituate on the ſame Languet, not far from the Caſtle of S. Hermes, (or rather lying cloſe unto it) extended the whole breadth of the ſaid Languet from the one Sea to the other: and ſo commanding both the Havens. Built ſince the departure of the Turks, impregnably fortified, and called thus by the name of Valets, the great Maſter, who ſo gallantly repulſed their fury. In this Town the great Maſter hath his Palace, and the Knights their ſeveral Alberges or Seminaries; all very fair and handſome buildings, 4. Burgo, a little Town or City on another Languet, lying in the Eaſtern Haven: at the extremity of which Promontory in a Demy Iſland ſtands the ſtrong Caſtle of 5. S. Angelo, built on a Rock, oppoſite to Valette, on the other ſide of the Haven; and found impregnable by the Turks, who in vain beſieged it. 6. Iſola a ſmall City and better deſerving the name of a Town, ſituate in another Promontory, on the South of the other, defended on the Weſtſide by a ſtrong Platform, at the point of the Foreland; and on the Eaſtſide, by the impregnable Caſtle of S. Michael; in vain aſſaulted by the Turks, who on their ill ſucceſs at the Siege hereof, gave over the enterprize, and ſailed home.

The people of this Iſland originally were a Tyrian or Phœnician Colony, but intermixt in tract of time with ſome Greek Plantations, coming hither out of Sicil, as before was ſaid. For the moſt part dependant on the Fortunes of Carthage, afterwards of Rome, till ſubdued by the Saracens: By the Spaniards taken from the Moors, and by Charles the fiſt given to the Knights of the Rhodes; not long before expelled thence by Solyman the Magnificent, Anno 1522. Theſe Knights are in number 1000. of whom, 500 are always to be reſident in the Iſland. The other 500 are diſperſed thorow Chriſtendom, at their ſeveral Seminaries, in France, Spain, Italy and Germany; and at any ſummons, are to make their perſonal appearance. Theſe Seminaries (Alberges they call them) are in number ſeven, viz. one of France in general, one of Auvergn, one of Provence, one of Caſtile, one of Aragon, one of Italy, and one of Germany; over every one of which they have a Grand Prior, who in the Countrey where he liveth, is of great reputation. An eighth Seminary they had in England, till the ſuppreſſion of it by Henry the 8th, yet they have ſome one or other, to whom they give the title of Grand Prior of England. Concerning the orignal and riches of theſe Knights, we have ſpoken when we were in Paleſtine; now a word or two onely of their places, and the election of their great Maſter. None are admitted into the Order, but ſuch as can bring a teſtimony of their Gentry for ſix deſcents: and when the Ceremonies of their Admiſſion (which are many) are performed, they ſwear to defend the Church of Rome, to obey their Superiours, to live upon the Revenues of their Order, onely, and withal to live chaſtly. Of theſe there be 16 of great authority (Counſellours of State we may fitly call them) called the Great Croſſes; out of whom the Officers of their Order, as the Marſhal, the Admiral, the Chancellour, &c. are choſen: and who, together with the Maſter, puniſh ſuch as are convict of any crime, 1. by degrading him, 2*ly*. by ſtrangling him, and 3*ly*. by throwing him into the Sea. Now when the Great Maſter is dead, they ſuffer no Veſſel to go out of this Iſland, till another be elected, leſt the Pope ſhould intrude on their election; which is performed in this manner. The ſeveral Seminaries nominate two Knights, and two alſo are nominated for the Engliſh: theſe 16 from amongſt themſelves chooſe eight; theſe eight chooſe a Knight, a Prieſt, and a Frier-ſervant; and they three, out of the 16 Great Croſſes, elect the great Maſter. The great Maſter being thus choſen, is ſtiled (though but a Frier) The moſt illuſtrious, and moſt reverend Prince, the Lord Frier N. N. Great Maſter of the Hoſpital of S. John of Jeruſalem, Prince of Malta, Gaules, and Goza. Far different I aſſure you, from that of the firſt Maſters of this Order, who called themſelves onely Servant to the poor Servitors of the Hoſpital of Jeruſalem; or that of the Maſter of the Templers, who was onely intituled The humble Miniſter of the poor Knights of the Temple.

This Iſland is conceived to yield to the great Maſter the yearly rent of 10000 Ducats, the greateſt part whereof ariſeth out of Cotten wool: beſides which, he hath towards the maintaining of his Eſtate, the tenth part of the prizes which are won from the Turks; and certain thouſands of Crowns yearly out of the treaſure of the Order, which is great and rich; and one of the beſt Commanderis in every Nation. And for the ſcowring of the Seas, and ſecuring their Harbours, they have many good Gallies, each of them able to contain 500 Souldiers, and to carry 16 piece of Ordnance; with which they make excurſions many times to the coaſts of Greece.

And ſo much for BARBARY.

MOUNT

MOUNT ATLAS.

IN our way from Barbary to Libya Interior, we muſt paſs over Mount Atlas, a Ridge of hils, of exceeding great heighth, and of no ſmall length. So high, that the top, or Summit of it is above the Clouds, at leaſt ſo high that the eye of man is not able to diſcern the top of it. Extat in hoc Mari mons cui nomen Atlas (ſaith Herodotus) ita ſublimis, ut ad illius verticem oculi mortalium pervenire non poſſint. Yet notwithſtanding, it is alwaies covered with Snow in the heats of Summer. Difficult of aſcent by reaſon of the ſharp and craggy Precipices, which occur in many places of it; the reſt were plainer, and more even, of ſuch wondrous ſteepneſs, that the Precipices of the Rocks ſeem the ſafer way. Full of thick Woods, and yielding to the Countreys on the North-ſide of it, the greateſt part of the Rivers, which refreſh and moyſten them: and where it bordereth on the proper, or Roman Africa, of ſuch ſelf-fertility, that it affordeth excellent Fruits of its natural growth; not planted, graffed, or inoculated by the hand of man. The beginning of it is on the ſhores of the Weſtern Seas, which from hence have the name of the Atlantick Ocean; in the 26 Degrees, and 30 Minutes of the Northern Latitude: and paſſing on directly Eaſtward, draw near unto the Borders of Egypt, part of Marmarica, or the Roman Libya, only interpoſing. It is now called Anchiſa, and Montes Clari: And took the name of Atlas from Atlas a King of Mauritania, who dwelt at the bottom of this Mountain; fained by the Poets to be turned into this Hill by Perſeus, and the head of Meduſa. Of the daughters of this King, their Golden fruit, and the famous Gardens of the Heſperides, we have ſpoke already, though ſome remove the place of their Habitation more into the Weſt (then by us diſpoſed of) and others into certain Iſlands of the Weſtern Ocean, which we ſhall meet withal hereafter. He was ſaid to have been a man of ſuch wondrous height, that the Heavens reſted on his ſhoulders; of which, when weary, he diſcharged his burden on the ſhoulders of Hercules; the ground of the Fiction either taken from the height of the Mountain, the top whereof ſeemeth to touch the sky; or from his extraordinary knowledge in Aſtronomy (as the times then were) whereby he came to be acquainted with the motions of the Stars and Planets; in which knowledge he inſtructed Hercules, when he came unto him. But for the more Authentick deſcription of it, take it thus from Virgil.

——Jamq; volans apicem & latera ardua cernit
Atlantis duri, Cœlum qui vertice fulcit.
Atlantis, cinctum aſſidue cui nubibus atris
Piniferum caput, & vento pulſatur & imbri.
Nix humeros infuſa tegit, tum flumina mento
Præcipitant ſenis; & glacie riget horrida barba.

Which may be Engliſhed in theſe words.

Then flying, he the top and ſides deſcries
Of Atlas, whoſe proud head ſupports the skies.
Atlas, whoſe Pinie head with Clouds incloſed
Is to the ſtorms of wind and rain expoſed.
Now hid's the Snow his Arms, now tumbleth down Upon his Chin; his Beard with Ice o'regrown.

OF LIBYA INTERIOR.

L*IBYA INTERIOR* is bounded on the North, with Mount Atlas, by which parted from Barbary, and Cyrenaica; on the Eaſt, with Libya Marmarica, interpoſed betwixt it and Egypt, and part of Æthiopia ſuperior, or the Habaſſine Empire; on the South, with Æthiopia Inferior, and the Land of the Nigro's; and on the Weſt with the main Atlantick Ocean.

The reaſon of the name we have ſeen before, given to this Countrey in regard of its contiguouſneſs and reſemblance to the other Libya, or elſe becauſe deſcended from the Children of Lehabim, by which that Countrey was firſt planted. For of King Libs, or Queen Libya (the daughter of Epaphus, and Caſſiopaa) and other the like fictions of the Greeks, I ſhall take no notice. Diſtinguiſhed from the other, by the addition of Interior, as lying more within the main land of Africa; the other being partly a Maritime Countrey.

Of the nature of the ſoyl and people we ſhall ſpeak anon, when we come to take a view of its ſeveral parts. Look we now on it as it ſtood in the time of the Romans: when, though not ſo well travelled, or diſcovered as in theſe laſt times, yet have we more particulars of it, as to the names and ſituation of the Rivers, Mountains, and chief Towns, than any of our latter Writers have preſented to us. The Rivers of moſt note, 1. Salathus. 2. Chuſarus. 3. Ophiodus. 4. Noius. 5. Maſſa. 6. Sobus. 7. Daradus. 8. Stachiris, and 9. Maſithelus; all of them paying tribute to the Weſtern, or Atlantick Ocean. Mountains of moſt note, 1. Mandrus, out of which floweth the River Salatus. 2. Sagapola, which gives being to the River Sobus. 3. Ryſſadius, from whence Stachiris. 4. the Mountain called Deorum Currus (of which more anon) whence Maſſitholus, and Mount Capas, out of which Daradas, have their firſt Originals. Then there are, 5. Mount Uſurgala, and 6. Mount Girgiris; from the firſt of which the River Bagradas, and from the laſt that of Cyniphus do derive their waters: and paſſing through the breaches of Atlas (of which theſe Mountains ſeem to be ſome diſmembred limbs) croſs the whole breadth of the Roman Africk, to make themſelves a way to the Mediterranean. Beſides theſe, more within the Land, we find the famous Rivers of Gir, and Niger: Of which the firſt maketh the two great Lakes of Nuba, and Cheloindas; the ſecond, thoſe as great, or greater, called Nigritis, and the Lake of Libya, which makes me wonder by the way, that in a Countrey ſo well watered as this ſeems to be, our modern Writers ſhould complain of ſuch want of water; as if there were, neither Spring nor River, nor Pond, nor Lake, nor any thing to moiſten and refreſh the earth, but the dews of Heaven, or ſome Pits of Salt and brackiſh water, not worth the taſting. Ptolomy muſt either be miſtaken, which I hardly think; or our late Travellers not ſo punctual in their obſervations, which I rather credit: or elſe the Rivers which were here in the time of my Author, In his arenarum vaſtitatibus diſperduntur, muſt be dried-up and ſwallowed in theſe ſandy Deſarts, as Maginus telleth us; or finally there hath happened ſome later conflagration, than that of Phaeton, to which the want of water may be better attributed, than it was to his. Of which thus the Poet:

Hinc facta eſt Libya, raptis humoribus æſtu Arida. ——— Which Geo. Sandys thus rendreth.
A Sandy Deſart Libya then became,
Her full veins emptied by the thirſty flame.

Places of note and name in thoſe elder times, 1. Salathes, on the River ſo named. 2. Bagaxi, 3. Iarzitha, and 4. Babiba, all honoured with the name of Cities. 5. Garama, 6. Gira, and Nigira, the Metropoles of their ſeveral Nations. Then there were two Havens of ſome good eſteem, the one called Magnus Portus, the other Portus Perphoſius; beſides 43 other Towns and Cities (twelve of theſe on the Binks of the River Niger;) whoſe names and ſituation do occur in Ptolomy; which ſhews the Countrey not to be ſo unhabitable and void of people, as was pretended by ſome other (but leſs diligent) Writers.

Nations of moſt note in it in the former times, were the Getuli, on the back of Mauritania, a reſolute and unconquered people, Genus inſuperabile bello, as we find in Virgil: 2. the Garamantes, dwelling South of Cyrenaica, and giving name to a large and ſpacious territory, called Vallis Garamantica; ſuppoſed to be the moſt remote Nation towards the South, as the Indians were towards the Eaſt; whence we have ultra Garamantas & Indos, in another Poet. 3. The Pyrrhæi, an Æthiopick Nation, on the South of the River Gir: 4. the Nigritæ, originally Æthiopians alſo, inhabiting on the North of the River Niger; 5. the Odranguli, of the ſame original extraction, poſſeſſing the Countrey between the Mountains Capha and Thala; 6. the Perorſori, dwelling near the hils called Deorum Currus; 7. the Meinaci, at the foot of Mount Thala; 8. the Naba, on the Weſt of Vallis Garamantica. 9. the Derbici, dwelling on the Weſt of the hill Aranga. And 10. the Pſylli, placed by Ptolomy amongſt the Inhabitants of Cyrene; but ſo near the borders of this Countrey, and ſo far from the civilities of thoſe Nations which converſed either with Rome or Carthage; that they may more properly be thought to belong to this. Of a nature ſo venomous, that they could poyſon a Snake. Inſomuch, that when their Wives were delivered, they would throw their children amongſt a bed of Serpents; ſuppoſing that Child to be born of an adulterate bed, the very ſmell of whoſe body would not drive away a whole brood of the like poyſonous vermine. Others there were of leſs note, which that Author calleth Minores Gentes; many in number, of ſmall fame, and therefore not material to be here inſerted; thoſe of moſt note, the Africerones (whom ſome Authors call the Gampſaphantes) honoured with the Attribute of Gens Magna, the greateſt as it ſeems of thoſe leſſer Nations. None of them of much note in the way of ſtory, except they were theſe Libyans, which are ſo famouſed in Herodotus's for an expedition they made againſt the South winde. For when this wind blowing abroad the hils and deſarts of ſand, had dried up thoſe many Rills and waters they had among them; they to revenge this Injury, by common conſent armed themſelves, and went to fight againſt him. But they took not the South wind unprepared. For he muſtered up his forces, incountred them with ſuch a brave volley of ſand, that he overwhelmed and ſlew them all. A better friend was the North wind to the Citizens of Rhegium, in Italy, and better was he rewarded for it: for having ſcattered a mighty Fleet, which Dyoniſius prepared againſt them, he was by the Common-Council, made free of their City. That part of Cæſars war, which was managed here, we ſhall hereafeer meet with on another occaſion.

Thus having took a view of the ſtate of this Countrey, as it ſtood of old; we will next look upon it in its preſent condition; as comprehending the whole Provinces of 1. Biledulgerid, or Numidia: 2. Libya Deſerta, or Sarra; and 3. a great part of that Countrey which is now called Terra Nigritarum. But becauſe the greateſt part of this laſt Countrey is to come under another accompt, we will here only take the two firſt into conſideration.

1. NUMIDIA.

1. NUMIDIA, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Egypt; on the Weſt, with the Atlantick Ocean; on the North, with Mount Atlas which parteth it from Barbary, and Cyrene; on the South, with Libya Deſerta.

It was thus firſt called by John Leo, an African Writer, to whoſe deſcription of all Africk we are much beholding, becauſe of that reſemblance which the people of it have to the old Numidians; which is after the cuſtom of the Nomades, living without houſes, under their Wagons, and Carts, as Lucan teſtifieth of them, thus:

> Nulla domus, plauſtris habitant, migrare per arva
> Mos, atq; errantes circumvectare Penates.
> They dwell in wains, not houſes; and do ſtray
> Through fields, and with them lead their gods each way.

And worthily may they owe their names to them, from whom they borrow ſo much of their Nature: for the people to this day ſpend their lives in hunting, and ſtay but three or four daies in a place, as long as the graſs will ſerve the Camels. This is the cauſe why this Countrey is ſo ill peopled, the Towns ſo ſmall in themſelves, and ſo remote from others. An example hereof is Teſſet a great City in their eſteem, which yet containeth but 400 houſholds, and hath no neighbours within 300 Miles of it.

The Countrey aboundeth with Dates, whence it is called Dactylorum regio, and in the Arabick Biledulgerid, which ſignifieth alſo a Date-region. Theſe Dates (to ſpeak properly) the fruit of the Palm Trees, uſually growing in hot Countreys, of which, ſome are male, ſome female; the firſt bringing forth only Flowers, the other Fruit: and yet the male ſo beneficial to the increaſe of the Dates, that unleſs a flowred bough of the male be ingrafted into the female, the Dates never prove good, in caſe they bear any Dates at all, as before was noted. This fruit is the chief diet of the people: but this ſweet meat hath ſowr ſauce; for it commonly rotteth their teeth betimes. As for the Stones of theſe Dates, they feed their Goats with them, whereby they grow fat, and yield ſtore of Milk. The Ayre hereof, of ſo ſound a nature, that if a man be troubled with the French Diſeaſe, he ſhall there, without any courſe of Phyſick, find a preſent remedy.

The natural Inhabitants of this Countrey are ſaid to be a baſe and vile people, Thieves, Murderers, treacherous, and ignorant of all things; feeding moſt commonly on Dates, Barley, and Carrion; accounting Bread a diet for their Feſtival daies. But the Arabians, who are intermingled with them, in moſt part of the Countrey, affirmed to be (comparatively with the Natives) ingenuous, liberal, and civil. The Garments of theſe Numidians, of the courſeſt cloath, ſo ſhort, that they cover not half the body: the richer ſort, diſtinguiſhed by a Jacket of blew Cotton with wide ſlieves. Their Steeds are Camels, which they ride on without a ſtirrop, or ſo much as a ſaddle; a leather thruſt through an hole made in the noſe of the Camel, ſerves them for a Bridle; and to ſave the charge of Spurs, they make uſe of a goad. Their Religion, Mahometiſme, to which perverted (Chriſtianity having once had ſome footing here) in the year 710. the Azanaghi, and other people of thoſe parts then ſubdued by the Saracens, who held them for a Nation of ſo little reckoning, that no man of accompt amongſt them would deſcend ſo low, as to be their Prince; but left them to be ruled as in former times, by the Chiefs, or Heads of their ſeveral Clans.

The chief River which is left, hath the name of Dara, and poſſibly enough may be the Daradus of Ptolomy. The reſt which are mentioned in that Author, riſing out of Mount Atlas, and falling headily this way, finding theſe barren wilderneſſes to afford them readieſt Channels, are trained along by the allurements of the Sands, and are either ſwallowed up in great Lakes, or being too liberal to the thirſty Sands, in their way to the Sea, die at the laſt for thirſt in the midſt of the Deſarts.

The Principal of their Provinces (if capable of a diſtinction into better and worſe) 1. DARA, more cultivated than the reſt, becauſe of the River running through it, whence it hath its name: 250 miles in length, indifferently fruitful, where the River doth overflow and water it; and of ſo different a nature from all the reſt, that here the Countrey people have ſome ſcattered Villages, the better ſort their ſeveral Caſtles. 2. PESCARA, ſo called from the chief town of it, exceedingly infeſted with Scorpions, the ſting whereof is preſent death. 3. FIGHIG, ſo called from the chief Town, alſo, inhabited by an induſtrious and witty people (in reſpect of the reſt) ſome of which betake themſelves to Merchandiſe; ſome to the ſtudy of the Law, which they ſtudy at Feſſe, and grow rich upon it. 4. TEGORARIN, a large Region, and well inhabited, better than any except Dara; as having in it 50 Caſtles or Gentlemens houſes, and 100 Villages. The people wealthy, in regard of the great trade which they drive with the Negroes; and pretty good Husbands in manuring their land, on which they are forced to lay much ſoyl; and will therefore let ſome of it Rent-free to ſtrangers, reſerving only the dung of themſelves and their Cattel. 5. BILEDULGERID, ſpecially ſo called, abundantly fruitful in Dates, whence it had the name; but deſtitute of Corn, by reaſon of the extream dryneſs of the ſoyl: and yet hath in it many Towns of good note among them. Of leſs note, 6. Teſſet, 7. Segelmeſſe, 8. Zeb, 9. Tebelbeti, and 10. Feſſen, ſo called from the chiefeſt of their Towns and Villages.

Towns of moſt note both now and in former times, beſides thoſe ſpoken of before; 1. Timugedit, in the Province of Dara, the Birth-place of Mahomet Ben Amet and his three ſons, the founders of the Xeriffian Empire. 2. Tafilete, in the ſaid Province, to which place Mahomet the ſecond of theſe ſons, and ſecond King of Morocco of that family, confined his eldeſt Brother Amet, having took him Priſoner, Anno 1544. 3. Teſſet, a great Town of 400 houſes, but ſo poorly neighboured, that there is no other inhabited place within 300 miles of it; but of that before, 4. Techort; the Inhabitants whereof are very courteous to ſtrangers, whom they entertain at free-coſt; and chuſe rather to marry their Daughters to them, than to any of the Natives. 5. Ebeucah, the moſt Eaſtern Town in all this Countrey, diſtant about 100 miles from the borders of Egypt. 6. Dobris, one of the chief Cities of the Garamantes, of great renown in former times for Wells or Fountain of the Sun. The waters whereof being luke-warm at the Sun-riſing, cooled more and more till noon, was then very cold, and ſo continued until midnight; afterwards by degrees growing hotter and hotter; as if it had a natural Antipathy with the Sun, hotteſt when that was furtheſt off: and cold when neareſt. 7. Maſucha, ſeated on a Rock, garriſoned by Jugurth for a place of refuge, but taken by Marius, in the proſecution of that war. 8. Capſa, the chief City of all this Tract, ſaid to be built by Hercules; but queſtionleſs of very great ſtrength; anguibus arenisq́; vallata, made inacceſſible (ſaith the Hiſtorian) by the thick Sands, and multitudes of Serpents which were harboured in them; but eaſily forced by Marius in his Wars with Jugurth, and utterly deſtroyed by Ceſar in his war againſt Juba.

It ſeems by this, that thoſe people neighbouring Mount Atlas, were much at the diſpoſal of the Kings of Mauritania, in the times foregoing; and ſo they have been alſo in theſe latter times: For though neglected by the Romans, who thought it an high point of wiſdom not to extend their Empire beyond that Mountain; yet the Saracens had not long poſſeſſed themſelves of thoſe parts of Barbary, which was in the year 698. but within twelve years (Anno 710.) they ſubdued this Countrey, and planted their Religion in it, though not themſelves. Nor was Amet, the firſt Xeriffe of Morocco warm in that eſtate, when he thought it beſt for him to ſecure himſelf in it by the conqueſt of this: to whoſe ſucceſſors, the chiefes of the Tribes hereof render ſome acknowledgements.

2. LIBYA DESERTA.

2. LIBYA DESERTA, is bounded on the North with Numidia, or Biledulgerid, to which contiguous; on the Eaſt, with Nubia, a Kingdom and Province of the Land of the Negroes; on the South, with the land of Negroes wholly; and on the Weſt, with Gualata, another Province of theſe Negroes interpoſed betwixt it and the Atlantick.

The reaſon of the name of Libya we have had before. To which Deſerta was added upon very good reaſons, as well to difference it from the other Libya, a Province of Egypt, as to expreſs the barren and ſandy condition of it: in which reſpect by the Arabians called Sara, ſignifying in their language a rude and inhabitable Deſart, as this Countrey is. So truly ſuch, that men may travel in it eight daies together without finding water, or ſeeing any tree, and no graſs at all. The water which they have is drawn out of Pits, exceeding brackiſh; and many times thoſe pits ſo covered with the Sands, that men die for thirſt; the Merchants therefore carrying their water with them on the backs of Camels; which if it fail, they kill their Camels, and drink a water which they wring out of their guts. And yet as dangerous and uncomfortable as theſe Deſarts be, they are very much travelled by the Merchants of Feſſe, and Tremeſen, trading to Agades and Tombatum, in the land of Negroes.

The people differ not much from the Numidians in ſhape or qualities; but if a worſe of quality, it muſt be the Libyan. They did once worſhip a God called Pſaphon, who when he lived, taught divers Birds which he caught, and then ſet at liberty, to ſay theſe words, viz. Pſaphon is a great God: which the ſimple people hearing, and admiring at it, afforded him Divine Honours. Converted at laſt to the Chriſtian Faith, they remained a while in the profeſſion of the Goſpel: exterminated by the Saracens about the year 710.. who having added Numidia, or Biledulgerid to their former conqueſts, planted their Superſtitions in this Countrey alſo.

This Countrey is divided (as others into Provinces) into five great Deſarts, to which thoſe of leſs note are to be referred.

1. ZANHAGA, beginning at the borders of Gualata (interpoſed betwixt it and the Atlantick Ocean) and extending Eaſtward to the Salt-pits of Tegaza; having on the South, Gualata and Tombutum in the land of Negroes; ſo deſtitute of water, that there is one pit only at the end of each hundred mile, brackiſh and unwholſom; and in the Deſarts of Azaoad and Araoan, which are parts of this, but one in an 150 or 200 miles riding.

2. ZUENZIGA, extended from the Salt-pits of Tegaza Eaſtward, to the Deſart of Targa: bounded on the North, with Segelmeſſe, and Tebelbeti, Numidian Provinces; and on the South, with the Deſarts of Gbir and Guber. So void of water (eſpecially in that part thereof which is called Goguden) that in nine dayes travel there is not ſo much as one drop to be ſeen, but what they carry on their Camels.

3. TARGA, extended Eaſtward to the Deſart of Ighidi; and reaching from Tegorarin in the North, to the Deſart of Agader in the South: the beſt conditioned part of all this Countrey, well watered, of a temperate Ayre, and a ſoyl reaſonably fruitful. In length from North to South 300 miles; and liberally ſtored with Manna, which they gather into little Veſſels, and carry to Agades to ſell. Mingled in water or with Pottage it is very cooling; and drank of in their Feaſts, as a ſpecial dainty.

4. LEMBTA, extendeth from the Deſarts of Ighidi, unto that of Bordea.

5. BORDEA, which reacheth to the borders of Nubia. Of theſe two there is little to be ſaid in ſeveral, but that this laſt was diſcovered lately by one Hamar, a guide to a Caravan of Merchants; who blinded with the ſands, wandred out of his way, and cauſing ſand to be given him at every twenty miles end, found by the ſmell at laſt that they begun to draw nigh ſome inhabited place, and told them of it 40 miles before they came to it.

Cities of note we hope for none, where we find no water. Of ſuch as go for Cities here, the moſt conſiderable, 1. Tegaza, rich in veins of Salt, reſembling Marble; which the Inhabitants, being 20 days diſtant from any habitation, and conſequently many times in danger to die for famine; exchange for Victuals with the Merchants of Tombutum, who come hither for it. Much troubled with the South winds, which doth ſo drive the ſands upon them; that it cauſeth many of them to looſe their ſight. 2. Huaden, or Hoden, a known reſting place, and a great refreſhment to the Merchant in the midſt of theſe Deſarts, 3. Guargata on the brink of a Lake, fed by a River of hot water; affirmed to be a Town of elegant building; and inhabited by a wealthy people, 4. Toberaum, of little note, but that it ſerveth for a Stage or baiting place to the weary Traveller. Of which kind there are ſaid to be others at the extremities or ends of each ſeveral Deſarts; the Havens of ſuch men as ſail in theſe ſandy Seas, but not elſe obſervable.

Nor is there much, if any thing, obſervable of them in the way of Story, but that not looked after by any of the great Conquerours, either Greeks or Romans; much of the Countrey was poſſeſſed by Arabian Colonies (men fit enough to plant in ſuch barbarous Nations:) at ſuch time as the Saracens planted their Religion here. The Government of the Countrey ſince, as it was before, by the Chiefs of their ſeveral Clans, or Families, who as they know no Law themſelves, ſo do the people ſhew as much ignorance of it in their lives and actions: differing but little from brute Beaſts, more than ſhape and ſpeech.

And ſo much for LIBYA INTERIOR.

TERRA NIGRITARUM.

TERRA NIGRITARUM, or THE LAND OF NEGROES, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Æthiopia Superior; on the Weſt, with the Atlantick Ocean, on the North with Libya Deſerta; and on the South, with the Æthiopick Ocean, and part of Æthiopia Inferior. So called from the Nigrita, the chief of the Nations here inhabiting in the time of Ptolomy: and they ſo named from the River Niger, of which more anon.

The Country very hot by reaſon of its ſituation under the Torrid Zone; yet very well inhabited, full of people, and in ſome places alwayes green: well watered, and exceeding fruitful, ſpecially in thoſe parts which lie within the compaſs of the overflowings of the River Niger; and on the further ſide of the River Sanaga: abundantly well ſtored both with Corn, Cattel, and Garden-ware for the uſe of their Kitchins; well Wooded, and thoſe Woods well furniſhed with Elephants and other Beaſts, both wild and tame. Their greateſt want (but ſuch a want as may be born with) is the want of Fruit-trees, few of which they have; and thoſe they have, bear one kind of fruit onely, which is like the Cheſnut, but ſomewhat bitterer. Rain here doth neither hurt nor help; their greateſt welfare conſiſting in the overflowings of Niger; as that of Egypt in the inundations of Nile. In ſome parts liberally enriched with Mines both of Gold and Silver, very fine and pure: ſo that had not the Portugals affected the honour of diſcovering New-Worlds as much as Wealth; they might have made as rich a Factory here, as at the Indies.

The Inhabitants, till the coming of the Portugals thither, were for the moſt part ſo rude and barbarous, that they ſeem to want that uſe of Reaſon which is peculiar unto man; of little wit and deſtitute of all Arts and ſciences; prone to luxury, and for the greateſt part Idolaters, though not without ſome ſmall admixture of Mahumetans. When the Portugals firſt ſailed into theſe Coaſts, the People hereof took the Ships for great Birds with white wings: and after, upon better acquaintance, they could not be brought to believe, but that the Eyes which were caſually painted on the beaks of the ſhips, were the eyes by which they ſaw how to direct themſelves in their courſe. Guns ſeemed to them, for their hideous noiſe, to be the works of the Devil; and for Bag-pipes, they took them to be living creatures; neither when they had been permitted to feel them, would they be perſwaded but that they were the work of Gods own hands. The very Nobles (if ſo noble a name may without offence be given to ſuch blockiſh people) are ſo dull and ſtupid, that they are ignorant of all things which belong to civil ſociety: and yet ſo reverent of their King, that when they are in his preſence, they never look him in the face, but ſit flat on their buttock, with their elbows on their knees, and their hands on their faces. They uſe to anoint their hair with the fat of Fiſhes, which makes them ſtink more wretchedly than they would do otherwiſe. Of complexion they are for the moſt part Cole-black, whence the name of Negroes; but on the South-ſide of the River Senaga, they are only Tawny: the Blacks ſo much in love with their own complexion, that they uſe to paint the Devil white; which I find thus verſified.

The Land of Negroes is not far from thence,
Neerer extended to th' Atlantick Main;
Wherein the Black Prince keeps his reſidence,
Attended by his jetty coloured Train:
Who in their native beauty moſt delight,
And in contempt do paint the Devil white.

They have tried all Religions, but agree in none. Idolaters at the firſt, as others the Deſcendants of Cham: Afterwards it is ſaid that they received the Rites and Religion of the Jews, (but the time and occaſion of it I do no where find;) in which they continued very long: But that being worn out at the laſt, Chriſtianity prevailed in ſome Kingdoms of it. In the year 973. Mahumetiſm began to get ground amongſt them, by the diligence and zeal of ſome of the Preachers of that Law: the firſt who were ſeduced that way being thoſe of Melli; after which Tombuto, and then Gualata, were infected with the ſame poyſon alſo. In the end, all the reſt of this Country followed their example, except the Kingdom of Borneo, ſome part of Nubia, and the Coaſts of the Atlantick Ocean, which continue in their antient Gentiliſm: Chriſtianity being confined to a corner of Nubia (if ſtill there remaining) and ſome few Garriſons belonging to the Crown of Portugal. And as they are of different Religions, ſo are they alſo of ſeveral Languages: thoſe of Gualata, Guinea, Tombutum, Melli, and Gugonti, ſpeaking the Language called Sungai; the Guberoi, Canontes, Chæſena, and Gangrates, &c. that called Guber; Gualata, a language of its own; and thoſe of Nubia, one reſembling the Arabick, Chaldæan, and Egyptian.

Mountains of moſt note in it, in the former times, were thoſe of 1. Arvaltes, and 2. Arangus, and 3. that called Deorum currus; this laſt ſuppoſed to be the ſame which is now called Punta de Lopes Gonſales, but that more probably, which they now call Cabo de Sierra Leona, a large Promontory, thruſting it ſelf into the Sea; diſcerned afar off by the Saylor and the Country-people, as well by reaſon of his height, reaching to the clouds, as the continual lightnings and thunders, which do iſſue thence.

Rivers of moſt note, beſides Nile, which watereth it on the Eaſt, 1. Senaga, or Canaga, which riſeth out of the Lake of Gnoga, ſuppoſed to be the ſame which Ptolomy calleth Lacum Chelonidem. And if ſo, then muſt this be the River Gir, of which he ſaith, that having fallen into that Lake, and there ſwallowed up, it thence produced another River, whoſe name he telleth not; little inferiour unto Nilus for the length of its courſe, the variety of ſtrange Creatures which are bred therein, or the diſtinction which it maketh in the face of this Country: the people on the one ſide of it, being Black, on the other Tawny; the ſoil on the one ſide very barren, on the other fruitful. In the end having run his race, he falleth into the Atlantick by two great Out-lets. 2. Niger a River better known to Ptolomy by name than nature; now found to have its riſe from a great Lake, within two degrees of the Equinoctial; whence running northwards for a time, he hideth himſelf under ground for the ſpace of 60 miles together: when riſing up again, and making a great Lake, called the Lake of Borneo, he bendeth his courſe directly Weſtward; and taking in many leſs Channels, he teareth the earth into many Iſlands, and at laſt falleth into the Sea. Of as long courſe, and the ſame wondrous nature as the River Nilus. For from the fifteenth day of June, it overfloweth all the adjacent fields, the ſpace of 40 days together; and in ſo many more, recollecteth his waters, into their proper Channels: the whole Country being indebted to theſe inundations, for its fertility, which otherwiſe could be but ſmall, ſince the dryneſs of the ſoyl can afford no exhalations, whereby clouds may be generated, and the earth refreſhed with moyſtures, or revived with dewes.

Chief Cities of this Country in the time of Ptolomy, 1. Nigira, the Metropolis of the Country, 2. Panagra, 3. Malachath, 4. Anygath, 5. Thumondacana, 6. Suluce; and others to the number of 17 in all; ſituate all along the courſe of the River Niger: Of all which we have nothing now remaining but the ſituation and the names, which that Author giveth us. So that the memory of all the Ancient Towns and People being quite defaced; we muſt look upon it now as it ſtandeth divided at this time into ſeveral Kingdoms, 25 at the leaſt in all (ſome ſay many more) the chief of which are theſe that follow.

1. ORA ANTEROSA, A large tract of ground on the Weſtern Ocean, extended from Cape Blance to the River Carmuga, ſandy and barren, but reaſonably well peopled. The Inhabitants hereof called Azanaghi, were accompted formerly very rude and barbarous; much civilized ſince the Portugals and other Chriſtian Nations began to trade there; of middle ſtature, complexioned between black and aſh colour; great lyers, very treacherous, poor and parſimonious, and very patient in extreams both of heat, and hunger. The chief Towns, 1. Porto di Dio (we may call it Gods Port) and 2. Porto del Riſcatto, two frequented Havens, thus named occaſionally by the Portugueze, at their firſt coming thither. 3. Arquin, a ſtrong Fortreſs of the Portugals, ſituate on or neer the Promontory now called Cape Blance; and giving name unto ſome Iſlands, five or ſix in number lying neer unto it, called the Iſles of Arquin; inhabited by a barbarous People, named the Azanhays; but of no great note. Theſe coaſts diſcovered firſt by the Portugals, An. 1452. under the conduct of Prince Henry, ſon of John the firſt; or by his incouragement and directions.

2. GUALATA, diſtant from the Ocean 100 miles, (the Province of Ora Anteroſa being interpoſed) is but a ſmall Country, though a Kingdom; containing in it but three Burrough-Towns, with ſome Territorie of ground and petty Hamlets belonging to them. Fruitful onely in Dates, Mill, and Pulſe; but of theſe two laſt no great abundance. The Inhabitants Cole-black, hoſpitable towards ſtrangers to their power, but poor and miſerable; without Laws, ſetled form of Government, Gentry and Judges.

2. AGADEZ bordering on Targa, one of the five Deſarts of Libya; the People of it generally given to grazing, their houſes made of green boughs, which upon every change of Paſture they carry with them. So that we are to look for few Towns among them, but theſe moveable Villages. One of good note it hath, called Agadez, by the name of the Country, inhabited for the moſt part by Merchants Strangers, who drive a great Trade betwixt this and Tremeſen. The Town well walled, the houſes of a better building than the Country promiſeth; the People civiller, and more fair conditioned than the reſt of the Negroes, ſeated commodiouſly on a River which falleth into the Senaga, and by that means hath correſpondence with the Ocean alſo. The King hereof, a Tributary to the King of Tombuto, payeth him 15000 Crowns of Annual tribute.

4. CANO, a large Province on this ſide of the River Canaga, full of woods, mountainous, and in ſome parts deſart; but plentiful enough of Corn, Rice, Citrons, and Pomegranates, with good ſtore of Cotton-wooll. Well-watered beſides that great River, with ſome leſſer Streams. Sufficiently populous, and ſtored with good Towns and Villages, the habitations of the Shepherds and Husbandmen; as the chief Town called Cano, is of wealthy Merchants. This the Seat-royal of their King, a Tributary alſo unto him of Tombuto, environed with a wall, built of a Chalk-ſtone, as moſt part of the houſes are.

5. CASENA, on the Eaſt of Cano, but leſs fruitful far; the Country over-grown with vaſt woods, and the ſoyl untractable; affording only Mill, and Barley, but of that good plenty. The People as black as any Coal, with great noſes, and moſt prominent lips. Their houſes very poor and mean, and their Towns accordingly, none of them numbring more than 300 Families.

6. SANAGA, lying on the other ſide of that River, from which thus named; extendeth to the Atlantick Ocean, as far as to the Promontory, which by Ptolomy named Arſinarium, is now called Cape Vert, or Caput Viride. The Country full of rich Paſtures, goodly Trees, and moſt ſorts of Fruits; plentiful enough of Mill and Pulſe, but ill provided of other Corn, and no Grapes at all. Well watered both with Lakes and Rivers. No tame beaſts about their fields, but Goats, Cows and Oxen; of Lyons, Leopards, Wolves, and Elephants, too great a plenty. The people extream black, much given to lying, treacherous, very full of talk, exceſſively venereous, and extreamly jealous. A King they have, but ſuch a one as holdeth but by courteſie onely, having no certain Rents, or Revenues, but what is given by his Nobles.

7. GAMBRA, or GAMBEA, a ſmall Kingdom on the River ſo named, but bordering in ſome places on the Atlantick. In thoſe parts very pleaſant, the Trees alwayes flouriſhing, the air very hot; in other parts, of the ſame nature with Sanaga, but that this affords good ſtore of Rice, which the other doth not.

8. TOMBUTUM, on the further ſide of the River Sanaga: exceeding plentiful of Corn, Cattel, Milk, and Butter. Deſtitute of Salt, but what they buy of forrein Merchants at exceſſive rates; and ſmall ſtore of Horſes. Well watered by a branch alſo of the River Niger, and many wells of purpoſe made to receive ſuch waters, as by artificial Dikes and Channels are derived from both. The people courteous, rich, and pleaſant, ſpending whole dayes and nights in ſinging and dancing. Their food, Fleſh, Butter, Milk, and Fiſh, which they mingle together, and make it neither toothſome nor wholſome. The chief Towns, 1. Tombuto, which gives name to this Kingdom, ſituate about twelve miles from a branch of the Niger and founded by the Saracens, or Arabians in the 610th. year of their Hegira. The houſes all of mud and thatch, except one fair Church, and the Kings Palace, both of lime and ſtone. Inhabited by wealthy Merchants, who manage a great trade betwixt this and Feſſe. 2. Gago, the reſidence of the King; large, without walls, the buildings very poor and mean, except ſuch as belong unto the King or the chief Nobility. The Merchants rich, and their wares ſumptuous and precious, but exceſſive dear. The Town about 400 miles diſtant from Tombuto, ſituate in a fruitful Countrey for Rice, Fruits, and Fleſh, and well repleniſhed with freſh water. 3. Cabra, a large Town, but unwalled, and of no better building than the other two.

9. MELLI, lying on the Eaſt of Tombutum, is a ſpacious and fruitful Province, ſituate all along on a branch of the River Niger, in breadth 300 miles, and abundantly fertile, eſpecially in Corn, Cattel, and Cotton Wooll: the people generally very wealthy; of greater wit, civility and induſtry than the reſt of the Negroes. The chief Town of it is called Melli, unwalled, but large, as containing in it 6000 families; furniſhed with many Temples, Prieſts, and Readers of the Mahometan Law, which thoſe of this Countrey did firſt unhappily admit of. This the Seat-royal of their Kings, who are very courteous unto ſtrangers; but Homagers and Tributaries to the King of Tombutum.

10. GHENEOA, ſituate betwixt Gualata, Tombutum, and Melli, but ſo that it bordereth in one place on the Ocean alſo; is a wealthy Countrey: but hath neither Town, or Caſtle in it, except that wherein the King reſideth, who is a Vaſſal alſo to the King of Tombutum. That Town the reſidence alſo of their Prieſts, Doctors, and Merchants: of which the Prieſts and Doctors are apparelled in white, but all the reſt in black, or blue Cotton. The people have great traffick with the Merchants of Barbary; and though made very rich by the overflowings of Niger, and the wealth of the Countrey, they have great ſtore of Gold uncoined; yet in buying and ſelling at home, they uſe iron-mony.

11. GUBER lieth on the Eaſt of the former Province; of the ſame length, and naturally well fenced with lofty mountains. Exceeding populous, and thick ſet with Villages, in which dwell their Husband-men and Shepherds; rich in their numerous herds of all ſorts of Cattel, as alſo great quantities of Rice and Pulſe: the people very induſtrious, and good Artificers. Their principal Town is called Guber alſo, a Town of 6000 families, the uſual reſidence of their King; full of wealthy Merchants, and rich in Manufactures.

12. GIALOFI lieth betwixt the two great Rivers of Sanaga and Gambia. The people whereof are of ſuch admirable dexterity, that they can leap upon an horſe when he is in his full gallop, ſtand in the ſaddle when he runneth faſteſt; turn themſelves about upon his back, and ſuddenly down. Of their Countrey I find little, of their Story nothing, but that Bemoin one of their Kings, being overlaid with Civil wars, in the year 1489 went for aid to the King of Portugal, and gave great hopes of his converſion to the Chriſtian faith. But being ſhamefully murdered by Pedro de Vas the Portugal General, the hopes of Chriſtianity in theſe parts fell together with him.

13. GUINEA, is a Sea-coaſt Countrey, extended from Sierra Leona (ſo called from the Lyon-like roaring of the Waves beating on that Promontory) in the tenth degree of Longitude, to the borders of Benin in the 30th. But the Portugals comprehend under this name the whole Sea-coaſt of Africk from Cape Blanco and the Countrey of Ora Anteroſa, to Angola, and Congo, incluſively, in the Lower Æthiopia. But take it in the proper ſenſe, as before limited, and we ſhall find it to be rich in Gold, Ivory, Rice, Barley, Cotton-wooll, and a ſort of Pepper, which the Portugals call Pimienta del Rabo, the Natives Melegneta, and we Guinie-pepper: of double the efficacy of the Pepper which comes from India; and therefore forbidden to be ſold by the Kings of Portugal, for fear their Indian trade ſhould be diſcontinued. Well ſtored with Sheep and Poultry, and of Dates good plenty. All other Fruits which they want, or care for, are brought thither from Gualata. Birds in abundance, and of Elephants and Apes too many. A Tree they have, by them called Mignolo, the Bark whereof being cut doth afford a moſt excellent liquor, more pleaſant, ſtrong, and nouriſhing, than the choiceſt Wines; which they drink of in their great Feaſts, even to drunkenneſs. The people of both Sexes very rude and barbarous, as well in their habit, as their manners; yet amongſt many barbarous cuſtomes they have one moſt commendable, which is the breeding of their Maidens. When marriable, they place them in an houſe ſevered from the reſt of their Cities, like a Cloyſter, or Monaſtery; where for a years ſpace, they are trained up by ſome old man of beſt eſtimation. At the years end they are brought out well apparelled with Muſick & dances; where the young men pleaſe themſelves in the choyce of their wives: for whom having bargained with their Parents, they ſatisfie the old man for his care and pains in their Education. They keep one day of reſt weekly, but therein differ from all Nations in the world beſides, that they keep their Sabbath upon the Tueſday. Diſtracted into as many Kingdoms, as great Tribes, or Families: the Kings thereof ſubordinate unto one another, as they lie more within the Land, till they end all in a ſubjection to the King of Mandinga. Places of moſt note. 1. Songus, the principal of Mandinga, about 100 leagues Eaſtward from the Cape of Palmes. 2. Budomel, the chief Town of the Kingdom ſo called. 3. Uxoo in the Center of all the Countrey. 4. Mina, a ſtrong Hold of the Portugals, ſituate near the Cape, called Cabo de Trois Pentas, the three-pointed Cape; named ſomtimes alſo S. George de Mina, by the name of the Cappadocian Martyr, and the Mines of Gold, which they hoped to find there. By which, and by the Fort of Arquin, which they have upon Cape Blanco, in the North part of this Land of the Negroes; they command all the Countreys which they call by the name of Guinea. This Town not built until the year 1486. in the beginning of the reign of John the 2d. though the diſcovery of theſe Coaſts had been made before, An. 1452. under the conduct of Prince Henry Duke of Viſeo, Son of John the firſt. By whoſe encouragement the Portugueze did firſt imploy themſelves in forreign diſcoveries, and became enamoured of the Seas. For in this Interval, the Portingals being more covetous of new diſcoveries, than of fortifying and ſecuring the old, gave opportunity to the Caſtilians to look after this Countrey, who having took a view of it, in the year 1477. purſued the Enterprize the next year with a Fleet of 35 ſhips, under the command of Pedro de Cobides, who brought thence great quantity of Gold: but in the year 1479. by an agreement, or capitulation between thoſe Princes, the trade hereof was again left free to the Portugals; who thereupon diſcovering the Iſle of St. George, and finding it a fit place to ſecure, and command the reſt, built in it the ſtrong Fort or Caſtle of Mina, which before we ſpoke of.

14. BENIN, lieth directly Eaſt of Guinea, by the Portugals reckoned for a Province, or Kingdom of it: the King whereof is ſaid to have 600 wives, with all which twice a year he goeth out in Pomp. The Gentlemen (if I abuſe not the name) have moſt of them 80 wives, ſome more; he that is pooreſt, ten, or twelve, and the more the merrier. The people thereof do cut and raſe their skin with three lines drawn to the Navel; eſteeming it neceſſary to Salvation. They uſe all, both men and women, to go naked till they are married; and then to be cloathed only from the waſte to the knees: ſo that had our Sir Thomas Moor lived in theſe parts, he had in ſome meaſure had his deſire. For he among other ſtrange plots in his Utopian Common-wealth, telleth us, how there it is the cuſtom, for ſome reverend old Sire to bring in naked the young man, and ſome hoary old Matron, to preſent naked, the young woman; between whom a Marriage is propounded. For, ſaith he, in buying a Horſe, the Chapman not only vieweth his naked Carcaſe, but taketh off all his Trappings and Saddle, leſt under them ſome blame might be hidden: why then in chuſing of a wife, ſhould we take one, of whom we ſee no more than the face (unius palmæ ſpatium) and perhaps ſcarce that. The learned and ingenuous Author of the New Atlantis, though he diſlike of Marriages made upon ſuch uncertainties, yet he would have this diſcovery made by ſome friends of the parties, not by them themſelves: it being, as he ſaith, very inconvenient that after ſuch a plain and familiar ſight of each others perſon, there ſhould be a refuſal upon either ſide. But theſe new Projects, I refer to your modeſt Cenſures.

15. GUANGARA, lieth on the North of Benin, a wealthy and well-peopled Country; but their Towns and Villages very mean, except that called by the ſame name with the Country, where the King reſideth, which is ſomwhat better than the reſt, well traded, and full of rich Merchants. The King hereof of ſo great Revenues, that he keepeth ſeven thouſand Archers, and five hundred Horſe in continual pay, but Homager and Tributary to the King of Bornum.

16. BORNUM, a large and opulent Countrey on the Weſt of Guangara, is there extended to the length of 500 miles. Diſtinguiſhed equally in a manner into hils, and vallies: the hils inhabited by Neatherds, and Sheepherds, breeding great flocks and herds of Cattel, with Mill, and many other fruits to us unknown; the Valleys repleniſhed with many Market-towns, and as full of Corn. The people are of no Religion, but live like beaſts, without propriety ſo much as in their Wives, or Children: nor are they differenced by names, as in other places, but by ſome mark upon their bodies. Which though it ſeem ſtrange to us of this preſent age, yet was it thus in part, with our Saxon Anceſtors. Whence have we elſe the names of White, Brown, Black, Gray, Green, and Tawny, or thoſe of Long, Short, Low, Curle, Criſpe, and others, but from ſuch Originals? Not to ſay any thing of the names of Trades, and Occupations, ſo familiar with us. The name of their chief City is Borneo, where their King reſideth. A potent Prince, who keepeth in continual pay three thouſand Horſe, and great numbers of Foot, and yet is ſaid to have no other Revenue, than what he getteth by ſtrong hand from his Enemies. Which if it be true, thoſe Kings muſt needs be good Warriors, and have great ſucceſſes alſo in their undertakings: it being alſo ſaid of theſe Kings of Borneo, that all the Furniture of their Horſes, all the Diſhes, Cups and Platters which they eat or drink in, yea the very chains of his Dogs, were of fineſt Gold.

17. Gaoga lieth betwixt Borneo, and the Deſarts of Nubia: the Countrey almoſt ſquare, each ſide thereof extended 500 miles. The people ignorant, rude uncivil, but ſpecially thoſe which dwell in the Mountains: their houſes built moſt of boughs and leaves, which once dry, eaſily take fire; but the beſt is, they are ſoon repaired: their greateſt wealth is in their Cattel, which they keep moſt tenderly. About the year 1420. they were brought into ſubjection by a Negro Slave, who having ſlain his Maſter, by the help of his wealth grew ſtrong enough to incroach on his Neighbours: and ſelling ſuch captives as he took, for horſes of Egypt, became King of Gaoga, and in fine very gracious with the Mamaluck Sultans. His Succeſſors have ſince ſo enlarged their Territories, that they are ſecond unto none but the Kings of Tombutum.

18. NUBIA hath on the Weſt Gaoga, bounded on the North with Egypt, extended Eaſtward unto Nilus, by which parted from Æthiopia Superior, or the Habaſſine Empire. So called from the Nuba, an ancient and potent people of this Tract, ſpoken of by Ptolomy: the great Lake, anciently called Nubæ Palus, being hence denominated. A diſtinct people from thoſe of the ſame name, dwelling on the ſhores of the Red-Sea, near unto Sinus Avalites, who from the ſhortneſs of their ſtature, paſſed in accompt for Pigmies; Νύβαι Πυγμαῖοι, ſaith Heſychius an old Grammarian: theſe being a ſtrong and potent Nation, and well skilled in wars. Inſomuch as Cyriacus once a King hereof, underſtanding of ſome preſſures laid upon the Chriſtians of Egypt, is ſaid to have raiſed 100000 Horſe for their aid and ſuccour, but by the perſwaſions of the Patriarch of Alexandria, went back unfought with. For at that time the Countrey was wholly Chriſtian, and had been ſo from the very daies of the Apoſtles: but are now fallen off again to their former Idolatries, or become Mahometans, for want of Miniſters to inſtruct them. It is recorded by Alvarez, the Writer of the Æthiopick Hiſtory, that at his being in the Court of the Abaſſine Emperour, there came Ambaſſadors out of Nubia, to intreat a ſupply of Paſtors to inſtruct their Nation, and repair Chriſtianity amongſt them; but were unchriſtianly rejected.

Here is a Poyſon in this Countrey, of which the tenth part of a grain will diſpatch a man in a quarter of an hour, and is ſold for ten Ducats an Ounce; the Cuſtoms, for which, unto the King is as much as the price unto the Merchant. But for this one ill commodity, they have many good; that is to ſay, Corn, Sugar, Civet, Sanders, Ivory, all in great abundance; ſome ſtore of Gold, and other Metals. The Countrey naturally ſandy; but well refreſhed with Lakes and Rivers, which do much enrich it; inſomuch as the people generally are very wealthy, and manage a great trade with the Merchants of Caire and Egypt. Their chief City is called Dangala, large and well frequented; ſaid to contain no fewer than 10000 families; but their houſes built of nothing but thatch and mortar. In other parts, eſpecially towards the River Nilus, they have many Villages; few, or none of them worth the naming.

There are many other Kingdoms in this Land of Negroes, beſides thoſe in Guinea, but of leſſer note; as 19. BITO. 20. TEMIANO. 21. ZEGZEG. 22. ZANFARA. 23. GOTHAN. 24. MEDRA. 25. DAUM. Of which there is nothing to be ſpoken, but of their Poverty, or Riches, Bleſſings, or Curſes common to them with the reſt of theſe Nations; and therefore I purpoſely omit them.

This Countrey, or a great part of it, was anciently accounted part of Libya Interior; inhabited beſides the Nuba and Nigritæ ſpoken of before, by the Nabathræ dwelling about the hill Arvates, the Aroncæ, near the hill Arangus, the Agarginæ, Xylinces, and Alchalinces, Æthiopick Nations. Not much conſiderable in the buſineſs of former times; nor much diſcovered (not very perfectly at this day) till the year 973. at what time certain Mahometan Preachers, out of a ſuperſtitious zeal to propagate their Sect, firſt opened the way into theſe Countreys: the people then living like bruit beaſts, without King, Law, or any Form of Government; ſcarce knowing how to ſow their Lands, clad in the skins of as very beaſts as themſelves, and challenging no propriety in wives or children. Firſt conquered by Joſeph King of Morocco, of the race of the Almohades, and after that by the five Nations of Libya Deſerta, who divided them into fifteen parts, every one of thoſe five Nations poſſeſſing three of them. One of the Kings of theſe Libyans, named Soni Heli, being ſlain by Abuaci Iſchia General of his Forces, and the reſt terrified with that blow, An. 1526. the Negroes once again recovered their long loſt Liberty, and inſtituted divers Kings of their own. Amongſt them, Izchia was moſt deſervedly made King of Tombutum, who managed his affairs ſo well, that he conquered the Kings of Guber, Agadez, Cano, Melli, Zanfora, Zegzeg, Ghenaoa, Gambea, and Caſena, which he made his Tributaries. So that his Succeſſors are now the greateſt of thoſe five Kings, who have the ſupream power over all the reſt. The other four. 1. The King of Mandinga, Lording it over the Realms of Benin, Gioloſi, and the Kings of Guinea.; 2. The King of Borneo, the only one that is deſcended of the Libyan race, in greatneſs of command next to him of Tombuto; 3. The King of Gualata, whoſe Kingdom is confined within that one Province, but therein abſolute and ſupream; and 4. the King of Goaga, Paramount over all the reſt of theſe Provinces.

But becauſe the greateſt power is in the hands of the Kings of Tombuto, who poſſibly enough may in ſhort time bring all the reſt under his command, we will take a more particular view of his eſtate; affirmed to be the richeſt Prince in theſe parts of Africk, and to have many Plates and Scepters of Gold, ſome of which weigh 1300 pound weight. When any of his Subjects do appear before him, they kneel on both their knees, and bowing their heads unto the ground, caſt ſand over their ſhoulders, and upon their head, going forwards ſtill upon their knees. His Court he keeps in a royal manner, continually guarded with 3000 Horſe, but with many more Foot, all armed with Bowes and empoyſoned Arrows. To the Jews a very bitter Enemy, whom he admitteth not to trade in his Kingdoms, and confiſcateth the goods of all ſuch of his Subjects as hold traffick with them. Zealous of the Mahometan Law, and liberal in ſtipends to the Doctors & Profeſſors of it. Of greater power than any other beyond Atlas, but the Habaſſine Emperour. And though Amet the Xeriffe of Morocco, in the year 1589. had ſome hand upon him, and conquered a great part of this Kingdom, even as far as Gago, extending his Empire ſix moneths Journey, by Camels, beyond Morocco; yet it held not long: this King again recovering what was taken from him; and being ſince that time in as eminent power, as ever in any times before.

And ſo much for Terra NIGRITARUM.

ÆTHIOPIA SUPERIOR.

ÆTHIOPIA SUPERIOR, is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Red-Sea, and the Sinus Barbaricus; on the Weſt, with Libya Interior, the Realm of Nubia, in the land of the Negroes, and part of the Kingdom of Congo in the other Æthiopia; on the North, with Egypt, and Libya Marmarica; and on the South, with the Mountains of the Moon, by which parted from the main body of Æthiopia Inferior.

It was firſt called Ætheria, and afterwards Atlantia, as Pliny telleth us. In the end, the Grecians gave it the name of Æthiopia, from the Greek words Αἴθω, ſignifying to burn, and ὤψ a Countenance; becauſe the violent heats of the Sun had ſo ſcorched the Countenances of the Inhabitants. The additions of Sub Ægypto, Superior, and Interior, ſerve only to diſtinguiſh it from the other Æthiopia, which lieth further off from Egypt, on the outſide of this. It is called alſo Regnum Abyſſinorum, from the Abaſeni, or Abyſſini, a people of Arabin Felix; who paſſing over the Red-Sea, (not above ſeven miles broad in the narroweſt place) came and ſetled here. And in the Scripture it is ſtiled by the name of Ludim, from Lud the Son of Mizraim, who firſt planted it; as hath been proved by many ſtrong and concluding Arguments in our general Preface.

It is ſituate on both ſides of the Equinoctial, extending from the South Parallel of ſeven Degrees, where it meeteth with ſome part of the other Æthiopia; to the Northern end of the Iſle of Meroe, ſituate under the fifth Parallel on the North of that Circle. And though by this accompt it fall ſhort of the dimenſions aſſigned by ſome, who extend it from one Tropick unto the other; yet is it of a very great length, no leſs than 1500 miles; the breadth about half as much, the whole circumference amounting to 4300 miles. Yet ſo, that all this vaſt tract of ground, is not to be underſtood of that part of the Countrey, which is under the command of the Abaſſine Emperor, commonly, but miſtakingly called Preſtor John: but of the whole Countrey of Æthiopia, as before limited and extended; containing beſides his Eſtate, the Kingdoms of Adel and Aden, and the Provinces of Quiloa and Melindi; which two laſt are now reckoned of as parts of Æthiopia Inferior. The Iſle of Meroe in the North is poſſeſſed by Mahometans, the moſt bitter Enemies of this King: all on the Weſt of Nilus, betwixt it and the South-eaſt of Nubia, inhabited by the Anzichi, an Idolatrous and man-eating Nation, ſubject to a great Prince of their own: and all the Coaſts of the Red-Sea, as well within the Streights of Babel Mandel, as without, except the Port of Erocco only, enjoyed by Arabians and Moors, who do acknowledge no ſubjection unto his Commands; but are under the Kings of Adel and Adea before mentioned.

But taking it in the largeſt ſignification and extent hereof (according unto which we muſt here deſcribe it) it comprehendeth the three Countries called anciently Æthiopin Sub Egypto, Trogloditica, and Regio Cinnamomifera. Of theſe the two laſt are by ſome reckoned but as parts of the firſt: though certainly the Throglodites were a different Nation from the Æthiopians. For paſt all doubt the Troglodites were Originally an Arabian people, ſo called quia τρῶγλας ſubeunt, from their living in Caves and dens: in which reſpect their part of this Countrey had the name of Arabia Trogloditica, in Dioſcorides, and ſome others of the Ancient Writers. Of theſe it is affirmed by Pomponius Mela, that they were not the Maſters of any wealth, and that their ſpeech was rather a gnaſhing of the teeth, than any articulate and intelligible Pronuntiation. Nullarum opum Domini ſunt Trogloditæ, ſtrident magis quam loquuntur. As for their houſes, they were (ſaith he) no better than Caves, and their Food, than Serpents. With whom concurreth Pliny alſo for their dwelling in Caves, and conſequently for the reaſon of the name, ſaying poſitively, Trogloditæ ſpeluncas excavant. Called for the ſame reaſon in the Holy Scripture, 2 Chron. 12.3. by the name of Succhai; the word Succoth (whence that name derived) not only ſignifying in the Hebrew, Tents, or Tabernacles, but Caves and Dens; and ſo tranſlated, Pſal. 10. v. 9. and Job 38. v. 40. As for that part hereof which was called Regio Cinnamomifera, taking up the Southern parts in the time of Ptolomy, it took that name from the abundance of Cinnamon, which was then growing by it; now not a Tree of it to be found in all this Countrey, as the Portugals, who have looked narrowly for it, have affirmed unto us. Shipped at Moſylon, a noted Emporie, placed by Ptolomy in the ninth degree of Northern Latitude; it was thence tranſported into Egypt, and other Countries; as is ſaid by Pliny, Portus Moſylitus quo Cinnamomum devehitur: the Spice in ſome Authors being called Moſulum, by the name of the Town. ἄρισον δὲ τὸ λεγόμενον Μόσυλον, τὸ ἀπὸ Μοσύλλυ πόλεως. Of Cinnamon the beſt is that which is called Moſulon, becauſe brought from the City of that name in Æthiopia, ſaith Simeon Sethi in his Tract de Facultatibus Ciborum. As for this Cinnamon (I note this only by the way) it is the inner Bark of a Tree, as big as an Olive, with Leaves like Bay-leaves: the drying of which maketh it roll together, and every three years is renewed, and ſtripped off again. Some think it came firſt from the Sina or the Countrey which the Romans called Sinarum Regio, the Moderns China; and that it was ſo called, quaſi Sina Amomum, the Amomum of the Sina; Amomum being the name of a ſweet Perfume growing in Aſſyria, and Armenia. But then it ſhould be written Sinamomum, and not Cinnamomum: yet to give the greater credit to the former Opinion, they of Ormus call it Bar-China, or the Wood of China. But of this enough.

To go on therefore unto Æthiopia it ſelf. The people of it in old time were ſaid to have been great Aſtrologers; the firſt Ordainers alſo of Sacred Ceremonies, and in both to be Tutors to the Egyptians. They were alſo noted to be very good Archers, and to draw the longeſt and ſtrongeſt Bowes of any Nation: the Perſian Bow (though thoſe the greateſt of all Aſia) being only three Cubits long; but theſe of Æthiopia four. Utuntur etiam Æthiopes quatuor cubitorum arcubus, as we read in Strabo; the like is ſaid alſo by Herodotus and Diodorus. Their Arrows ſmall but ſtrong, for the moſt part poyſoned; Æthiopum geminata venenis vulnera, as we find in Claudian; and for that inhumanity very much condemned. But not to ſpend our time too much upon theſe particulars, Pliny reciteth two ſtrange things of this Country. 1. That the Ayr & ground are ſo parching hot, that the people not only dare not go out of doors without ſhooes, but that they roſt their meat alſo by ſetting it in the Sun. 2. That there is a Lake, whoſe waters are thrice a day, and thrice a night, exceeding ſalt and unpleaſing: but at all other times moſt ſweet and delicate to the palate.

The Countrey being as big as Germany, France, and Italy laid together; is but meanly populous; the diſtemperature of the Climate and the dry barrenneſs of the ground, not admitting a multitude. For this cauſe Africk is by Strabo compared to a Leopards skin, the diſtance of whoſe ſpots ſheweth the diſperſedneſs of the Towns and Habitations in thoſe torrid Countries. A Countrey ſcarce in Wheat, but ſufficiently plentiful in Rice, Barly, Beans, Peaſe, and the like; they have abundance of Sugars, Minerals of all ſorts, and infinite Herds of Oxen, Sheep, Goats. Finally, there is no Countrey under Heaven fitter for increaſe of Plants, and living creatures, if induſtry were not deficient. But in regard of this defect, they are deſtitute of many neceſſary things, which otherwiſe the natural commodities of the Countrey would ſupply them with. For they have here great ſtore of Flax, but make no Cloth; plenty of Vines, yet make no Wine, except it be to ſerve the Palaces of the King and the Patriarh; Abundance of Sugar-canes, and Mines of Iron; but know not how to make uſe of either unto any advantage. Rivers and Brooks in many places, but will not take the pains to dig Channels or trenches to derive their waters to the reſt of the Land which want them; thoſe Rivers almoſt choaked with Fiſh, their Woods crammed with Veniſon, which they trouble not themſelves to catch.

By this we may conjecture ſomwhat of the people alſo; Lazie and given unto their eaſe, ill-cloathed, and not much better houſed; extreamly inclined unto Barbariſm, deſtitute of all Learning, not to be credited unleſs they ſwear by the life of their Emperors; they hate a Smith equally with the Devil: their colour is generally olive-tawny, excepting only their King himſelf, who is alwaies of a white complexion (a wonderful prerogative, if true. This blackneſs of their bodies, by the Poet attributed to the burning of the world by Phaeton.

> Sanguine tum credunt, in corpora ſumma vocato,
> Æthiopum populos nigrum traxiſſe colorem.

Which may be Engliſhed:

> Their Blood (it's thought) drawn from the outward part
> The Æthiopians grew ſo black and ſwart.

But the true cauſe hereof, whatſoever it be, may perhaps be looked on hereafter, when we come to America.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt made known in this Countrey, by the Eunuch of Queen Candace, who was baptized by Philip the Evangeliſt, and one of the Seven; more generally embraced by the pains and preaching of S. Matthew the Apoſtle hereof; but not totally propagated over all this Empire, till the Reign of A*braham*, An. 470. who in his life entituled himſelf the Defender and propagater of the Religion of CHRIST, and after his death, was generally honoured as a Saint. Suppreſſed in part by the coming in of the A*baſſenes*, and other A*rabians*, it was again revived and more univerſally received than in former times, in the Reign of David King of the A*xumite Æthiopians*: who in a war againſt Dunmus King of the Homerites in A*rabia Felix*, ſolemnly vowed to the God of the Chriſtians, to become one of his Followers, if he got the Victory: And ſo accordingly he did, ſending his Ambaſſadors to the Emperor Juſtinian, for ſome Biſhops and other Learned men to inſtruct his people. The Particulars of thoſe Opinions wherewith they have ſince corrupted the purity of the true Religion, I find thus regiſtred. 1. They uſe to circumciſe their Children, both males and Females; 2. They baptize the Males 40 and the Females 80 dayes after their Circumciſion: 3. After the receipt of the Sacrament, they are not to ſpit till Sun-ſet, 4. They profeſs but one Nature, & one will in CHRIST: 5. They accept only three firſt General Councils; 6. Their Prieſts live by the labour of their hands, for they allow them nothing, and permit them not to beg; 7. They baptize themſelves every Epiphany-day in Lakes and ponds, becauſe that day they ſuppoſe Chriſt to have been baptized by John in Jordan. 8. They eat not of thoſe Beaſts, which in the old Law are reckoned for unclean; 9. They keep the Saturday or Jewiſh Sabbath equally ſolemn with the Lords Day; 10. They adminiſter the Euchariſt to Infants preſently after Baptiſm; 11. They teach, that the Reaſonable ſoul of man is derived from their Parents by Seminal propagation; 12. That Infants dying unbaptized, are ſanctified in the Womb, by vertue of the Euchariſt received by the Mother after her Conception. And finally, they ſhew a Book of eight Volumes, writ, as they ſay, by the A*poſtles* aſſembled at Hieruſalem for that purpoſe; the Contents whereof they obſerve moſt ſolemnly. Theſe are the moſt material points in which they differ from the Tendries of the Catholique Church. And there are other points in which they differ only from the Church of Rome, as viz. 1. Adminiſtring in both kinds; 2. Without either Elevation, or Reſervation, 3. Rejecting maſſie Images, and 4. Extreme Unction, 5. Allowing the firſt marriages to their Prieſts and Biſhops: and 6. In renouncing all relation to the Pope of Rome; who to the buſineſs of theſe Churches is a very ſtranger, and ſo hath been from the very firſt foundation of them. For it appears by the Canons of the Nicene Council, extant in the Arabick, and tranſlated into Latine by Piſanus, that the Patriarch (or Abuna, as they call'd him) of theſe Abaſſine Churches, was in thoſe times ſubordinate to the Alexandrian, confirmed in that Supremacie by the Fathers, which were there aſſembled; and conſtantly ever ſince approved and practiſed by theſe Churches: in the Liturgies whereof, the name of the Alexandrian is remembred before their own. To this Patriarch, by an antient priviledge belongeth the ſeventh place in the Seſſions of all General Councils; the Archbiſhop of Seleucia (or Babylon) onely interpoſing betwixt him and the Patriarch of Hieruſalem. Elected by the Abaſſine Monks of S. Antonies Order remaining in Hieruſalem, and confirmed by the Patriarch of Alexandria, (of which Order, and of whoſe juriſdiction he muſt alwayes be) he is ſent into this Countrey to take his charge: where in ſome points of Civil nature, he hath equal priviledge with the Emperour himſelf; and in Spiritual, hath the ſole power of excommunicating an obſtinate Sinner. All other Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, from the Biſhoprick to the loweſt Benefice, are conferred by the Emperour onely.

The principal Mountains of it in the former times, had the names of 1 Prionotus, 2. Iſius, 3. Monodactylus, 4. Gaurus, and 5. Mons Satyrorum; all of them in that part which was called Troglodítica: 6. Garbala, 7. Elephas, and 8. Maſte in the Iſle of Meroe: the reſt of the Countrey flat and level, or the hills not eminent. Rivers of moſt note, 1. Aſtapus (now Abanni) ariſing out of a great Lake called Coloe, now the Lake of Barcena, 2. Aſtaboras, now Tacaſſi; both falling into the River Nilus. 3. Nilus, of which before when we were in Egypt; whoſe ſpring unprofitably ſought for in the elder times, is now ſaid to be out of the Lake Zembre in the other Æthiopia, eleven Degrees beyond the Æquator: whence paſſing through ſpacious Deſarts, large Lakes, and many great Kingdoms, he at laſt entreth into this. Here in ſome places ſtrugling amongſt broken Rocks, and leſs free paſſages, he falleth with ſuch a wonderful noiſe into the Vallies beneath; that a Colony planted by the Perſians neer one of theſe Cataracts, (ſo they call thoſe huge falls of his) were ſo dulled and deafned with the noiſe, that they were fain to abandon their habitations. Nor doth it onely dull and deafen the neighbouring people, but the very hills do ſeem to tremble at the noiſe it maketh. Of which thus the Poet,

Cuncta tremunt undis, & multo murmure montis,
Spumeus invictis albeſcit fluctibus amnis.

Which may be Engliſhed in theſe words;

The noiſe the Mountains ſhakes, who roar for ſpite
To ſee th' unvanquiſh'd Waves cloth'd all in white.

Of theſe Cataracts there are two moſt noted: the one called Catarractes Major, in the borders of this Countrey towards Egypt, but South of both the Cities of Philæ, and Pſelcis, Æthiopian cities; the other called Catarractes Minor, not far from Elephantis a City of Egypt, neighbouring to Syens, the laſt City of that Countrey towards this. So turbulent is this River amongſt the Hills. And yet as terrible as theſe Falls are ſuppoſed to be, one may divers times ſee the Countrey people in a little Boat not able to contain above two perſons, to venture down them without fear; appearing after they have been long toſſed in the waters a great diſtance off, as if they had been ſhot out of an Engine. Nor is he of ſuch quiet paſſage in the open Countries, but that the Inhabitants of this Kingdom are fain to cut many Ditches, Sluces, and By-channels to receive his waters; which if not curbed and leſſened by ſuch wayes as theſe, might by ſome ſudden overflowing much endanger Egypt: in reſpect whereof the Sultans of Egypt have paid for long time to the Abaſſine Emperours, an annual tribute. Which when the Great Turk, ſuppoſing it a needleſs charge, had once denied: this people, by the command of their Emperour, did open their Sluces, and break down the Dams; whereby the water fell ſo violently and ſo faſt unto Egypt, that the Turk was not onely glad to continue the tribute, but to give them great ſums of mony to make up their works. But others ſay, that this acknowledgment was paid by the Egyptian Kings, not ſo much for keeping up the waters from drowning Egypt, as for fear the Habaſſine Emperours ſhould divert the Stream, and ſo deprive that Countrey of the benefit of it. But I incline rather to the former. Here are alſo ſaid to be ſome Lakes of that poyſonous nature, that whoſoever drinketh of them, doth either immediately fall mad, or elſe is troubled for long time with continual drowſineſs. Of which thus Ovid,

Æthiopeſque Lacus; quos ſi quis faucibus hauſit,
Aut furit, aut patitur mirum gravitate ſoporem.

Which may be paraphraſed in theſe words:

Who doth not know the Æthiopian Lake?
Of which whoever drinks, his thirſt to ſlake,

Either grows mad, or doth his ſoul oppreſs
With an unheard of heavy drowſineſs.

To look upon the State, as it ſtood in the former times, we find in it beſides the Lakes and Rivers before mentioned, three capacious Bays, that is to ſay, 1. Sinus Adulicus, 2. Sinus Avalites, and 3. Sinus Barbaricus; the two laſt neighboured by the now Countries of Adel and Melinde. Havens of note, and Rodes for ſhipping, there were five in all, viz. 1. Bathus, or the deep Haven, 2. Dioſcorum Portus, or the Haven of Caſtor and Pollux, 3. Theon Soterum, or the Haven of the Saviour-Gods, 4. Portus Evangeliorum, Goſpel-Port, or the Port of good News. And 5. Serapionis, the Port of Serapion, with a Promontory of the ſame name neer adjoyning to it. For other Promontories, which in ſo long a tract of Sea muſt needs be many; the principal were, 1. Baſium, 2. Mnemium, 3. Dimetris, 4. Aſpis, 5. Ara Amoris, 6. Colobon, the Promontory of Saturn, 8. Moſylon, with a noted Empory of the ſame name, 9. Aromata, neer another well frequented Empory of the ſame name alſo; and 10 that of Noti-cornu. Then for the Towns of greateſt Trading, beſides thoſe laſt mentioned, we have, 1. Avalites, 2. Malao, 3. Mundi, 4. Cube, and 5. Acane, in the Bay of Avalites, 6. Opone in the Bay of Barbaria, 7. Eſſina, on the South of the Æquinoctial. Then for their Cities, we have amongſt many others, the names of 1. Epitherias, by Ptolomy called Ptolemais Ferarum, 2. Adulis, and 3. Avalites, giving names unto their ſeveral Bays, 4. Rapta, the Metropolis of that part of this Countrey which was called Barbaria, lying along the ſhores of the Sinus Barbaricus; which as it taketh name from the River Raptus, upon which it is ſituate; ſo they do both agree in communicating it to the Promontory called Raptum, 5. Meree, the chief City of the Iſle ſo called, 6. Sabath in the Bay of Adutis, which poſſibly might be ſome Colony of the Sabæans, in Arabia Felix, 7. Coloe, by Pliny called Tolen, not far from the great Lake ſo named, 8. Cambuſis, by Ptolomy called Cambyſi Ærarium, from ſome treaſures laid up here by Cambyſes the Perſian, in his invaſion of this Countrey, 9. Auxumi the chief City of the Auxumites, a moſt potent people of theſe parts; and the Seat-royal of the old Æthiopian Kings, 10. Napata, as Ptolomy; but by moſt others called Tanape, of old the reſidence of the Æthiopian Emperours, ſacked and ruined by Petronius, Preſident of Egypt. For when Candace (the Predeceſſor, I believe, of her whoſe Eunuch was baptized by Philip) had ranſacked and waſted Egypt with fire and ſword; Petronius, Lieutenant to Auguſtus, drave them home, harried the whole Countrey, put this City to the ſpoil; and to prevent the like inrodes, fortified the Frontires of his Province, 11. Phila, upon the borders of Egypt, garriſoned by the Romans till the time of Diocleſian, and by him abandoned. Of ſome of theſe, and others not here mentioned, we may have opportunity to ſpeak more hereafter; in the ſurvey of ſome of theſe particular Provinces, into which this Countrey ſtands divided at this preſent time.

And for the Provinces comprehended at this time within the bounds and limits of this Æthiopia, as before laid down, they are ſaid to make up 70 Kingdoms; moſt of them ſubject to the Abaſsine Emperour. The principal of which are, 1. Guagere, 2. Tigremaon, 3. Angote, 4. Amma, 5. Damut, 6. Goijami, 7. Bagamedrum, 8. Barnagaſſum, 9. Adel, 10. Adea, 11. Dancali, 12. Dobas, 13. Fatigar, 14. Xoa, 15. Barus. Concerning which I muſt premiſe, that I find the Relations of them to be very imperfect, many times diſagreeing, ſometimes falſe: So that I muſt profeſs my ſelf to be leſs ſatisfied in the deſcription of this Countrey, than in any of the reſt which have gone before. Such as it is, I here preſent it to the Reader.

1. GUAGERE.

GUAGERE containeth onely the Iſland of Meroe, an Iſland of much note and fame amongſt the Ancients; made by the confluences of Nilus and Aſtaborus, the two chief Rivers of this Countrey. The length hereof 350 miles, the breadth 125. abundantly plentiful of Gold, Silver, Braſs, Iron, Ivory, Precious ſtones, and an excellent kind of Mineral Salt. Well ſtored with moſt ſorts of beaſts, both tame and wilde; and of the laſt ſort with Lyons, Leopards, Rhinocerots, Elephants, and Dragons.

The people are of the ſame nature and complexion with the reſt; Mahometans by Religion, and the profeſſed Enemies of the Abaſsine Emperour; againſt whom they do not onely defend themſelves, by the advantages and benefit of their ſituation; but confederating with the Turks, and Arabians, fall many times with great forces into his Dominions. It is ſaid by Pliny of the Inhabitants of this Iſland, that twice a year, viz. When the Sun is in the 16th. degree of Taurus, and the 14th. of Leo, they have the Sun ſo perpendicular above their heads, that he caſts no ſhadow. More anciently memorable for their long lives, than their great exploits, attaining ordinarily to 120 years of Age; and therefore called Macrobii by the old Greek Writers. The women ſaid to be of ſuch great breſts in the former times, that they did ſuckle their children over their ſhoulders (as ſome women are now ſaid to do neer the Cape of good Hope:) the dug being bigger than the childe. Of which thus Juvenal.

In Meroe, craſſo majorem Infante mamillam.

In Meroe the Mothers pap
Is bigger than the childe in lap.

The Principal Cities hereof, 1. Meroe, which gave that name unto the Iſland, but took the ſame from Meroe, a ſiſter of Cambyſes King of Perſia; or as Euſebius ſaith, from Merida, the mother of Chenephris, a King of Egypt. Joſephus telleth us, that in former times it had been called by the name of Saba; on authority of whoſe miſtake it hath been made the Regal City of that Queen of Sheba (the Queen of Egypt, and Æthiopia, as Joſeph calleth her) who came to Solomon. An opinion ſo received amongſt theſe Iſlanders, that the name of Meroe being laid by, they have reſtored the name of Saba to this City, as of greater eminence. The City ſaid by ſome to contain about 5000 houſes, great and ſumptuous; the ſtreets thereof to be large and ſpacious, with Galleries on each ſide before the doors of their houſes, where men walk ſafe from all extremities of heat, or rain. Beautified with four chief Gates, (beſides others of inferiour note) built of Alabaſter and Jaſper, wrought with Antick works: the doors belonging to thoſe Gates, of Cedar, curiouſly wrought; the wayes which lead unto them, for the ſpace of two Leagues, beſet with Palms, Orange-trees, Cedars, Cypreſſes, and others no leſs uſeful both for ſhade and fruit. In the place where the four ſtreets going from theſe Gates, do croſs each other, a goodly Arch erected upon ſtately Pillars, fairly wrought and gilded; with the Statue of S. Matthew, made of braſs, but guilded, on the top thereof. Such it is ſaid to be by ſome. Others think there is no ſuch City; it may not be ſo beautiful, as ſome have made it. The other Towns of note and name in it, in former times, 2. Sacolche, 3. Darorum Vicus, 4. Eſer, of which we have little but the names.

This Iſland was once a peculiar Kingdom; he being choſen for their King, who excelled the reſt in ſtrength, perſon, or in ſtock of Cattel; but thoſe Kings ſo ſubject to their Prieſts, that by a Meſſenger, or Herald they were ſentenced by them unto death, and others advanced unto the Throne. And thus it ſtood till one of the more provident Kings, forcing the Temple with his armed Souldiers, ſlew all theſe Prieſts; and freed himſelf and his Succeſſours from ſo great a ſlavery. Afterwards made a Province of the Kingdom of Æthiopia; honoured for the moſt part with the Seat of thoſe Kings, and memorable in thoſe times for the Table of the Sun: which was a place near the City of Meroe, always furniſhed with variety of roſted meats, ſet there by night at the charge, and command of the King (much taken as it ſeemeth with this coſtly vanity) and eaten in the day time by all that would; called therefore the Table of the Sun, becauſe aſcribed unto his bounty by the ignorant people. In the declining of this Kingdom, occaſioned by the inundation of the Saracens and other Arabians, this Iſland was ſeized on by that people, and hath been ever ſince kept by them; together with the reſt of the Countrey, lying betwixt it and Egypt; in which are contained, as ſome write, the Kingdom of Damote, Sua, and Jaſculum, anciently belonging to this Empire, now diſmembred from it: not much obſervable, but for being a thorowfare to great troups of Pilgrims, which every Lent paſs by them out of the Abaſſine Dominions, to the Sepulchre, and other like places in and near Jeruſalem.

2. TIGREMAON.

TIGREMAON, hath on the north, Guagere, and the River Marabo, by which laſt parted from Barnagaſſo; on the South, the Realm of Angote; on the Weſt, Nilus. On the Eaſt it is ſaid to extend to the Red-Sea; but the Sea-parts thereof poſſeſſed by the Turks, and the adjoyning Coaſts by the Moors and Arabians: the inland parts promiſcuouſly inhabited, eſpecially more towards the Sea, by Chriſtians and Ethnicks. Divided into many inferiour Regions, the principal whereof, 1. Sabian, 2. Torrates, 3. Balgada, ſo called perhaps from the chief Towns of them, and 4. Tigrai; the moſt large and ample of all theſe ſubordinate Provinces; as containing in it 17 great tracts under ſo many Lieutenants, which rule all affairs both of Peace and War. The people black of colour, deformed of ſhape, in condition miſerable, of conditions wicked. Some Rivers they have, but dried up in Summer; yet ſo that with a little digging they find water in them. Their chief City Caxumo, or Caſſumo, ſuppoſed to be the ſame which Ptolomy calleth Auxume, Stephanus Axomites, Procopius Auzomide: by all of them eſteemed the Metropolitan City of Ethiopia, and the Seat-royal of their Kings. In witneſs whereof are many ancient buildings yet remaining, ſome Pillars which reſemble the Ægyptian Obelisks, admirable for their height and workmanſhip: 60 foot high, and full of Characters, or Letters ingraven on them, which now none can read. The Æthiopian Auxumites, the moſt potent Nation of this Countrey, had their name from hence: more probably conceived to be the Regal Seat of Candace, (mentioned in the Acts) than any other of the Kingdom; and ſtill affirmed to be honoured with the Court of their Emperours. Others I know have fixed his Court in Beimalechi, but I know not in what part to find it: ſome in a Royal Palace near that Lake of Zembre, built in the year 1570. by ſome Europæan Architects ſent hither by Francis Duke of Florence: and many will allow him no fixed Seat at all, but tell us that he moveth with his Tents in a Royal Progreſs from one place to another; which wandring Court, or moving City, is ſaid to be no leſs than ten miles in compaſs, when the Pavilions, which belong to it, are diſpoſed of into rank and order.

This Kingdom is governed by a Prince of its own, but one who is an Homager and Tributary to the Abaſſine Emperour: to whom he payeth yearly 200 horſes of the beſt Arabian breed, infinite quantities of ſilks, great ſtore of Cotton-wool, and abundance of Gold; but the determinate proportion I have no where met with.

3. ANGOTE.

ANGOTE is bounded on the North, with Tigremahon; on the Weſt, with Nilus; on the South, with the Kingdom of Amara; on the Eaſt, with Dancali and Xoa. Indifferently compounded of Hills and Vallies, both extreamly fertile, productive of the choiceſt fruits, and great herds of Cattel. The people eat but once in 24 hours, and for the moſt part make that meal in the night; their diet raw Veniſon, or ſmoaked Beef; the money moſt in uſe amongſt them, Salt, Pepper, and Iron. Which cuſtome of uſing Salt, Pepper, and the like inſtead of money, was in former times amongſt moſt people the onely bartery, or way of exchange. So in Homer, Glaucus golden Armour was valued at an hundred Kine, and Diomedes Armour at ten onely. Afterward in Juſtice commutative, it was deemed convenient, to have ſome common Judge, or valuation, of the equality, or inequality of goods: the invention of which the Jews attribute to Cain, the Grecians to Hermodice the wife of Midas, the Romans to Janus. It is called Nummus, or νόμισμα from νόμος, becauſe it was ordained by Law: Pecunia, either becauſe in elder times the chief of their wealth conſiſted in Cattel, as now among the Iriſh; or from a Cow (Pecus) which was ſtamped on it: and Moneta, à monendo, as Suidas ſaith; becauſe when the Romans ſtood in need of money, Juno monebat, Juno admoniſhed them that they ſhould uſe Juſtice, and there ſhould be no want of money. To this Goddeſs, Dea Pecunia, the Romans erected a Temple, and worſhipped it in the figure of a Woman, holding a pair of Scales in one hand, and a Cornucopia in the other: by the Poet called Regina Pecunia, and not unfitly, the greatneſs of her power conſidered.

But to return again to Angote, I find not much ſpoken of the Countrey in the way of ſtory; nor meet I with the names of any of their Towns, or Cities; unleſs that 1. Angote it ſelf, as alſo 2. Abugana, 3. Giannamora, two of the principal Provinces of it, may poſſibly be ſo called from their principal Towns, as perhaps they are.

4. AMARA.

AMARA hath on the North, Angote; on the South, Damut; on the Weſt, it ſtretcheth towards the Nile; and on the Eaſt, bounded with the Realm of Xoa. The Countrey very plain and champaigne, little ſwelled with hills, ſufficiently fruitful, and well ſtored with all ſorts of Cattel. The chief City of it called Amara, by the name of the Province, ſituate in the midſt of the Empire, and though not much diſtant from the Æquator, if not plainly under it, yet bleſſed with ſuch a temperate air, ſuch a fruitful ſoil, ſuch raviſhing pleaſures of all ſorts, that ſome have taken (but miſtaken) it for the place of Paradiſe: So ſtrangely Heaven, Earth, Nature, and Humane induſtry, have joyned their helps together to enrich and beautifie it.

But that which is the greateſt Ornament of this Province, and indeed of the whole Empire of Æthiopia, is the Mountain Amara, ſituate in a large and delightful plain: the bottom of the Hill in circuit 90 Miles, and a days journey high; the Rock ſo ſmooth and even (but leſſer and leſſer towards the top) that no wall can be more evenly poliſhed: the way up to it is cut out within the Rock, through which are divers holes forced to let in the light; ſo eaſie of aſcent, that one may ride up with great pleaſure, and in the midſt of the Aſcent a ſpacious Hall, as it were to reſt in: the top it ſelf is a large plain, 20 leagues in circuit, compaſſed with an high wall, to the end that neither man nor beaſt fall down upon any chance; beautified towards the South with a riſing hill, out of which iſſueth a ſweet Spring, which watering the ſeveral Palaces and Gardens of it, uniteth it ſelf into a Lake for the uſe of Cattel; the plain enriched with all ſorts, both of fruit and grain; adorned with two magnificent Monaſteries, in each of which are founded 1500 Knights of the Order of S. Anthony, a Religious Militia; and honoured with 34 Palaces, in which the younger ſons of the Emperour are continually incloſed, to avoid ſedition. They enjoy there whatſoever is fit for delight, or Princely education; and from hence ſome one of them, who is moſt hopeful, or beſt liked, is again brought out, if the Emperour die ſon-leſs, to be made ſucceſſour. This Mountain hath but one aſcent up, as before was ſaid, which is impregnably fortified; and was deſtinate to this uſe Anno 470, or thereabouts, by the Emperour Abraham Philip, adviſed hereunto, as he gave out, by an heavenly viſion. In one of theſe Palaces is a famous Library, wherein are ſaid to be many books, which with us are either in part, or totally loſt: as the Oracles of Enoch, with the myſteries which eſcaped the floud, being by him engraven on pillars; the whole works of Livy, and others. Which being heretofore tranſlated by the Saracens into the Arabick tongue (when having plundered all the moſt famous Libraries of the Eaſt and Weſt, they burnt the Originals, out of a plot to make that language as renowned and as generally ſtudied, as the Greek, or Latine) are ſaid by ſome good fortune to be here preſerved.

5. DAMUT.

DAMUT hath on the North, Amara; on the Weſt, Bagamedrum; on the South, Goiamy, and on the Eaſt, the great Lake of Barcena, and ſome part of Zanguebar, one of the Provinces of Æthiopia Exterior. The Countrey plentifully furniſhed with Gold, Ginger, Grapes, Fruits, and living Creatures of all ſorts. For none more famed than for their Slaves, ſold in great numbers into Arabia, Egypt, Perſia, India; and much eſteemed by them who buy them, for their abilities in war, dexterity in buſineſs, but ſpecially for their fidelity in all things which they undertake. For this cauſe placed in Offices of great truſt and power, by many of the Eaſtern Princes: who uſing a tyrannical Form of Government, and not daring to truſt the ſword into the hands of their Subjects, or to advance them unto places of Court, or Counſel, do for the moſt part arm theſe Slaves, and truſt them alſo with the conduct of their chief Affairs. A Truſt, in which they never falſified, or failed in a true diſcharge, but when preſuming of their power, and thoſe advantages, which ſo great a truſt and power had preſented to them, they got into their hands the Kingdom of Bengala; and kept it many years in a ſucceſſion of the Abaſſine Slaves, wherewith they ſtill made up their numbers; till outed long ſince by the Great Mongul.

The Oxen of this Countrey are ſaid to be near as great as Elephants; their Horns ſo large that they ſerve as Tankards to carry, and as Barrels to keep either Wine, or water. Here is alſo ſaid to be a kind of Unicorn, very fierce and wild, faſhioned like an Horſe, but no bigger than an Aſs; but we muſt think theſe Unicorns to be but Rhinocerots, or elſe we ſhall very much miſtake the truth of the matter. And for the people (to go them both over once again) they are for the moſt part Gentiles; ſome Chriſtians intermixt amongſt them, who have ſuudry Monaſteries.

To this Kingdom belongeth the Principality of Conche, ſaid to have more Gold in it than all Peru, a mountain all of Gold, if the Friers ſay true. The people Gentiles, but the Prince not long ſince gained to the Chriſtian Faith; into which he was baptized by the Abbot, or chief Governour of the Monaſteries on the hill Amara: Gradeus the Emperor being his Godfather, by whom named Andrew. And here they have an hill of great height, and very difficult aſcent; from the top whereof they uſe to caſt headlong ſuch of the Nobility, as by the Emperours ſentence are condemned to die. What Towns they have either in that Kingdom, or this Principality, I am not able to reſolve, unleſs, 1. Damut, and 2. Conche may be two, and the two moſt eminent, as giving name to thoſe Eſtates.

6. GOIAMY.

GOIAMY, hath on the North, Damut; on the Weſt, Bagamedrum; on the South, and Eaſt, ſome Provinces of the other Æthiopia. The Countrey in the North parts full of Deſarts and Rocky Mountains; in the reſidue plentifully furniſhed with all things neceſſary. Great ſtore of Gold they find, but droſſie; the people not knowing how to refine and purifie it; or loath here (as in other places of this Empire) to take pains that way, for fear of drawing in the Turks and Arabians, to partake of the Booty.

It containeth in it many Rivers, or rather Torrents, which come tumbling down the hils with a mighty violence, and a terrible fall; making a noyſe, not much inferiour to a clap of thunder: and amongſt other Lakes, two of ſpecial note, which for their greatneſs ſeem to be Seas; in which, as ſome report, Mermaids, and Tritons, or Men-fiſhes uſe to ſhew themſelves; and out of which it is thought by others, that the Fountains of Nilus do ariſe; and both true alike. But paſt all doubt, the Abaſſines themſelves are of this opinion, and therefore in the ſtile of the Negaz (ſo they call their Emperour) he is termed King of Goiamy, with this addition, In which are found the Fountains of Nilus. Deceived alike in their Opinion, touching this particular, the Springs, or Fountains of that River, being further South: though poſſibly having loſt himſelf in theſe vaſt Lakes, and iſſuing hence into a more contracted Channel, he may be ſaid to have a ſecond birth from hence, thongh not the firſt. And theſe I take to be the Lakes, which were diſcovered by the Romans in the time of Nero. Who following the deſign of ſome other great Potentates, Seſoſtris, Cambyſes, Alexander, and Philadelphus, in diſcovering the true Original of this famous River; imployed two Centurions in that ſervice; who aided in it by the then King of the Æthiopians, are ſaid to have come at laſt unto certain great Mariſhes (moſt probably the lower and ſedgy parts of theſe Lakes now mentioned) of whoſe extent the Inhabitants themſelves were ignorant; nor poſſible to be diſcovered any further, the Weeds having ſo overgrown the water, that there was no further paſſage to be made by Boat, and leſs by wading.

Betwixt this Countrey and Damut, which we laſt paſſed thorow, is ſaid to be a Province of Amazons; warlike and fierce, and very expert at the Bow; whoſe Queen knoweth no man, and by the reſt honoured as a Goddeſs. Theſe, they ſay, were firſt inſtituted by the Queen of Saba, as true, as that which ſome have added of the Phœnix viſible in this Countrey, of Griffons, and of Fowls ſo big that they make a ſhadow like a Cloud. Which ſtrange reports I have here added, to ſupply the defect of Towns and Cities, of which I meet not with ſo much as the naked names; as undiſcovered places in our Maps and Charts, are filled up with Monſters.

7. BAGAMEDRUM.

BAGAMEDRUM, or SAGAMEDRUM (for I find both names) lieth on the Weſt of Goiamy; betwixt the Northern parts thereof, and the River Nilus: and keeping all along the courſe of that River, as far as Guagere or Meroe, encountreth with the Southern point of Barnagaſſo. Some do extend it alſo beyond that Iſland, but making the whole length thereof but 600 miles, do confute themſelves. The greateſt Province of this Empire it may probably be, cateris hujus Æthiopia ampliſſimum, as they ſay it is; but if extended the whole length of it, it muſt be 1500 miles, not 600 only.

The Countrey plentiful in Mines of the pureſt Silver, which they cannot draw thence but by fire, which makes it run like long Rods, or Ropes of Mettal. And yet as large, and wealthy as they ſay it is, I am more to ſeek for Towns and Cities in it, than in the Deſarts of Libia, or the ſands of Arabia.

Merchants and Travellers for the moſt part go no further than the Sea-coaſts of the Countrey, of which they give us more exact and full informations, knowing but little of the Inlands; and of the Natives ſuch as have travelled abroad into other Kingdoms, rude and ignorant men, know little more of their own Empire, than the place they lived in. Or probably their beſt Cities not containing above 2000 houſes, few of them ſo many, and thoſe patched up of thatch, dirt, and hurdles (unleſs ſome of the Nobility, or wealthier Merchants are provided better) they may have no great reaſon to ſpeak much of them; or to acquaint us with the names of ſuch ſorry places, as are indeed not worth the naming. Which I conceive to be the true condition of moſt, or all the Inland Towns in this large Eſtate.

8. BARNAGASSO.

BARNAGNES, or BARNAGASSUM, hath on the Weſt, Guagere, or the Iſle of Meroe; on the Southweſt as ſome ſay, a point of Bagamedrum; on the South, Dangali and Adel; on the Eaſt, the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia; on the North it ſtretcheth towards Egypt; the Kingdoms of Jaſculum and Sua, poſſeſſed by the Mahometans, being interpoſed.

The Countrey very fertile, full of Towns and Villages, and exceedingly well ſtored with pleaſant Rivulets, beſides the neighbourhood of the Red-Sea on the one ſide, Nile and Abanhi on the other. Remarkable for a Mountain in the weſtern part of it, which being ſpatious in the beginning groweth ſtrait by little and little, and then enlargeth it ſelf again to a League in circuit. On the top thereof a Royal Palace, a Church, and a Monaſtery, and two very large Ciſterns, with a piece of ground able to entertain and keep 500 men. To be aſcended one way only, and that but to a certain Mark; to which being come, they are drawn up with Cords and Baskets to the top of all; not to be took by force, by reaſon of the impoſſibility of aſcent; nor by long ſiege, or any extremity of Famine, in regard it yields proviſion enough to maintain it ſelf. Accounted therefore the chief Hold of all this Province againſt Turks and Moors.

It containeth beſides Barnagaſſo it ſelf, the two Provinces of Canſila and Daſila, though rather ſubject to the Governour or Vice-Roy of it, than parts and members of the ſame. Towns of moſt moment in the whole, 1. Beroa, or Barua, conceived by ſome to be the Colony of Ptolomy, the Reſidence of the Vice-Roy, ſituate on a pleaſant and fiſh-ful River. 2. Zameta, honoured ſomtimes alſo with the Vice-Royes preſence; but rather as a retiring place in times of leiſure, than a Town of ſtrength. 3. Suachen, ſituate in an Iſland of the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia, one of the richeſt Cities of the Eaſtern parts; and beautified with a goodly and capacious Haven, ſecured by nature from all ſtorms, of ſmooth Tides, ſure Anchorage, and able to receive 300 great ſhips of burden. Situate in a little Iſland, the whole circumference whereof it taketh up; inſomuch that Veſſels of all ſorts, both within the Haven and without, do uſually unlade themſelves at the doors of the Merchants, to which the ſhip-beaks ſerve for Bridges. A wealthy and well traded Town both by Sea and Land, to which from the more In-land parts of the Habaſſine Empire, the Mountains open a ſafe paſſage for the carriage and re-carriage of their commodities. Taken by the Turks long ſince with all the reſt of the Countrey lying betwixt it and Egypt, and made the Seat of a Turkiſh Beglerbeg, or Baſſa: whom in imitation of the Romans, they call the Beglerbeg of Abaſſia; as if by the poſſeſſion of this ſmall part of that Empire, they would entitle the grand Signieur unto all the reſt. The Town conceived by ſome, to be that which Ptolomy calleth Oſtium Sabaſticum, or rather Sabaiticum, as called by Strabo. Others will have it to be the Ptolemais ferarum, or the Epitherias, as Pliny calleth it, of the ancient Writers. And ſome again will have it to be the Succha of Pliny, by whom reckoned among the Cities of the Troglodites (who are called Succhai in the Scriptures, as before was noted) in whoſe part of the Countrey it is ſeated, and to which name it hath ſome reſemblance. 4. Biſam, not far from Erocco, remarkeable for a Monaſtery ſituate on the top of an high Rock, environed with dreadful Precipices upon every ſide; in which live 3000 Monks, eating by three and three together, in a common Refectorie,: this being the chief of ſix others in this Province of Barnagaſſo, the furtheſt not above 30 miles diſtant. For maintenance of whom, and a great number of poor children which they daily feed, beſides the Tythes of all the Mountain, in which it ſtandeth (fruitful and rich, and at leaſt 30 miles in compaſs) they have many good Farms at the foot of the ſaid Mountain, and an hundred ſmall Villages appertaining to them, out of which they raiſe yearly great proviſion of Corn, and above 2000 head of Cattel, their Revenues out of Tigremaon being reckoned in. A Revenue able to maintain them and their Hoſpitality, in regard their Novices, or young Monks are ſent abroad to earn their living, or to manure their Lands, and attend the Husbandry of the houſe: the elder only being found at the charge of the Monaſtery, though all alike bound to the performance of Religious Offices. 5. Erocco, another noted Port on the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia, to which a paſſage openeth through the Streits of the Mountains, as it doth to Suachen, conceived to be the Adulis of Ptolomy, the Aduliton of Pliny: Now in poſſeſſion of the Turks, or at their command. 6 Santar. 7 Giabel. 8 Laccari. 9 Abarach: theſe four laſt in the Province of Daſila.

This Country at the preſent, and for long time paſt, is ſubject both to the Great Neguz, or the Freſtegian of Æthiopia, and the Grand-Signeur of the Turks; naturally ſubject to the one, and Tributary to the other. Governed by a King of their own, whom they call Barnagaſſus, by the name of his Province, a Vaſſal and Homager to the Æthiopian; to whom he payeth the yearly tribute of 150 of the beſt breed of Horſes, beſides ſome quantity of Silk, and ſome other commodities: but ſo ill neighboured by the Turks, that he is fain to pay alſo to the Beglerbeg or Baſſa reſident at Suachen, 1000 Ounces of Gold yearly for a compoſition. For the Turks having by the conqueſt of Egypt made themſelves Maſters of thoſe Countries towards Æthiopia, which formerly were allied to, or confederate with the Ma- maluck Sultans; within ſhort time (viz. An. 1558.) poſſeſſed themſelves alſo of the town of Suachen, and the parts adjoyning; made it the reſidence of one of their Beglerbegs or Baſſa's, and gave him the title of Beglerbeg of Abaſſia, as Before was ſaid; Forgot by the induſtrious Collector of the Turkiſh Hiſtory, in his enumeration of the Beglerbegs or Baſſa's of Africk. To this they added not long after all the reſt of the Sea-coaſts, and the Port of Erocco; and not content therewith, after ſome ſhort breathing, made a further inroad; in which they did ſo waſt the Countrey, that in the end they compelled the Barnagaſſian (not being aided by the Neguz) to this Compoſition.

9. DANGALI, & 10. DOBAS.

SOuth and South-eaſt of Barnagaſſo, lie the two Kingdoms of DANGALI, and DOBAS; that of Dangali bordering on the Red-Sea, the other more within the Land: both of them held by the Mahometans or Arabian Moors, both in continual enmity with the Abaſſine Emperors; and both of like nature, in regard of the Soyl, and people.

DANGALI hath on the North, Barnagaſſo, on the South, ſome part of the Kingdom of Adel, on the Eaſt, the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia, on the Weſt, Dobas, before mentioned. It taketh up ſome part of the Arabick Bay, within the Streits of Babel-Mandel; and without thoſe Streits, the greateſt part of that ſpacious Bay, which anciently was called Sinus Avaliticus, as far as to the Promontory then called Moſylon (neighboured by a noted Emporie of the ſame) now the Cape of Docono; near unto which the Sea makes a little Gulf, and ſuddenly ſtreitneth it ſelf again; ſo as the Channel cannot be above ten or twelve leagues broad. And in this Channel are five or ſix Iſlands, which hinder the paſſage; ſo as Sailers muſt have good experience to avoid the Rocks which lie near thoſe Iſlands.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Bebul, or Babel, which gives name to the Streits of Babel mandel; a narrow Frith; opening out of the Bay of Arabia into the Æthiopian Ocean. 2. Vella, a well-frequented Port, conceived to be the ſame which Strabo calleth Antiphila; not found by that name in Ptolomy; 3. Zagnani, and 4. Zama, in a Province of this Kingdom called Lacca, 5. Docono, near the Cape ſo called, and therefore probably the Moſylon of the ancient Writers. 6. Dangali, not far from the Sea-ſide, which gives name to the Kingdom. Nothing elſe memorable of this Kingdom, but that there are in it two great Lakes, wherein live Crocodiles, as in Nilus.

On the South-weſt of Dangali, lieth the Realm of DOBAS, extended on the weſt to the Borders of Angote. The Countrey large, containing twelve, or as ſome ſay, 24 ſeveral Prefectures: Of ſo good Paſturage, that the Kine hereof are of greater ſize than in other places, and thoſe for number not eaſily matched in all this Empire. The people ſuch profeſſed enemies of the Chriſtian Faith, that they ſuffer not any man to marry, till he hath killed twelve Chriſtians. Some reckon them for Tributaries to the Prete, or Negus; but it is only when they liſt: ſo far from being Contributioners towards the ſupport of his eſtate, that they take from him what they can. The chief of their towns, 1. Doba, which gives name to the whole Kingdom. 2. Bally, upon the ſame River, on which Dobas ſtandeth, but more neat the head.

11. ADEL.

ADEL is bounded on the North, with ſome parts of Dangali, and the Red-Sea, on the South, with Adea; on the Eaſt, with the Red-Sea, and the Indian or Arabian Ocean; on the Weſt, with Fatigur: extended on the Sea-coaſt from the Cape of Docono, to the Cape of Guardafu; conceived moſt probably to be the Ardmata of Ptolomy, a noted Promontory in his time.

The Countrey plentiful of Fleſh, Hony, Wax, Corn, Gold and Ivory; great Flocks of Sheep, and many of thoſe Sheep of ſuch burdenſom Fleeces, that their Tails weigh 25 pounds: ſome Kine they have, which have horns like a Stag; others, but one horn only, and that in the Forehead, about a foot and an half long, but bending backwards. The people inhabiting on the Sea-coaſts, are of Arabian Parentage, and of the Mahometan Religion; thoſe towards the In-land Countreys, of the old Æthiopick race, and wholly Gentiles.

Chief towns hereof, 1. Zeila, a noted Port-town, ſituate in or near the place where Ptolomy placeth Avalites: ſtored with variety of merchandiſe, and yielding ſome repreſentation of Antiquity in the building thereof, being lime and ſtone; materials not much uſed amongſt them in theſe latter times. Of great both beauty and eſteem, till the year 1516. when ſacked and burnt by the Portugals; before that time, the moſt noted Emporie of all Æthiopia, for the Indian trade. 2. Barbora, ſeated on the ſame Sea-coaſt, well frequented by Merchants, and poſſibly may be the Mundi or Malao of Ptolomy; neighboured by a lofty Promontory, which they call Mount Fellez. 3. Mette, another of the Sea-towns near the Cape of Guardafuni; ſuppoſed to be the Acane of the Ancient Writers. 4. Aſſam, 5. Selir, and 6. Bidar, on the Sea-coaſts alſo. 7. Arar, the principal of the Kingdom, more within the Land, and about 38 Leagues from Zeila.

This Countrey formerly a member of the Æthiopian Empire, is of late grown to ſo great ſtrength and reputation: that the Kings hereof have freed themſelves from all ſigns of ſubjection to that Crown, and think themſelves the mightier Princes of the two. Advanced to this repute and power, by Gradogna, or Guadameth, who reigned here in the year 1540. by whom Claudius the Neguz was ſo overlaid, and his Countrey ſo deſtroyed by continual incurſions, that he was forced to abandon his Frontiers, retire himſelf into the heart of his Eſtates, and crave aid of the Portugals. And though by their aſſiſtance, and the help of their ſhot, he was twice victorious; yet in the third battel he was vanquiſhed, and in the fourth, An. 1559. ſlain upon the place. This King accounted for a Saint by the Moors and Saracens, in regard of his continual wars againſt the Chriſtians; did ſo eſtabliſh the affairs of his little Kingdom, and left it ſo well ſetled unto his Succeſſors, that the Abaſſine Emperor hath ever ſince left it out of his Titles; though many other of thoſe ſmall Kingdoms are reckoned in the Imperial ſtile, in which he hath as little power as he hath in this. It is ſaid alſo, that in the battel wherein Claudius was ſlain, and his Army routed, conſiſting of 60000 Foot, and 500 Horſe of his own Subjects, beſides the Portugals: the King of Adel got into his poſſeſſion the greateſt maſs of Coyn and Treaſure that was ever ſeen. A Victory obtained as well by policy, as force: the Abaſſines being ſeldom fought with, or their Countrey waſted and depopulated by the Kings of Adel, till by the ſtrict obſervance of their Lenten Faſt, they were grown ſo weak, that they were not able to diſcharge their domeſtick buſineſſes, and therefore moſt unable to reſiſt a prevailing Enemy.

12. ADEA.

ADEA, or ABEX, as ſome call it, hath on the North, the Kingdom of Adel; on the South and Weſt, ſome parts of the Abaſſine Empire; on the Eaſt, the Sea. Extended from the Cape of Guardafu, where it joyneth with Adel, along the greateſt part of the Bay, called of old Sinus Barbaricus; of the reaſon of which name hereafter.

The Countrey plentifully fertile, ſhaded with Woods and ſpatious forreſts, and thoſe Woods liberally furniſhed both with Fruits and Cattel; the Champagn Countrey not leſs fruitful in Wheat, Barley, and other neceſſaries, beſides a great ſtore of Horſes. The people of an Olive-colour, in ſome places more inclined to black: Not cloathed, but from the girdle downward; not very well armed in time of war, but with poyſoned Arrows; Mahometans in Religion, Arabians by original extraction, whoſe Language they retain with ſome little difference in pronunciation.

Places of moſt obſervation in it. 1. Adea, which gives name to the whole Kingdom, becauſe the old reſidence of the Kings. 2. Carfur, upon the Sea-coaſt ſomtimes called Opone, then a noted Emporie, and ſituate near the Promontory, called Zingis extrema. 3. Azun, and 4. Zazelle, ſuppoſed to be the Eſſina, and Tonica, of the Ancient Writers. 5. Magadazo, a petit Kingdom of it ſelf; a wealthy and well traded Town, ſituate in a fruitful and delightful ſoyl, and neighboured by a ſafe and capacious Haven, much traded by the Portugals, who bring from Ada in Arabia Felix, and Cambaia in India, their Spices, Silks, and other Indian Commodities; which here they barter and exchange for Honey, Wax, Gold, and Abaſſine Slaves, which laſt they value as the chiefeſt merchandiſe which this Countrey yieldeth. Firſt built by ſome Arabian Moors, who flying from the King of Laza, their mortal enemy, under the conduct of ſeven Brethren, came into theſe parts, where they founded this City, and that of Brava in the Province of Barus, of which more hereafter.

The Inhabitants are originally of Arabia, as before was ſaid; who many hundred years ago became Lords of all the Sea-coaſts of both Æthiopia's, as far as to the Cape dos Correntes, which is ſomwhat to the South of the Tropick of Capricorn. The Kings hereof in former times, Vaſſals, to the Abaſſine Emperor, to whom they paid an yearly tribute; this Kingdom ſtill remaining amongſt his Titles: but ſince the taking of Magadazo, made ſo obnoxious to the power and command of the Portugals, that the Eſtate of the Abaſſine in it is but meerly titular.

13. FATIGAR, & 14. XOA.

FATIGAR hath on the Eaſt, Adel, and ſome part of Adea, on the Weſt, the little Realm of Xoa; on the South, Barus, another Province of this Empire. The Countrey Champagne, ſufficiently fruitful of Corn and Cattel, not meanly furniſhed with pleaſant and delicious Fruits. Moſt memorable for a Lake of twelve miles compaſs, on the top of a Mountain, well ſtored with Fiſh; from whence and from the reſt of the Mountain iſſue many Rivers, which much inrich the Vallies & Fields adjoyning. The chief Town hereof (if any one be better than other) I conceive to be Fatigar, giving this name unto the Kingdom, or ſo called from it.

Weſtward of Fatigar, lieth the little Realm of XOA, bordering Weſt on Amara; Southward upon Damut; furniſhed with great ſtore of Corn and Cattel, but not much beautified with Towns of any conſideration. Nothing obſervable in the Hiſtory or Deſcription of it, but that together with Fatigar and others of the mid-land Provinces, it hath continued conſtant in obedience to the Abaſſine Emperors; notwithſtanding all thoſe miſadventures which have hapned to that Empire in theſe latter dayes.

15. BARUS.

ON the South-Eaſt of Adea, lieth the Province of BARUS, extended Eaſtward to ſome part of Sinus Barbaricus, and touching at the Weſtern point, upon that of Fatigar. The ſoyl and People much of the ſame condition, with the reſt of Æthiopia. Mahometans upon the Shores, but Chriſtians for the generality in the mid-land parts. Thoſe Chriſtians ſubject (as the reſt) to the Abaſſine Emperour: but he hath neither place of ſtrength, or conſideration in all the Countrey; thoſe of moſt note. 1. Brava, once a Free Town, and governed after the manner of a Common-wealth, by twelve Aldermen, or Common-Councellors, deſcended from the ſeven Arabian Brethren by whom firſt built; the Founders of Magadora alſo, as before was ſaid. But now, together with 2. Pate, and 3. Gogia, all upon the Sea, made ſubject to the Portugals; by whom taken under the Conduct of Triſtran de Cugna.

Beſides theſe, there are many other Kingdoms muſtered in the Stile Imperial, (the ſwelling vanity whereof we ſhall ſee anon) but of ſo little obſervation in the courſe of buſineſs, and ſo obſcure in the eſteem of ſuch as have ſpoken of them, that it is enough to tell you where to finde their names: and having found their names, to bid you not to ſeek for more; there being nothing elſe in them which is worth the knowing.

As for the body aggregated of theſe ſeveral Members, it was firſt planted, as is noted and proved elſewhere, by Ludim the ſon of Mizraim, and the Nephew of Cham: from whence this Nation in the Scripture hath the name of Ludim. A Nation not much taken notice of in the firſt Ages of time, but by an Errour of Joſephus: who giving too much credit to ſome Talmudical Tales, or willing to advance the reputation of the Jews to the higheſt pitch; telleth us a ſtory, how the Æthiopians invaded and endangered Egypt, how they were beaten back by Moſes; the City of Meroe beſieged and taken by him, or rather delivered to his hands, by Tharbis the daughter of the King, who had fallen in love with him, and on the betraying of the City was married to him. All this not onely queſtioned, but rejected by diſcerning men, as a Jewiſh Fable, that hath no ground to ſtand upon in true Antiquity. With little better fortune, and as little truth, do the Æthiopians tell the ſtory of their own Original. By whom we are informed, that Chus the ſon of Cham, firſt reigned in this Æthiopia; to whom ſucceeded his ſon Regma, and next after Dedan: that from the death of Dedan till the reign of Aruch (the certain time whereof they tell not) the people lived in Caves and holes digged under the ground; as did the Troglodites, an ancient Nation of this Countrey, in the times long after: that Arac firſt built the City of Aruma, and by that pattern taught them the uſe of Towns and Cities. But the main part of the Legend is the ſtory of Maqueda a Queen hereof, and the fourth from Aruch; whom they will have to be the Queen of Sheba, famous in both Teſtaments, for the Royal Viſit which ſhe beſtowed upon Solomon. Of whom they tell us, that being got with Child by Solomon when ſhe was in his Court, ſhe was delivered of a Son, whom ſhe cauſed to be called Melech, or Melilech; and at the age of 20 years, to be ſent to his Father. By whom inſtructed in the Law, and circumciſed, and called by the name of David; he was returned into his Countrey, with Azarias the Son of Zadok the Prieſt, who had ſtollen the two Tables of the Law, and carried them with him into Æthiopia; where the old Queen reſigned the Empire to her Son. His ſucceſſours afterwards called David, till Indion (as they call him) the Eunuch of Queen Candace returning home, baptized the young Prince by the name of Philip. This is the ſubſtance of the Legend, as related by them in their own Chronicles (but we know that they are no Goſpel.) That Chus planted in Arabia, hath been ſhewn already, as alſo what abſurdities muſt needs ariſe from ſuppoſing the Land of Chus to be this Æthiopia. Therefore moſt probable it is, that this Countrey was firſt peopled by the children of Ludim, as before was ſaid. To whom the Abaſſenes coming out of Arabia Felix, might be after added: and in ſome tract of time be of ſuch great power, as to put their name upon the Countrey. For that the Abaſſenes were originally an Arabian people, appeared by Stephanus, one of the old Chorographers, who out of Uranius (An Ancienter Author than himſelf) hath told us this, Ἀβασηνοὶ ἔθνος Ἀραβίας. Another Stephanus, and he a very learned Grammarian and Lexicographer, hath, as he thinks, decided the controverſie, by making Sheba the Son of Chus the Progenitor of the Arabians; and Sheba the Son of Regma, the Father of the Æthiopians: and for this cauſe, hath fitted us with this pretty Criticiſm, that Sheba when it is written with Samech, muſt be rendred Æthiopia; and Arabia, when writ with Shin, But this by no means will be found to agree the controverſie: it being evidently clear, that both Sheba the Son of Chus, and Sheba the Son of Regma, were originally ſetled in Arabia, as hath there been ſhewn, though I deny not but that ſome of the Poſterity of Chus in thoſe elder times, (before the coming over of the Abaſsine Nations) might either out of too much populoſity, or deſire of change croſs over the Arabian Gulf, and take up ſuch parts of this Countrey as the Ludims had not fully peopled, with whom conjunct at laſt, both in name and government. And for Mayneda (ſuppoſing that to be her name) ſhe was doubtleſs Queen of the Sabæans in Arabia Felix; not of the Æthiopians, in the waſte of Africk. For beſides the longſomneſs of the way, too much for a Woman and a Queen to travel; it is very probable, that the Son of Solomon by this Lady, would never have ſuffered Egypt to have layen in quiet, whilſt Seſac the King thereof made war upon Rehoboam, the Son of Solomon alſo, and ſo by conſequence his half brother. But to leave theſe uncertain Fables, the firſt action of moment which we meet with in unqueſtioned Story, touching theſe Æthiopians, is that which hapned betwixt them and Cambyſes the Perſian Monarch; who having by force of Arms united Egypt to Perſia; conceived it to be worth his labour to unite Ethiopia unto Ægypt alſo. Upon this reſolution, he ſent Ambaſſadours to that King, to ſearch into the paſſages of his Countrey, and diſcover his ſtrengths; and by them ſent a Tun of wine, ſome Bracelets, a purple habit, and a box of ſweet oyntments, to preſent him with. Which Preſents being tendred to him, he looked upon the Unguents and the purple Robe as too ſlight and effeminate: the Bracelets he conceived to be bonds, or fetters, and openly laught at them, as too weak to hold in a priſoner: but with the Wine he was very well pleaſed, and ſorrowed that his Countrey yielded no ſuch liquour. But underſtanding well enough what this viſit aimed at, he gave the Ambaſſadours at their parting (amongſt other gifts) an Æthiopian Bow of great length and ſtrength; requiring them to tell their Maſter, that until every Perſian could bend that Bow (the Æthiopian Bows being a foot longer than the Perſian, as before was noted) it would be no ſafe warring upon his Dominions; and that he had good cauſe to thank the Gods, for giving the Æthiopians ſo contented mindes, as not to think of conquering their Neighbours Kingdoms. Lying far off, and parted from Egypt by vaſt Mountains, we find then not looked after by the Macedonians. Nor had the Romans medled with them, had they not been provoked by Candace, the Queen hereof, during the Empire of Auguſtus; who having made a War on Egypt, was by Petronius, Governour of that Province, brought to ſuch conformity, that ſhe was fain to ſue for peace, and to purchaſe it with the loſs of ſome part of her Countrey. To keep them quiet for the future, Phila an Æthiopian City, but on the borders of Egypt, is made a Garriſon by the Romans, and the Seat of their Deputy for theſe parts: held by them till the Empire of Diocleſian, and by him abandoned, becauſe the charge of keeping it did exceed the profit. After this, growing into power and reputation, the Æthiopian Kings were reckoned of as friends to the Roman Empire: in ſo much as Juſtinian ſent unto Heliſtheus, as Juſtin his Succeſſour did unto Archetas, the then Kings of this Countrey; to crave their brotherly aſſiſtance againſt the Perſians.

Of their Converſion to the Faith in the reign of a ſecond Candace, (unleſs as Pliny thinketh, Candace was the general name of all their Queens) we have ſpoke already. To which the Æthiopians add, that after the baptizing of their firſt Philip (the Son of that Candace) By the hands of the Eunuch, the Emperours ſucceeding had the name of Philip. Till the religious life of John, a Cotemporary of the Emperour Conſtans, honoured as a Saint after his deceaſe; made them take his name. Some building upon this Tradition, have to the name of John prefixed that of Presbyter, becauſe (as they affirm) he executeth as well the Sacerdotal as the Regal Office; Rex idem hominum Divumque Sacerdos, the very Anius of the Poet: And this ſo commonly received, that he is vulgarly called by the name of Preſter John, and his Eſtate the Empire of Preſter John; with no truth at all. Others more probably conceive, that this vulgar name of Preſter John, is but a corruption, or miſtake for Prætegian, or Precious John, and that the word Prete (by which his Subjects call him) importeth no leſs. And yet I more incline to thoſe, who finding that the word Preſtegan ſignifieth an Apoſtle, in the Perſian tongue; and Preſtigani, an Apoſtolical man; do thereupon inſer that the title of Padeſcha Preſtigiani, an Apoſtolick King, was given unto him for the Orthodoxie of his belief. Which not being underſtood by ſome, inſtead of Preſtegian, they have made Prieſt John, in Latine Presbyter Johannes: as by a like miſtake, one Pregent (or Pragian as the French pronounce it) commander of ſome Gallies under Lewis the 12th. was by the Engliſh of thoſe times, called Prior John. Preſtegian then, not Prieſt John, is his proper adjunct; contractedly, but commonly called the Prete, by the Modern French, who uſually leave out ſ before a conſonant. Their Empire greater heretofore, than it is at the preſent, ſhrewdly impaired of late times by the Turks, and Arabians: of which the firſt have taken from him all his Countrey, from the Iſle of Meroe unto Egypt, with all the Sea-coaſts of Barnagaſſo; the later as much encroaching on them, on the reſt of the Maritine parts of his Dominions. But from none have they ſuffered more, than the Kings of Adel; who have divers times laid waſte their Countrey, diſcomfited ſome of them in the open Field, and in the year 1558. ſlain their King in battel. Not cured of thoſe wounds to this very day. For Adam, who ſucceeded Claudius that was ſlain in battel, was ſo far from being able to revenge the death of his Predeceſſour; that being ſuſpected to incline to Mahometaniſm, he was defeated by the under King of Barnagaſſo. Since which time they have ſo languiſhed by inteſtine diſſentions, that though Alexander the third (if there were ever ſuch a King, which I find much doubted) is ſaid to have ſetled his affairs by the aid of the Portugals; and that ſome ſtrange ſucceſſes have been ſince reported of a later Emperour: yet the truth is, that the Eſtate hereof hath been ſo imbroyled in civil Wars, and ſo many of their Emperours ſucceſſively murdered; that the power and reputation of it is exceedingly weakned, and the Countrey made a prey to impuiſſant Enemies. For in the year 603. the Emperour Melech Gogad, who ſucceeded in the Throne by the depoſition and impriſonment of his Predeceſſour (under colour of baſtardy) was not long after ſlain by one Zezelezeus; and James, or Jacob advanced unto the Empire: James not long after vanquiſhed, and ſlain in the Fields of Guera, by one Sazinoſius (contractedly by ſome called Suſneas) his three Sons being forced to fly to provide for their ſafety. What became of the two eldeſt I have no where found. The youngeſt called Zaga Chriſtos, after many hazardous wandrings, and accidents arrived at laſt into Italy, and thence he came to Paris, An. 1638 where he was entertained in the quality of a Prince, but without hope of being reſtored to the Throne of his Fathers: For Sazinoſius, or Suſneas, immediately upon the victory had poſſeſſed himſelf of the whole Empire; though for a time ſo terribly diſquieted with Treaſons and Conſpiracies, that in the year 1607. he was fain to ſue for aide to the King of Spain, and tender a ſubmiſſion of the Abaſſine Churches to the Pope of Rome. But the ſpirit of Rebellion being conjured up, could not ſo eaſily be laid down (though there followed a long calm between) but that it brake out again within few years after (that is to ſay, about the year 1628) more violently than it did before: a powerful Rebel ſtarting up, who followed by an Army of 50000 had queſtionleſs diſpoſſeſſed the Prete of his whole Dominions, if not prevented and diſcomfited beyond expectation. For it hapned that one Vermeile a French-man, a Jueller by Trade, but exerciſed in the wars of Holland, underſtanding that the Abbaſsine Empreſs was much delighted with the rarities and Jewels of Beraſe, found means to convey himſelf into the Court, where underſtanding the great danger which that great Emperour was in, and the ignorance as well of the good Subjects, as of the Rebels in the Arts of war, he gat leave to have the diſciplining, or training of 8000 men, with which ſmall Army he utterly diſcomfited and routed that vaſt body of Rebels, and was thereupon deſervedly made Commander in Chief of all the Forces of the Empire. This is the laſt news of any certainty that hath come from thence: (it being Anno 1634. in which that victory was obtained) but that there hath been a report of ſome new commotions, Anno 1648. the particulars and truth whereof muſt be ſought elſewhere.

Yet notwithſtanding theſe diſaſters, theſe later Emperours have ſtill preſerved their Majeſty amongſt their Subjects, whom they hold in ſervitude enough, though they keep not ſuch a diſtance as in former Ages, when the Prete was honoured as a God, and uſed to ſhew himſelf but thrice in [illegible] year, viz. on Chriſtmas, Eaſter, and Holy-rood day: by which retiredneſs it was thought that he made his preſence more acceptable; ſome holding nothing to be more derogatory from the Majeſty of a King, than to make himſelf too common an object for the eye of the vulgar. The like kind of ſtate was once kept by thoſe Kings of France of the firſt Merovignian line; who withdrawing themſelves from all publick affairs, uſed only to ſhew themſelves (as we have already ſaid) on May-day. A greater retiredneſs than this, was that which Valleda Queen of the Tencteri (a people of the Rhene) is reported by Tacitus to have uſed; for when the reſt of the Germans then in arms, ſent Ambaſſadors to her, to inform her of their victory againſt the Romans, they were prohibited either to ſpeak to her, or to ſee her, Arcebantur aſpectu, quo venerationis plus ineſſet. Such a keeping of ſtate, the politick Prince Tiberius uſed, when the German legions mutined; for he daigned not himſelf to ſee them pacified, but ſent his Son; the reaſon was, quia majeſtati major è longinquo reverentia. And no doubt the ſame keeping of diſtance ſwayed much with him, when he forſook Rome, and kept Court privately at Caprea: though I deny not, but a propenſion to follow his unnatural pleaſures the more ſecurely, together with his deformities on his face, had alſo their powers upon his reſolution.

The title of this great and mighty Emperour (but neither ſo great, or mighty in power, as title) runneth thus: N. N. Supream of his Kingdoms, and the Beloved of GOD, the Pillar of Faith, ſprung from the ſtock of Judah, the Son of David, the Son of Solomon, the Son of the Columne of Sion, the Son of the Seed of Jacob, the Son of the hand of Mary, the Son of Nahu after the fleſh, the Son of St. Peter and Paul after the ſpirit; Emperour of the higher and leſſer Æthiopia, and of the moſt mighty Kingdoms, Dominions, and Countries of Xoa, Goa, Caffares, Fatigar, Angotæ, Balignazo, Adea, Vangne, Goyami, where are the Fountains of Nile, Amara, Binguimedron, Ambea, Vangucum, Tigremean, Sabaim, the birth-place of the Queen of Saba, Bernagaſſum, and Lord of all the Regions unto the confines of Egypt.

It ſeemeth by this title, that theſe Æthiopian Emperours however the truth of ſtory goeth, conceive themſelves to be ſprung from Solomon, and Maqueda (or Nizaule, as Joſeph nameth her) the Queen of the South. For better confirmation whereof, it is by ſome reported, that the Arms of this Kingdom are the ſame with thoſe of the Tribe of Juda, which are a Lyon rampant in a field Or, and that the Motto of them is to this effect, viz. The Lyon of the Tribe of Judah ſhall overcome. But Bara, an expert Herauld, giveth this Prince no ſuch Coat-armour; his Arms, according to him, being Luna, a croſs portate Mars, charged with a Crucifix Sol, between two Scourges of the Second. And yet not altogether to diſcredit the old Tradition, ſo generally received amongſt them, it may be probable enough, that when the Abaſſens came into Æthiopia, ſome of the Sabæans their next Neighbours came along for company, and amongſt them ſome of the Royal race of the Queen of Sheba; with ſome of which, by reaſon of their great Nobility, ſome of the Abaſſine Emperors might think fit to match. Nor is it any matter of impoſſibility, but that Solomon (conſidering his courſe of life) might get a ſon upon the body of that Queen, from whom the Æthiopian Princes might be thus deſcended.

As for the Government of theſe Emperors, it is abſolutely Regal, or to ſay better, perfectly Deſpotical: the people being treated by them more like ſlaves, than Subjects; taking away Signeuries, and giving them unto whom he pleaſeth, the deprived party not daring to expreſs the leaſt diſcontent. By them ſo reverenced, that it was anciently a cuſtom, if the King were blind, or lame, or maimed, for the Subject to inflict on his own body the like impreſſion: ſtill had in ſo much honour by the greateſt Subject, that at his bare name, they bow their bodies, and touch the ground with one of their fingers; and reverence his Pavilion as they paſs by, though he be not in it. He on the other ſide, ſeldom appeareth to his Subjects, but with his Crown upon his head, and a Silver Crucifix in his hand; his face then covered with a piece of Watchet Taffata, which he lifteth up and putteth down, according as he is minded to grace the party with whom he talketh.

As for his Forces and Revenues, ſome of our late Obſervators ſpeak nothing but wonders. Some ſay his Empire reacheth from the Red-Sea, to the Atlantick Ocean, and from one Tropick to the other: Some that he is of ſo great Riches, that he is able to purchaſe a moyety of all the world, if it were to be ſold; others, that he is able to raiſe for any preſent ſervice, a Million of men. And he himſelf is ſaid to have offered to the Portugals, one Million of money, and another of men, if they would employ it in a war againſt the Infidels. But notwithſtanding theſe great brags, I cannot think this Emperour to be ſuch a Miracle, as ſome of theſe Reports have made him. For they that ſpeak moſt knowingly of his Revenues, affirm that the ordinary expences of his Court and Army being diſcharged, he coffereth up but three Millions of Crowns per annum; which is no great matter: and upon extraordinary emergencies of war and trouble, will be eaſily waſted, or brought into a narrower compaſs. And yet to make up this Revenue, beſides the Crown Lands, or Demain Imperial, he layeth ſome Tax, or other upon every Houſe, receiveth the Tenth of all that is digged out of their Mines: and levieth on the great Lords the Revenue of any one of their Towns, which he pleaſeth to chuſe, ſo it be not that in which the Lords themſelves inhabit.

This, though it be no great Intrado, conſidering the large extent of his Dominions, and form of his Government; yet it is greater in proportion, than his Forces are. For notwithſtanding the report of Alvarez, and his own great brag, of raiſing a Million of men for preſent ſervice; it is well known that he was never able to advance half that number, in his greateſt neceſſity; and amongſt thoſe whom he can raiſe, there are but few who can deſerve the name of Souldiers. For the people being poor and beggerly, and brought up in a ſervile and baſe condition, are naturally deſtitute of that courage and alacrity of ſpirit, which ſhould be in men profeſſing Armes, or fit for noble undertakings; and are beſides, on certain jealouſies of State, ſo diſuſed from war, that they know not how to uſe their weapons when there is occaſion. So that for my part I conſider him as a weak and impuiſſant Prince of no authority, or influence out of his Dominions; nor able to defend himſelf from the continual incurſions of his Neighbours (ſome of them mean and petit Princes) which lie neareſt to him. Land-locked on every ſide from Traffick and Commerce with the Seas; incroached upon Northward, by the Turks; confronted on the Weſt, by the King of Borneo, who poſſeſſeth not a tenth part of the Land of Negroes; on the Eaſt, continually bearded and baffled by the King of Adel, ſomtimes a Vaſſal of his own; and on the South, with the Galla, a barbarous Nation of the other Æthiopia, who lay all waſt before them, whereſoever they come, and finally in theſe latter times by his own Subjects alſo. Injuries not to be endured, had he power to help it.

But the chief Stay of this Eſtate, is an Order of Knighthood, entituled by the name of St. Antony, to which every Father that is of the degree of a Gentleman, is to deſtinate one of his Sons, if he have above two, but not the Eldeſt. And out of theſe they cull about 12000 Horſe, which are to be the ſtanding Guard of the Emperours perſon: Their Oath is, To defend the Frontiers of the Empire, to preſerve Religion, and to make head againſt the Enemies of the Faith. The Abbots of this Order (for it is partly Religious, partly Military) live in the Mountain of Amara, where they have two Monaſteries; as well for the training up of theſe Knights in the time of their youth, as their retirement when grown old and diſcharged from ſervice.

And ſo much for Æthiopia Superior.

OF ÆTHIOPIA INFERIOR.

ÆTHIOPIA INFERIOR is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Red-Sea (that name extending from the bottom of the Gulf of Arabia, to the Southern Ocean) on the Weſt, with the Æthiopick Ocean; on the North, with Terra Nigritarum, and the higher Æthiopia; and on the South, where it endeth in a point or Conus, with the Main Ocean parting it from the Southern undiſcovered Continent.

It was called Æthiopia for the reaſon before delivered. Inferior was added for diſtinctions ſake, becauſe ſomewhat of a lower ſituation than the other is. By Ptolomy called Æthiopia Interior, becauſe lying more within the Land, and remote from knowledge than the neerer did: and by late writers for the contrary reaſon, called Æthiopia Exterior, becauſe ſituat without and beyond the other.

It comprehendeth all Ptolomies Æthiopia Interior, part of his Æthiopia Sub Ægypto, and all thoſe Lands to him unknown, which he giveth us under the name of Terra Incognita. The Country ſo little diſcovered in thoſe elder times, that we find mention only of ſome eminent Mountains, as 1. Canchis, 2. Lon, 3. Ziphia, 4. Barditis, 5. Moſchi, one onely Region known by name, called Agiſimba, and of that nothing but the name, and that it was a Province of a large extent. The people not diſtinguiſhed here, as in other places, by their Tribes and Families; but only by their kind of diet; ſome of them being called Anthropophagi, from their eating of men, and others Ichthyophagi from their living on fiſh. Of theſe, the firſt inhabited on the Eaſtern ſhores, near the Bay of Barbaria; the principal of which had the name of Rapſii: the laſt on the ſhores of the Weſtern Ocean, near Magnus Sinus, or the Great Bay; called alſo from their Weſtern ſituation, by the name of Heſperii. Nothing elſe told us of theſe parts by the Ancient Writers, but that the Lakes or Fens of Nilus, were occaſioned by the great abundance of ſnow which fell from the Mountains of the Moon: and that in many parts hereof, there were Rhinocerots, Tygers, Elephants, but theſe laſt all white.

Such was the face of this Countrey in thoſe elder days. The Character of it at the preſent, generally and in brief, is thus given by Aubanus, viz. That it is mountainous in the Weſt, ſandy in the midſt, and deſart towards the Eaſt. But for the ſeveral qualities of the ſoil and people, being of very different tempers; we ſhall give the better deſcription of them in their ſeveral incloſures, than as preſented thus in common. In the mean time to take a view of the Hills, & Rivers, of moſt reckoning in it; the principal of their Mountains are 1. thoſe called Cantaberes in the Province of Angola, 2. Lunæ Montes, formerly accounted for the boundary of both Æthiopias, now found to belong unto this alone. A chain of Hills, but known by no particular name, lying under the Tropick of Capricon; full of ſharp Rocks, of an incredible height, and inhabited by a barbarous and ſavage People: the valleys underneath of ſo great a depth, that they ſeem to emulate the Mountains.

In this Countrey is the Lake of Zembre, ſo much renowned for giving birth to the greateſt Rivers of the world; though it ſelf but 50 miles in compaſs. For out of the abundance hereof flow the famous Rivers, 1 Nilus, which paſſing thorow ſome part of this Countrey, and traverſing the whole length of the Abaſſian and Egyptian Empires, endeth its long courſe in the Mediterranean. 2. Zaire the greateſt of all Africk, but unknown to the Antients, which running Eaſtward thorow the Kingdoms of Manicongo, and taking in the leſſer ſtreams of 1. Vamba, 2. Barbela, 3. Coanza, 4. Lelunda, makes many Iſlands in his way; and at the laſt by a mouth of 28 miles wideneſs diſgorgeth his full ſtomack in the Weſtern Ocean. 3. Cuama, which making his paſſage towards the Eaſt, and much increaſed by the addition of ſix great Rivers; after a long courſe of 700 miles (in all which it is navigable) loſeth it ſelf in the Indian, or Æthiopick Ocean, and 4. Fluvius Spiritus Sancti, or the River of the Holy Ghoſt, which ſhaping a courſe oppoſite unto that of Nilus, endeth it in concluſion in the Southern Seas. It is divided moſt properly into theſe four parts, that is to ſay, 1. Zangnebar, 2. Monomotapa, 3. Cafraria, 4. Manicongo. Some alſo adde the Countrey of Aian, ſubdivided into the two Kingdoms of Adel, and Adea. But theſe we have aſcribed, with better reaſon, to the other Æthiopia, within the bounds whereof they are wholly ſituate.

1. SANGUEBAR.

ZANGUEBAR, or ZANZIBAR is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Red-Sea, or the Indian Ocean; on the Weſt, with the Kingdoms of Manicongo, and part of the other Æthiopia: on the North, with the higher Æthiopia only; on the South, with Monomopata. The reaſon of the name I find not.

It containeth in it the great Province of Agiſimba, placed by the old Writers in Æthiopia Interior, and in ſo much of the other alſo as lieth on the South of the River Raptus; now called Quilimanci, by which parted from the Kingdoms of Adel, and Adea. The Countrey on both ſides of that River, known in old times by the name of Barbaria, giveth to a large adjoyning bay the name of Sinus Barbaricus; and was much famed in thoſe elder times, for the beſt ſort of Myrrhe: the Myrrha Trogloditica, and Myrrha Barbara, or Barbarica, being uſed for the ſame, by ſome of the Antients; becauſe the Troglodites and the people of this Barbaria joyned on one another. Here was alſo in thoſe elder times a good race of Ginger, of which ſaith Diſcorides, Μάκερ φλοιός ἐςὶ κομιζόμενος ἐκ τȣ̃ Βαρϐάρȣ, that it is the Bark of a Tree brought out of Barbara. Where by the way, the Scholiaſts upon that Author, and Pliny in the 12 Book have been much miſtaken; of which the firſt takes this Barbara or Barbaria for ſome part of the Indies; the other thinketh that the Myrrha of theſe parts had the name of Barbara, from the droſſineſs and courſneſs of it, as if ſo called only becauſe unrefined. The principal Town hereof called Rapta, by the name of the River; ſeated not far from the Sea; and by reaſon of the great Trade of it, eſteemed the Metropolis of Barbaria in the time of Ptolomy. A noted Promontory of the ſame name was not far from hence.

To come again to Zanzibar, as it is now called, the Countrey is affirmed to be low and fenny, and very much overflown with unruly Rivers; and withal ſo full of Woods and Forreſts, that for want of paſſage for the wind, the air is generally (as in all Fenny Countreys of the like obſtruction) exceeding peſtilent. The people of complexion black, and of curled hair; Mahometans on the Sea-coaſts; in the In-land parts Idolaters; extreamly given to Witchcraft, and Divinations. Naked above the waſte, and beneath covered onely with the skins of beaſts, or ſome ſuch mingled colour ſtuff as the Scottiſh Plad. The Moors which dwell on the Sea-coaſts, uſe to adventure on the Seas in little Veſſels, ſowed together with leathern thongs, and calked with Gum; having no other ſails in them then the leaves of Palm-trees. Boats of as ſlight a making, as thoſe uſed anciently by the Britans, whereof thus the Poet:

Primum cana ſilix, madefacto vimine parvam
Texitur in puppim; cæſoque induta juvenco
Vectoris patiens, tumidum ſupernatat Amnem.

Which I find thus rendred to my hand:

The moiſtued Oſier of the hoary Willow
Is woven firſt into a little Boat;
Then cloath'd in Bullocks hides, upon the Billow
Of a proud River lightly doth it float.

It containeth in it to the number of 15 Provinces, that is to ſay, 1. Melinde, 2. Mombaza, 3. Quiloa, 4. Moſambique, 5. Sofala, all along the Coaſts; 6. Moenhemage, 7. Corova, 8. Calen, 9. Anzuga, 10. Monzalo, 11. Badin, 12. Mombra, 13. Mombizo, 14. Embroe, and 15. Macaos, more within the Land. Of the nine laſt, not being perfectly diſcovered, and therefore likely to yield nothing of note and credit, we ſhall now be ſilent. But the firſt ſix lying upon the Shores, or neer it, and conſequently better known to Merchants, Travellers, and the like Adventurers, ſhall be ſurveyed in order as they lie before us.

1. MELINDE is the name of a little Kingdom, on the South of the Realm of Adea, in the Higher Æthiopia, from which parted by the River Raptus, now called Quilimanci: So named from Melinde, the chief City of it, well walled, and ſeated in a fruitful and delightful ſoil; abundantly productive of Rice, Mill, Fleſh, Limons, Citrons, and moſt ſorts of fruits; but not well furniſhed with Corn, the greateſt part whereof is brought out of Cambaia, a Province of India. The houſes built of lime and ſtone, after the manner of Europe. The Inhabitants on the Sea-coaſts, of Arabian breed, and of that Religion; thoſe of the In-lands, which are of the original Natives, for the moſt part Heathens. Moſt of them of an Olive colour, but inclining to white; the Women generally of as white complexions as in other places; but they have ſome black people alſo: And all of them more civil in their Habit, courſe of life, and entertainment in their houſes, than the reſt of this Countrey. Great friends unto the Portugals, and beſtiended by them, ever ſince the kinde entertainment which they gave unto Vaſques de Gama; whom they furniſhed with Pilots to direct him in his way to India, when firſt diſcovered by that people, An. 1497.

2. MOMBAZA is the name of another of theſe petit Kingdoms, of the ſame nature for the temper of the ſoil and people, that Melinde is. So called from Mombaza the chief City of it, ſituate from Melinde about 70 miles, in a little Iſland of 12 miles compaſs; but of good influence on ſome part of the Continent alſo. The Iſle and City ſaid to have ſome reſemblance unto the Rhodes. The Town about a league in circuit, environed with a wall, and fortified with a Caſtle; the ſtreets thereof very narrow, but well built, moſt of the houſes being brick, and the Moſques capacious. The King hereof a Mahometan, as are moſt of his Subjects, and a bitter Enemy of the Chriſtians. For which cauſe, and upon ſome diſcourteſies received from them, the Town was taken by Vaſques de Gama, An. 1500. but abandoned again by reaſon of the unhealthy air, not well agreeing with the conſtitution of the Portugals. Afterwards having taken in Alibeg and five Turkiſh Gallies, the better to enable themſelves againſt the Protugals; the Town was taken and ruinated by Thomas de Cotigno, ſent thither An. 1589. by the Portugal Vice-Roy reſiding in Goa; there being taken at that time (beſides the ſpoil of the City) all the Turkiſh Gallies, and in them 23 greater, and as many leſſer Pieces of Ordnance. Such of the Turks and Citizens as eſcaped the ſlaughter, and had the opportunity of coming to them, yielded themſelves into their power, to avoid the fury of the Imbians, a man-eating people, who had before beſieged the City: and gathering up ſuch gleanings as were left by the Portugals, devoured the King; and as many of the principal Citizens, as they could get into their hands, 2. Ampaza, the ſecond Town of note, was taken by the Portugals, about two years after.

3. QUILOA lieth on the South of Mombaza. The Countrey rich and pleaſant, the Inhabitants for the moſt part of Arabian Anceſtry; of complexion near unto a white: their women comely, ſumptuous in attire, and of civil carriage; neat in their houſes, which are generally well built and richly furniſhed. Touching the ordering of this Sex (of whoſe honour they are very tender) the people of this Quiloa are ſaid to have a ſtrange cuſtome amongſt them, more to be mentioned for the rarity than the decency of it: which is the ſowing up of the private paſſages of nature in their female Children, leaving onely a ſmall vent for their urine. Thus ſowed, they keep them carefully at home, till they come to be married. And ſhe that is by her Husband found to want this ſign of her perpetual Virginity, is with all kind of ignominy ſent back to her Parents, and by them as diſgracefully received.

It took this name from Quilon the chief Town thereof, ſituate in a little Iſland, but neer the ſhore, from which parted by a narrow Fryth, oppoſite to the mouth of the River Conva, by ſome called Quiloa. Firſt built in the 400 year of the Hegira, by Ali, the ſon of Sultan Hiſchen; who not agreeing very well with his other Brethren, becauſe their Mothers were Perſians, and his an Abaſſine; ſought new Adventures in theſe parts, and bought this Iſland. His Succeſſors grown rich and powerful by the trade of Sofala, extended their Dominions far within the Land: and ſo adorned Quiloa, the chief Town of their Kingdom, that for ſumptuous and magnificent buildings, there were few like it in thoſe parts. Proud of their many good ſucceſſes they provoked the Portugals, by whom under the conduct of Vaſques de Gama, An. 1500. the City it ſelf was taken, the King made a Tributary, and with his leave ſome Fortreſſes erected by them in convenient places. Secure and wanton by this means, they pick a quarrel with Abraham, then the King of this Countrey; whom in the year 1505 they depoſed from his Kingdom, and placed another in his Throne, under colour of not paying the conditioned Tribute. For which the Arabians roſe in Arms, diſplaced their new King, demoliſhed their Fortifications, and ſent them to learn better moderation in their proſperous Fortunes, An. 1509. The buſineſs coming after to a compoſition, the Quiloan covenanted for the yearly Tribute of 1500 Marks of Gold paid unto the Portugals, to live in peace, and quietly enjoy his own without further trouble.

4. MOSAMBIQUE lieth on the South of Quiloa? So called of Moſambique the chief City of it, ſituate in a little Iſland, the principal of three; oppoſite all of them to the mouth of the River Moghincats, and bordering on the Promontory of old called Praſſum, ſpoken of by Ptolomy, and by him made the furtheſt known place of all this Coaſt. In the Iſland there are ſaid to be ſheep whoſe tails are 25 pound weight, as in other places of theſe Countries, and ſome parts of Syria; Hens, black in feathers, fleſh, and bone; and if ſodden make the water as black as ink, but yet ſweeter in taſte than any other. Of Pork good ſtore, the more, becauſe the people are for the moſt part of the Law of Mahomet, by which all hog-meat is forbidden. The in-land parts more barren, but very populous: ſo ignorant and rude when the Portugals firſt came among them, that for a Shirt, a Razor, and a little Bell, they ſold fifteen Kine; and then fell out among themſelves; who ſhould have the Bell. The Town conveniently ſeated on a large and capacious Haven, and fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle, in the hands of the Portugals; who in their going to the Indies, and returning back, uſe to call in here, and fit themſelves with all things neceſſary to purſue their voyage. A Town of ſo great wealth and trading, that the Captain of the Caſtle in the time of his Government, (which continueth onely for three years) is ſaid to lay up 300000 Ducats for his Lawful gains, out of the Gold, that cometh from Sofala. A gain ſo great, that at the end of his three years, he is to ſerve for three years more at ſome place or other of the Eaſt Indies, at his own charge, without any allowance from the King or State of Portugal, and then permitted to return to his native Countrey. Such of that Nation as are ſuffered to inhabit here, are enjoyned to be married, to the end the Iſland ſhould be well peopled, and as well maintained; which otherwiſe perhaps might have few elſe in it, but the Garriſon Souldiers, and the Factors of particular Merchants.

5. SOFALA lieth on the South of Moſambique, from which parted by the River Cuama, the greateſt River of thoſe parts, and thence extended to the mountains which they call Manica, by which ſeparated from Monomotapa. So called from Sofala, the chief City of it, ſituate in a little Iſland (as the former are) but with great influence on the Land adjoyning. Both Town and Iſland ſubject unto the power of the Portugals; who have a Fort, the better to ſecure the Factory by them here erected, one of the richeſt in the world; the People bringing hither great quantity of Gold (of which they have moſt plentiful Mines) which they exchange with them for their cloth, and other commodities. It is ſuppoſed that the Gold brought into this Town amounteth to two Millions yearly. The ſuppoſition ſo agreeable to all other circumſtances, that little queſtion need be made of the truth thereof. Inſomuch as this Countrey for its abundance of Gold and Ivory, is by ſome thought to be that land of Ophir, to which Solomon ſent; and of this opinion Ortelius in his Theſaurus was the firſt Author; but in my mind, upon no probable conjectures, and againſt very ſtrong preſumption. For firſt, Ophir the ſon of Joctan, of whom mention is made in the 10 of Gen. verſ. 29. and from whom the land of Ophir, in all likelyhood took its name; is in the next verſe ſaid to have planted in the Eaſt: whereas this Sofala is ſituate South-weſt from Chaldea; in which the confuſion of Tongues, and diſperſing of the People, began. And ſecondly, it is impoſſible for the Navy of Solomon which lay at Ezion-Geber, in the Bay of Arabia; to have ſpent three years in coming hither, and returning: which we find to have been the uſual time, of finiſhing the voyage to Ophir, 1 *Kings ch.*10. Ophir then is ſome part of India; But whether it were the Iſland of Sumatra, or that of Zeilan, or one of the Molucco's, or the land of Malaza, called by the Ancient Aurea Cherſoneſus, I dare not determine; conſidering what worthy men maintain theſe ſeveral opinions.

6. MOENHEMAGE, or MONOEMUG, the only inland Province of any note, hath on the Eaſt Mombaza, and Quiloa; on the Weſt, the famous River Nilus; on the North, ſome part of the Dominions of the Abaſsine Emperours; on the South, Moſambique. The Countrey very plentiful of Mines of Gold, yet the People uſe it not for money; but barter it in exchange with the Portugal Merchants for Silks and Taffatas, with which they uſe to cloath themſelves from the Girdle downwards; In ſtead of money, they make uſe of Red Counters, much reſembling Glaſs. Governed by a King of their own, who holds confederacy with the Kings of Mombaza and Quiloa, for the better ordering of their Trade. To whom are alſo ſubject a wild and cruel people, called Agag, inhabiting on Lake Zembre, and the banks of the Nilus; diſperſed about the fields in their homely cottages, black, Cannibals, and of an horrible aſpect; more horrible than otherwiſe they would be, by drawing lines upon their cheeks with an iron-inſtrument, and forcing their eye-lids to turn backwards. By the aſſiſtance of this people, the King of Moenhemage hath hitherto preſerved his Eſtate againſt the King of Monomotapa: and they themſelves by ſome of their own Leaders did ſo diſtreſs the King of Congo, that they forced him to retire to a ſmall Iſland, where he hardly ſcaped a violent and untimely death, moſt of his people being ſtarved. Of which more hereafter.

Touching the reſt of theſe Provinces, we can ſay but little, and that little of no great note or certainty; but that they differ for the moſt part from one another, both in ſpeech and behaviour; each Village under a ſeveral King, and each in continual quarrel with its next neighbours; whom if they overcome, they eat. At leaſure times they live by hunting, and the fleſh of Elephants. And amongſt theſe, but more upon the Borders of the Abaſſine Empire, I place the Galla; a Nationleſs nation, as it were, without houſe or dwelling, without Law or Government; as barbarous and horrid as the Agags (whom ſome call Jagge or Giacqui) are affirmed to be; who watching their advantages, and joyned together in ſome Arts of doing miſchief, have made of late ſuch deſolations in the Countries of the Preſtor John.

2. MONOMOTAPA.

M*ONOMOTAPA*, BENOMOTANA, or BENOMOTAXA (for by all theſe names it is called) is bounded on the North, with the River Cuama, by which and the Mountain of Magnice, it is parted from Zanzibar; on the Weſt, and South, by the River of the Holy-Ghoſt, by which ſeparated from Cafraria; and on the Eaſt, by the main Ocean. So that it is almoſt an Iſland; ſaid to contain in compaſs 750 Spaniſh leagues, or 3250 Italian miles.

The Air hereof is ſaid to be very temperate, and the Countrey very good and pleaſant, yet full of Forreſts. Well watered, beſides the two great Rivers before mentioned, with the Streams of 1. Panami, 2. Luanga, 3. Arruga, 4. Mangeano, and certain others, which carry gold with them in their ſands. By means whereof, it hath not only abundance of Corn, but great ſtore of Paſturage; on which they breed infinite Herds of Cattel, and other Beaſts very large and great: ſuch ſtore of Elephants, that they kill 5000 yearly for no other reaſon, but to make merchandiſe of their Teeth: their Gold-Mines great and ſmall, reckoned to 3000; ſome in the hills of Magnice, others in the Provinces of Matuca, and Boro: the places where the Mines are, known without further Art in the diſcovery of them, by the dryneſs and barrenneſs of the ſoil; as if Nature could not hoord up gold in her ſpacious boſom, but ſhe muſt needs be barren of all good works.

The People are of mean ſtature, and black complexions; but ſtrong and active, couragious, and of ſuch footmanſhip, that they out-run horſes. Their Apparel Cotton-Cloth, which they make, or buy from ſome other place: their Diet Fleſh, Fiſh, Rice, Mill, and an Oyl called Suſiman. Their Religion, Paganiſm for the moſt part; yet they worſhip not Idols, but believe in one God onely, which they call Mozimo; and ſeem not much averſe from the Chriſtian faith, to which one of their Kings was once converted. They puniſh nothing more ſeverely than Witch-craft, Adultery, and Theft: and in the puniſhment of Delinquents they uſe no Priſons, but execute them as ſoon as apprehended; which is the reaſon that the Vulgar have no doors to their houſes, that being a priviledge for the Nobles. They may have as many Wives as they will, but the firſt the principal, and her Children only to be heirs: the women here very much reſpected (as a ſecond England) the Emperor himſelf, if he meeteth any of them in the ſtreets, giving them the way. Not to be married, till their Menſtrua or Natural purgations teſtifie their ability for conception; and therefore they ſolemnize the firſt Flux thereof with a liberal Feaſt.

Provinces of moſt note in it, and adjoyning to it, but reckoned as Members of this Empire, are

1. MATUCA, rich in Mines of Gold, the Inhabitants whereof are called Botonghi; who though they dwell between the Line and the Tropick, have in the winter ſuch deep ſnows on the tops of their Mountains, that if they come not ſpeedily down, they are frozen to death.

2. TORRA or BUTUA, extended from the mouth of the River of the Holy-Ghoſt, or di Spirito Santo, to Cabo Corrientes (Caput Currentium in the Latines) wealthy in fat paſtures, and great herds of Cattel; more in her unexhauſtible Mines of Gold. Moſt memorable for a large, and in thoſe times an impregnable Fortreſs, built formerly by ſome forrein Prince to ſecure the Mines; built of ſquare ſtones, and every ſtone of marvellous greatneſs, without any ſign of cement or other mortar; the walls hereof 25 ſpans thick, but the height not anſwerable; over the Gate certain characters written, which the moſt learned of the Moors could never read. Perhaps the work of ſome of the Æthiopian or Abaſſine, Emperours, when their power and Empire was at the higheſt. By the Inhabitants, who conceive it to be a work beyond humane power, it is thought to have been built by Devils: but by thoſe who take Sofala for the Land of Ophir, aſcribed to Solomon; though ſituate 510 miles more Weſtward than Sofala, by their own accompt. The Air here very cold, by reaſon of the ſharp blaſts coming from the Pole-Antartick; ſo much the colder, in that they have no wood, or other fewel, but what they make themſelves of the dung of their Cattel.

3. BORO, and 4. QUITICUI, both furniſhed with Gold alſo in their Mines and Rivers, but not ſo pure as that of Torra and Matuca; yet ſuch as ſerve their turn ſo well, as to ſpoil all induſtry: the people here being very careleſs in providing neceſſaries, which they preſume the Moors (I mean the Arabian Moors) will bring them in exchange hereof.

5. INHAMBAN, governed by a King of its own, but Vaſſal and Tributary to the Emperour of Monomotapa; the King whereof in the year 1560 was Chriſtened by Gonſalvo Silveria a Spaniſh Jeſuite, by the name of Conſtantine; his Queen baptized by the name of Mary: but I find nothing of the further progreſs of Chriſtianity. Touching 6. Matana, 7. Melemba, 8. Quinbebe, 9. Berteca, and 10. Bavagul, five other Provinces of this Empire, I can meet with little but their names.

Cities of note here are not many, hardly Towns or Villages: the houſes being here ſo thin, that from the border of Soſala to the Fort of Torra, being 510 miles, as before is ſaid, there is no ſign of any building either old or new. The principal of thoſe that be, 1. Tongum in the Province of Inhamban, and the Seat-royal of thoſe Kings; memorable for the Baptiſm of the King and Queen, which was there performed. 2. Simbus, ſuppoſed to be ſo called from the Agiſymba of Ptolomy, the chief town of the Province of Torre, or Batne; diſtant from Soſala one and twenty dayes journey, and neighboured by the remains or ruines of the old Fortreſs before deſcribed. 3. Benomotaxa, where the King or Emperour makes his uſual reſidence; giving this name to the whole Kingdom, but taking it from the King himſelf, whom they call Benomotaxa, or Monomotapa, the word in their Language ſignifying a King or Emperor.

The King hereof, accounted one of the greateſt of Africk, hath under his Command, beſides the Provinces deſcribed, ſome part of Cafraria. Of great riches in regard of his Mines of Gold, which ſo abundantly ſupply all the Royal occaſions, that he exacteth no kind of tribute from his Subjects, but ſome certain dayes ſervice in his Works; and from his Nobles Gifts and Preſents, without which none of them are to come before him. His Forces great, the multitude of men conſidered, but weak, for want of skill to train them, and Arms wherewith to fit them for modern Service, the Arms they moſt uſe being only Darts and Targets. For which cauſe (and in regard the people of the ſubject Kingdoms are ſo prone to Rebellions, that he is fain to keep the Heirs of the Tributary Kings as Hoſtages of their Fathers Loyalty) he wageth mercenary Souldiers of other Nations, whom he diſtributeth abroad in his ſeveral Provinces: and amongſt theſe it is affirmed, that he hath a ſtrong Battallion of Amazons, a warlike Race of women, who inhabit about the Lake of Zambre, and the out-skirts of Zanzibar, compared by ſome for their fidelity and prowesſ, to the Turkiſh Janizaries. And yet not truſting wholly to the Faith of theſe Mercenaries, it is ſaid, that he keeps 200 Maſtives for the Guard of his perſon. Much reverenced by his Subjects, by whom he is ſerved upon the knee; and when he cougheth or drinketh, all thoſe that are about him, make ſuch a ſhout, that the town rings of it. In one particular they differ from moſt Nations elſe, which is, that ſuch as are admitted into his preſence are bound to ſit down, in token of reverence; to ſtand before him, being a ſign of the greateſt Dignity, which can be afforded unto any. Once in a fair way to have advanced Chriſtianity in his Dominions, when in the year 1560. the King hereof was baptized by Gonſalvo the Jeſuite, by the name of Sebaſtian (that being the name of the King of Portugal then reigning) But afterward on the ſuggeſtions of ſome Arabians then in great place about him, having cauſed the Jeſuite to be ſlain, he was warred upon by the King of Portugal with an Army of 1600 men, under the conduct of Franciſco Barretio, to whom he offered very honourable amends for the injury done; but Barretio having in hope ſwallowed all the Gold in the Countrey, would not admit of any peaceable agreement; but referred the buſineſs to a battel; in which being overcome himſelf, and his whole Forces not long after conſumed by ſickneſs, the hopes of Chriſtianity, and the Portugals intereſt in that Kingdom, fell together with him.

3. CAFRARIA.

CAFRARIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Rio di Spirito Santo, or the River of the Holy Ghoſt; on the South, and Weſt, with the main Ocean; on the North, extended to ſome parts of Manicongo, and the Province of Zanzibar. So called from the word Cafras, which in the Arabian tongue ſignifieth an Heretick; a name by them given to Chriſtians, Heathens, and thoſe of their own Religion alſo, which differ in opinion from them; but given to this Region by ſome late Writers, becauſe deſtitute of another name.

The Countrey, for ſo much of it as hath been diſcovered, is ſaid to be full of great herds of Cattel, and flocks of Sheep, abundance of Deer, Antilopes, Baboons, Foxes, Hares, Oſtriches, Pelicans, Herons, Geeſe, Ducks, Pheaſants, Partridges, in a word, all things neceſſary for the life of man, were it ſomwhat better ſtored with Corn. Exceedingly well watered, and as liberally ſtored with Woods, and Forreſts: the Hils thereof ſo intermixt with Graſſie Vallies, that pity 'tis ſo beautiful and rich a Countrey ſhould be inhabited by ſo barbarous and rude a people; who being utterly unprovided of towns and houſes, live in Woods like beaſts. Of colour black, thick lips, flat Noſes, long-ſhaped heads, and moſt monſtrous ears; extended far beneath their ſhoulders, by hanging in them Iron chains, glaſs, bullets, bels, and ſuch ponderous bables. Theſe Ornaments common to both Sexes, who alſo uſe (for their greater beauty) moſt hideouſly to ſlaſh themſelves in all parts of their bodies, even their very bellies, as if no lace could better ſort with their naked skins; with which only, except ſome flap of an Hide, or other leather to hide their privities, they are here apparelled.

Their beſt Habits for the moſt part are the Hides of Beaſts, undreſſed, unfaſhioned, juſt as they tear them from the fleſh; but when they cloath themſelves with Sheep-skins, they have ſo much wit as to wear the Fleece next to their bodies in cold weather, which at other times they expoſe (with no ſmall pride and glory) to the open view. Their voyce ſo inarticulate, that it is hard to be diſtinguiſhed into words and Syllables; which, being compoſed with that bruitiſhneſs, which commonly appeareth in all their actions, makes it hard to ſay, whether the people generally may be thought to be men in the skins of beaſts, or beaſts created in the likeneſs and ſhape of men. But they make a greater uſe of their Cattel, than for Garments only, their raw fleſh ſerving them for Food, and the Guts for Ornament, which hang about their Necks uncleanſed, and with all the filth in them, in as great a bravery as Ropes of Pearl, or Chains of Gold in more civil Countries. Gold here ſo vilified, that they exchange it gladly for Braſs or Iron, and that quantity for quantity, and weight for weight, but in ſuch ſenſeleſs diſproportion, as rendreth Braſs and Iron the more excellent Metals.

But amongſt all the ſeveral Nations which inhabit this moſt flouriſhing Countrey, none are more barbarous than thoſe, whom they call the Imbians, dwelling not far from the Cape of good Hope; tall, ſquare, and ſtrong, addicted alwaies to War and Rapine, and feeding on the fleſh both of their conquered Enemies, and their dying Friends, whoſe death they haſten for the Shambles. The skuls of whom they uſe for their drinking Cups. Their Weapons poyſoned Arrows, and Poles burnt at the end: And in their Wars they alwaies carry fire before them, menacing thereby to roſt, or boyl all ſuch as they overcome. Their King (if ſuch a ſacred name become ſuch an impious Monſter) they account for Lord of all the earth; as the Portugals, of all the Seas: and he with the old Giant-like Arrogance, not only threatneth the deſtruction of men, but ſhooteth his poyſoned Arrows againſt Heaven it ſelf, as often as the Rain, or Heat offends him. In the year 1589. about 80000 of them made an inrode into Zanzibar, laid deſolate all the Countrey as far as Mombaza, which City they beſieged, ſacked, and devoured the people of it; which Tragedy we have heard before, in our deſcription of Mombaza, a Realm of Zanzibar.

Towns here are none, ſcarce ſo much as houſes; and thoſe ſo mean, that they deſerve not to be ſo called: except it be ſome ſheds on the Sea-ſides, for the uſe of Saylors. Of moſt note in it is, Soldania, a large and capacious Road, about fifteen, or ſixteen Leagues from the Cape of Good Hope; not ſo much noted for the buildings adjoyning to it (if there be any ſuch) as the Bay it ſelf; environed on all ſides with a pleaſant Countrey, enriched with variety of Herbs, not only pleaſing to the ſence, but very Medicinal alſo for many diſeaſes, eſpecially for thoſe that are troubled with the Scarbute (or Scurvy, as we uſe to call it) the Hils adjoyning, ſtored with great multitudes of Cattel, both Sheep and Cowes, though leſs in ſize than thoſe in theſe Northern parts: great helps unto our Sea-men in their Eaſtern voyages, for here ſuch as are to ſayl towards the Indies, uſe to take in freſh water, and make proviſion of things neceſſary for ſo long a voyage. I have heard that ſome of our Engliſh ſhips in their return from the Eaſt-Indies, ſeized on two Savages, living near this Bay, whom they brought on ſhip-board, with an intent to carry them into England, to the end that having learned the Engliſh Tongue, we might be more particularly informed by them of the Eſtate and Affairs of this Countrey. One of theſe who was called Coore, being brought to London (for the other died upon the way) was dieted and clothed according to the Engliſh faſhion, gratified alſo with braſs Rings, Beads, and ſuch other things, by which they thought they might moſt gain upon him to affect the change of his condition. But home is home, though it be but homely, as the ſaying is. For this poor wretch having learned ſo much Engliſh, as to bemoan his own misfortunes, would throw himſelf upon the ground, and cry out with great anguiſh, and vexation of ſpirit, Coore home go, Soldania go, Coree home go, out of which unquietneſs of humour, when they could not get him, they ſent him back in the next ſhips which were bound for the Indies. After which time, as oft as he ſaw any ſhip with Engliſh Colours, he would very joyfully make towards the Bay with Guts and Garbage hanging about his neck (as their cuſtom is) and readily perform all good Offices towards them; yet ſo, that it was found withal, that by diſcovering to the Natives how low eſteem the Engliſh had of Braſs and Iron, they thenceforth raiſed the value of thoſe richer Metals, which formerly they had parted with for ſuch ſorry Trifles as have ſpoken of before.

But that which is of moſt conſideration in all this Countrey, is the Cape it ſelf; diſcovered by the Portugals, under the conduct of Bartholomew Diaz, in their firſt Indian undertakings; by whom, for the continual Tempeſts which he found about it, it was firſt called Tormentoſa. But afterwards the Portugal having doubled the Cape, and thereby finding good hopes of a proſperous Voyage, they cauſed it to be called Cabo di Bunna Speranza, or the Cape of good Hope: Vaſques di Gama, the firſt diſcoverer of this way to the wealth of India, being then their Admiral, An. 1597. It conſiſteth of three great points or headlands, of which that which is neareſt us, is the Cape of good Hope: the middlemoſt hath the name of Cabo Falſo, becauſe miſtaken for the other, by ſome of the Portugals, returning homewards: the third called Cabo della Guglia, or the Cape of Needles, by reaſon of thoſe ſharp points which ſhoot towards the Sea. On the top of the Cape, a large and pleaſing Plain, adorned with great variety of Flowers, and covered with a Carpet of graſs; it is called the Table of the Cape, and yieldeth a large proſpect over the Sea on all ſides. The Sea here is very rough and tempeſtuous, and hath to the Spaniards proved oftentimes very unkind: whereupon a Spaniſh Captain being ſore vexed with a ſtorm, expoſtulated with GOD, why he ſuffered his good Catholicks to endure ſuch torments; and permitted the Engliſh Hereticks and Blaſphemers, to paſs ſo eaſily.

The Countrey is not ſubjected unto any one Prince, the Natives being governed by the Chiefs of their ſeveral Glans; nor find I hitherto that either the Portugals, or Spaniards, have took poſſeſſion of any one part of it, in the name of the whole. So that for ought I know, the beſt title to it doth belong to the King of England; for whom poſſeſſion was taken of it, in the Reign of King James, by one Captain Fitz-Herbert, who called the Aſcent unto the Table King James his Mount. But whether this Act of his beget any good title, or whether the title of a Countrey lying ſo far off, be held worth the owning, I leave to be determined of by Lawyers and States-men.

4. MANICONGO.

MANICONGO is bounded on the South, with Cafraria, and the Mountains of the Moon, on the Weſt, with the Æthiopick, or Atlantick Ocean; on the North, with the Realm of Bein, and other parts of the Land of the Negroes; and on the Eaſt, with Zanzibar, and ſome part of the Abaſſine Empire. So called from Congo or Manicongo, the principal of thoſe many Kingdoms, which are united in this Name.

The Air hereof ſo temperate, that their Winter is like the Autumn in Rome; inſomuch as the people do not uſe to change their garments, or make more fire then, than at other times: the Tops of the Mountains free from cold, and the nights ſo equal to the daies, that for the greateſt part of the year there is little difference; the Countrey being ſituate under the Æquator, though more of it on the North than the South thereof. Not over hot, notwithſtanding in the heats of Summer, by reaſon of the cool winds which then blow continually, and the great dews, which falling in the night, make ſome compenſation for the extreım fervour of the Day. The Soyl ſo exceeding fruitful in the production of Herbs, Plants, Fruits, and ſuch ſtore of Paſturage, that they have here great Herds of Cattel, Large Flocks of Sheep, plenty of Goats, Stags, Deer, Hares and Conies: Elephants of that bigneſs, that their teeth weigh 200 pounds; and Serpents of ſo vaſt a bulk, that they will eat a whole Deer at once; not to ſay any thing of their Fowl, both wild and tame, which they have here in great abundance.

The people of mean ſtature, black of Complexion, thick Lips, and having the Apple of the eye of divers colours, which makes them ghaſtly to behold; ſtrong and long-lived, with very little hair on their heads, but that all naturally curled. In Religion for the moſt part Heathens, ſome worſhipping the Sun and Moon, others the Earth, as the Mother and Nurſe of all things; and ſome again, wild Beaſts and Serpents. So populous, that without any ſenſible diminution of their infinite numbers, it is ſuppoſed that they ſell 28000 Slaves to the Portugals yearly; by whom they are ſent into Braſil, there to work in the Mines, and Sugar-houſes. The Chriſtian Faith admitted in ſome few of their Provinces, but ſpecially in that of Congo; where firſt preached in the Reign of John the 2 King of Portugal, An. 1490. by Gonzalvo do Suſa, who having converted and baptized the Kings Unkle; and one of his Sons, prevailed ſo far upon the King, that in the end he and his Queen, and many of his principal Subjects, did embrace the Goſpel. Received there by the people with ſuch infinite joy, that when their firſt Biſhop came to live amongſt them, they cauſed the waies from the Sea-ſide to the City of Banza (being 150 miles) to be covered with Mats; and offered to him all the way as he went, Lambs, Chickens, Kids, Partridges, Fiſh, Veniſon, and other neceſſaries, to teſtifie their rejoycings in that happy change. And though many of the Subjects in the other Provinces were baptized accordingly, and for a time embraced the Faith; yet after ſome ſmall trial of it they relapſed to their former Heatheniſm; either unable or not willing to conform to ſo ſtrict a Rule.

Principal Rivers of this Countrey, 1. Bengo. 2. Coanza. 3. Dande. 4. Barbela. 5. Ambrizi. 6. Loza. 7. Zaire. This laſt the greateſt of them all, if not of all Africk alſo: Of which, though we have ſpoke already, we ſhall add this here, that it falleth into the Æthiopick Sea with ſo great a violence, that for ten miles commonly, for fifteen ſomtimes, the waters of it do retain their natural ſweetneſs; not intermingled nor corrupted with the Salt Sea-waters. Nor can the people ſayl above five miles againſt the ſtream, by reaſon of the Cataracts, or huge fals which it hath from the Mountains; more terrible and turbulent than thoſe of Nile. And for the Mountains of moſt note, they are, 1. Sierra, Complida, or the long Mountain; 2. Mons Chriſtalli, or the Chriſtalline Mountain, ſo called from the abundance of Chriſtal which is found therein. 3. Sierra de Sol, the Mountain of the Sun, of exceſſive height: 4. Montes Sal Nitri, ſo called from their abounding in that kind of Mineral; and 5. the Mountains of Cabambe, rich in Mines of Silver.

It containeth in it many large and ample Provinces, of which we have this general Muſter in the ſtile Imperial; wherein their King calleth himſelf King of Congo, Bamba, Sango, Sandi, Bangu, Batti, Pemba, Abandi, Matana, Quiſoma, Angola, and Cacango, Lord of the Congemes, Amolaze, Langelungi, Anzuichi, Cucchi, and Zoanghi. Many of theſe not ſo well diſcovered, as to afford us any matter fit for our diſcourſe; the principal of thoſe that be, are,

1. ANGOLA, bounded on the South, with Cafraria; on the North, with the Provinces of Bamba and Pemba; on the Eaſt, with ſome part of Zanzibar; on the Weſt, with the main Atlantick Ocean. The Countrey rich in Mines of Silver, and moſt excellent Copper; ſome ſtore of Kine and Horſes brought out of Europe, which they kill rather for their tails, (the wearing whereof is held for a ſpecial Ornament) then keep for any other uſe; their chiefeſt Diet being Dogs, which they fat for the Shambles; and to that dainty ſo affected, that at the firſt coming of the Portugals thither, they would give twenty ſlaves and upwards for a good large Dog. By this we may conjecture ſomwhat at the nature of the people, who beſides this, are ſaid to be much given to ſorcery, and divinations by the flight of Birds, skilful in medicinal herbs and poyſons, and by familiarity with the Devil, able to tell things to come. Permitted as moſt Pagans are, to have as many wives as they will; who with the reſt of the women, whether Maids, or Widows, uſe at the firſt ſight of every New-Moon to turn up their bare bums in defiance of her, as the cauſe of their troubleſom purgations.

In this Countrey are the Mountains called Cantaberes, rich in Mines of Silver; but thoſe Mines not ſuffered to be digged, for fear of drawing ſome unneceſſary war upon them: ſo that they uſe Glaſſe-beads for money, and therewith alſo do adorn the perſons of greateſt eminence. Their principal City called Cabazza, is about 150 miles from the Sea, and the Royal Reſidence of their Kings; but not elſe obſervable.

This Countrey was firſt diſcovered by the Portugals, under the conduct of Diego Can, Anno 1486. the King hereof at that time Vaſſal unto him of Congo, and ſo continued till that King did embrace the Goſpel: whereupon they revolted from him, and have ſince ſubſiſted of themſelves without ſuch dependance. At firſt they held good correſpondency with the Portugals, and allowed them free Traffick in their Dominions: but after their revolt from the King of Congo, with whom the Portugals were in league, they put to death as many of them as they found in Cabazza, An. 1578. under colour of ſome pretended treaſon. To be revenged of this foul murder, Paul Diaz, Governour of theſe parts, for the King of Portugal, arming ſuch people as he had, with two Gallies and ſome other Veſſels paſſed up the River of Coanza, waſting the Countrey on both ſides. Againſt whom the King of Angola raiſed an Army of a Million of men (as ſome Writers tell us) but amongſt thoſe multitudes of men, there were ſo few Souldiers, that an handful of the Portugals, aided with ſome of the Forces of the King of Congo, gave him a notable defeat, An. 1582. Since that, the Trade with Portugal was revived again, and the King hereof hath expreſſed ſome good affections unto Chriſtianity; ſending unto the King of Congo for ſome Prieſts to inſtruct him in it, but obtained them not; the ſtate of Religion in that Kingdom being then declining. The Portugals having thus gotten the upper hand, built, or repaired a ſtrong Fort, ſituate near a convenient Bay, by which they did not only ſerve their Trade, but command a great part of the countrey, till diſpoſſeſſed thereof by the treachery and falſhood of the Hollanders, An. 1640. or thereabouts: For the Portugals having withdrawn themſelves from the Crown of Spain, a ceſſation from all Hoſtility with them, was proclaimed in Holland, and not long after a firm peace made between the Nations; in the Articles whereof it was conditioned, that this peace ſhould not begin in the Eaſt-Indies, till the end of a year, nor in Braſil, till the end of half a year from the making thereof. Which being obtained, they gave order to their Fleets and Forces which were abroad, to make themſelves Maſters of any thing then belonging to the Portugals, which they could lay hold of, who following theſe inſtructions, and Anchoring near the Fort of Angola, was by the Portugals received with joy into the Caſtles as their ſpecial Friends, which preſently they poſſeſſed themſelves of, turning the poor Portugals in a vety weak Bark to ſeek new adventures. But of this more hereafter in the Iſle of St. Thomas.

To this King belong alſo the two Provinces of Matana, and Quiſoma, thongh both uſed in the titles of the King of Congo: of which the firſt lying towards the Sea, is ſaid to be of a wholſom Ayre, and a fertile Soyl; outwardly furniſhed with Fruits, and inwardly with Mines of Chriſtal, and other Metals; but not very rich, for want of ſome convenient Haven to bring on commerce. The other lying towards a great Lake called Aque Lunda, was once governed after the manner of a Commonwealth, but tributary at that time to the King of Congo, as of later times to the Kings of Angola, by whom brought under this new yoke, by reaſon of the aid they had given the Portugals in their wars againſt him.

2. BAMBA hath on the South the River of Conza, by which parted from Angola, on the North the River Ambrize, by which divided from Songo, on the Eaſt, Pemba; on the Weſt, the Æthiopick, or Atlantick Ocean. The Countrey rich in Mines of Silver, well ſtored with Beaſts and Birds, as well tame as wild. Amongſt the Birds, Parrets both green and gray, an many which are taught to ſing; not much inferiour for their muſick to the birds of Canaries. Amongſt the Beaſts of moſt note, is that called the Zebre, ſhaped like a Mule; but from the ridge of the back to the belly ſo ſtreaked with lines of white, black, and yellow, and thoſe ſtreaks naturally ſet in ſuch even proportion, as yieldeth to the eye a moſt pleaſing Object. But wild, an of ſo ſwift a foot, that Velox ut Zebra, to be as ſwift as a Zebre, is grown into a proverb amongſt the Portugals. The men ſo ſtrong, that it is ſaid of them, that at one blow they will cut off the head of an Oxe, or ſtrike a Slave quite thorow the middle, into two pieces; and to be able to carry in their arms a veſſel of Wine, weighing 325 pound weight, containing the fourth part of a But; and hold it ſo till it be quite drawn out. It containeth in it many Signeuries, moſt of them called by the names of their principal towns. The chief of which, 1. S. Paul, ſituate on the Sea-ſide, oppoſite to the Iſle of Leanda; inhabited for the moſt part by Portugal families. 2. Bamba, which giveth name to this Province, and is ſituate about 100 miles from the Sea, betwixt the Rivers of Loſe and Ambrizi.

3. PEMBA hath on the Weſt, Bamba; on the Eaſt, the Lake Zombre, and the River Barbela; on the North, Batta, and on the South, Angola. Eſteemed to be the richeſt and moſt pleaſant Countrey of all Manicongo; the Fields in all parts thereof beſet with Palm trees, but intermixt with other fruit-trees, which are alwaies green. The water of ſo good a nature, that it never hurteth any that drink of it: the Air exceeding wholſom, and the earth as fruitful; productive of all ſorts of grain, but ſpecially of that which they call Luco, in form like Muſtard ſeed, but bigger, which they grind in an hand-mill, and make thereof a Bread not inferiour to Wheat. The people much reclaimed from their ancient Barbariſm ſince the coming of the Portugals thither; whom they imitate both in behaviour and apparel. So well skilled in the vertues of Medicinal herbs, that every one is his own Phyſitian, Chirurgion, and Apothecary. Anciently cloathed with Mats, and trimmed up with Feathers; retained ſtill by the Villagers and poorer ſort, in ſome part of the Countrey. Their chief City, formerly had the name of Banza, ſo called, becauſe the Kings Court (as the word doth ſignifie;) but ſince the receiving of the Goſpel, it is called S. Saviours: diſtant from the Sea 150 miles, beautified (ſince it became Chriſtian) with a Biſhops See, and a fair Cathedral, in which, are 28 Canons, with other Officers, and Ornaments accuſtomably belonging to the like Foundations. The Town it ſelf ſituate on the ſide of a large and lofty Mountain; on the top whereof is a ſpacious Plain, two Dutch Miles in compaſs, full of Villages, Burroughs and ſcattered houſes; which are thought to houſe 100000 perſons, moſt of them Portugals, and their Servants.

4. BATTA hath on the Weſt, and South Pemba, on the Eaſt, the Mountains of the Sun, and thoſe called Sal Nitri; on the North, Pango. Of the Soyl and people there is nothing ſingular to be ſaid, but that the Inhabitants hereof are more military, and better furniſhed for the Wars than the reſt of theſe Provinces: neceſſitated thereunto by the ill neighbourhood of a fierce and ſavage people, dwelling about the ſpurs and branches of the Mountains before mentioned, whom they call Jagges or Giacchi. Theſe naturally and originally of the Land of Negroes, abandoned the parts about Seirra Leona, where before they dwelt, and to the number of 12000 fell into the Mountainous parts of this Region, under the conduct of one Elembe, where they are ſince grown into a people, and become a terrour to their neighbours. Greedy devourers of mans fleſh, which they prefer before that of Beeves, or Mutton; not yet ſo qualified by the change of their Countrey, as to build houſes, ſow or plant, or to breed up Cattel; finding it far the eaſier life, to maintain themſelves by the labour and ſpoil of others. And which is yet moſt ſtrange of all, though they have each of them many wives, ten or twenty a piece, yet they have no children; but ſtrangle them aſſoon as born, leſt they ſhould be an hindrance to their often wandrings. But as Pliny once ſaid of the Eſſeni, Gens æterna eſt in qua nemo naſcitur; ſo we may alſo ſay of theſe, that they do not want ſucceſſion, though they breed no children: ſelecting out of their Captives and ſtollen children, ſome of either Sex, (but neither ſteal nor take them captive, under twenty years old) to be the Seminary (as it were) of a new poſterity. Againſt theſe Monſters thoſe of Batta are armed continually, not otherwiſe able to defend themſelves, their wives and children, from their hands and teeth: inſomuch as this one Province, though none of the biggeſt, is able to raiſe 70000 men, well armed, and fit for any ſervice. The principal of their Towns is Batta, which gives name to the Province; ſituate on the banks of the River Lelanda, and the Seat of the Vice-Roy, who is always of the blood Royal, honoured ſometimes with ſitting at the Kings own Table, which none elſe may do, and of ſo great authority in all conſultations, that no body dares to contradict him.

5. PANGO, is bounded on the South, with Batta; on the Eaſt, extended to the Mountains of the Sun, which cloſe up this Countrey; on the North, with Sunda; and on the Weſt, with parts of Pemba, and Sango. Of the people, little ſingular, of the Countrey leſs. Neighboured on the North-eaſt towards Sierra de Chriſtal, with the Languelungi, ſuppoſed by ſome to be the Æthiopes Heſperii, ſpoken of by Ptolomy; a barbarous Nation, but of ſo conſiderable power, that they are found amongſt the reſt in the Stile Imperial. This once a Kingdom of it ſelf, not ſubject till of late times to the Kings, of Congo. The chief Town of it called Pango, is ſeated on the Weſtern bank of the River Barbele; the ordinary reſidence of the Vice-Roy, and the name-giver to the whole Province.

6. SUNDA, is bounded on the South, with Batta; on the North, with the great River Zaire: on the Eaſt, with Barbele; and on the Weſt, with part of Songo. The Countrey rich in ſeveral Metals, but the Inhabitants prefer Iron before any other; becauſe it doth afford them Materials for Swords, Knives, and Armour; well furniſhed alſo with Martrons, Sables, and other Furrs of great eſteem amongſt Forreign Merchants. This is the beſt Region of this Kingdom, not above 40 miles in breadth, betwixt Batta and the River of Zaire; nor much more in length. Their chief City hath the name of Sunda, which it communicateth to the whole.

7. SONGO, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Batta, and Anzichana; on the Weſt, with the Æthiopick, or Atlantick Ocean; on the North, with the Kingdom of Loanga; and on the South, with the River Ambrizi, by which parted from the Realm of Bamba. It lieth on both ſides of the great River Zaire, which is here ſo turbulent and broad, and ſo full of Iſlands, that the one part of it hath little or no commerce with the other. The chief Town hereof called Songo, gives this name to the Countrey; in which is nothing ſingular for the Soil or people.

8. ANZICHANA, hath on the Weſt, part of Songo and Loango; extended thence unto the Eaſt, as far almoſt as the Lake of Zembre; on the North, ſome part of the Land of Negroes; on the South, the Zaire. So called from the Anziqui, the Inhabitants of it: The cruelleſt Cannibals in the world; for they do not onely eat their Enemies, but their Friends and Kinsfolk. And that they may be ſure not to want theſe Dainties, they have ſhambles of mans fleſh, as in other parts of Beef or Mutton. So covetous withal, that if their Slaves will yield but a penny more when ſold joynt by joynt, than if ſold alive; they will cut them out, and ſell them ſo upon the Shambles. Yet with theſe barbarous qualities they have many good. Affirmed to be ſo cunning at the Bow and Arrows, that they will diſcharge 28 Arrows (for ſo many do their Quivers hold) before the firſt of them falls to ground: and of ſo great fidelity to their Maſters, and to thoſe which truſt them, that they will rather chooſe to be killed, than either to abuſe the truſt, or betray their Maſter. For that cauſe more eſteemed by the Portugals, than their other Slaves. And for the ſame and that onely, worthy of ſo good a Countrey; ſaid to be rich in Mines of Copper, and very plentiful of Sanders, both red and gray; which tempered with Vineger, is found by the Portugals to be a certain remedy againſt the Pox; as the ſmoak thereof againſt the head-ache. Towns they have none, or none at leaſt of any reckoning, which deſerve place here.

9. LOANGO hath on the Eaſt, Anzichana; on the Weſt, the Æthiopick, or Atlantick Ocean; on the North, Benin, one of the Realms of Guiena, in the Land of Negroes; and on the South, the Province of Songo, from which parted by the River Loango, whence it hath its name. The Countrey very hot, as lying under the Line, but well peopled, indifferently fruitful, and more ſtored with Elephants, than any other of theſe parts: ſtretching in length 200 miles within the Land, and for the moſt part very well watered. The Inhabitants, whom they call Bramas, by Religion Heathens, but of old accuſtomed (as the Anziqui and other of theſe barbarous Africans) unto Circumciſion. Governed by a King of their own, once ſubject to the Kings of Congo: but of late times, both he and the King of the Anziqui (for they are alſo under the command of one Soveraign Prince) have freed themſelves from that ſubjection; though ſtill the King of Congo be called King of both. Their King they call by the name of Mani Loanga. Their Towns of note, 1. Penga, the Haven to the reſt, 2. Morumba, 30 Leagues more Northwards, and within the Land; the Inhabitants of which Towns, being more civil than the reſt, apparel themſelves with the leaves of Palm-trees; but not ſo well skilled in the nature of that excellent Tree, as the more civilized people of the Realms of Congo, who out of the leaves thereof well cleanſed and purged draw a fine long thread, of which they make Velvets, Damasks, Sattens, Taffaties, Sarcenets, and the like fine Stuffs.

10. Having thus looked upon the chief Provinces of this Kingdom ſeated on the Continent, Let us next look upon the Iſlands. The principal of which LOANDA, ſituate over againſt the Town of S. Paul, in the Province of Bamba; ſaid to be firſt made out of the ſands of the Ocean, and the mire of Coanza, caſt into an heap; and at laſt made into an Iſland. Now beautified with a very fair Haven, of the ſame name with the Iſland, poſſeſſed by the Portugals. The Iſland deſtitute of Rivers, but ſo well furniſhed with waters, that every where within leſs than half a yard digging, they find ſweet and good Waters, ſo contrary to the Sea from whence they come, that when the Sea ebbs from it, they be ſalt and brackiſh; when it floweth towards the Iſland, then moſt freſh and ſweet. But moſt remarkable is this Iſland for the Cockle fiſhing, which the Women going a little into the Sea, take up together with the ſands, in baskets, and part them from the ſand, as they lie on the ſhore; the ſhels of which being naturally diſtinguiſhed into divers colours, ſerve over all the Kingdom of Congo, inſtead of money; which is a matter of ſuch moment unto this King, that he entertains a Governour in the Iſland for no other reaſon, but to take care about this fiſhing.

Beſides this, there are many Iſlands in the River of Zaire, now ſubject to the Kings of Congo, but heretofore in continual Wars againſt them: fighting in Boats which they made of the bodies of a Tree, by them called Liconde. The tree ſo big, that two or three men or more are not able to fathom it: inſomuch that many times a Boat is made of one of the largeſt of them, able to contain 200 men. Upon the ſhores of theſe Iſlands, and in others of their Bays and Creeks, they have ſo great numbers of Anchioves, that in winter time they will leap upon the Land of their own Accord.

Compacted of theſe ſeveral Members, and of the reſt expreſſed in the Stile Imperial, is the Realm of Congo: ſo called from Congo the chief Province, but now diſtinguiſhed from the reſt by the name of Pemba; which being of more power, or of better fortune, than any of the other, or of all together, hath given both Law and name unto them. Diſcovered by the Portugals, under Diego Can, An. 1486. at what times theſe Kings were at the greateſt: called by their ſubjects Mani Congo, or the Kings of Congo, the word Mani, ſignifying in their Language a Prince or Lord; the name communicated ſince to the Kingdom alſo. Of their affairs before this time there is nothing certain. What hath ſince hapned in this Kingdom, may beſt be ſeen in the enſuing Catalogue of

The Kings of CONGO.

1486. 1 John, not ſo called till converted to the Faith of Chriſt; and then baptized by this name, in honour of John the 2. King of Portugal, Anno 1490. in whoſe reign this diſcovery and Converſion hapned.

2 Alphonſo, eldeſt ſon of John, zealous in the advancement of the Chriſtian Faith, and for that oppoſed by Panſe Aquitine his younger Brother: whom with a very ſmall Army, zealouſly invocating the aſſiſtance of Jeſus Chriſt, he is ſaid to have vanquiſhed. A Prince, who during his long reign of 50 years did ſeriouſly promote the Goſpel, and cauſed all Idols in his Kingdom to be overthrown: and Churches to be built, and furniſhed in convenient places.

3 Pedro, the ſon of Alphonſo, in whoſe time was founded the Colledge of 28 Canons, in the Cathedral Church of S. Croſſe, in the Town of S. Saviours.

4 Franciſco the ſon of Pedro, who reigned not long.

5 Diego, or James, one of the kinſmen of Franciſco, in whoſe time Religion growing into diſcredit, by the ſcandalous lives of ſome of the Secular Clergie; John the 3. King of Portugal ſent four Jeſuites thither; who are ſaid to have converted in five moneths 5000 perſons, and to build three Churches.

6 Henry, the brother of Diego, after a ſharp War touching the Succeſſion, in which were ſlain all the Portugals of S. Saviours, except the Prieſts; at laſt ſucceeded: not long after ſlain in battel againſt the Anziques.

7 Alvarez, the ſon of Henry, forced by the Jagges or Giacchi to abandon Congo, and betake himſelf, together with the Portugal Prieſts, to an Iſland of the River Zaire: where he continued, till reſtored to his Crown by the aid of Sebaſtian King of Portugal; after by famine he had loſt almoſt all his company.

8 Alvarez II. Son of Alvarez the firſt, who much ſollicited Sebaſtian and Henry Kings of Portugal, to ſend him a new ſupply of Preachers; the old ſtore being waſted in the Iſlands of Zaire.

9 Alvarez III. Son of Alvarez the 2. not being born in Lawful wedlock, was oppoſed by one of his Siſters and a younger Brother, both of lawful birth, whom he overthrew, Anno 1587. and in the place of the victory founded a Church in honour of the Virgin Mary.

Touching the Forces and Revenues of theſe Kings of Congo, I am able to ſay nothing certain; but that he is a Prince of great power and riches. His Riches viſible by the great treaſures which he draweth from the Mines of ſilver, and of other Metals in his Kingdom; from the trade of Cockle-ſhells, the onely money of his Realm, which he keeps wholly to himſelf; the great gain which he makes by Slaves, and from Elephants teeth; the preſents which he hath in way of Tribute, from the King of Angola.

gola. And though it be not eaſie to ſay what he layeth up yearly, becauſe he hath not his Revenue in Coin, as moſt Princes have; yet it is thought that he is as rich and well furniſhed with all things, as any Monarch in Africk.

As for his Forces, they conſiſt moſt in the multitudes of his Subjects; which were they well armed and uſed to the Wars, would make him formidable to the reſt of the African Princes. And though he hath no garriſons or Towns of war, but muſt truſt, if once invaded, unto Caſtles of bones; yet he doth reſt ſecure enough from all fear of danger, except out of Europe: being able to raiſe againſt his Rebels, or any of his invading neighbours; 400000 men out of Bamba onely; all armed according to their manner, and 70000 men at leaſt, well exerciſed in Wars againſt the Jagges, from the Province of Batta; beſides what may be draw from his other Provinces.

The Arms of this King are Mars, five ſwords meeting in Baſe Sol, Which Coat was taken by Alphonſo, the ſecond King in this Catalogue, becauſe in the battel which he fought againſt Panſe Aquitine, he and his Souldiers ſaw (or ſuppoſed they ſaw) ſuch a number of ſhining ſwords hanging in the Air, with their points turned directly upon the Enemy.

And ſo much for Æthiopia Inferior.

OF
THE ISLES OF AFRICK.

IN tracing out the Iſles of AFRICK, we muſt obſerve another courſe than that which we have taken in Europe and Aſia: theſe Iſlands not belonging to any part of the Continent, nor under the command of any great Prince in Africk, in the accompt of whoſe Eſtates they might be conſidered; but being all of them independent and ſui juris, and therefore to be handled by themſelves apart. In our Chorographie of which, and the ſtories of them, (as far forth as my Authors will direct me in it) I am now to travel; beginning firſt with thoſe that lie in the Red-Sea, or Indian Ocean, and ſo proceeding by the Cape of good Hope, through the main Atlantick Ocean to the Streits of Hercules: that from thence we may have the ſhorter paſſage into America, and there σὺν θεῷ ϗ ταῖς Μȣσαῖς, conclude our journey. Theſe then we will conſider either joynt, or ſeparate, as delivered to us by the names of 1. The Æthiopick Iſlands. 2. Socotara, 3. Madagaſcar, 4. Mohelia, 5. S. Helens, 6. S. Thomas, 7. The Princes Iſland, 8. The Gorgades, or Iſlands of Cape Vird, 9. The Canaries, or the Fortune Iſlands, 10. Madera, 11. The Iſland of Holy Port, and 12. The HESPERIDES; of all which, the four firſt onely are diſperſed in the Red-Sea, or Indian Ocean, all the reſt ſcattered up and down in the main Atlantick, on this ſide of the famous Promontory, called the Cape of good Hope.

1. THE ÆTHIOPICK ISLANDS.

1. THE ÆTHIOPICK ISLANDS, ſo called, becauſe they lie upon the Coaſt of Æthiopia Superior, together with all theſe which lie on the further ſide of the Cape of Good Hope, or ſcattered, or diſperſed in the Red-Sea, or Indian Ocean (for by thoſe names theſe mighty Oriental Seas are moſt commonly known) of which we have ſpoke more at large when we were in Arabia, and therefore ſhall ſay nothing here which concerns the ſame, but for the Iſlands of thoſe Seas, ſuch as we comprehend here under the name and notion of Æthiopick Iſlands, which were onely known unto the Ancients, they are more in number, than in weight; ſome of them ſituate within the Streits of the Red-Sea, or the Gulf of Arabia; others without thoſe Streits, in the open Ocean.

1. Of thoſe within the Streits, not reckoning ſuch as lie upon the ſhores of Arabia Felix, of which we have already ſpoken; there is 1. Aſiarte, or Aſtrata, now called Cainſſa, 2. Ara Palladis, ſo called from ſome Altar of that Goddeſs, which was there erected, 3. Gypſeris, by Pliny called Cyris, but Gypſus in Juſtinians Code, renowned in former times for its plenty of metals, 4. Macaria, or the fortunate Iſlands, ſo called from the fertility and pleaſures of it, 5. Orneon, or the Iſle of Birds, from the great plenty of Birds which was found therein, 6. Daphnis, by Ptolomy called Daphnine, oppoſite to a famous Port-Town of the ſame name in the Continent, 7. Bacchias, ſo called from Bacchus, unto whom conſecrated, 8. Anti-Bacchias, ſo named, becauſe oppoſite to it, 9. Acanthine, ſuppoſed by ſome to be now called Anghotina, 10. Inſula Diodori, conceived by the Learned to be the ſame which is now called Babel Mandel, and giveth name unto the Streits, or enterance of the Bay of Arabia, now called the Streits of Babel Mandel, 11. Iſidis Inſula, memorable for a Temple dedicated to the Goddeſs Iſis; and for a well frequented Port called Portus Iſidis; the ſame which is now called Paſcua, as Bel-foreſt thinketh, 12. Mundi, an Iſland in the Bay of Avalitos, oppoſite to a noted Empire of the ſame name on the ſhores of that Bay. Beſides all which, we find in Ptolomy two Iſlands by the name of Thriſitides; two more, called Chelonitides, or Cathrata, two others paſſing by the name of Gomadao; together with the Iſles of Myron, Pan, and that called Inſula Magorum: which make up one and twenty in all, but of no note, or obſervation in the courſe of buſineſs, or the conduct of humane affairs.

Thoſe of moſt note in the open Ocean, which ſtill preſerveth the name of the Red-Sea, and is ſometimes called the Indian, ſometimes the Arabian Ocean, and by a particular name Pelagus Hypadis; are but four in number, that is to ſay, 1. Myrica, by the Tranſlator of Ptolomy, called Myrſiaca, 2. 3. two Iſlands called by the name of Menan, a degree more Northwards than the other; and 4. Amicuſia, as Stephanus; or Amici Inſula, as called by Ptolomy, the moſt North of all; which I conjecture to be that which is now called by the name of Socotara, the moſt noted Iſland of this Sea. I know that many Learned men will have this Iſland to be that, which Ptolomy and others of the Ancients call Dioſcoridis: but becauſe Dioſcoridis, by all thoſe Ancients, is made to be an Iſland of Arabia Felix, and Socotara by all the Moderns affirmed to be an Iſle of Africk; I can by no means yield unto it. Again, it is affirmed by our beſt modern Geographers, that Socotara lieth over againſt Cape Guardafu, (the Aromata of Ptolomy, as before is ſaid) from which diſtant not above 30 leagues: which ſite and diſtance ſort well with Amicuſia, but can by no means be applied unto Dioſcoridis: Amicuſia being placed but two Degrees on the Eaſt of that Promontory, in the Longitude of 85. whereas Dioſcoridis is ſituate from it almoſt four degrees, in the Longitude of 86. and 40 Minutes; beſides as great, or greater difference in their ſeveral Latitude. So that ſuppoſing it for granted, that Socotara is that Iſland which was anciently called Amicuſia; and having cleared my way ſo far; I now proceed to the Deſcription and affairs thereof.

2. SOCOTARA.

SOCOTARA, the greateſt Iſland of theſe Shores, is ſituate, as before was ſaid, againſt Cape Guardafu, from which diſtant about 30 leagues; Abadalenry, a ſmall Iſland lying in the middeſt; that is to ſay, 15 leagues from the Cape, and 14 from the Iſland. The length hereof 60 miles, 25 the breadth; divided in the middle by craggy Mountains of great height, the top of which are for the moſt part covered with ſands. The Iſland extreamly vexed with winds, and moleſted with dryneſs, inſomuch as it is deſtitute of moſt things neceſſary for the life of man; affording nothing towards it of the growth of the Earth, but ſome ſmall quantity of Mill, Dates, and ſome kind of Fruits. Provided notwithſtanding of ſome good Paſtures for the breed of Cattel, and liberally furniſhed with Medicinal Drugs, as Cinnabar, Dragons bloud, which is a Red Gum iſſuing from the Bark of a Tree; and the beſt Aloes in the world, from hence called Aloes Socotrina.

The people of an Aſh-colour, very rude and barbarous, their bread for the moſt part of Dates; the reſt of their food being Milk and Butter; their hair long, and their cloathing only enough to hide their nakedneſs. The Women as good Souldiers as the men, countenancing or occaſioning the tradition of the Arabians, that they came from the Amazons; And the better Husbands of the two, governing all Affairs both within and without. All of them by profeſſion Chriſtians, governed by a Biſhop of their own, with ſome few Prieſts; but ignorant enough of all things which concern Religion. More generally Circumciſed than Chriſtened, though both uſed among them. Jacobites in Sect, as the Abaſſines their Neighbours are, and zealous Worſhippers of the Croſſe, which they alwaies hang about their necks. So pertinaciouſly addicted unto Magick, and therein ſo expert, that they bring incredible things to paſs: not to be weaned from thoſe Black Arts, though the Biſhop excommunicate all ſuch as uſe them. They hold opinion that St. Thomas ſuffered Shipwrack upon their Coaſts, as he ſayled towards India; and that his ſhip being drawn to land, was turned into a Church: but it appeareth neither by their life, or Doctrines, that any Apoſtolical man hath ſet foot amongſt them.

They live for the moſt part in Caves, or Cabines, of no other ſtuffe than the boughs of Trees; ſo that we are to look for few Towns among them. The principal, 1. Zocotara, giving name to the Iſland, the place of the Kings reſidence, and a Biſhops See. 2. Tamarind, and 3. Deliſha, two Port-towns, and reaſonably well traded, in the hands of the Natives: as, 4. Coro, and 5. Benin, two other Ports, poſſeſſed and garriſon'd by the Portugals. The King hereof a Vaſſal to the King of Fartac, one of the petit Princes of Arabia felix, not far from Aden; in habit and Religion Turkiſh: Attended on when the Relater was there, An. 1614. by five Camels and five Horſes only, yet thoſe all in the Iſland.

Nigh hereunto are two Iſlands (thoſe poſſibly which Ptolomy calleth Monan) the one inhabited by men only, and the other by women; who do meet at their accuſtomed times to preſerve their kind, but make no long ſtay; the Air of the one, being found unhealthy for the conſtitution of the other Sex. The other Iſlands of theſe Coaſts, ſcattered up and down in the Bay of Barbaria (but not known by any name in the time of Ptolomy) as, 1. Don Garcia. 2. the three brethren. 3. St. Brandon. 4. Francis, 5. Maſcadenna. 6. Comoro, and many others of as ſmall note, are not worth the ſpeaking of.

3. MADAGASCAR.

3. MADAGASCAR, the greateſt in the world, is ſituate over againſt Moſambique in Æthiopia Inferior: ſuppoſed to be the Menuthias of Ptolomy, the only Iſland by him named on the Coaſt of that Countrey; but by the Portugals called the Iſle of St. Lawrence, becauſe diſcovered by them on the day of that Saint, An. 1506. The length hereof affirmed to be 1200 miles (which is longer than Italy) and 4000 in compaſs: the middle part hereof oppoſite to the Promontory, which Ptolomy calleth Praſſum, now the point of Moſambique, from which diſtant 170 miles: in reference to the heavenly bodies, ſituate from the 17 Degree of Southern Latitude, to the 26th.

The Countrey plentiful of all things neceſſary for the life of man, particularly of Mill, Rice, Hony, Wax, Cotton-wool, Sugars, Stags, Goats, Deer, and other Creatures both wild and tame; Limons and other cooling Fruits, ſome ſtore of Ginger, Cloves, but little different from thoſe of India, red Sanders. Saffron, Amber, and ſome Mines of Silver, Iron, Gold, and Copper: not to ſay any thing of their Beeves and Muttons, ſo large and good, and ſo good cheap, that for a two-penny Bead, or ſome ſuch trifle, they will ſell Beeves and Sheep of good taſt and bigneſs, ſuch numbers of Elephants, that they ſend thence yearly great ſtore of Ivory. And amongſt other rare Fruits, they have plenty of thoſe, which they call Cocos, or Coconuts; a kind of Date as big as a Cabbage; the liquor in it, about the quantity of a Pint, taſtes like Wine and Sugar; the Kernel big enough to content two men: and like Good Ale, it affords not only meat and drink, but cloathing; as alſo furniture for their houſes, tackle for their ſhips, fewel for their fire, and timber for building; the body of the Tree being ſtraight and high, and towards the top diverſified into many Branches. A Countrey far too good for ſo bad a people.

For they, as Travellers report, and moſt Writers teſtifie, are treacherous, inhoſpitable, ignorant, both of Prayers and Feſtivals; deſtitute of the diſtinction of time into years and moneths, not knowing any proper names for the dayes of the Week, nor able to reckon above ten; naked except their Privities, which they cover with Cotton; Idolaters in the mid-land parts, and Mahometans upon the ſhores. Commendable only for their hate to Polygamy, and reſtraining themſelves to one Wife; the defiling of the Marriage-bed ſeverely puniſhed: but otherwiſe ſo eager upon Copulation, that their Boyes at the age of twelve years, and the Girls at ten, think they ſtay too long, if they keep their Virginities any longer; ſome of them, like Quartilla in Petronius Arbiter, begin ſo early, ut nunquam meminerint ſe Virgines fuiſſe, that they remember not the time when they loſt their Maidenheads. Of colour they are black, and of ſtrong compoſition; their breaſts and faces cut and pinkt, to appear more beautiful. Much given unto the wars, well armed according to their Countrey manner, and exceeding good Archers. Amongſt them there are ſome white people, ſaid to come from China.

It hath in it many fair Rivers, but their names I find not: and at the mouths of thoſe Rivers ſome convenient Havens, into which they admit the forreign Merchants, but ſuffer none to come on land; which the Merchant hath no cauſe to be ſorry for, finding himſelf not ſafe on ſhip-board from their treacherous practiſes. So that we can give but ſmall account of their Towns and Cities, except it be the bare recital of their names: as viz. 1. St. Auguſtines, on a fair bay in the South-weſt point, as 2. Gangomar, in the North-eaſt of it; 3. Antaboſta. 4. Point-Antogil. 5. Santo-Jacobo. 6. Matatana. 7. Angoda. 8. Herendo. 9. Andro-arco; and 10. Roma, or New-Rome, ſo entituled by ſome zealous Romaniſt, in hope to have it thought that the Popes of Rome have got ſome footing in this Iſland.

This Iſland known, but very imperfectly, in the time of Marcus Paulus Venetus, who telleth us many ſtrange things of it: but none more ſtrange than that of the Bird called Ruck, of ſuch incredible ſtrength and bigneſs, that it could ſnatch up an Elephant as eaſily as a Kite doth a Chicken. Diſcovered by the Portugals in the year 1506, as before was ſaid; and ſince frequented by the Engliſh and Holland Merchants: by whom we are informed no further touching the Eſtate and Affairs thereof, but that it is divided into four parts, under ſo many Kings, each of them in continual Wars againſt one another, but well enough agreed to defend themſelves againſt the coming in of ſtrangers. Yet as ſome ſay, they would be well enough content with an Engliſh Plantation: either in love to our Nation, whom they acknowledge to be more courteous than the Portugals, and not ſo covetous as the Dutch; or elſe by the ſtrength of our ſhipping, and the reputation of our intereſſe in it, to keep off all others.

4. MOHELIA, and 5. MAURITIUS Iſland.

ADjoyning to Madagaſcar, and as it were attending on it, I find divers Iſlands; ſome on the North-weſt, ſome directly Eaſt. On the North-weſt we have 1. Meottey. 2. Chamroe. 3. Mohelia, and 4. Joanna Iſland; on the Eaſt, 5. the Iſland of Mauritius, and 6. Englands Forreſt. Of theſe Mauritius is the greateſt, but Mohelia the beſt inhabited.

4. MOHELIA ſituate on the North-weſt of Madagaſcar, is about 20 miles in length, and 16 in breadth: abounding in Goats, Hens, Coconuts, Limons, Orenges, Pom-Citrons, Pulſe, Sugar-Canes; ſtore of Fiſh taken on the Shores, and other neceſſaries. The people of complexion black, of compoſition large and ſtrong; couragious, affable, leſs treacherous than their neighbours of Madagaſcar. Of the ſame Language and Religion with thoſe of Arabia, from whence they ſeem to have deſcended: but by reaſon of their commerce and intercourſe with the Portugals, they ſpeak that tongue alſo. The Women of the like complexion, to amend which, and ſeem more lovely, they pink their arms and faces in ſeveral ſhapes. Both ſexes no otherwiſe apparelled than their natural Garments, with ſome Plantane Leaves about their middle to hide their ſhame.

Their Religion that of Mahomet, as before is ſaid: their Prieſts in great eſteem amongſt them; ſo their Temples alſo: which they keep clean and neatly matted, not ſuffering any man to enter with his ſhooes on his feet. Their chief Town Meriangnea, at the Weſt-end of the Iſle, ſtrong and well garriſoned. Heretofore under the command of one King alone; of late divided into two Principalities: one of the laſt Kings leaving two Daughters, the one married to a Native, the other to an Arabian Lord.

5. Larger than this, on the Eaſt of Madagaſcar, is the Iſle of MAURITIUS, ſo called by the Hollanders in honour of Maurice Prince of Orange, in whoſe time they firſt ſet footing in it; but by the Portugals called De Cerne, and by ſome Cygnaa. In compaſs about 100 miles; well ſtored with Beeves, Hogs, Goats, moſt ſorts of Fiſh: and liberally endowed with all the bleſſings of Nature, ſweet Waters, moſt delicious Fruits, Woods fit for any uſe both of Food and Building; plenty of Ebony of all colours, but the beſt coal-black. Yet altogether deſtitute of humane Inhabitants: inſomuch as we may ſay of this, as the Poet of the World, before man was made:

Sanctius his Animal, mentiſq; capacius alta
Deerat adhuc, & quod dominari in cætera poſſet.

Which may be Engliſhed in theſe words:

But yet the Chief, with Supream power poſſeſt,
Was wanting, he that ſhould command the reſt.

Of the ATLANTICK OCEAN, and the Iſles therein.

Having thus looked upon ſuch Iſlands, as lie on the Eaſtern ſide of Africk in the Indian Ocean, let us come homeward by the Cape of good Hope into the main Atlantick, the greateſt body of waters, which is given to us by one name in any of our Coſmographers, either old or new: A name peculiar to that part of the Weſtern Ocean, which lieth between the Streights of Gibraltar, and the Land of Negroes, to which Mount Atlas ſheweth it ſelf with a cloudy top, and gives name to the Seas adjoyning, but generally communicated to all that vaſt Region of waters, which lieth between Spain and Africk, on the one ſide, and the new world, or America on the other ſide: Extended further by Strabo, and ſome others of the Ancient writers, who not knowing any thing of the interpoſition of America, carry the name of the Atlantick to the ſhores of India, which they make to be terminated by this Sea on the Eaſt and South. Macrobius goeth further in it, affirming poſitively, omnem terram, qua à nobis colitur, Atlantico mari (quod Oceanum appellamus) circumfundi, that the whole habitable world (ſo far as it was then known, and peopled) was compaſſed round about with the Atlantick Ocean. The like affirmed by Julius Firmicus alſo, by Ariſtotle in his book de Mundo, and by others, who have took it up upon their Authority. And though ſome parts hereof, which waſh the Weſtern-ſhores of Æthiopia Inferior, be called the Ethiopick Ocean; yet that doth derogate no more from the great extent that is given formerly to the main Atlantick, than that ſome parts of the Mediterranean ſhould be called Mare Ciculum, Sardoum, Tyrrhenum, Creticum, according to the ſhores of thoſe ſeveral places which it paſſeth by, which having ſaid in general of the Sea it ſelf, according to our Method in other places; we next proceed unto the reſt of the African Iſlands, which we named before, but could not meet with but in this Sea, and this ſide of Africa.

6. S. HELENS, and 7. the Iſles of ASCENTION.

ANd the firſt Iſle we meet with in this ſide of Africk is 6. the Iſle of S. Hellens, ſituate on the Weſt of the Cape of good Hope, and in the 16 degree of the Southernly Latitude, no other Iſland interpoſing betwixt Madagaſcar and it, except thoſe of Don Alvarez, and of Tiſtram de Acugna, near the Cape it ſelf; but of ſo little note, as not worth the naming. The Iſland very high and hilly, and mounting from the Sea with ſo ſteep an aſcent, that the Marriners have amongſt them a merry ſaying, that a man may chuſe whether he will break his heart going up, or his neck coming down.

It was thus called, becauſe diſcovered by the Portugals on S. Helens day; not then inhabited, nor ſince; the King of Spain ſuffering none to dwell there, becauſe it had been an unlawful receptacle for uncuſtomed Goods; whereby he loſt exceedingly both in power and profit. Stored by the Portugals at the firſt Diſcovery, with Goats, Hogs, Hens, and other Creatures: as alſo with Figs, Limons, Orenges, and the like Fruits, which there thrive exceedingly; and grow all the year long. Intended by them for a Stage in their going and coming to and from the Indies: in which they might refreſh themſelves, and beſtow their ſick, whence they are taken off by the next years Fleet. Uſed for the ſame purpoſe by the Engliſh and Hollanders, who ſo domineer about the Iſland, that the Portugals dare not Anchor near it, or own their property, if they ſee any ſhipping in the Rode. No buildings in it but the ruins of a little Chappel, deſtroyed by the Hollanders; and ſome fragment of a little Village begun by ſome Portugal Mariners, but demoliſhed by the King of Spain.

7. Northweſt from hence is the Iſle of Aſcenſion, ſo called, becauſe diſcovered on Aſcenſion day: but not inhabited, nor any uſe at all made of for ought I can find. Of the ſame bigneſs with S. Helens, 30 miles in compaſs, and about 700 Engliſh miles diſtant from it.

8. S. THOMAS, 9. the PRINCES Iſland, and 10. the Iſle of ANNIBON.

8. THe Iſland of S. THOMAS is ſituate directly under the Æquator; of Orbicular form, the Diameter being 60 miles, by conſequence the Perimiter, or compaſs 180 and juſt ſo many from the ſhore of the Realm of Congo. At the firſt diſcovery nothing but a continual Foreſt, now very well inhabited both by Portugals and Negroes; theſe laſt brought hither from the oppoſite Continent: with whom the air agrees ſo well, that they attain generally to 110 years of age, few of the Portugals unto fifty. The air ſo vehemently hot, that it ſorteth not with the conſtitution of the Europæans.

The Countrey deſtitute of Wheat, which if ſown here, turneth all to blade, and brings forth no Ear: nor will any fruits here proſper, that have any ſtone in them: but ſo abundant in Sugar Canes, and well ſtored with Sugars, that 40 ſhips are hence loaded yearly, with that one commodity, for making which, they have here 70 Ingenios, or Sugar-houſes, and in each of them 200 Slaves, in ſome 300 which belong to the works. Six dayes in ſeven theſe Slaves work for their Maſters, and the ſeventh for themſelves; which they ſpend in ſowing and planting their Seeds, Fruits, and Proviſions. Where by the way, theſe Sugar-works, or Ingenios are a late invention; the boyling and baking of Sugar (as it is now uſed) not being above 200 years old; and the refining of it more new then that: firſt found out by a Venetian in the dayes of our Fathers, who is ſaid to have got above 100000 Crowns by this Invention, and to have left his ſon a Knight; who (though he was no Knight of the Poſt) in very little time brought it all to nothing. Before which Art of boyling and refining Sugars, our Anceſtors not having ſuch luxurious Palates, ſometimes made uſe of rough Sugar, as it came from the Canes; but moſt commonly pleaſed themſelves with honey, more wholſome, becauſe more natural than theſe forced Inventions. But to proceed in the deſcription of this Iſland, in the midſt thereof there is ſaid to be a woody Mountain, over-ſhadowed continually with Clouds: which ſo moiſten the Trees that grow there in a great abundance, that from thence falleth a ſufficient quantity of waters to refreſh their fields, and feed their Sugar-Canes; notwithſtanding the extream heat of the Clime and Air.

The Religion here allowed of is the Chriſtian onely, firſt preached here by the Portugals, or brought hither with them. The Church hereof governed by a Biſhop, his title the Biſhop of S. Thomas; but his charge extendeth alſo over all the Churches in the Realm of Congo. The principal City of it hath the name of Pavoaſan, a Colony of Portugals, conſiſting of 700 Families, or about that number: ſituate on a fine River, and a pleaſant Haven: ſeldom without the company of Portugal Merchants, who bring hither in exchange for Sugars, Wheat, Wine, Cheeſe, Hides, and other things more neceſſary than thoſe Sugars, for the life of Man. Took by the Hollanders in the year 1599. but again recovered, or abandoned; and ſince poſſeſſed again by the Hollanders, not as before by force of Arms, but by fraud and falſhood, at the ſame time, and by the ſame diſhoneſt Arts by which they made themſelves Maſters of the Caſtle of Angola before mentioned. And though the Portugal Ambaſſadour preſented this injurious dealing to the States of Holland, yet all the anſwer he could get at the preſent was, that their people had done nothing, but what was juſtified by that clauſe of the Article, that both ſides might take and keep, and whatſoever they could within ſuch a time, and though the Ambaſſadour replied very rationally in behalf of his Countrey, and preſt the reſtitution both of this Iſland, and that Caſtle, by all honeſt Arguments, yet he could then get no reaſon from them; and whether they have done the Portugals any Juſtice ſince, as to thoſe particulars, I am not able to determine.

9. THE PRINCES ISLAND, (Inſula Principis in the Latine) ſo called, for that the Revenues of it were alotted to the Prince of Portugal; is ſituate in three Degrees of the Northern Latitude. The Countrey very fruitful for the bigneſs of it; but not much obſervable: except it be for being taken for the Hollanders by Julian Clerehagen, Anno 1598. abandoned not long after to the former Owner. Attended, as is fit for a Princes Iſland, by a Meſſe of Chaplains, viz. 1. the Iſles of S. Matthew, 2. S. Croſſe, 3. S. Paul, and 4. S. Conception: and waited on by ſeven ſervants (ſo many Iſlands near Cape Vero) all in Coats of Green, called by one common name, Barbacene. But becauſe the former four yield no matter of Hiſtory, and theſe laſt ſeven have no other Inhabitants but Birds; we may be thought, having ſaid thus much of them, to have ſaid enough.

10. South-weſt hereof, but on the other ſide of the Line, lieth the Iſle of Annobon, (Inſula Annaboni as the Latines call it.) So named, becauſe diſcovered upon New-years-day. Inhabited, and of very good fiſhing all along the Coaſts of it; but that fiſhing made unſafe by Crocodiles, and other venemous and hurtful Creatures, which are ſaid to be about the ſhores in great abundance.

11. The GORGADES, or Iſles of CAPE VERD.

11. THe GORGADES, or Iſlands of Cape Verd (Inſulæ Capitis Viridis, as the Latines call them) are nine in number; called by the laſt name, becauſe ſituate over againſt Cape Verd (Promontorium Capitis Viridis) in the Land of Negroes. Their names 1. S. Anthony, 2. S. Vincent, 3. Buena-viſta, 4. S. Lucies, 5. Inſula Salis, the Iſle of Salt, 6. Del Fogo, or the Iſle of Fire, 7. S. Nicholas, 8. Maggio, or Majo, 9. S. Jago. Some add to theſe a tenth, called Brava. Diſcovered all in the year 1440. by a Geneoſe called Antonio de Noli, imployed therein at the charges and direction of Henry Duke of Viſco, one of the younger ſons of King John of Portugal, the firſt of that name. Of the moſt little to be ſaid. The principal, and indeed the onely ones which are now inhabited, are Majo, Del Fogo, S. Jago, 1. Majo, is of moſt repute for a Lake of two leagues long; the waters whereof are by the heat of the Sun turned into Salt, which is here made in great abundance. 2. Del. Fogo, is called from the Flakes of fire which it ſends forth uſually; and fell ſo thick upon the ſhip of Sir Antony Sherley when he took the Iſland, An. 1596. that one might have writ his name in the aſhes on the upper Deck, with the top of his finger, 3. The principal of all S. Jago, yet but ſeven miles long; Rocky and Mountainous, but full of very pleaſant Valleys, and well inhabited. The chief Town of it called Riblera, or Ribiera la Grande, a Colony of Portugals; ſituate on a fine River and a beautiful Haven: taken and ſacked by Sir Francis Drake, in the year 1585. and after by Sir Anthony Sherley, An. 1596.

The name of Gorgades, as the more ancient of the two, is almoſt forgotten. Given to thoſe Iſlands, as ſuppoſed (but I cannot ſee upon what grounds) to be the ſeat of the Gorgons; the proper habitation, or dwelling place of Meduſa, and her two fair ſiſters. This Meduſa ſaid, or rather fabled by the Poets, to have been a Woman of great beauty; Who either for ſuffering her body to be abuſed by Neptune, in one of the Temples of Pallas, or for preferring her ſelf before Pallas, had by the ſaid Goddeſs, her hair turned into Snakes; and this property annexed unto them, that whoſoever looked on her, ſhould be turned into ſtones: which quality is retained after ſhe was ſlain, and beheaded by Perſeus. Thus and far more fabulouſly the Poets. The Hiſtorians (for as ſome think, omnis fabula fundatur in hiſtoria) relate, how this Meduſa was indeed a Lady of ſuch exceeding beauty, that all men that ſaw her, were amazed: and of ſuch a wiſe and ſubtile brain, that for that cauſe onely men attributed unto her a Serpents head. She abounding in wealth, and by piracy moleſting the Seas of Europe, was invaded by an Army of Grecians, under the leading of Perſeus; who in a ſingle combat ſlew her. Perſeus when he plucked off her helmet, admiring that beauty which he had deſtroyed; cut off her head, and carried it into Greece: where the people beyond meaſure wondred at the rare compoſiture of her face, and the exceeding beauty of her hair; and are therefore ſaid to have by her head been metamorphoſed into ſtones. Pauſanias in his Corinthiacks ſo reports the ſtory.

12. The CANARIES.

THe CANARIES are in number ſeven, ſituate over againſt the Coaſt of Libya Interior; ſo called from Canaria, one of the principal of the number. By Pliny, Ptolomy, and other of the Ancient Writers they were called Inſulæ Fortunatæ, the fortunate Iſlands: and amongſt them of greateſt note, for being made the fixed place of the firſt Meridian; removed ſince to S. Michaels one of the Azores. But thoſe Antients knew but ſix of them by name, and in the naming of theſe ſix do not well agree. By Pliny, whom Solinus followeth, they are ſaid to be 1. Ombrio, 2. Junonia Major, 3. Junonia Minor, Minor. 4. Capraria. 5. Nivaria, and 6. Canaria. By Ptolomy thus reckoned. 1. Aproſitus. 2. Hera (or Junonia) 3. Pluitania. 4. Caſperia. 5. Canaria, and 6. Pincuria. Where we may note alſo to our purpoſe, that though theſe Authours diſagree in all the reſt of the names (Junonia being added by the Tranſlatour unto Ptolomies Hera) yet they agree in making Canaria to be one: which ſheweth that one to be of eminence enough, to give the name of Canarie Iſlands unto all the reſt. Called Fortunate, from an opinion which the ancients had of their fruitfulneſs, and other excellencies; in which reſpects, ſeveral Countreys, in thoſe times had the name of Macaria, Felix, Fortunate. Now better known by the new names of 1. Canarie. 2. Palma. 3. Tenariffe. 4. Gomero. 5. Ferro. 6. Lanſerotte, and 7. Fuerte Ventura.

1. CANARIA, or Canaria Magna, becauſe the biggeſt of the Cluſter, is ſaid to be 90 miles in compaſs, and to contain 9000 perſons: Plentiful in Barley, Honey, Wax, Sugar-Canes, Goats, Kine, and Camels; of which, and of their Cheeſe, and the ſkins of Beaſts they raiſe great profit: but from nothing more than from their Woad (whereof they have very great abundance) uſed by the Clothier for the well colouring of his Cloath. From hence and from the other of theſe Iſlands which bear this name, come the fine ſinging Birds called Canary-birds; and ſo do alſo thoſe rich Wines, (the fruit of the Rheniſh Grape tranſplanted) which we call Canaries. A ſort of Wine, if not ſophiſticated and abuſed, which is ſaid to fume leſs into the head, pleaſe the Palat more, and better help the natural weakneſs of a cold ſtomack (if moderately and diſcreetly uſed) than any other Wines whatſoever. Brought hence in ſuch abundance to ſupply our luxury, that no leſs than 3000 Tuns hereof are vended yearly into England and the Netherlands onely.

2. PALMA, one of the leaſt in circuit, but as rich as any; fruitful in Wine and Sugars, abundantly well ſtored with Cattel, and great plenty of Cheeſe; and therefore made the victualling place of the Spaniſh Fleets, as they paſs to Braſil, and Peru. This Iſland together with Canary, and Tenariffe, make up the Biſhoprick of the Canaries. One of the Biſhops whereof was that Melchior Canus a Dominican Frier; whoſe works now extant in defence of the Church of Rome, ſhew him to have been a moderate and learned man, and Maſter of a perfect Ciceronian ſtile. The reſidue of the Iſlands are of the Dioceſe of Madera.

3. TENARIFFE, ſomewhat leſs than the Grand Canarie, but of the ſame fertility and condition with it, is moſt remarkable for a mountain of ſo great an height, that it may be ſeen 90 leagues at Sea, in a fair clear day. Some reckon it 15 miles high, others 15 leagues, and ſome advance it to 60 miles, but with little credit. With truth enough moſt of our Travellers and Geographers hold it to be the higheſt in the whole world. The Form, Pyramidal, in ſhape agreeing to theſe Prodigies of Art and Wonder, the Ægyptian Pyramides. The top whereof ending in a ſharp point, called the Pike of Tenariffe, is ſaid to be ſeldom without ſnow; and therefore probably conceived to be the Nivaria of Pliny.

4. HIERRO, or FERRI inſula, ſo called from the Iron Mines therein, is by ſome thought to be the Pluitalia, by others the Aproſitus of Ptolomy; and ſome again more probably, the Ombrio of Pliny, if this and Ptolomies Pluitalia be not one and the ſame, as for my part I think they be. And it might poſſibly have thoſe names in the Greek and Latine, becauſe it hath in it no freſh waters but what they do receive in ſhowres, and preſerve in Ciſterns: it being added by late Writers (which the ancients knew not) that theſe ſhowres do dayly fall upon them from the Leaves of a Tree, which alwayes covered with a Cloud doth diſtil theſe waters; preſerved in a large Ciſtern underneath the Tree, for the uſe of Man and Beaſt throughout the Iſland.

5. GOMERA, now as civil and well cultivated as any of the reſt, was the moſt barbarous of all when firſt diſcovered: it being here and here onely, the ordinary ſign and evidence of their Hoſpitality, to let their friends lie with their wives, and receive theirs in teſtimony of reciprocal kindneſs: for which cauſe here as in ſome places of the Indies, the ſiſters ſon did uſe accuſtomably to inherit.

6. LANSAROTE the firſt of theſe Iſlands which was made ſubject to the Crown of Caſtile, diſcovered by ſome adventurous Biſcains, An. 1393. by whom ſpoyled and pillaged, and the poor King and Queen thereof, and 170 of their Subjects of better quality, brought away Priſoners into Spain. On this diſcovery the Kings of Caſtile challenged a propriety in all theſe Iſlands; of which more anon. In this of Lanſarote there was an Epiſcopal See erected by Pope Martin the 5th. removed unto the Iſle of Canary in the time of Ferdinand the Catholick.

7. FUERTE-VENTURA, of the ſame nature with the reſt, ſuppoſed to be the Capraria of Pliny, and the Caſperia of Ptolomy; but not elſe obſervable. Near unto theſe, but not within the name and notion of the Fortunate, or Canary Iſles, are certain others of leſs note, that is to ſay. 1. Gratioſa. 2. S. Clara. 3. Roca. 4. Lobos. 5. Alegranco; and 6. Infierno, ſmall and of no accompt, nor yielding any matter of obſervation.

The knowledge of theſe Iſlands being loſt with the Roman Empire, they lay concealed and undiſcovered till the year 1330. or thereabouts, when an Engliſh, or as ſome ſay, a French ſhip, diſtreſſed by tempeſt, did in that misfortune fall upon them. Notice whereof being given in the Court of Portugal, in the reign of King Alphonſo the fourth, Lewis de Ordo was deſigned for the conqueſt of them. Who being repulſed at Gomera, Anno 1334. gave the enterprize over, though on this ground the Portugals build their firſt claim unto theſe Iſlands. But the news ſpreading by degrees to the Court of Rome, Clement the ſixt thought fit to make a grant of them to Prince Lewis of Spain, ſon of Alphonſo de la Cerda the right Heir of Caſtile, by the old name of the Fortunate Iſlands; and to aſſiſt him in the conqueſt, cauſed Levies of Souldiers to be made both in France and Italy. Which coming to the ears of the Engliſh Ambaſſadours in the Popes Court, they feared that ſome tranſport had been made of the Britiſh Iſlands (than which they thought that none could better deſerve the name of the Fortunate Iſlands) and in all haſte diſpatched a Poſt to the Court of England, for the preventing of the danger. The people at the time of this firſt diſcovery, were ſo rude and ignorant, that they did eat their fleſh raw for want of fire; and tilled, or rather turned up the earth with the horns of Oxen, for want of Ploughs, or Tools of Iron; their Beards they ſhaved with a ſharp flint, and committed the care of their Children to the nurſing of Goats. To kill a beaſt was conceived to be the baſeſt Office that could be poſſibly put upon them, and therefore commonly impoſed on Priſoners and condemned perſons; who being thus made the common Slaughtermen, were to live ſeparate from the reſt. Their Government by Kings, in each Iſland one: whom at their deaths, they ſit up naked in a Cave, propped againſt the wall with a ſtaff in his hand, and a veſſel of Milk faſt by him, the better to enable him for his journey to the other world; and leaving him in the Grave with theſe ſolemn words, Depart in peace, O thou bleſſed Soul. The like Funeral they beſtowed alſo on the chief of their Nobles. Yet was not the Government in thoſe times ſo purely Regal, but that they had a Common Councel (as it were) out of all the Iſlands, conſiſting of 130 perſons: who did not only direct in Civil matters, but in Sacred alſo, preſcribing to the people both their Faith and Worſhip; and for their pains were priviledged with the firſt nights lodging with every Bride, which the Husband was to offer to ſome one of them.

But to return unto the Story, nothing being done by Lewis de la Cerde, in purſuance of the Popes Donation, it hapned in the year 1393. that ſome Adventurers of Biſcay, ſetting out certain Ships from Sevil to ſeek their Fortunes at Sea, fell amongſt theſe Iſlands. And having pillaged Lanſarote as before was ſaid, and obſerved the number, greatneſs, and ſituation of all the reſt; returned into Spain, with great ſtore of Wax, Hides, and other commodities, with which thoſe Iſlands did abound: extremely welcome to King Henry, who then reigned in Caſtile, and did intend from that time forwards to poſſeſs himſelf of them. By Catharine the Dowager of this King Henry, during the minority of John the 2d. the Conqueſt of them was committed to John of Betancourt, an adventurous French-man, (conditioned he ſhould hold them under the ſoveraignty of the Crown of Caſtile) by whom four of the Iſlands were ſubdued, though he himſelf periſhed in the action, An. 1417. Young Betancourt the ſon, not able to ſubdue Canary, to which moſt of the Iſlanders had retired; fortified himſelf as well as he could in the Iſle of Lanſarote, and took unto himſelf the title of King: which he left not long after to one Menault; in whoſe time the Iſlands under his command received the Goſpel, and had a See Epiſcopal in the Iſle of Lanſarote. But this new King making money by the ſale of his ſubjects, (as well of the new Chriſtians, as the old Idolaters) complaint was made of him in the Court of Caſtile; and Pedro Barva de Campos with three ſhips of war is ſent againſt him: with whom unable to contend, with the good leave and liking of the King of Caſtile, he ſold his intereſs in theſe Iſlands to one Fernando Peres a Knight of Sevil, who by the wealth and power of that City made good his purchaſe, and left it unto his Succeſſors. But we muſt know that the poſterity of this Peres enjoyed the four leſſer Iſlands onely; Canaria it ſelf, Tenariffe, and the Iſle of Palmes, being under the command of their own Kings. And ſo continued till the reign of Ferdinand the Catholick, who in the year 1483. under the conduct of Alphonſo of Muxica, and Pedro de Vera, two noble Captains, became maſter of them; and tranſlated the Epiſcopal See from Lanſarote to the Great Canary. So that although the Portugals claim theſe Iſlands in right of the firſt diſcovery, yet the poſſeſſion hath gone always with the Crown of Caſtile. Divided at the preſent into two Eſtates, (but the one ſubordinate to the other) Gomera, Lanſarote, and Hierra, being in the hands of ſome private Subjects, thoſe which belong unto the Crown, being Canaria, Palma, Tenariffe, and Fuerte-Ventura, are ſaid to yield yearly to the King 50000 Ducats; the Seat of Juſtice being fixed in the Iſle of Canaria, unto which all the reſt reſort as they have occaſion.

13. MADERA, & 14. HOLY PORT.

13. MADERA, the greateſt Iſland of the Atlantick, is ſituate in the Latitude of 32. over againſt the Cape of Cantin in Morocco; in compaſs 140 miles, ſome adde 20 more. So called of the wilderneſs of Trees there growing, when firſt diſcovered; the Portugals naming that Madera, which the Latines call Materia, and we Engliſh Timber: with which the Iſle was ſo overgrown, that the beſt way to cleer it and make it habitable, was by conſuming them with fire; which raged ſo horribly for the time, that the people imployed in it were fain to go far into the Sea to refreſh themſelves. But the Husbandry was well beſtowed; the Aſhes making ſo good compoſt to enrich the ſoil, (as burning the Turf of barren land, and ploughing the Aſhes of it, on ſome grounds with us) that at the firſt it yielded ſixty-fold increaſe. And though the firſt vertue of that experiment be long ſince decayed, yet ſtill it yieldeth thirty-fold in moſt places of it; fruitful withal of a kind of Plant uſed in dying Clothes, which is hence called Mader; and of Sugar Canes in ſuch a wonderful manner, that for a time the fifths of the Sugars herein made amounted yearly to 60000 Arnobes; now not half ſo much. The Iſle wonderfully fruitful alſo of Honey, Wax, rich Fruits, and the choiceſt Wines; the Slips whereof were brought from Candy, bringing forth here more grapes than leaves, and Cluſters of two, three, and four ſpans long. The Hills well ſtored with Goats, the Plains with numerous Herds of Cattel; the Woods with Peacocks, Thruſhes, Pigeons: theſe laſt ſo ignorant of the injury which Man might do them, that at the firſt coming of the Portugals thither, they would ſuffer themſelves to be taken up; but now have wit enough to keep out of danger.

The whole Iſland in all parts well watered, having beſides many pleaſant Springs, eight handſome Riverets, wherewith the Earth refreſh'd and moiſtned, yields the ſweeter Herbage; which otherwiſe by reaſon of the heat of the Air (never very cool) might not be ſo nouriſhing. The chief City of it hath the name of Fouchial, the See of an Archbiſhop, and the Seat of Juſtice: known to the Romans by the name of Junonis, or Antolala, as many learned men conceive, and again forgotten; it was of later times diſcovered by one Machan, an Engliſhman, who was caſt upon it by a Tempeſt, An. 1344. who burying there his wife, or ſome other woman which he had in his company, writ on her tomb his name, and coming thither, with the cauſe thereof; which gave the Portugals occaſion, to look further after it. Deſolate, and unpeopled at the firſt diſcovery, now exceeding populous: and of no ſmall advantage to the Crown of Portugal, to which firſt united, An. 1420. under the conduct of Prince Henry before mentioned.

14. INSULA PORTUS SANCTI, or the Iſle of HOLY-PORT, is diſtant from Madera about 40 miles; neighbouring the Coaſts of Mauritania Tingitana, and therefore probably conceived to be the Cerne of Ptolomy. So called, becauſe diſcovered by ſome Portugal-Mariners (by the direction and encouragement of the ſaid P. Henry) on All-hallows day, An. 1428. Deſolate and unhabited at the firſt diſcovery, but now very well peopled. In compaſs about 15 miles; well ſtored with Corn and Fruits, great ſhoals of Fiſh upon their ſhores, plenty enough of Beeves and Goats: but ſuch abundance of Coneys (bred of one Doe Coney brought thither when great with young) that the Inhabitants were no leſſe peſtered with them in theſe later times, than the Baleares were of old; inſomuch that they were out of hope to withſtand the miſchief, or repair the damages ſuſtained by them. A little Iſland not far off, breedeth nothing elſe. The chief Town of it Porto-Santo, or Holy-Port, ſeated on a convenient Rode, but a ſorry Haven; was taken by Sir Amias Preſton, in our wars with Spain, An. 1596. but being ſacked and ſpoyled, was again abandoned. In former times called Cerne, as before was ſaid, and reckoned for the moſt remote Colony which the Carthaginians or Phœnicians had in the Weſtern Ocean; beyond which they conceived the Sea to be unnavigable (proved otherwiſe by Hanno's voyage) choaked with mud and weeds. Called therefore Cerne ultima (Æthiopum populos alit ultima Cerne) by Feſtus Rufus, and others of the Ancient Writers.

15. THE HESPERIDES.

15. THe HESPERIDES, by Pliny and Pomponius Mela, are ſaid to be two in number, ſituate in the Atlantick Seas, but we find not where. Much memorized and chanted by the Antient Poets, for giving a ſafe and pleaſant habitation to the daughters of Atlas (which they call by the name of Heſperides alſo;) the curious Gardens by them planted, and the Golden Apples of it which were kept by a Dragon, and took hence by Hercules. But the Hiſtorians remove theſe Gardens out of the Sea, into the main Land of Africk, and fix them in Cyrene, where already ſpoken of. Which notwithſtanding it is granted that there were antiently ſome Iſlands in the Atlantick Ocean, noted by this name, and, ſaid to be exceeding fruitful of their own accord: and therefore probably the ſame which Plutarch in the Life of Sertorius calleth Inſula Atlantica, and deſcribes them thus. “Αἱ δύο μὲν εἰσὶ, λεπτῷ παντάπασι “πορθμῷ διακρινόμεναι, &c. They are (ſaith he) two Iſlands parted by a narrow Streit of the Sea, diſtant “from the main land of Africk 10000 furlongs (which in our accompt cometh to 1250 miles) cal-“led, alſo the Iſles of Bleſſed Souls, and the Fortunate Iſlands. They have rain there very ſeldom, but a “fine ſweet Dew, which makes the Earth exceeding fruitful both for tillage and planting fruits, which “ſometimes grow without any care or labour of the husband-man; ſufficient by their plenty and ſweet-“neſs to maintain the people, much given to eaſe, and hardly troubling themſelves with any buſineſs. “The Air for the moſt part very temperate, never extreme in any changes of the ſeaſon; the rigor of the “Northern, and Eaſtern winds, being by ſo long a paſſage thither very much abated; as on the other “ſide the Weſtern and South-Eaſtern winds do much refreſh it with ſuch Miſts, as they bring from the “Sea, to the great comfort of the people. A place ſo generally ſweet, that the Barbarous people in it “have a conſtant and approved opinion, that theſe ſhould be the Elyſian Fields, the ſeats of the bleſſed “ſouls departed, deſcribed by Homer: with the report whereof Sertorius was ſo highly taken, that he “intended to have given over the purſuit of the Civil wars, and there to ſpend the reſt of his dayes in “peace and happineſs; which he had done, if the Cilicians, men accuſtomed unto ſpoil and rapine, had “not took him off. So far and to this purpoſe Plutarch. But what theſe Iſlands are, and where now to be found, (for in regard of their great diſtance from the Coaſt of Africk, they cannot be the Fortunate Iſlands ſpoken of before) I cannot eaſily determine: unleſs we ſhould conjecture, as Ortelius doth, that they are the Iſlands of Cuba and Hiſpaniola, on the Coaſts of America; to the Story and Chorographie whereof we are now to haſten.

And ſo much for the Iſles of Africk.

COSMOGRAPHIE,

LIB. IV. PART II.

CONTEINING THE

CHOROGRAPHY and HISTORIE
OF AMERICA,
And all the Principal Kingdoms, Provinces, Seas, and Iſles of it.

Of AMERICA.

AMERICA, the fourth and laſt part of the World, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Atlantick Ocean, and the Vergivian Seas, by which parted from Europe, and Africa; which Seas, the Mariners call Mare del Nort; on the Weſt, with the Pacifique Ocean, by the Mariners called Mare del Zur, which divides it from Aſia; on the South, with ſome part of Terra Auſtralis Incognita, from which ſeparated by a long, but narrow Streight, called the Streights of Magellan; the North bounds of it hitherto not ſo well diſcovered, as that we can certainly affirm it to be Iſland, or Continent.

It is called by ſome, and that moſt aptly, THE NEW WORLD: New, for the late Diſcovery; and World, for the vaſt Greatneſs of it. The moſt uſual, and yet ſomewhat the more improper, name is that of America; becauſe Americus Veſpucius, an Adventurous Florentine, diſcovered a great part of the Continent of it. But ſince the firſt light he had to find out thoſe parts came from the directions and example of Columbus, who firſt led the way; and that Sebaſtian Cabot touched at many places, which Americus Veſpucius never ſaw; it might as properly have been called Columbana, Sebaſtiana, or Cabotia. The moſt improper name of all, and yet not much leſs uſed than that of America, is, the Weſt-Indies: Weſt, in regard of the Weſtern ſituation of it, from theſe parts of Europe; and Indies, either as miſtook for ſome part of India, at the firſt Diſcovery, or elſe becauſe the Sea-men uſed to call all Countreys, if remote and rich, by the name of India.

Many are of opinion, but rather grounded on Conjectural Preſumptions, than Demonſtrative Arguments, that America was known long before our late Diſcoveries. Their Reaſons drawn, 1. From the Doctrine of the Antipodes, which being maintained by many of the antient Writers, inferreth (as they think) a knowledge of theſe parts of the World, which are oppoſite to us. But unto this it may be anſwered, that the knowledge of the Antipodes amongſt the Antients was by Suppoſition, at the beſt by Demonſtration only, and not in Fact; or thus, that it was known that there were Antipodes, but the Antipodes were not known. 2*ly*. It is ſaid that Hanno, a Noble Carthaginian, diſcovered a great Iſland in the Weſtern Ocean, and after a long Voyage returned home again, not wanting Sea-room, but Victuals, as he told the Senate. But he that writ the actions of Hanno in this famous Voyage, (which ſome conceive to be Hanno himſelf) informs us that he ſailed not Weſtwards, but more towards the South: and therefore this great Iſland, whatſoever it was, (whether Madera, or ſome one of the Fortunate Iſlands, I determine not) could not be America. 3*ly*. It is alleged that Plato in his Timæus ſpeaks of a great Iſland of the Atlantick Ocean, Libyam and Africam adæquans (as out of him Tertullian hath it) as big as Libya, and Africk properly ſo called: which he confeſſeth to be drowned long before his time, and therefore poſſibly never extant but in ſome mens fancies. 4ly. That Ariſtotle in the Book de Mundo (if that Book be his) ſpeaks of an Iſland very fruitfull, and full of navigable Rivers; diſcovered by the Carthaginians, and by them forbidden to be Planted upon pain of Death. Which Iſland being affirmed by that Author, to be Multorum dierum itinere à Gadibus remota, hath made ſome men conceive it to be this America, or ſome of the great Iſlands of it. As if it might not be as well one of the Azores, or perhaps Madera; or ſome other of the Iſlands in the Road of Hannos Voyage. Certain I am, that one of the beſt friends the Phœnicians have, who would not gladly loſe ſuch an opportunity of enabling their performances in Navigation, (could any thing be built upon it) doth wave the whole Relation as of doubtful credit; and knoweth of no ſuch place as is there deſcribed by that Author, whoſoever he were. 5ly. Some have produced theſe Verſes of Seneca, to inferr a knowledge of this Country amongſt the antients, viz.

Venient annis ſecula ſeris,
Quibus Oceanus vincula rerum
Laxet, & ingens pateat tellus,
Novoſque Typhis detegat Orbes,
Nec ſit Terris ultima Thule.

Which may be Engliſhed in theſe words:

In the laſt dayes an age ſhall come,
Wherein the all-devouring Fome
Shall loſe its former bounds, and ſhew
Another Continent to view.
New-worlds, which Night doth now conceal,
A ſecond Typhis ſhall reveal;
And frozen Thule ſhall no more
Be of the Earth the furtheſt Shore.

But this Argument can bring no neceſſary, nor ſo much as a probable inference, of any ſuch Continent as this, then known to Seneca: the Poet in that Chorus ſhewing as well the continual Dangers, as the poſſible effects of Navigation; that there might be, not that there were more Lands diſcovered, than thoſe formerly known. 6ly. Some hold this Country to be the Land of Ophir, to which Solomon is ſaid in the Holy Scrptures to have ſent for Gold. But Ezion-Geber, which is there alſo ſaid to be the Station where his Navy lay, was ſituate in the bottom of the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia: whereas if he had ſent this way, his Shipping muſt have lain at Joppa, or ſome other Port of the Mediterranean, and from thence ſet forwards through the Streights of Gibraltar, and ſo plainly Weſt-ward. 7ly. Finally, in the Hiſtory of Wales writ by David Powel, it is reported that Madoc the Son of Owen Gwinedth Prince of Wales, of purpoſe to decline ingaging in a Civil War raiſed in that Eſtate, in the year 1170. put himſelf to Sea; and after a long courſe of Navigation, came into this Country, where after he had left his men, and fortified ſome places of advantage in it, he returned home for more ſupplies, which he carried with him in ten Barks; but neither he nor they looked after by the reſt of that Nation. To which ſome add, that here is ſtill ſome ſmattering of the Welch, or Britiſh Tongue, to be found amongſt them; as that a Bird with a white Head is called Pengwin, and the like: in which regard, ſome ſorry Stateſmen went about to entitle Queen Elizabeth unto the Soveraignty of theſe Countreys; Others more wiſe, diſſwaded from that vain Ambition, conſidering that Welch-men, as well as others, might be caſt upon thoſe parts by force of Tempeſt, and eaſily implant ſome few words of their own among the people there inhabiting. And though I needs muſt ſay for the honour of Wales, that they have more grounds for what they ſay, than thoſe which look for this New World in the Atlantis of Plato, the Atlantick Iſlands of Ariſtotle and Plutarch, or the Diſcoveries of Hanno the Carthaginian: yet am I not ſo far convinced of the truth thereof, the uſe of the Mariners Compaſs being not ſo antient (without which ſuch a voyage could not be performed;) but that I may conclude with more ſatisfaction, that this Country was unknown to the former ages.

But now, as Mela the Geographer ſaid once of Britain, then newly Conquered by the Romans; Britannia qualis ſit, qualeſque progeneret, mox certiora & magis explorata dicentur; quippe jam diu clauſam aperit ecce Principum maximus (he means Claudius Cæſar) nec indomitarum modo ſed & incognitarum ante ſe Gentium Victor: ſo may we ſay of America, on theſe late diſcoveries. What kind of Country it is, and what men it produceth, we do, and ſhall know more certainly than in former times; ſince thoſe puiſſant Kings of Spain have laid open all the parts thereof, inhabited not only by unvanquiſhed, but even unknown Nations. For God remembring the promiſe of his Son, that his Goſpel before the end of the World ſhould be preached to all Nations, ſtirred up one Chriſtopher Colon, or Columbus, born at Nervy, in the Signeury of Genoa, to be the inſtrument for finding out thoſe parts of the World, to which the ſound of the Goſpel had not yet arrived. Who being a man of great abilities, and born to undertake great matters, could not perſwade himſelf (the motion of the Sun conſidered;) but that there was another World to which that glorious Planet did impart both his light and heat, when he went from us. This World he purpoſed to ſeek after, and opening his Deſign to the State of Genoa, An. 1486. was by them rejected. On this repulſe, he ſent his brother Bartholomew to King Henry the ſeventh of England; who in his way hapned unfortunately into the hands of Pirats, by whom detained a long while, but at laſt inlarged. As ſoon as he was ſet at liberty, he repaired to the Court of England ; where his Propoſition found ſuch a cheerfull entertainment at the hands of the King, that Chriſtopher Columbus was ſent for to come thither alſo. But God had otherwiſe diſpoſed of his rich purchaſe. For Chriſtopher, not knowing of his brothers impriſonment, not hearing any tidings from him, conceived the offer of his ſervice to have been neglected ; and thereupon made his deſires known at the Court of Caſtile : where after many delayes, and ſix years attendance on the buſineſs, hee was at laſt furniſhed with three ſhips only, and thoſe not for Conqueſt, but Diſcovery. With this ſmall ſtrength he ſailed on the Main Ocean more than ſixty dayes, yet could ſee no Land, ſo that the diſcontented Spaniards began to mutiny ; and partly out of ſcorn to be under the Command of a Stranger, partly deſirous to return, would not goe a foot forwards. Juſt at that time it hapned, that Columbus did diſcern the Clouds to carry a cleerer colour, than they did before ; and probably conceiving that this clearneſs proceeded from ſome nigh habitable place, reſtrained the time of their expectation within the compaſs of three dayes ; paſſing his word to return again, if they did not ſee the Land within that time. Toward the end of the third day, one of the Company called Rodrigo de Triane (he deſerves to have his name Recorded, being no otherwiſe rewarded for ſuch joyfull news) deſcried fire ; an evident Argument that they drew near unto ſome ſhore. The place diſcovered was an Iſland on the Coaſt of Florida, by the Natives called Guahanani ; by Columbus St. Saviours ; now counted one of the Lucaios. Landing his men, and cauſing a Tree to be cut down, hee made a Croſs thereof ; which he erected near the place, where he came on Land ; and by that Ceremony took poſſeſſion of this NEVV WORLD, for the Kings of Spain, October 11. Anno 1492. Afterwards he diſcovered, and took poſſeſſion of Hiſpaniola ; and with much Treaſure, and content, returned towards Spain : Preferred for this good ſervice by the Kings themſelves, firſt to be Admiral of the Indies, and afterwards to a Coat of Arms, for Caſtile and Leon, Columbus hath gotten a NEVV WORLD ; and in concluſion unto the title of Duke De la Vega, in the Iſle of Jamaica. News of this fortunate Diſcovery being ſent to Pope Alexander the 6. by the Kings of Caſtile, he very liberally beſtowed upon them all thoſe Countreys, which they already had, or ſhould afterwards diſcover in the Weſtern world ; adviſing them to uſe their diligence and indeavours for converting thoſe people to the Faith, which was done accordingly. For the next year Columbus being furniſhed with 18. ſhips for more Diſcoveries, and his Brother Bartholomew made Governour of the Countries diſcovered by him, they took along with them one Bayl, a Benedictine Monk, as the Popes Vicar General, accompanied with the Learned Clerks, which were to be aſſiſtants to him in the converting of that people to the Chriſtian Faith. In this ſecond voyage he diſcovered the Iſlands of Cuba and Jamaica, and built the Town of Iſabella (afterwards better known by the name of Domingo) in Hiſpaniola ; from whence for ſome ſeverities uſed againſt the mutinous Spaniards, he was ſent Priſoner into Caſtile, but very honourably entertained, and abſolved from all the Crimes imputed to him. In the year 1497. he began his third voyage, in which he diſcovered the Countries of Paria, and Camana, on the firm Land, with the Iſlands of Cubagna, and Margarita, with many other Iſlands, Capes, and Provinces, which ſhall be touched upon particularly in their ſeveral places. In the year 1500. he began his fourth and laſt voyage, in the courſe whereof, coming to Hiſpaniola, he was unworthily denied entrance into the City of Domingo, by Nicholas de Ovendo, the then Governour of it ; after which ſcowring along the Sea Coaſts, as far as Nombre de Trias, but adding little to the fortune of his former diſcoveries, he returned back to Cuba, and Jaimaica, and from thence to Spain, where about ſix years after (that is to ſay, An. 1506.) he departed this life, and was honourably interred at Sevil, where to this day remaineth this Epitaph on his Tomb, bald in it ſelf, and otherwiſe exceeding ſhort of ſo great a merit, of which I muſt tell you by the way, that the Philip, whom the Verſifier (I do not ſay the Poet) called Philippus Hiſpanus, ſhould rather have been called Philippus Auſtriagus, or Philippus Burgundus, as being meant of that Philip of Auſtria, Duke of Burgundy, who had then married Joan, Sole Daughter and Heir of the Kings of Spain, and after the death of Iſabella ſucceeded in the Realm of Caſtile, or elſe the Epitaph muſt be written long after his death, and meant of Philip the 2. Son of Charls the fifth, who was not born untill the year 1527, and came not to the Crown above 20 years after. Now for this Epitaph, ſuch as it is, it is this that followeth:

Chriſtophorus genuit quem Genoa Clara Columbus,
(Numine perculſus quo neſcio) primus in Altum
Deſcendens Pelagus, ſolem verſuſque cadentem
Directo curſu, noſtro hactenus addita Mundo Litora detexi, Hiſpano potitura Philippo :
Audenda hinc aliis plura, & majora relinquents.

Which may be Engliſhed in theſe words :

I Chriſtopher Columbus, whom the Land
Of Genoa firſt brought forth, firſt took in hand
I know not by what deity incited
To ſcour the Weſterne Seas, and was delighted
To ſeek for Countreys never known before.
Crown'd with ſucceſs, I firſt deſcri'd the ſhore
Of the New World, then deſtin'd to ſuſtain
The future yoke of Philip Lord of Spain.
And yet I greater matters left behind
For men of more means and a braver mind.

Dying he left two Sons behind him, of which the youngeſt called Ferdinand, died unmarried, the eldeſt called Diego, ſucceeded his Father in the Admiralty of the Indies, and the Dukedome of Vega, and maried Mary of Toledo, Daughter of Ferdinand Duke of Alva; but having (as it ſeemeth) no iſſue by her, he ſpent the greateſt part of his eſtate in founding the Library at Sevil, ſpoken of before, which he furniſhed with 12000 Volumes, and endowed with a liberal revenue to maintain the ſame. But though his Family be extinct, yet his Fame ſhall live, renowned to all poſterities, as the firſt diſcoverer of this new world, and conſequently the greateſt and moſt Fortunate advancer of the Spaniſh Monarchy, though in his life time ſo maligned by moſt part of the Spaniards, that Bobadilla being ſent into thoſe parts for redreſs of grievances, loaded him with Irons, and returned him Priſoner into Spain. Nor did they only ſtick after his death, to deprive him of the honour of this Diſcovery (attributing it to I know not what Spaniards, whoſe Cards and deſcriptions hee had ſeen) but in his life would often ſay that it was a matter of no ſuch difficulty to have found theſe Countreys; and that if he had not done it when he did, ſome body elſe might have done it for him. Whoſe peeviſhneſs he confuted by this modeſt artifice, deſiring ſome of them, who inſolently enough had contended with him touching this Diſcovery, to make an Egge ſtand firmly upon one of its ends. Which when they could not do upon many Trials, he gently bruiſing one end of it, made it ſtand upright; letting them ſee without any further reprehenſion, how eaſie it was to do that thing which we ſee another do before us.

But to proceed, Columbus having thus led the way, was ſeconded by Americus Veſpuſius, an adventurous Florentine, implyed therein by Emanuel King of Portugal, An. 1501. on a deſign of finding out a nearer way to the Moluccaes, than by the Cape of good Hope, who though he paſſed not further than the Cape of St. Auguſtines in Braſil, without ſo much as having a ſight of the great River de la Plata, which waſheth the South-Ports of that Countrey; yet from him (to the great injury and neglect of the firſt Diſcoverer) the Continent, or main Land of this Countrey, hath the name of America; by which ſtill known, and moſt commonly called. To him ſucceeded John Cabot, a Venetian, the Father of Sebaſtian Cabot, in behalf of Henry the ſeventh of England: who diſcovered all the North-Eaſt Coaſts hereof, from the Cape of Florida in the South, to New-found Land, and Terra di Laborador in the North, cauſing the American Roytelets to turn Homagers to that King and the Crown of England. Followed herein by divers private Adventurers and undertakers, out of all parts of Europe, bordering on the Ocean. Ferdinand Magellanus was the firſt that compaſſed the whole World, and found the South paſſage, called Fretum Magellanicum to this day: followed herein by Drake, and Cavendiſh, of England. Frobiſher, and Davies attempted a Diſcovery of the North-weſt paſſage; Willoughy and Burroughs of the North-eaſt. So that according to that elegant ſaying of the Learned Verulam, in his Advancement of Learning, this great building the World, had never thorow-lights made in it till theſe our dayes: by which as almoſt all parts of Learning, ſo in eſpecial this of Navigation, and by conſequence of Coſmography alſo, hath obtained an incredible proficiency in theſe latter times.

For in the infancy and firſt Ages of the World, (pardon me I beſeech you this ſhort, but not unprofitable digreſſion) men lived at home, neither intent upon any forein Merchandiſe, not inquiſitive after the lives and Fortunes of their Neighbours: or in the language of the Poet,

Nondum cæſa ſuis peregrinum ut viſeret Orbem,
Montibus, in liquidas Pinus deſcenderat undas.

The Pine left not the Hils on which it ſtood,
To ſeek ſtrange Lands, or rove upon the Flood.

But when the Providence of God had inſtructed Noah how to build the Ark, for the preſervation of himſelf and his children from the general Deluge; the Poſterity, which deſcended from him, had thereby a pattern for the making of Ships and other Veſſels (perfected in more length of time) whereby to make the waters paſſable, and maintain a neceſſary intercourſe betwixt Nation and Nation. 'Tis true, the Heathen Writers which knew not Noah, attribute the invention of ſhipping to ſundry men, according to ſuch informations or traditions, as they had received: Strabo, to Minos King of Crete; Diodorus Siculus, to Neptune, who was therefore called the God of the Seas; and Tibullus, to the people of Tyre, a Town indeed of great Wealth and Traffick, and the moſt famous Empory of the elder times; ſaying

Prima ratem ventis credere docta Tyrus.

The Tyrians firſt the Art did find
To make Ships travel with the wind.

And queſtionleſs the Tyrians, and the reſt of the Phœnicians, enjoying a large Sea-coaſt, and many ſafe and capacious Havens, being in theſe times moſt ſtrong at Sea, and making ſo many fortunate Navigations into moſt parts of the then known World, might give the Poet ſome good colour for his affirmation. From the Phœnicians, the Egyptians (their next neighbours) might derive the Art of Navigation; though being an ingenious people, they did add much to it. For whereas the firſt Veſſels were either made of the body of ſome great Tree, made hollow by the Art of man; or elſe of divers boards faſhioned into a Boat, and covered with the skins of Beaſts; (ſuch as are ſtill in uſe amongſt theſe Americans:) the Phœnicians brought them firſt into ſtrength, and form; but the Egyptians added Decks unto them. By Danaus King of Egypt when he fled from his brother Rameſes, the uſe of ſhipping was firſt brought amongſt the Grecians: who before that time knew no other way of croſſing their narrow Seas, but on Beams or Rafters tied to one another. Nave primus ab Egypto Danaus advenit, ante enim Ratibus navigabatur, as it is in Plinie: where we may ſee the true and genuine difference betwixt Ratis, and Navis; though now both uſed indifferently for all ſorts of ſhipping. Amongſt the Grecians, thoſe of Crete were the ableſt Sea men; which gave occaſion to Ariſtotle to call Crete the Lady of the Sea; and to Strabo to make Minos the Inventor of Ships. In following times, the Carthaginians, being a Colony of Tyre, were moſt conſiderable in this kind; and by the benefit of their ſhipping much diſtreſſed the Romans. But ſo it hapned (as all things do and muſt concur to Gods publick purpoſes in the alteration of Eſtates) that a Tempeſt ſeparating a Quinqueremis or Gallie of five banks of Oars, from the reſt of the Carthaginian Fleet; caſt it on the ſhore of Italy: by which accident the Romans learning the Art of Ship-wrights, ſoon became Maſters of the Sea. That France, and Spain were taught the uſe of ſhipping by the Greeks, and Phœnicians, is a thing paſt queſtioning: Marſeilles in the one being a Phocean, and Gades in the other a Tyrian Colony. As for the Belgians, and the Britains, it is probable that they firſt learnt it of the Romans (though formerly they had ſome way to tranſport themſelves from one ſhore to the other.) For Cæſar telleth us of the Belgæ, Ad eos Mercatores minimè commeant, that they were not at all viſited by Forein Merchants. And the ſame Cæſar found the Seas betwixt France, and Britain, ſo ill furniſhed with Veſſels; that he was fain to make Ships to tranſport his Army: Singulari Militum ſtudio circiter ſexcentas & duodetriginta Naves invenit, as his own words are.

Having thus brought Navigation to the greateſt height which it had in thoſe dayes; let us look back again on the Inventors of particular Veſſels, and the Tackle unto them belonging, That the Phœnicians firſt invented open Veſſels, and the Egyptians ſhips with Decks, hath been ſaid before; and unto them alſo is referred the Invention of Gallies, with two banks of Oars upon a ſide; which kind of Veſſels grew ſo large in the courſe of time, that Ptolomy Philopater is ſaid to have made a Gally of fifty banks. Great Ships of burden, called Ciræra, we ow to the Cypriots; Cock-boats, Skiffs, (Scaphas) to the Illyrians, or Liburnians; Brigantines, (Celoces) to the Rhodians; and Frigots or light Barks, (Lembos) unto the Cyrenians. The Phaſelis, and Pamphyli (which we may render Men of War) were the invention of the Pamphylians, and the Inhabitants of Phaſelis, a Town of Lycia, in Aſia Minor. As for Tackle, the Bœotians invented the Oare; Dedalus, and his Son Icarus, the Maſts and Sails: Which gave occaſion to the Poets to feign, that flying out of Crete, they made wings to their bodies; and that Icarus ſoaring too high, melted the Wax which faſtned his Wings unto his ſhoulders, and thereby periſhed; the truth being, that preſuming too much on this new invention, he ran himſelf upon a Rock, and was caſt away. For Hippagines, Veſſels for the tranſporting of Horſe, we are indebted to the Salaminians; for grapling hooks, to Anarcharſis; for Anchors, to the Tuſcans; and for the Rudder, Helm, or Art of Steering, to Typhis the chief Pilot in the famous Argo; who noting that a Kite, when ſhe flew, guided her whole body by her Tail, effected that in the devices of Art, which he had obſerved in the works of Nature. By theſe helps ſome great Voyages were performed in the elder times; the greateſt, thoſe of Jaſon, Ulyſſes, and Alexander, with the Fleets of Solomon, and the Egyptian Kings. Of theſe, Jaſon and his companions, ſayled in the ſhip called Argo, through the Euxine Sea, and part of the Mediterranean; Ulyſſes, through the Mediterranean only; ſmall gullets, if compared with the Ocean. Alexander's journey ſo famouſed, and accounted then ſo hazardous, was but ſayling down the River Indus, and four hundred furlongs into the Ocean. And for the Fleets of Solomon, and the Kings of Egypt, it is very apparent, that they went with great leiſure, and crawled cloſe by the ſhore ſide: otherwiſe it had been impoſſible to have conſumed three whole years in going from Ezion-Geber into India, and returning again; which was the uſual time of theſe voyages, as appeareth in 1 King. 10. 22. After the fall of the Roman Monarchy, the moſt potent States by Sea in the Mediterranean, were the Genoſe, and Venetians; in the Ocean the Engliſh, and the Hanſ-towns; neither of which ever attempted any great diſcoveries.

But in the year 1300. one Flavio of Malphi in the Realm of Naples, found out the Compaſs, or Pixis Nautica, conſiſting of 8 winds only, the four principal, and four collateral: And not long after, the people of Bruges, and Antwerp, perfected that excellent invention; adding 24 other ſubordinate winds or points. By means of this excellent Inſtrument, and withall by the good ſucceſs of Columbus, the Portugals, Eaſtwards; the Spaniards, Weſtward; and the Engliſh, Northwards; have made many glorious and fortunate Expeditions; which had been utterly impoſſible to have been performed, and had been fooliſhly undertaken, when that help was wanting. I know there hath been much pains taken by ſome learned men, to prove the uſe of the Mariners Compaſs to be far more antient, than is now commonly pretended. Fuller, a very learned and induſtrious man, but better skilled in the Hebrew tongue, than the Philologie of the Greeks, and Latines, will have it known to Solomon, and by him taught unto the Tyrians and Phœnicians (the moſt famous Sea-men of old times): but he brings no Argument of weight to make good the cauſe. Nor is it poſſible that ſuch an excellent invention, ſo beneficial to the common good of all mankind, ſhould have been forgotten and diſcontinued, for the ſpace of more than 2000 years; if ever the Tyrians, and Phœnicians had been Maſters of it: who could not poſſibly conceal it (had they been ſo minded) from the Common-Mariners, or they not have communicated it for gain, or deſire of glory, to the Greeks, and Romans, under whom ſucceſſively they lived. As little moment do I find in ſome other Arguments, as that the Lapis Heraclius of the Antient writers, or the Verſoria of Plautus, ſhould be by them intended of the Mariners Compaſs. For plainly the Verſoria of Plautus, is no other than that piece of Tackle, which our Mariners now call the Bolin; by which they uſe to turn their Sails, and fit them to the change of every wind. And ſo much doth appear by the Poet himſelf, in the Comedie which he cals Mercator ; ſaying; Hinc ventus nunc ſecundus eſt, cape modo Verſoriam. So called from Verſo, to turn often ; or from Verſum the firſt Supine of Verto : whence Velum vertere is a common phraſe amongſt the Latines, uſed for the ſhifting of the Sail as the wind doth vary. As for the Load-ſtone, it is called indeed Heraclius Lapis, Ἡρακλεῖος λίθος by the Greeks : not becauſe Hercules Tyrius, whom the Phœnicians invocated when they were at Sea, had firſt found out the vertue of it, as our Fuller thinketh ; but becauſe firſt found neer Heraclea, a City of Lydia, Κέκληται δ' οὕτως ἀπὸ Ἡρακλείας τῆς ἐν Λυδίᾳ πόλεως, ſaith Heſychius the old Grammarian. Called for the ſame reaſon Magnes, by the writers both Greek and Latine ; becauſe firſt found in the Territory of Magneſia, a City of Lydia alſo, whereof Heraclea was a part. So Suidas telleth us for the Greeks, Ἡράκλειαν λίθον τινὲς τὴν Μαγνησίαν ἀπέδωσαν, διὰ τὸ τὴν Ἡράκλειαν τῆς Μαγνησίας εἶναι : Heraclium Lapidem quidam Magneſiam reddiderunt : quia Heraclea pars eſt Magneſiæ. Called for the very ſame reaſon Lydius Lapis alſo, but by them known only as a Touch ſtone. Thus old Lucretius for the Latines.

> Quem Magneta vocant patrio de nomine Graii,
> Magnetum quia ſit patriis de finibus ortus.
> Which Stone the Greeks do Magnes name,
> Becauſe it from Magneſia came.

But I have rambled further than I did intend, drawn by the vertue of the Load-ſtone too much out of my way. It is time now to return again into America ; where the Spaniards at their firſt Arrival found the people without all manner of Apparel, nought skilled in Agriculture, making their Bread either of a Plant called Maize, or a kind of Root called Jucca : a Root wherein is a venemous liquor, not inferior to the moſt deadly poiſons ; but having firſt ſqueezed out this juyce, and after dryed and prepared the Root, they made their bread of it. They worſhipped Deviliſh Spirits, whom they called Zemes ; in remembrance of whom they kept certain Images made of Cotton wool, like our Childrens Babies : to which they did great reverence, as ſuppoſing the Spirit of the Zemes to be in them ; and to blind them the more, the Devil would cauſe theſe Puppets to ſeem to move, and to make a noiſe. They ſtood alſo in ſo great fear of them, that they durſt not diſpleaſe them : for if their wills were not fulfilled, the Devil ſtrait executed vengeance upon ſome of their Children ; ſo holding this infatuated people in perpetual thraldome. So ignorant they were of all things which they had not ſeen, that they thought the Chriſtians to be immortal : wondring exceedingly at the Sails, Maſts, and Tacklings of their Ships ; themſelves knowing no Ships or other Veſſels, but huge Troughs made of ſome great bodied Tree. But this opinion of the Chriſtians immortality (in the ſenſe they meant it) did not long continue : for having taken ſome of them, they held their heads under the water, till they had quite choaked them ; by which they knew them to be mortal like other men. Quite deſtitute of all good Learning, they reckoned their time by a confuſed obſervation of the courſe of the Moon : and ſtrangely admired to ſee the Spaniards know the health and affairs of one another, onely by reading of a Letter. Of a plain and honeſt nature, for the moſt part, they were found to be ; Loving and kind in their entertainments, and apt to do good Offices both private and publick, according to their underſtandings : encouraged thereunto by an opinion which they had, that beyond ſome certain Hills (but they knew not where) thoſe which lived honeſtly and juſtly, or offered up their lives in defence of their Countrey, ſhould find a place of everlaſting peace and happineſs. So natural is the knowledge of the Souls immortality, and of ſome Ubi for the future reception of it, that we find ſome tract or other of it in moſt barbarous Nations. And as for Gold and Silver, which the new-come Chriſtians ſo adored, they eſteemed them no otherwiſe than as droſs : though many times they adorned themſelves therewith for the colours ſake ; as they did alſo with ſhels, feathers, and the like fine Gew-gawes.

Of complexion, moſt of theſe Americans were reaſonably fair and clear, little inclining unto blackneſs : notwithſtanding that a great part of this Countrey lieth under the ſame parallel with Æthiopia, Libya, and the Land of Negroes. So that the extraordinary heat of the Sun is not (as ſome imagine) the cauſe of that blackneſs ; though accidently it may turn the skin into ſuch a colour : as we ſee in many Countrey-Laſſes, even in colder Climates, whoſe faces are continually expoſed to the Sun and Weather. Others more wiſe in their own conceits (but in no bodies elſe) will have the natural Seed of the Africans to be black of colour ; contrary both to ſenſe and reaſon, Experience and true natural Philoſophy being both againſt it. And ſome will have this Blackneſs laid as a curſe on Cham, (from whoſe poſterity the African Nations do derive themſelves) becauſe, forſooth, he had carnal knowledge of his wife when they were in the Ark : a fancie as ridiculous, as the other falſe. So that we muſt refer it wholly to Gods ſecret pleaſure ; though poſſibly enough the Curſe of God on Cham and on his poſterity (though for ſome cauſe unknown to us) hath an influence on it.

Touching the Original of this people, it is moſt probable that they deſcended from the Tartars ; for which there are ſome arguments of Eſpecial weight. For firſt, it may be proved in the way of Negation, that they came not from Europe, as having no remainder of the Arts, Learning, and Civilities of it. And ſecondly, that they came not from Africk, in regard they have no black men amongſt them, except ſome few which dwell on the Sea-coaſts over againſt Guinea in Africk ; from whence they are ſuppoſed, to have been brought hither by ſome Tempeſt, or other. Thirdly, that they have not the leaſt token, or ſhew of the arts and induſtry of China, India, or any civil Region on that ſide of Aſia. The affirmative arguments prove firſt, that they came from Aſia ; next in particular from Tartarie. That they came out of Aſia, is more than manifeſt, in that the Weſt-ſide of the Country towards Aſia, is far more populous, than the Eaſt towards Europe: of which there can be no other reaſon aſſigned, than that theſe parts were firſt Inhabited, and that from hence the reſt was Peopled. Next, the Idolatry of this people, and the particularities thereof, their Incivility, and Barbarous qualities, tell us that they are moſt like the Tartars of any. Thirdly, the Weſt-ſide of America, if it be not Continent with Tartary, is yet diſjoyned by a very ſmall Streight, as may be perceived in all our Maps and Cards, as alſo in the deſcription of theſe Countreys: ſo that there is into theſe Countreys a very quick and eaſie paſſage. And fourthly, the people of Quivira, which of all the Provinces of America is the neareſt unto Tartary, are ſaid to follow in their whole courſe of their life, the Seaſons and beſt Paſturing of their Cattel, juſt like the Scythian Nomades, or Tartarian Hordes: an evident argument of their Original deſcent.

But from what Root ſoever they did firſt deſcend, certain it is that they had ſetled here many ages ſince, and over-ſpread all the parts and quarters of this ſpacious Continent; there being no place, which the Spaniards, or any other Adventurers, found Deſolate, or Waſte, and without Inhabitants. But their numbers much diminiſhed ſince theſe late Diſcoveries; the Spaniards behaving themſelves moſt Inhumanely towards this unarmed and naked people: killing them up like Sheep appointed to the ſlaughter, or otherwiſe conſuming them in their Mines and works of Drudgery. And had not Charls the fifth ordained with moſt Chriſtian prudence, that the Natives ſhould not be compelled to work in the Mines againſt their wills; but that the Spaniards ſhould provide themſelves of Slaves elſewhere; the Natives, in a little longer time had been quite exterminated, to the great reproach of Chriſtianity and the Goſpel. For ſo exceeding Barbarous and Bloody were they at their firſt coming thither, that Haithney, a Nobleman amongſt them, being perſwaded to imbrace the Chriſtian faith, demanded firſt what he ſhould get by being of that Religion; and was anſwered, that he ſhould get Heaven and the joyes thereof: Then would he know, what place was deſtinate to ſuch as died Unbaptized; and was anſwered, that they went to Hell, and the torments of it. Finally, aſking unto which of theſe two places the Spaniards went, and being told they went to Heaven; he renounced his Baptiſm: proteſting that he would rather go to Hell with the Unbaptized, than to live in Heaven with ſo Cruel a people. The reſt were driven unto the Font, like ſo many Horſes to the watering place; and received into the Church of Chriſt without any inſtruction: inſomuch that one old Frier (as himſelf confeſſed to Charls the fifth) had Chriſtned 700000. of them, and another of that rank 300000. never acquainting them with any of the Articles of the Chriſtian faith, or points of Religious converſation, (except it were to be obedient to their Paſtors and Teachers.) Yet here I muſt confeſs, (for I am loath to defraud any man of his due) there hath been made a great improvement of Chriſtianity: the number of Chriſtians in this Country, being thought by ſome Learned man of the Church of Rome, to equal all thoſe of the Latin Churches in Europe. And though perhaps conſtrained at firſt unto it as a new Religion, and of a ſtricter Rule than that which before they had; yet by long time and education, it is now grown more plauſible and familiar to them. The Church hereof governed by the four Arch-biſhops of 1. Mexico. 2. Lima. 3. S. Foy, and 4. Dominico; who have under them 25. Suffragan Biſhops, all liberally endowed and provided for.

When this New World came firſt acquainted with the Old, Iſabel Queen of Caſtile, would not permit any of her Huſband Ferdinando's Subjects to be planted here, viz. Arragonians, or Valentians; but licenſed the Caſtilians, Andaluſians, Biſcains, and the reſt of her own people only, envying the Wealth hereof to the reſt. When ſhe was dead, Ferdinando licenſed generally all the Spaniards, excluding only the Portugals. But ſo rich a Prize could not ſo warily be fenced, but that the Portugals, French, Engliſh, and now of late the Low-Country Men have laid in their own Barns part of the Spaniards Harveſt; who well hoped to have had a Monopoly of ſo wealthy a Region, and to have enjoyed without any Rival or Competitor the Poſſeſſion, (I cannot ſay the love) of a Country ſo abundantly fruitful. For though ſome of the Kings of Spain, have been uſed to ſay, that they loved the Eaſt-Indies as their Miſtreſs only, in whoſe favour they could patiently enough endure a Rival; but eſteemed America as their Wife, in whoſe love they could not brook a Competitor, without foul diſhonour: yet by his leave (or without it rather) ſome of his Neighbours have made bold with his Wife, in theſe later times; though in the affection of his Miſtreſs they have greater intereſt. But theſe attempts of the Engliſh and Hollanders, have been an occaſion of great ſtrength to the whole Country. For whereas in our firſt Wars with Spain, our private Adventures found the Sea-coaſts almoſt naked of Defence, and thereupon made many a rich and proſperous Voyage to theſe parts: the Spaniards upon ſight of that weakneſs and diſadvantage, ſo ſtrongly fortified their Havens and Sea-Towns, that towards the later end of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, we were not able to accompliſh that with great and publick Forces, which before had been performed by ſmall and private. Which cauſed our Captains and Adventurers, failing oftentimes in the Continent, to make up their Market on the Seas, in the return of the Spaniſh Navies, as they yet do.

This New World is very plentifull of Spices, Fruits, and ſuch Creatures which the Old World never knew; ſtocked with ſuch ſtore of Kine or Bulls, (brought hither out of Europe ſince the firſt Diſcovery) that the Spaniards kill thouſands of them yearly, for their Tallow and Hides only. Bleſt with ſuch abundance of Gold, that they found in many of their Mines, more Gold than Earth: a Metal which the Americans not regarding, greedily exchanged for Hammers, Knives, Axes, and the like tools of Iron; for before, they were wont to make their Canoes or Boats plain without, and hollow within, by the force of fire. Other particularities ſhall be ſpecified in the particular Deſcriptions of the ſeveral Countries. I ſhall now only take a brief view of ſuch of their Beaſts and Fowls, as either this Old World did not know, or knew not in ſuch ſhapes and qualities, as are there preſented. Their Lions leſs in greatneſs neſs than thoſe in Africa, are ſaid to be of Colour gray, and ſo nimble as to climb Trees; their Dogs ſnowted like Foxes, but deprived of that property which the Logicians call Proprium quarto modo, for they could not Bark; their Hogs with talons ſharp as Razors, and the Navil of their bodies on the Ridge of their Backs; their Stags, and Deer, without Horns; their Sheep (they call them Lamas) not only profitable, as with us, for Food and Raiment, but accuſtomed to the carrying of Burdens, ſome of 150. pound weight. Amongſt ſuch ſtrange Beaſts as this Old World knew not, we may reckon that deformed one (whoſe name I find not) whoſe fore-part reſembleth a Fox, the hinder part an Ape, except the Feet only, which are like a Mans: beneath her Belly a Receptacle like a Purſe, where ſhe keeps her young, till they be able to ſhift for themſelves; never coming thence but when they ſuck, and then in again. The Armadilla is in form like a Barbed Horſe, ſeeming to be Armed all over, and that with Artificial (rather than natural) Plates, which do ſhut and open. The Vicugne reſembleth a Goat, but greater and more profitable; of the Fleece whereof they make Rugs, Coverings, and Stuffs; and in the Belly find the Bezoar, ſometimes two or three, a ſoveraign Antidote againſt Poiſons and Venemous Diſeaſes. A kind of Hare reſembling a Want in his Feet, and a Cat in his Tail; under whoſe Chin nature hath faſtned a little Bag, which ſhe hath alſo taught him to uſe as a Store houſe: for in this, having filled his Belly, he preſerveth the remnant of his Proviſion. The Pigritia, a little Beaſt (not ſo named for nought) which in fourteen daies cannot go ſo far as a man may eaſily throw a Stone. Then for their Birds, they have them there in ſuch variety of Colours, that the Indians will perfectly repreſent in Feathers whatſoever they ſee drawn with Pencils: inſomuch as a Figure of S. Francis made of Feathers, was Preſented to Pope Sixtus Quintus; whoſe Eye could not diſcern them to be natural Colours, but thought them Pencil-work, till he made tryal with his fingers. One called the Tominejo, of all Colours, ſo little that it ſeems no bigger than a Bee or Butter-flie; the Mouth thereof no bigger than the eye of a Needle; yet yielding not to the Nightingale in the ſweetneſs of its Note and Muſick: the Bird and Neſt put into Gold Scales, not weighing above 24. Grains, yet beautified with Feathers of ſo many Colours, eſpecially in the Neck and Breſt, that the Indians make great uſe of them in their Feather-pictures. Others as big, as theſe are little. The Condores of ſuch ſtrength and greatneſs, that they will fall upon a Sheep or Calf, open it, and eat it. Like Miracles of Nature have they in their Fruits and Plants, more proper unto Natural Hiſtory than to this Diſcourſe: and many Medicinal Drugs of rare operation, which I leave to the conſideration of the Learned Herbaliſts. I am too much a Fool to be a Phyſician, and therefore will not deal in ſuch things as are out of my Element. Yet ſomewhat of this kind we may chance to meet with, in the Deſcription and Survey of the ſeveral Provinces, into which this New World is divided.

The whole is naturally divided into two great Peninſulas; whereof that towards the North is called Mexicana, from Mexico the chief City and Province of it, ſuppoſed (for the moſt Northern parts of it are not yet diſcovered) to contain 13000. miles in compaſs. That towards the South, hath the name of Peruana, from the great Country of Peru; the Circumnavigation whereof is reckoned at 17000. Italian miles. The Iſthmus which joyneth theſe two together, very long but narrow; in ſome places not above twelve miles from Sea to Sea; in many not above ſeventeen. By the Spaniards it is called the Streight of Darien, from a River of that name in Peruana, near unto the Iſthmus: and is ſo ſmall a Ligament for ſo great a Body, that ſome have thought of turning theſe two Peninſulas into perfect Iſlands. Certain it is, that many have motioned to the Council of Spain, the cutting of a navigable Chanel through this ſmall Iſthmus, ſo to ſhorten their common Voyages to China, and the Moluccoes. But the Kings of Spain have not hitherto attempted it; partly becauſe if he ſhould imploy the Americans in this work, he ſhould loſe thoſe few of them, which his people have ſuffered to live; partly becauſe the Slaves which they yearly buy out of Africa, do but ſuffice for the Mines and Sugar-houſes; but principally, leſt the paſſage by the Cape of good hope, being left, thoſe Seas might become a Receptacle of Pirats. Which doubtleſs was a very Prudent and Politick conſideration. Many times I have read of the like attempts begun, but never of any finiſhed. Seſoſtris King of Egypt, Darius of Perſia, one of the Ptolomies, and a late Capricious Portugal had the like Plot, to make a paſſage from the Red-Sea, to the Mediterranean: ſo had Cæſar, Caligula, and Nero, Emperours of Rome, upon the Corinthian Iſthmus. Another of the ſame nature, had Charls the Great, to let the Rhene into the Danow; the like had Lucius Verus, to joyn the Rhene, and the Roſne: all which, in their peculiar places, we have already touched. Nicanor alſo, King of Syria, intended to have made a Chanel from the Caſpian to the Euxine Sea; an infinite project. But neither he nor any of the reſt could finiſh theſe works: God, it ſeemeth, being not pleaſed at ſuch proud and haughty enterpriſes. And yet perhaps the want of Treaſure hath not been the leaſt cauſe, why the like projects have not proceeded: beſides the dreadfull noyſes and apparitions, which (as we have already ſaid) continually affrighted the Work-men.

Not leſs obſervable than this great but unſucceſsful deſign of cutting a paſſage thorow this Iſthmus, from one Sea to the other, was that notable, but alike ſucceſsleſs Attempt of John Oxenham, an adventurous Engliſh-man, in a paſſage over it by Land. This man being one of the Followers of Sir Francis Drake, arriving in a ſmall Bark with 70. of his Companions, a little above Nombre di Deos, the chiefeſt Town of all the Iſthmus, drew his Ship on Land, covered it with Boughs, and marched over the Land with his Company guided by Negroes, till he came to a River. There he cut down Wood, made him a Pinnace, entred the South Sea, went to the Iſle of Pearls, where he ſtayed ten daies; intercepted in two Spaniſh Ships (who feared no Enemy on that ſide) 60000. pound weight of Gold, 200000. pound weight in bars of Silver, and returned in ſafety to the Land. And though by the mutiny of ſome of his own Company, he neither returned into his Country, nor unto his Ship, yet is it an Adventure not to be forgotten, in that never attempted by any other; and by the Spaniſh Writers recorded with much admiration.

But to return to the Diviſion of this Country, and the two main parts thereof which this Streight uniteth; Mexicana, or the Northern Peninſula, may be moſt properly divided into the Continent, and Iſlands: the Continent again into the ſeveral Provinces of, 1 Eſtotiland, 2 Nova Francia, 3 Virginia, 4 Florida, 5 California, 6 Nova Gallicia, 7 Nova Hiſpania, and 8 Guatimala; each of them branched into many ſub-diviſions, and leſſer Territories. Peruana, or the Southern Peninſula, taking in ſome part of the Iſthmus, as before we did, hath on the Continent the Provinces of, 1 Caſtella Aurea, 2 Nova Granado, 3 Peru, 4 Chile, 5 Paragnay, 6 Braſil, 7 Guiana, and 8 Paria, with their ſeveral members, parts, and particular Regions. The Iſlands which belong to both diſperſed either in the Southern Ocean, called Mare del Zur; where there is not any one of note, but 1. Thoſe called Los Ladrones, and 2 the Iſlands of Solomon: or in the Northern Ocean, or Mare del Norte, reduced unto 3 the Caribes, 4 Porto Rico, 5 Hiſpaniola, 6 Cuba, and 7 Jamaica. In the ſurvey of which particulars we will begin with thoſe which lie on the North-eaſt of this great Continent, not poſſeſſed by the Spaniards: and paſſing thorow the Plantations of ſuch other Nations, as have any footing in the ſame, come by degrees to the Eſtates of the King of Spain; that we may lay them altogether without interruption: beginning with Eſtotiland, the moſt Northern part, and that which (as ſome ſay) was diſcovered firſt.

OF ESTOTILAND.

ESTOTILAND, as under that name we comprehend thoſe Regions of Mexicana, which lie moſt towards the North, and Eaſt; hath on the Eaſt, the main Ocean; on the South, Canida, or Nova Francia; on the Weſt, ſome unknown Tract not yet diſcovered; and on the North, a Bay, or Inlet of the Sea, called Hudſons Streights, and called ſo from Henry Hudſon an Engliſh-man, who by this way endeavoured to find out a more commodious and quick paſſage to Cathay and China, than had been formerly diſcovered. It comprehends, 1. Eſtotiland ſpecially ſo called, 2. Terra Corterialis, 3. New-found-land, and 4. the Iſles of Bacalaos.

1. And firſt Eſtotiland, ſpecially ſo called, is the moſt Northern Region on the Eaſt-ſide of America, lying betwixt Hudſons Streights on the North; and Terra Corterialis, on the South. The ſoyl ſufficiently enriched with natural endowments, ſaid to have in it Mines of Gold and other Metals; but I doubt it lieth too much North for Gold, whatſoever it may do for Braſs and Iron. The people rude and void of goodneſs; naked, notwithſtanding the extreme cold of the Country; not having either the wit, or the care to cover their bodies with the skins of thoſe Beaſts, which they kill by hunting; though their bellies teach them to keep life by the fleſh thereof. Said by the firſt Diſcoverers to ſow Corn, to make Beer, or Ale, and to have many Barks of their own with which they traded into Groen-land; as alſo to have many Cities and Caſtles, ſome Temples conſecrate to their Idols, where they firſt ſacrifized men, and after eat them. The Language which they ſpake, expreſſed in Characters of their own; but ſome knowledge of the Latin tongue there had been amongſt them, and Latin books in the Library of one of their Kings, underſtood by few.

Such were the Reports made of this Country by the firſt Diſcoverers, who were certain Fiſhermen of Freezland, caſt by a Tempeſt on this Coaſt about the year 1350. Six of them only got on Land, where all died ſave one: who after a long wandring from one Princes Court to another, found means to return into his own Country: the King whereof called Zichumi, being a great Adventurer in the feats of Arms, prepared for the further Diſcovery and Conqueſt of it. Animated thereunto by the opportune coming of Nicolo and Antonio Zeni, two noble Gentlemen of Venice: who deſiring to ſee the faſhions of the World, furniſhed a Ship at their own charges, and paſſing the Streights of Gilbraltar held their courſe North-ward, with an intent to ſee England and Flanders. But driven by tempeſt on this Iland, An. 1380. they were kindly welcomed by the King, then newly proſperous in a War againſt thoſe of Norway: who liked Nicolo ſo well, that he gave him a command in his Navy, and under his good conduct woon many Ilands, diſcovered Groen-land, and provided for the conqueſt of Eſtotiland alſo. But Nicolo in the mean time dying, the buſineſs was purſued by his brother Antonio, the King in perſon making one in the undertaking: who liked the Country ſo well, being once poſſeſſed of it, that he built a City in it; and there determining to ſpend the reſt of his dayes, ſent back Antonio unto Freezland, with the moſt of his people.

This is the ſubſtance of the ſtory of the firſt Diſcovery, publiſhed long ſince by one Franciſco Marcellino, out of the Letters of the Zeni: which had they been conſidered of as they might have been, we had not ſo long wanted the acquaintance of this part of the World. But whether it were that their reports were eſteemed as fabulous by the States of Europe, or that the time was not yet ripe for this great Diſcovery; there was nothing done in purſuance of it: Zichumi never going back to his own Country, and Freezland not long after conquered by the Kings of Norway. So that the knowledge of it was quite loſt again, till theſe later dayes. Said in the Letters of the Zeni, to be well ſtored with Fowl, and the Eggs of Birds, which they found there for their refreſhing: the Haven where they landed, to be called Cape Trin; the people to be of ſmall Stature, fearfull, and to hide themſelves in Caves, at the ſight of the Freezlanders: that there was a Mountain alwayes burning, or caſting ſmoak; together with a certain Spring, whence iſſued a water as black as Pitch; but no ſuch Cities, Forts, and Temples, as the Fiſherman ſpake of. The Country Weſt from Freezland 1000. miles.

To give you the face of it as it ſtands at the preſent, it is ſaid to be well cultivated, fruitfull of all neceſſaries for the life of man, and rich in metals, but extreme cold: watered with four Rivers, which riſing out of an high Mountain in the midſt of the Country, diſperſe themſelves over all parts of it. The people ſaid to be more ingenious, of better judgements, and more skilled in moſt Mechanick Arts, than the reſt of the Americans were at the firſt Diſcovery; which argueth ſome more civil people to have been formerly amongſt them. Their Garments of the skins of beaſts, or Sea-Calves; with which alſo they covered the out-ſide of their Boats, to keep out the water, and make them able to endure the Sea. What Towns they have, and whether the name of Cape Trin be ſtill remaining, I am not able to diſcover; this Country lying ſtill for the moſt part hidden in a Northern Miſt. All we can ſay, is, that ſome Engliſh names have been impoſed of late, on ſome Capes and Promontories, lying on the Northern ſhores hereof towards Hudſons Streights, by Hudſon and ſuch others of the Engliſh Nation who purſued that enterpriſe. Of which ſort are Prince Henry's Foreland, towards the Eaſt, almoſt at the entries of thoſe Streights: and then proceeding towards the Weſt, Cape Charls, Kings Foreland; and laſt of all, Cape Wolſtenham, at the end thereof, where theſe Streights open into a large and capacious Bay, called Hudſons Bay. But of theſe more particularly in another place; where we endeavour the Diſcovery of ſuch parts of the World as are yet unknown, and ſo within the compaſs of a Terra incognita.

2. TERRA CORTERIALIS hath on the North, Eſtotiland; on the South, Canada, or New-France. So called from Gaſper Corterialis, who in the year 1500 left his name unto it. It is called alſo Terra di Laborodoro, both from the pains required of the Huſbandman, and the great recompence which it gives him: in the ſame ſenſe, as Campania in the Realm of Naples, is named Terra di Lavoro. By the French, who ſucceeded in the poſſeſſion hereof after the Spaniard had forſook it, it was called New-Bretagne; with reference to Bretagne in France, their own natural Countrey.

The people at the firſt coming of Corterialis were found to be barbarous enough, well coloured, ſwift of foot, and very good Archers: their cloathing of Beaſts ſkins, their habitations Caves, or ſome ſorry Cottages; their Religion Paganiſm, or none; their directions, Sooth-ſaying. Not ſo forgetfull of the Law which Nature had planted in them, as not to know the neceſſary uſe of marriage; but extremely jealous. Better conditioned at the preſent than in former times, by their near neighbour-hood to the French, and commerce with Foreiners: affirmed to be very well diſpoſed, to feed moſt generally on fiſh, and to adorn themſelves with Bracelets of braſs, or ſilver. Their chief Towns, 1. Breſt. 2. Sancta Maria. 3. Cabo Marzo, of which little memorable.

The Countrey firſt diſcovered by Sebaſtian Cabot, the ſon of John Cabot before mentioned: who in the year 1499. at the charges and encouragement of King Henry 7th. ſetting ſayl from Briſtol, firſt made the diſcovery of theſe parts, as far as to the Latitude of 67. and an half, (which brings Eſtotiland within the compaſs alſo of his diſcoveries.) The Land which he firſt ſaw, he called Prima Veſta; and an Iſland lying before it he called St. Johns, becauſe diſcovered on the day of St. John Baptiſt. They found upon the Countrey plenty of white Bears, Stags greater than ours, Scut-fiſhes of a yard long, and ſuch ſtore of Cod-fiſh (which the Inhabitants called Baccalaos) that their multitudes ſometimes ſtayed his ſhips: hence the occaſion of their name. Returning home, he found great preparations for a War in Scotland; ſo that nothing elſe was done in this Diſcovery by the Engliſh Nation. But three years after, Gaſpar Corterialis a Portugueze, ſetting ſayl from Liſbon, fell upon thoſe parts of Cabots Diſcoveries, which ſince bear his name: from whence he brought the piece of a gilded Sword of Italian workmanſhip, left there moſt probably by one of the Cabots. Returning again the next year, he was no more heard of: drowned in the Sea, or ſlain by the Salvages on the Land; as was his brother Michael, in the year next following. Neglected after this, till the French having planted in Canada, or Nova Francia, caſt an eye upon it; who gave the name of Breſt to a Town hereof, (according to the name of a noted Port in little Bretagne:) but whether they ſetled any Colony in it, or only did reſort unto it in the way of trading, I am not able to determine.

3. NEW-FOUND-LAND, (Terra Nova, as the Latins call it) is a great Iſland, lying on the South of Corterialis; from which parted by a Frith, or Streight, called Golfe des Chaſteaux. So called from the late diſcovery of it, when diſcovered firſt, though it be ſome ſcores of years ago: as Wickhams College in Oxford hath the name of new-College, though ſounded divers ages paſt; becauſe it was the neweſt when that name was given.

The dimenſions of the Countrey I have no where met with. But for the quantity hereof, it is ſaid to be better inhabited in the North parts, than in the South; though the South the fitter of the two for habitation. Furniſhed upon the Sea-coaſts with abundance of Cod-fiſh, as alſo with Herrings, Salmons, Thornbacks, Smelts, Oyſters, and Muſcles with Pearls in them. Within the land a goodly Countrey, naturally beautified with Roſes, ſown with Peaſe, planted with ſtately Trees, and otherwiſe diverſified, both for pleaſure and profit: the Air hereof never very extreme, more temperate in the depth of Winter than with us in England, the brooks being never ſo frozen over, that the Ice is able to bear a Dog; and thoſe little froſts but ſeldom holding three nights together. The people of reaſonable ſtature, full-eyed, broad-faced, but beardleſs, their faces coloured with Oker; their Houſes, Poles ſet round meeting together in the top, and covered over with ſkins; an hearth, or fire-place in the midſt; their Boats of Bark, twenty foot long, and four in breadth, not weighing above 100 pound weight; either of which will carry four men, and is by them carried to all places of their Removes.

Places of moſt importance in it are the ſeveral Havens (of which it is conceived to have more, and more commodious, than any one Iſland of the world for the bigneſs of it:) not beautified with Towns, or buildings, but yielding very ſafe ſtations to the greateſt ſhips. The chief whereof 1. Rennoſa, or Roigneuſe, on the North of the Promontory called Cape de Raz, the South-Eaſt Angle of the Iſland; of much reſort for fiſhing, from ſeveral Countreys. 2. Portus formoſus, or Fair-Haven, three miles North of the other: capable of great ſhips, and bearing into the main Land above 40. miles. Situate in the Latitude of 40. and 40 minutes. 3. Thornbay, by the Portugals named Enſeada Grande. 4. Trinity Bay on the North of Cape St. Francis, by the Portugals called Bahia de la Conception: a large Bay, five miles broad in the narroweſt place; yet ſafe withall and of very good Anchorage. 5. Bona Veſta, the name of a Port and Promontory. 6. White-Bay, or Bay-Blanche, as the French call it, ſafe and capacious, on the North of the Promontory of St. John. Betwixt which and Cape de Grat, on the North-Eaſt Angle of the Iſland, is no Port of note. Then on the South-ſide of the Iſland, and the Weſt of Cape de Raz, is 7. Port Treſpaſſez. 8. Port Preſenza, and 9. Port des Baſques (or the Biſcains Haven;) and on the Weſt ſide, having doubled the Cape de Raye, in the South-weſt Angle of the Iſland, there is 10 St. Georges Bay: all of them ſafe, capacious, and of great reſort.

4. Before the Iſland, at the diſtance of 25. leagues from Cape de Raye, lyeth a long bank, or ridge of ground, extended in length many hundred leagues, in breadth 24. leagues where broadeſt, in other places but ſixteen: and all about it certain Iſlands, which Cabot by one common name called BACALAOS (that name peculiar now unto one alone) from the great multitudes of Cod-fiſh (by the Natives called Bacalaos) which ſwarmed hereabouts; ſo numerous, that they hindred the paſſage of his ſhips, as be-as before was noted, and lay in ſuch ſhoals upon the Coaſts, that the Bears caught them with their claws and drew them on Land. The Government at that time by Kings, before whom the people in the moſt formal expreſſions of duty and reverence uſed to rub their Noſes, or ſtroke their Foreheads; which if the King obſerved, or accepted of, and meant to grace the party which had ſo adored him, he turned his head to his left ſhoulder, as a mark of favour.

The firſt Diſcoverers of this Countrey (but not known then to be an Iſland) were the two Cabots, John, and his Son Sebaſtian, imployed herein by Henry the 7th. 1497. as before was noted. The buſineſs being laid aſide at his coming back, was afterwards revived by Thorn and Eliot, two of Briſtol: who taking a more perfect view of it than was took by the Cabots, aſcribed to themſelves the diſcovery of it, and animated King Henry the 8. unto the Enterprize: which was done Anno 1527. but with ill ſucceſs. In the mean time the Normans, Portugals, and Britons of France had reſorted to it; and changed the names which by the Engliſh had been given to the Bayes and Promontories. But the Engliſh would not ſo relinquiſh their pretenſions to the Premier Seiſin. And therefore in the year 1583. Sir Humfrey Gilbert took poſſeſſion of it in the name of the Queen of England, interdicted all other Nations the uſe of fiſhing, and intended to have ſetled there an Engliſh Colony. But being wracked in his return, the ſending of the Colony was diſcontinued till the year 1608. when undertook by John Guy a Merchant of Briſtol, who moſt ſucceſſefully performed it: the Colony ſo proſpering in a little time, that they had Wheat, Rye, Turneps, Coleworts, of their own ſowing; ſome probability of Metals, a certainty of Sables, Musk, and other precious Commodities, beſides their fiſhing; though that the great occaſion of their ſetling there. Such plenty is there found of Ling and Cod-fiſh, all about the Coaſts, that ordinarily our men take 200. or 300. of them within four hours ſpace; which they convey from hence to all parts of Europe.

OF CANADA.

CANADA is bounded on the North, with Corterialis; on the South, with New-England; on the Eaſt, with the Main Ocean; the Countries lying on the Weſt, either not yet diſcovered, or not perfectly known. So called from the River Canada, the greateſt, not of this Province onely, but of all this Peninſula. A River which hath its Fountain in the undiſcovered parts of this Northern Tract; ſometimes inlarged into great Lakes, and preſently reduced to a narrower chanel, with many great winding and Reaches in it. Having emboſomed almoſt all the reſt of the Rivers of this Countrey, it emptieth it ſelf into the Great Bay of St. Lawrence, over againſt the Iſle of Aſſumption; being at the mouth forty Leagues in breadth, and 150 Fathom deep.

It is alſo called Nova Francia from the French, who following the tract of Cabot, and Corterialis, made a further Diſcovery of theſe parts, and planted ſeveral Colonies in them. The buſineſs firſt undertaken by Jaques Cartier, Anno 1534. received here gladly by the Natives with ſinging, dancing, and expreſſing much ſign of joy: purſued by Monſieur Robarval, ſent thither in the year 1542. by King Francis the firſt, not only to diſcover the Countrey, but to plant ſome parts of it, who built there a fair Fortreſs for his greater ſafety; followed therein by divers others of that Nation, in their ſeveral times.

The nature of the ſoil, and people, we ſhall beſt diſcover in the ſeveral parts of it; each differing from one another, and ſo not eaſily conformed to a general Character. Look we now only on the principal Rivers of the whole, 1 Canada, of which before, 1 Pemtegoet or Norumbegue, as ſome call it, of which more hereafter. 3 Quinibeque falling into the Ocean as the others do, 4 Rio S. Johan, ending its courſe in a large Bay called Bay Francoiſe, interpoſed betwixt Nova Scotia and the reſt of this Countrey. 5 Les trois Riviers, which riſeth far North, and paſſing thorow two great Lakes, falleth into the Canada, 6 Sagnenay, of the ſame original Courſe, and fall. A River of ſo ſtrong a Current, that it ſuffereth not the Sea to flow up its Chanel; ſo deep, that in many places it attaineth to 100 Fathoms; and though but narrow at the mouth, yet groweth it broader and broader upwards; and having received many leſſer ſtreams, looſeth it ſelf at laſt, where the other doth.

It containeth in it the ſeveral Regions of Nova Francia, ſpecially ſo called, 2 Nova Scotia, 3 Norumbegue, and 4 the Iſles adjoyning.

1. NOVA FRANCIA eſpecially ſo named, is ſituate on the South of Corterialis, and on the North of the great River Canada, towards the Eaſt; but on both ſides of it, in the Weſtern and more in land parts. The Countrey naturally full of Stags, Bears, Hares, Marterns and Foxes, whoſe fleſh the People did eat raw (till more civilized) having firſt dryed it either in the ſmoak or Sun, as they do their Fiſh. They have alſo ſtore of Conies, Fowle and Fiſh great plenty; one Fiſh more memorable than the reſt, which they call Adothnel, whoſe body and head is like that of a Grey-hound. But their greateſt Jewels are their Chains of Eſurgnie; a ſhell-fiſh of the whiteſt colour, excellent for the ſtanching of blood: which they faſhion into Beads and Bracelets, and ſo wear, or ſell them. Not very plentifull of fruits, or fit for tillage; yet it breedeth ſome Corn, and of pulſe good plenty. The air more cold than in other Countries of like height, partly by reaſon of the greatneſs of the River, which being wholly of freſh water, and ſo large withall, chilleth the Air on both ſides of it; partly becauſe of the abundance of Ice, and thoſe Hills of Snow, which the North-wind paſſeth over in the way to this Countrey.

The people, when the French firſt diſcovered them, very rude and barbarous; few of them furniſhed with houſes, but removing from one place to another, as their food decayed; and carrying all their goods with them (a thing eaſily done) upon thoſe removes. Such as lived towards the Sea, or the greater Rivers, ſomewhat better houſed. For in the day time they fiſh in their Boats, which they draw unto the Land at night, and turning them upſide down, ſleep under them. As ill apparrelled as houſed; for they went all naked, except a little piece of skin before their Privities. Some of them had their heads quite ſhaven, excepting one Buſh of hair on the top of the Crown; which they ſuffered to grow to the length of an Horſes tail, tyed up with Leather-ſtrings in a knot. Each man allowed his two or three Wives a piece; and they ſo conſtant to their Husband, that they never marry after his death, but keep themſelves continually in a mourning habit: a vizard as it were, made of greaſe and Coal-duſt, which they ſpread over all their bodies. The women labour more than the men, both in fiſhing and husbandry: Digging the ground inſtead of Ploughing, with certain pieces of wood, where they ſow their Maiz (a Plant of which they make their bread, in moſt parts of America.) Idolaters in general before the coming of the French, as they are moſt of them at this day; the French and others which have planted in theſe Northern parts, having added little more unto Chriſtianity, than by the Colonies they brought with them. Yet in the midſt of this darkneſs they ſaw ſo much light, as to believe that when they dyed they went immediately to the Stars; from thence conveyed to certain green and pleaſant fields, full of flowers and fruits. Plain evidence that they believed the immortality of the ſoul, and that there was ſome place appointed for reception of it.

The chief Towns of it at that time, 1 Hochelaga, round in figure, compaſſed about with three Courſe of timber Ramparts, one within the other ; ſharp at the top, about two Rods high, with one gate only to give entrance, and that well fortified (in their kind) with Piles and Bars. It had in it 50. great houſes, in the midſt of every one a Court, and in the middle of that Court a place which they made their fire on. Situate far within the Land, about ſix or ſeven Leagues from the banks of the River Canada , in the moſt pleaſant part of the Countrey ; and therefore made the ſeat of their King, whom they highly reverenced, and carried him on their ſhoulders ſitting on a Carpet of skins. 2 Stadac, or Stadacone, and 3. Quebecque, which the French tall S. Croix, on the courſe of the ſame River alſo ; this laſt a Colony of the French. 4. Tadouſac, a ſafe but ſmall Haven, not capable of above 20. ſhips ; at the mouth of Saguenay. 5. Franco-Roy, a Caſtle built by Monſieur Robarval, when he came firſt into this Countrey. 7. S. Lewis, deſigned for a French Colony by Monſieur de Champlain, An. 1611. but never came to great effect : yet ſo much Champlain got by the undertaking, that he left his name to a great Lake of this Country (full of little Iſlands) in the Lands of the Uroqueis, inhabiting on the South of the River Canada, into which it emptieth it ſelf at the laſt.

2. NOVA SCOTIA containeth that part of the Countreys of Canada or Nova Francia, which the French call Accadie, or Cadie, (being a Peninſula or Demy-Iſland ;) with ſo much of the main-land as lieth between the River Canada and the large Bay called Bay-Francoiſe, from the River of S. Croix upon the Weſt, to the Iſle of Aſſumption on the Eaſt. So called by King James, in the Grant of theſe Countries to Sir William Alexander, after Lord Secretary of Scotland, and by King Charls for his approved fidelity moſt deſervedly created Earl of Sterling. The Letters Patents of which Donation bear Date Anno 1621. What time the French having been outed of their holds here, by Sir Sam. Argal Governour of Virginia ; had abandoned the South-parts of Canada, and betook themſelves more into the North, and the higher parts of the courſe of that River. And in purſuance of this Grant, the ſaid Sir William Alexander, in the year 1622, ſent a Colonie hither ; and having procured a new Map to be made of the Countrey, cauſed the Peninſula, lying on this ſide of the Bay Francoiſe, to be called Nova Caledonia ; that on the North thereof, to be called Nova Alexandria ; giving new names alſo unto moſt of the Ports and Promontories. For the better accompliſhment of which buſineſs, he obtained alſo a Patent for advancing a certain number of Perſons to the hereditary dignity of Baronets, or Knights of Nova Scotia, as we call them commonly ; diſtinguiſhed from others by a Ribbin of Orange tawney : the money raiſed upon which Patent, was to be wholly imployed towards this Plantation. But being unable with thoſe helps (as certainly Plantations are of too great burden for a private perſon) or willing to imploy his money [illegible] more profit, he ſold Port-Royal to the French ; and after diſcontinued his endeavours in it.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Port-Royal, in Accade or Nova Caledonia, on the Bay-Francoiſe, once made a Colonie of the French by Monſieur de Monts, An. 1604. continued with much difficulty till the year 1613. when deſtroyed by Sir Samuel Argal then Governour of the Engliſh Plantations in Virginia, by reaſon that the Jeſuites, whoſe neighbourhood he liked not of, had begun to neſt there. Sold ſince again unto the French, as before is ſaid, by whom ſtill poſſeſſed. 2. S. Lukes Bay, by the French called Port au Mouton. 3. Gaſpe, a noted Port in New-Alexandria, oppoſite to the Iſle of Aſſumption. 4. Gachepe, on a fair Bay in the ſame Coaſt alſo.

3. NORUMBEGA hath on the North-eaſt, Nova Scotia ; on the South-weſt, Virginia. The air is of a good temper, the ſoil fruitfull, and the people indifferently civil ; all of them, as well men as women, Painting their faces. The men are much affected to hunting, and therefore never give their daughters to any, unleſs he be well skilled in that game alſo. The Women are here very chaſt, and ſo well love their Husbands, that if at any time they chance to be ſlain, the Widows will neither marry, nor eat fleſh, till the death of their Husbands be revenged. They both dance much ; and for more nimbleneſs, ſometimes ſtark naked. The Sea upon the Coaſts ſo ſhallow and ſo full of ſands, that it is very ill ſailing all along theſe ſhores. The Towns, or Habitations rather, ſo differently called by the French , Portugals, and Spaniard, that there is not much certainty known of them. Yet moſt have formerly agreed upon Norumbegua, or Arampec, as the Natives call it ; ſaid to be a large, populous, and well-built Town, and to be ſituate on a fair and capacious River, of the ſame name alſo : But later Obſervations tells us there is no ſuch matter : that the River, which the firſt Relations did intend, is called Pemtegoet, neither large nor pleaſant : and that the place by them meant is called Aggunciа, ſo far from being a fair City, that there are onely a few Sheds or Cabins, covered with the barks of Trees, or the skins of beaſts. Howſoever I have let it ſtand on the firſt reports, it being poſſibly enough that the Town might fall into decay, deſerted on the coming of ſo many ſeveral Pretenders ; and that the Sheds, or Cabins which the laſt men ſpeak of, may be only the remainders of it.

4. Adjoyning to theſe Countreys of Canada, are ſeveral Iſlands not joyned in any common name, but yet deſerving ſome conſideration in this place & time. The principal whereof, 1. NATISCOTEC, called the Iſle of Aſſumption, ſituate in the very mouth of the River, was firſt diſcovered by Jaques Cartier, An. 1534. in length 35. leagues, ſeven, or eight in breadth. The Iſland very plain and level, of a fruitfull ſoil, beautified with Trees of ſeveral ſorts, repleniſhed with great plenty both of Fowl and Fiſh, and furniſhed with convenient Rodes, though with no good Havens. Not hitherto inhabited, for ought I can find. 2. RAMEÆ, a frie of little Iſlands in the great Gulf of S. Lawrence on the South of Natiſcotec, firſt found out, or frequented by the Citizens of St. Malo in Bretagne, An. 1590. of great reſort for the Morſe-fiſhing, uſed upon the coaſts, which is here ſo gainfull, that a French Bark in a very little time killed 1500. of them. Theſe Morſes (take this by the way) are a kind of Sea-Horſes, or Sea-Oxen, with two Teeth of a foot long growing downwards out of the upper Jaw, ſold dearer than Ivory, being eſteemed a ſoveraign Antidote againſt poyſons. They have alſo four feet, no Eares, the Horns about half an ell in length; the skin when dreſſed, twice as thick as that of a Bull;their fleſh when young, as ſweet and tender as Veal. So fat and unctuous,that with the bellies of five of them, there is made uſually an Hogs-Head of Train-Oil, as good as that of the Whale. 3. BRION, a ſmall Iſland on the South of the Ramea, about two leagues in length, and as many in breadth; of a rich ſoyl, fat paſturage, well ſhaded with tall and lofty Trees; and Neighboured by a ſmaller Iſland called Iſle Blanche, of the like fertility. 4. BRITON, (Inſula Britonum) ſo named from Jaques Breton a French man, in the time of Francis the firſt, called alſo the Iſland of St. Lawrence; is ſituate on the South-Eaſt of the Iſle of Brion: in form triangular, in compaſs about 80. leagues; pleaſant and fruitfull, though for the moſt part ſwelled with hills. Deſtitute of Rivers, but interlaced with great Arms of the Sea, well ſtored with ſhell-fiſh; and in the midſt thereof a great Lake full of little Iſlands: the Woods repleniſhed with plenty of Deer, black Foxes, and a bird called Pengwin. Inhabited by the Natives only, though the Portugals did ſometimes endeavour a Plantation in it; but finding the Air too cold for them, they again deſerted it. The chief Haven is by the Engliſh called Newport; by the French Port aux Anglois, from the great reſort of the Engliſh to it, in regard of their fiſhing. 5. ISLE DE SABLE, by the French ſo called from the ſands which lie high about it; diſtant from the Breton-Iſle about 30. leagues to the South; 15. leagues in compaſs, but more long than broad, and of unſafe landing. The planting of it, in regard of the ſafty of the place, attempted twice by the French, and once by the Portugals; but without ſucceſs. 6. Others of leſs note, as Menego, and Les Iſles des Oiſeaux, I paſs over purpoſely; there being nothing or but little to be ſpoken of them.

So it appears by this accompt, that though the French have given the name of Nova Francia, to all theſe Countreys; yet they never had the honour of the firſt diſcovery, wherein the Engliſh and the Portugueze had precedency of them: nor are poſſeſſed of any conſiderable part thereof, the Scots putting in for a large ſhare; the Engliſh Maſters of the beſt Ports, and all the Iſlands of the Country in the hands of the Salvages. Of theſe ſome great and powerfull Nations over-ſway the reſt. The chief whereof are the Yroquois on the North-Eaſt of Norumbegua, neighboured by the Ochataignins, the Alboumequins, and the Nebicerines, the Souriquois, and Etechimins, of Accadie, and new Alexandria: the Montagnets, and the Attogovantans, on the banks of the Canada. All of them ſtout and hardy people, falſe of their words, treacherous in their practices, and mercileſs in their revenges. So well acquainted with the factions and diviſions of Europe, that they know how to make uſe of one Nation againſt another; and by that means to keep themſelves in their firſt eſtate, without being ſubject unto any. So that the footing which the Engliſh, French, or Scots have obtained amongſt them, ſerve rather to ſecure themſelves in the way of their Trading, than to entitle them unto any poſſeſſion, or command in the Country; the French being ſhut up in a few weak Forts on the North of the Canada; the Scots pretending only to a Bay, or two in the South of Accadie; and the Engliſh being only Tenants at the will of the Natives, for ſuch conveniency of fiſhing, as they have in the adjoyning Iſlands.

VIRGINIA.

VIRGINIA hath on the North, Canada; on the South, Florida; on the Eaſt, Mare de Noort; the Weſtern boundaries not known, or not well diſcovered. So called in honour of Queen Elizabeth, that Virgin Monarch; when diſcovered (to any purpoſe) by Sir Walter Raleigh, An. 1584. By the natural Inhabitants called Apalchen, from a Town of that name; one of the chief in all the Country.

The Inland parts hereof are Mountainous and barren, full of thick woods, a Receptacle for wild beaſts, and the wilder Salvages. Towards the Sea more plain and fruitfull, as will appear by the Survey of its ſeveral Provinces; Premiſſing firſt that Virginia in the full Latitude thereof extendeth from the 34th. Degree where it joyns with Florida, unto the 44th. where it quartereth on Norumbega.

The firſt Diſcovery hereof by the two Cabots, Father and Son, An. 1497. did firſt entitle the Crown of England to this Country. The Deſign after ſeconded by one Mr. Hare, bringing thence certain of the petit Kings, or Princes hereof; who did Homage to King Henry the 8th. then ſitting in his Royal Throne in the Palace of Weſtminſter: but nothing further done in purſuance of it. And though John Verazzani, a noble Florentine, at the incouragement and charge of King Francis the firſt, Anno 1524. diſcovered more of the Country than Cabot did; yet the French too much in love with the pleaſures of France, or intangled in Civil wars amongſt themſelves, looked no further after it: Inſomuch that the Country lying thus neglected, was re-diſcovered by the charges and direction of Sir Walter Raleigh, then Captain of the Guard, and in great power and favour with Queen Elizabeth, Anno 1584. who ſending Maſter Philip Amadas, and Maſter Arthur Barlow upon this employment, did by them take poſſeſſion of it in Queen Elizabeths name; in honour of whom he cauſed it to be called Virginia. The next year he ſent hither a Colony, under the conduct of the noble Sir Richard Greenvile: who not ſupplied with neceſſaries for their ſubſiſtence, returned home again. In the year 1587. a ſecond Colony is ſent hither, but as ſucceſsleſs as the firſt: the buſineſs being undertaken only on a private Purſe, not owned as the intereſs of the State, or of publick moment, till the year 1606. In the mean time the North parts of this Country being more perfectly diſcovered by Captain Bartholomew Goſnold, An. 1602. and the middle parts being taken up by the Hollanders not long after, that is to ſay, in the year 1609. the whole became divided into theſe three parts. 1. New-England. 2. Novum Belgium. 3. Virginia ſtrictly and ſpecially ſo called. To which the Iſles of the Bermudas ſhall come in for a fourth.

NEW-ENGLAND hath on the North-Eaſt, Norumbegua; and on the South-Weſt, Novum Belgium. So called by the Adventurers by whom firſt planted, not ſo much becauſe oppoſite to Nova Albion, as ſome men conceive; as in imitation of the like adjuncts of diſtinction, given by the French and Spaniards, to Nova Francia, Nova Hiſpania, Nova Gallicia, Nova Granada, and the like.

The Country ſituate in the middle of the Temperate Zone, betwixt the degrees of 41. and 44. equally diſtant from the Artick Circle, and the Tropick of Cancer; by conſequence naturally of the ſame degree of heat, with France, or Italy: But by reaſon of the thick miſts which ariſe from the Seas adjoyning, thoſe heats ſo moderated, that the Air is found to be exceedingly agreeable to an Engliſh body. The ſoyl not only fruitfull of ſuch Commodities as grow there naturally; but alſo of all ſorts of Grain which were brought from England. Great ſtore of Woods, and Trees, both for fruit and building; plenty of Deer within the Woods, of Salt and Fiſh upon the ſhores; and as for Turkies, Patriges, Swans, Geeſe, Cranes, Ducks, Pigeons, ſuch a full variety, as ſerves not only for neceſſity, but for Pride and Luxury. The Commodities of moſt note for maintaining of Traffick, rich Furs, and many ſorts of Fiſh, ſome Amber, Flax, Linnen, Iron, Pitch, Maſts, Cables, Timber fit for ſhipping: in a word, whatſoever comes to England by the way of the Sound, might be at better rates, and with far leſs trouble be ſupplied from hence; at leaſt, if we believe the Relations of it, publiſhed in the year 1622.

The people for the moſt part well enough diſpoſed, if not roughly handled, hoſpitable, and more civil than the reſt of their Neighbours. So tractable and docile in matters of Religion, that liking well the Rites and Ceremonies of the Engliſh, at their firſt ſetling there, An. 1608. they would uſe to ſay that King James was a good King, and his God a good God, but their Tanto naught. Which Tanto was an evil ſpirit, which did haunt and trouble them every Moon, and therefore they worſhipped him for fear. Which notwithſtanding, I find not any great increaſe of Chriſtianity amongſt the Natives: our Engliſh Undertakers thinking it ſufficient if they and their houſes ſerved the Lord, without caring what became of the Souls of the wretched people; which hitherto have ſate in darkneſs and the ſhadow of death, notwithſtanding thoſe New lights which have ſhined amongſt them. And as for thoſe New-comers which have planted there, all Engliſh, though ſome immediately out of Holland; I cannot better tell you of what ſtrain they were, than in the words of John de Laet, Novi Orbis lib. 3. cap. 8. where he obſerveth, Primos hoſce Colonos, uti & illos qui poſtea acceſſerunt, potiſſimùm aut omnino fuiſſe ex eorum hominum Secta, quos in Anglia Browniſtas & Puritanos vocant, quales non pauci & in Belgium ſuperioribus annis ſe receperunt, & hinc ad ſocios ſunt profecti. They were (ſaith he) either for the moſt part, or altogether of that Sect, which in England are called Browniſts or Puritans; many of which had formerly betaken themſelves to Holland, but afterwards went thence to joyn with their Brethren in New-England.

Principal Rivers of this part, 1 Tameſcot, where our men found Oyſters of nine inches long. 2 Nanſic, a River of the Tarentines, one of the chief Nations of this tract. 3 Sagahadoc, of moſt note, and deſervedly too. Of a mile and an half broad at the mouth or influx, and ſo upwards for the ſpace of a dayes journey: where it maketh a large Lake three dayes journey broad, with ſix Iſlands in it; nouriſhed with two large Chanels, the one from the North-eaſt, the other from the North-weſt, each of them riſing from a Lake, the leaſt of which four dayes journey long, two broad, the other double it. Of leſs note, 4 Apanawapeſk, 5 Ramaſſoc, 6 Aſhamahaga, &c.

The Country on the Sea-ſide full of notable Havens, populous, and very well inhabited, inſomuch as Captain Smith reckoned in the ſpace of 70 miles above twenty Havens, ſome of them capable of 500 or 1000 ſail: moſt of them ſheltered from the furies of wind and ſea, by the interpoſition of ſome Iſlands, of which about 200 lie upon that Coaſt. In the ſpace of 70 miles he reckoneth forty Villages of the Barbarous people, the chief of which, 1 Macadacut, 2 Segocket, 3 Pemmaquid, 4 Nuſconcus, 5 Kennebecque, &c. all called by the name of ſome Brook, or water, upon which they were ſeated. Since added by the Engliſh, 1 S. Georges Fort, the firſt Plantation of the Engliſh, built by them at the mouth of the River Sagahadoc, in a Demy-Iſland, An. 1607. 2 New Plimouth, ſeated in a large and capacious Bay; at the firſt building (An. 1620.) conſiſting of nineteen families only, but in ſhort time improved to an handſom Town: which as it was the firſt Town, ſo it was the firſt Church which was ſetled there, modelled according to the form of Mr. Robinſons Church in Holland, (that notorious Separatiſt,) and after made a pattern to the reſt of theſe Churches: each abſolute and Independent in it ſelf, without ſubordination unto any Superior. For my part, I behold Epiſcopacy as the Primitive Government of the Church of Chriſt. But if there were no other Pretenders to it, than Presbytery, and Independency; I ſhould as ſoon look for the Scepter and Throne of Chriſt (as they pleaſe to phraſe it) in the Co-ordination of New-England, as in the Presbyteries of Geneva, or the Kirk of Scotland. 3 Briſtow, upon the Sea-ſide alſo, but more North than Plimouth. 4 Barſtaple, ſo called with reference to a noted Sea-town of that name in Devonſhire; as 5 Boſton, with like reference to as noted a Sea-port in Lincolnſhire. 6 Quillipiack, on the Bay of Maſſachuſets; a Town of an old name, but a new plantation.

This part of Virginia firſt diſcovered by Captain Goſnold, An. 1602. and the next year more perfectly ſurveyed by ſome of Briſtol, was by King James An. 1606. granted unto a certain Corporation of Knights, Gentlemen, and Merchants, to be planted and diſpoſed of for the publike: Sir John Popham, then Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, being one of the Chief alſo in that Commiſſion. By his encouragement, and principally at his charge, a Colony was ſent thither An. 1607. under the Preſidency of Captain George Popham, and Ralegh Gilbert, who built the Fortreſs of S. George at the mouth of Sagahadoc. But the Preſident dying the next year, and not long after him the Chief Juſtice alſo, the Colony deſpairing of good ſucceſs, returned home again. Succeſsleſly again attempted An. 1614. the Undertakers were reſolved to make further trial of their fortune; and in the year 1616. ſent out eight ſhips more: but it never ſetled into form till the year 1620. when by the building of New-Plimouth, and ſome encouragements ſent thence to bring others on, it grew in very ſhort time to ſo ſwift a growth, that no Plantation for the time, ever went beyond it. The growth of old Rome and New-England had the like foundation: both Sanctuaries, Ad quæ turba omnis ex finitimis gentibus novarum rerum cupida confluxit, as Livy telleth us of the one; reſorted to by ſuch of the neighbouring Nations, as longed for innovations in Church and State.

2. NOVUM BELGIUM or NIEU-NEDERLANDT, hath on the North-eaſt New-England; on the South-weſt Virginia, ſpecially ſo called. So named from the Netherlanders, who began their plantation in it An. 1614. the Country being then void, and conſequently open to the next Pretender, according to that Maxim in the Civil laws, Quæ nullius ſunt, in bonis dantur occupanti. And yet they had ſome better title than a bare Intruſion, having bought Hudſons Cards and Maps, and otherwiſe contented him for the charge and pains of his Diſcovery, An. 1609. Of which more anon.

This part of the Country extended from the 38. Degree and an half, to the 41. 15. of a good temperature both of Air and ſoil: fruitfull of thoſe things which the Earth brought forth of its own accord, abundance of wild Grapes, and Nuts, Trees of great height and bulk for ſhipping; plenty of Herbage, ſtore of Plants, the effects of nature: and where the People did their part, ſuch increaſe of Maize (a Plant of which they make their Bread) as ſhewed their care and induſtry to be well beſtowed. Since the planting of the Hollanders there, abundantly well furniſhed (within their command) with Wheat and other ſorts of Grain; as alſo with Flax, Hemp, and ſuch other Commodities, as were brought hither out of Europe. The Woods repleniſhed with Deer, and the Plains with Fowl; the Rivers not inferiour to any, in Sturgeons, Salmons, and other the beſt ſort of Fiſh, which can ſwim in the water.

The People, though divided into many Nations, and of different Languages, are much of the ſame diſpoſition with the other Salvages. Clad in Beaſts skins, for the moſt part without certain dwellings; dwelling together many Families of them under one poor roof, made of Poles meeting at the top, and covered with the bark of Trees. Their Houſhold ſtuff a Tabacco Pipe, a wooden diſh, and an Hatchet made of a broad flint; their weapons, Bow and Arrows, but their Arrows made or headed with the bones of fiſhes. Their Religion Idolatry, or worſe, their chief God the Devil, whom they worſhip under the name of Menetto: but with leſs pomp and Ceremony than is uſed in Africk. Of manners, fearfull and ſuſpicious (not without good cauſe) wonderfull greedy of revenge; but if well uſed, tractable and obedient unto their Superiours; fickle, but very faithfull unto thoſe who truſt them:

conceived to be inclinable to the Chriſtian Faith, if they had fallen into the hands and command of thoſe, who had ſtudied godlineſs more than gain.

Rivers of note they have not many. That want ſupplied by many large and capacious Bays, all along the Coaſt; the principal of thoſe that be, 1 Manhattes, by ſome called Naſſovius, but by the Dutch commonly Noordt Rivier, which falleth into the Sea at May-Port, ſo called by Cornelius May, the Maſter of a Ship of Holland, at their firſt Plantation: another Chanel of it, which from the noiſe thereof they call Hell-gate, emptying it ſelf againſt an Iland called the Iſle of Nuts. The River about 15, or 16. Fathom deep, at the mouth thereof, affordeth a ſafe Road for ſhipping, but of difficult entrance. 2 Zuid Rivier, ſo called, becauſe more Southerly than the other; as fair as that, but hitherto not ſo well diſcovered.

Towns here are few either of the old or New Plantations. The Natural Inhabitants live together in Tribes, many Families of thoſe Tribes under one Roof, as before was ſaid; but thoſe Families ſo remote from one another, that their Habitations are not capable of the name of a Town, and hardly of a ſcattered Village. Nor do I find that either the Hollanders or the Engliſh (who now divide the whole among them) are much given to building: The title of the Dutch being ſubject unto ſome diſputes; and the Poſſeſſion of the Engliſh not confirmed and ſetled. Hudſon an Engliſh-man, had ſpent ſome time in the Diſcovery of this Country, and given his name to one of the Rivers of it. With him the Hollanders, An. 1609. as before is ſaid, compounded for his Charts, and Maps, and whatſoever he could challenge in the right and ſucceſs of that his Voyage. But they were hardly warm in their new Habitations, when Sir Samuel Argal, Governour of Virginia, ſpecially ſo called (having diſpoſſeſſed the French of that part of Canada, now called Nova Scotia, An. 1613.) diſputed the poſſeſſion with them; alleging that Hudſon, under whoſe ſale they claimed that Country, being an Engliſh-man, and licenſed to diſcover thoſe Northern parts by the King of England, could not alienate or diſmember it (being but a part or Province of Virginia) from the Crown thereof. Hereupon the Dutch Governonr ſubmits himſelf and his Plantation to his Majeſty of England, and the Governour of Virginia for, and under him. But a new Governour being ſent from Amſterdam in the year next following, not only failed in paying the conditioned Tributes; but began to fortifie himſelf, and entitle thoſe of Amſterdam to a juſt propriety. To which end, he gave unto the Country the name of New Netherland, conferred new names on all the Bays and Rivers of it; and poſſeſſed himſelf of a little Iſland near that Branch of the Noordt Rivier, which themſelves call Hell-gate: where he laid the foundation of a Town, called New Amſterdam; and built a Fortreſs by the name of Orange Fort, which he garriſonned, and planted with five pieces of Cannon. Complaint whereof being made unto King Charls, and by him repreſented to the States of Holland, it was declared by the ſaid States in a publick inſtrument, that they were no ways intereſſed in it, but that it was a private undertaking of the Weſt-Indian Company of Amſterdam; and ſo referred it wholly to his Majeſties pleaſure. Which being declared, a Commiſſion was forthwith granted to Sir George Calvert, Lord Baltimore, to plant the Southern parts thereof, which lie next Virginia, by the name of MARY-LAND: the like not long after to Sir Edmund Loyden, for planting and poſſeſſing the more Northern parts which lie towards New-England, by the name of Nova Albion. And though the Hollanders did then ſeem willing to be gone, and leave all they had there, for the ſum of 2500. l. yet taking advantage of the troubles which not long after followed in England, they have not only raiſed their demands to a greater height; but furniſhed the Native Indians with Arms, and taught them how to uſe their Weapons. A moſt miſchievous and wicked Act; not only tending to the damage and diſcouragement of the preſent Adventurers, but even unto the extirpation of all Chriſtians out of all theſe Countries. But the beſt is, they were the firſt that ſmarted by it. The Salvages thus armed and trained, fell fowl upon them, deſtroying their Farm Houſes, and forcing them to betake themſelves to their Forts and Faſtneſſes. What hath been ſince done (for the giving of new names to ſome of the old places, I look on as a thing of nothing) either in getting out the Dutch, or planting Colonies of the Engliſh, I can hardly ſay: but I fear that little will be acted, or to little purpoſe, till it be made a Work of more publick intereſs.

3. VIRGINIA ſpecially ſo called, hath on the North-eaſt Nieu Netherlandt, on the South-weſt, Florida; the name reſtrained to this part only, ſince the two laſt Plantations, which before was common to the whole. The Country lieth extended from the 34. to the 38. degree of Northern Latitude: by conſequence the Air inclined unto heats, if not refreſhed and moderated by a conſtant Gale of Eaſtern winds, which they call the Brize; and the blaſts driving on it from the open Seas. Diverſified moſt pleaſantly into hills and valleys; the Mountains clothed with woods, and the Fields with fruits. The ſoil ſo fruitfull, than an Acre of Land well ordered will return 200 Buſhels, or 25 Quarter of Corn. Said alſo to be rich in veins of Allom, as alſo Pitch, Turpentine, ſtore of Cedars, Grapes, Oyl, plenty of ſweet Gums, ſeveral ſorts of Plants for the Dyers uſe, ſome Mines of Iron and Copper, of Timber trees almoſt infinite numbers; as alſo great abundance of Cattel, Fiſh, Fowl, Fruit, and of Maiz no ſcarcity. Some Cryſtal found amongſt the Mountains, on the ſhore ſome Pearls; nothing deficient either in the ſoil, or Air, for the incouragement and reward of a thriving Nation.

The People are but few in number for ſo large a Country, and thoſe as different in ſize, as in ſpeech or manners; Some of them, whom they call Saſques-hanoxi, of ſo vaſt a greatneſs, that in compariſon of the Engliſh they ſeemed as Giants: clad with the ſkins of Bears, and Wolves, in ſo ſtrange manner, that the head of the Beaſt hung before their breaſts inſtead of a Jewel; their Arms, Bows, Arrows, and a Club. Some on the other ſide, whom they call Wigcocomoci, of ſo low a ſtature, that in relation to the other, they appear as Pigmies. But generally they are all of tall ſtature, well limbed, for the moſt part without Beards, and the one half of the head kept ſhaven: cloathed in looſe Mantles made of the ſkins of Deer, with an Apron of the ſame to hide their nakedneſs; the reſt of their bodies painted over with the figures of Serpents, or of ſome other Creature of as horrid ſhape. Strong and accuſtomed to the cold, which they patiently endure, or feel not: wavering and inconſtant, crafty, and ſomewhat more induſtrious than the reſt of the Salvages; but given to anger, and as greedy of revenge as any. Gods they have many, For they worſhip all things (and them only) which are like to hurt them; as Fire, Water, Lightning, Thunder, &c. So that it may be ſaid of them, as once Lactantius ſaid of the ancient Romans (did not the ignorance of theſe poor Wretches render them excuſable, and make them fitter objects for our Prayers and Pitty, than our ſcorns) Digniſſimi homines qui Deos ſuos ſemper haberent præſentes. One Devil-God above all the reſt (they call him Oke) whom they worſhip, as themſelves confeſs, more for fear than love. Not yet converted from theſe horrible and groſs Idolatries, by the long neighbourhood of the Engliſh; accuſed in that reſpect moſt juſtly by thoſe of Rome.

No Countrey for the bigneſs of it can be better watered, or yield fairer Rivers. The principal of which 1. Pawhatan (ſo called by the name of that petit Roitelet, whoſe Territory it paſſeth through) which having run a courſe of an hundred miles, and Navigable all that way by ſmaller Veſſels; is at his fall into the Sea about three miles broad. 2 Apamatuck, 3 Nanſamund, and 4 Chikahamania, all Tributaries to Pawhatan. 5 Pamanuke, fourteen miles more North than Pawhatan, but of leſſer note. 6 Toppahanock, Navigable 130 miles. 7 Patawomeke, paſſable by Boat 140 miles, and ſix, or ſeven miles broad, where it falleth into the Sea; increaſed by many leſſer ſtreams which come out of the Mountains, and generally well ſtored with Fiſh. 8 Pawtunxut, of a ſhorter Race, but a deeper Chanel than moſt of the former (16 or 18 fathom deep) and of more choiſe of Fiſh than the others are.

Along the Banks of theſe Rivers dwell their ſeveral Tribes, ſcarce any one of which making up an hundred men (that of Patawomeke excepted, which is able to arm after their manner 160) many not yielding above 30 and ſome not ſo many. Their habitations not containing above ten, or twelve houſes apiece, but in thoſe houſes ſundry particular families, are for the moſt part covered with the Barks of Trees; ſo placed, that the common Market place ſtandeth in the midſt, at an equal diſtance: the houſes of their Weroances (or the chiefs of their Tribes) and that which ſerveth them for a Temple, being ſomewhat finer than the reſt. And of theſe habitations ſome are preſented to us by the names of Ooanoke, by the Engliſh called the blind Town. 2 Pemeoke. 3 Shycoake, ſaid by my Author to be Civitas ampla, a large City, but we muſt underſtand him with Relation to the reſt of this Countrey. 4 Chowanoak. 5 Secatan. 6 Mattaken. 7 Weopomioke. 8 Pyſhokonock, ſaid to be inhabited by none but women. 9 Chipono. 10 Muſcamunge, both upon the Sea; moſt of them called by the name of thoſe ſeveral Tribes which inhabit in them.

In reference to the Engliſh and their Plantations, we are to know that they made choice of the South-ſide of a large and goodly Bay, for the place of their dwelling. A Bay which thruſting it ſelf a great way up into this Countrey, and receiving into it many of the Rivers before mentioned, is by the Natives called Cheſepoack, and yieldeth the only ſafe entrance into this part of the Countrey: the Capes thereof for that cauſe fortified by the Engliſh; that on the Southern point being called Cape Henry, and the other Cape Charls, according to the names of the two young Princes. Towns of moſt note which have been either ſince built, or frequented by them, 1 James Town (Jacobipolis) ſo named in honour of King James, on the South-ſide of that Bay, not far from the River Chikahamania: firſt founded in the year 1606. at what time it was trenched about, and ſome Ordnance planted on the Works. 2 Henries Town (Henricopolis) ſo named in honour of Prince Henry, the eldeſt Son of King James, built in a convenient place more within the Land, 18 miles from James Town. 3 Dales-gift, ſo called, becauſe built and planted at the charge of Sir Thomas Dale, An. 1610. 4 Bermuda, an open Burrough five miles from Henricopolis, 5 Ketoughtan, a noted and frequented Port in the Bay of Cheſepoack, very much traded by the Engliſh. 6 Wicocomoco the chief Town of Pawhatan, one of the Roitelets of this Countrey; much courted by the Engliſh at their firſt ſetling here, and a long time after: a Crown being ſent him by King James with many other Rich preſents, the better to ſweeten and oblige him; but for all that he proved a treacherous and unfaithfull Neighbour.

The ſum of the affairs of this laſt Plantation, is, that the buſineſs being reſumed in the year 1606. and a Commiſſion granted to certain Noble men and Merchants to advance the work; they fell in hand, by the Counſel and incouragement of Captain Smith, with the building of James Town (having firſt fortified Cape Henry) in which Town he fixed a Colony of 100 men. Theſe being almoſt conſumed by Famine and other miſeries, were the next year recruited with 120 more brought by Captain Newport: but a Fire having caſually conſumed their houſes, once again diſcouraged them. But the Houſes being reedified, and a Church added to the Houſes, by the induſtry of Smith their Governour, the Colony began to flouriſh, and to increaſe in reputation amongſt the Salvages: eſpecially having made (as they believed) a friend of Pawhatan. In the year 1609. the Lord De la Ware was appointed Governour, and Smith commanded to return; who left here 490 perſons, (and of them 200 expert Souldiers) 3 Ships 7 Boats, 24 great Guns, 300 Muskets, with Victuals and Ammunition neceſſary; and 39 of their Weroances, or Petit-Kings Tributaries, and Contributioners to the Engliſh. Sir Thomas Gates and Sir George Summers, ſent thither with nine ſhips and 500 men, loſt a great part of their numbers in the Iſle of Bermudaz: the reſt not well according with the old Plantation, were at the point of returning home, when happily the Lord De la Ware arrived with three ſhips more, Anno 1610. But falling into a deſperate ſickneſs, and come home to England, he recommended the Eſtate of the Engliſh there to Sir Thomas Dale, who furniſhed them with Men, Cattel, and other neceſſaries: after whom came Sir Thomas Gates with 300 men, and ſome heads of Cattel. And then the Government hereof being conferred on Henry Earl of Souththampton, the affairs here began to ſettle in a proſperous way: when unexpectedly in the year 1621. the Salvages falling on them (fearing no ſuch treachery) killed 340 of their men; and had alſo then ſurprized James Town, if one of the Salvages, who had received the Chriſtian Faith, had not diſcovered their intention. Since that, recovered of that blow, it went happily forwards: and might by this time have been raiſed to ſome power and greatneſs, if the Engliſh by diverting on ſome by Plantations, and by imploying indigent and neceſſitous perſons in ſo great a work, had not diſcouraged the deſign. For certainly one might ſay of this Plantation, as the Scripture doth of the Camp of David in the time of Saul, that few, or none were ſent unto it (except the principals) but ſuch as were in diſtreſs, or debt, or ſome way or other diſcontented: men never likely to advance and purſue a buſineſs of ſuch publick intereſs. Commendable howſoever in this particular, (though perhaps that commendation do belong to their Governours) that being here, they kept themſelves conſtantly to thoſe forms of Worſhip which were eſtabliſhed and obſerved in the Church of England.

As for the Natives of the whole, they were divided (as was ſaid) into ſeveral Tribes, every Tribe under the command of their ſeveral Chiefs; which Chiefs, though many in number, and of little power, knew well enough how to keep their State unto their Subjects, and to ſhew it alſo unto ſtrangers. For when Pawhatan was pleaſed to give audience unto Captain Newport, and the reſt of the Engliſh ſent from Smith, they found him on a Bed of Mats, his Pillow of Leather imbroidered with white Beads and Pearl, attired with a Robe of skins like an Iriſh Mantle: at his head and feet an handſome young woman; on each ſide of the Room twenty others, with their necks and ſhoulders painted Red, and about their Necks a great Chain of Beads; his principal men ſitting before them in like manner. Yet notwithſtanding this great State, (and great it was indeed for ſuch petit Princes) he and the reſt became ſo ſubject to the Engliſh, that in Smiths time they did not only pay their Tributes, or Contributions, but at his command would ſend their Slaves & Subjects to James Town, to receive correction for wrongs done to the Colony. And it is probable enough that thoſe of New-England, being the greater and more powerfull Plantation (as followed with the ſtronger zeal, and carried on by the united purſes of a prevalent Faction) were of like influence alſo amongſt the Natives, though I find it not expreſſed in ſo many particulars.

4. The Iſles of BERMUDAZ, many in number (ſome ſay 400. at the leaſt) are ſituate directly Eaſt from Virginia, from which they are diſtant 500. Engliſh miles; 3300. of the ſame miles from the City of London. So called from John Bermudaz a Spaniard, by whom firſt diſcovered. Called alſo the Summer-Iſlands, from the ſhipwrack of Sir George Summers upon that Coaſt; ſo much delighted with the ſadneſs of the miſadventure, that he endeavoured what he could to ſettle a Plantation in it.

That of more fame and greatneſs than all the reſt, to which the name is now moſt properly aſcribed, is ſituate in the Latitude of 32. & 30. minutes. Well ſtored, when firſt diſcovered, with plenty of Hogs, divers fruits, Mulberries, Palmitos, Cedars; as alſo of Silk-worms, Pearls and Amber, and ſuch rich Commodities: of Fowl ſo infinite an abundance, that our men took a thouſand of one ſort, as big as a Pigeon, within two or three hours. The Air hereof very ſound and healthy, found by experience (the beſt Argument in ſuch a point) to be agreeable to the body of an Engliſh man; yet terribly expoſed to Tempeſts of Rain, Thunder, and Lightning. For which, and for the many ſhipwracks happening on the Coaſts thereof, and want of other Inhabitants to be ſaid to own it, the Mariners have pleaſed to call it the Iſland of Devils. The ſoil affirmed to be as fertile as any; well watered, plentifull in Maize, of which they have two Harveſts yearly: that which is ſowed in March, being cut in July; and that which is ſowed in Auguſt, being mowed in December. No venemous Creature to be found in all the Iſland, or will live, brought hither. And beſides theſe Commodities, of ſo ſafe a being, ſo fenced about with Rocks and Ilets, that without knowledge of the paſſages, a Boat of ten Tuns cannot be brought into the Haven; yet with ſuch knowledge, there is entrance for the greateſt ſhips. The Engliſh have ſince added to theſe ſtrengths of nature, ſuch additional helps, by Block-houſes, Forts and Bulwarks in convenient places, as may give it the title of Impregnable.

It was firſt diſcovered (but rather accidently than upon deſign) by John Bermudaz, a Spaniard, about the year 1522. and thereupon a Propoſition made in the Council of Spain, for ſetling a Plantation in it; as a place not to be avoided by the Spaniſh Fleets, in their return from the Bay of Mexico, by the Streights of Bahama. Neglected notwithſtanding, till the like accidental coming of Sir George Summers, ſent to Virginia with ſome Companies of Engliſh by the Lord De la Ware, An. 1609. Who being ſhipwracked on this Coaſt, had the opportunity to ſurvey the Iſland; which he ſo liked, that he endeavoured a Plantation in it, at his comming home. An. 1612. the firſt Colony was ſent over under Richard More, who in three years erected eight or nine Forts in convenient places, which he planted with Ordinance. An. 1616. a new ſupply is ſent over under Captain Daniel Tucker, who applyed themſelves to ſowing Corn, ſetting of Trees brought thither from other parts of America, and planting that gainfull Weed Tobacco. An. 1619. the buſineſs is taken more to heart, and made a matter of the Publick, many great Lords and men of Honour being intereſſed in it: Captain Butler ſent thither with 500. men, the Iſle divided into Tribes, or Cantreds, to each Tribe a Burrough; the whole reduced to a ſetled Government both in Church and State, according to the Law of England. After this, all things ſo ſucceed, that in the year 1623. here were ſaid to be three thouſand Engliſh, ten Forts, and in thoſe Forts fifty pieces of Ordinance; their numbers ſince increaſing daily, both by Children born within the Iſland, and ſupplies from England.

OF FLORIDA.

FLORIDA is bounded on the North-Eaſt, with Virginia; on the Eaſt, with Mare del Noort; on the South, and ſome part of the Weſt, with the Gulf of Mexico; on the reſt of the Weſt, with part of New Gallicia, and ſome Countries hitherto not diſcovered. Extended from the River of Palmes in the 25th. degree of Latitude, to Rio de Secco in the 34th. which evidently ſpeaketh it for a Countrey of large dimenſions.

It was firſt diſcovered by the Engliſh under the conduct of Sebaſtian Cabot, Anno 1497. afterwards better ſearched into by John de Ponce, a Spaniard, who took poſſeſſion of it in the name of that King, Anno 1527. and by him called Florida, either becauſe he landed there upon Palm-Sunday, which the Spaniards call Paſcua di Flores, or Paſcha Florida; or elſe quia Florida erat Regio, by reaſon of that freſh verdure and flouriſhing eſtate in which he found it. But by the Natives it is ſaid to be called Jaquaſa.

This Country lying Parallel to Caſtile in Spain, it is ſaid to be of the ſame temper both for Air and Soyl, but that it is abundantly more fruitfull: the heart of the ground not being here worn out by continual Tillage, as perhaps it may be in the other. For here they have great abundance of Maize (the natural bread-Corn of the Countrey) which they ſow twice a year, viz. March and June, and reap in the third month after, laying it in ſome publick Barns, and thence diſtribute it to the neceſſities of particular perſons. Well ſtored with ſeveral ſorts of Fruit, as Mulberries, Cherries, Cheſnuts, Grapes and Plums of both excellent taſte and colour: Beaſt wilde, and tame, of all kinds which theſe Countreys yield; and of like ſorts of Fowl. The Woods and Foreſts full of the largeſt Oaks, and the loftieſt Cedars; ſome Cypreſs-Trees, and Bays, of a large proportion; with great plenty of that Wood which the Inhabitants call Pavam, and the French name Saſſafras, the bark whereof is Medicinal againſt ſome diſeaſes; and another Tree which we call Eſquine, affirmed to be a Soveraign and preſent Remedy for the French Diſeaſe. It is alſo ſaid to be enriched with ſome Mines of Gold, and Silver; neglected by the Natives, till the coming of the Spaniards, and French, put a price upon them: and to have in it Emeralds of great worth and beauty, with many Turquoiſes and Pearls. Others report that all the Gold and Silver which they have amongſt them, came from ſome ſhips which had been wracked upon thoſe Coaſts: contrary whereunto it is ſaid by the Natives, that in the Hills which the call Apalatei, there are found great Veins of a reddiſh Metal, which the French concluded to be Gold, though they wanted time and opportunity to ſearch into them.

The people are of an Olive Colour, great ſtature, and well proportioned; naked, except their Privities, which they hide with the skins of Stags: their arms and knees ſtained with divers paintings, not to be waſhed off; their hair black, and hanging down as low as their thighs. Cunning they be, and excellent in the Arts of diſſimulation. So ſtomackfull, that they do naturally love War and Revenge, inſomuch that they are continually in War with one, or other. They are crafty alſo and very intelligent, as appeareth by the anſwer they gave to Ferdinando Soto, a Spaniard, who was here amongſt them, An. 1594. for when he went to perſwade the people that he was the ſon of God, and came to teach them the Law: Not ſo, replyed a Floridan, for God never bad thee to kill and ſlay, and work all kind of miſchief againſt us. The Women when their Husbands are dead, uſe to cut off their hair cloſe to their ears, and ſtrew it on his Sepulchre; and cannot marry again, till their hair be grown long enough to cover their ſhoulders. Hermophrodites are here alſo in great plenty, whom they uſe as beaſts to carry their luggage, and put them to all kind of drudgery. They have all a groſs belief of the Souls immortality, but are otherwiſe Idolaters.

Mountains this Country hath not many, as being generally plain, and level; the chiefeſt, thoſe called Apalatei before mentioned, ſuppoſed by the Inhabitants to be rich in Mines of Gold. Rivers of moſt note. 1. Rio Secco. 2. Rio Grande. 3. Serrævahi; the two firſt named ſo by the Spaniards, and the laſt by the Natives. 4. Garunna. 5. Ligeis. 6. Axona. 7. Sequana, and 8. Charente, ſo called by the French, according to the names of the beſt Rivers in France: both French and Spaniards having ſeverally and ſucceſſively the poſſeſſion it. Here are alſo 9. Rio de Flores, or the River of Flowers; 10. Rio de Neives, or the River of Snow; and 11. Rio de Spirito Santo, or the River of the Holy Ghoſt; all of them falling into the Bay of Mexico. A particular deſcription of theſe Rivers, their riſe, courſe, and greatneſs, I find not in any of my Authors. Onely Mercator telleth us of a twelfth River, called Porte Riale, reckoned the chiefeſt of this Country, the mouth whereof is three miles broad; where it openeth into the Sea betwixt two Promontories, the one towards the Weſt, and the other pointing to the North. Some of theſe Rivers are affirmed to be haunted with Crocodiles, a Creature dangerous alike both by Land and Water.

The Countrey not ſo well diſcovered and planted hitherto, as to be divided into Provinces, is commonly diſtributed into ſeveral Tribes; as were all Nations of the World at their firſt Diſcovery. The principal of theſe they reckon the Quevenes, Marianes, Canagadi, Camoni, Avavares, and Malicones, the Suſolas, Quitones, and other names not uſual unto us of Europe; though theſe more paſſable than many which have gone before: mollified perhaps by the French, and Spaniards, and not preſented to us in their natural roughneſs; all governed by their Paracouſſi, or ſeveral Chiefs, and thoſe at deadly Feuds, and continual Wars with one another. Some have adventured on the names of particular Provinces, as Panuca, Avanares, Abarduoſia, Joguazia, Apalchia, Anthia, Samovia, Solas; but they acquaint us nether with their ſite nor bounds: except it be that Panuca lyeth on the borders of Hiſpania Nova, beyond the large and ſpacious Bay of the Holy Ghoſt; and Calos near the Cape, called Cape di Florida. Others diſtinguiſh it by the names of the ſeveral Roitelets; which varying with the change of the perſon, makes that diviſion to be very variable and uncertain alſo. But it is generally agreed that the Peninſula, which pointeth on the Iſle of Cuba, hath the name of Tegeſta, or Florida ſpecially ſo called; the name of Florida being firſt given by John Ponce unto this part only, though afterwards communicated unto all the reſt of this Countrey. A Demy-Iſland ſtretching in length from the South to the North, 100. leagues; in breadth where broadeſt 30. leagues, and in ſome places 20. only. Well known by the Cape of Martyrs, looking into the Iſle of Cuba, the River of the Holy Ghoſt, and three goodly Bays; the chief whereof, that entituled to St. Joſeph, all opening into the Gulf of Mexico, or the Bay of New Spain. The whole environed about, ſave where it is joyned unto the Continent, with Bars of Sands, and ſcattered Iſlands, which ſerve unto it as the out-works to ſome notable Fortreſs.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. St. Helens, on, or near a Promontory, ſo named, where this Countrey bordereth on Virginia: once fortified and poſſeſſed by the Spaniard, but not long ſince abandoned. 2. Fort de Charls, Arx Carolina in the Latine, built by the French upon the Banks of the River Maio; and ſo called in honour of Charls the ninth, in whoſe time the conqueſt of this Countrey was undertaken: but ruined by the Spaniard in the War between them. 3. Port Royal, a well frequented Haven, on the mouth of the River of that name: but whether there be any Town now remaining, I am not able to ſay. More in the Land (for theſe lye all upon the Borders towards Virginia) Apalche, ſuppoſed to be a place of great conſideration, in regard of the opinion which was had of the wealth thereof; but found to be a ſmall Town, of but 40. Cottages:) and therefore firſt attempted and took in by the Spaniard, in their invaſion of this Countrey under Pamphilus of Narvaez, An. 1528. recovered by the Natives after his departure. 5. Ante, an open Burrough, nine dayes journey from Apalche, where the Salvages gave the Spaniards a ſharp encounter, and ſlew many of them; but being vanquiſhed at the laſt, they forſook the Town, of it ſelf not tenable. 6. Ocalis, an unwalled Town, but conſiſting of 600. Sheds (for I dare hardly call them Houſes) the chief of the Kingdome of Acuera. 7. Oſachile, the chief Seat of the King ſo called; and 8. Vitacuchus, a Burrough of 200. Cottages, the principal of the Kingdome of Vitacuchus, both taken by the Spaniards at the ſame time alſo. 9. St. Matthews, on the Eaſtern ſhore of the Demy-Iſland above mentioned, poſſeſſed and fortified by the Spaniard. 10. St. Auguſtines on the ſame ſhore, but more South than the other; ſituate at the mouth of a ſmall River ſo named, fortified by the Spaniard with many a ſtrong Caſtle: but for all that taken by Sir Francis Drake, An. 1585. there being found in the Fort of St. John, in which the ſtrength of the Town conſiſted, 18. braſs pieces, and 20000. Florens in ready money, for the pay of the Garriſon. Repaired afterwards more ſtrongly than ever formerly. The Spaniards have alſo Garriſons in two other places of this Countrey, viz. St. Philip, and St. Jago, but I cannot ſay diſtinctly in what part they are.

The Government of this Countrey, is of one kind only, though managed by ſeveral perſons: the Supreme power reſiding in the Chiefs of their ſeveral Tribes; at ſuch continual enmity with one another, that they very ſeldome joyn together in any Counſels, wherein the publick is concerned. So that the Spaniards may affirm of the preſent Floridans, as the Romans did of the ancient Britans, Nec quicquam adverſus validiſſimas gentes utilius nobis fuit, quam quod in commune non conſulebant. The not communicating of their Counſels, haſtning on their bondage. Yet in the Government of theſe Chiefs there was ſomewhat of the Parliamentary way uſed with us in Europe. For as in all matters of concernment, thoſe Chiefs adviſed with their Council: ſo if it were a buſineſs which concerned the publick, their Prieſts and others of moſt note for gravity and wiſdom, were admitted to the Conſultation. But being ſeverally too weak for a ſtrong Invader, and never joyned together to defend themſelves, they made themſelves an eaſie prey to the French and Spaniards. Et ſic dum ſinguli pugnabant, univerſi vincebantur; by truſting to their ſingle forces they were all ſubdued. For in the year 1512. John Ponce a Native of Leon in Spain, ſetting ſayl with three ſhips from the Iſland of Porto Rico, on Palm-ſunday fell on the Peninſula before deſcribed; & for that cauſe, or from the flouriſhing verdure of it, called it Florida: but did no more than ſcowre along upon the Coaſts, and give new names to ſuch of the Promontories and Rivers as he had diſcovered, and having only a ſlight skirmiſh with ſome of the Salvages, returned back again. The buſineſs eight years after was again revived by Vaſques de Ayllon, who ſetting ſayl from the Haven of Plata, in Hiſpaniola, attained unto the North-Eaſt parts of this Continent, bordering on Virginia, where he left names unto the Promontory of St. Helen, and the River of Jordan; and having treacherouſly enſlaved ſome of the Natives (whom he had invited to a Feaſt) prepared for Spain; where he obtained the Kings Patent for a new Plantation. But his perfidiouſneſs could not proſper. For in the year 1524 coming with his ſhips upon this Coaſt, one of them periſhed on the Rocks; and 200. of his men being killed at their landing, he gave over the Enterprize: the Spaniards hitherto making no more uſe of theſe Diſcoveries, than wickedly to enrich themſelves by ſtealing men, whom as wickedly they ſold for Slaves. Nor had the voyage of Pamphilus de Narvaez, Anno 1528. any better end; though undertaken by a band of 400. Foot, and 80. Horſe. For having took poſſeſſion of the Countrey, in the name of his Soveraign Charls the fifth, finding ſome hopes of great Treaſures to be had at Apalche (diſtant above a months journey from the place of his landing) he would needs march thither. In which action, though he got that and ſome other Towns, yet he loſt himſelf: few of his men returning ſafe into their Countrey, and they not knowing what became of their General. As fruitleſs, but more famous was the enterprize of Hernandes a Soto, begun in the year 1538. and continued till 1542. who with a little Army of 350. Horſe, and 90. Foot, over-ran a great part of the Countrey, and brought many of the Petit Princes under the command of Spain. But making only a Deprædatory War of it to enrich himſelf, and waſte the Country, without ſetling any Colony, or building any Fortifications in it to make good his gettings, the Action ended with his life, which he loſt by a Feaver: the remnant of his Souldiers, whom the War had ſpared, under the conduct of Ludovico Muſcoſo di Alvarado, recovering Mexico not without great difficulties.

And ſo the Spaniards leave the Stage, and the French enter; ſent on this Voyage by Gaſpar Coligni Admiral of France, Anno 1562. under the conduct of Ribault; who falling on that part of the Continent, which lyeth on the Eaſt-ſide of the Peninſula, gave the firſt Promontory which he touched at, the name of Cape Francois: and after running North-ward along that Coaſt, new-named the Rivers thereof by the names of the Seine, the Loire, the Somme, the Garund, and others of moſt note in his own Country. Coming as far North as the great River of Porto-Royal, he there built a little Fortreſs, which he called Fort Charls, where he left 26 of his men to keep poſſeſſion, and returned for France: his Souldiers following not long after, as well as they could; deſtitute of ſupplies from home, and not able with ſo ſmall a number to command them there. The Action re-inforced about two years after, under the conduct of Landonier, who had accompanied Ribault in the former Voyage: by whom ſome further progreſs was made in this undertaking, and a little Town built on the banks of the River Maio, (ſo called by Ribault, becauſe in that moneth diſcovered by him) which he named Charls-Fort, Arx Carolina in the Latin. But a mutiny hapning amongſt his men, and ſome complaints made of him in the Court of France, he was called home, and Ribault ſent again to purſue the enterprize: Who entring on his charge in Auguſt, An. 1565. was preſently ſet on by the Spaniards, both by Sea and Land; his ſhips forced violently on the Rocks, the new Town ſacked, the Colony put unto the ſword, very few eſcaping; Ribault himſelf murdered in cold blood by the Enemy, after faith given him for his life. It was thought that above 600 French were ſlain in this action. So ended the French hopes in Florida, the King being then preparing for a new Civil War, and loath to engage himſelf againſt the Spaniard, till the year 1627. when at the charge of Dominicus Gurgius a private perſon, out of an honeſt zeal to the honour of his Country, and to cry quittance with the Spaniards for their treacherous cruelty, it revived again. And though he found the Spaniards, after the defeat of Ribault, had repaired and fortified Arx Carolina, and raiſed two Caſtles more on the banks of the Maio; which they had furniſhed with ſuch Pieces as they took from the French, and Garriſoned with 400 Soldiers; Yet giving a couragious onſet, by the aid of the Salvages, (to whom the name and neighbourhood of the Spaniards was exceeding odious) he forced them all, demoliſhed the works, and hanged all ſuch of the Souldiers as the ſword had ſpared, and ſo returned into France; where inſtead of honour and reward for ſo great a ſervice, he was in danger of loſing both his life and fortunes, compelled to lurk amongſt his friends till the times were changed. The Spaniards after this, to keep ſome kind of poſſeſſion, though not finding it in riches anſwerable to their greedy deſires, fortified S. Matthews, and S. Auguſtines, on the Eaſt-ſide of the Demy-Iſland, with the Caſtles of S. Philip and S. Jago, in other parts of the Country towards the North-Eaſt: thinking himſelf ſo ſtrong in the Gulf of Mexico, that no forein Forces dare appear on that ſide of the Country. So that it ſeems he playes the part of Æſops Dog in the Manger, neither reſolved to plant there himſelf, nor willing that any others ſhould.

Having thus taken a ſurvey of the main Land of Florida, let us next take a view of ſuch Iſlands, as lie diſperſed up and down in the Seas adjoyning; called by one general name LUCAIOS, or LUCAIÆ INSULÆ; many in number, but reducible to theſe three heads. 1. The Tortugas. 2. The Martyres, and 3. The Lucaios ſpecially ſo called.

1. THE TORTUGAS are ſeven, or eight little Iſlands, lying on an heap at the South-weſt point of the Peninſula, called the Cape of Florida, in the height of 25 Degrees; diſtant from the Port of Havana in the Iſle of Cuba (oppoſite unto which they lie) about ſix leagues. Well known among the Saylers, becauſe much avoided; or rather avoided becauſe known; the danger of their company making their further acquaintance ſhunned.

2. THE MARTYRES, called alſo the Caios, are three great Rocks rather than Iſlands, covered with a white ſand, and full of buſhes; the middlemoſt of the three the greateſt: ſituate over againſt the South-Eaſt Promontory of the ſaid Peninſula, called from hence Cabeca de los Martyres, or the Cape of Martyrs. Denominated thus by John Ponce the Spaniard, in his firſt diſcovery of this Country, becauſe they ſeemed afar off to have ſome reſemblance to men impaled upon Stakes, as many of the Martyrs were in the Primitive times. Infamous for the many ſhipwracks which have ſince there hapned; but of great obſervation amongſt Sea-faring men, becauſe they know by leaving theſe Rocks, or Iſlands on the left hand of them, that they are already entred in the Streights.

3. THE LUCAIOS ſpecially ſo called, lie diſperſed on the Eaſt of the Peninſula; many in number, and ſo called from Lucaioneque, the greateſt and moſt Northern of them, ſituate in the 27 degree of Latitude; of more length than breadth, but hitherto known by name only. Of greater note, though not ſo big, is that called 2. Bahama, in the middle way betwixt Lucaoneam and the Peninſula; in length 13 leagues, and eight in breadth; memorable for giving name to the violent current interpoſing betwixt it and the Demy-Iſland, called the Streights of Bahama: yet not ſo ſtreight but that they are 16 miles in breadth, though of ſo forcible a Courſe, that many times neither wind nor Oars can prevail againſt it. 3. Guanahani, the moſt famous of all theſe Iſlands, becauſe the firſt that was diſcovered by Columbus, being then almoſt out of hope of proceeding further; who thereupon cauſed it to be called S. Saviours: well ſhaded at that time with Trees, full of freſh Springs, and very plentifull of Cotton; now overgrown with ſhrubs, and buſhes. 4. Gaanima, by Columbus when firſt diſcovered, called S. Maria de Conception; begirt about with Rocks and quick ſands, but otherwiſe of a pleaſant and fruitfull ſoyl, full of delicate Springs. Others there are to the number of 24. or thereabouts, whoſe names occur in many of our larger Maps: but being we find nothing of them but their very names, I ſhall not trouble my ſelf with the Nomenclature.

Of all in general it is ſaid that they obeyed their King ſo ſtrictly (for a King they had) that if he commanded them to leap down from a high Rock, they performed the ſame; though he gave no reaſon but his Will. The Women of ſo perfect beauty, that many of the bordering Nations forſook their own Countreys, to enjoy their Loves: their ſhape and beauty the more diſcernable, in regard not ſuffered to wear any thing till their purgations; nor after that but nets of Cotton, filled with Leaves of Herbs. But now, and long ſince, there are neither men, nor women, to be found in any of them: the people being long ſince waſted by the Spaniards in the Mines of Cuba and Hiſpaniola; or conſumed by Famine and Diſeaſes, or otherwiſe made away in Priſons, and by ſeveral Torments; to the number of a Million and 200000. as ſome have told us. And ſo we paſs unto the other ſide of thoſe Northern Countreys; oppoſite to Nova Francia, Virginia, and the main Land of Florida: that when we fall into the Countreys now poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, we may not wander out of them till this work be finiſhed; except it be to take a progreſs into ſome of the Iſlands, which cannot otherwiſe be viſited but by ſuch a ſtart.

OF CALIFORMIA.

CALIFORMIA in the large and general acception of it, containeth all thoſe Provinces of Mexicana, which lie on the Weſt-ſide of that Northern Peninſula, beyond Nova Gallicia, and New Spain: though in the ſtricter, limited to that Province only which lieth on the other ſide of a long and ſpacious Gulf, called Mer Vermiglio, and from hence the Bay of Califormia. But taking it in the largeſt ſenſe, it hath on the Weſt New Spain, and New Gallicia, and ſo unto thoſe undiſcovered parts which lie furtheſt North, to the Streights of Anian. So witneſſeth John de Laet, lib. 6. cap. 11. CALIFORMIA communiter dicitur quicquid terrarum Novæ Hiſpaniæ atque Galliciæ ad Occidentem objicitur, ad extremos Americæ Septentrionalis terminos, & Fretum quod vulgo Anian vocant. Limited in the ſtricter ſenſe and acception of it, to an Iſland (as it is now generally conceived to be) extended in a full length from North to South, on the Weſt hereof. So that for our more regular proceeding in the Chorography and Story of it, we muſt divide it into the Continent, and the Iſland: the Continent ſubdivided into the two large Provinces of, 1. Quivira, and 2. Cibola; the Iſland into 3. Califormia ſpecially ſo called, and 4. Nova Albion.

And firſt, the Continent of this part which we call Califormia, hath on the Eaſt ſome parts of Nova Gallicia; and beſides that, thoſe vaſt and undiſcovered Countreys, which lie on the Weſt-ſide of Canada and Virginia, on the oppoſite ſhore: bounded on the North with the unknown parts of this Mexicana; on the North-weſt, with the Streights of Anian, if ſuch Streights there be; on the Weſt, with the Sea interpoſing betwixt it and the Iſland, called Mer Vermiglio; and on the South, and South-weſt, with the reſt of Nova Gallicia, from which parted by a great River called Rio del Noort. A River which riſing in the 40. degree of Northern Latitude, firſt parteth Tignez a Province of Quivira, from that of New Mexico, one of the Provinces of Nova Gallicia; and after a long courſe falleth into the Sea, called Mer Vermiglio, above Cinoloa, another of the Provinces of that Diviſion. Divided as before was ſaid, into the two great Provinces of, 1. Quivira, and 2. Cibola.

1. QUIVIRA, taking up the moſt Northern parts of this ſide of America, is ſaid to be very plain and level; of few Trees, not many houſes, nor much ſtored of people; quite deſtitute of fruits and Corn, and yielding nothing for mans life but the fleſh of beaſts, which they eat raw, and ſwallow down in great bits without any chewing. The men apparelled in Bul-skins, from the head to the feet; the women, though in a cold Country, with no other garment than their hair, which they wear ſo long, that it ſerveth them in ſtead of a veil to hide their nakedneſs. They live in Hoords and companies, like the Hoords of the Tartars; not having any certain dwellings (except ſome chief men) but remove from one place to another, like the antient Nomades. Neer Nighbours unto Tartary, from whence (not being much diſtant from it) it is ſuppoſed that the Inhabitants firſt came; and from hence by degrees peopled all America.

The Country being full of herbage, breeds great ſtore of Cattel; differing not much in bigneſs from thoſe of Europe, but that they have an high bunch betwixt their ſhoulders; briſtled upon the back like Bores, with ſomewhat which reſembleth the mane in Horſes, and the beard in Goats; their legs ſhort, and clad with fetlocks, their horns ſhort, but ſharp; the whole Beaſt of an aſpect ſo horrid, that an Horſe will not venture near them, till well acquainted. Yet in theſe Beaſts lie all their Riches; theſe being to this people, as we ſay with us of our Ale to Drunkards, meat, drink, and cloth, and more too. For the Hides yield them Houſes, or at leaſt the covering of them; their bones, bodkins; their hair, thread; their ſinews, ropes; their horns, maws, and bladders, veſſels; their dung, fire; their Calveskins, budgets to draw and keep water; their blood, drink; and their fleſh, meat. There is thought to be ſome traffick from China, or Cathay, hither. For when Vaſques di Coronado conquered it, he ſaw in the further Sea certain ſhips, not of common making, which ſeemed to be well laden, and did bear in their prows the figures of Pelicans; which could not be conjectured to come from any Country but one of theſe two. I know ſome place this Country more within the Land: and others are ſo far from letting it look towards any part of the Sea, that they have laid it cloſe unto the back of Virginia. For my part, I have laid it along the Coaſts, upon good authority; though I deny not but that ſome parts hereof may be more remote. Or elſe to reconcile the difference, it may thus be ended; that the maritime parts being known by other names, the Inlands might retain more ſpecially the name of Quivira; as we have ſeen in many other Countreys before deſcribed.

And this I am the rather inclined to think, becauſe I find mention of three Provinces on the North of Cibola, but in the way unto Quivira; the one called Seio, the other called Cicuic, and the third Tignez: which I look upon as the maritime parts of the ſame one Country, but better peopled and frequented than the Inlands are, becauſe lying in the way of traffick. The principal Towns of which Provinces, 1. Acus, or Acuco, a ſmall Town, but ſituate in a ſtrong and defenſible place; about which groweth ſome ſtore of Cotton, which from the place the Natives call by the name of Acuco. 2. Tignez, on the banks of a River ſo called; inhabited by a ſtout and couragious people, who being reſolved not to fall alive into the hands of the Spaniards, when beſieged by Vaſques de Coronada, after they had held out above ſix weeks, laid all their houſhold-ſtuff and treaſure in an heap together, which they ſet on fire; and taking their Wives and Children into the midſt of their ranks, made a deſperate Sally on the Enemy. A reſolution worthy of a better fortune, moſt of them being ſlain in the fight, and the reſt trod under the Horſes feet, or drowned in paſſing over the River. Yet would not thoſe few which were left give up the Town, till it was fired about their ears, and no longer tenable: the Spaniard buying this victory (notwithſtanding the great odds of their Arms) with the loſs of moſt of their Horſes, the death of ſeven of their men, and the wounding of eighty. 3. Cicuick, a ſmall Burrough, but the chief of that Province, four dayes journey from Tignez: from whence the whole way unto Quivira, ſpecially ſo called, being 90. miles, hath in it neither ſtone nor Tree, nor any land-mark; inſomuch as the Spaniards were fain to make heaps of Cow duug, to ſerve for their direction in their coming back.

The firſt diſcovery of this Country is to be attributed to the diligence of Antonio de Mendoza, Vice-roy of Mexico, who deſirous to get wealth and honour by ſome new Adventures, imployed in the diſcovery of theſe Northern parts, Frier Marco de Niſa. By him and by a Negro which he had for his Guide, there was ſome light gotten of Cibola, the next Province to this; but ſo diſguiſed in lyes, and wrapt up in fictions, that that light was little more than darkneſs. Yet by that glimmering, Franciſco Vaſques di Coronado, in the year 1540. undertook the buſineſs; and ſped ſo well, that having made his way through Cibola, he took the Town of Tignez, as we heard before, and laid his way open to Quivira. Moved to a further journey by the report of the Salvages, (who deſired to haſten him out of their Country) telling him of the wealth of Tatarax, who reigned in the In-land parts of Quivira: a bearded man (thoſe of this Country wearing none) of a white complexion, and one who in his Chapel worſhipped a Croſs, and the Queen of Heaven. On went the Spaniards towards Quivira, and found out the Tatarax, a poor naked Prince; maſter of no more treaſure than a brazen plate hanging on his breaſt, and without any ſuch ſign of Chriſtianity as they did expect. So fruſtrated of all their hopes, and having got nothing but their labour for their pains, and the honour of a new diſcovery; with the loſs of many of their men, they returned to Mexico, An. 1542. Some Friers made bold to ſtay behind, but were all ſlain by the people of Quivira, except only one; who like Jobs meſſenger was left to carry news of the murder; The Spaniards never looking into theſe cold Countreys, where nothing elſe was to be gotten but blows, and hunger.

2. CIBOLA hath on the North, Quivira; on the South, and South-Eaſt parts New Gallicia, from which divided by the River called Rio del Nort, as before was ſaid; the Weſt-ſide of it waſhed with the Mer Virmiglio, interpoſed betwixt it and the Iſland, or Califormia ſpecially ſo called. By the Natives it is called Zuni.

The air hereof indifferently temperate, if not too much ſubject in the Winter, to froſts and ſnows. The Country for the moſt part level, rarely ſwelled with Hills, but thoſe very Rocky. No Trees that bear them any fruit; few Trees at all, except it be a Wood of Cedars, from which abundantly ſupplied both with fewel and timber: plenty of Maize, and ſmall white Peaſe, which they make their bread of; great ſtore of Veniſon, but they kill it only for the skin; ſome quantities of Sheep, known for ſuch by their Fleeces only, but otherwiſe as big each of them as an Horſe, or Ox, ſome of their Horns weighing fifty pounds. Of Lions, Bears, and Tygers ſo great a number, that they have more than enough for themſelves, and could well ſpare them to their Neighbours.

The people generally well limbed, and tall of ſtature, ingenious in reſpect of ſome other Salvages; and though naked except their privities only, or covered only with a Mantle, yet thoſe Mantles wrought in divers colours: which, with ſome quantity of Cotton which they have amongſt them, (none of it growing in their Country) ſhew them to be an induſtrious Nation, and to maintain a courſe of trade with ſome of their Neighbours. A further Argument of which is thoſe painted skins, which they have from Cicuique, or ſome other Country which lies towards the Ocean; my Author telling that they travel for them eight dayes journey towards the North: and probably enough may be ſome of thoſe Commodities, which the Inhabitants of the maritime Provinces of Quivira do receive from Cathay, or China, with which they are ſuppoſed to traffick, as before was ſaid. Like induſtry is noted in the women alſo, one of which will grind and knead more Maize in a day, than the women of Mexico do in four. In other things not differing from the reſt of the Salvages.

This Country was firſt made known to the Spaniards, by the Travels of Frier Marco de Niſa, employed on new Diſcoveries by Antonio de Mendoza, as before was ſaid. Leaving Couliacan, the moſt Northern Province of Nova Gallicia, he overcame a tedious Deſart four dayes journey long; at the end of which he met ſome people, who told him of a pleaſant Country four dayes journey further, unto which he went. And ſtaying at a place called Vacapa, he diſpatched the Negro, whom he took with him for his Guide, to ſearch towards the North; by whom he was advertiſed after four dayes abſence, that he had been informed of a large and wealthy Province called Cibola, a moneths journey thence: wherein were ſeven great Cities under the Government of one Princeſs, the houſes of which were built of ſtone, many ſtories high, the Lintels of their Doors adorned with Turquoiſes; with many other ſtrange reports of their markets, multitudes, and riches. But neither the Frier nor the Negro had the hap to ſee it: the Negro being killed on the very borders, and the Frier ſo terrified with the news, that he thought it better to return, and ſatisfie the Vice-Roy with ſome handſome Fiction, than put himſelf upon the danger of a further journey. To that end he enlarged and amplified the Reports which the Negro ſent him; gave to the Deſarts in his way the name of the Kingdoms of Tonteac, and Marata; aſcribed unto this laſt a great City called Abacu, once well inhabited, but at that time deſtroyed by Wars; to the other a more civil and well clothed people, than in other places. Inflamed with which reports, Vaſques de Coronado undertook the action, but found the Frier to be a Frier; nothing of moment true in all his Relations : the Kingdome of Marata to be found only in the Friers brains ; Tontear to be nothing but a great Lake, on whoſe banks had once been many Cottages, now conſumed by Wars. And as for the ſeven Cities of ſuch Wealth and Bigneſs, he found them to be ſeven poor Burroughs ; all ſituate within the compaſs of four leagues, which made up that ſo famous Kingdome which the Frier dreamt of. The biggeſt of them held about 500. Cottages ; the reſt of them not above half that number. One of them, leſt he might be ſaid to return without doing ſomething, he beſieged,and took ; but found it ſuch an hot piece of ſervice, that he was twice beaten down with ſtones as he ſcaled the Rampiers ; but having taken it at the laſt, he found in it great plenty of Maize to refreſh his Army, and cauſed the Town (conſiſting of 200 houſes, or thereabouts) to be called Granada, for ſome reſemblance which it had to that City in Spaim Such as have ſince indeavoured the Diſcovery of theſe North-weſt parts, and ſayled all along the ſhore hereof on Mer Vermiglio, having added hereunto the names of ſome points, or Promontories : known in the Maps by the name of Po de St. Claras, not far from the mouth, or influx of Rhio del Nort. 2. Las Plaias. 3. St. Michael. 4. Rio de Teron. 5. Laques del Oro bordering on Quivira ; and 6. Rey Coronado, on the Eaſt of that.

Betwixt this Region and Quivira ſpecially ſo called, lyeth a Countrey, which the ſaid Vaſques names Tucayan, memorable for the famous River of Huex ; on the banks whereof for the ſpace of 20 leagues ſtand 15 Burroughs well built, and furniſhed with Stoves, (if he hath not in this part of the Story outlied the Frier) as in other cold but more civil Countreys, againſt the extremities of Winter. This region ſtretching ſeven dayes journey to the River of Cicuique, I reckon to belong to the North-Eaſt parts of Cibola. As I do alſo the fruitfull Valley of Aroia de Corazones, which they paſſed in their way hither from Conliacan ; with the Town and Territory of Chichilticala, and the Valley of Nueſtro Sennora, or our Ladies Dale, in the South parts of it : not knowing otherwiſe what Province to referr them to.

Proceed we now unto the Iſland, the other general part of this Diviſion, parted from Cibola and New Gallicia, by a narrow Sea called Mer Vermiglio ; and by ſome the Golf of Califormia, environed on all other parts by the main Ocean. Extended in a great length from the 22th. degree of Northern Latitude, to the 42th. but the breadth not anſwerable. The moſt Northern point hereof, called Cabo Blance, of which little memorable. The moſt Southern, called the Cape of St. Lucas, remarkable for the great Prize there taken from the Spaniards by Captain Cavendiſh, in his Circumnavigation of the World, Anno 1587. Suppoſed in former times to have been joyned, in the North parts of it, above the Latitude of 27. to the reſt of the Continent ; and ſo deſcribed in moſt of our later Maps, till the year 1626. and after that in the Chart, or Map of John de Laet, Anno 1633. which I wonder at : himſelf affirming, that in many of the old Maps it was made an Iſland ; lib 6. cap.11. and that he had ſeen a fair Map in Parchment, a very fair and Ancient Draught, Quæ Californiam in ingentis Inſulæ modum, a Continente divideret, in which it was expreſſed for a ſpacious Iſland, lib.6.cap.17. The reaſon of the Errour was, that thoſe who firſt indeavoured the Diſcovery of it, ſayling up the Sea of Mer Vermiglio, found it to grow narrower and narrower towards the North ; till it ſeemed to be no bigger than ſome mighty River : but that of ſuch a violent current, that no Boat was able to paſs upwards with wind, or Oar, unleſs haled up with Cords by the ſtrength of Men. And taking it to be a River, they gave it the name of Rhio de Bona Guia ; known by that name, and continued in the opinion of being a River, till the year 1620. or thereabouts. At what time ſome Adventurers beating on theſe Coaſts, fell accidently upon a ſtraight but violent paſſage, on the North hereof, which brought them with a ſtrong current into Mer Vermiglio ; diſcovering by that Accident, that the waters falling into that Sea, was not a River, as formerly had been ſuppoſed, but a violent breaking in of the Northern Ocean ; by conſequence that this part of Califormia was not a Demi-Iſland, or Peninſula, but a perfect Iſland. And looking on it as an Iſland, we have divided it into Nova Albion, and Califormia ſpecially ſo called.

1. And firſt Califormia ſpecially ſo called, containeth the Southern parts hereof, as far as to the Latitude of 38. where it bordereth on Nova Albion. Of which Countrey though ſo near to New Spain, and New Gallicia, and though diſcovered ſo long ſince, we yet know but little : the Spaniards either wanting men for new Plantations, or finding ſmall incouragements here to invite them to it. Furniſhed on the Sea coaſts with great plenty both of Fiſh and Fowl, which they find in great Iſlands of Weeds, floating on the Seas ; and more within the Land, with a kind of Beaſts haired like a Goat, and with teats like a Cow, but otherwiſe reſembling Deer ; which they kill with their Dogs. Some Mountains in it ſaid to caſt Fire Aſhes, which the Spaniards for that reaſon call Cacofogo. The people numerous, and thick ſet ; inſomuch that on the banks of the ſuppoſed River of Bona Guia, were numbred three and twenty Nations, all of ſeveral Languages. In their perſons like the reſt of the Salvages, but of different Dreſſes. Some of them Painting their faces all over, ſome half way only, other with painted Vizards reſembling faces : holes in their Noſtrils, for their Pendants ; the tips of their Eares loaded, if not over-loaded, with the bones of Fiſhes hanging at them. A Girdle about their waſte, to which they faſten a bunch of Feathers that hang down behind them like a Tail : the women uſing the like bunches before them alſo. Their chief God the Sun, (as that of Cibola is the Water) which they moſt affectionately Worſhip, as the cauſe of the increaſe of their fruits and plants. Joyned in commiſſion with which God, they were taught by Alarcon a Spaniard to Worſhip a woodden Croſs (the more irrational Idolatry of the two) which he cauſed to be erected at his coming away ; with inſtructions to kneel before it every morning, at the firſt riſing of the Sun : ſo teaching them to Worſhip their two Idols at once, or to tranſlate their devotions from the Sun a Creature of God's, to a plain woodden Croſs (of which they knew nothing but the form) the work of a Carpenter.

It is alſo told of this people, that each family is ordered by the Father of it, without other government: yet ſo well managed, that they allowed but one wife to a man, and puniſhed Adultery with death; the Maids not ſuffered to converſe, or talk with men before their marriage, but to abide at home and work; the Widows not to marry again, till they had mourned at leaſt half a year for the death of their Huſbands. Matters more ſavouring an Utopian Common-Wealth, than a Califormian.

Places of moſt obſervation in it. 1. The Capes of S. Clara, and S. Lucas; the firſt on the South-Eaſt point of the Peninſula towards New Gallicia; the other on the South-Weſt towards Aſia. 2 S. Croſſes, (Sinus S. Crucis) a capacious and convenient Haven near the Cape of S. Clara; ſo called becauſe diſcovered upon Holy Rood day. 3 Cabo di las Plaias, more within the Bay; ſo named, becauſe the ſhore ſhewed in little Hillocks, without graſs, or ſhrubs; the Spaniſh word ſignifying as much. 4 Cabo Boxo, towards the bottome of the Gulf, (from whence the Land on the other ſide may be eaſily ſeen) in the Latitude of 29. 5 S. Andrews, a convenient Haven, and not far off an Iſland of the ſame name, with ſome Cottages in it. 6. S. Thome, an Iſland of 25 leagues in compaſs, at the mouth of the Gulf; riſing towards the South in an high Mountain, under which a convenient Road for ſhipping, the Sea being thereabout 25 fathoms. Then on the other ſide towards the Sea, we have 7 S. Abad, a convenient Haven, ſurrounded with a Countrey which ſeemed Rich and Pleaſant. 8 Cape Trinidado, a Promontory well known to Sea-men. 9 Cape de Cedros, ſo called from the Cedars growing near it, in the Latitude of 28. and 15 minutes; with an Iſland not far off of the ſame name alſo. 10 Cape Enganno, in the Latitude of 31. 11. Puebla de las Canoas, ſo named from the multitude of Boats, (by themſelves called Canoes) which the people uſed; four degrees more Northward than that Cape. And 12 Cabo de Galera, ſo named from the reſemblance which it had to an Hat, in the Latitude of 36. But theſe two placed by John de Laet within the Countrey of Seyo, one of the Provinces of Quivira. Underſtand here, that theſe are only the names of places, not of Towns, or Villages, (for whether there be any ſuch, I am yet unſatisfied:) and that there are many other Promontories, Bayes, Rivers and Iſlands on both ſides of this Region, which I find no names for.

The firſt diſcovery of this Countrey we owe to Ferdinando Cortez (of whom more hereafter) who in the year 1534. furniſhed out two Ships from the Haven of St. Jago in the Weſtern ſhores of Hiſpania Nova, to ſearch theſe Seas: who making ſome ſmall progreſs in it, encouraged him the next year to purſue it in perſon; and paſſing up the Gulf as high as to the River of S. Peter, and Paul, (ſo called, becauſe diſcovered on the 29 of June, the Annual feaſt of thoſe Apoſtles) for want of Victuals and other neceſſary proviſions, returned back again. The buſineſs having ſlept a while, was in the year 1539. awakened by Franciſco de Ulloa, one that had accompanied Cortez the time before; who did not only ſearch to the bottome of the Gulf, but having throughly canvaſſed all the Eaſtern ſhores, he turned his courſe, and made as fortunate a Diſcovery alſo of the Weſtern Coaſts. Landing, he took poſſeſſion of the Countrey, with the wonted ceremonies, for the King of Spain; and in the place ſet up a Croſs to ſerve as a remembrance of his being there. After him followed Ferdinando the Alarcon, who diſcovered many leagues up the courſe of the ſuppoſed River of Buena Guia; where Naguacatus, one of the Chiefs of their Clans, or Tribes, did ſubmit unto him; advancing ſo far towards the North, that at the laſt he heard news of Sibala; but unprovided at that time for a journey thither. And on the other ſide, Rodorico Cabrillo, in the year 1642. coaſting along the Weſtern ſhores of this Countrey, diſcovered two ſmall Iſlands beyond Cape Galera; the one of which he called S. Lukes, and the other the Iſland of Poſſeſſion; and beyond them a fair Haven, which he called Sardinas. But yet not finding what they looked for, which was Gold and Silver; and hungry honour yielding but a poor ſubſiſtence; the further ſearch of theſe Countries was quite laid aſide; almoſt as little known now, as before Columbus firſt ſet ſail upon New Diſcoveries.

4. NOVA ALBION formerly conceived to be a part of the Continent, hath of late times been found to have taken up but ſome part of this Iſland; lying about the 38 degree of Latitude, and ſo Northwards as far as to Cape Blanco, as they call it now. Diſcovered by Sir Francis Drake in his Circumnavigation of the World, An. 1577. and by him named Nova Albion, in honour of England, his own Country, which was once called Albion.

The Countrey abundantly repleniſhed with Herds of Deer, graſing upon the Hills by thouſands: as alſo with a kind of Conies, in their feet ſomewhat like a Want, and on each ſide a Sack where they keep ſuch victuals as they cannot eat. The fleſh of theſe Conies ſerves the people for food; and of their ſkins, the Kings, or Chiefs of their ſeveral Tribes, make their Royal robes. The men quite naked; the women with a piece of Mat inſtead of an Apron, chaſte, and obedient to their Huſbands. Their Houſes made of Turf and Oſier, ſo wrought together, as ſerves to keep them from the cold; in the midſt whereof they have an Hearth where they make fire, about which they lye along upon Beds of Bulruſhes. What Towns they have, and whether they have any, or not, and by what names called, if they have any, muſt be referred to a further Diſcovery: there being nothing to that purpoſe delivered hitherto. And yet not ſeated ſo far North, but that it may be capable of a further light, if any Noble Undertakers would adventure on it.

The Engliſh were no ſooner landed, but the Inhabitants preſented themſelves before the General, with preſents of Feathers, and Kalls of Net-work made of Bull-ruſhes; which he received and requited with great humanity. The news of their Arrival being carried further, one of their Kings thought fit to beſtow a viſit on them. A perſon of a goodly ſtature, attired in Cony-ſkins, with many tall men attending on him; one going before him with a Mace, at which hanged three Crowns, with as many Chains; the Chains of bone, but the Crowns of Knit-work, made of Feathers, very ingeniouſly compoſed. After him followed many of the common ſort, every one having his face painted with white, black, and ſome other colours ; and every one with ſome preſent, or other in their hands, even the very boyes. Being brought into the Generals preſence, the Mace-bearer made a long Speech, which might be well meant, though not underſtood : and that being ended, the King cauſed the Crown to be put upon the Generals head, and the three Chains about his neck ; the common people offering ſacrifices about the Fields, in great ſolemnity. Not to be interdicted thoſe ſuperſtitions, though the Engliſh (whom they took for Gods) ſeemed offended at them. Finally, after much kindneſs expreſſed on both ſides, the General promiſing in the name of the Queen of England, to take them into his protection ; he cauſed a Pillar to be erected in the place : on which he faſtned the Arms of England, the Queens name, and his own ; and ſo returned into his ſhips. But the Country lying ſo far off that no benefit could redound by it to the Engliſh Nation, but the honour of the firſt Diſcovery, the name of Nova Albion by little and little was forgotten, and at laſt quite left out of the Maps, or Charts ; only a point, or Promontory, by the name of Po de Franciſco Draco, being left unto us to preſerve his memory. And though we have cauſed the name of Nova Albion to be reſtored unto the Maps, as it was before : yet we muſt let the Reader know, that the name of New Albion hath been given lately with as much propriety, but more hopes of profit and advantage, to that part of Virginia, which lyeth betwixt Mary-Land and New-England, as before was noted.

Oppoſite to Cape Blanco, and the extreme North parts of America, the ſuppoſed Kingdome of ANIAN, from whence the Streights of Anian, which are thought by ſome to part America from Aſia, do derive their name, is conceived to lye. Suppoſed, and ſuppoſed only, for not certainly known : the very being of ſuch a Kingdome, and ſuch Streights, being much ſuſpected.

OF NOVA GALLICIA.

NOVA GALLICIA is bounded on the Eaſt and South with Nova Hiſpania, or New Spain; on the Weſt, with the River Buena Guia, and the Gulf of Califormia; the Countries beyond it on the North not diſcovered hitherto. So called becauſe of ſome reſemblance which it was thought to have to Gallicia, a Province of Spain, in Europe; the word Nova being added to it for diſtinctions ſake.

It is ſituate between the 18th. and 28th. degrees of the Northern Latitude, which meaſured from the Port of the Nativity (by the Spaniards called Natividad, and contractedly Navidad) where it confineth on New Spain, to the moſt Northern border of Cinaloa, makes 300 leagues: the breadth hereof, for ſo much as is poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, but an hundred only. But taking in New Biſcay, and Nova Mexicana into the Accompt, the breadth will be greater than the length.

The Air hereof generally very temperate, but more inclined to heat than cold; many times ſubject unto Thunders and great ſtorms of rain; but for the moſt part of ſo ſound a conſtitution, that the Inhabitants attain to a good old Age; contagious diſeaſes ſeldome known amongſt them. The ground by conſequence ſomewhat of the drieſt; if not moiſtned with the morning Dews, which fall very frequently; and whether by the temperature of the Air, or Soil, apt to produce a kind of Gnat (which the Latines call Cimices) affirmed to be as big as a bean, which by their ſtings do very often plague the people, and raiſe bliſters on their bodies as big as Walnuts.

The Countrey more Mountainous than plain, and in moſt parts ſandy; Quaries of ſtone in many places, but little Marble, or any other ſtone of value. Good ſtore of Mines of Braſs and Silver, few of Gold, or Iron; and amongſt all their Metals a great mixture of Lead. The ſoil ſo rich that it yields 60 meaſures of Wheat for one; and for one of Maize, above two hundred: the Rivers plentifull of Fiſh, and the Woods of Beaſts; great ſtore of Bees without ſtings, which make their Honey in the Foreſts without other Hives. And as for Apples, Pears, Citrons, Figgs, Malcotons, and other Europæan Fruits, they thrive better here than they do in Spain, except the Cherry and the Olive; of which the laſt is moſt an end undermined by Emmets; and the firſt thruſts out ſuch an harveſt of Leaves (occaſioned by the natural rankneſs of the ground) that they ſeldom come to their perfection.

The people wavering and inconſtant, apt upon any diſcontent to forſake their houſes, betake themſelves unto the Woods, and many times to return to their antient Barbariſm. Crafty, and docile even in matters which concern Religion: but ſloathfull and impatient of any labour, to which not to be hired but for very great wages. Much given to ſinging, dancing, and ſometimes to drinking; and were it not that they loved their Liquor, few of them would betake themſelves to the cares of Husbandry. Of ſtature reaſonably tall; their Garments for the moſt part a ſhirt of Cotton, with a Mantle over it, faſtned with two buckles about their ſhoulders. They dwell in Villages and Towns, according to the greatneſs of their ſeveral Tribes: thoſe Tribes commanded by their Chiefs, who ſucceed hereditarily; but ſubject to the Judges and other Officers of the King of Spain. As for the Spaniards who here dwell, they betake themſelves generally to Merchandize, and the ſearch of Metals; ſome few to Husbandry and graſing, but make not the beſt uſe which they might of the Countrey: For though here be great plenty both of Sugar-Canes, and of Coccineel, yet they neglect to refine the one, and attend the ordering of the other; finding perhaps an eaſier, or a greater profit in the other Commodities.

The Mountain of moſt note in all this Countrey, is that betwixt Guadalaira and Zacatecas; a league in height, but of ſuch a precipice withall, that no Horſe nor Cattel can aſcend it: their other Hils Rocky, but cloathed with woods, full of vaſt Pines, large Oaks, and great ſtore of Wolves. The River of moſt name is that called Bazania, which riſing out of the Lake of Mechuacan in Nova Hiſpania, falls down a Cataract about four leagues from Guadalaiara, of ten fathoms deep, and ſo tumbleth into Mare del Zur: in no place fordable, nor having any paſſage over it but on Reeds and Rafts, on which the paſſenger ſitteth with his Commodities, his Horſe ſwimming by; nor ſafe at any time, and at moſt times dangerous. Some Lakes here be of 20. ſome of 12. leagues compaſs; environed with rich Paſtures on every ſide. Thoſe of leſs note ſhall be remembred in their proper places.

It comprehends the Provinces of 1. Cinaloa. 2. Conliacan. 3. Xaliſco, and 4. Guadalaiara; on the Weſtern ſhores. 5. Zacatecas. 6. New Biſcay. 7. Nova Mexicana, more within the Land. Of all theſe ſomewhat ſhall be ſaid, though of each but little.

1. CINALOA, is the moſt Northern Province of New Gallicia, bounded upon the Weſt, with the River of Buena Guia, and ſome part of the Bay of Califormia; on the Eaſt, with a long chain of Mountains, called the Hills of Tepecſuan; on the North, with the South parts of Cibola; on the South, with Conliacan.

The Air for the moſt part clear and healthy, the ſoil fat and fruitfull, productive of Maize, Pulſe, a ſort of long Peaſe which the Latines call Phaſeoli, but we have no proper Engliſh name for; of which abundantly plentifull. Great ſtore of Cotton wool, wherewith both ſexes are apparelled. Well watered with the Rivers, 1. Petatlan. 2. Tamochala. 3. Paſcua. 4. Taquim; of no long courſe, all of them riſing from the Hills of Teperſuam, and thoſe but 36 leagues diſtant from the Sea ſhores. By reaſon of theſe Rivers here are very rich Paſtures, which breed great ſtore of Kine, Oxen, and other Cattel.

The people are generally tall, higher than the Spaniards by a hand breadth, warlike and ſtrong, not conquered by the Spaniards without great difficulty; their Arms a Bow and poiſoned Arrows, with great maſſie Clubs. Their Garments for the moſt part of Cotton-wool; their hair nouriſhed to a great length, which the men tye up in a knot, but the Women ſuffer to hang down to the full length of it. Both Sexes at the firſt coming of the Spaniards thither, without cloaths at all, but to hide their ſhame; moſt miſerably poor, worſhippers of the Sun, and not a few Cannibals amongſt them.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. S. Philip and Jacob, ſituate on the bank of a River, about 42 leagues from the Town of Couliacan, but of no great note. 2. S. Johns de Cinaloa, a Colony of the Spaniards planted here long ſince; and re-inforced by a ſupply brought thither in the year 1554. by Franciſco de Tharra; ſcarce able to defend themſelves from the old Inhabitants, who ever and anon diſturb them with a freſh Alarm. Beſides theſe here are only ſome ſcattered Villages, and thoſe not many: the Spaniards finding only 25 old Forts in all the Country, when they firſt made themſelves Maſters of it, under the Conduct of Nonnez de Guzman, Anno 1542. People every where ſubmitting without any reſiſtance, or if they gathered to an head, ſoon diſperſed again. For what could naked men do againſt an Army?

2. COULIACAN, or CULUCAN, lieth on the South of Cinaloa, coaſting along the Bay of Califormia, which it hath on the Weſt; and part of New Biſcay, on the Eaſt. The Country well provided of fruits, inferiour unto none for all ſorts of proviſions; and not without ſome Mines of Silver found out by the Spaniards. The chief Rivers of it, 1. Rio de Mucheras, or the River of Women, in the North part of the Province; ſo called becauſe the Spaniards found there more women than men, occaſioning the opinion that it was inhabited by Amazons. 2. Rio de Sal, a goodly River; both ſides whereof are very well peopled. 3. Piaſtla, more towards Xaliſco.

The people not much different from the reſt of Gallicia, ſave that their Women were more handſom, both for dreſs and perſonage: all cloathed in Garments of Cotton-wool, when firſt known to the Spaniards; and yet the men not free from the Sin of Sodom. Their houſes neatly thatched with ſtraw; and over the Lintels of the Doors ſome Paintings, as ſhameleſs as the very fowleſt of Aretines Poſtures. Ignorant of Gold, which they had no Mines of; but of late times acquainted, to their coſt, with Silver; which they are compelled to dig, and refine for the Spaniards.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Piaſtla, on the River ſo called, about a dayes journey from the Sea; well built, and artificially contrived in reſpect of others; never recovered of that blow which it had from the Spaniards, who in the Conqueſt of this Country waſted all before them. 2. Quinola, near Rio des Mugeres. 3. Quatrabarrios, an old Town, but new named by the Spaniards, becauſe it conſiſted of four parts. 4. El Leon, an old Burrough which from a Lyon there found, had this new name alſo. 5. Couliacan, on a River ſo named, once the chief of this Province. 4. S. Michael, on the River of Women, built by Nonnez de Guzman, in the Latitude of 25. but afterwards deſerted, or removed rather to a fitter place: and now fixed in the Valley of Harroba, two leagues from the Sea, in a flouriſhing and wealthy ſoyl both for Corn and Paſturage. The whole Country conquered by the Spaniards, An. 1531. under Nonnez de Guzman, moſt barbarouſly burning down the Towns, and deſtroying the people; as if they came not to ſubdue, but root out the Nation.

3. XALISCO, or GALESCO, as ſome Writers call it, hath on the North, Couliacan; on the South, New Spain; on the Eaſt, the Province of Guadalaiara; on the Weſt, the large Bay of Califormia. So called from Xaliſco the chief Town of it, when ſubdued by the Spaniards.

The ſoyl hereof very fit for Maize, which it yields good ſtore of, but not often herbage good for Cattel; which is reckoned for their greateſt want. The North parts called Chiametla, of the two moſt fruitfull, and better peopled; having in it ſtore of Wax and Honey, with ſome Mines of Silver. The people formerly Man-eaters, and much given to quarrel; from which Reformed ſince their Converſion to the Goſpel. Tenacious ſtill of one of their antient Cuſtoms, which is to carry the ſmalleſt burden upon their ſhoulders, and not under their arms; which to do they think very much miſ-becoming.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1. S. Sebaſtians. 2. Rio de Spiritu Sancto, and 3. the great and famous River of Barania, ſpoken of before. Upon the banks of which are ſituate their moſt principal Towns, viz. 1. Xaliſco, giving name to the whole Province, and to a large Promontory, called by the Spaniards Sierra de Xaliſco, thruſting it ſelf into the Bay of Califormia, over againſt the Iſlands called the Three Maries; the City taken and deſtroyed by Nonnez de Guzman, An. 1530. 2. Compoſtella, now the chief City of the Country, and a Biſhops See; founded by the ſaid Nonnez de Guzman, An. 1531. when he had fully conquered the Country: by whom peopled with Spaniards, and by him called Del Spiritu Santo. But founded in ſo ill a place, and ſo bad an air, deſtitute both of food for men, and graſs for horſes, as plainly ſhewed him to have better judgement in Souldiery than in Architecture. 3. Purification, a ſmall Burrough on the Sea-ſide, and in the extremity of this Country towards Nova Hiſpania, near the Port of Natividad. 4. S. Sebaſtian in Chiametla, on the River ſo called, firſt built by Franciſco de Tharra above mentioned: who having found hereabouts ſome rich Mines of Silver, brought hither in the year 1554. a new Spaniſh Colony; and building houſes for his Miners in convenient places, occaſioned the whole Tract to be called de Tharra.

4. GUADALAIARA hath on the Weſt, Xaliſco; on the Eaſt and South, ſome parts of Nova Hiſpania; on the North, the Province of Zacatecas: well watered with the River Barania, which runneth through the midſt thereof, ſome of his by-ſtreams moiſtning the other parts. The Country very wealthy in Mines of Silver, plentiful of Maize, and fortunate in the production of Wheat and ſuch other fruits, as were brought hither out of Europe. The Character of the people we have before, applied in general to all the Natives of New Gallicia, but moſt peculiar unto theſe.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Guadalaiara, ſo called with reference to a Town of that name in New Caſtile, and giving name unto the Province, ſituate on the banks of the River Barania, or ſome branch thereof, in a ſweet air, and a moſt rich and pleaſing ſoyl; where founded by Nonnez de Guzman, An. 1531. when he had perfected his Conqueſt: better adviſed in the choice of the place, than in that of Compoſtella before mentioned. A City of ſo good eſteem, that it paſſeth for the Metropolis of all New Gallicia; honoured with the Courts of Judicature, the reſidence of the Kings Treaſurers, and a Biſhops See, removed hither from Compoſtella, An. 1570. Beautified on this laſt occaſion with a fair Cathedral, a Convent of Franciſcans, and another of Auguſtine Friers. 2. Del Spiritu Santo, built by the ſaid Nonnez in that part of this Country, which is called Tepique: but not elſe obſervable. 3. Sancta Maria de los Lagos, built by the ſame founder, 30 leagues on the Eaſt of Guadalaiara; and the beſt defence of all this Province againſt the Chichimicas, a barbarous and untamed people on the North and Eaſt parts of this Country: who harbouring themſelves in the thickeſt of the Woods, and ſome unknown Caves, do many times prey upon the Country; which they would utterly deſtroy, if not thus repreſſed.

5. ZACATECAS is abounded on the South, with Guadalaiara; on the North, with New Biſcay; on the Weſt, with Culnacan, and ſome part of Xaliſco; on the Eaſt, with Panuco, one of the Provinces of New Spain.

The Country of a different nature. In the weſt parts called properly Los Zacatecas, rich in Mines of Silver, (no one Province more) but deſtitute of Wheat, Maize, Water, and all other proviſions; as if it were deſigned for ſome wealthy Miſer, who could live upon the ſight of Treaſure. The Eaſtern parts properly called Uxitipa, not ſo well furniſhed with Silver, but moſt abundantly provided with all ſorts of fruits; their Wooods repleniſhed with Deer, their Fields with Corn, and every Tree giving entertainment to ſome Bird, or other: in a word, nothing wanting in it, either for neceſſity, or pleaſure. Of the people, I find nothing ſingular, but that they are affirmed to be more induſtrious than the moſt of their Neighbours; whether by force, or nature (the Spaniards compelling them to drudge in their Silver-mines) I determine not.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Los Zacatecas, neighboured by moſt wealthy Mines, 40 leagues on the North of Guadalaiara; inhabited by about 500. Spaniards, who have here a Convent of Franciſcans. 2. S. Martins, 27. leagues from Zacatecas, the Mines whereof were firſt opened by Franciſco de Tharra, before mentioned; who with many ſlaves, and all things neceſſary for a War, was ſent upon that errand by Lewis de Velaſco, then Vice-Roy of Mexico, An. 1554. The Town inhabited by a Colony of 400. Spaniards, beſides women and children. 3. S. Lukes, and 4. De Avinno, built amongſt Mines as wealthy as thoſe before, by the ſame De Tharra: as alſo was 5. Erena, a ſmall Town, but of the ſame eſtate for Silver; diſtant from Zacatecas 25 leagues towards the North-weſt. 6. Nombre di Dios, in the moſt Northern parts of this Country, 68 leagues from Guadalaiara; the foundation of the ſame De Tharra. Who having conquered the Natives, and quieted them after ſome Rebellions by gentle uſage, built this Town in a pleaſant and fruitfull ſoyl: and having got the Government of the Countreys which he had diſcovered, drew hither ſo many of the Spaniards and chief men of the Natives, by granting them the propriety of ſome Silver-mines, that it became the chief and beſt peopled Town of all this Province. 7. Durango, in the valley of Guadiana, about eight leagues diſtant from Nombre di Dios, peopled by a Colony of Spaniards conducted thither by Alfonſo Pacheco, at the appointment of De Tharra, to whom the Spaniards are indebted for all this treaſure. 8. Xeres de Frontera, firſt built for the repreſſing of ſome of the Salvages, who uſed to infeſt the borders towards Guadalaiara, during the Regency of the Marques of Villa Maurique, who then commanded in New Spain.

As for UXITIPA, it belonged once unto the Province of Panuco, ſubdued by Lopez de Mendoza, imployed therein by Nonnez de Guzman, An. 1529. at that time Governour of that Province. Diſmembred from it ſince the conqueſt of Zacatecas, and made a Member of the Præfecture of New Gallicia. The chief Town of it called S. Lewis, built in a pleaſant Valley by the ſaid Pacheco, and by him peopled with a Colony of Spaniards: the Town not diſtant from Panuco above twenty leagues.

6. NOVA BISCAIA, or New Biſcay, hath on the South, Los Zacatecas; on the Weſt, Cinalca; on the North, Nova Mexicana; the Countreys towards the Eaſt not diſcovered hitherto. So called by Franciſco de Tharra, by whom firſt ſubdued, from the near neighbourhood which it had unto Nova Gallicia, of which ſince reckoned for a part.

The Country ſubject in the Winter to great froſts and ſnows; but notwithſtanding well provided for all things neceſſary; and wonderfully enriched with Mines of Silver. They have alſo ſome of Lead, which ſerve very fitly for the melting and purifying of the other; uſed to this purpoſe not alone in theſe Mines of New Biſcay, but in thoſe alſo of New Spain. The people reſolute and ſtout, not conquered at the firſt attempt, nor won ſo much by force, as by fair perſwaſions.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1. S. Barbara, and 2. S. Johns, about three leagues diſtant; built only for the benefit of the Mines adjoyning. 3. Ende, the furtheſt Town which the Spaniards have towards the North; of whom a Colony was there planted (by reaſon of the adjoyning Mines) by Roderico del Rio, who did alſo fortifie it, by the direction of De Tharra, under whom a Colonel. Diſtant from S. Barbara, and S. John about twenty leagues, and an hundred and twenty leagues from Los Zacatecas. More North by ſeventy leagues at leaſt, and within this Region, but not within the power of the Spaniard, are ſaid to be thoſe four great Towns which the Spaniards call Las Quatro Cienagas; but I have nothing of them certain.

This Country firſt ſubdued by Franciſco de Ibarra, who after he had built Durango in the North parts of Las Zacatecas, and aſſured that Province, advanced with a Troop of 130. horſe, for the Diſcovery and Conqueſt of his Northern Neighbours. Encountred at the firſt more with hunger and thirſt, than with any oppoſition of the Inhabitants; inſomuch that they were fain to eat their Horſes: and afterwards by the Rebellion of the Natives, who killed the greateſt part of ſuch Horſes as were left uneaten. But not diſcouraged herewith, nor with the many difficulties which he found in his way, being compelled to hew his paſſage thorow the Woods by the ſwords of his Souldiers; he prevailed at laſt, and having ſetled it in peace, returned by the way of Cinoloa, which he alſo Conquered; and planted there a Colony in the Town of S. Johns, as was ſaid before.

7. NOVA MEXICANA, is bounded on the South, with New Biſcay; on the Weſt, with Quivira; the Countries on the North, and Eaſt, not diſcovered hitherto; though ſome extend it Eaſtwards as far as Florida. Extended 250. Leagues from the Town and Mines of S. Barbara, and how much beyond that none can tell; the Relations of this Country being ſo uncertain, and indeed incredulous, that I dare ſay nothing poſitively of the ſoil or People, but much leſs of the Towns and Cities which are ſaid to be in it. So named by Antonio de Eſpeio, a Citizen of Mexico in New Spain, by whom diſcovered and ſubdued.

For firſt, they tell us of the People, that they are of great ſtature (and that like enough, but not ſo probable) that they have the Art of dreſſing Chamois and other Leather, as well as the beſt Leather-Dreſſer in all Flanders: or that they have Shoes and Boots ſo well ſewed and ſoaled, that no Shoo-Maker in all S. Martins could do it better. Then for their Towns, that they are very fair and goodly, the houſes well built of Lime and Stone, ſome of them four Stories, and in moſt of them Stoves for the Winter Seaſon. The Streets even, and ordered in an excellent Manner. Particularly they tell us of a Town called, 1. Chia, one of the five chief Towns of the Province of Cuames, which is ſaid to contain eight Market-Places, and all the houſes to be plaiſtered and painted in moſt curious Manner. 2. Of Acoma, that it is ſituate on the top of a Rock, a great Town, yet no way unto it but by Ladders; and in one place a pair of ſtairs, but exceeding narrow, hewn out of the Rock; exceedingly well fortified by Nature, (they ſay true in that, if any things were true which they tell us of it) and all their water kept in Ciſterns (but no body can tell from whence they have it.) 3. Of Conibas, on a Lake ſo called, the City ſeven Leagues long, two broad, (a ſecond Ninive) but the Houſes ſcatteringly built amongſt Hills and Gardens, which takes up a great deal of the room: Inhabited by a People of ſuch ſtrength and courage, that the Spaniards only faced it, and ſo went away. Much of this ſtuff I could afford you, but by this taſt we may conjecture of the reſt of the Feaſt.

The Country firſt diſcovred by Auguſtino Royaz, a Franciſcan Frier, Anno 1580. who out of Zeal to plant the Goſpel in the North, accompanied with two other Friers of that Order, and eight Souldiers, undertook the Adventure. But one of the Monks being killed by the Salvages, the Souldiers plaid the Poltrons, and gave over the Action. On their return, Beltram a Frier of the ſame Order, (from whoſe mouth we muſt have the former Fictions) deſirous to preſerve the lives of his Fellows which ſtaid behind, encouraged one Antonio de Eſpeio, a Native of Corduba, but a Citizen of Mexico, to engage in ſuch an holy Cauſe: who raiſing a Band of 150. horſe, accompanied with many Slaves, and Beaſts of Carriage, undertook the buſineſs. I omit the many Nations of the Conchi, Paſnugates, Toboſi, Patarabyes, Tarrahumares, Tepoanes, and many other as hard names, which he paſſed thorow in his way. But coming at the laſt to a great River which he called Del Nort, there he made a ſtand; cauſed the Country on both ſides of it to be called Nova Mexicana, and a City to be built which he called New Mexico, ſituate in the 37th. degree of Northern Latitude, and diſtant from old Mexico five hundred Leagues: the name ſince changed to that of S. Fogye, but ſtill the Metropolis of that Province, the Reſidence of the Governour, and a pretty Garriſon conſiſting of two hundred and fifty Spaniards. Some other Towns he found at his coming hither, viz. 2. Socorro, ſo called by the Spaniards becauſe of that ſuccour and relief they found there for their half ſtarved Bodies. 3. Senecu, 4. Pilabo, and 5. Seviletta, old Towns but new Chriſtened by the Spaniards, when the Inhabitants thereof did embrace the Goſpel; each of them beautified with a Church. 6. S. Johns, built afterwards in the year 1599. by John de Onnate, who with an Army of five thouſand followed the ſame way which Eſpeio went; and having got a great deal of Treaſure, laid it up in this place, that it might be no incumbrance to him in his Advance. This is the moſt I dare relie on for this Country: And this hath no ſuch Wonders in it, but what an eaſie Faith may give credit to: though I had rather believe the Friers whole Relations, than go thither to diſprove any part thereof.

OF NOVA HISPANIA.

NOVA HISPANIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with a fair and large Arm of the Sea, called the Bay of New Spain, and the Golf of Mexico; on the Weſt, with parts of Nova Gallicia, and Mare del Zur; on the North, with the reſt of New Gallicia, ſome part of Florida, and the Golf; on the South, with Mare del Zur, or the South-Sea only. So called with relation to Spain in Europe, as the chief Province of that Empire in this New World; with reference to which the Kings of Spain call themſelves Reges Hiſpaniorum, in the Plural number.

It extendeth from the 15th. Degree of Latitude to the 26th. excluſively, i. meaſuring it on the Eaſt-ſide by the Bay of Mexico to the North of Panuco; but ſix degrees leſs, meaſuring it on the Weſt-ſide to the Port of Natividad, where it joyneth with Gallicia Nova. Or making our accompt by miles, it is in breadth from Panuco unto Mare del Zur, 200. Spaniſh leagues, or 600. Italian miles; but hardly half as much on the other ſide. The length hereof from the Eaſt point of Jucutan, to the borders of Gallicia Nova, 1200. Italian miles, or 400. leagues; which is juſt double to the breadth.

The air exceeding temperate, though ſituate wholly under the Torrid Zone: the heats thereof much qualified by thoſe cooling blaſts, which fan it from the Sea on the three ſides of it; and by thoſe frequent ſhowres which fall continually in June, July, and Auguſt, the hotteſt ſeaſons of the year. Abundantly enriched with inexhauſtible Mines of Gold and Silver, ſome of Braſs and Iron; plenty of Coco-nuts, of which we have ſpoke before; great ſtore of Caſſia; ſuch a wonderfull increaſe of Coccineel, that 5670. Arrobas of it, (each Arroba containing 25. Buſhels of our Engliſh meaſure) have been ſhipped for Europe in one year. Where by the way, this Coccineel groweth on a ſmall Tree, or ſhrub having very thick leaves; which they call a Tuna; planted and ordered by them as the French do their Vines: out of the ſeed whereof ariſeth a ſmall worm, at firſt no bigger than a Flea, and the greateſt not much bigger than our common Lady-cows, which they much reſemble; which feeding on the leaves, and over-ſpreading all the ground in which they are, are gathered by the Natives twice a year, ſtifled with aſhes, or with water (but this laſt the beſt) dried to a powder in the ſhade, and ſo tranſported into Europe. Here is alſo great plenty of Wheat, Barley, Pulſe of all ſorts, and of all ſuch Plants and Roots as we ſet in Gardens for the kitchin; Pomgranates, Orenges, Limons, Citrons, Malcotoons, Figs and Cherries, even to ſuperfluity; Apples and Pears in leſs abundance, few Grapes, and thoſe few they have not fit for wine; Plenty of Maize, and other Plants unknown in Europe; Birds and Beaſts, wild and tame of all ſorts, and of each no ſcarcity. Not thus in all places of it, nor in all alike; but ſome in one, ſome in another, according to the conſtitution of the ſoyl and air: which is ſo different in this Country, that in ſuch parts hereof as are hot and dry, their ſeed time is in April, or May, their Harveſt in October; but in ſuch places of it as are low and moiſt, they ſow their Corn in October, and reap in May: thus having two Harveſts in a year, and yet but one.

The people more ingenious than the reſt of the Salvages, exquiſite at ſome Mechanick Arts, ſpecially in the making of their Feather-pictures; and ſo induſtrious withall, ſo patient both of thirſt and hunger, that they will ſit at it an whole day without meat, or drink; turning every Feather to the light, upwards and downwards, every way, to ſee in which poſture it will beſt fit the place intended to it. No better Gold-ſmiths in the world, nor men more expert any where in refining Metals, curious in painting upon Cotton, whatſoever was preſented to the eye. But yet ſo barbarous withall, that they thought the Gods were pleaſed with the blood of men, which ſometimes they ſacrificed unto them. So ignorant, that when they firſt ſaw the Spaniards on Horſe-back, they thought the horſe and man to have been one creature; and would ask what the Horſes ſaid, when they heard them neigh. So careleſs of the worth of Gold, that they would part with great quantities of it for Knives, Glaſs-beads, little Bells, and ſuch petit trifles. But whatſoever they once were, is not now material: the Spaniard's having made ſuch havock of this wretched people, that in 17. years they deſtroyed above ſix millions of them; roaſting ſome, plucking out the eyes of others, conſuming them in their Mines, and mercileſly caſting them amongſt wild Beaſts where they were devoured. And as for thoſe who do remain, beſides their own natural ingenioſities, they have ſince learned the Civilities and Arts of Europe. What elſe concerns this ſoyl and people, we ſhall ſhew more particularly, if we find it neceſſary, in their proper places.

Amongſt the Rarities of this Country (though there be many Plants in it of a ſingular nature) I reckon that which they call Magney, or Meto, ſaid to be one of the principal: a Tree which they both plant and dreſs as we do our Vines. It hath on it 40. kind of Leaves fit for ſeveral uſes. For when they be tender, they make of them Conſerves, Paper, Flax, Mantles, Mats, Shoos, Girdles, and Cordage; upon them there grow certain Prickles, ſo ſtrong and ſharp, that the people uſe them in ſtead of Sawes. From the top of the Tree cometh a juyce like Syrrup; which if you ſeeth it, will become Honey; if purified, Sugar; they may make alſo Wine and Vinegar of it. The Bark of it roaſted maketh a good Plaiſter for hurts and ſores; and from the higheſt of the Boughs comes a kind of Gum, a ſoveraign Antidote againſt Poiſons.

Nor is it leſs a Rarity, though leſs uſefull to the good of Mankind, (except it be to keep them in continual mind of the Fires of Hell) that they have a Mountain in this Country, called Propocampeche, (ſituate in the Province of Mexico) which vomiteth flames of fire like Ætna: and another in the Province of Guaxaca, which ſendeth forth two burning ſtreams, the one of red Pitch, and the other of black; a fit reſemblance of thoſe Fountains of Fire and Brimſtone. Though they have many other Mountains, yet theſe moſt memorable. And as for Rivers, though very well provided of that watry commodity; yet here are none remarkable for length, or greatneſs, but Panuco only, of which more preſently. The want thereof ſupplied by ſome famous Lakes, and the neighbourhood of the Gulf of Mexico. Amongſt the Lakes, the principal are thoſe of Mexico (whereof more anon) and that of Chapala, bordering upon Gallicia Nova; which for its greatneſs hath the name of Mare Chapalicum, out of which there is made yearly great abundance of Salt. But that which is of greateſt beauty is the Golf of Mexico, the greateſt and goodlieſt of the world: in form completely Circular, in compaſs no leſs than 900. miles; environed with the main land, the Peninſulas of Florida and Jucutan, and the Iſle of Cuba. Two only paſſages in and out, and both well fortified; the one betwixt the point of Jucutan, and the Iſle of Cuba, where the Tide with a violent current entreth; the other betwixt the ſaid Iſland and the Cape of Florida, where it makes as violent an exit: the Sea ſo heady in the middeſt, and yet ſafe enough, that ſhips are not to ſayl in it directly forwards, but muſt bend either towards the North, or South, as their journey lieth. Upon this Golf the King of Spain hath alwayes ſome ſhips in readineſs; by which he more aſſureth his Eſtate, in this part of America, than by all his Garriſons.

It comprehendeth the Provinces of, 1. Panuco, 2. Mexicana, 3. Mechoacan, 4. Tlaſcala, 5. Gnaxata, 6. Chiapa, 7. Jucutan. Some others of leſs note, but reduced to theſe.

1. PANUCO, the moſt Northern Province of all New Spain, by ſome called Guaſtecan, is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Golf of Mexico; on the Weſt, with Uxitipa, a Member of the Province of Zacatecas in New Gallicia; on the North, with Florida, and ſome Countreys not yet diſcovered, from which parted by the River of Palms; on the South-weſt, with Mechuacan; and on the South, with Mexicana. So called from Panuco the chief River of it, which riſing out of the Hills of Tepecſuan, bordering upon Cinoloa and Couliacan, and dividing New Biſcay from the Province of Zacatecas, paſſeth through the middle of this Country, and ſo at laſt into the Golf.

The length hereof is reckoned to be 50. leagues, and the breadth as much. Divided into three Provinces. That towards Mexicana, called Aiotuxetlan, of a fruitfull ſoyl, and not without ſome Mines of Gold; once very populous, till in the year 1522. diſpeopled in a manner by Ferdinando Cortez, in his War againſt them. The other called Chila, leſs fruitfull, but poſſibly for want of people to improve the Land: for being formerly of a ſtout couragious nature, and truſting over-much to their Fens and Faſtneſſes, they put the Spaniards to ſuch trouble when they warred upon them, that the Conquerours to ſecure themſelves from all future dangers, endeavoured to root them out and deſtroy them utterly. The third lieth towards the River of Palms, inclined to barrenneſs, and unpleaſant; but the name I find not.

Chief Towns hereof at the coming of the Spaniards hither, 1. Las Caxas, 2. Yxicuyan, 3. Nachapatan, 4. Taquinite, 5. Tuzeteco, deſolate and laid waſte by the cruel Spaniards. Of moſt note now, 6. Tanehipa, and 7. Tameclipa, two ſmall Burroughs in the Province of the River of Palms (for ſo I call it) inhabited by the Natives only. 8. S. Kallap, another ſmall Town, but in the Province of Chila, inhabited by a few Chriſtians, with a Convent of Auguſtinian Friers; ſacked by the Salvages in the year 1571. 9. Tampice, or S. Lewis de Tampice, a Colony of the Spaniards, ſituate on the North banks of the River Panuco, and at the very mouth thereof; where it hath a very large Haven, but ſo barred with ſands, that no ſhip of great burden can make uſe of it: the River otherwiſe ſo deep, that Veſſels of 500. Tun might ſayl 60. leagues at leaſt in it againſt the ſtream. 10. S. Stevan del Puerto, on the Southern ſide of that River, in the Latitude of 23. about 65. leagues on the North of Mexico, from the Sea eight leagues; now the Metropolis, and Town of greateſt Trade in all this Country. Built by Ferdinando Cortez, in the place where formerly had ſtood Panuco, once the chief City of the Province, but by him deſtroyed. Oppoſite hereunto on the other ſide of the River, lie great ſtore of Salt-pits, out of which the people of this Town raiſe their greateſt profit. 11. S. Jago de los Valles, or S. James in the Vallies 25. leagues Weſt-ward (but inclining to the South withall) from S. Stevan del Puerto; ſituate in an open Country, and therefore fenced about with a Wall of Earth: to the Inhabitants whereof (all Spaniards, as in that before) the King of Spain hath granted many fair poſſeſſions, to defend thoſe parts (then being the borders of his Eſtates) againſt the Salvages.

This Country firſt attempted by Franciſco Garaio, but the conqueſt of it finiſhed by Cortez, as before is ſaid: each ſtriving, as it ſeemeth, who ſhould moſt deface it, and be enrolled for the greateſt Manſlayer of the two. But having carried on the courſe of their Victories almoſt as far as to the River of Palms, they deſiſted there; either becauſe already glutted with human blood, or that the conqueſt of thoſe parts would not quit the charge. Inſomuch as in all that Country from the River of Palms to the Cape of Florida, though lying all along on the Golf of Mexico, the Spaniards have not one foot of ground: ſecure enough, becauſe it lieth all along that Golf, that no other Nation can poſſeſs it.

2. MECHUACAN hath on the North-Eaſt, Panuco; on the Eaſt, Mexicana; on the South, part of Tlaſcala; on the Weſt, the main Ocean; and on the North, the Province of Xaliſco in New Gallicia. So called from the abundance of Fiſh, which their Lakes and Rivers did afford them; the word in their own Language ſignifying Locum Piſcoſum, or a Country of Fiſh.

The breadth hereof on the Sea-Coaſt is 80. leagues, in the borders towards Mexicana, but ſixty only. The length I find not yet agreed on. Bleſt with an air ſo ſound and ſweet, that ſick Folk come hither ther out of other Countreys, to recover their health. Well ſtored with Rivers, ſome Lakes, innumerable ſprings of running water, and here and there ſome hot Bathes iſſuing from the Rocks. The ſoyl ſo plentifully productive of all ſorts of Grain (even to admiration) that in ſome parts hereof four meaſures of Seed have brought forth 600. meaſures of the ſame Grain, in the following Harveſt. Well wooded, and by reaſon of its Springs and Rivers, full of excellent Paſtures; and yet not yielding unto any part of all America, for Medicinal Herbs, and Plants, of very Soveraign Nature for the good of Mankind. It affordeth alſo ſtore of Amber, Mulberry Trees, Silk, Wax, Honey, and ſuch other things, as chiefly ſerve for Pomp and pleaſure.

The people tall of ſtature, but ſtrong and active: of a good wit, and skilled in many excellent Manufactures. They ſpeak four Languages of their own; but that moſt generally uſed, is by the Spaniards called the Taraſcuan tongue; which though it be an elegant and copious language, yet moſt of them ſpeak the Spaniſh alſo. More pliant to the manners and apparel of that Nation, than the reſt of New Spain (the Mexicans excepted only) and ſo inclinable to the Goſpel, that they are almoſt all gained from their old Idolatries. Inſomuch that the whole Country being divided into 50. Pariſhes, every Pariſh hath its ſeveral Prieſts and inferiour Miniſters, who in the language of the place do inſtruct the people, in which they Preach to them, and hear their Confeſſions: beſides many Convents of Dominicans, and Auguſtine Friers.

It containeth in it upwards of 150. Towns, or Burroughs, beſides ſcattering Villages; 90. of which have Free Schools in them, and almoſt every one a Spittle for relief of the ſick. The principal thereof, 1. Zinzoutza, the ſeat of the old Kings of Mechuachan; in the firſt times of Chriſtianity in this Country, made a Biſhops See, till removed to Paſcuar. The firſt Biſhop, Vaſquez de Quiroga. 2. Paſcuar, of no great note at preſent, but that the Biſhops See was removed thither, becauſe nearer to Mexico; from which diſtant 47. leagues. 3. Valladolit, now the chief City of this Province, and the Biſhops See, removed hither from Paſcuar, and here finally ſetled in a fair Cathedral, An. 1544. ſituate near a large Lake (ſaid to be bigger than that of Mexico:) which doth not only afford the City great ſtore of Fiſh, but yieldeth them the opportunity of ſeveral pleaſures which they take in Boats upon the water. The Lake and City by the Natives called Guayangareo. 4. S. Michael, in the way from Mexico, (from which diſtant about 40. leagues) to the ſilver Mines of Zacatecas. Firſt built by Lewis de Velaſco, then Vice-Roy of Mexico, to defend the people of this Province, from the Chichamecas, a barbarous,. and hitherto an unconquered people who terribly moleſt the Nations upon whom they border. 5. S. Philips, built at the ſame time by the ſaid Velaſco. 6. Conception de Saylaa, ſeventeen leagues from Valladolit, 35. from Mexico; of the foundation of Martin Enriquez the Vice-Roy, An. 1570. to be a Stage for Travellers, in their journeys Northwards. 7. Guaxanato, bordering on Panuco, and not far from S. Jago de Los Valles; rich in Mines of Silver. Then on the Sea, we have 8. Acatlan, on the borders of New Gallicia, two miles from the Ocean; A Town of note, above 30. houſes, with a little Church; but neighboured by a large and ſafe Road for ſhipping, (by the Spaniards called Malacca) which makes it ſeldom without the company of Saylers. 9. Natividad, (or Portus Nativitatis) a noted and convenient Haven, from whence they commonly ſet ſail to the Philippine Iſlands; pillaged and burnt by Captain Cavendiſh in his Circumnavigation of the World. 10. S. Jago (or S. Jago de Buena Speranza) a little on the South of Natividad; the ſhores whereof are ſaid to be full of Pearls. 11. Colima, ten leagues from the Sea, but more South than the other, built in the year 1522. by Gonſalvo de Sandoval. 12. Zacatula, by the Spaniards called Conception, ſituate on the Banks of a large (but nameleſs) River; which riſing about the City of Tlaſcala, paſſeth by this Town, and thence with two open mouths runneth into the Sea.

This Province, at the coming of the Spaniards hither, was a diſtinct Kingdom of it ſelf, not ſubject nor ſubordinate to the Kings of Mexico, as were moſt of the Princes of theſe parts: the Frontires of the Kingdom fenced with ſtakes of wood, like a Palizado, to hinder any ſudden incurſion of the Mexican Forces. The laſt King called Tangayvan Bimbicha, ſubmitted of his own accord to Cortez, An. 1522. and willingly offered himſelf to Baptiſm. But the Spaniards were not pleaſed with either, becauſe deprived thereby of the ſpoil of the Country. But at laſt Nonnez de Guzman, then Preſident of the Courts of Juſtice in Mexico, picked a quarrel with him, accuſed him falſly (as is ſaid by the very Spaniards) of ſome practices againſt the King; burnt him alive with moſt barbarous and unheard of cruelty, and ſo confiſcated his eſtate.

3. Mexicana, is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Golf of New Spain; on the Weſt, with Mechuacan; on the North with Panuco, and ſome part of Nova Gallicia; on the South, with Tlaſcala, and part of the Southern Sea. So called from Mexico, the chief City, not of this Province only, but of all America.

It is in breadth from North to South, meaſuring by the Bay of Mexico, 130. leagues; thence growing narrower in the midland parts hardly above ſixty; and on the ſhores of Mare del Zur, not above ſeventeen. The length hereof extendeth from one Sea to the other, that is to ſay, from the point of Lobos in the Province of Papantla, on the Golf of Mexico, to the Haven of Acapulco, on the Southern Ocean: but the determinate number of miles I do no where find. But meaſuring it from 17. degrees and an half of Latitude, unto the 22. and allowing ſomething for the ſlope; we may conclude it to be much of the length, as in its breadth, that is to ſay about 130. leagues.

The Country is inferiour to Peru in the plenty and purity of Gold and Silver, but far exceeding it both in the Mechanical, and ingenious Arts, which are here profeſſed, and in the abundance of fruits and Cattel: of which laſt here is ſuch ſtore, that many a private man hath 40000. Kine and Oxen to himſelf. Fiſh is here alſo in great plenty; that only, which is drawn out of the Lake whereon Mexico ſtandeth, being reported worth 20000. Crowns yearly, to the Kings Exchequer. The people for the moſt part witty and induſtrious, full of valour and courage; good Handy-crafts-men, if they ſtoop ſo low as to Trades and Manufactures; rich Merchants, if they give themſelves to more gainfull traffick; and hardy Souldiers, if trained up and employed in ſervice. Their ancient Arms were Slings, and Arrows; ſince the coming of the Spaniards practiſed on the Harcubuize. In a word, what was ſaid before of New Spain in general, as to the ſoyl and people of it, is moſt appliable to this.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1. Los Topes, which parteth this Province from that of Tlaſcala. 2. Citala, and 3. Mitla, both running Eaſt-ward towards the Golf. 4. Papagaio, in the way from Mexico to Acapulco; with a fair bridge over it. 5. Las Balſas, of a violent courſe, and in bigneſs equal unto Tagus in Spain; paſſable only by a bridge made of Rafts and Reeds, not very ſtrongly joyned together. 6. The River of S. Francis, both large and ſwift, but in ſome parts fordable. Mountains of note I find not any which require a more particular conſideration; and ſo paſs them over the more eaſily.

Towns of moſt note in it, 1. Mexico, the ſeat of an Archbiſhop, and of the Spaniſh Vice-Roy, who hath the power to make Laws and Ordinances, to give directions, and determine controverſies; unleſs it be in ſuch great cauſes which are thought fit to be referred to the Council of Spain. This City was firſt ſituate in the Lakes and Iſlands, like Venice; every where interlaced with the pleaſant currents of freſh, and ſea-waters; and carrying a face of more civil government than any of America; though nothing, if compared with Europe. But the Town being deſtroyed by Cortez, it was built afterwards on the firm Land, on the Edge of the Lake, and bordering on a large and ſpacious Plain. The Plain on which it bordereth, is ſaid to be 70. leagues in compaſs, environed with high Hills; on the tops whereof the ſnow lieth continually. In the middle of which Plain are two great Lakes, the leaſt of them forty miles in circuit, the one ſalt, and the other freſh: each of them alternately ebbing and flowing up into the other. On the Banks of the ſalt Lake ſtandeth the City of Mexico, with many other goodly Towns, and ſtately houſes: on which Lake alſo, 50000. Wherries are continually plying. The Town in compaſs ſix miles, and containeth 6000. houſes of Spaniards, and 60000. Indians. It is a by-word, that at Mexico there are 4. fair things, viz. The Women, the Apparel, the Horſes, and the Streets. Here is alſo a Printing-houſe, an Univerſity, and a Mint; the Cathedral Church, ten Convents of Nuns, ſeveral houſes of Ieſuits, Dominicans, Franciſcans, Auguſtinians, and other Religious Ordes; ſome Colleges, many Spitles and Hoſpitals, and other publick buildings of great ſtate and beauty. By the Natives it was anciently called Temiſtatan, the name of Mexico being given on a new occaſion, of which more hereafter: moſt miſerably endammaged by the breaking in of the waters, An. 1629. which ſwelled ſo high, that they not only over-whelmed the meaner houſes, but the Vice-Roys Palace; drowned many thouſands of the people, and deſtroyed the houſhold ſtuff of the reſt. Occaſioned by the avarice of the Kings Miniſters, who had inverted the money to their private uſe, which ſhould have fortified the banks. 2. Tezcuco, ſituate on the ſame Lake, but ſix leagues from Mexico, heretofore twice as big as Sevil: and for the beauty of the ſtreets, and elegancy of the houſes, not inferiour to any. Served with freſh water from the Hills, brought in Pipes and Conduits, though ſeated on the brink of a Salt Lake. 3. Quitlavaca, built wholly in the Lake like Venice, and therefore by the Spaniards called Venezuela, a City of 2000. houſholds: the way unto it over a Cawſey made of flints, half a league long, and about twenty ſpans in breadth. 4. Uztacpalapa, half in the Lake, and half without, with many Ponds of freſh water, and a beautifull Fountain. A City of 10000. houſholds, ſix leagues from Tezcuco, and two from Mexico. 5. Mexicaltzingo, a Burrough of 4000. and 6. Cuyocan, one of 6000. Families, both upon the Lake: beautified in the times of their Paganiſm with many Temples, ſo gorgeouſly ſet out to the eye, that afar off they ſeemed of ſilver; moſt of them now converted into Monaſteries, and Religious houſes. 7. Chulula, the faireſt of all the Lake, ſcarce excepting Mexico, with which it anciently contended both for ſtate and bigneſs: ſaid to contain 20000. Familes, and to be beautified with ſo many Temples, that their Turrets equalled the number of the daies of the year. The people ſo addicted unto their Idolatries, and ſo barbarous in their bloody and beaſtly Sacrifices, that no fewer than 6000. Infants of both Sexes were yearly murdered on their Altars. 8. Meſtitlan, ſeated on an high Hill, begirt about with moſt pleaſant Groves, and ſhady Woods. A Town of about 30000. Inhabitants, the Villages about the Hill being reckoned in: ſituate 14. leagues, or two dayes journey from Mexico, in the way to the Province of Panuco; the high way on both ſides ſet with fruitfull Trees, to the great comfort and refreſhment of the way-faring man. 9. Clantinolleper, twenty leagues from Meſtitlan, a Manour to which 40000. of the Natives do owe ſute, and ſervice. 10. Antepeque, on the South of the City of Mexico, at the foot of the Mountain Propopampeche; a Town belonging to the Marquis of Valla, and ſeated in the moſt delicious place of all New Spain. 11. Acachicha, on the North-Eaſt of Mexico, betwixt it and the Golf, bordering on the Province of Pepantla. 12. Acapulco, an Haven Town of the South-ſea, ſituate on a ſafe and capacious Bay; at the entrance of it a league broad, and in the body of it full of convenient Stations and Docks for ſhipping: ſo that it is accompted the ſafeſt Haven of all thoſe Seas. At the bottom of it towards the Weſt, ſtands the Town and Caſtle, the Caſtle opportunely ſeated on a little fore-land, both to command the Town, and ſecure the Port; well walled and fortified with four very ſtrong Bulwarks, on which are planted good ſtore of Ordnance; the Garriſon conſiſting ordinarily of 400. Souldiers: ſtrengthened the rather in regard of the uſual entercourſe, which is betwixt this Port and the Philippine Iſlands.

The Original Inhabitants of this Country, (as far at leaſt as their Records are able to reach) were the Chichimecas, now the moſt rude and barbarous Salvages of all theſe parts; together with the Ottomies, ſomewhat more civil than the reſt, but yet rude enough. By theſe poſſeſſed till about the year 902. as it is conjectured from their Annals, when vanquiſhed and diſſeized by ſome new comers, whom they called by one name Navetlacos: iſſuing as it is conceived from thoſe parts of Gallicia Nova, which are now called Nova Mexicana, An. 720. or thereabouts; but lingring in their march, and waſting all the Countreys as they lay before them. Of theſe there were ſeven Tribes in all, i. e. the Sachimilci, the Chalcæ, the Tepanecæ, the Culvæ, the Tlaſluici, the Tlaſcaltecæ; all of them ſetled in theſe parts, and the five firſt about the Lake, before the coming in of the 7. Tribe, which was that of the Mexicans, ſo called from Mexi their chief Caprain; who much delighted with the ſituation and conveniences of Temiſtitan then a ruined town, cauſed it to be rebuilt and beautified, by the name of Mexico. This town from that time forwards was reputed the head-City of their Common-wealth; the ſix Tribes governing in common, or the Chiefs rather of thoſe Tribes in the names of the whole, after an Ariſtocratical manner. But weary at the laſt of this equal power, which the prevalency of ſome Tribes had made very unequal; the Mexicans, one of the weakeſt of the Tribes, oppreſſed by the reſt, reſolved to ſeparate themſelves, and to commit the ordering of their affairs to a King of their own. At firſt elected by themſelves, but afterwards when they had conquered moſt of the other Tribes, the choice intruſted unto ſix, one for every Tribe, (the Tlaſcaltecæ which was the ſeventh of their Tribes, and the Founders of Tlaſcala, governing themſelves long before, as a State apart:) who in their choice had an eſpecial eye on thoſe which were ſtrong and active, and fit for military employments; the people holding it a commendable meritorious act to kill their Kings, if once they were reputed Cowards. The Polity and Inſtitutes of this Mexican Kingdom, I forbear to write of, further than as they lie before me in the way of their Story: digeſted by the government and ſucceſſion of their ſeveral Kings, whoſe names and actions do occurr in the following Catalogue, of

The Kings of MEXICO.

A. Ch.
1373.	2. Vitzovitzli, ſon of Acamapitzli, ſubdued the Tribe of the Suchimilchi, and others of the neighbouring Nations.
1394.	3. Huizilihuiel, ſon of Vitzilovitli, conquered the Tribes of the Chalcæ and Culvæ, with many other Nations of the old Inhabitants.
1415.	4. Chimal Pupuca, ſon of Huizilihuiel, won the Town of Tequixſuiac, and reduced the rebellious Chalcæ under his command.
1425.	5. Iſcoalt, brother of Huizilihuel, by the valour of his Couſin Tlacaellec, freed himſelf from the yoke of the Tepaneca, to whom the Mexicans had before been Tributaries; and added their dominions unto his eſtate, conquering all the Nations round about him. After whoſe death the Electors by a joynt conſent choſe Tlacaellec for their King, as a man of whoſe vertue they had formerly made trial. But he very nobly refuſed it, ſaying, that it was more convenient for the Common-wealth, that another ſhould be King, and that he ſhould execute that which was for the neceſſity of the State, than to lay the whole burden upon his back: and that without being King, he would not leave to labour for the publick, as well as if he were: Upon this generous refuſal they made choice of Motecumo the firſt.
1438.	6. Motecumo, one of the Brothers of Chimalpupuca, brought in the cuſtom of uſing no other Sacrifices at their Coronations, but of ſuch Priſoners as the new King ſhould firſt take in the wars. By the valour and good fortune of Tlacaellec, he ſubdued ſo many of the Nations (whoſe names I hold unneceſſary to be here repeated) that he extended his eſtate from one Sea to the other.
1467.	7. Axayacaci, the Nephew of Iſchoalt by his ſon Tecozomoeliqueto, enlarged his Empire by the conqueſt of Tetentepeque, 200. miles from Mexico, to fit himſelf with Sacrifices for his Coronation; and brought the Lord of Tlatelulco who rebelled againſt him, to ſo hard a ſtreight, that he was forced to break his neck from the top of a Temple.
1479.	8. Ticoicatzi, the ſon of Azayacaci, added twelve Cities, with their Territories, to the Mexican Empire.
1484.	9. Abuczozin, brother of Ticoicatzi, extended his borders to Guatimala, repaired or rebuilt a great part of Mexico, and brought thither a chanel of freſh water.
1502.	10. Motecuma II. Son of Axaacaci, before his Coronation conquered 44. Cities. He ordained that no Plebeian ſhould bear any Office in his Court, and in the 18. year of his Reign was ſubdued by Cortez.

As for this Cortez, to whom the Spaniards ſtand indebted for the Kingdom of Mexico, he was born in Medeline, a Town of Eſtremadura, 1485. and in the nineteenth year of his Age, employed himſelf in the Trade and buſineſs of America, for the improvement of his Fortunes, Anno 1511. he went as Clark unto the Treaſurer for the Iſle of Cuba, where he huſbanded his Affairs ſo well, by carrying over Kine, Sheep, and Mares, and bringing Gold for them in Exchange, that in ſhort time he was able to put in 2000. Caſtellins for his ſtock, as Partner with Andrew de Duero, a wealthy Merchant. Grown richer, he was taken to be Partner with James Velaſques, in the Diſcovery of Tabaſco, and the parts near Jucutan, An. 1518. And now reſolved to venture all his ſtock both of friends and money, he furniſhed himſelf of eleven Ships, and with 550. men ſet ſail from Spain, and arrived at the Iland of Acuſamill (now called Santa Crux:)

and ſailing up the River of Tabaſco, ſacked the Town of Potonchon, the Inhabitants refuſing to ſell him victual. After this by the help of his Horſe and Ordinance, he diſcomfited 40000. of the naked Salvages, gathered together to revenge themſelves for the ſack of that Town; and received the King thereof in Vaſſallage to the Crown of Spain. Being told that Weſt-ward he ſhould meet with ſome Mines of Gold, he turned his courſe for the Haven of S. John de Ulloa; where landing he was entertained by Tendilli, Governour of the Town and Country for the King of Mexico: who underſtanding of his coming, and that he was the Servant of ſo great an Emperour (of which Tendilla had informed him by eſpecial Meſſengers) he ſent him many rich Preſents both of Gold and Silver. Inflamed at the ſight hereof, he reſolved to go unto the place where ſuch Treaſures were; took poſſeſſion of the Country in the name of Charls the fifth King of Spain and Emperour; and building there the Town de la vera Crux, left in it 150. of his men. Attended by no more than 400. Foot, 15. Horſe, and ſix pieces of Ordnance, he purſued his Enterprize; by practice gained unto him thoſe of Zempoallan, and Tlaſcalla, whom he underſtood to be ill-affected to Motecuma: aſſiſted with thoſe Forces he paſſed on for Mexico, ſacked the Town of Chololla (a Town of 40000. houſholds) in his march, kindly received into Mexico by the frighted King, whom he cauſed to acknowledge himſelf a Vaſſal to Spain, and to preſent him in the name of a Tribute, with ſo much Treaſure, as amounted to 160000. Caſtellins of Gold. A quarrel growing not long after, Motecuma the unhappy King was by one of his own Subjects killed in the Tumult, and the Spaniards driven out of the Town. But aided with the whole Forces of the Tlaſcalans, and a recruit of more Spaniards (ſent thither on a Deſign againſt him) he made up an Army of 100000. Salvages, 900. Spaniſh foot, 80. Horſe, 17. pieces of Ordnance: and having with great diligence made ready a Navy of 13. Galliots, and 6000. Canoes or Boats, laid ſiege unto the City both by Sea and Land. After a Siege of three moneths, the City is taken, ſacked and burnt, Auguſt 13. 1521. But afterwards rebuilt more beautifully than it was before. Thus fell this mighty Kingdom into the hands of the Spaniards, by the valour and good fortune of Cortez, a private Adventurer; endowed for that good Service by Charls the fifth with the Town and Territory of Tecoantepeque, in the Province of Guaxaca, and many other fair eſtates in the Province of Mexico, and dignified with the title of Marqueſs of Valla.

As for the Kings of Mexico, they are ſaid to have worn a Crown reſembling that which is now uſed by the Dukes of Venice. His Coronation held with great pomp, but moſt bloody Sacrifices. His Revenues thought to be almoſt infinite, raiſed out of all Commodities and paid in kind, whether Natural or Artificial only: the King participating of the fruits of all mens Labour, and ſharing with them in their wealth: ſome paying in, Cups full of powder of Gold, of two handfuls a piece; ſome, Diadems, and Beads of Gold; Plates of Gold of three quarters of a yard long, and four fingers broad; Turkeſs-ſtones, Golden Targets, rich Feather-Pictures, &c. Not to ſay any thing of matters of inferior value: all which in ſuch a wealthy and large eſtate, muſt needs afford him a Revenue equal to the greateſt Monarch. And for the incouragement of his Souldiers and Men of War, here were ordained three Orders of Knighthood, (or at leaſt ſuch diſtinctions of perſonal merit, as had reſemblance to ſuch Orders:) the firſt diſtinguiſhed by a Red Ribband, the ſecond called the Lion or Tiger-Knight, and the third the Gray Knight, all privileged amongſt other things to be clothed in Cotton, wear Breeches, to adorn themſelves with gold and ſilver, and to have Veſſel gilt or painted, high points, and not permitted unto any elſe. But it is time that I proceed to the reſt of the Provinces.

4. TLASCALA lieth betwixt Mexicana, and Guaxaca, extended from one Sea to the other. The length hereof from Sea to Sea an hundred Leagues; the breadth along the ſhores of the Gulf reckoned 80. Leagues, ou the South Sea not above eighteen. So called from the abundance of Maize which they make their bread of; the word in that Language ſignifying Locum panis, or the place of Bread, the ſame with Bethlehem in the Hebrew.

The Country very plentifull both of Corn and Cattel, full of rich Paſtures, and wonderfully ſtored with Maize: Level and plain except towards the Sea, where occurreth a large chain of craggy Mountains. The richer in the fruits of Nature for thoſe fair and pleaſant Rivers, wherewith it is watered, the principal of which, 1. Rio de Grijalva, ſo called from John de Grijalva, who firſt diſcovered it; employed herein by James Velaſques, the advancer of Cortez. 2. Rio de Zempoall, ſo called from the Town of Zempoallan about which it riſeth. 3. Zahuate, which makes its way thorow the chain of Mountains before mentioned, and falleth with the former into the Golf. 4. Rio de Zacatula, a River of the longeſt courſe in all this Province; riſing near Tlaſcala, and falling many Leagues off into Mare del Zur. The People much of the ſame nature with thoſe of Mexico, though upon jealouſies of State their moſt bitter enemies; of which the Spaniards made good uſe, to advance their Conqueſts on that Kingdom.

Places of moſt importance in it, Tlaſcala it ſelf, which gives name to the Province: in former times governed after the form of a Common-wealth, according to the Democratical Models. Situate on a little Hill betwixt two Rivers: and in the middle of a large, but pleaſant Plain, 60. miles in compaſs. So populous at the coming of the Spaniards hither, that it contained 300000. Inhabitants; now ſcarce 50000. It had four Streets (or rather Quarters) each of them governed by a Captain in time of war: and in the middeſt a Market-place ſo fair and ſpacious, that 30000. perſons might aſſemble in it, to buy and ſell, or for any other buſineſs. 2. Puebba de los Angelos, (the City of Angels) but moſt commonly Angelos; built by Sebaſtian Ramirez, An. 1531. in the way from Vera Crux to the City of Mexico, from which laſt 22. leagues diſtant. A Biſhops See, and thought to contain in it 1500. families. 3. Zempoallan, on the River ſo named, the Inhabitants whereof did great ſervice to Ferdinando Cortez in his conqueſt of Mexico. 4. Napuluca; of great reſort for a Fair of Cattel; and ſuch a kind of Court for ordering the trade thereof, as we call the Pie-powders. 5. Guaxocingo, a pleaſant and well-peopled town, ſituate at the foot of the burning Mountain before mentioned, by the aſhes and embers whereof the fields are many times annoyed.

6. Segura, or Segura de la Frontera, in the Region of Tepeac, built by Cortez the next year after the conqueſt of Mexico, with fair ſtreets and handſome houſes; by whom peopled with Spaniards. 7. Vera Crux, the firſt town built in this Country by the ſaid Cortez, now a Biſhops See: ſituate near unto the Gulf, and a great thorow-fare from thence to the City of Mexico, from which diſtant about 60. leagues. 8. S. John de Ullua, the moſt noted Port of all this Province; fenced with a Peer againſt the fury both of wind and ſea; defended naturally by Rocks and Quick-ſands lying before it, and by two Bulwarks well fortified and manned on both ſides of the entrance. 9. Medellin, built by Cortez, An. 1525. and planted by Spaniards: ſo called in memory of a town of the ſame name in Eſtremadura, in which he was born: ſituate on the banks of the River Almeria.

The Tlaſcallans were originally one of the ſeven Tribes, which drave the Chichimecas out of their poſſeſſions: and either finding no room left for them on the Banks of the Lake, or elſe willing to ſubſiſt alone, withdrew themſelves from the reſt, founded the City of Tlaſcala, and there erected a Democratical Eſtate. Stomacked for this by the other Tribes, and many times invaded by thoſe of Mexico, after they had ſubdued the reſt; they ſtill maintained themſelves againſt all attempts; and in the end aſſiſted Cortez, in the deſtruction of that Kingdom they ſo deadly hated. Privileged for that reaſon by the Spaniards, and exempted from all kind of tribute, (except it be an handfull of Wheat for every perſon) and ſuffered to live under his protection in the former Government. The Province given us by this name, ſaid to contain 200. good Towns and Burroughs, 1000. Villages and upwards; and in them 150000. of the Natives, beſides Spaniſh Colonies. Diſtributed into 36. Claſſes or Rural Deanries, for Eccleſiaſtical Government, in which are thought to be 30. Convents and Religious Houſes.

5. GUAXACA is bounded on the Weſt, with Tlaſcala; on the Eaſt, with Jucutan, and Chiapa, one of the Provinces of Guatimala; on the North, with the Bay of Mexico; and on the South, with Mare del Zur. Extended on the South-ſea to the length of an hundred miles, but on the Bay to fifty only: in breadth from Sea to Sea where it bordereth on Tlaſcala, 120. leagues; not above 60. where it confineth on Chiapa. So called from Guaxaca once the chief town of theſe parts, now named Antequera.

The Air hereof very ſound and ſweet, and the Soil as fruitfull: plentifull not only of thoſe commodities which are common with the other Provinces of this Country; but of ſuch quantities of Silks, and ſtore of Mulberries, that if the Natives paid their Tithes as the Spaniards do, that very Revenue would ſuffice to endow five Biſhopricks, as good as that which is there already. Scarce any River of this Country, but hath Sands of Gold: ſuch plenty of Coccinele, (a rich grain uſed in dying Scarlets, of which before) as alſo of Caſſia, Gold, Silver, and other metals, that if the people did but add ſome induſtry to the wealth of the Country, they might be the richeſt men in all America. But being naturally ſlothfull, and impatient of labour, they loſe all opportunities of gathering riches, and live but from hand to mouth, as we uſe to ſay. Docile enough, and ſo indulgent unto thoſe who take pains to teach them, that here are reckoned 120. Convents of Dominican Friers, beſides other Schools: theſe laſt conceived the greateſt number.

It is ſubdivided into many particular Provinces, (we may call them Wapentakes or Hundreds) as 1. Miſteca, 2. Tutopeque, 3. Zapoteca, 4. Guazacoalco, 5. Gueztaxatla, and 6. the Vale of Guaxaca; this laſt moſt memorable, in that it gave the title of Marqueſs del Valle, to the famous Cortez. Towns of moſt obſervation, 1. Teozopotlan, once the chief town of Zapoteca, and the ſeat of their King. 2. Cuertlavaca, of great note for a Labyrinth not far off, hewn out of the Rock, but by whom none knoweth. 3. Antequera, in the Valley of Guaxaca, a ſtately City, and beautified with a fair Cathedral; as that with Marble-pillars of great height and thickneſs. 4. S. Illifonſo in the Province of Zapoteca. 5. S. Jago in the Valley of Nexapa, ſeated upon a lofty hill. 6. Del Spiritu Santo, diſtant about three leagues from the ſhores of the Golf, in the Province of Guazacoalco; the foundation of Gonſalvo de Sandoval, A. 1526. 7. Aguatulco, or Guatulco, a noted and convenient Port on the South-ſea; much uſed by thoſe which trade from Peru to Mexico, and from Mexico to any Port of the Southern-ſeas. By conſequence rich, and therefore plundered to the purpoſe both by Drake, and Cavendiſh, in their Voyages about the world. 8. Tacoantepeque a Port of the ſame Sea alſo, but of far leſs note. Burroughs and Villages in all 650. inhabited by 150000. of the Natives liable to tribute, beſides women and perſons under age, not reckoning the Spaniards in the number.

6. JUCUTAN, environed on three parts by the Sea like a Demi-Iſland, is faſtened to the Continent only where it meets with Guaxaca; the furtheſt point of it oppoſite to the Iſle of Cuba. Diſcovered firſt by Fernandes de Cordova, employed therein by Don Chriſtopher Morante, An. 1517. and called Jucutan, not as ſome conceit it, from Joctan the ſon of Heber, who they think came out of the Eaſt, where the Scripture placeth him (Gen. 10. 30.) to inhabit here; but from Jucutan, which in the language of the Country ſignifieth, What ſay you? For when the Spaniards at their firſt coming hither asked the name of the place; the Salvages not underſtanding what they meant, replied Jucutan, that is, what ſay you? whereupon the Spaniards always after called it by this name.

The compaſs of it, taking the Province of Tobaſco into the accompt, is ſaid to be 900. miles, or 300. leagues. The Air hot, and the Country deſtitute of Rivers; not otherwiſe provided of water but by pits and trenches, which abundantly ſupply that want. Sufficiently barren, the ſoil not bearing Wheat, or any Europaean fruits, nor many of the growth of America in other places. Nor have they Mines of Gold or Silver, or any other Metal, to enrich the people; who muſt either live by trades and labour, or elſe beg their bread. Nothing remarkable in the Country, but that here ſeemed to be ſome remnants of Chriſtianity, at the Spaniards firſt coming hither: the people conſtantly obſerving a kind of Baptiſm, which they call in their own language a ſecond birth, expreſſing by that word a Regeneration; not ſuffering any one to marry untill ſo initiated. And poſſible enough it is, that this may be the Country upon which Madoc ap Owen fell; who though he might by ſome good fortune be brought back to Wales, yet that he ſhould make any ſuch ſecond voyage hither, as is ſaid in their Chronicles, I by no means grant.

Towns of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Merida, almoſt in the navel of it, ſituate in the 20. degree of Latitude; the ordinary ſeat of the Governour, and the See of a Biſhop: diſtant from the Sea on each ſide, about twelve leagues; and called thus from a Town of that name in Spain, with which it is thought be have ſome reſemblance. 2. Valladolit, 30. leagues from Merida, beautified with a moſt ſumptuous Monaſtery of Franciſcan Friers. 3. Campeche, (or S. Franciſco, as the Spaniards call it) ſituate on the ſhore of the Golf. A Town when firſt known to the Spaniards, of 3000. Honſes, and beautified with ſuch monuments of art and induſtry, as ſhewed that there was ſomewhat in this people which was not barbarous, ſince that no more obſervable, than for being ſuddenly ſurprized by Parker, an Engliſh Capt. An. 1596. who carried away with him the Governour, the wealth of the Town, and many priſoners; beſides a great ſhip full of Gold, Silver, and other the like precious Commodities, deſigned for the King of Spains own uſe. 4. Tabaſco, ſituate in the beſt part of this Country, ſo different from all the reſt, that it is made by ſome a diſtinct Province from it. By the Spaniards called Villa de Nueſtra a Sennora de la Victoria, moſt commonly Victorio only; and that in memory of the firſt fortunate victory which Cortez had upon the people, arming themſelves againſt him for the ſacking of Pontonchon. 5. Pontonchon ſacked by Cortez for denying to ſupply him with victual. 6. Salamanca, ſo called with reference to a Town of that name in Spain.

Along the Coaſt of this Country lie many Iſlands, viz. 1. La Zarza. 2. Deſconoſcida. 3. Triangulus. 4. Vermeia. 5. Los Negrillos. 6. Los Alacranes, all within the Golf. Without it, 7. Zaratan. 8. Pantoia. 9. Lamanay. 10. De Mucheres, or the Iſle of Women; 11. Cozamul, by ſome called Acuſamil. This laſt the biggeſt, as 15. leagues long, 5. broad; and the moſt remarkable, as being the uſual way which the Spaniaras travelled in their diſcoveries of this Country, from the Iſle of Cuba. For here firſt landed Feſdinando de Corduba, An. 1517. who paſſing over to Jucutan (but four leagues diſtant) brought back nothing but ſtripes. Here the next year arrived John de Grijalva, in the ſame purſuit, who paſſing by Jncutan to the Province of Guacata, left his name behind him to a River. And finally here landed the moſt fortunate Cortez, who coaſting about the Demi-Iſland, landed near Tabaſco, and there firſt hanſelled his good fortune with a notable victory. Yet neither the Iſland nor Peninſula diſcovered perfectly, till the year 1527. when both ſubdued by Franciſco de Monteio, to the Crown of Spain. The Iſland now called Santa Crux.

OF GUATIMALA.

G*UATIMALA* is bounded on the North, by Jucutan, and the Golf of Honduras; on the South, with Mare del Zur; on the Eaſt, (or the South-eaſt rather) with Caſtella Aurea; on the Weſt, with New Spain. Extended 300. leagues in length, upon the Coaſts of Mare del Zur; but meaſuring by a ſtraight line, not above 240: the breadth thereof 180. leagues, where broadeſt; in moſt places narrower. So called from Guatimala the chief Province, as that from the prime City of it; honoured with the ſeat of the Governour, and the Courts of Juſtice.

The nature of the ſoil and people, (if differing in any material thing from thoſe before) we will conſider in the View of thoſe ſeveral parts, into which this Country is divided. The principal whereof, 1. Chiapa, 2. Verapaz, 3. Guatimala ſpecially ſo called, 4. Honduras, 5. Niceragua, 6. Veragua. The reſt of leſs note, eaſily reduced to theſe.

1. CHIAPA hath on the Weſt, New Spain; on the Eaſt, Verapaz; on the North, part of Jucutan; and Mare del Zur, upon the South. Extended 40. leagues in length, not much leſs in breadth; and antiently inhabited by four Nations, all of ſeveral Languages.

The ſoil not very natural for Corn or Fruits, though Pot-herbs brought from Spain thrive well, as do Beans and Lentils; yet Vines and other richer fruits ſeldom come to good. Wood-vines they have, which yield a very pleaſant pulp; and if well ordered, might be brought to afford more profit. Their trees, moſt of them greater than in other places, as Pines, Oaks, Cedars, and the Cypreſs; whole Woods of Walnuts, but the Nut not ſo big as thoſe of Europe. Some of their Trees yield Roſin, ſome ſuch precious gums, as in other places are not uſual; and ſome there are whoſe Leaves being dried into a powder, afford a ſoveraign plaſter for exulcerate ſores. And they have need too often to make uſe of theſe Plaſters, the Country being full of Snakes and other venemous Creatures, (ſome of the Snakes no leſs than 20. foot in length) whoſe poiſon being ſtrong and deadly, doth require ſuch helps. Of the People nothing ſingular, that I have met with; but that they are more muſical and exact in painting, than the reſt of the Natives.

Towns of moſt note in it, 1. Cividad Real, built by the Spaniards in the Country of the Chiapenſes, at the foot of an hill; ſituate in a round Plain, encompaſſed about with Mountains like an Amphitheatre: afterwards made a Biſhops See, and privileged by the Kings of Spain to be governed by ſuch City-Magiſtrates as they call Alcaides. 2. Chiapa, in a vale adjoyning; before the building of the other, of moſt note in this Province: yet ſtill before it in regard of its ſituation, this Valley being better fraught with Pears, Apples, Wheat and Maize, than all the reſt of the Country. 3. Tecpatlan, once the chief of the Zoaques, poſſeſſed of 25. Villages in this Province; now beautified with a Monaſtery of Dominican Friers. 4. Capanavatzla, the principal Town of twenty five, which the Quelenes held in this tract; remarkable for nothing but a Convent of the ſame Dominicans. 5. S. Bartholmews, another town in the territory of the ſame Quelenes: near which is ſaid to be a great Pit, or opening of the earth, into which if any man caſts a ſtone, though never ſo little, there preſently followeth a loud and fearfull noiſe, like a clap of thunder. 6. Guevetlan, built by Pedro de Alvaridi, when he was Governour of theſe parts; the chief Town of a little Province called Soconuſco. 7. Caſapualca, a ſmall Burrough, but memorable for a Well in the fields adjoyning; the waters whereof are noted to riſe and fall, as the Ocean doth flow or ebbe, and at equal diſtances of time. Of thirteen Townſhips which the Zeltales were poſſeſſed of, I find no one named; though painted all of them, and ſet forth to the eye of the Traveller, with Coccinele, of which their Territory hath good plenty.

And now I am fallen upon theſe Rarities of Nature, I cannot but take notice (though ſomewhat out of my Method) of a River by the Spaniards called Rio Blanco, which turns wood to ſtones: of a Spring in the Cantred of Tafixa, which in the Summer is full of water, in the Winter dry; of another in the ſame Cantred, which for one three years, though it rain never ſo little, is full of water, and the next three years hath none at all; and ſo ſucceſſively by turns: and finally, that the chief River of the Province, having received into it many leſſer ſtreams, is ſwallowed up near a Village of the Chiapenſes, called Otztutan, never after ſeen. None of them famed for Golden Sands, as are thoſe of Guaxata; though it be thought there be ſome Veins of gold and ſilver, but hitherto neglected for want of Slaves to work the Mines.

2. VERAPAZ is bounded on the Weſt, with Chiapa; on the Eaſt, with Guatimala, and Hondura; on the North, with Jucutan; and on the South, with the Territory of Soconuſco. In Latin called Provincia Vera Pacis, by the Spaniards Verapez; becauſe not conquered by the ſword, but won to the obedience of the King of Spain, by the preaching of the Dominican Friers.

The Country 30. Leagues in length, and as much in breadth, full of high Hills and deep Valleys, but no fruitfull plains; generally over-grown with Woods, very large and thick, which ſo hinder the free paſſage of the winds, that the Air hereof is very ewery: Inſomuch that for nine moneths in the year they have alwayes rain, not altogether free from it in the other three. By reaſon of this moyſture much annoyed with Moſquits, a kind of Gnats, very injurious to their Fruits, with which otherwiſe (as with Fiſh and other neceſſaries) they were well provided. No Mines of Gold, or Silver diſcovered hitherto, though the Spaniards have many times in vain attempted it. Inſtead whereof ſome of their Trees drop a kind of Amber, which they call Liquid amber; ſome, Maſtick, and ſome other, Gums: they have alſo many Medicinal woods, as Sarzaparilla, that called China-wood, and many others.

The people tractable and conform to the Spaniſh Government, except the Lecandones, and Pachuteci, ſome Remainders of the ancient Salvages: who keeping in the Mountains and craggy Rocks of this Countrey, have hitherto retained both their Native freedome, and their old Idolatries. No Towns herein poſſeſſed by the Spaniard, and but fourteen Villages in all, in which they live mingled with the old Inhabitants. The principal of theſe St. Auguſtines, not ſo much memorable in it ſelf, as for the neighbourhood of a Cave betwixt two Mountains; from which the Rain deſcending turns into Alablaſter, naturally faſhioned into Pillars and other Pourtraitures. Into which alſo many ſprings do convey their waters, which there being joyned into a body, make an handſome River, able almoſt at the firſt appearance to bear a Boat. A Port they alſo have at the bottome of an Arm of the Sea, called Golfo dulce: but of ſo little uſe and Trading, that I find no name for it, unleſs it ſhould be that Yztapa which Herrera ſpeaks of, by whom placed in Guatimala.

3. GUATIMALA ſpecially ſo called, is bounded on the Weſt, with Verapaz, from which parted by the River Xicalapa; on the Eaſt, with Nicaragua; on the North, with Honduras; and on the South, with Mare del Zur, or the Pacificque Ocean. Extended 30 leagues from the North to the South, the ſhores of Mare del Zur, not above ſeventeen, But reckoning in Yzalcos, Chaluteca, and S. Saviours, three adjoyning Regions, by ſome made Provinces diſtinct, the dimenſions of it muſt be much greater both for length and breadth.

The Countrey Mountainous, but withall very full of Rivers; by conſequence commodious, both for fiſhing and hunting. Fruitfull of Wheat, Maize, and other Proviſions, but thoſe fruits not laſting. Not ſo much ſubject unto rain as they are in Verapaz, but more troubled with winds. Full of rich Paſtures, and thoſe Paſtures of great Heards of Cattel. Good ſtore of Cotten-wool, ſome Balſamum, and other Medicinal Liquors; as alſo of the beſt Sulphur, and many Apothecaries Drugs, which I have no skill of. The people Puſillanimous and fearfull, greater proficients in Chriſtianity and Civility, than moſt of the Salvages: but ſo that it is thought they would relapſe again to their ancient Paganiſm, and revive again their old barbarous cuſtoms, if not held in by the bridle of fear, and the curb of power. The men affirmed to be good Archers, and the Women good Spinners.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1. Guecapa, a River of a courſe but of 13 leagues, yet of great depth, and Navigable half the way; which falleth into Mare del Zur. 2. Lempas, watering the Burrough of St. Saviours; which hath its riſe from a great Lake, and his falls in the ſame Sea alſo. Here is alſo ſaid to be a Lake near the Village of Yſtepeque, of the waters whereof are made both Sulphur and Allom. And here is ſaid to be a Volcana, or burning Mountain, which though it hath vomited no Fire of late, the matter of it being ſpent; yet the ſaid Monuments of his furies do remain among them; another not far off which ſtill caſts out ſmoak.

Towns of moſt note, 1. Guatimala, or St. Jago de Guatimala, the chief Town of the Province, ſituate on a little River betwixt both Vulcanos, by one of which moſt terribly waſted, Anno 1541. But being reedified, it hath ſince exceedingly flouriſhed, by reaſon of the Biſhops See, the reſidence of the Governour, and the Courts of Juſtice. 2. St. Salvador, 40 leagues Eaſt-wards from Guatimala, by the Natives called Guzculan; ſituate on the River Guacapa, ſeven leagues from the Sea, and neighboured by a great Lake of five leagues compaſs. 3. Acaxutla, at the mouth of the ſame River, the Port Town to S. Saviours. 4. St. Trinidad, by the Natives called Samſonate, the moſt noted Empory of this Countrey; the place of Bartery betwixt the Inhabitants of New Spain, and thoſe of Peru. 5. St. Michaels, two leagues from the Bay of Fonſeca, which ſerves unto it for a Haven. 6. Xeres de la Fontera, the chief Town of the Cantred of Chulutecan (by which name it was formerly known) ſituate on the Frontiers towards Nicaragua, and to the South-Eaſt of the Bay of Fonſeca: that Bay ſo named in honour of Roderick Fonſeca Biſhop of Burges, and Preſident of the Councel for the Indies, An. 1532. by Giles Gonſales de Avila who firſt diſcovered it. About and in this Bay are ten little Iſlands, four of which inhabited, and plentifully furniſhed with Wood, Water, and Salt.

4. HONDURA hath on the South, Guatimala, ſpecially ſo called; on the Weſt, the Bay, or Arm of the Sea, called Golfo Dulce, by which parted from Verapaz; on the North, and Eaſt, the Sea called Mare del Nort; on the South-Eaſt, Nicaragua; on the South, Guatimala, ſpecially ſo called. In length from Eaſt to Weſt by the Banks of that Sea 150 leagues, and about 80 leagues in breadth from North to South. The name of Honduras, or Fonduras impoſed upon it from the depth of the Sea, about the principal Head-land of it, called the Cape of Honduras.

The whole Countrey either Hills, or Vallies, little Champagne in it; fruitfull of Maize and Wheat, and of very rich Paſturage; made ſo by the conſtant over-flowings of their Rivers about Michaelmas; which do not only ſoil their grounds, but water their Gardens. The principal of them, 1. Hungara. 2. Chamalucon. 3. Ulna, all neighboured by fertile fields, and pleaſant Meadows. Some Mines of Gold and Silver are conceived to be here, but not yet diſcovered: the people being ſo ſloathfull and given to idleneſs, that they rather live on Roots, than take pains in tilling of their Land; and therefore not eaſily intreated to toyl for others, but where neceſſity and ſtrong hand do compell them.

Town of moſt note, 1. Valladolit, by the Natives called Commyagna, 40 leagues diſtant from the Sea, ſituate in a pleaſant and fruitfull Valley, on the banks of the River Chamalucon ; and honoured with a Biſhops Sea, fixed here about the year 1558. built near the place where once Franciſco de Monteio, Governour of this Province, had planted a Colony of Spaniards, Anno 1530. by the name of S. Maria de Commyagna. 2. Gracios di Dios, 30 leagues Weſt-ward of Valladolit, built by Gabriel de Royas, An. 1530 to be a place of defence for thoſe who worked in the Mines, againſt the Salvages. But finding himſelf unable to make it good, he defaced and left it ; Re-edified again by Gonſalvo de Alvarado, and ſince well inhabited. 3. S. Peters, eleven leagues diſtant from the Port of Cavallos, but ſeated in a moſt healthy air ; and therefore made the dwelling place of the Farmers of the Kings Cuſtomes, who have their houſes in this Town, and follow their buſineſs in the other, as occaſion is. 4. Porto de Cavallos, ſo called from ſome horſes thrown over-board in a violent Tempeſt; the moſt noted Haven of theſe parts, and ſtrong by natural ſituation : but ſo ill guarded and defended, that in the year 1591. it was pillaged by Captain Chriſtopher Newport, and An. 1596. by Sir Anthony Sherley. Deſerted on thoſe ſpoils, and not ſince inhabited. 5. S. Thomas de Caſtile, 18 leagues from Cavallos, naturally ſtrong, and fortified according to the Rules of Art : to which, as to a place of more ſtrength and ſafety, Alfonſo Briado de Caſtilla, Preſident of the Seſſions of Guatimala, removed both the Inhabitants and Trade of Cavallos. 6. Traxillo, ſeated on the riſing of a little Hill betwixt two Rivers (one of them that which is called Haguara) diſtant from Cavallos 40 leagues to the Eaſt, and 60 leagues to the North of Valladolit : ſurprized and pillaged by the Engliſh, An. 1576. Not far hence towards the North-Eaſt lyeth the Cape of Honduras, from whence the ſhore drawing inwards till it joyn with Jucutan, makes up a large and goodly Bay called the Golf of Honduras. 7. S. George de Olancho, ſo named of the Vally Olancho, in which it is ſeated, a Vally noted heretofore for ſome golden Sands, which Guajape, a River of it, was then ſaid to yeeld.

5. NICARAGUA is bounded on the North, with Honduras ; on the Eaſt, with Mare del Nort, and the Province of Veragua ; on the South, with Mare del Zur ; on the Weſt, with Guatimala. By Didaco Lopez de Salſedo, who firſt ſubdued it, it was called the New Kingdome of Leon ; but the old name by which they found it called at their coming thither, would not ſo be loſt.

The Countrey deſtitute of Rivers, except that part hereof towards Veragua, called Coſta Rica, reckoned a Province of it ſelf. The want hereof ſupplied by a great Lake, or a little Sea, called the Lake of Nicaragua, 120 leagues in compaſs, ebbing and flowing like the Sea ; upon the banks of which ſtand many pleaſant Villages and ſingle houſes. A Lake well ſtored with Fiſh, but as full of Crocodiles : and having made its way by a mighty Cataract, emptieth it ſelf into the Sea about four leagues off. Not very rich in Corn, (moſt of which is brought them from Peru) but well ſtored with Cattel : level and plain, and ſhadowed with frequent Trees ; one amongſt others of that nature, that a man cannot touch any parr of it, but it withereth preſently. Affirmed to be as full of Parrets, as England of Crows ; ſtored with great plenty of Cotten-wool, and abundance of Sugar-canes. In a word ſo pleaſing generally to the eye, that the Spaniards calls it by the name of Mahomets Paradiſe.

The people for the moſt part, ſpeak the Spaniſh tongue, and willingly conform themſelves to the Spaniſh garb, both of behaviour and apparel : well weaned from their old barbarous cuſtomes, retained only by ſome Mountainers, whom they call Chontales. All of good ſtature, and of colour indifferent white. They had before they received Chriſtianity, a ſetled and politick form of government. Only as Solon appointed no Law for a mans killing of his Father, ſo had this people none for the killer of a King ; both of them conceiting that men were not ſo unnatural, as to commit ſuch crimes. A Thief they judged not to death, but adjudged him to be ſlave to that man whom he had robbed, till by his ſervice he had made ſatisfaction. A courſe more mercifull, and not leſs juſt, than the loſs of life.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Leon, or Leon de Nicaragua, ſituate on the Lake aforeſaid, the Reſidence of the Governour, and the Biſhops Sea ; built in a ſandy ſoil, and begirt with Woods. 2. Granada, on the ſame Lake, ſixteen leagues from Leon, beautified with a fair Church and a ſtrong Caſtle, both founded by Ferdinando de Cordova : the City ſeated in a liberal and wealthy ſoil, well furniſhed with Sugar-canes; for the refining of which here are many Work-houſes, which they call Ingenios. 3. Segovia, diſtant from the former about 30 leagues, rich in veins of ſilver. 4. Jaen, (all called according to the names of ſome Towns in Spain) ſituate at the end of the Lake aforeſaid ; from whence by a long and narrow Chanel it diſembogueth into the Sea, near the Port of S. John. 5. Realeio, about a league diſtant from the Port of Poſſeſſion, in the Latitude of 12 degrees and 40 minutes ; inhabited for the moſt part, by Shipwrights and Mariners. 6. Nicoia, giving name to a little Territory, within the bounds whereof ſtandeth. 7. Avarines alſo. 8. Cartago, 40 leagues from Nicoia, equally diſtant from both Seas, on each of which it hath a convenient Port : this Town the principal of that part, which is called Coſta Rica.

6. VERAGUA hath on the Weſt, Coſta Rica ; on the Eaſt, bounded with the Diſtrict of Panama ; waſhed on both other ſides by the Sea : extended 50 leagues in length from Weſt to Eaſt; not above 25 where narroweſt, from one Sea to the other. The name given to it from the River Veragua, of greateſt note in it at the firſt diſcovery.

The ſoil hereof mountainous and exceeding barren, not fit for tillage, and leſs uſefull in feeding Cattel ; ſufficiently provided of Maize and Pot-herbs : but elſe of little neceſſary for the life of man ; unleſs the people could eat ſilver, or drink Aurum Potabile. Of both which Metals, but eſpecially of Gold, here are ſuch never-periſhing Mines, that the Spaniards think them able to ſupply all wants, and cure all Diſeaſes. Once being asked what made them ſo greedy of that Metal ; it was anſwered, That they were much troubled with grief of heart, for which Gold was a moſt Soveraign Medicine. And as the Countrey, ſuch the people, hardy, couragious, and warlike, and ſuch as bear the Spaniſh yoke with great impatience: the ſtouteſt and moſt untameable people, being bred moſt commonly in Mountainous and Woody Countreys.

Chief Rivers of this little Province, 1. Veragua which gives name unto it. 2. Belen, by the old Inhabitants called Yebra; at the mouth of which Columbus purpoſed to have ſetled a Spaniſh Colony, for the better tranſporting of his Gold. But finding that the Chanel, on the ceaſing of ſome rain which had fallen before, was become ſo ſhallow, that no ſhip could go in, or out, he gave over that purpoſe. 3. La Trinidad. 4. La Conceptiou; all falling into Mare del Nort. Their chief Towns, 1. Conception, on the mouth of that River, the ſeat of the Governour. 2. La Trinidad, on the banks of that River, near the Port of Belen, and ſix leagues Eaſt-wards of La Conception. 3. St. Foy (oppidum St. Fidis) twelve leagues from Conception on the South; where the Spaniards melt, and caſt their Gold into Bars and Ingots. 4. Carlos, not far from the ſhores of Mare del Zur. 5. Philippina, on the Weſt of Carlos. Each ſeated on a large and capacious Bay. . Before which Bayes lye a frie of Iſlands, which the Spaniards call Zebaco, from the chief amongſt them. Thirty in all; the principal, Zebaco, Cabaio, St. Marie, St. Martha, inhabited in former times, now not much frequented ; the people being dragged into the Continent to work in the Mines.

This Countrey oweth its firſt Diſcovery unto divers men, according to the ſeveral Members and diviſions of it. The laſt in order, being the firſt that was diſcovered, but the laſt that was conquered, had the honour to be viſited be Columbus himſelf. Who driving up and down theſe Coaſts, in the year 1502. hit on the entrances of the River, which afterwards he cauſed to be called Belen ; where hearing that there was plenty of Gold in the Mines of Hurira not far off, he intended to fortifie. But the River failing him as was ſaid before, and finding nothing fit to ſuſtain his men, he bent himſelf, though unwilling, to a further ſearch. He had before touched upon Honduras alſo, but I find not that he landed on it: the ſetling of theſe Countreys being deſtinated to another hand. Twenty years after this the moſt fortunate Cortez having fully quieted and compoſed the affairs of Mexico, reſolved to make his Maſter Lord of the reſt of America. And to that end ſent out his Officers and Commanders into ſeveral parts. By Pedro de Alvarado he ſubdued Guatimala; Hondura, by Chriſtopher de Olid: Veragua, and Nicaragua, by Conſalvo de Corduba. But fearing leſt the conquered Provinces might revolt again, he reſolved to viſit them in perſon. Attended by a choiſe band of 150 horſe, and as many foot, and 3000 Mexicans, he began his Journey in October 1524. and held on his progreſs as far as to Truxillo : where finding that Gonſales de Cordova had ſo plaid his Game, as there was no neceſſity of going further, he made a ſtand, having marched above 400. leagues with his little Army. Returning back another way, in April 1526. he came home to Mexico , with whoſe return we conclude alſo our ſurvey of the Northern Peninſula, containing all America Septentrionalis, or Mexicana.

OF PERUANA.

PERUANA, the other of the two great Peninſulas, into which the vaſt Continent of the NEW WORLD doth now ſtand divided, hath the form of a Pyramis reverſed : more anſwerably thereunto than Africk, though that ſo reſembled. Joyned to the other by a ſtraight and narrow Iſthmus, called the Straights of Darien, whereof we ſhall have opportunity to ſpeak more anon : which looks but like a ſtone miſ-laid in ſo great a building ; or the firſt ſtep, by which we are to climb the top, as in other Pyramids.

The name derived from Peru, the chief Province of it ; the Circumnavigation ſaid to be 1700. miles. Nothing elſe to be ſaid in the general, but what will ſerve more fitly for particular places ; except it be the deſcription of ſome prime Mountains and principal Rivers : which being of too long a courſe to be reckoned unto any one particular Province, may more properly deſerve place here. Of theſe the chief 1. Orellana, or the River of Amazons, called by the firſt name from Franciſco de Orellana, a Spaniard who firſt diſcovered it ; by the ſecond, from the Amazons, a kind of ſtout and warlike Women, who are ſaid to have inhabited on the banks thereof. The Fountain of it in Peru, the fall in the North Sea, or Mare del Nort. A river of ſo long a courſe, that the ſaid Orellana is reported to have ſailed in it 5000 miles, the ſeveral windings and turnings of it being reckoned in : and of ſo violent a current, that it is ſaid to keep its natural taſte and colour, above 30 miles after it falleth into the Sea ; the Chanel of it of that breadth, where it leaveth the Land, that it is accompted 60. leagues from one point to the other. 2. Orenoque, Navigable 1000 miles by ſhips of burden, and 2000. miles by Boats and Pinnaces; having received into it an hundred Rivers, openeth into the ſame Sea with 16 mouths, which part the earth into many Iſlands (ſome equal to the Iſle of Wight :) the moſt remote of thoſe Chanels 300 miles diſtant from one another. By ſome it is called Raliana, from Sir Walter Raleigh, who took great pains in the diſcovery and deſcription of it ; or rather in diſcovering it ſo far, as to be able to deſcribe it. 3. Maragnon, of a longer courſe than any of the other, affirmed to meaſure at the leaſt 6000 miles, from his firſt riſing to his fall ; and at his fall into the Sea, to be no leſs than 70 leagues from one ſide to the other. More properly to be called a Sea, than many of thoſe great Lakes, or largeſt Bays, which uſually enjoy that name. 4. Rio de la Plata, a River of a leſs courſe than the other, but equal unto moſt in the world beſides ; in length from its firſt Fountain 2000 mile, in breadth at his fall into the Sea, about 60 leagues : and of ſo violent a ſtream, that the Sea for many leagues together, altereth not the taſte of it. All theſe, as they do end their Race in the Atlantick, ſo they begin it from the main body of the Andes, or at the leaſt ſome Spur, or branch of that great body.

But before we venture further on more particulars, we are to tell you of theſe Andes, that they are the greateſt and moſt noted Mountains of all America ; beginning at Timama a Town of Popayan, in the New Realm of Granada ; and thence extended South-wards to the ſtraights of Magellan, for the ſpace of 1000 leagues and upwards. In breadth about 20 leagues, where they are at the narroweſt ; and of ſo vaſt an height withall, that they are ſaid to be higher than the Alpes, or the head of Caucaſus, or any of the moſt noted Mountains in other parts of the World. Not eaſie of aſcent, but in certain Paths, by reaſon of the thick and unpaſſable Woods, with which covered in all parts thereof which lye towards Peru (for how it is on the other ſide, or by what people it is neighboured, is not yet diſcovered :) barren, and craggy too withall, but ſo full of venomous Beaſts, and poyſonous Serpents, that they are ſaid to have deſtroyed a whole Army of one of the Kings of Peru, in his march that way. Inhabited by a people as rude and ſavage as the place, and as little hoſpitable. The moſt noted Mountain of America, as before was ſaid, and indeed the greateſt of the World. Of fame ſufficient of themſelves, not to be greatned by the addition of impoſſible Figments, or improbable Fictions. Among which laſt I reckon that of Abraham Ortelius a right Learned man, who will have theſe Mountains to be that which the Scripture calleth by the name of Sephar, Gen. 10.30. and there affirmed to be the utmoſt Eaſtern limit of the Sons of Joktan : the vanity and inconſequences of which ſtrange conceit, we have already noted when we were in India.

Proceed we now unto the particular deſcriptions of this great Peninſula, comprehending thoſe large and wealthy Countreys, which are known to us by the names of 1. Caſtella Aurea. 2. The New Realm of Granada. 3. Peru. 4. Chile. 5. Paragnay. 6. Braſil. 7. Guyana, and 8. Paria, with their ſeveral Iſlands. Such other Iſles as fall not properly and naturally under ſome of theſe, muſt be referred unto the general head of the American Iſlands, in the cloſe of all.

OF CASTELLA DEL ORO.

CASTELLA del ORO, Golden Caſtile, (Aurea Caſtella, as the Latines) is bounded on the Eaſt and North, with Mare del Noort; on the Weſt, with Mare del Zur, and ſome part of Veragua; on the South, with the New Realm of Granada. Called by the name of Caſtile, with reference to Caſtile in Spain; under the favour and good fortune of the Kings whereof it was firſt diſcovered: Aurea was added to it, partly for diſtinctions ſake, and partly in regard of that plenty of Gold which the firſt Diſcoverers found in it. It is alſo called Terra Firma, becauſe one of the firſt parts of Firm land, which the Spaniards touched at, having before diſcovered nothing but ſome Iſlands only.

The ſoyl and people being of ſuch ſeveral tempers, as not to be included in one common Character, we will conſider both apart in the ſeveral Provinces of, 1. Panama, 2. Darien, 3. Nova Andaluzia, 4. S. Martha, and 5. the little Province De la Hacha.

1. PANAMA, or the diſtrict of Panama, is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Golf of Uraba, by which parted from the main land of this large Peninſula; on the Weſt, with Veragua one of the Provinces of Guatimala in Mexicana; waſhed on both the other ſides with the Sea. So called of Panama the Town of moſt eſteem herein, and the Juridical reſort of Caſtella Aurea.

It taketh up the narroweſt part of the Streight, or Iſthmus, which joyns both Peninſulas together: not above 7. or 8. leagues over in the narroweſt place, betwixt Panama and Porto Bello, if meaſured by a ſtraight line from one Town to the other; though 18. leagues according to the courſe of the Road betwixt them, which by reaſon of the Hills and Rivers is full of turnings. Of ſome attempts to dig a Chanel, through this Iſthmus, to let the one Sea into the other; and of the memorable expedition of John Oxenham over it by land, we have ſpoke already.

The air hereof foggy, but exceeding hot, and conſequently very unhealthy, chiefly from May unto November: the ſoyl either mountainous and barren, or low and miery; naturally ſo unfit for grain, that it yieldeth nothing but Maize, and that but ſparingly; better for paſturage, in regard of its plenty of graſs, and the goodneſs of it: ſo full of Swine at the Spaniards firſt coming hither, that they thought they never ſhould deſtroy them; now they complain as much of their want, or paucity. As for the Inhabitants, whatſoever they were formerly, is not now material: moſt of the old ſtock rooted out by the Spaniards, and no new ones planted in their room; ſo that the Country in all parts, except towards the Sea, is almoſt deſolated, or forſaken.

The Country, as before was ſaid, of little breadth, and yet full of Rivers: the principal whereof, 1. Chagre, by the Spaniards called Rio de Lagartos, or the River of Crocodiles, (many of which are harboured in it) which falleth into Mare del Noort betwixt Nombre de Dios, and Porto Beleno. 2. Sardinilla. 3. Sardina. 4. Rio de Colubros, or the River of Snakes; and 5. Rio de Comagre, all falling into the ſame Sea. Then on the other ſide 6. Chepo, whoſe ſands in former times yielded plenty of Gold. 7. Rio de las Balſas, on the banks whereof groweth great ſtore of timber for the building of ſhips. 8. De Congos, emptying it ſelf into the Bay of S. Michaels.

Towns of moſt note, 1. S. Philip, ſeated on a ſafe and ſtrong Haven called Porto Belo: built in this place by the appointment of King Philip the ſecond, but by the counſel of John Baptiſta Antonelli, to be the ſtaple of the trade betwixt Spain and Panama: partly in regard of the unhealthineſs of Nombre di Dios, where it was before; but chiefly becauſe that Town was found to have lien too open to the invaſions of the Engliſh. Fortified with two ſtrong Caſtles, (on each ſide of the Haven one) but for all that ſurprized and pillaged by the Engliſh under Captain Parker, in the year 1601. 2. Nombre de Dios, conveniently ſeated in the Upper-ſea, for a Town of trade; and for that reaſon made the Staple of ſuch commodities, as were trucked betwixt Peru, and Spain; which brought from Spain, and landed here, were from hence conveyed over the Land to Panama, and there ſhipped for Peru; or brought from Peru, and landed at Panama, were by land brought unto this place, and here ſhipped for Spain. It took this name from Didaco Niqueſa a Spaniſh Adventurer, who having been diſtreſſed by tempeſts was driven in here, and bid his men go on ſhore, en nombre de Dios, in the name of God. In reference hereunto by the Latines, borrowing a Greek word, it is called Theonyma. Of great trade once, on the occaſion before mentioned: but in the year 1584. the trade was removed unto Porto Belo, by the counſel of Antonelli before named; and ſome years after that, the Inhabitants alſo. To haſten which, the taking of this Town by Sir Francis Drake, ſerved exceeding fitly. 3. Acla, on the Coaſt of the ſame Sea alſo, but on the South-Eaſt of Nombre de Dios. 4. Nata, or S. Jago de Nata, ſituate on the lower Sea on the borders of Veragua, about 30. leagues on the Weſt of Panama: 5. Panama, the chief City of Caſtella Aurea, the Reſidence of the Governour of the Courts of Juſtice, honoured with a Biſhops See, a Suffragan to the Arch-biſhop of Lima; and beautified with three fair Monaſteries; and a College of Jeſuits. Seated in the 9. degree of Northern Latitude; and ſo near the Sea, that the Waves come cloſe unto the Wall. A Town through which the Wealth of Spain, and Peru, paſſeth every year: yet not containing above 350. houſes; the number of the Souldiers greater than that of the Citizens. 6. S. Crux la Real, a league from Panama, inhabited totally by Negroes brought out of Guinea.

This Province was the firſt of thoſe on the Firm land, which were diſcovered by Columbus. But I find not that he left any name unto it, or to any River or Promontory of it, but only to a little Iland lying on the ſhore near Porto Belo, which he cauſed to be called Los Baſtimentos; becauſe being caſt hereon by chance, he found good ſtore of Maize and other proviſions, called Baſtimentos by the Spaniard. But the chief Ilands of this Province, are thoſe which Columbus never ſaw, called the Ilands of Pearls; ſituate in the Southern ſea, oppoſite to Panama, from which diſtant 17. leagues or thereabouts. In number above twenty, but two only inhabited, the one called Tarorequi, the other Del Rio; the reſt of them rather Rocks than Ilands. Much famed not only for the abundance, but the excellency of the Pearls there found; fairer than thoſe of Margarita, and Cubagna, ſo much commended. Once very profitable to the Spaniardt, till by their cruelty and covetouſneſs they unpeopled the Ilands, and deſtroyed the Pearls. Inhabited now only by a few Negroes, and ſome Slaves of Nicaragua, who live here to attend the grazing of their Maſters Cattel, in the fields and paſtures.

2. DARIEN hath on the North, the Diſtrict of Panoma; on the South, New Granada; on the Eaſt, the River of Darien, whence it hath its name, and the Golf of Uraba; and on the Weſt, the main Southern Ocean.

The Country of a temperate Air, and a fruitfull Soil: ſo happy in the production of Melons and ſuch other fruits, that within twenty dayes after they are ſown, they are fully ripe. With like felicity it bringeth forth Grapes, and other fruits; either natural hereunto, or brought hither from Europe. A tree here is called Hovo, not elſewhere known; the ſhade of which is conceived to be ſo wholſom, that the Spaniards ſeek them out to ſleep under them. Out of the Bloſſoms of it they diſtill a perfumed Water; of the Bark, a Bath or Lavatory, good for the opening of the pores, and redreſs of wearineſs; and from the Roots they draw a Liquor which they uſe to drink of. Of Beaſts and Fowl great plenty, whether wild or tame; and ſome of them not heard of in other places.

Principal Rivers hereof, 1. Darien, whence it hath the name; A clear water, and much drank of, but of a ſlow courſe and a narrow chanel; able to bear no bigger Veſſels than thoſe of one piece of wood uſed among the Salvages; we may call them Troughs. But with this ſlow courſe it falleth at laſt into the Golf of Uraba, a large Arm of the Sea, which pierceth far into the Land, and at the mouth is ſaid to be eight leagues over. 2. Rio de las Redas, and 3. De la Trepadera, both emptying themſelves into the Golf of Uraba. 4. Corobaci, on the ſame ſide of the Country alſo. 5. Beru, a River of the South-Sea, not much obſervable, but that ſome have laboured to derive the Etymology of Peru, from thence.

Towns of moſt note, though few of any, 1. Darien, on the Bank of the Golf of Uraba; oftentimes ſo unhealthy by the Miſts which do thence ariſe, that the Inhabitants uſe to ſend their ſick people to the freſh Air of Corobary, to revive their ſpirits. By the Spaniards it was called S. Maria Antiqua, afterwards the Antique of Darien, being new built by one Euciſus a Spaniſh Adventurer, An. 1510. and grew ſo ſuddenly into wealth and reputation, that within four years it was made an Epiſcopal Sea. But being built too near the Banks of the Darien, in a mooriſh and unhealthy place, both the Epiſcopal See, and the chief Inhabitants were removed to Panama. Some other Colonies of the Spaniards have been planted here; but either forſaken by themſelves, or deſtroyed by the Salvages: ſo that uow from Acla to the bottom of the Golf of Uraba, the Spaniards have not in their own hands either Town or Village. Nothing but ſome few ſcattered houſes in all that tract, for the uſe of the Natives; who formerly made their Neſts like Birds, on the tops of trees. 2. Bizu, 3. Los Angadeſos, two ſmall villages on the other ſide of the Country, poſſeſſed by the Salvages. Beſides theſe, and ſome forty ſhreds here and there diſperſed, all the reſt a Deſart. So that not being able to maintain the reputation of a diſtinct Province, the government hereof hath of late been devolved on the Ptefect of Panama.

3. NOVA ANDALUSIA hath on the Weſt, the River Darien, and the Golf of Uraba; on the Eaſt, the Province of S. Martha; on the North, the main Ocean; and on the South, the new Realm of Granada. So called with reference to Andaluſia a Province of Spain. Called alſo by ſome Writers Charthagena, from Carthagena now the chief City of it.

It is in length from the Golf of Uraba to the River of Magdalen, 80. Leagues, and near upon as much in breadth. Mountainous, and very full of woods, but in thoſe woods great ſtore of Roſin, Gums, and ſome kinds of Balſams. Here is alſo ſaid to be a Tree, which whoſoever toucheth, is in danger of poiſoning. The Soil, by reaſon of the abundance of rain which falls upon it, very moyſt and ſpewie; inſomuch that few of our Europæan fruits have proſpered in it. Few veins of Gold in all the Country, except only in that part hereof which is called Zena; where the Spaniards at their firſt coming, found great ſtore of treaſure. But it was taken out of the graves and Monuments of the dead, not found in Mines, or digged for as in other places: ſuch being the reputation of that Territory in former times, that the Nations far and near did carry the bodies of their Dead to be buried in it, with great quantity of Gold, Jewels, and other Riches. The Natives very fierce and ſtout, whiles they were a People: But giving the Spaniards many overthrows before fully conquered, they have been ſo conſumed and waſted by little and little, that there are not many of them left.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1. Rio de los Redos, and 2. Rio de los Anades, both falling into the Bay of Uraba. 3. Zenu, which paſſing thorow the Province above mentioned, to which it gives name, falleth into the Ocean, over againſt the Iland Fuerte. 4. S. Martha, of long courſe, and much eſtimation: For riſing in the moſt Southern parts of the New Realm of Granada, near the Æquinoctial, it paſſ[illegible] thorow the whole length of that Kingdom, and at the laſt mingleth its ſtreams with that of the Ri[illegible] Magdalen, not far from Mopox. By the Natives it is called Cauca. And as for Mountains, thoſe of moſt note are a continual Ridge of Hills, by the Spaniards called Cordillera, by the Natives Abibe; craggy, and difficult of aſcent; in breadth affirmed to be 20. leagues, but the length uncertain, the furtheſt ends of them towards the South not diſcovered hitherto.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Charthagena, ſituate in a ſandy Peninſula, ten degrees diſtant from the Æquator: well built, and for the bigneſs of it of great wealth and ſtate; conſiſting of 500. houſes, or thereabouts, but thoſe neat and handſom. Beautified with a Cathedral Church, three Monaſteries, and one of the beſt Havens of all America. Well fortified on both ſides, ſince the taking of it by Sir Francis Drake, who in the year 1585. took it by aſſault, and carried thence, beſides ineſtimable ſums of money, 240. braſs pieces of Ordnance. 2. Tolu. by the Spaniards called S. Jago, twelve miles from Carthagena; memorable for the moſt ſoveraign Balſam of all theſe parts, called the Balſam of Tolu; little inferior, if at all, to the Balſam of Egypt. 3. Mopox, or Santa Crux de Mopox, near the Confluences of the Rivers of Martha and Magdalens. 4. Baranca de Malambo, on the banks of the River Magdalen, ſix leagues from the Ocean; where ſuch Commodities as are brought by Sea for the New Realm of Granada, uſe to be unſhipped, and carried by Lighters, or ſmall Boats, up the River. 5. Sebaſtian de Buena viſta, built by Alfonſo de Oieda, An. 1508. in his firſt attempt upon this Country; ſituate on a riſing ground near the mouth of the Bay of Uraba, a league and a half from the Sea. 6. Villa de Maria, 30. leagues South of Carthagena, but of no great note.

4. S. MARTHA hath on the Weſt, Nova Andaluſia; on the Eaſt, Rio de la Hacha; on the North, the main Ocean; on the South, the New Realm of Granada: about 70. leagues in length, and as much in breadth. So called from S. Martha the chief City of it.

The Country Mountainous and barren, not fit for paſturage, or tillage; productive notwithſtanding of Limons, Orenges, Pomgranates, and ſuch other fruits as are brought hither out of Spain. The air on the Sea-Coaſts very hot and ſcalding, and in the midland parts as cold, becauſe of the neighbourhood of ſome Mountains alwayes covered with ſnow. The principal of thoſe Mountains, a long Ridge of Hills, by the Spaniards called Las Sierras Nievadas, or the Snowy Mountains; diſcernable by the Mariners 30. leagues at Sea; by whom called the Mountains of Tairona, from a Valley of that name beneath them; the Inhabitants whereof by the advantage of thoſe Hills, have hitherto preſerved their liberty againſt the Spaniards. The reſt, though ſubject to the Spaniards, have their ſeveral Kings, affirmed to be an arrogant and ill-natured people; made worſe perhaps than indeed they are, by reaſon of their hate to the Spaniards, whoſe government they live under with great unwillingneſs.

Chief Rivers of this Province, 1. Rio Grando de la Magdalena; which hath its fountain in the Hills of the New Realm of Granada, not far from the Æquator; but its fall into the Ocean betwixt Carthagena and S. Martha, in the Latitude of 12. degrees: where dividing it ſelf, it maketh an Iſland of 5. leagues long, and after openeth into the Sea with two wide mouths; diſcernable for ten leagues ſpace from the reſt of the Main, by the taſte and colour of the water. 2. Rio de Cazaze, which falleth into the Magdalen, as doth alſo 3. Cæſar, by the Natives called Pompatan: which having its fountain near the City of Kings in the Vale of Upar, paſſeth directly towards the South, till it meet with 4. Ayumas, another River of this Tract; accompanied with whom he runneth Weſt-ward for the ſpace of 70. leagues, and endeth in the great River of Magdalens, as before is ſaid, near the Foreſt of Alpuerte. 5. Bubia. 6. Piras. 7. Don Diego. 8. Palamini. 9. Gayza, falling into the Ocean.

Towns of moſt obſervation, 1. S. Martha, ſituate on the ſhores of the Ocean, in the Latitude of ten degrees and 30. minutes; neighboured by a ſafe and convenient Haven, defended from the winds by an high Mountain near unto it, and honoured with an Epiſcopal See. Small, and ill built when it was at the beſt; nor well recovered of the ſpoil it ſuffered by Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1595. and by Sir Anthony Sherley the next year after. 2. Tenariff, on the Banks of the Magdalen, 40. leagues from S. Martha. 3. Tanalameque, by the Spaniards called Villa de las Palmas, twenty leagues to the South of Tenariff. 4. Cividad de los Reyes, or the City of the Kings, ſituate in the Vale of Upar, on the banks of a deep and violent River, called Guatapori; which not far off falleth into the Cæſar: ill neighboured by the Inhabitants of the Vale of Toirona, not hitherto reduced under the command of the Kings of Spain. 5. Ramada, by the Spaniards called New Salamanca, in the ſame Valley of Upar; as liberally furniſhed with veins of Braſs, as it is with ſtones. 6. Ocanna, on the Weſtern Reach of the River Cæſar, equally diſtant from its confluence with Ayumas, and its fall into Magdalen.

5. RIO DE LA HACHA is the name of a little Province lying on the North-Eaſt of S. Martha: environed on two ſides with the main Ocean, and on the third (which is that of the Eaſt) with a large and ſpacious Arm of the Sea, called Golfo de Venezuela: the extremities hereof North-weſt, called Cabo la Vola; on the North-Eaſt, Cabo di Coqui boccoa.

It took this name from the Town and River of La Hacha, a ſmall Town, conſiſting of no more than an hundred houſes, but big enough to give name to ſo ſmall a Province. Built on a little Hill about a mile from the Sea; the Haven inconvenient and expoſed to the Northern winds, but the ſoyl about it very rich, fruitfull of all ſuch Plants as are brought from Spain; well ſtored with veins of Gold, excellent Saltwiches, and ſome Gems of great worth and vertue. Diſtant eight leagues from New Salamanca, and 18. leagues from the Cape la Vela: ſurprized and ſacked by Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1595. 2. Rancheria, ſix leagues on the Eaſt of De la Hacha, inhabited for the moſt part by ſuch as get their living by Perlfiſhing. 3. Topia, five leagues from La Hacha, and almoſt as much from the Sea: the Fields whereof lying betwixt the Town and New Salamanca, were terribly waſted by the Engliſh, in the year aforeſaid; becauſe the Governour of New Salamanca, with whom they had contracted for 4000. Ducats not to burn that Town, would not ſtand to his bargain.

Theſe Countreys diſcovered by Columbus, and by him called Terra Firma, as before was ſaid, were afterwards brought under the power of Spain, by two ſeveral men, imployed in the ſubduing of their ſeveral parts, Anno 1508. To Didaco Niqueſa was allotted the government and conqueſt of thoſe parts hereof, which lie on the Weſt of the Bay of the Uraba, containing the Præfectures of Darien and Panama, by the name of Caſtella del Oro: And to Alfonſo Oreda, all that lay on the Eaſt of that Gulf, by the name of Nova Andaluſia. But theſe two finiſhed not the work, though they firſt begun it: Enciſus diſcovering further on the River of Dariene, than Niqueſa had done before him; and Balboa finding out the way to the South-Sea, where Panama and the beſt of their trading lieth, which neither of the other had thought upon. Both afterwards joyned into one Province, the Præfectures of S. Martha and Rio de la Hacha (when conquered and ſubdued by the Spaniard) being added to it. One of their laſt Kings which held out againſt the Spaniards, was called Abibeia, who had his Palace on the top of a Tree, (as moſt of his ſubjects had their houſes;) from which when Franciſco de Vanques a Spaniſh Captain could by no other Rhetorick win him to deſcend, he laid his Axe to the Root, and began to fell it: which ſeen, the poor Prince was fain to come down, and compound both for his life and Palace at the will of his Enemies.

OF NOVA GRANADA.

NOVA GRANADA, or the New Realm of Granada, is bounded on the North, with Caſtella Aurea ; on the Weſt, with Mare del Zur ; on the Eaſt, with Veneznela. The Countreys lying on the South, are not yet diſcovered, ſhut up with vaſt Hills, and impaſſable Mountains ; except only in thoſe parts which lye near the Sea, where the way lyeth open to Peru. Thus called by Gonſalvo Ximenez, the firſt Diſcoverer ; who being a Native of Granada in Spain, gave this name unto it.

It is in length 130 leagues, and as much in breadth ; reckoning Popayan for a part of it, though by ſome made a diſtinct government. So that we may divide the whole into theſe two parts, Granada ſpecially ſo called, lying on the Weſt ; and 2 Popayana, lying towards Mare del Zur.

1. GRANADA, ſpecially ſo called, hath an Air, for the moſt part, well tempered betwixt heat and cold ; with little difference (if any) betwixt Summer and Winter, and not much in the length and ſhortneſs of dayes. The Countrey full of Woods, but of great fertility, well ſtored with Corn and Paſturage, many Herds of Cattel ; ſome veins of Gold and other Metals, and in that part hereof, which is called Tunia, great plenty of Emeralds ; and amongſt their Woods, that called Guaiacan, Medicinable for the French diſeaſe, grows in great abundance. The people tall and ſtrong of body, not very induſtrious, the greateſt part of their time being ſpent in Songs and Dances. The Women of a white and more clear complexion than any of their neighbours, and more handſomely habited ; apparelled in black, or party-coloured Mantles, girt about their middles ; their hair tyed up, and covered moſt an end with Chaplets intermixt with Flowers, and artifically compoſed.

Rivers of note I find not any, but thoſe of St. Martha, and St. Magdalen, deſcribed before : nor any diſtinction of it into ſeveral Provinces, but that the names of Tunia, Bagota, Panches, Colymæ, and Muſi, by which the Salvages were diſtinguiſhed, when firſt known to the Spaniards ; with reference to which the principal of their Towns are by ſome deſcribed.

Towns then of greateſt note, 1. St. Foy de Bagota, but commonly St. Foy, the Metropolis of this new Realm, the See of an Archbiſhop, and the ſeat of the Governour. Built by Gonſalvo Ximinez de Queſada, at the foot of the Mountains, not far from the Lake of Guatavita, on the banks of which they uſed to ſacrifize to their Idols. The Town inhabited by 600 Families of Spaniards, beſides thoſe of the Natives; and ſituate in the fourth degree of Northern Latitude. 2. S. Michael, twelve leagues on the North of S. Foy, a well traded Market. 3. Tocayma, in the Territory of the Panches, a barbarous and man-eating people, till reclaimed by the Spaniards ; and Maſters of the richeſt part of all the Countrey. The Town about 15 leagues from St. Foy, towards the North-Eaſt ; and ſeated on the banks of Pati, a little River, which not far off is ſwallowed up in the body of Magdalen. 4. Tudela, is the Countrey of the Muſi, and Colymæ, two warlike Nations ; ſituate on the banks of the River Zurbi, and made a Colony of the Spaniards at their firſt coming hither ; but deſerted by them not long after, for fear of the Salvages, though the want of Proviſions was pretended. 5. Trinidado, on the ſame River, but ſomewhat lower, and more remote from the Salvages ; by whom notwithſtanding much annoyed; the fields thereof full of veins of Chriſtal, Emeralds, Adamants, and Chalcedonians. 6. La Palma, built by the Spaniards in the ſame territory of the Muſi and Colymæ, An. 1572. 7. Tunia, ſo called according to the name of the Tribe, or Province, in which it is ſituate ; built on the top of an high Hill, that it might ſerve for a retreat and Fortreſs againſt the Salvages ; now a well traded Emporie, and very wealthy, the Inhabitants being able to impreſs 280 Horſe for preſent ſervice. 8. Pampelona, 60 leagues from St. Foy, towards the North-Eaſt, rich in Mines of Gold, and Herds of Cattel. 9. Merida, on the North of Pompiana, the furtheſt Town of all this Province on the North-Eaſt towards Veneznela : As 10 St. John de Los Lianos, or St. John upon the Plains is in the South-Eaſt, 50 leagues from St. Foy, and ſeated in a corner full of veins of Gold.

2. POPAYANA lyeth on the Weſt of New-Granada, ſtrictly and ſpecially ſo called; from which parted by the River Martha, which hath its original in this Countrey ; on the North bounded with Nova Andaluzia, or Carthagena ; and with Mare del Zur upon the Weſt. Extended in length from North to South 130 leagues at the leaſt ; and from the River to the Sea, betwixt 30 and 40.

The Country over-cloid with rain, breeds but little Maiz, leſs Wheat, and almoſt no Cattel ; though in ſome places richer than it is in others. The people anciently Man-eaters, and as rude as any, now more induſtrious and affable than the other Americans ; eſpecially about Popayan, where the ſoyl is alſo better tempered than in other places. The Rivers of moſt note beſide that of St. Martha, which we have ſpoken of already ; and ſome leſſer ſtreams which fall into it ; are 1. Rio de S. Juan. 2. Rio de Cedros. 3. Rio de S. Jago ; all falling into Mare del Zur.

Cities and Towns of greateſt note, 1. Popayan, called by the name of the King hereof, when firſt known to the Spaniards ; ſituate on a nameleſs but pleaſant River, in the midſt of a Plain, of great wealth, and a healthy air, in two degrees and 30 minutes of Northern Latitude : the ordinary reſidence of the Governour, and See of a Biſhop. The building fair unto the eye, but ſlight ; excepting the Cathedral, and a Monaſtery of the Friars called De mercede, which are ſtrong and laſting. 2. Antiochia, (or Sancta Fides de Antiochia) on the borders of Nova Andaluzia, 100. leagues diſtant from Popayan. Seated upon a little River which falls into the Martha, from which twelve leagues diſtant. 3. Caramanta, on the Martha it ſelf. 4. Patia, in a pleaſant Valley, on the banks of a ſmall River, but of excellent water. 5. S. Anne in the Cantred of Anzerman, by which name it is ſometimes called: Built on a little Hill betwixt two ſweet Rivers, and compaſſed round about with a Grove of moſt pleaſant fruits. 6. S. Jago de Arma, the chief Town of the Cantred of Arma; ſituate in a territory very rich in Gold, but otherwiſe unprovided of all manner of neceſſaries: Fifty leagues to the North-Eaſt of Popayan. 7. Carthage, in the Province of Quimbaia, 22 leagues from S. Jago de Arma, ſeated in a Plain betwixt two Torrents, ſeven leagues from the River of S. Martha. 8. Cali, a league from that River, but on the banks of another, in the Latitude of four degrees: neighboured by a vaſt and mighty Mountain, at whoſe foot it ſtandeth; where built by Sebaſtian de Betalcuzar, the firſt diſcoverer of this Countrey. 9. Bonaventure, on a Bay ſo called in the Southern Ocean; a ſmall Town, but of great uſe for the conveyance of the Commodities of New-Spain, unto Popayan, and other Towns of this Province. 10. Timanu, 80. leagues from Popayan towards the Eaſt, at the foot of that vaſt ridge of Mountains called the Andes; which hereabouts taking their beginning, extend as far South-wards as the ſtreights of Magellan. 11. S. Juan de Paſto, ſituate in a pleaſant Valley, but one degree from the Æquator. 12. Sebaſtian de la Plata, ſo called of its Silver Mines, in the South-Eaſt confines of the Province. 13. Almagner, on the ſides of a plain, but barren Mountain. 14. Madrigal, by the Natives called Chapan Chicu; in a barren ſoyl, were not Gold a ſupplement of all wants, which is there found in ſome abundance.

To this Province belong alſo ſome Iſlands in the Southern Ocean, that is to ſay, 1. The Iſle of Palmes, South of the Cape of Corrientes, ſo called from the abundance of Palms which are growing in it. 2. Gorgona, oppoſite to the mouth, or out-let of Rio de S. Juan, an Iſland of three leagues in compaſs; the Hills ſo high, the Vallies ſo extremely low, the Sun ſo little ſeen amongſt them, and the Woods ſo dark, that ſome have likened it to Hell. Not much obſervable, but that it did afford a lurking place unto Francis Pizarro, in his attempts upon Peru, when repulſed from landing on that Coaſt. 3. Del Gallo, a ſmall Iſland, not a league in circuit, on the South of Gorgona.

This whole Countrey thus divided into two Præfectures, but both ſubordinate to the Juridical Reſort in the City of S. Foy de Bagota, is indebted for its firſt Diſcovery to two ſeveral perſons. Granada ſpecially ſo called, was firſt diſcovered by Gonſalvo Ximinez de Queſada, employed therein by Ferdinand de Lugo, Admiral of the Canarie Iſlands, An. 1536. who paſſing up the River of Magdalen without moleſtation (more than the difficulties of the wayes through Fens and Forreſts) as far as the Cantred of Bagota, was there encountred by that King, whom he eaſily vanquiſhed, and waſting all his Territories, carried with him thence great quantity of Gold, Emeralds, and other Treaſure. The reſidue of thoſe Petit Princes which then governed in their ſeveral Tribes, either ſubmitted to him without oppoſition, or elſe were vanquiſhed at the firſt riſing. Having diſcovered and ſubdued every ſeveral Province, and miſerably murdered Sangipa the laſt King of Bagota, of whom he had made uſe in ſubduing the Panches, he cauſed it to be called The new Realm of Granada, for the reaſon formerly laid down; and ſumming up the ſpoils he had gotten in this eaſie War, he found them to amount to 1800. Emeralds, 191294. Pezoes of the fineſt Gold, 35000 of a coarſer and inferiour alloy. In his return he heard the news of Sebaſtian de Betalcazars marching on the other ſide of the River of S. Martha; who having at the ſame time diſcovered and ſubdued the Province of Popayana, was beating out his way towards the North Sea, and from thence to Spain. This Betalcazar, being by Franciſco Pezarro the Conquerer of Peru, made Governour of the Town and Province of Quito, and having ſecured all the Countrey to the very Sea, reſolved to open a way homewards through thoſe Regions, which lay betwixt his own Province, and Mare del Noort: And this he did reſolve the rather, in regard that he had been informed, that a rich Countrey, full of Gold, was in that Tract poſſeſſed by Popayan and Columbaz, two Petit Princes, but yet the greateſt in thoſe parts. Encountred in his march by the Roytelets of Patia and Paſto, he ſoon made them weary, and retire themſelves into the Woods and impaſſable Mountains; and paſſing ſlowly on, came at laſt to Popayan. Where though the Salvages entertained him with ſome frequent skirmiſhes, yet they grew quieter by degrees; giving the Spaniards leave to poſſeſs themſelves of their beſt Towns, and to build others in ſuch places as they thought convenient. But this was after the firſt Conqueſt, according to the coming over of ſucceeding Colonies: The firſt Conqueſt being finiſhed, An. 1536. when the New Realm of Granada was ſubdued by Ximinez.

OF PERU.

PERU is bounded on the Eaſt, with that vaſt ridge of Mountains which they call the Andes; on the Weſt, with Mare del Zur; on the North with Popayan, an Appendix of the New Realm of Granada; on the South, with Chile. So called from the River Peru, which being one of the firſt of note which the Spaniards met with in this Countrey, occaſioned them to give that name to the whole.

It is in length from North to South 700. leagues, but the breadth not equal. In ſome places 100 leagues broad, in others 60. in the reſt but 40. more or leſs according to the windings of the Seas and Mountains. Divided commonly into three parts, all of ſo different a nature from one another, as if they were far diſtant both in ſite and ſoyl. Theſe parts the Plains, the Hill-Countreys, and the Andes: the Plains, extended on the Sea-ſhore, in all places level without Hills; the Andes, a continual ridge of Mountains without any Vallies; the Sierra, or Hill-Countries, compoſed of both. Each part ſtretched out from North to South, the whole length of the Country: the Plains from the Sea-ſhore to the Hill Countries, for the moſt part ten leagues broad, in ſome places more; the Hill-Countries 20 leagues in breadth where narroweſt, and as much the Andes. In the Plains it never raineth; on the Andes continually in a manner; in the Hill-Countries rain from September to April, after that fair weather. In the Hill-Countries the Summer beginneth in April, and endeth in September; in the Plains their Summer beginneth in October, and endeth in April. So that a man may Travel from Summer, to Winter in one day; be frozen in the morning at his ſetting forth, and ſcorched with heat before he come to his Journeys end. Some other differences there are, as that the Andes are covered with Woods and Forreſts, whereas the Hill-Countries are bare and naked; the Plains, where there are ſtore of Rivers, and the benefit of the Sea beſides, ſandy and dry, and in moſt places deſtitute both of Fruits and Corn; in ſome parts of the Hill-Countries where there are no Rivers, and a rain but ſeldome, plenty of Roots, Maize, Fruits, and all other neceſſaries. In the Plains there never bloweth any but the Southerly wind, though it bring no rain with it; and in the Hills, winds from every Coaſt, and of every nature, ſome bringing Rain, ſome Snow, ſome claps of Thunder, and others fair weather at the heels of them. Inſomuch that it is obſerved, that ſuch of the Inhabitants of the Plains as go up to the Sierra, or Mountains, do find ſuch pains in the head and ſtomack, as freſh-water Souldiers when firſt Sea-ſick.

Not to purſue theſe differences any further in the ſeveral parts, we will look upon the whole in groſs: which we ſhal find but meanly furniſhed for the bigneſs, with thoſe Commodities which ſo large a Countrey might afford: inſomuch as many of the people live moſt on Roots, here being little Wheat, and not ſuch quantities of Maize (the ordinary bread-grain of the Americans) as to ſerve their multitudes. Nor find I that the Cattel of Europe have been either brought hither in any great numbers, or are grown to any great increaſe. Inſtead of which they have in their Woods and Paſtures infinite numbers of beaſts ſomewhat like wild Goats, (which the call Vicagues) and great ſtore of a kind of Sheep, by them called Pacos, profitable both for fleece and burden; as big as a ſmall breed of Horſes, but in taſte as pleaſing as our Mutton, and no leſs nouriſhing. A Creature ſo well acquainted with its own abilities, that when he findeth himſelf over-loaded, no blows, or violence ſhall make him move a foot forward, till his load be leſſened; and of ſo cheap a dyet, that he is content with very little, and ſometimes paſſeth three whole dayes without any water. The Camels of theſe parts, and not much unlike them.

This as it is by ſome accompted for a Creature proper to this Countrey onely (though in that miſtaken) ſo may it paſs amongſt the Rarities hereof: many of which it hath both in Beaſts, and Plants, and in inanimate bodies alſo. Amongſt their Plants they have a Fig-Tree, the North part whereof looking towards the Mountains, bringeth forth its Fruits in the Summer only; the Southern part looking to the Sea, fruitfull only in Winter. Some as deſervedly do count the Coca for a wonder, the Leaves whereof being dryed, and formed into Lozenges, (or little Pellets) are exceeding uſefull in a Journey. For melting in the mouth, they ſatisfie both hunger and thirſt, and preſerve a man in ſtrength, and his ſpirits in vigour; and generally are eſteemed of ſuch ſoveraign uſe, that it is thought that 100000. Basket full of the Leaves of this Tree are ſold yearly at the Mines of Potoſia only, each of which at the Markets of Cuſco would yield 12.d or 18.d a piece. Another Plant they tell us of, but I find no name for it, which if put into the hands of a ſick perſon, will inſtantly diſcover whether he be like to live, or dye. For if on the preſſing it in his hand he look merry and cheerfull, it is an aſſured ſign of his Recovery: as on the other ſide, of death, if ſad and troubled. Amongſt their Beaſts, beſides thoſe ſpoken of before, they reckon that which they call the Huanacu; of which it is obſerved, that the Males ſtand Centinel on the Mountains, while the Females are feeding in the Vallies: and if they ſee any men coming towards them, they ſet out their throats, to give their Females notice of ſome danger near; whom when they come up to them, they put in the front of the Retreat, interpoſing their own bodies betwixt them and their enemy. Nor want they Rarities of Nature even in things inanimate: here being ſaid to be a round Lake near the Mines of Potozi, whoſe water is ſo hot, though the Countrey be exceeding cold, that they who bathe themſelves are not able to endure the heats thereof, if they go but a little from the banks: there being in the midſt thereof a boyling of above twenty foot ſquare.

A Lake which never doth decreaſe, though they have drawn a great ſtream from it to ſerve their Metal-mills.

More profitable, though leſs rare, thoſe Metals, which thoſe Mills are made for; and no leſs profitable, one of thoſe Vulgar Plants, I mean Tobacco, growing more abundantly here than in other Countries of America: for which cauſe, and the reſemblance which it hath to Henbane, in form and quality, it is called the Henbane of Peru, by Gerrad and ſome others of our Modern Herbaliſts.. A Plant, which though in ſome reſpect being moderately taken, it may be ſerviceable for Phyſick: yet beſides the conſumption of the purſe, and imparing of our inwards parts, the immoderate, vain, and phantaſtical abuſe of this ſtinking weed, corrupteth the natural ſweetneſs of the breath, ſtupifieth the brain, and indeed is ſo prejudicial to the general eſteem of our Countrey-men, that one ſaith of them, Anglorum corpora, qui huic plantæ tantopere indulgent, in Barbarorum naturam degeneraſſe videntur. The two chief Vertues aſcribed unto it (pardon me I beſeech you this ſhort digreſſion) are, that it voideth Rheume, and is found to be a ſoveraign Antitode againſt Lues Venerea, that loathſome diſeaſe of the French Pox, For this laſt, like enough it is, that ſo unclean a Diſeaſe may be helped with ſuch an unſavory Medicine. But for the ſecond it may perhaps conſiſt more in opinion, than truth or reality; the Rheum, which it is ſaid to void, being no more than what it breedeth at the preſent. We may as well conclude that Bottle-ale is good for the breaking of wind (which effect we find commonly to follow on the drinking of it) though indeed it be only the ſame wind which it ſelf conveyed into the ſtomack. But Tobacco is by few now taken as Medicinal; it is of late times grown a Good-fellow, and fallen from a Phyſician to a Complement. An humour, which had never ſpread ſo far amongſt us, if the ſame means of prevention had been uſed by the Chriſtian Magiſtrates, as was by Morat-Baſſa among the Turks: who commanded a Pipe to be thruſt thorow the Noſe of a Turk whom he found taking Tobacco, and ſo to be carried in deriſion all about Conſtantinople. It is obſerved, that the taking of Tobacco was firſt brought into England, by the Mariners of Sir Francis Drake, An. 1585. And that it hapned not unfitly in the way of an Antidote to that immoderate uſe of drinking, which our Low-Countrey Souldiers had brought out of the Netherlands much about that time, Anno 1582. Before which time, the Engliſh of all Northern people were deemed to be moſt free from that Swiniſh Vice, wherein it is to be feared that they have much out-gone their Teachers, the Dutch. Certain it is, that it is taken ſo exceſſively by both theſe Nations, that I may juſtly ſay with a learned Fleming, Herbæ ejus, non dicam uſus, ſed abuſus, non modo in Anglia, ſed in Belgio, & alibi, inſanum in modum jam adolevit.

But the greateſt riches of this Countrey is moſt out of ſight, hid in the Bowels of the earth, but found in thoſe never-decaying Mines of Gold and Silver; more eminently abounding in this one Province than in all America. For inſtance whereof we may take the Silver Mines of Potozi, diſcovered in the year 1545. the fift of which, payable into the Kings Exchequer, amounted in forty years to a 111 millions of Pezoes, every Pezo being valued at ſix ſhillings and ſix pence; and yet a third part of the whole was diſcharged of that payment. By this one we may gueſs ſomewhat of the reſt, as by the proportion of one member, the dimenſions of the whole body may be probably aimed at; unleſs the riches of theſe Mines be beyond conjecture; of which it is affirmed by ſome knowing men, that they yield in many places more Gold than Earth. Upon which ground it is conceived by Arias Montanus, and ſome other very learned men, that this Peru is that land of Ophir to which Solomons Navy went for Gold; induced thereunto by that Text of the Chron. lib. 2. cap. 3. ver. 6. That the Gold was the Gold of Paruaim. A fancy not of ſo ſandy a foundation, as many others of that kind, if Peru had been the old name of this Countrey, and not newly given it by the Spaniards. By means whereof not only Spain, but all Europe alſo is better furniſhed with Gold and Silver, than ever formerly. For in the firſt ages of the World our Anceſtors the Britains (I muſt digreſs here once again) had no other money than Iron-rings, and Braſs-rings, which they uſed for Inſtruments of Exchange; and in the Roman Provinces, we read that the moſt uſual Materials of their coyn, was moſt times Braſs, and ſometimes Leather. Corium forma publica percuſſum, as it is in Seneca. Of which laſt ſort we find that Frederick the Emperour made uſe at the ſiege of Millain; and the Engliſh, in the time of the Barons Wars. And why not ſo? conſidering that no longer ſince, in the year 1574. the Hollanders being then reduced to ſome extremities, made money of Paſt-boord. But this hapneth only in Caſes of neceſſity, the two Metals of Gold and Silver having for many hundred years (though not in ſuch abundance as in later times) been the chief inſtruments of Exchange and Bartery betwixt man and man, and queſtionleſs will ſo continue to the end of the World. I know Sir Thomas More in the ſecond Book of his Utopia, preferreth Iron before Gold, becauſe more neceſſary for all uſes; Ut ſine quo non magis quam ſine igne atque aqua vivere Mortales queant: and that he giveth us there a Plot to bring Gold and Silver into contempt, telling us how the Utopians uſe to employ thoſe Metals, in making Chamber-pots, and Veſſels of more unclean neceſſities; eating and drinking for the moſt part in glaſs or earth. He telleth us alſo how they make chains and fetters of Gold to hold in their rebellious ſlaves, and Malefactors; how they puniſh infamous perſons by putting Gold Rings upon their fingers, Jewels of Gold in their Ears, and chains of Gold about their necks: how they adorn their little children with precious Jewels, which gayeties, when they come to Age, and ſee them worn by none but ſuch little children, they uſe to caſt away of their own accord; as with us our elder Boys leave off without conſtraint, their Babies, Cobnuts, and other Crepundia. He further telleth us how the Ambaſſadors of the Anemolii (a confederate State of the Utopians) coming amongſt them richly and gorgiouſly attired, were took for ſlaves, by reaſon of their Golden Chains, and the meaneſt of their Followers thought to be the Ambaſſadors: how the elder Boys derided the Strangers for wearing Jewels, as if they had been children ſtill; and how the people laught at their chains of Gold, as being too weak to ſhackle ſuch ſturdy Fellows. Now though it pleaſed that wiſe State to have any Gold or Silver at all amongſt them, it was not (as he telleth us) out of any eſteem which themſelves had of it; but therewith to provide themſelves of Forein aids, and pay their Armies, when the neceſſities of their affairs, or other reaſon of State did require the ſame. How this device would ſort with the humours of thoſe People, whom Lucian antiently did Fable, and ſome of later times more really do fancy to have their dwelling in the Moon, I am not able to ſay, as having hitherto had no commerce, nor correſpondence with the Inhabitants thereof: though poſſibly I may endeavour it in the end of this Book, and find it to ſort well enough with their condition. Certain I am, this ſublunary World of ours will never brook it. And ſo I leave it, and look back again on the Mines of Peru: the extraordinary plenty of Gold and Silver, which thoſe and the reſt of the New world have furniſhed the old World withall, being conceived by many knowing and judicious men, to be the cauſe of the dearneſs of all commodities at the preſent times, compared unto the cheapneſs of the times fore-going. For where much is, there greater prices will be given, than in other places. And yet there want not ſome that add alſo other cauſes, of the high prices of our dayes: viz. Monopolies, Combinations of Merchants and Crafts-men; tranſportation of Grain, pleaſure of great perſonages, the exceſs of private men, and the like: but theſe laſt I rather take to be non-cauſes, the firſt being indeed the principal. For, (as that excellent Sir Henry Savil, hath it in the end of his notes on Tacitus) the exceſſive abundance of τὰ νόμῳ μόνον ὄντα, things which conſiſt meerly on the conſtitution of men, draweth neceſſarily τὰ φύσει ὄντα, thoſe things which nature requireth, to an higher rate in the Maket. Capta ab Auguſto Alexandria (ſaith Oroſius) Roma in tantum opibus ejus crevit, ut dupla majora quam antehac, rerum venalium pretia ſtatuerentur. As for that queſtion, whether of the two Kingdoms be happier, that which ſupplieth it ſelf with money by Traffick and the works of Art; or that which is ſupplied by Mines growing, as the gift of nature; I find it by this tale in part reſolved. Two Merchants departing from Spain to get gold, touched upon part of Barbary, where the one buyeth Moors to dig and delve with; the other fraughteth his veſſel with ſheep: and being come to the Indies, the one finding Mines, ſet his ſlaves to work, and the other hapning in graſſie ground, put his ſheep to grazing. The Slaves grown cold and hungry, call for food and cloathing; which the ſheep-maſter by the increaſe of his ſtock had in great abundance; ſo that what the one got in gold with toil, charges and hazard both of life and health, he gladly gave unto the other in exchange or Bartery, for the continual ſupply of Victuals, Cloths, and other neceſſaries for himſelf and his ſervants. In the end the Mines being exhauſted, and all the money thence ariſing exchanged with the Shepherd for ſuch neceſſaries as his wants required, home comes the Shepherd in great triumph, with abundance of wealth, his Companion bringing nothing with him but the Tale of his travels. But I dare not take upon me to determine this point. Only I add, that the Engliſh and the Hollanders by the benefit of their Manufactures and continual Traffick did in concluſion weary the late King of Spain, King Philip the ſecond, and out-vied him (as it were) in wealth and treaſure; notwithſtanding his many Mines of Gold and ſilver in Barbary, India, Mexicana, Guinea, ſome in Spain and Italy, and theſe of Peruana which now we handle, and which have given occaſion unto this Diſcourſe, or Digreſſion rather.

It is now time to take a view of the People alſo, affirmed to be (for the moſt part) of great ſimplicity; yet ſome of them (thoſe ſpecially which lie near the Æquator) to be great diſſemblers, and never to diſcover their conceptions freely. Ignorant of Letters, but of good courage in the Wars, well skilled in managing ſuch weapons as they had been uſed to, and fearleſs of death; the rather prompted to this laſt by an old opinion held amongſt them, that in the other world they ſhall eat, and drink, and make love to Women. And therefore commonly at the Funeral of any great perſon, who was attended on in his life, they uſe to kill and bury with him one or more of his ſervants, to wait upon him after death. In the manner of their living much like the Jews; but not in habit: conform therein to the other Salvages, but that thoſe cover their upper parts with ſome decent garment, and leave the other Members bare. But this is only near the Æquator; both Sexes elſewhere wearing Mantles to their very Heels. Habited in one faſhion over all the Country, except the dreſſing of their heads, wherein ſcarce any one doth agree with another, but hath his faſhion to himſelf. The Women leſs eſteemed here than in other places, treated as Slaves, and ſometimes cruelly beaten upon ſlight occaſions: the men (as S. Paul ſaith of the antient Gentiles) leaving the natural uſe of the woman, and burning in their luſts towards one another. For which, if God delivered them into the hands of the Spaniards, they received that recompence which was meet.

Rivers of moſt note, 1. S. Jago, on the borders towards Popayana; a River of a violent courſe, and ſo great a depth, that it is 180. Fathoms deep at the influx of it. 2. Tombez, opening into a fair and capacious Bay, over againſt the Iſle of Puna, on the further ſide of the Æquator; an Iland of twelve Leagues in compaſs, and exceeding fruitfull. 3. Guagaquil, of a longer courſe than any of the other two, and falling into Mare del Zur on the South of Tombez; over againſt the Iſle of Lobos. No Iland after this of note upon all this Coaſt. If any come in our way which runneth towards the Eaſt, we ſhall meet with them in the view of the ſeveral Provinces; and ſo we ſhall of the Hills or Mountains which are moſt conſiderable; the Andes having been already touched on. Take we now notice of the great Lake of Titicaca, in which twelve Rivers are reported to loſe themſelves; in compaſs 80. Leagues, and uſually Navigable with ſhips and barks. The waters of it not ſo ſalt as thoſe of the ſea, but ſo thick that no body can drink them; yet on the banks of it many habitations, as good as any in Peru. By a fair water courſe or River it paſſeth into a leſs Lake, which they call Aulaga; and thence moſt probably findeth a way into the Sea, or elſe is ſwallowed in the Bowels of that thirſty earth; but the firſt more likely.

It is divided commonly into three Juridical Reſorts, viz. of 1. Quito, 2. Lima, and 3. Charcos; each having under it many ſeveral and ſubordinate Provinces, too many and of too ſmall note to be here conſidered. We will therefore look upon the chief, and of greateſt reckoning, 1. Quito, 2. Los Quixos, 3. Lima, 4. Cuſco, 5. Charcos, and 6. Collao; three on the Sea, and the other three in the midlands; to which the Ilands of it ſhall be joyned in the cloſe of all.

1. QUITO is bounded on the North with Popayan; on the Weſt, with Mare del Zur; on the South, with the Province of Lima; and on the Eaſt, with that of Los Quixos. So named from Quito the chief Town and Province of the firſt diviſion.

The ſoyl as fertile and as fit for the fruits of Europe, as any other in Peru: well ſtored with Cattel, eſpecially the Pacos or Peruvian ſheep; and plentifully furniſhed both with Fiſh and Fowl. In many parts great ſtore of Nitre, of which they make moſt approved good Gun-powder; and in ſome Rivers, eſpecially that of S. Barbara, many veins of Gold. The people generally induſtrious, eſpecially in the making of Cloth of Cotton, equal almoſt to ſilks for fineneſs; of conſtitution ſtrong and healthy, but given to lying, drinking, and ſuch other vices: with which they are ſo much in love, that though they are conceived to be apt of Learning, yet not without great difficulty brought to the Chriſtian Faith, nor willingly reclaimed from their antient Barbariſm. Extremely puniſhed with the Pox, an hereditary diſeaſe amongſt them; the very Girls and untouched Virgins ſo infected with it, that neither Tobacco, Guaiacan, nor Sarſaparilla, all which this Country doth afford in a great abundance, is able to preſerve them from it.

Towns of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Carangues, a large and ſumptuous Palace of the antient Kings, ſo named becauſe ſituate in the Territory of the Carangues, a barbarous, bloody, and man-eating people; ſubdued by Guayanacapa, one of the mightieſt of the Kings of Peru; from whom revolting, and withall killing many of his Miniſters and Garriſon-Souldiers, they were upon a ſecond conqueſt brought to the banks of a great Lake, into which 20000. of them being killed, were thrown. The Lake from thenceforth called Yaguarcocha, or the Lake of blood. 2. Otavallu, another Palace of the Kings, but far inferiour to the other; yet giving name unto the Cantred in which it ſtandeth. 3. Quito, the chief of this Reſort, and once the Regal ſeat of its proper Kings (till made ſubject by Guayanacapa before mentioned) the ruines of whoſe Palace are now remaining. By the Spaniards it is called S. Franciſco, built on the declivity of an Hill, not above 30. minutes from the Equinoctial; well fortified, and as well furniſhed with Ammunition: inhabited by about 500. Spaniards beſides the Natives. The ſtreets whereof ſtraight and broad; the buildings decent: the principal of which, the Cathedral Church, the Courts of Juſtice, and two Convents of Dominican, and Franciſcan Friers. The Town and Territory much annoyed by a Flaming Mountain, or Vulcano; which in the year 1560. caſt out ſuch abundance of cinders, that if a rain had not hapned beyond expectation, had made great ſpoil upon the place. 4. Tacunga, fifteen Leagues from Quito; and 5. Rhiobamba in the Territory of the Purvaſti, 40. Leagues from that; each of them honoured with another of thoſe antient Palaces. 6. Thomebamba, neighboured by another of the Kings Palaces, but more magnificent than the former; ſituate in the Country of the Canares: amongſt whom antiently the Women tilled the Land, and did all without doors; whiles the Men ſtaid at home and ſpun, and attended houſewifry. 7. Cuenca, 64. Leagues from Quito, on another Road, ſituate in a Country full of Gold, Silver, Braſs, Iron, and veins of Sulphur. 8. Loxa, ſixteen Leagues ſouthwards of Cuenca, ſituate in the fifth Degree of Southern Latitude, and in a ſweet and pleaſant Valley called Guxibamba, between two fine Riverets. The Citizens well furniſhed with Horſe and Armour, but not otherwiſe wealthy. 9. Zamora, twenty Leagues on the Eaſt of Loxa; and 10. Jaen, 35. from that: both ſituate in the Province of Quachimayo, and both ſo called in reference to two Cities of thoſe names in Spain. Then on the Sea coaſts, there are, 11. Portus Votas (Puerto Veio as the Spaniards call it) not far from the Sea ſide, but in ſo ill an Air, that it is not very much frequented. Said to be one of the firſt Towns of this Country poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, who digged up hereabouts the bones of a monſtrous Giant; whoſe Cheek-teeth were four fingers broad. 12. Mantu the Port Town to Porto Veio, from whence the trade is driven betwixt Panuma and Peru; the town it ſelf ſituate in a rich vein of Emeralds. 13. Guayaquil, or S. Jago de Guayaquil, called alſo Gulata; ſeated at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, near the influx of the River Guayaquil; a noted and much frequented Empory. 14. Caſtro, a Colony of Spaniards, planted, An. 1568. in that part of this Country, which they call Provincia de los Eſmeraldos, bordering on Popayan. 15. S. Michael, by the old Natives called Piura, the firſt Colony which the Spaniards planted in Peru, but otherwiſe of no eſtimation. 16. Payta, a ſmall Town, but neighboured by the ſafeſt and moſt frequented Haven of all this Country; as guarded from the wind by the Cape of S. Helens on the North, and Punta Piurina on the South; two eminent Promontories. The Town burnt An. 1587. by Capt. Cavendiſh. Who at the ſame time alſo pillaged the Iſle of Puna, the moſt noted Iland of this Tract, ſituate in the Bay of Tombez, as was ſaid before. Fruitfull of all things neceſſary to the life of man; Parats for pleaſure, Sarſaparilla for his health. The people in preceding times ſo ſtout and Warlike, that they maintained a long War with thoſe of Tombez, till in the end compoſed by the mediation of the Kings of Peru, to whom the King hereof (for a King it had) became an Homager, as ſince their embracing of the Goſpel, to the Kings of Spain.

2. LOS QUIXOS, lieth on the Eaſt of Quito, and the Weſt of El Darada, (one of the Cantreds of Guiana, ſo called from its abundance of Gold:) a little different in the nature of the ſoil and people from the Province of Quito; but that this is ſomewhat the more barren, and leſs ſtored with thoſe rich metals which the Spaniards come for. The People have alſo a diſtinct tongue of their own, though they both underſtand and ſpeak the Peruvian language.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Baeza, built in the year 1559. (which was within two years of the firſt diſcovery of this Region) by Giles Ramirez de Avlia, 18. leagues from Quito towards the Eaſt: now the ſeat of the Governour. 2. Archidona, 20. leagues on the South-eaſt of Baeza. 3. Avila, on the North of Archidona; ſo called with reference to Ramirez de Avila before mentioned, or to a Town of that name in Spain. 4. Sevilla del Oro, a Colony of the Spaniards, as the others are.

On the Eaſt of this Province lieth the Cantred of Canelam, inhabited by a blockiſh and ignorant People, and deſtitute of all things neceſſary for the comforts of life. Moſt mercileſly tormented, and caſt to dogs to be devoured, by Pizarro, becauſe they could not ſhew him the readieſt way to ſome richer Country than their own; this being the moſt barren Region of that part of Peru, which they call La Sierra, or the Hill-Countries. More Eaſt-wards yet, in that part, which they call the Andes, lie the Cantreds of the Bracomori, commonly called Juan de Salinas, by the name of the firſt Diſcoverer of it: A Country not inferior unto many for the quantity of Gold, ſuperior to any for the pureneſs of it. Chief Towns of which, 1 Valladolit, 2. Loiola, by the Natives called Cumbinama, 3. S. Jago de las Montannas (or S. James of the Mountains) all Spaniſh Colonies; and all of the foundation of John de Salinis à Loiola, once the Pro-Præfect of the Province, by whom firſt thorowly ſubdued to the Crown of Spain.

3. LIMA, called alſo LOS REYES, is bounded on the North, with Quito; on the South, with Charcas; on the Weſt, with Mare del Zur; on the Eaſt, with Colloa and the Province of Cuſco. So named from Lima or Los Reyes, the chief City of it. Extended from the 6. to the 16. Degree of Southern Latitude: or meaſuring it from the Promontory del Aguja North, to Arequipa on the South, it reacheth to 250. leagues. The ſoil of the ſame nature with that of Quito, but more diſtributed into Vallies, and better peopled.

Places of moſt obſervation, 1. Miraflores in the valley of Zanu, 110. leagues on the North of Lima, and about five leagues diſtant from the Sea; on which it hath an Haven belonging to it, called Chencepen. The Town well ſeated, and inhabited by a wealthy people, made ſuch by the abundance of Sugar-canes in the neighbouring Valley. 2. Truxillo, in the rich and flouriſhing Valley of Chimo, on the banks of a ſmall, but pleaſant River, and about two leagues from the Sea, where it hath a large, but unſafe Haven, which they call El Azzecife de Trugillo. The Town it ſelf ſituate in the 7. Degree and 30. minutes of Southern Latitude: well built and rich, one of the principal of Peru; inhabited by 1500. Spaniards, beſides the Natives, and beautified with four Convents of ſeveral Orders. 3. La Parilla, in the valley of the Santa, in which it ſtandeth, and by which it is furniſhed with a ſafe and convenient Road for ſhipping; 20. leagues South-wards of Truxillo, and neighboured by rich Mines of ſilver, not long ſince diſcovered. 4. Arnedo, ſeated amongſt Vineyards in the Valley of Chancay, ten leagues North of Lima. 5. Lima, by the Spaniards called Cividad de los Reyes, or the City of Kings, ſituate in the Valley of Lima, the moſt fruitfull part of all Peru, in the Latitude of twelve Degrees and an half. Built with much art, for all the chief ſtreets anſwer to the Market-place; ſcarce any private houſe which hath not water conveyed into it from the River; environed round about with ſweet fields, and moſt pleaſant gardens. The founder of it Franciſco Pizarro, who laid the firſt ſtone on Twelf day, (which the Spaniards call the Feaſt of Kings) whence it had the name, An. 1553. A Town of greater wealth than bigneſs, the Riches of Peru paſſing yearly thorow it: well houſed, whether we reſpect the private, or publick edifices; the Cathedral Church, made after the model of that of Sevil; the Convents of Religious Orders, the Courts of Juſtice, and the Palaces of the Archbiſhop and Vice-Roy, being all fair and goodly buildings; the Cathedral Church ſo well endowed, that the Revenues of the Archbiſhop do amount yearly to 30000. Ducats, beſides what belongeth to the Canons and other Miniſters. 6. Collao, the Haven town to Lima, from which two leagues diſtant, a Town of 600. families, for the moſt part Sea-men; every houſe having ſome Cellar in it for the ſtowage of Wine, Tobacco, Cables, Pitch, &c. for the uſe of Mariners; beſides thoſe, publike ware-houſes for the ſeveral commodities, which paſs from Lima hither, or from hence to Lima. Unfortified till the year 1579. when ſacked and ſpoiled of infinite treaſures by Sir Francis Drake; ſince that time ſtrengthened by two Bulwarks, and a wall of earth, with 30. piece of Braſs-Ordnance planted on the works. 7. Pachacama in the Valley ſo called, but four leagues on the South of Lima: memorable for a Temple, in which Pizarro found above 900000. Ducats of gold and ſilver, not reckoning in thoſe infinite treaſures which the Souldiers had laid hands on before his coming. 8. Guarco, a Colony of 300. Spaniards, ſixteen leagues on the South of Pachacama; environed with the beſt fields for Wheat in all Peru. 9. Valverde, in a Valley of the ſame name, ſo called from the perpetual greenneſs of it; beſt furniſhed with Vines, and thoſe affording the beſt wines of all this Country. A large Town conſiſting of 500. Spaniards, beſides women and children, and other inhabitants of the Country: well traded, conſidering its diſtance from the Sea (Puerto Quemado the Haven to it, being ſix leagues off) and beautified with a fair Church, an Hoſpital, three Frieries, and the handſomeſt women of theſe parts. Diſtant from Lima 35. leagues. 10. Caſtro Verreyna, in the Valley of Chocolocacha, 60. leagues from Lima, enriched with Mines of the pureſt Silver, digged out of a dry and barren hill, alwayes covered with ſnow; and ſtanding in ſo ſharp an air, that the Spaniſh women will not be delivered in it, but are carried further off to be brought to bed. From hence, as I conjecture, comes that vein of Tobacco, which our Good-fellows celebrate by the name of the right Verreinas. 11. Arequipa in the Valley of Quilca, 120. leagues from Lima, a pleaſing and delightfull town; which ſituate at the foot of a flaming mountain, (from which in the year 1600. it received much harm) enjoyeth a freſh and temperate Air, and a ſoil alwayes flouriſhing. The ſilver of Plata and Potoſi paſſeth thorow this town, and is ſhipped for Panama, at an Haven belonging to it; ſituate on the mouth of the River Chile (upon which Arequipa ſtandeth) but diſtant from the town about 14. leagues. 12. Caxamalca, more within the land, but more towards the North, heretofore beautified with a Royal Palace of the Kings of Peru ; memorable for the impriſonment and murder of Atabilaba, or Athualpa, the laſt King of this Country, vanquiſhed not far off by Franciſco Pizarro. 13. Cachapoyare, in the Cantred ſo called, the beſt inhabited of any one Cantred of thoſe parts, ſuppoſed to contain in it 20000. of the Natural Inhabitants, which pay duties to the King of Spain ; and ſo eſteemed for beautifull women, that from hence the Kings were antiently furniſhed with their Concubines. 14. Leon de Guanuco, (the addition given it from the Province in which it ſtandeth) a Colony of Spaniards, rich, ſweet, and very pleaſantly ſeated : beautified heretofore with a moſt magnificent Palace of the Kings ; as now with ſome Religious houſes, a College of Jeſuits, and the dwellings of many of the Nobility. Many other midland Towns there are, but of no great note, and therefore purpoſely paſſed over.

4. CUSCO comprehendeth, as the chief, all thoſe ſeveral Provinces of the Hill-Countries, and the Andes, which lie Southwards of the Province or Cantred of Guanaco. Bleſt with a ſweet and temperate Air, not over-ſcalded with the Sun, nor dulled with the diſtempers of the Evening miſts : the Country full of freſh Rivers, notable good paſturage, and great herds of Cattel ; well ſtored with Coca, which is gathered here in ſome abundance, and moſt excellent Veniſon.

Places of moſt repute in it, 1. Bombon, in the ſame Latitude with Lima ; neighboured by a Lake called Laguna de Chinca cocha, ten leagues in compaſs, begirt about with pleaſant hills, and built upon with many rich and as pleaſant villages ; out of which runneth the River Marannon, one of the greateſt of theſe parts, ſuppoſed by the Inhabitants to end his courſe in the Mare del Noort. 2. Parcos, once beautified with a Regal Palace, ſeated on the top of a little hill, and begirt about with craggy Mountains. 3. Guamanga, by the Spaniards called S. Juan de la Vittoria, ſituate under the 13. Degree of Southern Latitude, on the banks of a freſh and pleaſing ſtream : well built, the houſes being all of ſtone, and tiled or ſlatted ; three Churches, one of them a Cathedral, beſides divers Convents. 4. Bicar, ſuppoſed to be built in the very Center of Peru ; where ſtill remain the ruins of a ſumptuous Palace. 5. Guancabelica, a new Town, or but newly raiſed into eſteem, ſuppoſed to contain at the preſent 2000. Spaniards, and double that number of the Natives. Increaſed ſince the year 1566. from a beggerly Village to this greatneſs, by the Mines of Quick-ſilver then diſcovered : Mines of ſuch Riches, that the Kings part out of them amounteth yearly to above 40000. Pezoes, which is about 130000l. of our Engliſh money. And yet this is not all the benefit he receives from them neither ; that Mineral being found ſo neceſſary for the purifying and ſpeedy extraction of their Gold, that it is not ſaid without cauſe by the Chymiſts, that Quick-ſilver gives the matter to Gold, and Sulphur the form. 6. CUSCO, in the Latitude of 13. Degrees and 30. minutes, about 130. leagues on the Eaſt of Lima ; and ſituate in a rugged and unequal ſoil, begirt with Mountains ; but on both ſides of a pleaſant and commodious River. Once the ſeat-royal of the Ingas or Peruvian Kings ; who the more to beautifie this City, commanded every one of his Nobility to build here a Palace for their continual abode ; ſtill of moſt credit in this Country, both for beauty and bigneſs, and the multitudes of Inhabitants ; here being thought to dwell 3000. Spaniards, and 10000. of the Natives, beſides women and children. The Palace of the King advanced on a lofty mountain, was held to be a work of ſo great magnificence, built of ſuch huge and maſſie ſtones, that the Spaniards thought it to have been the work rather of devils than of men. Now miſerably defaced, moſt of the ſtones being tumbled down to build private houſes in the City ; ſome of the Churches raiſed alſo by the ruins of it, and amongſt them perhaps both the Biſhops Palace and Cathedral, whoſe annual Rents are eſtimated at 20000. Ducats. Yet did not this vaſt Building yield more luſtre to the City of Cuſco, than a ſpacious Market-place ; the Center in which thoſe high-wayes did meet together, which the Ingas had cauſed to be made croſs the Kingdom, both for length and breadth, with moſt incredible charge and pains, for the uſe of their Subjects. Of which more hereafter. 7. S. Franciſco de la Vittoria, at the foot of the Andes, a Spaniſh Colony, and about 20. leagues from Cuſco. 8. S. Juan del Oro, in the Valley of Caravayan, neighboured with rich Mines of the pureſt Gold, whence it had the name ; a Colony of Spaniards alſo. Beyond the Andes lie ſome Countries much famed for wealth : the diſcovery whereof hath often been attempted by the Spaniards, ſometimes with loſs, not ſeldom with ſome hopes of a better fortune, but hitherto without ſucceſs.

5. COLLAO lieth on the South of thoſe Provinces, which we have comprehended under the name of Cuſco ; having on the Weſt, the reſt of Lima ; on the South, Los Charchos ; on the Eaſt, thoſe unknown Countries beyond the Andes. Shut up on the Eaſt and Weſt by two mountainous Ridges ; which keeping in one main body till they come beyond the City of Cuſco, do there divide themſelves, and grow wider and wider, not to meet again.

The Country plain and full of Rivers, well ſtored with rich paſtures, and thoſe paſtures with great herds of Cattel ; barren of Corn, and not well furniſhed with Maize ; inſtead whereof they make their bread of a Root called Popa, dried in the ſun and bruiſed to powder ; of which the Spaniards make great gain at the Mines of Potoſi. Yet notwithſtanding this great want, it is thought to be the moſt populous part of all Peru ; the ſoundneſs and temperature of the Air (which is here very much commended) as much conducing to the populoſity of a Country, as the richneſs and plenties of the Soyl. The people alſo of a clearer and more ſolid judgement, than the reſt of Peru : and ſo well ſkilled in the obſervations of the courſe of the Moon, that the Spaniards at their coming hither, found the year diſtinguiſhed into Moneths, weeks, dayes ; for each of which they had a proper and ſignificant name. The famous Lake of Titicaca is within this Province.

Places of greateſt note in it, 1. Chuquinga, naturally ſtrong and almoſt inacceſſible, invironed either with unfordable waters, or impaſſable Mountains: one Cauſey only leading to it, which for the ſpace of three leagues, is ſaid to be capable but of one at once. 2. Ayavire, enobled with many fair and coſtly buildings; eſpecially with Monuments of the dead, which exceed the reſt both in coſt and number; for that cauſe by the Spaniards called Las Sepulturas. The Inhabitants of this Tract much waſted by the Civil Wars, which the Spaniards had among themſelves. 3. Hatuncolla, the Metropolis, or chief Town of this Province, as the name doth ſignifie: not far from which the famous River Caravaya, famous for the abundance of Gold in the ſands thereof, hath its firſt original. 4. Chiquita, a Colony of the Spaaiards, on the banks of the Lake of Titicaca; a Town of ſo great trade and riches, that the Governour hereof is named immediately by the King; his place being eſtimated at the worth of 50000 Ducats yearly. 5. Tiagnanaco, at the mouth, or out-let of that Lake; ſuppoſed to be the moſt ancient Burrough of Peru: now moſt remarkable for the ruines of certain great and ſtupendious buildings, ſome of the ſtones whereof are ſaid to be 30 foot long, fifteen foot in breadth, and ſix in thickneſs: not to be brought thither without the help of Iron Engines (which this people had not till of late) but by ſome ſtrange Arts. 5. De la Paz, or Nueſtra Sennora de la Paz; by the Spaniards called alſo Pueblo Neuvo, and by the Natives Chiquiabo, according to the name of the Cantred in which it ſtandeth, is ſituate at the foot of a little Mountain, by which defended from the injuries of wind and weather, but over-looking a large plain of great fertility; well watered, and well woodded both for fruits and fewel. 7. Chilane. 8. Acos. 9. Pomata. 10. Cepita; and others of as little note.

6. LOS CHARCAS on the North is bounded with Lima, and Collao; on the South, with Chile; on the Weſt, with Mare del Zur; on the Eaſt, with ſome Countreys not yet well diſcovered, interpoſed betwixt it and the Province of Rio de la Plata. This alſo called by the name of Plata, according to the name of the chief City of it.

The Countrey extended in length from North to South, but 300. leagues; but meaſuring by the Seaſhores, above 400. Not very rich in Corn, or Cattel, though in many places furniſhed with good Paſture-ground; but for the inexhauſtible Mines of Gold and Silver, not be equalled in Peru. Of theſe the principal thoſe of Porco and Potoſi, but theſe laſt the chief: out of which comes that maſs of Silver, which yieldeth the King ſo much profit yearly, as before was mentioned. The Mines 200. Fathoms deep, to which they do deſcend by Ladders made of raw Hides, 800. ſteps: ſome of the workmen not ſeeing the Sun many months together; many fall down with their loads of Silver on their backs, pulling others after them; and many dying in the works for want of Air. For the refining of this Silver there are 52 Engines, or Silver-mills upon a River near unto it; 22 more in the Valley of Tarapia not far off, beſides many which they turn with horſes. The Poets words never more literally verified than in theſe deep mines; where ſpeaking of the Iron-age, he deſcribes it thus:

Nec tantum ſegetes, alimentaque debita dives
Poſcebatur humus; ſed itum eſt in viſcera terra;
Quaſque recondiderat, Stygiiſque admoverat umbris,
Effodiuntur opes, irritamenta malorum.

Which I find thus rendred by George Sandys.

Nor with rich Earths juſt nouriſhments content,
For treaſure they her ſecret entrails rent;
That powerfull evil, which all power invades,
By her well hid, and wrapt in Stygian ſhades.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Plata, ſo called from the rich Mines of Silver, and found in Mount Parco near adjoyning, well emptied by the ancient Ingas, but ſearched into again by Franciſco Pizarro; who (it is thought) might have raiſed hence 200000. Ducats of yearly income, if hopes of greater at Potoſi had not took him off. The Town commodiouſly ſeated in a fruitfull ſoil, in the 19th. degree of Latitude, and 180 leagues diſtant from the City of Cuſco; honoured with the ſeat of the Governour, and the Courts of Juſtice; and beautified (beſides many religious houſes) with a fair Cathedral; the See of the beſt endowed Biſhoprick of all Peru; his Revenues being eſteemed at 80000 Ducats of yearly Rents. By the Natives it is called Chuquiſacay. 2. Oropeſa, twenty leagues from Plata, built by Don Francis de Toledo, when Vice-Roy here, in the rich and pleaſant Valley called Cochabamba, An. 1565. 3. Potoſi, neighboured by thoſe wealthy Mines already mentioned. Diſcovered firſt in the year 1545. before which time this Town was but a ſorry Village; now the beſt peopled and frequented in all the Province: ſaid to be conſtantly inhabited by four, or five thouſand Spaniards, many more of the Natives; not ſo few as 30000. workmen appertaining to it, but lodged in the Villages adjoyning: beſides the infinite reſort of Merchants in purſute of profit, and idle Gallants, who come hither for their luſts and pleaſures. Situate in the 21 Degree, and 40 Minutes of Southern Latitude, in a cold and very barren ſoil; yet plentifully furniſhed with all Commodities, both for neceſſity and delight. For as the money is, ſo the Market alwaies. 4. Miſque, a ſmall Town, but one which furniſheth Potoſia, with good plenty of Wine, as 5. Lagunilla, and 6. Tarixa, do with Wheat, Maize, Sugar, and choice of Fruits. 7. Arica, the moſt noted Haven of this Countrey, in the Latitude of 19 Degrees, and 80 Leagues, or thereabouts from the Mines of Potoſia; the wealth whereof brought hither on the backs of their ſheep, is here ſhipped for Lima; the truth hereof experienced by Sir Francis Drake, who ſeized here on three Spaniſh ſhips, in one of which was 57 Bars of Silver, each of them twenty pound weight a piece. Few other Towns, if any, upon all this Coaſt, which is altogether Rocky, barren, and unfit for habitation; accordingly but little peopled, or not at all.

Come we now to the Peruvian ſtory, which we ſhall ſum up with as much brevity as we can: The people generally governed by the Chief of their Tribes, as in all Countreys elſe, where neither the Arms of Foreiners, nor the ambition of ſome few of the Natives, had not diminiſhed any thing of thoſe Natural rights. Not ſubject to any one Supreme till theſe latter times; the Ingas, or Monarchs of Peru growing unto their greatneſs but a little before their fall. Their Territory at the firſt ſo ſmall, that it was not above five, or ſix leagues in compaſs; ſituate in that part of the Countrey where the City of Cuſco now ſtandeth. Oppoſed at their firſt incroachments by the Cannares a valiant Nation, and likely to have had the better, if the Ingas had not helped themſelves by a piece of wit: giving it out, that their Family had not only been the Seminary from which mankind came; but the Authors of that Religion alſo which was then iu uſe; particularly that the whole World, having been deſtroyed by a Flood, except only ſeven (ſo far they hit upon the truth) which ſeven had hid themſelves in a Cave, called Patacambo; where having lived in ſafety till the fury of the waters had been aſſwaged, they came abroad at laſt and re-peopled the Countrey; that Viracocha the Creator, and great God of Nature, had appeared to one of them, and taught him how, and with what rites he would be worſhipped; which rites were afterwards received over all Peru: And finally, that the ſame Viracocha had appeared lately to the Chief of their Family; aſſuring him that he would aid him with inviſible forces againſt all their Enemies. This tale ſoon gained belief amongſt thoſe Barbarians; and that belief drew many to take part with the Ingas, by that aid victorious. This is ſuppoſed to have hapned 400 years before the Spaniards put an end to this flouriſhing Kingdome, which was in the year 1533. Within which time they had brought all this Countrey, which we now call Peru, and many of the adjoyning Provinces, under their Dominion. Their Kings were called Ingas, as the Ægyptians Pharaoh, the Tartars Cham; the word Inga ſignifying an Emperour, as Capa Ingas (by which they alſo ſometimes called them) the only Emperours. Much reverenced by their Subjects, and ſo faithfully ſerved, that never any of their Subjects were found guilty of Treaſon. Nor wanted they good Arts whereby to indear their Subjects, and keep them out of leiſure to foment new factions. The way of indearment, by the fair and ſatisfactory diſtribution of the ſpoyls gotten in the Wars, whether Lands, or Goods; alſo which they divided into three parts: allotting the firſt unto the ſervice of the Gods, the ſecond for the maintenance of the King, his Court, and Nobles; the third, to the relief of the common people. A diſtribution far more equal than that of Lycurgus, or the Lex Agraria of the Romans. But when there was no cauſe of Wars, they kept the people buſied in their works of Magnificence; as building Palaces in every one of the Conquered Provinces, which ſerved not only as Forts to aſſure the Conqueſt, but were employed as Store-houſes to lay up Proviſions, diſtributed amongſt the people in times of dearth. But that which was the work as of great trouble, ſo of chiefeſt uſe was the croſs-wayes they made over all the Countrey, the one upon the Mountains, and the other on the Plains, extending 500 leagues in length: a work to be preferred before any both of Rome and Ægypt. For they were forced to raiſe the ground in many places to the heighth of the Mountains, and lay the Mountains level with the flatteſt Plains; to cut through ſome Rocks, and under-prop others that were ruinous; to make even ſuch wayes as were uneaſie, and ſupport the Precipices; and in the Plains to vanquiſh ſo many difficulties, as the uncertain foundation of a ſandy Country muſt needs carry with it. Kept to theſe tasks, the people had no leiſure to think of practices; yet well content to undergo them, in regard they ſaw it tended to the publick benefit. And for the Caciques (ſo they call the Nobility) the Inga did not only command them to reſide in Cuſco, to be aſſured of their perſons: but cauſed them to ſend their Children to be brought up there; that they might ſerve as Hoſtages for the Fathers Loyalty. They ordered alſo that all ſuch as repaired to Cuſco the Imperial City, ſhould be attired according to his own Countrey faſhion; ſo to prevent thoſe Leagues and Aſſociations, which otherwiſe without any note, or obſervation, might be made amongſt them. Many ſuch Politick inſtitutions were by them deviſed, which had little of the Barbarous in them; and cleerly ſhewed that there were other Nations which had Eyes in their Heads, beſide thoſe of China. What elſe concerns the ſtory of them, offereth it ſelf in the following Catalogue of

The Kings of PERU.

1. Mango-Capac, deſcended of the chief of the firſt ſeven Families, the firſt who laid the foundation of this puiſſant Monarchie; ſubdued the Cannares, and built the City of Cuſco.
2. Sinchi-Rocha, eldeſt Son of Mango, ſubdued a great part of Collao, as far as Chancara.
3. Lonque-Yupanqui, the Son of Sinchi, conquered Chiquito, Ayavire, the Canus, and the Inhabitants about Titicaca; the firſt advancer of the ſervice of Viracocha, from whom he did pretend to have many viſits.
4. Mayta-Capac, the Son of Yupanqui, ſubdued all the reſt of Collao, the Provinces of Chuquiapa, and a great part of the Charcas.
5. Capac-Yupanqui, or Yupanqui II. the Son of Mayta, enlarged his Kingdome weſtward unto Mare del Zur.

6. Rocha II. or Yncha Rocha, eldeſt Son of Yupanqui the ſecond, enlarged his Kingdome towards the North, by the conqueſt of the great Province of Antabyallam, and many others.

7. Jahuar-Huacac, Son of Rocha the ſecond, added to his Eſtatee (by the valour of his brother Mayta) all the Southern parts from Arequipa to Tacaman. Depoſed by the practice of his Son.

8. Viracocha, the Son of Huacac, having ſetled and inlarged his Empire, raiſed many great and ſtately works, aud amongſt others many Aquæducts of great Uſe but Charge. For fear of him, Hancohualla, King of the Chuncas, with many thouſands of his people, forſook their Countrey.

9. Pachacutec-Ynca, Son of Virachoca, improved his Kingdome by the conqueſt of many Provinces lying towards the Andes, and South-Sea, with that of Caxamalcu Northwards.

10. Yupanqui III. or Yncha Yupanchi, Son of Pachatucec, ſubdued the Conches, and Moxes, with ſome part of Chile.

11. Yupanqui IV. or Tapac Ynca Yupanchi, Son of Yupanqui the third, extended his Dominions as far as Quito.

12. Huayna-Capac, or Guaynacapac, Son of Yupanqui the fourth, the moſt mighty Monarch of Peru, conquered the whole Province of Quito; and is ſuppoſed to be the Founder of thoſe two great Roads ſpoken of before.

13. Huaſcar, or Guaſcat Ynca, the eldeſt Son of Guaynacapa, after a Reign of five years depoſed and ſlain by his brother.

14. Athualpa, or Atubaliba, the third Son of Guaynacapa, by the Daughter and Heir of the King of Quito: into which Kingdome he ſucceeded by the Will of his Father. Commanded by his brother to do Homage for the Kingdome of Quito, he came upon him with ſuch power, that he over-came him, and ſo gained the Kingdome. Vanquiſhed afterwards by Pizarro at the Battel of Caxamalca, he was taken Priſoner. And though he gave in Ranſome for his Life and Liberty, an houſe piled up on all ſides with Gold and Silver, valued (as ſome ſay) at ten Millions of Crowns, yet they perfidiouſly ſlew him.

15. Mango Capac II. the ſecond Son of Guaynacapac, ſubſtituted by Pizarro in his Brothers Throne; after many viciſſitudes of Fortune, was at laſt ſlain in the City of Cuſco; and ſo the Kingdom of the Ingas began and ended in a Prince of the ſame Name; as it had hapned formerly to ſome other Eſtates.

Let us next look upon the birth and fortune of that Pizarro, who ſubdued this moſt potent and flouriſhing Kingdom, and made it a member of the Spaniſh Empire; and we ſhall find that he was born at Truſiglio, a Village of Navar; and by the poor Whore his Mother, laid in the Church-porch, and ſo left to Gods providence: by whoſe direction (there being none found that would give him the breaſt) he was nouriſhed for certain dayes, by ſucking a Sow. At laſt one Gonſalles, a Souldier, acknowledged him for his Son, put him to Nurſe, and when he was ſomewhat grown, ſet him to keep his Swine: ſome of which being ſtrayed, the boy durſt not for fear return home, but betook himſelf to his heels, ran unto Sevil, and there ſhipped himſelf for America, where he attended Alfonſo de Oioda in the diſcovery of the Countreys beyond the Golf of Uraba; Balboa in his voyage to the South Sea; and Pedro di Avila in the conqueſt of Panama. Grown rich by theſe adventures, he aſſociated himſelf with Diego de Almagro, and Fernando Luques a rich Prieſt: who betwixt them raiſed 220 Souldiers, and in the year 1525. went to ſeek their fortunes on thoſe Southern Seas, which Balboa had before diſcovered. After divers repulſes at his landing, and ſome hardſhip which he had endured, Pizarro at the length took ſome of the Inhabitants of Peru, of whom he learnt the wealth of the Countrey; and returning thereupon to Spain, obtained the Kings Commiſſion for the conqueſt of it: excluding his Companions out of the Patent, but taking in Almagro of his own accord. Thus furniſhed he landed in Peru again, at ſuch time as the Wars grew hot betwixt the two brethren, for the Kingdom: and taking part with the faction of Guaſcar marched againſt Atubaliba; whom he met with in the Plains of Caxamalca, but rather prepared for a parley, than to fight a Battel. Pizarro taking this advantage, picked a quarrel with him, and ſuddenly charged upon him with his Horſe and Ordnance, ſlaying his Guard without reſiſtance; and coming near the Kings perſon (who was then carried on mens ſhoulders) pulled him down by the Cloaths, and took him Priſoner. With him they took as much Gold as amounted to 80000 Caſtellans; and as much Silver as amounted to 7000 Marks (every Mark weighing eight ounces) of his Houſhold Plate; and in the ſoyl of Caxamalca, almoſt infinite riches. This, with the Kings Ranſom, came to ſo great a ſumme, that beſides the fiſt part which Pizarro ſent to the Emperour, and that which Pizarro and his brethren kept unto themſelves; every Footman had 7200 Ducats, and every Horſe-man twice as much, for their part of the ſpoil; beſides what they had gotten in the way of Plunder. How they dealt afterwards with the miſerable King, their Priſoner, hath been ſhewn already. Upon which Act, though they put many fair pretences, yet God declared that he was not pleaſed with their proceedings; few of the greateſt undertakers going to the Grave in peace. For though Pizarro in reward of ſo great a ſervice, was made the firſt Viceroy of Peru, and created Marqueſs of Anatilla; yet having put to death Almagro, his chief companion, who had raiſed a ſtrong faction in that State; he was after ſlain at Lima, by ſome of that faction, in revenge of the death of their Commander. The like unfortunate end befell all the reſt; his brother John ſlain by the Peruvians; Martin, in Lima with himſelf; Ferdinando, ſecretly made away in priſon; and finally Gonſales the fourth brother (with the Son of Almagro) ſeverally executed for their Treaſons and Inſurrections, which they had acted in this Countrey againſt their King. So little joy doth wealth ill-gotten bring along with it, to the owners thereof. And here I am to leave Pizarro, whoſe ſtrange both Fortunes and misfortunes in the courſe of his life, are to be paralleled only with the like of Sinan, a great Baſſa in the Court of Selimus the firſt; who being born of baſe Parentage, as he (being a Child) was ſleeping in the ſhade, had his Genitals bitten off by a Sow. The Turkiſh Officers which uſually provided young boyes for the ſervice of the Grand Signieur, being in Epyrus (for that was Sinans Countrey) and hearing of this ſo extraordinary an Eunuch; took him among others, along with them to the Court: where under Mahomet the great, Bajazet the ſecond, and his Son Selimus, he ſo exceedingly thrived, that he was made the chief Baſſa of the Court; and ſo well deſerved it, that he was accounted Selimus right hand, and was indeed the man, to whoſe valour eſpecially, the Turks owe their Kingdome of Egypt; in which Kingdome, then not fully ſetled, he was alſo ſlain.

But to return unto Peru, no queſtion but the Forces and Revennes of it were exceeding great. For though we find no particular muſters which they made of their men; or what great Armies they drew with them into the field; yet by their great ſucceſſes, and many victories, we may conclude them to be maſters of great Bands of men, and skilfull in the Arts of conduct. Nor can we otherwiſe conjecture at the greatneſs of their yearly income, but by the greatneſs of their Treaſure; ſo infinite and almoſt incredible, that all the Veſſels of the Kings Houſe, his Table, and Kitchin, were of Gold and Silver; Statues of Giants in his Wardrope, together with the reſemblances in proportion and bigneſs, of all the Beaſts, Birds, Trees, Plants, and Fiſhes, which were found in that Kingdome, of the pureſt Gold; Ropes, Budgets, Troughs, Cheſts, all of Gold, or Silver: Billets of Gold piled up together, as if they had been Billets of Wood, cut out for the fire; three houſes full of pieces of Gold, and five full of Silver. All which, beſides infinite other Treaſures, fell into the hands of a few poor Spaniards: who grew ſo wanton hereupon, that they would give 1500 Crowns for an Horſe, 60 Crowns for a ſmall Veſſel of Wine, and 40 for a pair of Shooes: Conſuming all upon their luſts, and ſacrifizing their Gods of Gold to their God the Belly.

OF CHILE.

C*HILE* is bounded on the North, with the Deſart of Alacama, 90. Leagues in length, interpoſed betwixt it and Peru: on the Weſt, with Mare del Zur; on the South, with the Streights of Magellan; and on the Eaſt as far as to Rio de la Plata, with the main Atlantick; the Countries lying on the Eaſt, betwixt it and Paragnay, not yet well diſcovered.

The Country lyeth wholly beyond the Tropick of Capricorn, by conſequence in the temperate Zone: extended in length from the borders of Peru, to the mouth of the Streights, 500. Leagues; but the breadth variable and uncertain. Called Chile, from the word Chil, (which in more tongues than ours doth ſignifie as much as cold) from the extreme coldneſs of the Air and Clime; ſo vehement here in our Summer Solſtice, that many times both the Horſes and the Riders are frozen to death, and hardned like a piece of Marble.

The ſoil hereof in the midland parts, Mountainous and unfruitfull; towards the Sea-ſide, level, fertil, and watered with divers Rivers flowing from the Mountains: productive of Maize, Wheat, and moſt excellent paſturage; plenty of Gold and Silver, abundance of Honey, ſtore of Cattel, and Wine enough for the uſe of the people; the Vines brought hither out of Spain proſpering here exceedingly, as do alſo all the Fruits, and Plants, which are ſent from thence into this Country. The people very tall and warlike, ſome of them of a Gigantine ſtature, affirmed (but I believe it not) to be eleven foot high; yet well conditioned with this greatneſs, where not much provoked. Their garments of the skins of Beaſts, their Arms Bow and Arrows: white of complexion, but as hirſute and ſhaggy haired, as the reſt of the Salvages.

Rivers of note there are not any but what will fall within the view of its ſeveral Provinces: Divided commonly into 1. Chile, ſpecially ſo called, and 2. Magellanica.

1. CHILE ſpecially ſo called, is bounded on the North, with the Deſart of Alacama; on the South, with Magellanica; on the Weſt, with Mare del Zur; and on the Eaſt, with ſome unknown Countries, lying betwixt it and Paragnay, or the Province of Rio de la Plata; not above 20. Leagues in breadth, but in length 300. The reaſon of the name, together with the nature of the ſoyl and people, we have ſeen before.

Principal Rivers of this part, 1. Rio de Copayapo, giving name unto a Promontory near the influx of it, in the Northern borders of this Province. 2. Rio de Coquimbo, 3. La Ligua, 4. Topocalma, 5. Cacapool, 6. Canten, all falling into Mare del Zur; and beſides theſe, a nameleſs, but more famous River, which in the day time runneth with a violent current, and in the night hath no water at all. The reaſon of it is, becauſe this River having no conſtant Fountain, is both begun and continued by the Snow falling from the Mountains; which in the heat of the day melted into water, is precipitately carried into the Sea; but congealed in the coldneſs of the night, yields no water at all, whereby the Chanel becometh empty.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Gopiapo, giving name to a fertil Valley, in the moſt Northern tract hereof; and neighboured by a ſmall, but commodious Haven. 2. Serena, a Colony of the Spaniards, on the Sea-ſide, not far from the influx of Rio de Coquimbo, on whoſe banks it is ſeated; where built by Baldivia the Conquerour and firſt Governour of this Province, An. 1544. The territory round about it rich in Mines of Gold: the Town it ſelf of 200. houſes, but ſo well peopled, that at the landing of ſome of the Engliſh under Captain Drake, they preſently ſent out 300. Horſe and 200. Foot to compell them back unto their ſhips, which they did accordingly. 3. S. Jago, the chief of all this Province, (though not above 80. houſes in it) becauſe the Reſidence of the Governour, and the Courtt of Juſtice; adorned with a Cathedral Church, and ſome Convents of Dominican and Franciſcan Friers; ſituate in the 34. Degree of Southern Latitude, on the banks of the River Topacalma; at the mouth whereof is the Haven of Val paraiſo, the beſt and moſt noted of this Country; out of which the Engliſh under Drake took a Spaniſh ſhip, and therein 25000. Pezoes of the pureſt Gold, beſides other Commodities. 4. Conception, 70. Leagues on the South of S. Jago, ſituate on the ſhores of a large and capacious Bay (by the Natives called Penco) by which and the monntains on all ſides ſo ſtrongly fenced, that the Governour, when diſtreſſed by the Salvages (as ſometimes they are) retireth hither for ſafety. Well fortified in ſuch places as are acceſſible, and garriſoned with 500. Souldiers, beſides the Towns-men. Oppoſite hereunto lyeth the Iſle of S. Mary, ſo near the ſhore, that it ſeems to have been rent from it by the force of the Sea; fruitfull, and very well provided of Swine and Poultry, but the people ſo in fear of the Spaniards dwelling in Conception, that they dare not kill or eat either, but by leave from them. 5. Auraccoa (ſo I think they call it) a ſtrong Fortreſs in the Country of the Auracans, the moſt potent Nation of theſe parts; who weary of the Spaniſh yoke, revolted againſt Baldivia, over-came him in a ſet fight, and at laſt killed him; this piece being thereupon forſaken, and of no more uſe. 6. De los Confines, built by Baldivia in the borders of the Country of thoſe Auracans, to ſerve for a defence to the Mines of Ongol near adjoyning: diſtant from the Sea-ſhores about 18. Leagues, enlarged by Garſias de Mendoza, and by him called Villa Neuva de los infantes. 7. Imperiale, in the 38. Degree and 40. Minutes of Southern Latitude, ſituate on the banks of the River Cauten, an Epiſcopal See, and the beſt Fortreſs of the Spaniards in all this Province. Fortified and made a Colony of Spaniards in the year 1551. and by Baldivia called Al Imperiale, becauſe they found an Eagle with two heads made in Wood, on the doors of their houſes; a monument perhaps of ſome Germans, who had here been ſhipwrackt. A Town of ſo great wealth and power, before known to the Spaniards, that in a war betwixt them and the Araucans, ſpoken of before, they are ſaid to have brought into the field 300000. men. 8. Villa Rica, another Colony of Spaniards, 16. leagues on the South-Eaſt of Imperiale, and 25. leagues from the ſhores of Mare del Zur. 9. Baldivia, the moſt noted Town of all theſe parts, ſituate in the Valley of Guadallanguen, in the Latitude of 40. degrees, or thereabouts: adorned with a ſafe and capacious Haven, and neighboured by Mines of Gold of ſuch infinite riches, that Baldivia (by whom built for defence of thoſe Mines) received thence daily by the labour of each ſingle work-man, 25000. Crowns a man, and ſometimes more. Sacked by the Salvages, An. 1599. ſince repaired by the Spaniards. 10. Oſorno, on the Banks of the Bay of Chilve, (or Ancud, as the Salvages call it) ſituate in a barren ſoyl, but well ſtored with Gold, and thought to be more populous than Valdivia it ſelf. 11. Caſtro, the moſt Southern Town of all this Province, in the Latitude of 44. built in a large and fruitfull Iſland of the Bay of Ancud, ſaid to be 50. leagues in length, but the breadth unequal; in ſome parts nine, in others not above two leagues. 12. S. Juan de la Frontera, on the further ſide of the Andes, towards Paraguay, or Rio de la Plata.

To this Province there belong alſo certain Iſlands lying on the Coaſts and ſhores hereof. 1. S. Maries, ſpoken of before. 2. Mocha, upon the South of that, five leagues from the Continent, fruitfull of Grain, and very good Paſturage; ſufficient to maintain the Inhabitants of it, who being the deſcendants of thoſe Americans, who fled hither to avoid the tyranny of the Spaniards, hitherto have made good their liberty againſt that Nation: of which ſo jealous, that they would not ſuffer the Engliſh under Drake and Cavendiſh to land amongſt them, for fear they had been Spaniards, or ſome friends of theirs. 3. Caſtro, which we have ſpoken of already.

2. MAGELLANICA is bounded on the North with Chile, and the Province of Rio de la Plata; on the South, with Fretum Magellanicum, or the Streights of Magellan; on the Weſt, with Mare del Zur; on the Eaſt, with Mare del Noort, or the main Atlantick. So called from Magellanus, by whom firſt diſcovered, of whom we ſhall ſpeak more hereafter.

It is in length from the borders of Chile to the mouth of the Streights, 300. leagues in breadth: from one Sea to the other, where broadeſt, above 400. leagues; in ſome but 90. only, and in others leſs, according as it draweth towards the point of the Pyramis. The inlands parts of the Country not yet diſcovered: thoſe on the Sea-ſide obſerved to be rocky and unfruitfull, expoſed for the moſt part of the year to ſuch bitter colds, that the Snow lyeth alwayes on the Mountains. The people ſaid to be tall of ſtature, and ſome of them of a Gigantine bigneſs, reported to be ten, or eleven foot high; and by the Spaniards for that reaſon are called Patagons. Both great and leſs, ſufficiently rude and barbarous, quite naked, and unfurniſhed of any houſes, notwithſtanding the rigour of the cold.

No houſes doth imply no Towns, and therefore we muſt look for none in ſo a rude a Country, as hath not hitherto converſed with more civil Nations. So that the moſt that we can do, is to Coaſt the ſhores, and ſee what names of Ports, or Promontories we can find therein. And firſt upon the Sea-coaſts towards Mare del Zur, they place (beginning at the North, and ſo deſcending) 1. The Promontory called Cabo de las Iſlas. 2. The Port, or Haven of S. Stephen. 3. The Valley of Nueſtra Sennora, or our Ladies Valley. 4. The Promontory called Punta Delgado. 5. Porto de los Reyes. 6. Ancon Sinſalida, on the banks of a ſemi-circular Bay, the receptacle of many Rivers, and not a few Iſlands. 7. Cabo de la Victoria, or the Cape of Victory, ſituate betwixt that Bay aud the mouth of the Streights; ſo called from the name of the ſhip in which ſome of Magellanes Souldiers did firſt compaſs the World. For Ferdinand Magellano a noble Portugal, and well ſkilled in Navigation, at the perſwaſion, or command of Charls the fifth, to whom (upon ſome diſcontents received in the Court of Emanuel King of Portugal) he had made offer of his ſervice, undertook the finding out (if poſſible) a ſhorter cut to the Moluccos, than diſcovered formerly. In the year 1520. he began his voyage, his Fleet conſiſting but of 5. ſhips, whereof that called the S. Anthonio forſook him in ſome great diſpleaſure, and returned to Spain, another of them being loſt not long after in a ſtorm, keeping along the Coaſt to the South of Rio de la Plata, about the end of October, fell upon the Cape of Virgins, at the very entrance of this Streight, which on the doubling of this Cape he was fallen upon: and by the end of November (not before) was fully clear of theſe Narrow Seas, ſince called Fretum Magellanicum, and entered into Mare del Zur. Having refreſhed himſelf in a little Iſland called Juvaganava, he paſſed unto that alſo, but not far from the Philippins, the Prince whereof called Hamabar, he perſwaded to become a Chriſtian, baptized him by the name of Charls, and finally engaging in a quarrel of his againſt the King of Mautan, or Mattan, an adjoyning Iſland, where he was there unfortunately ſlain, An. 1521. After his death Serran chief Pilot of the Navy, together with 70. of his men being treacherouſly ſlain by Hamabar, the other three ſhips departed with no more than 115. men aboard them, which put them to a neceſſity of burning one of their ſhips, that they might have men enough to make good the others, with theſe two ſhips they came at laſt to the Moluccos, where being kindly entertained by the King of Tidore, they divided themſelves; that called the Trinity, under Cape Spinoſa, deſigned for Panama in New Spain, from which driven back by contrary winds to the Iſle of Tedoro, was ſeized on, and ſpoiled by Anthonio Britoa Captain, commanding there a ſmall Navy of the King of Portugals. The other ſhip, which by a happy omen was called Vittoria, having in her but 47. Spaniards, under the command of Sebaſtian del Cano, after a long and dangerous voyage, wherein it was thought that he had ſayled at the leaſt 14000. leagues, returned to Spain in ſafety, and brought the welcom news of their good ſucceſs.

We uſe to ſay that Sir Francis Drake was the firſt that ſayled round about the world, which may be true in a qualified ſenſe; viz, that he was the firſt Captain, or man of note that atchieved this enterpriſe, Magellanus periſhing in the midſt of it; and therefore is reported to have given for his device, a Globe, with this motto, Tu primus circumdediſti me. This navigation was begun, An. 1577. and in two years and an half, with great viciſſitude of fortune, finiſhed; concerning which his famous voyage, a Poet then living, directed to him this Epigram.

Drake pererrati novit quem terminus orbis,
Quemque ſimul mundi vidit uterque polus:
Si taceant homines, facient te ſydera notum;
Sol neſcit comitis non memor eſſe ſui.

Drake, whom th' encompaſs'd earth ſo fully knew,
And whom at once both poles of heaven did view:
Should men forget thee, Sol could not forbear
To chronicle his fellow traveller.

This Fretum Magellanicum, theſe Magellan ſtreights, are in the 52. degree; and are by M. John Davis, who profeſſeth to know every Creek in them, thus deſcribed. " For 14. Leagues within the Cape of S. Mary, lyeth the firſt ſtreight, where it ebbeth and floweth with a violent ſwiftneſs: the ſtreight not being fully half a mile broad, and the firſt fall into it very dangerous and doubtfull. Three leagues this ſtreight continueth, when it openeth into a ſea, eight miles long, and as much broad; beyond which, lieth the ſecond ſtreight, right Weſt, South-weſt from the firſt; a perilous and unpleaſing paſſage, three leagues long, and a mile in breadth. This ſtreight openeth it ſelf into another ſea, which is extended even to the Cape of victory; where is the ſtreight properly called the ſtreight of Magellan; a place of that nature, that which way ſoever a man bend his courſe, he ſhall be ſure to have the wind againſt him. The length hereof is 40. leagues; the breadth in ſome places two leagues over, in others not fully half a mile. The Chanel in depth 200. Fathoms, ſo no hope of Anchorage, the courſe of the water full of turnings and changings; withall ſo violent, that when a ſhip is once entred, there is no returning. On both ſides of it are high Mountains continually covered with ſnow; from which proceed thoſe counter-winds, which beat with equal fury on all parts thereof. A place aſſuredly not pleaſing to view, and very hazardous to paſs. So far, and to this purpoſe M. Davis.

But to proceed, the way thus opened, was travelled not long after, An. 1525. by Garſias de Loyaſa; next in the year 1534. by Simon de Alcazavo, and four years after by three ſhips of the Biſhop of Placenza in Spain; but none of them had the hap or courage to adventure thorow; till undertaken and performed by Sir Francis Drake, An. 1577. after which it grew more familiar amongſt the ſea-men. Howſoever, we are ſo much debtors to the attempts of others, as that we owe to them the moſt part of the names of thoſe Bayes and Promontories, which they diſcovered in the ſearch: though many of them ſince new named by the Engliſh, and Hollanders. Thoſe of moſt note, proceeding from Cabo de la Victoria, 1. Cabo de Quade. 2. Cape Gallant. 3. Cordes Bay. 4. Cape Froward, being the very point or Conus of this great Pyramis. 5. Porto Famine. 6. A little Iſle called Elizabeths Iland; and at the exit of the ſtreight into Mare del Noort, the Cape of Virgins. Then bending North-ward toward the great River of Plata, we find upon the main Ocean, 1. Rio de la Crux, neighboured by a Promontory called Cabo de las Bareras; where Magellano ſtaid all September, and the greateſt part of October, in expectation of an opportunity to diſcover further. 2. The Bay of S. Julian, out of which he ſet ſayl for this adventure, about the later end of Auguſt, leaving there two of his companions condemned of mutiny. 3. The Port of Deſire. 4. A large Promontory called the Cape of S. George. 5. The outlets of a fair River, named Rio de los Camerones. 6. A goodly Haven entituled Puerto de los Leones. 7. The Cape called Punta de terra plana. 8. The Bay of Amegada. 9. The Promontory called the Cape of S. Andrews. And 10. the River of S. Anne, beyond which lyeth the Province of the River of Plata. This is the moſt that I can ſay touching Magellanica, as to the Havens, Rivers, Points and Promontories; and this is nothing (as we ſee) but a Nomenclator. It muſt be better peopled and more diſcovered, before it can afford diſcourſe of more variety. All we can adde, is that the paſſage back again from Mare del Zur to the Atlantick, hath not been found ſo ſafe and eaſie, as from the main Atlantick unto Mare del Zur. Attempted firſt by Ladrillero a Spaniard, at the command of Garcia de Mendoza, Governour of Chile; and attempted only: performed not long after the voyage of Sir Francis Drake, by D. Pedro Sarmiento, imployed therein by Francis de Toledo, Vice-roy of Peru, with much difficulty, and no leſs danger; ſo much, that few have ſince endeavoured to return that way.

As for the fortunes and affairs of the Province of Chile, to which we have made this an Appendix, we are to underſtand that it was firſt diſcovered by Almagro de Alvarado, one of Pizarro's chief friends and aſſociates. But he having other deſigns in his head about Peru, which he intended for himſelf, and to out Pizarro, did diſcover it only: the conqueſt of it being reſerved for Baldivia, whom Pizarro, on the ſetling of his affairs by the death of Almagro, had imployed in that action. He going ſouldier-like to work, not only did ſubdue the people; but as he gained ground, built ſome Fortreſs, or planted Colonies of Spaniards in convenient places. This done, about the year 1544. his ill luck was to meet with a more ſtubborn and untractable people, than either Cortez or Pizarro had done before him; who quickly weary of the yoke, beſieged one of his Forts, encountred Baldivia himſelf coming with too ſmall a power to relieve his people, vanquiſhed and ſlew him in the field. Some adde that they poured Gold into his throat (as the Parthians are reported to have done to Craſſus) bidding him ſatiate himſelf with that which he ſo much thirſted. After this blow given in the year 1551. the Salvages recovered the rich Vallies of Arranco, Tucapel, and Purene; which they keep from them till this day: The Towns of Los Confines, and Villa Rica, both on the borders of thoſe vallies, then deſerted alſo. Nor ſtaid they there, though they took time to breath a little. For in the year 1599. (having provided themſelves of 200. Corſlets, and ſeventy Muskets) they brake out again; ſurprized and ſacked the Town of Baldivia; forced Imperiale, after a whole years ſiege, to ſurrender without any conditions; and in the year 1604. took Oſorno by famine. Of thirteen Cities, which the Spaniards had poſſeſſed amongſt them, they had taken nine; ſome of them ſince recovered, but the moſt demoliſhed. As ill it thrived with them in Magellanica, where Pedro de Starmiento undertook the planting of two Colonies, to command thoſe Streights, An. 1584. The one he ſetled near the mouth of the Streight, which he called by the name of Nombre de Jeſus, and left therein 150. of his men; the other he intended on the narroweſt place of the Streight, to be called Cividad del Roy Philip, which he reſolved to fortifie, and plant with Ordnance. But winter coming on, he left there others of his men, promiſing to relieve them ſhortly with all things neceſſary. But ſuch was his unhappy fate, that after many ſhipwracks and diſappointments which befell unto him, in the purſute of his deſign; he was at laſt taken by the Engliſh, under the command of Sir Walter Rawleigh, who was there in perſon: and his two Colonies, for want of timely ſuccours, either ſtarved at home, or eaten by the Salvages, as they ranged the Country.

OF BRASIL.

BRASIL is bounded on the Eaſt, with Mare del Noort, or the main Atlantick; on the Weſt, with ſome undiſcovered Countreys, lying betwixt it and the Andes; on the North, with Guiana, from which parted by the great River Maragnon; and on the South, with Paraguay, or the Province of Rio de la Plata. The reaſon of the name I find not, except it came from the abundance of that Wood called Braſil-wood, which was found amongſt them; as the famous Iſle of Cyprus, from its plenty of Cypreſſes.

It reacheth from the 29. to the 39. Degree of Southern Latitude; or meaſuring it by miles, it is ſaid to be 1500. miles from North to South, and 500. miles in breadth from the Sea to the Andes; which muſt be underſtood with reference to the whole extent of it; for otherwiſe, all that which is poſſeſſed by the Portugals under the name of Braſil, is ſo ſhort of taking up all the breadth hereof, that they poſſeſs nothing but the Sea-Coaſts, and ſome few leagues (comparatively) within the Land; the greateſt part of it being ſo far from being conquered, that it hath not hitherto been diſcovered.

The Country full of Mountains, Rivers, and Foreſts, diverſified into Hills and Plains alwayes pleaſant and green. The air for the moſt part ſound and wholſom, by reaſon of the freſh winds which do reign amongſt them; there being all along the Coaſts certain quick winds riſing from the South, about 2. hours before Noon, which do much benefit the Inhabitants: yet in regard it is ſomewhat moiſt, it is held to be more agreeable to old men than to young. The ſoyl in moſt parts very fruitfull, were it not cloied with too much rain; but howſoever liberally provided of Sugar-Canes, (no one Country more) for refining of which they have their Ingenios (as they call them) or Sugar-houſes, in moſt parts of the Country; in which they entertain many thouſand ſlaves, brought hither yearly from Guinea, and Congo, and other maritime parts of Africk. A trade in which the Portugals are much delighted, and I cannot blame them; there being few years, in each of which they bring not out of Braſil to Portugal, 150000. Arrobes of Sugar, every Arrobe containing 25. Buſhels of our Engliſh meaſure. Here is alſo infinite quantities of that red wood uſed in dying Cloath, which we commonly called Braſil-wood; (but whether the Wood took that name from the Country, or the Country rather from the Wood, I determine not:) the Trees whereof are of that incredible greatneſs, that whole familes live on an Arm of one of them, every Tree being as populous as the moſt of our Villages. In other Commodities common to them with the other Americans, we need not give particular inſtance.

Amongſt the Rarities hereof, are reckoned, 1. the Plant called Copiba, the bark of which being cut doth ſend out a Balm, the ſoveraign vertue whereof is ſo well known to the very beaſts, that being bit by venomous Serpents, they reſort unto it for their cure. 2. The Herb called Sentida, or Viva, which roughly touched will cloſe the leaves, and not open them again till the man that had offended it be gone out of ſight. 3. A kind of Wheat in the Valley near unto S. Sebaſtian, which is continually growing, and alwayes ripe; or never wholly ripe, becauſe alwayes growing: for when one Ear doth grain, another doth bloom; when one is ripe and yellow, another is green. 4. The Oxfiſh, with eyes and eye-lids, two arms a cubit long, and at each an hand with five fingers and nails, as in a man; under the arms two teats, inwards like a Cow, in every female. 5. A Creature found of late about the Bay of All Saints, which had the face of an Ape, the foot of a Lion, and all the reſt of a man; of ſuch a terrible aſpect, that the Souldier who ſhot him fell down dead: but this I rather look on as an aberration of Nature, than a rarity in her. 6. Beaſts of ſuch ſtrange ſhapes, and ſuch ſeveral kinds, that it may be ſaid of Braſil, as once of Africk, Semper aliquid apportat novi; every day ſome new object of Admiration.

The people here are endowed with a pretty underſtanding: as may ſeem by him, who tartly blamed the covetouſneſs of the Spaniſh, for coming from the other end of the World to dig for Gold; and holding up a wedge of Gold, cried out, Behold the God of the Chriſtians! But in moſt placas they are barbarous, the men and women go ſtark naked, and on high feſtival dayes hang Jewels in their lips: theſe feſtival dayes are when a company of good neighbours come together to be merry, over the roaſted body of a fat man; whom they cut in collops, called Boucon, and eat with great greedineſs, and much delectation. They have two vile qualities, as being mindfull of injuries, and forgetfull of benefits. The men cruel without meaſure, and the women infinitely laſcivious. They cannot prononnce the Letters L. F. R. The reaſon of which one being demanded, made anſwer; becauſe they had amongſt them neither Law, Faith, nor Rulers. They are able ſwimmers, as well women as men; and will ſtay under water an hour together. Women in travel are here delivered without any great pain, and preſently go about their buſineſs, belonging to good houſe-wives: The good man (according to the faſhion of our kinder ſorts of Husbands in England, who are ſaid to breed their Wives Children) being ſick in their ſtead, and keeping their bed; ſo far that he hath broaths made him, is viſited by his Goſſips, or Neighbours, and hath Junkets ſent to comfort him. And amongſt theſe there are ſome Rarities, if not Monſtroſities in nature: it being ſaid of thoſe which live towards the Andes, that they are hairy all over like beaſts, ſuch as Orſon is feigned to have been in the old Romance; and probably ſo ingendered alſo; that the Guaymares diſbowel Women with Child, and roaſt the Children; and finally, that the Salvage Nation of Camacuiara have their Paps almoſt down unto their knees, which they tye about their waſte when they run, or go faſter than ordinary.

Rivers of note I find not any till I come to Maragnon, though that a Boundary rather betwixt this and Guiana, than proper unto this alone. If any chance to come in our way, as we croſs the Country, we ſhall not paſs them over without ſome remembrance. And ſo proceed we to the diviſion of the Country; not into Provinces, or Nations, as in other places, but into Præfectures, or Captainſhips as the Portugals call them. Of which there are 13. in all, which we ſhall ſeverally touch on as we trace the Coaſt, from the Province of Rio de la Plata, unto that of Guiana; that is to ſay,

1. The Captainſhip of S. VINCENT bordering on Rio de la Plata, inhabited by the moſt civil people of all Braſil. Chief Towns whereof, 1. Santos, at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, capable of good ſhips of burden, but diſtant from the Main three leagues. A Town of no more than 120. houſes, yet the beſt of this Præfecture; beautified with a Pariſh Church, and two Convents of Friers. Taken and held two moneths by Sir Tho. Cavendiſh, An. 1591. ſince that environed with a Wall, and fortified with two Caſtles. 2. S. Vincents, better built, but not ſo well fitted with an Haven; of about 70. houſes, and 100. Inhabitants. 3. Itange, and 4. Cananea, two open Burroughs, but capable of leſſer Veſſels. 5. S. Paul, upon a little Mountain, at the foot whereof run two pleaſant Rivers, which fall not far off into the River of Iniambis. A Town of about 100. houſes, one Church, two Convents, and a College of Jeſuits; neighboured by Mines of Gold found in the Mountains, called Pernabiacaba. 6. S. Philips, a ſmall Town on the banks of Iniambis, which there begins to inlarge it ſelf; and paſſing thence falleth at the laſt in the River Parana, one of the greateſt Tributaries to Rio de la Plata.

2. Of RIO DE JANEIRO, or the River of January, ſo called, becauſe entred into that moneth by John Diaz de Solis, An. 1515. neglected by the Portugals, it was ſeized on by the French under the conduct of Villegagnone, employed herein by Admiral Chaſtillon, a great friend of the Hugonets, to whom it was intended for a place of Refuge, (as New-England afterwards for the like:) but within three years after their firſt coming hither, (An. 1558.) regained by the Portugals, and the French put unto the ſword. Places of moſt conſideration in it, 1. Collignia, the Fort and Colony of the French, ſo named in honour of Gaſpar Colligni (commonly called Chaſtillon) by whoſe incouragement it was founded. Situate on the Bay of the River Janeiro, which the French called Ganabara. 2. S. Sebaſtians, built at the mouth of the ſame Bay by the Portugals, after they had expelled the French, and fortified with four ſtrong Bulwarks. 3. Angra des Reyes, diſtant twelve leagues Weſt-ward from the mouth of the Bay; not long ſince made a Portugal Colony. Beſides theſe, there are two great Burroughs of the natural Braſilians, in which are ſaid to be above 200. Inhabitants.

3. Of the HOLY GHOST (del Spiritu Santo) one of the moſt fertile Provinces of all Braſil; well ſtored with Cotton-wool, and watered with the River Parayba, large and full of fiſh. The only Town of note in it, is Spiritu Santo, inhabited by about 200. Portugals. The chief building of it, a Church dedicated to S. Francis, a Monaſtery of Benedictines, and a College of Jeſuits; the chief conveniency, a ſafe and commodious Haven, capable of the greateſt Veſſels.

4. Of PORTO SEGURO, the ſecure Haven, ſo called by Capralis, who firſt diſcovered it; when being toſſed at Sea by a terrible tempeſt, he had here refreſhed himſelf. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Porto Seguro, built on the top of a white Cliff, which commands the Haven; of more Antiquity than Fame, of more fame than bigneſs; as not containing fully 200. Families. 2. Santa Crux, three leagues from the other; a poor Town, with as poor an Harbour: the Patrimony and Inheritance of the Dukes of Avera, in the Realm of Portugal. 3. Santo Amaro, or S. Omers, once of great note for making Sugars, for which uſe here were five Ingenios, or Sugar Engines: deſerted by the Portugals for fear of the Salvages, againſt whom they had not power enough to make good the place; and the Sugars deſtroyed of purpoſe, that they might not come into the hands of the barbarous people.

5. Of DES ILHEOS, or of the Iſles, ſo named from certain Iſlands lying againſt the Bay on which the principal Town is ſeated, called alſo Ilheos; or the Iſland (with like Analogy as a Town of good note in Flanders, hath the name of Inſula, or Liſle) The town conſiſting of about 150. or 200. Families, ſituate on a little River, but neighboured by a great Lake of 12. leagues in compaſs, (out of which that River doth ariſe:) full of a great but wholſom fiſh, which they call Monatos, ſome of which are affirmed to weigh 28. pounds. This Colony, much endangered by the Guaymuri, a Race of Salvages more Salvage than any of their fellows: who being driven out of their own Country fell into this Præfecture, which they had utterly deſtroyed, if ſome of S. George's Reliques, as the Jeſuits tell us, (but I bind no man to believe it) ſent by their General from Rome, An. 1581. had not ſtayed their fury, and given the Portugals the better.

6. Of TODOS LOS SANTOS, or All Saints, ſo called from a large Bay of that name, upon which it lieth; in breadth two leagues and an half, 18. fathom deep, and full of many little Iſlands: but flouriſhing and pleaſant, and well ſtored with Cotton-wool. A Bay in which are many ſafe Stations and Roads for ſhipping, and therefore of great uſe and conſequence in thoſe furious Seas. Memorable for the hardy Enterprize of Peter Heyns, a Dutch-man, Admiral of the Navy of the United Provinces; who in the year 1627. ſeized on a Fleet of Spaniards, conſiſting of 26. ſayl of ſhips, (four of them being men of War) all lying under the protection of the Forts and Caſtles, built for the ſafety of that Bay. For thruſting in amongſt them with his own ſhip only, (the reſt not being able to follow) he ſo laid about him,

OF PARAGUAY.

PARAGUAY is bounded on the South, with Magellanica; on the Eaſt, with the main Atlantick; on the North, with Braſil; on the Weſt, with ſome unknown Countreys betwixt it and Chile. So called from the River Paraguay, (one of the greateſt of the world) which runneth through it: the River and the Province both by the Spaniards called Rio de la Plata, from the great ſtore of Silver they expected from it.

The Country (for ſo much as hath been diſcovered) is ſaid to be of a fruitfull ſoyl; capable of Wheat and other of the Fruits of Europe, which thrive here exceedingly: nor do the Cattel increaſe leſs which were brought from Spain, both Kine and Horſes multiplying in a wonderfull manner. Well ſtored with Sugar-canes, and not unfurniſhed with Mines, both of Braſs, and Iron; ſome veins of Gold and Silver, and great plenty of Amethyſts. Of Stags great plenty, and of Monkeys almoſt infinite numbers; not to ſay any thing of Lions, Tygers, and ſuch hurtfull Creatures, of which a few would be thought too many. Of the people there is nothing ſaid, but what hath been before obſerved of the other Salvages.

Chief Rivers of it, 1. De la Plata, whoſe courſe we have deſcribed already. 2. Rio de Buenos Ayres, ſo called from the chief Town by which it runneth. 3. Zarcaranna, which riſeth in the Country of the Diaguitas, and falling into a Lake at the end of his courſe, doth from thence paſs into the body of De la Plata. 4. Eſtero, which riſing in the Valley of Chalcaqui, and paſſing through two great Lakes, meets with 5. the Bermeio, and both together fall into De la Plata, near the Town of S. Foy. 6. Pilcomayo, which hath its Fountain near the Mines of Potoſi, in the Province of Charcos; but his fall in the ſame River with thoſe before. Then on the North-ſide of that River, there is 7. that of S. Saviour, or S. Salvador, as the Spaniards call it; 8. Rio Nigro, or the Black River, of a longer courſe; but buried in the end, as the other is, in the deeps of La Plata. 9. Yquaan, and 10. ſeveral others, whoſe united ſtreams make the great River Parana, the ſecond River of eſteem in all this Country: But ſwallowed in that of Plata. Beſides theſe 11. Rio de S. Martin, and 12. Rio Grande, falling into the Ocean.

It comprehendeth the three Provinces of, 1. Rio de la Plata. 2. Tucaman, and 3. La Crux de Sierra. The reſt not conquered by the Spaniard, or not well diſcovered, cannot be properly reduced under any Method.

1. RIO DE LA PLATA, or the Province of De la Plata, lieth upon both ſides of that River; aſcending many leagues up the water, but not extended much upon either ſide. The reaſon of the name, the quality of the ſoyl and people we have ſeen before.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Buenos Ayres, or Neuſtra Sennora de Buenos Ayres, by others called Cividad de la Trinidad, ſeated on the Southern bank of the River of Plata, where built by Pedro de Mendoza, Anno 1535. Deſerted by the Inhabitants, and again new-peopled by Cabeſa de Vacca, Anno 1542. It was afterwards again abandoned; and finally in the year 1582. re-edified and planted with a new Colony. Situate on the riſing of a little Hill, in the 34. degree and 45. minutes of the Southern Latitude, and about 64. leagues from the mouth of the River; fortified with a Mud-Wall, and a little Caſtle, with ſome Pieces of Ordnance; yet neither large, nor much frequented, containing but 200 Inhabitants. 2. S. Fe, or S. Fidei, 50. leagues up the River from Buenos Ayres, on the ſame ſide of the water, near the confluence of it with the River Eſtero: of the ſame bigneſs as the other, but ſomewhat richer; the people here being given to clothing, which Manufacture they exchange with the Braſilians for Sugar, Rice, and other neceſſary Commodities. 3. Neuſtra Sennora del Aſſumption, but commonly Aſſumption only, higher up the River, from the mouth whereof 300. leagues diſtant: ſituate in the Latitude of 25. and almoſt in the midſt betwixt Peru, and Braſil; well built and very well frequented, as the chief of the whole Country. Inhabited by three ſorts of men, firſt natural Spaniards, of which here are accompted 400. Families; 2. The Meſtizos, begotten by the Spaniard upon the Natives; and 3. Mulatos, born of the Spaniards and the Negroes; of which two laſt here are thought to be many thouſands. Not far off is a great Lake, called Ytupuam, in the midſt whereof an huge Rock, above 100. Fathom high above the water. 5. Cividad Real, by the Spaniards called alſo Ontiveros, by the Natives Guayra, 80. leagues North from the Town of Aſſumption; ſituate on the banks of the River Parana, in a fruitfull ſoyl, but a ſickly Air; for which cauſe, and the frequent inſurrections of the Salvages, but meanly peopled. 6. S. Ann, on the banks of the ſame River Parana; 7. S. Salvador, on a River of the ſame name. Beſides theſe, there are up the River above Aſſumption, three noted Ports. 8. Puerto de Guaybiamo. 9. Puerto de la Candelaria, and 10. Puerto de los Reyes; but whether Towns, or only Havens on that River for diſperſing and bartering their Commodities, I am not able to ſay. The laſt ſave one memorable for the defeat of John de Ayolas, and the death of 80. of his men, by the hands of the Salvages.

2. TUCUMAN lieth on the Weſt of Rio de la Plata, extending towards the confines of Chile, through which they make their way unto Mare del Zur, as through the Province of Rio de la Plata unto Mare del Noort: the exact bounds hereof to the North and South, not yet reſolved on.

The Country, for ſo much hereof as lieth towards Chile, well manured and fruitfull; that towards Magellanica, barren, untilled, and not well diſcovered, no veins of Gold, or Silver in it, though ſituate in a temperate and agreeable Air. Watered by the two Rivers of, 1. Salado, ſo called from the brackiſhneſs and ſaltneſs of it; and 2. Del Eſtero, ſpoken of before, ſo named, becauſe ſometimes it breaketh out of his banks. The Inhabitans now civilized both in manners and habit, in both which they conform to the Garb of the Spaniards.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. S. Jago del Eſtero, on the banks of that River, by the natural Inhabitants called Varco: the principal of that ſmall Province, honoured with a Biſhops See, and the ſeat of the Governour; and diſtant about 180. leagues from Buenos Airez. 2. S. Michael de Tucuman, ſeated at the foot of a Rocky Mountain, but near a very fruitfull ſoyl, both for Corn and Paſturage, diſtant 28. leagues from S. Jago. 3. Talavera, or Nueſtra Sennora de Talavera, but by the Natives called Eſteco; ſituate on the River Salado, before mentioned, in a fruitfull ſoyl, and inhabited by an induſtrious people, grown wealthy by their Manufactures of Cotton-wools, which grow hereabouts in great abundance: with which they drive a great trade at the Mines of Potoſi, from hence diſtant but 140. leagues. 4. Corduba, in a convenient place for trade, as being equally diſtant from S. Juan de la Frontera, in the Præfecture of Chile; and S. Foy, in Rio de la Plata, 50. leagues from each; and ſeated in a Road from Peru unto Buenos Airez; much travelled conſequently by thoſe who go from Peru to Braſil, or Spain. 5. New London, and 6. New Cordura, built at ſuch time as Garſias de Mendoza, ſon of the Marqueſs of Cannete, and Vice-Roy of Peru, was Governour of this Province: but both abandoned not long after. Beſides theſe, 7. Morata. 8. Chocinoca. 9. Sococha, and 10. Calabinna; Townſhips belonging to the Natives.

3. S. CRUX DE SIERRA, is the name of a little Territory lying towards Peru, on the North of the River Guapay, and in the Country of the Chiquitos and Cheriguanaes, two Tribes of the Salvages. By ſome accounted to Peru, becauſe under the Juridical Reſort of Charcos: but ſo far diſtant from the neareſt bounds of that Province, (100. Spaniſh leagues at leaſt) that I think fitter to accompt it to the Province of Paraquay; betwixt the banks of which River and that of Guapay it is wholly ſeated.

The ſoyl abundantly productive of Maize and Wines; plenty of moſt ſorts of American fruits, which I can give no Engliſh name to; a kind of Palm, of whoſe trunk they make great ſtore of meal, of good taſte and nouriſhment. But neither ſoyl nor air agreeable to the fruits of Europe, which ripen ſlowly, and ſoon die. So deſtitute of Rivers, that the Inhabitants were fain to make uſe of Rain-water, preſerved in pits: the cauſe of no ſmall wants, and of many great murders, the people either dying for thirſt, or killing one another for ſome water to quench it.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Sancta Crux, ſituate at the foot of a great Mountain, whence the name of the Province; but ſituate in open field, inlarging it ſelf into many Plains, and thirſty Vallies: neighboured by a Brook, or Torrent breaking from the Rocks; which four leagues from the Town is become a Pond, and plentifully doth ſupply the Town with Fiſh. 2. Baranca, 60. leagues from the Mines of Potoſi. 3. Tomina. 4. Lagunilla, and 5. Tarixa; three Forts erected for defence of this Province againſt the Incurſions and Alarms of the Cherignanaes. 6. Neyva Rioja, once a Colony of the Spaniards, but ſacked and diſpeopled by the Cherignanaes, when the Count of Neyva was Vice-Roy of Peru: at what time Nuflo de Chaves, who in the year 1548. firſt diſcovered thoſe parts, was treacherouſly ſlain by one of the Salvages.

The principal Nations of this Country, when firſt known to the Spaniards, were the Querandies, Timbues, and Carcares, the Chanes, Chiminei, Guaranyes, the Guayacurves, Cacoves, Guaxarapi, &c. on both ſides of the River of Plata: the Tucumanes, Juries, and Diagnitas, in the Cantred of Tucuman; more North-ward, where the Spaniards have as yet no hold, the Chuneſſes, Xaqueſſes, Xacoaes, and the Xarayes, great and powerfull Nations, hitherto unconquered. The firſt diſcovery of this Country aſcribed to John Dias de Solis, a Spaniſh Adventurer; who in the year 1515. paſſing up the River to the Latitude of 34. Degrees, and 40. minutes, and unadviſedly landing with too ſmall a power, was there unfortunately ſlain. The deſign after proſecuted by Sebaſtian Cabot, Anno 1526. who ſayled againſt the ſtream as high as the River Parana: at the reception of which, the great River called, till then by the name of Paraguay, begins to be called De la Plata. Here built he the Fortreſs called Fort Cabot; and 30. leagues more up the River, that called S. Ann, (both long ſince ruined) where Diego Garcias a Portugal found him, in the year next following. In the year 1535. the buſineſs was reſumed by Pedro de Mendoza, who built the Town of Buenos Ayres; and ſent John de Aiolas to diſcover Northwards; of whoſe unhappy end we have heard before. Not fully ſetled till the year 1540. when Alvares Nonnez, commonly called Cabeſa de Vacca, made a more full diſcovery of it, and planted Colonies of Spaniards in convenient places. Nothing ſince done for the further planting of the Country, though ſome places have been marked out for new Plantations; here being little Gold and Silver, and conſequently not much temptation to draw on the Spaniards to the work.

that having ſunk the Vice-Admiral, he took all the reſt, conditioning only for their lives; notwithſtanding all the ſhot which was made againſt him from the ſhips and Caſtles, and 42. pieces of Ordnance planted on the ſhore. Chief Towns hereof, 1. S. Salvador, built on a little Hill on the North-ſide of the Bay, by Thomas de Souſa; adorned with many Churches, and Religious houſes, and fortified (beſides the Wall) with three ſtrong Caſtles; the one called S. Anthony, the other S. Philip, and the third Tapeſipe. Yet not ſo ſtrong by reaſon of ſome Hills adjoyning which command the Town, but that it was taken by the Hollanders, An. 1624. recovered by the Spaniards the next year after, and ſince loſt again. 2. Paripe, more within the Land, four leagues from S. Saviours. 3. Seregippe del Rei, a ſmall Town, and ſeated on as ſmall a River, but amongſt many rich Paſtures, and ſome veins of ſilver.

7. Of FERNAMBUCK, one of the richeſt Præfectures for Tobacco, Sugar, and the great quantity of Braſil-wood, which is brought hence yearly for the Diers, in all this Country; but deſtitute of Corn, and moſt other neceſſaries, with which ſupplied from the Canaries, and ſometimes from Portugal. Chief Towus hereof, 1. Olinda, the largeſt and beſt peopled of all Braſil, containing above 2000. perſons; not reckoning in the Church-men, nor taking the great number of ſlaves which they keep for their Sugar-works into the accompt: for whoſe uſe they have here eight Parochial Churches, five Religious houſes, and ſome Hoſpitals. Situate near the Sea-ſide, but on ſo uneven a piece of ground, as makes it not capable of a Regular fortification; the Haven being little, and not very commodious, but defended at the entrance by a well built Caſtle; and that well planted with Braſs pieces. Which notwithſtanding, in the year 1595. the Caſtle and the Suburbs along the Port (wherein they uſed to ſtow all their chief Commodities) were took by Capt. James Lancaſter, and ſome few of the Engliſh, who having tarried in the Haven above a moneth, brought home with him eight of his own ſhips, four French-men, and three Hollanders which came in by chance; all laden with the choiceſt Merchandiſe of Braſil, and India. 2. Amatta de Braſil, ten miles from Olinda, the Inhabitants whereof live by ſelling the Braſil wood. 3. S. Laurenzo, a well frequented Village, but as yet unwalled. 4. Poincur, upon a River ſo named. 5. Antonio de Cabo, near the Cape of S. Auguſtines; both of good note for the great quantity of Sugars which are made in each. 6. Garaſu, about five leagues from Olinda, inhabited for the moſt part by poor and Mechanical perſons, till the year 1632. when taken by the Hollander, and planted with a people of higher quality. This Præfecture, belonging formerly to the Earls of Albuquerque (a great houſe in Spain) is now wholly in the hands of the States of the Provinces united: the Town of Olinda being took by them in the year 1629. the Port and all the Avenues unto it ſo ſtrongly fortified, that they have hitherto enjoyed it.

8. Of TAMARACA, ſo called from an Iſland of that name, diſtant about five miles from Olinda; of no great note but for the Haven, and an impregnable Caſtle on the top of an Hill for defence thereof. Which when the Hollanders could not take, they built a ſtrong Bulwark at the mouth of the Port, and ſo blocked it up, that it hath ſince been of no uſe to the Spaniard. This the leaſt Præfecture in Braſil, but withall the ancienteſt; extended three leagues only in length, and but two in breadth: the Patrimony of the Earls of Monſanto in Portugal, who received hence yearly, when entire, thirty thouſand Ducats. But his Rents much diminiſhed, if not quite inverted, ſince the loſs of the Haven.

9. Of PARAIBA, ſo called from a River of that name, (but by the Spaniards called Domingo) of moſt note herein. On the banks whereof ſtandeth Paraiba, the chief Town of it, at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, about three leagues from the Main, but capable of pretty good ſhips to the very Town. The Town inhabited not long ſince by 500. Portugals, beſides Slaves and Negroes. Not Walled, till they began to ſtand in fear of the Hollanders, on the loſs of Olinda; but more ſecured by a ſtrong Caſtle on the Promontory, called Cabo Delo, which the Hollanders have in vain attempted, than by any works within the Land. A Caſtle which acknowledgeth the French for the Founders of it, who for a while were poſſeſſed of this Tract, and gave name to an adjoyning Haven, called Port Francois, but outed by the Portugal, An. 1584. who have ſince held their footing in it, but with fear of the Hollanders; eſpecially ſince their taking of a little Iſland lying over againſt them, called the Iſle of Noronha.

10. Of RIOGRANDE, ſo called from the River Poteingi (as the Natives term it) which the Portugals call Rio Grande, or the great River, not made a Præfecture till of late. For lying open, as it were, to the next Pretender ſome of the French began to fix here, An. 1597. But the King of Spain not willing to have any ſuch neighbour, commanded the Captain of Paraiba, to drive them thence: which was done accordingly. But then the Salvages beginning to riſe up in Arms, the Captain of Paraiba was fain to ſeek aid from him of Fernambuck; by whoſe help having ſlain five thouſand, and took three thouſand of them, the reſt became Vaſſals to the Portugals: who built here an impregnable Caſtle (which is all the footing they have in it) well manned and furniſhed with Ammunition and all other neceſſaries; very few Portugals, except thoſe of the Garriſon, being yet come over.

11. Of SIARA, a late Præfecture alſo, in which the Portugals have no more than a Caſtle, with a dozen houſes, or thereabouts, beſides that of the Governour adjoyning to it. So named from an Haven called Siara, but of no great note, and capable but of little Veſſels. Of ſome trade in regard of the Chryſtal, Cotton-wool, and ſome precious ſtones, found in the Country hereabouts: and certainly would be of greater, if once the Portugals would be active and purſue the Conqueſt; here being great plenty of Sugar-Canes, but no works to make it.

12. Of MARAGNON, an Iſland lying in the mouth of the great River ſo called, in the furtheſt parts of Braſil North-wards, and many leagues diſtant from Siara, the laſt of their Præfectures; the Country intervening not yet diſcovered, or otherwiſe made known unto us, than by the names of the Ports and Promontories found upon the Coaſt. An Iſland of a fruitfull ſoyl, if pains and husbandry were not wanting: affording naturally Maize, and a Root called Maniot, both which the Salvages uſe for bread; good ſtore of Cotton-wools, Saffron, Braſil wood, and the beſt Tobacco; and in ſome places Balm and Amber. Watered with many freſh Rivers, and pleaſant Springs; well-wooded both for Timber and Fewel; and in a word, bleſſed with ſo temperate an Air (though ſo near the Æquator) that no place can be more commodious for the life of man. The people ſtrong of body, healthy and long-lived without any baldneſs; induſtrious in their Feather-works and Manufactures of Cotton; the Women curious in ordering their hair, fruitfull in Child-bearing, and that till 80. years old and ſometimes more. Both Sexes naked till their marriage; and then apparelled only from the waſte to their knees.

The Villages hereof poſſeſſed by the Natives, conſiſted but of four great Houſes; each of them two, or three hundred foot in length, and twenty, or thirty foot in breadth; ſo placed as they reſembled a Quadrangular Cloyſter: And in each houſe ſo many houſholds, that commonly each of their Villages, or Taves (for ſo they called them) contained three hundred perſons, and ſome twice that number: Of theſe were twenty ſeven in all, whoſe names I hold impertinent to be muſtered here: The total eſtimate of the people when the French came hither, amounting to 12000. Souls. For the French trading in this Iſland, and carrying themſelves courteouſly amongſt the Natives, found them not unwilling to admit a Colony of that Nation, if ſent over to them: by whoſe aide they might free themſelves from all other Pretenders, and be inſtructed in the Goſpel. Accordingly a Colony, and four Capuchin Fryers, are ſent over to them, An. 1612. Some Salvages gained unto the Faith, and a ſtrong Caſtle, called S. Lewis, commodiouſly built, and planted with 22. pieces of Ordnance; the effect of that Voyage. But long they had not reſted there when diſ-ſeized by the Portugals, ſent thither under the Conduct of Hierome de Albuquerque, Anno 1614. Who to the Caſtle of S. Lewis, which the French had built, added thoſe of S. Mary, and S. Francis, planted two Villages in the Iſland by the names of S. Andrew, and S. Jago, and ever ſince have held it without moleſtation.

13. Of PARA, the moſt Northern Præfecture of Braſil, towards Guiana; ſo called from the River of Para, (ſuppoſed to be a branch of the River of Amazons) which runneth through it. The River at the mouth of it, two miles in breadth, and in the middle of the Chanel fifteen fathoms deep: on the banks whereof (but on an higher ground than the reſt) the Portugals have built the Caſtle of Para, in form Quadrangular, and well Walled, except towards the River: the Country thereabouts inhabited by 300. Portuguez, beſides the Garriſon.

Now for the Fortunes of the whole, it never did acknowledge any one Supreme. Divided into many Tribes, and each Tribe governed by their Chiefs, as in other Countreys. Theſe Tribes ſo many, and the Muſter of their names ſo uſeleſs, that I now forbear it. In this eſtate they lived, when diſcovered firſt; but by whom firſt diſcovered, will not be agreed on. The Spaniards, to get ſome colour of a Title for the Crown of Caſtile, aſcribe it to John Pinſone, and Diego de Lepe, two of their own Country; who as they ſay, had landed on it in the year 1500. before the coming of Capralis, though the ſame year alſo. The Portugals attribute the diſcovery of it to Pedro Alvarez de Caprali, ſent by their King Emanuel to the Eaſt-Indies: who being driven over hither from the Coaſt of Guinea, took poſſeſſion of it, and as a Monument thereof, advanced a Croſs, giving the name of Sanctæ Crucis, or the Holy Croſs, to this new diſcovery. That name changed afterwards to Braſil from the abundance of that Wood (as it is conceived) which was found amongſt them. Notice hereof being given to the Court of Portugal, Americus Veſpucius a Noble Florentine, An. 1501. and after him John de Empoli, another of that Nation, in the year 1503. were by Emanuel employed in a further diſcovery. Who ſpeeding fortunately in it, the Portugals did accordingly ſend over ſome Plantations thither. But a great controverſie growing betwixt them and the Spaniard, to whether of the two it of right belonged: the Spaniard was content to yield it to the Crown of Portugal, though by the Bull, or Edict of Pope Alexander the ſixth, (by whom the whole undiſcovered World was divided betwixt thoſe two Kings) it ſeemed to fall within the Grant made to the Crown of Caſtile. Enjoyed by this Emanuel, and the Kings ſucceeding, till the death of Sebaſtian, (which Sebaſtian the Jeſuits look on as the Founder of all their Colleges in this Country) and by the Spaniards ſince the death of Henry, (whoſe Reign continued but a year) though in the name and right of the Crown of Portugal; that Nation being ſo prudently jealous of their intereſs in it, that they would ſuffer any of the Subjects of Spain to grow great amongſt them. By them poſſeſſed entirely without any Rivals, (I mean for ſo much of the Country as they had ſubdued) till of late years the Hollanders put in for a part; and got the Præfectures of Fernambuck, and Todos Los Sanctos (or the Bay) by the Right of War. The reſt with all the other Members of the Crown of Portugal, in the late Revolt of that Nation from the King of Spain, ſubmitting unto John the 4th. of the houſe of Bragance, whom the Portugueze had made their King, Anno 1639.

OF GUIANA.

GUIANA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Main Atlantick; on the Weſt, with the Mountains of Peru, or rather ſome undiſcovered Countreys interpoſed betwixt them; on the North, with the River Orenoque; and on the South, with that of the Amazons. The reaſon of the name I find not, unleſs it be ſo called from the River Wia, of which more anon.

It is ſituate on both ſides of the Line, extended from the fourth Degree of Southern, to the eighth of the Northern Latitude. The Air, notwithſtanding this ſituation under the Æquator, affirmed to be temperate, the Eaſtern winds (which they call the Brizes) conſtantly blowing about Noon, and mitigating the extreme heats thereof by their cooler blaſts. The Country towards the Sea-ſide flat and level, the inland parts more mountainous and ſwelled with hils: in all places ſo adorned with Natures Tapeſtry, the boughs and branches of the Trees never unclothed or left naked, fruit either ripe or green growing ſtill upon them, that no Country in the world could be better qualified. The particular Commodities of it we ſhall ſee anon, when the particular parts hereof come into Diſcourſe.

Of the People it is ſaid in general, that they have amongſt them no ſetled Government; and though they acknowledge ſome ſuperiority in the Chiefs of their Tribes, yet it is only voluntary, as long and as little as they pleaſe. Adultery and Murder, which are only puniſhable, not otherwiſe expiated but by the death of the Offender. The richer ſort have two or three Wives, and ſometimes more; the poor but one, and hardly able to keep her: they that have more, and they who have but one, a like jealous of them; and if they take them in Adultery, without any further ceremony or formalities of Law, they beat out their brains. Their wives, eſpecially the elder, they uſe for Servants; and he which hath moſt ſuch, is the greateſt man. Without Religion, or any notion of a Godhead; not ſo far onwards on the way to the worſhip of the true God, as to be Idolaters: for though Idolatry be miſtaken in the proper Object, it ſuppoſeth a Deity; and they who have this Principle, That there is a God, have learned one, and not the leaſt of the points of their Catechiſm. Their Accompts amongſt themſelves they keep with a bundle of ſticks; which they diminiſh or increaſe according to the times of their contract. Their Funerals they ſolemnize with a Feaſt, but with ſuch diverſity in the deportment of both Sexes, that whiles the Women howl extremely, the Men perform the Obſequies with ſinging and exceſſive drinking; the one as improper for a Feaſt, as the other for a Funeral.

Rivers of moſt note in it, beſides 1. Orenoque, and 2. the River of Amazons, and thoſe rather boundaries betwixt this and the neighbouring Provinces, than proper unto this alone. 3. Arrawari, 4. Cpnawini, 5. Caſpurough, or Caſſipure, all falling into the ſame main Atlantick, betwixt the River of Amazons and Wiapoco: the laſt ariſing out of the Lake of the Arachoſi, half a mile broad at the mouth or influx into the Sea, and but five ſpans deep. 6. Wiapoco, of which more hereafter. 7. Wia, 8. Cajane, 9. Marwine, 10. Eſſequebe, a River of twenty dayes journey long, betwixt Wiapoco and the River of Orenoque or Raliana.

The whole divided commonly into theſe four parts, 1. Rio de las Amazones, or the River of Amazons, 2. Wiapoco or Guiano ſpecially ſo called, 3. Orenoque, and 4. the Iſles of Guiana.

1. RIO DE LAS AMAZONES, or the River of Amazons, containeth that part of this Country which lieth along the tract of that famous River. The ſoil in ſome places dry and barren, in others fertile and productive of the choiceſt fruits. Full of large Woods, and in thoſe Woods moſt ſort of Trees which are to be found in America: One amongſt others of moſt note, (and perhaps peculiar to Guiana) which they call the Totock; a tree of great bulk, and as great a fruit; this laſt as big as a mans head, and ſo hard withall, that when the fruit grows ripe and ready to fall, the people dare not go into the Woods without an helmet or ſome ſuch ſhelter over their heads, for fear of beating out their brains. The kernels of it, for the moſt part ten or twelve in number, have the taſte of Almonds, and are ſaid to be provocative in point of Venery. Of which the Salvages have this By-word, Pigue ſecke in Saccowe pingean Totocke; that is to ſay, Eat Totock, if thou wouldſt be potent in the Acts of Venus. Here are alſo Sugar-canes in ſome places; and the Plant called Pita, the taſte whereof is ſaid to be like Strawberries, Claret-wine, and Sugar.

The principal Inhabitants of this part of the Country, the Yaos, Cockettuway, Pattecui, Tackianes, Tomoes, and Wackehanes dwelling on the Continent; the Maraons, and Arowians poſſeſſed of the Ilands. Towns of note, I have met with none amongſt them; though every houſe (moſt of them 150. foot in length, 20. in breadth, and entertaining at the leaſt an hundred perſons) might paſs ſufficiently for a Village. Yet they are ſafer houſed than ſo, for otherwiſe their houſes would afford them but little comfort in the over-flowings of the River, which drown all the Country: and therefore they betake themſelves to the tops of trees, and there remain, like Birds, with their ſeveral families, till the waters be drawn in again, and the earth become more comfortable for habitation. Yet I find ſome of theſe their dwellings called by proper names, as 1. Matarem, 2. Roakery, 3. Anarcaprock, 4. Haaman, 5. Womians, and 6. Cogemymne. But I find nothing but their names, and enough of that.

The firſt Diſcoverer of this River, and the parts adjoyning, was Orellana the Lieutenant of Gonſales Pizarro, whom his brother Franciſco Pizarro, then Vice-roy of Peru, had made the Governour of Quito. Moved with the noyſe of ſome rich Countreys beyond the Andes, he raiſed ſufficient Forces, and paſſed over thoſe Mountains; where finding want of all things for the life of man, they made a boat, and ſent this Orellana to bring in proviſions. But the River which he chanced into, was ſo ſwift of courſe, that he was not able to go back; and therefore of neceſſity, to obey his fortune in following the courſe of that ſtrong water. Paſſing along by divers deſolate and unpeopled places, he came at laſt into a Country planted and inhabited; where he firſt heard of the Amazons (by thoſe Salvages called Comapuyaras) of whom he was bidden to beware as a dangerous people: And in the end having ſpent his time in paſſing down this River from the beginning of January to the end of Auguſt 1540. he came at laſt into the Sea; and getting into the Iſle of Cubana, ſayled into Spain: the courſe of his voyage down the water he eſtimated at 1800. leagues, (or 5400. Engliſh miles) but found no Amazons in his paſſage, as himſelf affirmed; only ſome maſculine women ſhewed themſelves intermixt with the men, to oppoſe his landing; and in ſome places he found men with long hair like women; either of which might make theſe parts believed to be held by Amazons. But to proceed, arriving at the Court of Spain, he got Commiſſion for the conqueſt of the Countreys by him diſcovered; and in the year 1549. he betook himſelf unto the ſervice. But though he found the mouth of the River, one of them at leaſt, he could never hit upon the Chanel which brought him down, though attempted often. Which ill ſucceſs, with the conſideration of his loſs both in fame and fortunes, brought him to his grave; having got nothing but the honour of the firſt diſcovery, and the leaving of his name to that famous River, ſince called Orellana. The enterprize purſued, but with like ſucceſs, by one Pedro de Orſna, An. 1560. after which the Spaniards gave it over. And though the Engliſh and the Hollanders have endeavoured an exact diſcovery, and ſeverally begun ſome Plantations in it, yet they proved as unfortunate as the others; their Quarters being beaten up by the neighbouring Portugals, before they were ſufficiently fortified to make any reſiſtance.

2. WIAPOCO, or GUIANA ſpecially ſo called, taketh up the middle of this Country, on both ſides of the River of Wiapoco, whence it hath its name. A River of a long courſe, but not paſſable, up the ſtream, above 16. miles, by reaſon of a Cataract, or great fall from the higher ground: in breadth betwixt that Cataract and the Æſtuarium, about the tenth part of a mile; at the Æſtuarium, or influx, a whole mile at leaſt, and there about two fathoms deep.

The Country on both ſides of this River very rich and fertile; ſo natural for Tobaccco, that it groweth to nine handfuls long. Sugar-Canes grow here naturally without any planting, and on the ſhrubs great ſtore of Cotton, and the Dye by ſome called Orellana. Plenty of Veniſon in their Woods, and of Fiſh in their Rivers, their fields well ſtored with Beaſts, which themſelves call Moyres, in ſhape and uſe reſembling Kine, but without any horns. The people generally of a modeſt and ingenious countenance; Naked, but would wear cloaths, if they had them, or knew how to make them. Their bread is made of a Plant called Caſſavi; of which alſo being dried and chewed, and then ſtrained through a wicker-veſſel, they make a kind of drink in colour like new Ale, but not ſo well taſted, and of leſs continuance. The greateſt part of their food is Fiſh, which they intoxicate with a ſtrong ſented wood. and ſo take them up as they lie floating on the top of the water. Much troubled with a Worm like a Flea, (by the Spaniards called Nignas) which get under the Nails of their Toes, and multiply there to infinite numbers, and the no leſs torture of the Patient, without ſpeedy prevention: No better remedy found out, than to pour Wax melting hot on the place affected; which being pulled off, when tis cold, draws the Vermin with it, ſometimes 800. at a pull. The Women of ſuch eaſie Child-birth, that they are delivered without help, and preſently bring the Child to his Father, (for they have ſo much natural modeſty as to withdraw from company upon that occaſion) who waſheth it with water, and painteth it with ſeveral colours, and ſo returneth it to the Mother.

Rivers of moſt note here are very many; no Country under Heaven being better watered, nor fuller of more pleaſant and goodly ſtreams. The names of ſome of them on both ſides of the Wiapoco we have had before: the chief of which I take to be Wia, affirmed to be of a long courſe, a goodly River all the way, and at the mouth thereof to be large and broad; which paſſing through the heart of the Country in the fourth degree and 40. minutes of Northern Latitude, may poſſibly occaſion both the whole, and and this part more ſpecially to be called Wiana, and by the Dutch, who cannot pronounce the W, Guyana. Certain I am, that by the name of Wiana, I have found it written in approved Authours. But what need further ſearch be made after leſſer Rivers, (which will offer themſelves to us of their own accord) when we have a Lake to paſs over like a Sea for bigneſs, (magnum, famoſum, & vaſtum inſtar maris, as my Author hath it) by the Yaos, or Jaos called Raponowinin, by the Caribes (the old Inhabitants of this Country) Parimen? Situate about a dayes journey from the River Eſſequebo, and neighboured by the great and famous City Manoa, which the Spaniards call El Dorado (or the Golden City) from the abundance of Gold, in Coyn, Plate, Armour, and other Furniture, which was ſaid to be in it. The greateſt City, as ſome ſay, not only of America, but of all the World. For Diego de Orgas, one of the Companions of Cortez in his Mexican Wars, and by him condemned for a mutiny, put into a Boat alone without any victual, and ſo caſt off to ſeek his fortune, affirmed at his return, that being taken by ſome of the Guianians, and by them carried to their King, then reſiding at Manoa, he entered the City at high-noon, travelled all the reſt of that day, and the next alſo untill night, before he came to the Kings Palace; but then he ſaith that he was led blind-fold all the way: And therefore poſſibly enough, this City might be no ſuch miracle as the ſtory makes it; Don Diego being either abuſed by the reports of the Salvages, or willing to abuſe the world with ſuch empty fictions. For though the Spaniards and the Engliſh have ſeverally ſought, and that with incredible diligence to find out this City, yet none of them have hitherto had the fortune to fall upon it. So that I fear it may be ſaid in the Poets language,

——— Et quod non invenis uſquam;
Eſſe putes nuſquam ——— i. e.

That which is no where to be found,
Think not to be above the ground.

Nor is there much more credit to be given unto his Relations of the great Court kept here by one of the Ingas; who being forſooth, one of the younger Brethren of Atabaliba the laſt King of Peru, at the conqueſt of that Kingdom, with many thouſands of his Followers came into this Country, and ſubduing the Caribes, erected here a ſecond Peruvian Monarchy. For beſides that Atabaliba had no brethren but Guaſcar and Mango who both dyed in Peru, how improbable muſt it needs appear, that this Guianian King, knowing ſo well the thirſt of the Spaniards after Gold, would either ſuffer him to return and diſcloſe the ſecrets of his State; or ſend him away loaded with Gold, as 'tis ſaid he did; Who ſheweth his Treaſure to a Thief, doth deſerve to loſe it. And therefore letting paſs theſe dreams of an El Dorado, let us deſcend to places of leſs Magnificence, but of greater reality. Amongſt which I reckon 1 Caripo, moſt memorable for a Colony of Engliſh there planted by Captain Robert Harcourt, An. 1608. ſituate on the banks of the Wiacopo, near the mouth thereof, on the advantage of a Rock, and that Rock ſo difficult of acceſs, that they feared no danger from an Enemy. The Air ſo ſound and anſwerable to the conſtitution of an Engliſh body, that of 30 which were left there for three years together, there dyed but ſix, and thoſe ſix rather by miſfortune, and ſome croſs accident, than by any diſeaſes. 2. Gomeribo, on the top of an hill near the mouth of the Bay of Wiacopo, poſſeſſed awhile by ſome Hollanders, but ſoon deſerted. 3. Moyemon, a Village of the Paragoti, on the banks of the River Marwinen. 4. Crewinay, on the other ſide of the ſame River, poſſeſſed by the Caribes: the King of the firſt (for each Tribe hath its ſeveral Princes) being named Maperitaka, affirmed to be a vertuous man, and kind to ſtrangers; of the later, Minapa. 5. Tanparamunen, about an hundred Leagues from the mouth of that River. And 6 Moreſhego, four dayes journey from the other; both poſſeſſed by the Caribes. The King, or Caſique of thoſe laſt, at Captain Harcourts being there (of which time we ſpeak) named Areminta; affirmed to have a skin like a piece of Buff.

The principal Families of this part, beſides the Yaos, or Jagos, and the Maraons ſpoken of before, who poſſeſs almoſt all the Sea-coaſts of this Countrey, are ſaid to be Arwaccæ, the Sapayoy, the Mayos, and the Ardcouri; of different Languages, and Cuſtomes, though neer neighbours unto one another. Originally Inhabitants of the Iſland of Trinidado, and the River of Orenoque: whence driven by the Spaniards they came into this Tract, and beating the old Inhabitants, whom they call by the common names of Caribes, higher into the Countrey, poſſeſſed themſelves of the Sea-ſhores, and the parts adjoyning; each Tribe or Family being Governed by its ſeveral Chief, as before was intimated. The Netherlands for a time had ſome footing in it, but they quickly left it; endeavouring nothing more in the time of their ſhort ſtay amongſt them, than to make the people diſ-affected to the Engliſh; of whoſe pretenſions to theſe parts, and deſigns to plant them they had good Intelligence. And ſo much was confeſſed by ſome of the Natives, when they had found by good experience and acquaintance, how much the Engliſh were abuſed in thoſe miſ-reports. Afterwards in the year 1604. Captain Charls Leigh ſet Sail from Woolwich on the Thames, and in May fell upon the River of Wiapoco, where he was kindly entertained, gratified with an Houſe and Garden, and his Aid craved againſt the Caribes and their other Enemies. He took poſſeſſion of the Country in the name of King James, and the Crown of England; and cauſed the River of Wiapoco to be called (by his own name) Caroleigh: but that name ended with his life, and that ſhortly after, he dying in his return on Ship-board. The deſign went forwards notwithſtanding, and in the year 1608. an Engliſh Colony is brought hither by Captain Harcourt, a new poſſeſſion taken in the name of King James, the Colony planted at Carpo before mentioned; the Countrey further ſearched into by that Noble Gentleman, than ever formerly by any, or by many ſince. After three years, the Colony wanting fit ſupply, returned home again; the Plantation never ſince purſued, though by ſome projected. Yet ſo far are theſe Salvages beholding to the Engliſh Nation, that as they did defend them at their being there againſt the Caribes, ſo at their going off they taught them the uſe of Arms; and put them into a poſture of defence; enabling them thereby to preſerve themſelves againſt all their Enemies.

3. ORENOQUE, or the Province of the River of Orenoque comprehendeth the North parts of Guyana, lying upon and towards the banks of that famous River of which we have already ſpoken. The Countrey very Rich and pleaſant, conſiſting of large Plains, many miles in compaſs, adorned with the embroydery of Flowers, and unknown Plants, exceeding pleaſant to the eye; and ſometimes interlaced with Hills, reported to be furniſhed with rich Mines of Gold and Silver. The Rivers liberally ſtored with Fiſh, and the Foreſts both with Beaſts and Fowls. No Countrey in America, not Peru it ſelf, ſaid to be comparable to it for abundance of Treaſure. Some alſo add a whole Mountain of Chryſtal to be ſeen afar off from Winecaporo; and tell us (but in general termes) of more goodly Cities than elſewhere in all Peruana, but neither the Spaniards nor the Engliſh could ever ſee them, though they diligently ſearched into moſt parts of this Country.

The people, as of ſeveral Nations, ſo of ſeveral Natures : The Capuri, and Macureos, for the moſt part Carpenters, live by making Canoas or Boats, which they ſell into Guiana for Gold, and to Trinidado for Tobacco, in the immoderate taking whereof they exceed all Nations. When a Cacique or Commander dyeth, they make great lamentation ; and after the fleſh is putrified and fallen from the bones, they take up the Skeleton, and hang it up in the houſe where he dwelt, decking his skull with Feathers of all colours, and hanging Gold plates about the bones of his arms and thighs. Of the Tivitivas dwelling upon ſome of the Northern branches, it is affirmed by Sir Water Raleigh, that they are a goodly and valiant people, and to have the moſt manly and moſt deliberate ſpeech of any Nation in the World. A People which eat of nothing that is ſet or ſown : the children of Dame Nature, and therefore will not be beholding for their lively-hood unto Art, or Induſtry ; uſing the tops of the Palmito Trees for bread ; Fiſh, Deer, and Swines-fleſh, for the reſt of their ſuſtenance. The Aſſawy, Saymæ, Wikeri, and Aroras, affirmed to be as black as Negroes, but with ſmoother hair : And to uſe Arrows dipt in ſo ſtrange a poyſon, as doth not only bring death, but death with moſt unſpeakable torments, eſpecially if the wounded party be permitted to drink. Of the Arwaca of this Tract I find nothing ſingular, but that when any of their Kings or Caciques die, their Wives and neereſt of the Kindred beat their bones to powder, and mingle it with their drink like ſpice.

Places of moſt importance in it (for to ſpeak any thing particularly of thoſe many Rivers which fall into the Orenoque, were an endleſs labour) 1 Comolaha, on the South of Orenoque, but ſomewhat diſtant, in which they keep ſome Annual Fairs for the ſale of Women. One of our Engliſh men, left by Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1595. affirmed that he bought eight of them (the eldeſt not above eighteen) for a half-penny red-hafted knife, which he brought from England : but withall telleth us for his credit, that he gave them to ſome Salvages of his acquaintance. 2. Morequito, a known Port upon ſome branch of the Orenoque ; of much uſe to the Engliſh in their firſt diſcovery of theſe parts. 3. Wenicapora, ſo called from another branch of that River bearing this name ; from whence was ſhewed an high Hill ſaid to be of Chryſtal, but ſo far off, that it was thought better to believe than to go and ſee. Others report of this Mountain, that above it there is a mighty River, which falling down this Cataract on the lower grounds, makes a terrible noiſe, as if 1000 Bells were knocked one againſt another. And poſſible enough it is, that this great fall of water diſcerned far off, may (with the help of Sun-ſhine) carry ſome reſemblance of a Chryſtalline Mountain. 4. S. Thome, ſituate on the Main Chanel of the River Orenoque, a Town of 140 houſes, ſtretched out in length for halfe a mile, but ſlightly built, a Pariſh Church in the midſt of it, and at the Weſt end a Convent of Franciſcan Friers. The only Town of all Guiana poſſeſſed by the Spaniards ; not fortified till againſt the laſt coming of Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1617. but taken by him at that time, and ſince that by the Hollanders, Anno 1629. though by both quitted not long after, it returned to the Spaniards.

The ſeveral Nations of this Tract have been named before, Diſcovered firſt by Diego de Ordas, Anno 1531. furniſhed with a Patent for the conqueſt of it by Charls the fift. But not hitting on the right Chanel, or otherwiſe not able to overcome the difficulties which lay before him, he returned to Spain : effecting nothing but the opening of the way to others. Followed herein by Hierom de Ortal, Anno 1533. and after by Herrera, who proceeded further than the others, Anno 1536. and finally by Gonſalvo Ximenez de Queſada and Antonio Berreo with far better fortune ; who beginning their journey from the New Realm of Granada in the ſearch of Guiana, fell caſually into this great River, as Orellana did before into that of the Amazons. But yet not perfectly diſcovered till the year 1595. in which Sir Walter Raleigh having taken Priſoner this Antonio Berreo, and learning of him the ſucceſs of his Expedition, reſolved upon the undertaking : and ſearched ſo far into the Countrey by the courſe of this River, that ſome have ſince called it Raliana. The buſineſs followed the next year (after his return) by Captain Lawrence Keymis, employed by Raleigh in that ſervice, who at his coming found the Countrey poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, by whom 20 or 30 of the moveable houſes of the Salvages had been laid together like a Town ; and all the Natives, who wiſhed well to the Engliſh, diſperſed and ſcattered. So that without any other effect of his journey, than the finding out the true mouth of the Orenoque (which he firſt diſcovered) he ſet ſail for England. In the mean time it had been moved at the Court, that a Colony of Engliſh ſhould be planted there, and ſome proportionable force ſent over to make good the Action. But the motion upon good advice rejected, firſt in regard of the diſtance of it from the main body of our ſtrength : And ſecondly becauſe the Spaniards bordering neer upon it, might eaſily caſt out ſmall Forces and make the enterpriſe diſhonourable to the Engliſh Nation, who had then the better of him in the point of Honourable Archievements. It was permitted notwithſtanding unto private Adventurers to try their Fortunes on it, without engaging of the State : whereupon followed the Voyages of Leigh, and Harcourt, before ſpoken of. But they not being able to go thorow with ſo great a buſineſs, let it fall again. And ſo it reſted till the laſt unfortunate Voyage of Sir Walter Raleigh, licenſed by Commiſſion under the great Seal to ſearch into ſome Mines of Gold and Silver, which he was credibly informed of when he was in this Countrey. A deſign followed with great hopes, by the Undertakers, moſt of them being Perſons of Honour, and well attended : but ſo unfortunate in the iſſue (the Spaniards being made acquainted with it before his coming) that at the taking St. Thome, he loſt his own Son, and a great part of his forces ; and after his return (not able with the reſidue to make good his ground againſt the Enemy) was executed on a former Attaindure, in the old Palace of Weſtminſter, Octob. 29. An. 1618. Of whom I cannot chooſe but note what is ſaid by Camden Clarentieux, in his Annals : Vir erat nunquam ſatis laudato ſtudio, & Regiones remotas detegendi, & Navalem Angliæ gloriam promovendi. And ſo I leave him to his reſt in the bed of peace.

4. THE ISLANDS which properly are accompted of as parts of Guiana, lie either ſcattered on the ſhore, in the mouths, or bodies of the greateſt Rivers: ſome of them not inhabited, others of no name; and none at all of any reckoning. Only the Iſle of 1. Trinidado, and 2. Tabago, are of ſome eſteem: which though ſomewhat further off from the ſhores of this Countrey, yet being that of Trinidado lieth in the mouth of the Orenoque, and that both of them with Guiana paſs but for one Præfecture, or Provincial Government, we ſhall deſcribe them in this place.

1. TRINIDADO, or Inſula S. Trinitatis, lyeth at the mouth of the River Orenoque over againſt Paria, from which ſeparated by a Frith, or Streight, by Columbus, who firſt diſcovered it, called Boca del Drago, or the Dragons mouth, becauſe of the dangerouſneſs of the paſſage. Extended from the ninth to the tenth Degree of Northern Latitude; the moſt Southern Angle of it, called Punta de Gallo, as that on the North-Eaſt Punta de Galera. The Frith, or Streight, but three miles over, yet made more narrow by the interpoſition of four, or five little Iſlands, which the Sea breaketh through with great violence, leaving only two entrances for ſhipping into the Golf, called the Golf of Paria. The length hereof 25. leagues, the breadth 18. of a cloudy and unhealthy air, but a fertile ſoil, abundantly well ſtored with ſuch commodities as are of the natural growth of America, viz. Maize, Sugar-Canes, Cotton-wool, and the beſt kind of Tobacco, much celebrated formerly by the name of a Pipe of Trinidado. Here is alſo a ſufficiency of Fruits and Cattel for the uſe of the Natives; and here and there ſome veins of Gold, and other Metals: ſuch ſtore of Pitch, that inumerable ſhips might be laden with it; but that it is conceived to be unfit for the calking of ſhips, becauſe it ſoftneth in the Sun. The place in which it groweth, by the Spaniards called Terra de Brea, by the Natives Pichen.

The people of the ſame nature and diſpoſition with the other Americans: diſtinguiſhed into ſeveral Tribes, but moſt of them reduced under the power of two petit Princes. But the greateſt part of the Inhabitants, to avoid the Tyranny of the Spaniards, forſook their Country, and ferried over into Guiana, where before we found them. The chief Town of it called S. Joſephs, ſituate on the South ſide of the Iſland, on the banks of a little River which the Natives call Carone, the ordinary reſidence of the Governour, who hath under him beſides this Iſland the Provinces of Guiana and El Dorado (for ſo go his titles) yet a ſmall Town, conſiſting but of forty houſes, when it was taken, An. 1595. by Sir Walter Raleigh; Antoneo Berreo the Governour of it being then made Priſoner, who furniſhed his Taker with many notions (and ſome meerly fabulous) towards the diſcovery of Guiana.

This Iſland firſt diſcovered by Chriſtopher Columbus in his third voyage, An. 1497. was by him called La Trinidad, it may be with ſome reference to the form hereof, ſhooting into the Sea with three Points or Promontories. Nothing elſe memorable in the fortunes and ſtory of it, but what was touched upon before.

2. TOBAGO lyeth on the North-Eaſt of La Trinidad, from which 8 miles diſtant: full of ſafe Harbours for the bigneſs, watered with 18 little Rivers, and well ſtored with Woods; amongſt which ſome Palmito Trees, ſome like that of the Braſil-Wood, others not elſewhere to be found. Of Fowl and Fiſh ſufficient to maintain it ſelf. Now called New-Walcheren, with reference to an Iſland of that name in Zealand, by ſome of the Low-Countrey-men, who begin to plant there.

OF PARIA.

PARIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Guiana, and the Iſlands in the mouth of the Orenoque; on the Weſt with the Golf, or Bay of Venezuela, and part of the new Realm of Granada; on the North, with the main Atlantick Ocean, or Mare del Noort; the Countreys lying on the South not diſcovered hitherto.

It took this name from a miſtake of the Spaniards (as Peru, and Jucutan on the like) who asking, as all men do, the names of thoſe new Regions which they diſcovered, and pointing to the Hills afar off, were anſwered Paria, that is to ſay, high Hills, or Mountains (for here begins that ledge of Mountains which are thence continued for the ſpace of 3600 miles, to the Streights of Magellane) and ſo hath it ever ſince held the name of Paria. By ſome writers it is alſo called Nova Andaluſia; but I adhere unto the former.

The nature of the ſoyl and people being very different, will be more properly conſidered in the ſeveral parts: The whole divided into the Continent and the Iſlands; which with their ſubdiviſions, may be branched into theſe particulars, viz. 1. Cumana. 2. Venezuela. 3. S. Margarita. 4. Cubagna, and 5. the leſſer Iſlands.

1. CUMANA hath on the Eaſt the Golf of Paria, and the River Orenoque; on the Weſt Venezuela; on the North and South bounded as before. So called from Cumana, one of the Rivers of it; on the banks whereof ſome Dominican Fryers (who firſt ſet footing in this Country) built themſelves a Monaſterie; that name communicated afterwards unto all the reſt of this Tract.

It is extended Eaſt and Weſt to the breadth of 110 leagues; the length thereof from North to South, ſaid to be 400. But there is little of it known; and leſs of it planted by the Europæans; except ſome places near the Sea; there being no part of all America, the deſcription whereof hath come ſo imperfectly to our hands, as they have of this. For except it be the names of ſome Bayes, or Promontories, and of two or three moſt noted Rivers, there is not much that doth require our conſideration.

The Country, for ſo much as hath been diſcovered, neither rich nor pleaſant; and conſequently the leſs looked after; covered with ſhrubs, and over-grown with unprofitable bryers and buſhes. Heretofore famed for Pearl-fiſhing, all along the Coaſt, from the Golf of Paria to that of Venezuela called therefore Coſta de las Perlas; but that gainfull trade hath long ſince failed it. Now only of eſteem for a vein of moſt excellent Salt, found near the Promontory of Araya, and the Bay of Cariaco; gathered and digged up thereabouts in great abundance, and yet never diminiſhing. The parts adjoyning take from hence the name of Salina; the Promontories bordering on the Frith, called Boca del Drago, the title, or appellation of Cape Salinus. Of ſome ſtrange Creatures in this Country, as the beaſt called Capa, the ſoles of whoſe feet are like a ſhooe; a kind of Hog, which lives altogether upon Ants, or Piſmires; Parrots, and Bats, of more than ordinary greatneſs, I forbear to ſpeak.

Of the people I find nothing ſingular, except it be, that having plenty of good fruits, as of fiſh and fleſh, they uſe themſelves to a far worſe dyet, feeding on Horſleeches, Batts, Spiders, Graſhoppers, Worms, Lice, and ſuch other Vermin. In other things they ſeem to have a mixture of all ill-cuſtomes uſed amongſt the Salvages of Aſia, Africk, and America; as multitudes of Wives, proſtituting theſe Wives for the firſt nights lodging, to the Piacos, or Prieſts; and for any after, to their Gueſts; taking great pains to black their Teeth, and putting ſtrange colours on their bodies inſtead of Garments; high minded, treacherous, and revengeful; accuſtomed to the uſe of poyſoned Arrows, which they envenom with Snakes bloud, and other mixtures. In one thing only different from the reſt of their neighbours, which is the fencing of their Grounds, or Orchards with a Cotten-thred, as high as ones Girdle; and an opinion which they have, that whoſoever breaketh it, or goes over, or under it, ſhall die immediately. More ſafe in that perſwaſion, than by brazen Walls.

Rivers of moſt note, though of little, 1. Rio de Canoas. 2. Rio de Neveri. 3. Cumana de Bardones. The chief Havens, or Roads for ſhipping, 1. Moxino. 2. S. Foy. And 3. that called Commenagot. The places of moſt conſideration, 1. Cumana, a Colony of Spaniards, on the bank of the River of that name; but diſtant about two miles from the Sea, on which it hath a ſafe and convenient Harbour; the Town ſo hedged about with Woods, that nothing can be ſeen of it till one come into it, except it be the Governours houſe, ſeated upon the top of a lofty Mountain. 2. S. Jago, a ſtrong Fortreſs built by the Spaniards for defence of the Salt-Lake, or Salinas, in the year 1622. on ſome intelligence that the Hollanders had a purpoſe to take them from him; fortified by the rules of Art, and planted with 30 pieces of Ordnance, the one half of Braſs. 3. S. Michael de Neveri, on the River ſo called, a Fort of the Spaniards. 4. Guaniba, a Village of the Natives.

The Country firſt diſcovered in the third Voyage of Chriſtopher Columbus; but the poſſeſſion of it was firſt taken by two Dominicans; who out of a Religious zeal to plant the Goſpel in theſe parts founded themſelves a little Cell in the place where the Burrough of Cumana was after built, Anno 1513. and doubtleſs had ſped very well in their holy purpoſe, if ſome covetous Spaniards had not treacherouſly ſeized upon one of the Chiefs of their Tribes, and carried him with his Wife and Train into Spaniſh bondage.

For this the poor Monks ſuffered death; I may call it martyrdom; their death revenged by Alfonſo de Oieda, Anno 1520. and he not long after ſlain by the Salvages, who alſo at the ſame time deſtroyed two Convents of Dominican and Franciſcan Friers, which had been founded in the year 1518. A ſecond force ſent hither under Gonſalvo de Ocampo, waſteth a great part of the Country, beheads one of their Kings, and hangs ſome of his people. But that ſtrength being withdrawn, or defeated alſo, Diego de Caſtellon is ſent over by the Councel reſident in Hiſpaniola, to ſecure the poſſeſſion of the Country; by whom the Caſtle firſt, and after the Burrough of Cumana, was built and planted. Some other attempts there were for a further conqueſt, but they proved nothing but attempts; except the building of the Caſtle of S. Michael de Neveri, by Hieroms of Ortal, and the diſcovery of ſome of the in-land Provinces, 150. leagues from the Sea-ſide, by Antonio Sedenno, An. 1537. of which nothing followed, but the Regiſtring of that tedious march.

2. VENEZUELA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Cumana; on the Weſt, with the Bay of Venezuela, the Lake of Maracaybo, and the new Realm of Granada. So called by Alfonſo de Oieda, one of the firſt Diſcoverers of it, An. 1599. becauſe he found a Burrough of ſome of the Salvages ſituate in the middeſt of the waters, to which was no paſſage but by boat: the word importing as much as Little Venice.

It is in length from Eaſt to Weſt, 130. leagues; in breadth where broadeſt about 80. The ſoyl ſo plentifull of all ſorts both of Fruit and Grain; the Country ſo repleniſhed with all kind of Cattel, and excellent Paſtures to maintain them, that the neighbouring Nations call it by the name of the Granary. Such ſtore there goeth from hence of Wheaten-meal, Biſcott, Cheeſe, Hogs-fleſh, Ox-hides, and Cloath of Cotton ready made, as very well deſerves that title. Here is alſo very great plenty of Fiſh, Wilde beaſts for hunting, Mines of Gold and other Metals; beſides an infinite deal of Sarzaparilla ſent to Europe yearly.

The people of the ſame nature and diſpoſition with thoſe of Cumana, with whom they do participate in all points of that Character. The Women (which was there omitted) trained up to ride, run, leap, and ſwim, as well as the men; to till the Land, and look to the buſineſs of the houſe, whileſt the men hunt, or fiſh, to bring in proviſion. They count it a great part of beauty, to have very thick thighs; which they effect, by binding their legs hard below the knee, from their very Child-hood. Shameleſs enough till married, after more reſerved; though rather for fear of a Divorce, than for love of modeſty.

Rivers of note, I meet with none; inſtead of which many convenient Harbours and capacious Bayes. The chief, that called Golfo triſte, from ſome ſhip-wracks, or the like miſfortune hapning to the Namer of it. 2. The Bay of Coro, or Venezuela, large and ſpacious, which by a Frith, or Streight of half a league over, receiveth the tribute of 3. The great Lake called the Lake of Maracaybo, by the Spaniards called Lugo de Nueſtra Sennora, or our Ladies Lake, in compaſs about 80. leagues; on the banks whereof dwell many Nations of the Salvages, and into which there falleth a River from the Realm of Granada, by which the two Provinces maintain commerce with one another.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Maracapana, the furtheſt Port upon the Eaſt, and one of the beſt on all this Coaſt; in which the Spaniards of Cubagna had once a Garriſon, under colour of defending the Country againſt the Salvages, but in plain truth to uſe it for an opportunity to ſeize upon their perſons, and carry them away for Slaves. Thoſe parts hereby unpeopled, or but meanly populous. 2. Venezuela, the moſt Weſtern Town of all the Province, commonly called Coro, ſituate in the Latitude of 11. Degrees: built on the Sea, where it hath an Haven on each ſide; the one capacious, but not ſafe; the other ſafe enough, but not very capacious. But being built in a ſweet and healthy air, and neighboured by the richeſt ſoyl of all the Country, it hath been long the ordinary ſeat of the Governour, and the See of a Biſhop (Suffragan to the Arch-biſhop of Domingo in Hiſpaniola) Once ſuddenly ſurprized by the Engliſh, An. 1595. and burnt to aſhes, but as ſuddenly repaired again. 3. Caravalleda, or Nueſtra Sennora de Caravalada, 80. leagues from Coro towards the Eaſt, ſeated upon the Sea near an unſafe Haven, and defended from aſſault by the Caſtle of Caracas, ſo called from the name of the Tribe in which it ſtandeth. Near unto which the Hills ariſe to ſo great an height, that they ſeem to equal the Pike of Tenariff ſo much talked of. 4. S. Jago de Leon, in the ſame tribe of the Caracas, took by the Engliſh the ſame year. 5. Nova Valentia, 25. leagues from S. Jago de Leon, and from Coro 60. 6. New Xeres, lately built, fifteen leagues on the South of New Valentia. 7. Nova Segovia, one league only from New Xeres; ſituate on the banks of Baraquicemiti, the moſt noted River of this tract. 8. Tucuyo, in the Valley ſo called; not very large, but plentifully loaded with rich Sugar-Canes, for which ſome Sugar-works, or Ingenios are here lately built. 9. Touxillo, or Nueſtra Sennora de la Paz, eighteen leagues on the South of the great Lake of Maracaybo, on which the Inhabitants hereof have a Village which belongs unto it, where they hold a Factory for the ſale of their wares. 10. Laguna, on the bottom of the Lake it ſelf; not elſe obſervable but for the multitude of Tygers which do haunt about it.

The Country diſcovered by Columbus, and named by Alfonſo de Oreda, as before is ſaid, was firſt pretended to for Neighbourhoods-ſake, by the Spaniards planted in Cubagna. Afterwards John de Anpuez, by order from the Council reſident at Domingo in Hiſpaniola, was employed in the Diſcovery of it, Anno 1527. But Charles the fifth having taken up great ſums of money of the Velſeri a wealthy Family of Augſpurg, pawned this Country to them: by whom Ambroſius Alfinger was ſent with 400. foot and 80. horſe, to take poſſeſſion. But he and his Succeſſors in that employment, not minding ſo much the Conqueſt as the ſpoyl of the Country, the Council of Domingo undertook the buſineſs once again, and in the year 1545. ſent over one John de Caravayal, who treading in the ſteps of the Germans, or rather out-going them in all ſorts of Rapine, was outed on a ſecond order by one John Perez de Tolaſa, by whom the Province was reduced into ſome good order. In the year 1550. the Negroes, brought hither in great multitudes out of Africk, began to mutiny; but their Deſign diſcovered, and themſelves all ſlain. Peace and contentment following after all theſe troubles, the Country was in little time ſo thorowly planted, and the Natives ſo incouraged in their ſeveral Tribes, that notwithſtanding the deſtructions made by the Germans and Spaniards, here were reckoned not long ſince above 100000. of the Salvages, not numbring thoſe above fifty or under eighteen years of Age; who by an Order of the Councel of Spain for theſe parts of America, are exempt from Taxes.

3. MARGARITA is an Iland ſituate over againſt the Salina or Salt-Lake in Cumana; from the Main-land whereof it is diſtant about ſeven Leagues. So called from the abundance of Pearls which the Spaniards found at the firſt Diſcovery, which the Latiniſts call Margaritas, and from them the Spaniards. Which though it ſignifie no other than the Vulgar or common Pearl, yet here were alſo ſtore of thoſe of the greater eſtimate, ſuch as the Romans by the figure of Antiphraſis called Uniones, becauſe they always grew in couples. Nulli duo reperiuntur indiſcreti, ſaith Pliny; unde nomen Unionum ſcilicet Romanæ impoſuere deliciæ.

The Iſle affirmed to be 16. Leagues in length, and ſix in breadth; ſituate under the 11. Degree of Northern Latitude. Well ſtored with Pearls upon the Shores, when firſt diſcovered; but even then when moſt plentifully ſtored with that Commodity, ſhe had not water of her own to quench her thirſt, compelled to fetch it from Cumana. Otherwiſe plentifull enough both of Maize, and Fruits. The People obſequiouſly ſervile to their Lords, the Spaniards; ſo long accuſtomed unto bondage, that it is now grown another nature. Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Monpater, in the Eaſt corner of the Iland, a Fort of the Spaniards, built for ſecuring their rich Trade of Pearl-fiſhing, and to defend their ſhips which lie there at Anchor: within the command whereof is a little Burrough, and the houſe of the Governour. 2. El valle de Santa Luzia, two Leagues from the Sea, a Spaniſh Colony. 3. Makanao, the chief Village of the Natives.

This Iland firſt diſcovered in the third Voyage of Columbus, Anno 1498. grew ſuddenly into great eſteem, by reaſon of the rich Pearl-fiſhing, which they found on the ſhores thereof. And in regard the Natives were ſo ready to betray their Treaſures (of which themſelves made little reckoning) they found more favour from the Spaniards, and obtained more liberties from the King, than the reſt of the Salvages. Inſomuch that the Spaniard either could not or would not compell them to dive into the Sea for Pearl; but bought Negro ſlaves from Guinea, and the Coaſts of Africk, whom they inforced with great Torments to dive unto the bottom of the Sea, many times ſeven or eight Fathom deep, to bring up the ſhels, in which that Treaſure was included: where many of them were drowned, and ſome maimed with Sharks, and other Fiſhes. But that rich Trade is much diminiſhed of late, if it fail not quite. The cauſe thereof to be imputed to the unſatiable avarice of the Spaniards, ſo greedy upon Pearl, that they deſtroyed the very Seed, and making gain of whatſoever they could meet with, for a little preſent profit loſt the hopes of the future. The Iland ſince leſs famous, and not much frequented. Viſited to its coſt in the year 1601. by the Engliſh under Captain Parker, who received here 500. l. in Pearls for the ranſom of Priſoners; and took a Ship which came from the Coaſt of Angola, laden with 370. Negroes, to be ſold for Slaves.

4. CUBAGNA is an Iland lying betwixt Margarita and the Promontory of Aroya upon the Continent; from the firſt diſtant but one League, from the other ſix; it ſelf in compaſs about three. Rich on the ſhores, by the abundance of Pearls which were found about them, but very beggerly on the Land. Deſtitute both of graſs and water, by conſequence of Cattel alſo, except only Conies, and but few of thoſe. So that like many a Gallant who ſpend all upon the back, and nothing on the belly, ſhe had her out-ſide laced with Pearls, but within nothing to be found but want and hunger. Their bread and water brought them out of other Countries; and their Fruits too, if they deſired to have any; here being very few Trees, and thoſe moſt of Guayacan. But ſo abundant in this Treaſure, that the Kings Fifths for many years amounted to 15000. Ducats yearly out of this poor Iland.

In this reſpect it was preſently reſorted to, and poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, who planted here a Colony which they called New Cadiz: and grew in ſhort time unto ſo great power, that they made themſelves Maſters of the Port of Maracapana Venezuela, one of the beſt upon thoſe Seas. But in the year 1521. hearing that the Salvages of Cumana had deſtroyed the Convent of Franciſcans on the oppoſite Shore, they cowardly forſook the Iland, and fled to Hiſpaniola. Sent back again by the Councel there, under the conduct of James de Caſtellon, by whom the Town was made more beautifull and ſtrong than ever formerly. In great eſteem as long as the Pearl-fiſhing did continue; now, with that decayed. Yet ſtill the Iland doth deſerve ſome conſideration, for a Fountain on the Eaſt part of it near unto the Sea: continuing, though the Pearls be gone; which yieldeth a Bituminous ſubſtance like oyl, Medicinable for diſeaſes, and is found two or three Leagues off, floating on the Sea: more profitable for the good of Mankind, and more eaſily found, than the Pearls which ſunk unto the bottom, and maintained our pride.

Four miles from hence, but appendent to it, lieth a little Iſland called Coche, three miles in compaſs, but ſo abundantly ſtored with Pearls, that it hath been worth in that one commodity for ſome moneths together, above a thouſand pounds a moneth of our Engliſh money. Firſt peopled, upon that occaſion, An. 1529. but the occaſion failing, the Plantation ended, the Iſle being now unpeopled, as not worth the looking after.

5. THE LESSER ISLANDS of this Præfecture or Provincial Government, lie all along upon the Coaſt of Venezuela, from Eaſt to Weſt; the principal of which, 1. Tortuga, 12. or 14. miles on the Weſt of Margarita: four miles in length, hardly one in breadth; but yielding ſuch good ſtore of Salt, that three or four ſhips are laded with it every year. Well furniſhed with Goats and Guayacan; but not elſe conſiderable: except for being naturally fenced about with Rocks, and yielding a convenient Harbour for the uſe of Mariners. 2. Catelina, by the Engliſh called the Iſle of Providence, as the former is by the name of Aſſociation; both which being void of all inhabitants and tame beaſts, were poſſeſſed by them about the year 1619. at ſuch time as there was often War between England and Spain; After which, not being claimed by the Spaniards in making up the peace enſuing, they were granted by King Charls by his Letters Patents under the great Seal of England, to certain Noble men and Gentlemen, and their Succeſſors, who for the ſpace of 20. years, or there abouts, have enjoyed them quietly; the Ilands being planted by them with their ſeveral Colonies, and all things neceſſary to maintain and enrich the ſame. 3. Bonaire, oppoſite to the Bay of Golfo triſte, in the Latitude of twelve Degrees; well furniſhed with Sheep and Goats, and other Cattel brought out of Spain, and peopled with ſome Salvages out of Hiſpaniola, whom the Spaniards Chriſtned and ſent thither: ſome Spaniards with their Government intermixt amongſt them. The Iland 6. miles in compaſs; not fruitfull naturally but in trees, which are great and numerous. 4. Curacaos, nine miles on the Weſt of Bonaire; and as many in compaſs. Of a more fertile ſoil by far, and of very rich Paſtures: the People given to grazing, and make good ſtore of Cheeſe, tranſported thence to other places; the Iland having towards the North, a convenient Harbour. 5. Aruba, on the North-eaſt of Curacaos, from which nine miles diſtant, in compaſs not above five miles, for the moſt part level; One hill it hath (amongſt ſome others) faſhioned like a Sugar-loaf. Inhabited by few Salvages, and fewer Spaniards.

The other Ilands on this Coaſt, as the Toſtigos, lying Eaſt-ward of 1. Margarita. 2. Blanca. 3. Orchilla, 4. Rocca, and 5. the Iſle des Aves, or of Birds, interpoſed betwixt Tortuga and Bonaire; ſome of them rather Rocks than Ilands: few ſtored with any living creatures for the uſe of men; and none of them at all with men to manure and dreſs them, I paſs over here: and ſo proceed from theſe Ilands of the Province of Paria, to thoſe which are ſubordinate to the Councel of S. Domingo, and make a Province of themſelves. But firſt we muſt go back, and bring up ſome of the Ilands of Mare del Zur, which could not be reduced to any of the former Provinces.

And ſo much of PERUANA.

OF THE AMERICAN ILANDS: And firſt of thoſe which are in MARE DEL ZUR.

THe AMERICAN ILANDS, ſcattered up and down the ſhores of this New World, are commonly divided into thoſe of Mare del Zur, or the Pacifique Ocean; and thoſe of the Atlantick, or Mare del Noort. The firſt ſo called by Magellanus, the firſt Diſcoverer: who paſſing thorow thoſe troubleſome and tempeſtuous Streights which now bear this name, found ſuch a change upon his comming into the Main, that he gave it the name of Mare del Zur, (quod à tranquillitate vocavit Mare del Sur, ſaith the Author of the Atlas Minor) from the calm and peaceable temper of it. By the Latines called Mare Pacificum, in the ſame regard. Called alſo the Southern Ocean, becauſe of its ſituation on the South ſide of America, in reference to ſome part of the Golf of Mexico, and the Streights of Anian. Not known unto the Spaniards, till diſcovered by Nonnius Vaſques de Balboa, conducted hither by one of the Caciques or pety Kings of the Country about Nombre di Dios; Who ſeeing the Spaniards ſo greedy after Gold, told them that he would bring them to a place where their thirſt ſhould be ſatisfied. Accordingly he brought them to the oppoſite ſhore, this Balboa being the chief man in that Adventure: who diſcovering further on the Sea, opened the way unto Pizarro, and the reſt that followed to the golden treaſures of Peru: Executed notwithſtanding this good ſervice by Don Pedro de Avila, within ſhort time after. But the more full diſcovery of it is to be aſcribed unto Magellanus and ſome later Adventurers, though the Spaniards got nothing by the bargain. For formerly, as long as the Southern ſea was unknown to any but themſelves, they conveyed their Gold and treaſures from one place to another, from Panama to Peru, from Peru to Panama, without loſs or charge, and thought their Ports upon that ſhore to be unacceſſible. But after the way unto this Sea was found out by Magelanus, Drake. Cavendiſh, and the reſt of our Engliſh Adventurers did ſo ſcoure theſe Coaſts, that they left them neither Port nor ſhip, which they did not ranſack; as hath been evidenced before in ſome particulars.

As for the Ilands of this Sea, they lie moſt of them ſo near the ſhores, as if placed there by Nature to ſerve as Out-works to defend the Continent. Many in tale, but few of conſideration; and of thoſe few ſome of the chief have been deſcribed already in their proper places, as parts and members of the Province upon which they lie. The reſidue which lie too far off to come under ſuch conſideration, muſt be mentioned here; and thoſe reduced to theſe two heads, 1. Los Ladrones, and 2. the Ilands of John Fernandes.

1. LOS LADRONES are certain Ilands, ſituate betwixt the main Land of America and the Philippine Ilands, in the Longitude of 185. and the 4. Degree of Northern Latitude. So called by Magellanus who firſt diſcovered them becauſe of the theiviſhneſs of the Inhabitants, (Inſulæ Latronum is their name in Latin) who had ſtoln his cock-boat, which he was forced by main force to recover from them. And they continue ſtill both their name and nature. Found ſuch by Cavendiſh and Noort in their ſeveral Voyages, to whom they came under colour of buying Iron, (a Commodity which they highly prize) but either cloſely or openly ſtealing whatſoever they met with. The people tall of ſtature, brown of complexion, and inclining to corpulency; extremely active, and good Divers, continuing a long time under the water, as if alike fitted to both Elements; in ſo much as the Hollanders then with Noort, to make trial of it, caſt five pieces of Iron into the Sea, all fetched out by one of them. The Women as good at it as the men. Both ſexes given to filthy and promiſcuous luſts; for which branded (many of them) with the marks of their incontinency, the Pox having eaten up both their Lips and their Noſes.

Their Religion is worſhipping the Devil, whoſe Images they have in wood on the head of their Boats; the Chapel and the Saints fit for ſuch devotions. But for the nature of theſe Iſlands, and what ſubjection the Inhabitants of it yield to the King of Spain, I am yet to ſeek. But like enough they yield as little as ſome others do, which yet are reckoned by our Authors to be parts of America.

2. The Ilands of John Fernandes, are two in nnmber: ſo called from John Fernandes the firſt Diſcoverer, An. 1574. each of them five or ſix miles in compaſs, and about 300. miles diſtant from the ſhores of Chile. Situate in the 33. Degree of Southern Latitude; rocky and barren, but well wooded, and theſe woods repleniſhed with Goats, but their fleſh not ſo ſavory as in other places. Some ſtore of Sanders there is in them, and of Palms no ſcarcity. Plenty of Fiſh upon the ſhores, for which cauſe viſited ſometimes by the Spaniards lying in Peru: and fitted with commodious Harbours and Roads for ſhipping, which makes them not neglected by other Nations as they paſs this way. None elſe of note in all this Sea, but ſuch as lie upon the ſhores of their ſeveral Provinces; which we have looked upon already. And therefore paſſing thorow the Streights, and comming up unto the Ilands of Paria, where before we left; we will now look on thoſe of Mare del Noort, or that part of the Atlantick which waſheth the ſhores of this New world, (the reaſon of which names we have ſeen before) ſub-ordinate to the Counſel or Government of S. Domingo, viz. 1. the Caribes. 2. Porto Rico. 3. Hiſpaniola. 4. Cuba, and 5. Jamaica. The reſt already ſpoken of in their proper places.

1. THE CARIBES.

THe CARIBES or Canibal Ilands are in number many; 27. of them known by their proper names; the reſt, of leſs note (though ſome of theſe of little enough) not yet ſo diſtinguiſhed. Called thus in general, becauſe inhabited by Canibals and Man-eating people (at their firſt Diſcovery) as the word Caribes doth import. They lie extended like a Bow from the coaſt of Paria unto the Iſle of Porto Rico: of different temper, as muſt needs be in ſuch variety; and therefore not within the compaſs of a general Character. Some of the principal we ſhall conſider more diſtinctly; and for the reſt it will be trouble enough to name them, or elſe paſs them by.

1. GRANADA, the neareſt of this crew to the Main-land of Cumana, is ſituate in the Latitude of 20. degrees and 15. Minutes; in form like a Creſcent or half Moon, the two horns not a mile a ſunder, the whole length but ſix. Shaded all over with thick Woods, but notwithſtanding of a rich and fruitfull ſoil. A Haven in it of good uſe, but no Town of note. The people of the ſame ill condition with the other Salvages, but more wit to hide it; moſt miſchievouſly intended when they ſeem moſt kind; and then the more to be avoyded.

2. S. VINCENT, 18. miles on the North of Granada, is of ſo bleſſed a ſoil, that it brings forth abundance of Sugar-Canes without charge to the Husbandman. Watered with many pleaſant Rivers, and full of ſafe and convenient Bayes for the uſe of Mariners. In figure Circular, the Diameter being ſix miles over; the Circle by conſequence eighteen. The people but of mean ſtature, ſlothfull, and ſtudious only for their Belly: their love to which makes them to adventure in their ſmall Boats, hewn out of the body of a Tree, to paſs into the Continent, and return again, without help of the Compaſs; though diſtant from it at the neareſt, above 30. miles.

3. BARBADOS on the North-eaſt of S. Vincent, in the Latitude of 13. Degrees, and 20. Minutes. Of an Oval form, 17. or 18. miles in compaſs. The ſoil in ſhew like that of England, but far more fruitfull: on the Eaſt-ſide thruſting out it ſelf with Points and Angles, which yield ſome Bayes, but full of Quick-ſands, and unſafe for ſhipping; on the South furniſhed with a large and commodious Harbour. Not very well provided of for fruits or Cattel, till made a Colony of the Engliſh; who have brought thither from their own Country, Swine and Kine; Orenges, and the like from others. The chief Commodity made hitherto of this Plantation, comes by the planting of Tobacco; and by a kind of coarſe Sugar called Barbadoes Sugar, which muſt be quickly ſpent, or will melt to nothing. Were they in ſtock, and not forced to make a quick return of their Commodities, they might make here as good Sugars as in other places. Yet this Plantation ſaid to be worth all the reſt which are made by the Engliſh; who (as I take it) are the ſole Colony in it. The Iland but at the courteſie of the Spaniard; without whoſe leave and liking not of force to hold it.

4. MATININO on the North-weſt of the Barbados, by the Salvages called Madaninam, with little difference. Every where ſwelled with Hills, of which three moſt eminent for height: one of them, which way ſoever a man looks upon it, carrying the reſemblance of an Hat: Inhabited in the time of Peter Martyr the Hiſtorian, with none but Women: afterwards, with a more fierce and barbarous people than the reſt of theſe Ilands: but neither Men or Women to be ſeen of late: whether deſtroyed, or removed further from the ſhores for fear of their deſtruction, is a thing uncertain.

5. DOMINICA, ſeated on the North of Matinino, twelve Leagues in length; exceeding fruitfull of Tobacco, which they ſell unto the Europæans for Hatchets, Knives, and other Inſtruments of Iron. Famed for two Fountains of Hot-water, and a commodious Haven at the Weſt-ſide of it, into which falleth a River 20. paces broad. The people as barbarous as ever Canibals or Man-eaters to this very day: At deadly enmity with the Spaniards, and to no man truſty, but where they cannot hurt or dare not. Both ſexes wear their hair long, and colour their bodies over with Oaker. Yet bloody and barbarous though they be, they are ruled by a King of their own, diſtinguiſhed from the reſt in his dreſs or habit, whom they moſt readily obey.

6. DESSEADA, or the Land of Deſire, on the North-eaſt of Dominica, Diſcovered by Columbus in his ſecond Voyage; naked of Trees, and at the firſt ſight afar off, not unlike a Galley. Of great uſe to the Spaniards, who alwaies take it in their way from the Canaries to the parts of America, and back again at their return.

The like uſe do they make of 7. The Iſle of GUADALUPE, parallel to this, but directly Weſtward: at which the Fleets which come from Spain uſe to take freſh water, and there diſperſe themſelves to their ſeveral Ports. Eight miles in length, and of good Anchorage in moſt parts of the Sea adjoyning. North-eaſt from hence lieth

8. S. Maria del Antigna, commonly called ANTIGNA only, and by ſome miſtakingly ANTEGO. Seven Leagues in length, and as much in breadth; difficult of acceſs, and deſtitute of freſh water, but well repleniſhed of Woods, and provided of Fens. Of late times made a Colony of the Engliſh, who do ſtill poſſeſs it.

9. S. CHRISTOPHER, on the North-weſt of Guadalupe, in the Latitude of 17. Degrees and 20. Minutes. The length ſix miles, the breadth in many places four, and in ſome but two: much ſwelled with hils, and towards the Eaſt provided of ſeveral Salt wiches. The French and Engliſh had ſometimes in it ſeveral Colonies: by whom the Natives were deſtroyed, or otherwiſe compelled to forſake their dwellings; convict, as was pretended, of ſome manifeſt treacheries. But the two Colonies did not long enjoy the ſole poſſeſſion; ejected by Frederick de Toledo, as he paſſed this way with his Navy; though ſuffered to return to their former dwellings, as rather profitable than dangerous to the Crown of Spain. Their chief employment and commodity lies in their Tobacco, by ſome much commended. Joyning hereto, or but a League from it at the moſt, is

10. The Iſle of NIEVES, affirmed to be five leagues in compaſs; well wooded, and as pleaſantly watered; inſomuch as the Inhabitants of the Iſle of Dominica uſed to come hither for their pleaſures, but for hunting chiefly. Now famed for ſome Bathes or Hot-waters, found out by the Engliſh, who in the year 1528. placed a Colony in it. But whether ſubſiſting of it ſelf, or a part of their Plantation in S. Chriſtophers, I am yet to learn.

11. SANCTA CRUX, by the inhabitants called Ayay, on the North-weſt of S. Chriſtophers, and the South-eaſt of Porto Rico, from which laſt diſtant 15. leagues. Woody and mountainous; not well provided of freſh waters; but on the Weſt-ſide furniſhed with a ſafe and commodious Road, under the covert of the mountains. Amongſt their fruits ſome that reſemble a green Apple; which taſted, ſo inflames the tongue, that for 24. hours it ſwelleth in ſo great extremity, as makes it altogether uſeleſs, but after that by little and little it abates again. The like hapneth alſo to the face, if waſhed before Sun-riſing with their Fen-waters, which are very frequent in this Iland; after the riſing of the ſun, without any harm at all. In this there is a Colony of the Engliſh alſo, but of later ſtanding than thoſe of S. Chriſtophers and Barbados.

Some of the principal of the reſt, 1. Anguilla, 2. Barbada, 3. S. Bartholmews, 4. S. Lucies, 5. S. Martins, 6. Montferrat, 7. Rotunda, 8. Saba, 9. Virgo Gorda, and 10. Sumbrero; of which we have little but the names: the reſt, though known by ſeveral names, are not worth the naming. Only we are to add concerning the whole Nation of Caribes, once here inhabiting, that they did uſually hunt for Men, as Men for Beaſts, roving as far as Porto Rico to ſeek after their prey; and what they caught, was ſure to go to the pot, in the worſt ſenſe too. Columbus, when he was at the Iſle of Guadalupe, found 30. Captive Children which were reſerved to be eaten, and in their houſes divers veſſels filled with Mans fleſh, and ſome upon the ſpit ready to be roaſted. Nor had they laid aſide this diet, till after the year 1564. but how long I know not: For at that time, a Spaniſh ſhip coming to water at the Iſle of Dominica, they cut her Cables in the night, haled her to the land, and devoured all that were in her. But the Ilands have been of late times well cleared of thoſe Monſters; ſome of them brought unto better order, but the moſt deſtroyed as the common Enemies of mankind; the Ilands where they dwelt being either totally deſerted, or taken up by the Europaans and their ſeveral Colonies.

2. PORTO RICO, And 3. MONICO.

PORTO RICO lyeth on the North-weſt of Sancta Crux, from which diſtant about 15. Leagues and near upon as many from Hiſpaniola, 136. Leagues from the main Land of Paria, and not much leſs from the Cape of Coquibocco in Rio de la Hacha, a Province of Caſtella Aurea. It took this name from the chief Town and Haven of it; but was called by Columbus at the firſt diſcovery, S. Johannis Inſula, or the Iſle of S. Johns; by the Natives Boriguen.

It is ſituate under the 18. and 19. Degrees of Northern Latitude; in form quadrangular, but of a greater length than breadth, ſuch as the Geometricians call oblongum: The length thereof being 30. Leagues, and the breadth but 20. The Ayr hereof very pleaſant and temperate, not ſcorched with furious heats in Summer, nor made offenſive by the fall of continual rains; expoſed ſometimes (chiefly in Auguſt, and September) to the troubleſomneſs of ſudden tempeſts, called Hericanos. The ſoyl indifferently fruitfull, though ſomewhat Mountainous: here being (beſides other Hills of inferiour note) a ridge of high Hills which run croſs the Country from the one end unto the other. Their chief commodities Sugar-canes, Ginger, Caſſia, and great ſtore of Hides: the Europaan Cattel having ſo abundantly increaſed, that they kill thouſands for their skins, leaving the fleſh to be a prey unto Dogs and Birds. Some Mines here were of Gold and Silver, but conſumed long ſince. And ſo are all the Natives alſo; of whom, in that reſpect, impertinent to give any Character.

Chief Rivers of the Iſland, 1. Cairobon, 2. Boyaman: of divers fountains, and of ſeveral and divided courſes. 3. Luyſa, and 4. Toa, two Rivers growing out of one. The Spring of that one in the Mountains of Guayamo, whence running North-wards in one Chanel 16. Leagues together, doth afterwards divide it ſelf into thoſe two ſtreams. 5. Guiano. 6. Arezibo. 7. Guadiabo; of leſſer note, but all of them, as well as all the reſt before, concluding in ſome ſafe and capacious Haven.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Porto Rico the chief town, built in a little Iland, on the North-ſide of the greater, but joyned unto it with huge piles, and vaſt expences, by the command of Philip the firſt, An. 1514. Well built, with large ſtreets, and convenient houſes, according to the model of the Cities of Spain; and beautified with a fair Cathedral; the Biſhop one of the Suffragans of the Archbiſhop of S. Domingo in Hiſpaniola. The town unwalled, but fortified with two ſtrong Caſtles: the one of which ſecures the Haven, and the other the Town. In vain attempted, and with the loſs of 40. or 50. men, by Sir Francis Drake, An. 1595. but taken two years after by George Earl of Cumberland, who had a purpoſe to have peopled it with an Engliſh Colony. Diſcouraged from it by the death of 400. of his men, by change of Ayr, and ſome intemperance of Diet, he ſet ſayl for England, doing no other hurt to the Town or Iland, but the diſfurniſhing it of 70. piece of Ordnance, and ſome part of their treaſure, which he brought home with him. 2. S. Germans, in the Weſtern part of the Iland, but four Leagues from the Sea; once the chief of the Iland, now both unfortified, and ſmall. 3. Arezibo, on the River ſo called. 4. Luyſa, the moſt noted Port of the Eaſtern parts, ſituate on the mouth of the River ſo named.

Eaſt-ward hereof betwixt it and Hiſpaniola, lies the Iland of Mona, (might not this think we be ſo called by Madoc ap Owen Guinedth, of whom before?) three leagues in compaſs; rocky and of a brackiſh earth; but fit for the production of Limons, Orenges, and ſuch kind of fruit, which are here in plenty. Not far off, but more towards the Weſt, Monico, or Monetta, as our Engliſh call it, where they found ſuch infinite ſtore of Fowl, that they flew over their heads as thick as hail, and made them almoſt deaf with the very noiſe; their Eggs ſo thick upon the ground, that they loaded two boats with them in three hours, and could hardly paſs forwards without treading on them.

But to return to Porto Rico, or the Iſle of S. Johns, is was firſt touched upon by Columbus in his ſecond voyage, An. 1493. but firſt inhabited by John Ponce of Leon, An. 1510. who being curteouſly entertained by Aiguabana, the chief Prince thereof, planted a Colony of Spaniards in the North part of the Iſland, which he called Caparra. The Colony ten years after that removed to Guanica, and from thence to S. Germans: carrying with it the repute of the chief Town of all the Iland, upon every remove, till the building of Porto Rico, where it ſince hath fixed. The Iland very populous for the bigneſs of it, when the Spaniards came to it: but the Natives long ago conſumed by ſeveral Butcheries; and as ſome write, not above 1500. Spaniards in all the Country. What elſe concerns the ſtory of it, we have ſeen before.

HISPANIOLA.

HISPANIOLA, lyeth on the Weſt of Porto Rico; the diſtance we have ſeen already. By the Inhabitants called Haitia, and by ſome Quiſqueia; but by Columbus it was honoured with the name of Hiſpaniola, or little Spain; and of late times beginneth to be called S. Domingo, from the chief Town of it.

The form thereof Triangular, extended in a ſharp Angle, called Cabo del Enganno, towards Porto Rico: the Weſtern end faſhioned like a large Bay, or Semicircle; the Northern point of which is named S. Nicholas; the Southern, Cabo de Donna Maria. The length affirmed to be 150. Leagues, the breadth in ſome places 60. in ſome but 30. thence growing leſs and leſs till it come unto the Eaſtern Angle; the whole compaſs eſtimated at 400. Situate betwixt the 18. and 20. Degrees of Northern Latitude. Of an Air much infeſted with Morning-heats, but cooler in the Afternoon by the conſtant blowing of a Sea-gale, which they there call Viraſon.

The Country for the moſt part beautifull and flouriſhing; the Trees alwayes in their Summer-livery, and the Meadows green, as if it did enjoy a perpetual Spring. In many places ſwelled with high craggy Mountains, whence the name of Hayty, that word ſo ſignifying in the natural language of the Natives. Of ſuch an excellent herbage, that the Cattel brought hither out of Spain have increaſed almoſt beyond Arithmetick; grown wilde for want of proper Owners; and hunted unto death like the Stags of the foreſt, though only to rob them of their skins. The ſoil ſo fertile, that in the ſpace of ſixteen dayes Herbs and Roots will grow ripe, and be fit to be eaten. So plentifully ſtored with Ginger, and Sugar-canes, that in the year 1587. there were ſhipped hence 27500. pound weight of Ginger, and 900. Cheſts of refined Sugar; an evident argument of the riches and fertility of it. A further proof hereof may be, the rich Mines of Gold, in which they uſed to find Gold without mixture of droſs or other metals. 2. The great increaſe of Sugar, one Cane here filling twenty, ſometimes thirty meaſures. 3. The wonderfull yield of Corn, amounting in ſome places to an hundred fold. But the Mines were long ago exhauſted, inſomuch as the Inhabitants are fain to uſe braſs-money: but inſtead of thoſe of Gold, they have found out others of Braſs and Iron, and ſome few of Silver; but not much ſearched into of late for want of Work-men.

The reaſon of that want to be aſcribed unto the Covetouſneſs and Cruelty of the Spaniſh Nation: who out of an unſatiable thirſt for Gold, conſumed the people in their Mines; and out of the like thirſt for Blood, killed ſo many of them, that in few years they deſtroyed three Millions of the Natives. And it is probably ſuppoſed, that had not Charls the 5. reſtrained them by a Penal Edict from compelling the Natives againſt their wils to thoſe works of ſervitude, there had not been one Native left in all this Iſland, nor in any other part of their Plantation. Such as are left, are ſaid to be of low ſtature, of black hair, and a complexion ſomewhat inclining to that colour: not differing in manners, habit, or Religion from the Spaniards there.

Rivers of moſt note, 1. Ozama, on whoſe Banks ſtands Domingo, the chief Town of that Iſland, capable of the greateſt ſhips to the very Wharf. 2. Nigua, which paſſing thorow rich Paſtnres, or making the Paſtures rich, by its ſecret vertue, runneth towards the Weſt, as do alſo, 3. Yaquimo. 4. Nizao, and 5. Neyba. 6. Hayna, of a contrary courſe to the other three. 7. Yaqui, or Jacho, which falleth into the Northern Seas. 8. Nicayagu. 9. Cocitemico. 10. Xanique. Theſe three laſt famous heretofore for their Sands of Gold. Some ſpeak of 30000. Brooks and Rivers, which are found in this Country; two parts of which vaſt number had their Golden Sands. A thing ſo far beyond the charity of the ſtrongeſt Faith, (though reported by a grave and Reverend Author) that I know not what Interpretation to put upon it, except every Water-courſe, Ditch, and Gutter, may be reckoned in.

The whole divided, when the Spaniards firſt came amongſt them, into ſeveral Provinces or Kingdoms, as 1. Higuey. 2. Jacuaguia. 3. Samana, in the Eaſtern parts. 4. Yaquimo. 5. Boaruco, and 6. Xaragua, towards the South. 7. Guahabu, and 8. Cabaya, in the Weſt: and in the North, 9. Cibao, rich in Mines of Gold; 10. Marien, the Landing place of Columbsn; and 11. Maguana, in the center of the Iland, the King whereof in the time of Columbus was named Conabo, of greateſt power of any of thoſe petit Roytelets. Another diviſion of it hath been made by Nature, parting it by four Rivers, all riſing from one Mountain in the midſt of the Iſland, into four Diviſions: the River Jache running towards the North; 2. Nubiba haſtning to the South; 3. Yuna, or Junna towards the Eaſt; and 4. Hatibonico to the Weſt. But theſe diviſions being long ſince grown out of uſe, we will ſurvey the chief of the Towns and Cities of it, as they come before us.

And they are, 1. S. Domingo, firſt built by Bartholomew Columbus, Anno 1484. on the Eaſt bank of the Ozama; and afterwards (in the year 1502.) removed by Nicholas de Obando, then Governour of the Iland, to the oppoſite ſhore. Situate in a pleaſant Country, amongſt wealthy Paſtures, and neighboured with a ſafe and capacious Haven: the houſes elegantly built, moſt of them of ſtone, and the whole well walled, beſide a Caſtle at the Weſt end of the Peer to defend the Haven: enriched by the reſidence of the Governour, the Courts of Juſtice, the See of an Archbiſhop, (and beſides many Convents and Religious honſes) an Hoſpital endowed with 20000. Ducats of yearly Rent. Eſteemed of greateſt Trade and concourſe of Merchants till the taking of Mexico, and the Diſcovery of Peru; ſince that time ſenſibly decaying; and now reduced unto the number of 600. Families of Spaniards; the greateſt part of the City, and all the Suburbs, inhabited by Negroes, Mulatos, and other Strangers. Not yet recovered of the hurt it had by Sir Francis Drake, who in the year 1586. took it by force, and held it for the ſpace of a moneth, burning the greateſt part of the houſes, and ſuffering the reſt to be redeemed at a certain price. 2. S. Salvador, 28. Leagues to the Eaſt of Domingo. 3. Jaguana, called alſo Sancta Mare del Porto, from a ſafe and beautifull Haven adjoyning to it; ſituate in the Weſt part of the Iland, of no great bigneſs, conſiſting of no more then 150. houſes, when it was at the greateſt; but made much leſs by Captain Newport, who in the year 1591. burnt it to the ground. 4. Cotuy, in the North of the Iſland, oppoſite to S. Domingo, from which diſtant almoſt 60. Leagues: a little Town, but formerly of great eſteem for its Mines of Gold. 5. Conception de la Vega, the foundation of Chriſtopher Columbus; for whoſe ſake afterwards adorned with a See Epiſcopal. 6. Puerto de la Plata, 40. Leagues from Domingo on the Northern ſhore; where built on a commodious Bay by Nicholas de Obando, before mentioned, by whom alſo fortified: the ſecond Town of Wealth and Trade in all the Iland. 7. Azua, now called Compoſtella, a noted Haven, and reſorted to for Sugars, which it yields abundantly.

This Iland was firſt diſcovered by Columbus, (for I believe not that it was any of the fortunate Ilands which we read of in the life of Sertorius) in the firſt voyage which he made: conducted hither by ſome of the Inhabitants of the Iſle of Cuba. Landing, and gaining the good will of the Salvages, by gentle uſage, he obtained leave of one of their Kings or Caciques to build a Fortreſs in his Country, which he called Navidad, or Natividad, leaving in it 36. Spaniards to keep poſſeſſion: whom he found both maſtered and murdered at his coming back. Being now better furniſhed for a new Plantation, he built the Town called Iſabella, (in honour of Iſabella Queen of Caſtile) near the Mines of Cibao; which afterwards was deſerted alſo, and the Colony removed unto S. Domingo: the Spaniards ſending one Colony after another, till at laſt their number was increaſed unto 14000. beſides women and children. But having rooted out the Natives by their infinite cruelties, and exhauſted the riches of the Country with as infinite covetouſneſs, they betook themſelves to freſher Quarters, abandoning the Iland to devour the Continent. Once had the Ilanders rebelled, and fortified themſelves in the Province of Baoruco; a place ſo naturally ſtrong, that there was little need of the helps of Art. Not brought to leave that faſtneſs but on ſuch conditions as made the Spaniards leſs inſolent, and themſelves leſs ſlaves.

5. CUBA.

CUBA lyeth on the Weſt of Hiſpaniola, from which parted by a Frith or narrow Chanel, interpoſed betwixt the two Capes of S. Nicholas, and that of Mayzi, Backed on the North with a frie of Ilands, called the Lucaios, and ſome part of the Peninſula of Florida; extended towards the Eaſt to the extreme point or Foreland of Jucutan, called Cape de Cotache, from which diſtant about 50. Leagues, and neighboured on the South with the Iſle of Jamaica.

It is in length from Eaſt to Weſt, that is to ſay, from Cape Maxie towards Hiſpaniola, to the Cape of S. Anthony, 230. Leagues; in breadth where broadeſt hardly 40. but fifteen in others. For the fertility of the ſoil contending with Hiſpaniola for the preheminence; but in the temperature of the Air a great deal before it. Liberally ſtored with Ginger, Caſſia, Maſtick, Aloes, Cinamon and Sugar, (not reckoning ſuch Commodities as are common unto this with others) beſides great plenty of Fleſh, and Fiſh; and of Fowl no ſcarcity. The Gold more droſſie in the Mine, than in Hiſpaniola, but the Braſs more perfect. Hilly, and full of lofty Mountains; but thoſe Mountains clad with divers trees, ſome of which drop the pureſt Roſin, and the Hills ſending to the Valleys many notable Rivers. Peſtered with many ſorts of Serpents, not ſo much out of any ill condition of the Soyl and Air, as by an old Superſtition of the Salvages: in former times not ſuffered to kill them when they might, (this being a Diſh reſerved for the higher Powers) not able afterwards to deſtroy them when it would have been ſuffered.

What other Salvage Rites they had, is not now material, the Spaniards having took an Order that they ſhould not trouble us in that particular. Yet thus much we may add in memory of the firſt Inhabitants, that an old man of 80. years, one of the Caciques of the Iland, addreſſed himſelf unto Columbus at his firſt coming hither, adviſing him to uſe his Fortune with moderation, and to remember that the ſouls of men have two journeys when they leave this World; the one foul and dark, prepared for the injurious and cruel perſon; the other delectable and pleaſant for the men of peace. It is ſaid alſo of them, they knew not the uſe of money, nor underſtood the niceties of Meum and Tuum: Tenants in common to the bleſſings which the earth brought forth, and Coheirs of Nature.

Amongſt the Rarities of this Iland, they mention a Fountain out of which floweth a pitchy ſubſtance, which is found frequently on the Seas into which it falleth, excellent for the Calking of ſhips: Secondly, a Navigable River (but the name not told us) the waters of which were ſo hot, that a man could not endure to hold his hand in them. They tell us alſo thirdly of a Valley 15. leagues from S. Jago, which produceth ſtones exactly round, as if made for pleaſure; but yet meerly natural. But theſe no greater Rarities than in other places: nor altogether ſo great as in Hiſpaniola. Of which they tell us of a fair River, whoſe waters are Salt, and yet none but freſh ſtreams fall into it: Of another Lake (three Leagues in compaſs) on the top of the Mountains, into which many Rivers were known to run without any Exit. Neither of theſe ſo ſtrange or rare as the Cucuyo, a kind of Scarabe or Beetle: the eyes and wings whereof when opened give ſo great a light, in the darkeſt places, that a man may ſee to read and write by it, as well as by a Candle.

Rivers of moſt note, 1. Cante, much annoyed with Crocodiles, (a Beaſt not common in theſe Ilands, nor elſewhere in this) exceeding dangerous to ſuch as repoſe themſelves on the Banks of the River. 2. Arimao, which disburtheneth it ſelf near the Port of Xagua. 3. Ria de Porcos, full of Rocks and quick-ſands, at the entrances of it. 4. Rio Eſcondida, paſſing betwixt Habana, and the Port of Marcanas. 5. Marien, and 6. Taane, of leſs note: Beſides theſe there is Xagua, a ſafe Station and Road for ſhipping; of a narrow entrance, but large and ſpacious when once entred, above ten Leagues in length, and of breadth proportionable. So fenced on all ſides from the winds, that ſhips lie here in ſafety without any Anchor. Some other Baies there be as uſefull, though not ſo conſiderable.

Towns of moſt conſequence, 1. S. Jago, in the South part of the Iland, ſituate about two Leagues from the Main, but in the bottom of a large and capacious Gulf, the moſt noted Port of all theſe Seas. Built by Don Diego de Velaſques, An. 1514. Afterwards made a Biſhops See, beautified with a Cathedral; ſome Religious houſes: once not inferiour unto any for numbers of People, though now few enough. Baracao, 30. Leagues on the Eaſt of S. Jago, the ſame Foundation as the other; and neighboured by great quantities of Eben-wood. 3. S. Salvador, by ſome called Baymo, according to the old name of the Province in which it ſtandeth; built by Velaſco in the moſt pleaſant and richeſt part of all the Iland; but not ſo fitly, as the other, for Trade and Merchandiſe. 4. Porto del Principe, an Haven Town in the North parts: not far from which is the Fountain of a pitchy or bituminous liquor, ſpoken of before; which I conceive to be much of the ſame nature with the Fountains of Naphta in the Eaſt. 5. Trinidad, another of Velaſcos foundations, nine or ten leagues Eaſt-ward of the Port of Xagua: once well frequented, but now forſaken, and meer nothing. 6. Havana in the North parts, oppoſite to Florida, a noted and well traded Port; ſo ſtrongly ſituate and fortified both by Nature and Art, that it ſeems impregnable. The Entrances defended with two notable Caſtles; a greater than either oppoſite to the mouth of the Haven; all ſo commodiouſly built, and well planted with Ordnance, that they are able to keep out and ſcatter the greateſt Navy. Near one of them ſtandeth an high Tower, from the top whereof notice is given unto the Guards, of every ſhip that cometh within view of the Watch-men. The beſt aſſurance, not only of this Iland but the Bay of Mexico; and therefore honoured for the moſt part with the ſeat of the Governour, and the greateſt Trade of all theſe Seas: the ſhips which are bound for Spain from all parts of the Golf, tarrying here for one another, till all met together, and ſetting ſail from hence by the Streights of Bahama, amongſt the Iſles of the Ducaios.

This Iland one of the firſt which was diſcovered by Columbus: who having almoſt tired the Spaniards with the expectation, firſt fell upon the Iland of Guahanani, one of the Lucaios, to which he gave the name of S. Saviours. From thence he ſailed to Baracoa, on the North of this Iland, which he cauſed to be called Fernandina, in honour of Ferdinand the Catholick King of Caſtile and Aragon; at whoſe charge, and the incouragement of Iſabella his Heroick Queen, he purſued this enterprize. Landing, he asked the People if they knew Cipango, (by which name Paulus Venetus calls the Iſle of Japan) and they conceiving that he enquired after Cibao (of great note for the richeſt Mines in Hiſpaniola) pointed towards Hayty; ſome of them going with him to conduct him thither. Cuba by this means laid aſide, and all the thoughts of Spain upon Hiſpaniola, where they found many golden provocations to invite their ſtay; till hungring after more Gold, and ſome new Plantations, they paſſed over hither: and in few years by the prudent conduct of Velaſco, got ſuch footing in it, and made that footing good by ſo many Colonies; that their title and poſſeſſion was beyond diſpute; and ſo continued to this day.

6. JAMAICA.

IAMAICA lyeth on the South of Cuba, from which diſtant 20. Leagues, and as mnch, or very little more, from Hiſpaniola. Diſcovered in the ſecond voyage of Columlus, by whom named S. Jago; that name changed afterwards to Jamaica.

It is in length from Eaſt to Weſt about 50. Leagues, and in breadth 20. the whole compaſs eſtimated at 150. the middle of it under the 18. Degree of Northern Latitude. Of a rich ſoyl, abundantly provided of all things neceſſary: well ſtocked with Cattel, and no leſs plentifully ſtored with moſt ſorts of Fruits, which either Induſtry or Nature have ſupplyed it with. Great ſtore of Cotton-wool; and ſuch abundance of Jaccu, (a Root whereof the Salvages once made their bread) that it was deemed the Granary of the neighbouring Ilands. And were it not diſfurniſhed of convenient Ports (which is all the want of it) would be as much frequented by the ſea-faring men, as any other in thoſe parts. Once very populous, now deſtitute of all the natural Inhabitants: this Iland, and that of Porto Rico, loſing in few years 60000. by the Spaniards cruelties. Cruelties which not only raged upon the men, but deſtroyed poſterity: the Women, here and elſewhere ſo abominating their ſad condition, that they ſtrangled their Children in the birth, to the end they might not live to ſerve ſuch a cruel Nation.

Chief Towns hereof, (for though it be well-waterd, it hath no great Rivers) 1. Sevilla, in the North-part of the Iland, beautified with a goodly Monaſtery, the Abbot whereof hath all Epiſcopal juriſdiction, and is privileged to wear a Miter; in nothing more enobled, then that Peter Martyr the Hiſtorian, (to whoſe Decades all ſucceeding Ages are to be beholding, for the Chorography, and Hiſtory of theſe parts of the World) was once Abbot here. 2. Mellilla, a ſmall Town, but memorable for the unfortunate ſhipwrack of Columbus, on the ſhores adjoyning. 3. Oriſtan, on the South of the Iland, fourteen Leagues from Sevil. 4. De la Vega, now a ruine only, once a Spaniſh Colony; and of great fame for giving the title of Dukes to Chriſtopher Columbus, and his brother Bartholomew. Since whoſe time nothing hapned prejudicial to the State of this Iland by the hands of any but the Spaniards; till conquered, but not held, by Sir Anthony Sherley, An. 1596.

Thus having took a ſhort Survey of the ſeveral parts of this great Body; we now briefly take a view of the Government and Forces of it. The Government committed chiefly to two great Vice-Roycs, the one of Nova Hiſpania, who reſides at Mexico; the other of Peru, who abideth at Lima; the principal Cities of thoſe Kingdoms. The firſt hath juriſdiction over all the Provinces of Nova Galicia, Nova Hiſpania, Guatimala, Caſtella Aurea, and the Provinces of the Mexican Ilands; the other over thoſe of Peru, Chile, Rio de la Plata, and the new Realm of Granada. Such ſcattered pieces as they hold in Guyana, Paria, and the Caribes, with their Forts in Florida, being reduced to ſome of thoſe. Of theſe the Vice-Roy of Peru is of greateſt power, becauſe he hath the nomination of all the Commanders and Officers within his Government: which in the other are reſerved to the King himſelf. But that of New Spain counted for the better preferment, becauſe of its nearneſs unto Spain (in reſpect of the other) the beauties of the City of Mexico, and the Civilities of the people. For the adminiſtration of Juſtice, & ordering the Affaires of the ſeveral Provinces, there are ten chief Courts, from which there lyeth no Appeal: that is to ſay, 1 Guadalaiara, for Gallicia Nova. 2 Mexico, for New Spain. 3 S. Domingo, for the Province of the Iland. 4. Guatimala, for the diviſion ſo named. 5. And Panama, for Caſtella Aurea. Then for the other Government, Quitos, Lima, and Charcas, in the Realm of Peru. 9 Imperiale, for Chile. 10 S Foy, for the New Realm of Granada. From theſe, though no Appeal doth lie in matter of Juſtice; yet both from them and the two Vice-Roys an Appeal may lie in affaires of State, or point of Grievance. And to this end there is a ſtanding Counſel in the Court of Spain, which is called the Counſel of the Indies, conſiſting of a Preſident, eight Counſellors, two Proctors Fiſcal (which we call the Sollicitors General) and two Secretaries, beſides other Officers: to whom it appertaineth to take care of all matters which concern the Government of theſe Countries; to appoint the Vice-Royes, to diſpoſe of all the great offices (except thoſe of the Government of Peru) and ſpiritual Dignities; to appoint Viſitors to go into thoſe Provinces for the examining the actions of all Officers, hearing the grievances of the People, and to diſplace or puniſh as they find occaſion; but with the Kings privity and conſent.

As for the Eſtates of private men, they which hold Lands or Royalties from the Crown of Spain, hold them but for life (except it be the Marqueſs of Valſa in New Spain, of the race of Cortez) after their deaths returning to the King again; who gives them commonly to the eldeſt ſon or the next of blood; but ſo that they receive it as a mark of his favour, and not for any right of theſe. And though they have many times attempted to make theſe Commanderies and Eſtates hereditary, and offered great ſums of money for it, both to Charls the Fifth, and Philip the ſecond; yet they could never get it done; the Kings moſt prudently conſidering, that theſe great Lords having the command of the Eſtates and Perſons of their ſeveral Vaſſals, would either grinde them into powder without any remedy; or upon any Inquiſition into their proceedings, take an occaſion to revolt. Both dangers of no ſmall importance, both by this uncertainty of their preſent Tenure, exceeding happily avoided.

The Revenue which the King receiveth hence, is ſaid to be three Millions of Ducats yearly: moſt of it riſing out of the Fifths of the Mines of Gold and Silver: the reſt by Cuſtoms upon Manufactures and all ſorts of Merchandiſe, and the Acknowledgments reſerved upon Lands and Royalty. But out of this there goeth great Exits, that is to ſay to the two Vice-roys 12000. Ducats; to the Preſident and Officers of the Counſel of the Indies in Spain 20000. Ducats; to the Judges and Officers of the ſeveral Courts of Judicature very liberal Penſions; to every Arch-biſhop and Biſhop, of which there are 29. in all, 2000. Ducats at the leaſt, and to ſome much more to mend their Benefices. Then reckoning in the infinite Charges, in maintaining Garriſons, and entertaining ſtanding Bands both of Horſe and Foot, in ſeveral parts of this Eſtate; and the continual keeping of a ſtrong Armada, to conduct his Plate fleets to Spain, there muſt be made a great abatement, and the ſum will bear it. For howſoever at the firſt his Revenue came from thence without any great charge more than the keeping of a few Souldiers to aw the Salvages; yet after he fell fowl with England, and ſtartled the Hollanders to Rebellion, he was compelled to fortifie all his Havens, and ſecure his Ports, and to maintain a ſtrong Armada at the Sea to Convoy his Treaſures. Before which time, the Engliſh (as is inſtanced in ſeveral places) did ſo ſhare in his Harveſt, that they left him ſcarce enough to pay his Workmen; which if they ſhould attempt again upon any breach, they would find it very difficult, if not impoſſible, to effect any thing on the Coaſts, as in former times; or indeed any other way but by making themſelves too ſtrong for him at Sea, and thereby either intercept his Fleets, or hinder them from coming to him to ſupply his needs. And ſo much for the AMERICAN Ilands.

Having thus travelled over (with Gods bleſſing) the known parts of the World, and ſailed through the moſt difficult Seas which embrace the ſame: we ſhould now man our Barque again, and try what diſcovery we can make of the Parts unknown, or not ſo fully known to us as the others are.

AN APPENDIX
To the Former VVork,
Endeavouring a Diſcovery
Of the UNKNOWN PARTS of the WORLD.

AND here we are upon a new and ſtrange Adventure, which no Knight Errant ever undertook before. Of things Unknown, as there is commonly no deſire, ſo leſs diſcourſe can probably me made upon them. By Unknown therefore we muſt underſtand Leſs known, or not well diſcovered; and in that ſenſe we may as well endeavour to ſay ſomewhat of them, as others with more pains and hazard to attempt the Diſcovery. And to ſay truth, even in the Known parts of the World there is much Unknown; as in the beſt and moſt flouriſhing Kingdoms of the Earth there is ſome waſte ground, either not cultivated at all, or not ſo well inhabited as the reſt of the Country. For beſides many vaſt tracts of ground in the North and North-weſt parts of Tartary, and ſuch parts of India as lye Northwards towards Delanguer, Nancrocot, the Eaſt parts of Caucaſus, and the Realms of Cathay: it is conceived that the greateſt part of the midlands of Africk are Undiſcovered to this day, or the knowledge of them ſo imperfect as comes near a neſcience. And for America, not reckoning in the Northern Borders (which are in part to be the ſubject of this enquiry,) it is affirmed of the Midlands by John de Laet (who hath made the moſt exact deſcription of it that was ever extant) Minima ſui parte perluſtratum eſſe, that the leaſt part of them hath been diſcovered hitherto to any purpoſe. Leaving theſe therefore as before without further ſearch, we will divide the Unknown World into theſe two parts, 1. Terra Incognita Borealis, and 2. Terra Incognita Auſtralis; which with their Sub-diviſions we will now purſue.

TERRA INCOGNITA BOREALIS.

TErra Incognita Borealis, is that part of the Unknown VVorld which lyeth towards the North; and is to be conſidered in theſe three notions. 1. As directly under the Pole, which for diſtinctions ſake we will call Orbis Arcticus; 2. As lying to the North-Eaſt on the back of Europe, and Aſia; or 3. on the North-weſt, on the back of America.

1. Orbis Arcticus is that part of Terra Borealis incognita, which lyeth under or about the Arctick Pole; the ſituation and dimenſions of which being taken with the Aſtrolabe by an Oxford Frier, are by Mercator thus deſcribed out of the Itinerary of James Cnox of Bois le duc, or the Boſche a Town of Brabant.

“ Under the Arctick Pole (ſaith he) is ſaid to be a black Rock of wondrous height, about 33 leagues
“ in compaſs, the Land adjoyning being torn by the Sea into four great Iſlands. For the Ocean violently “ breaking thorow it, and diſgorging it ſelf by 19 Chanels, maketh four Euripi, or fierce VVhirl-pools,
“ by which the waters are finally carried towards the North, and there ſwallowed into the Bowels of “ the Earth. That Euripus or Whirl-pool which is made by the Scythick Ocean hath five Inlets, and by “ reaſon of his ſtreight paſſage, and violent courſe, is never frozen: the other on the back of Groenland, “ being 37 leagues long, hath three inlets, and remaineth frozen three months yearly. Between theſe
“ two there lyeth an Iſland, on the North of Lappia and Biarmia, inhabited as they ſay by Pygmies, the “ talleſt of them not above four foot high. A certain Scholar of Oxford reporteth, that theſe four Euripi
“ are carried with ſuch furious violence towards ſome Gulf, in which they are finally ſwallowed up,
“ that no ſhip is able with never ſo ſtrong a Gale to ſtem the Current, and yet that there is never ſo “ ſtrong a wind as to blow a Wind-mill. The like reported by Giraldus Cambrenſis in his Book De mirabilibus Hiberniæ. So far and to this purpoſe he. But Blundevile our Country-man is of another opinion, as indeed who not ?) neither believing that Plinie or any other of the Roman writers came hither to deſcribe this Promontory : or that the Oxford Frier, without the aſſiſtance of ſome cold Devil of the middle Region of the Air (and conſequently able to endure all weathers,) could approach ſo near as to meaſure theſe cold Countries with his Aſtrolabe, or take the heighth of this Black Rock with his Jacobs Staff. Leaving this therefore as more fit for Lucians Dialogues, than any ſerious diſcourſe, we will proceed to matters of more truth and certainty.

North-East parts.

2. The NORTH-WEST parts of Terra Incognita Borealis, are thoſe which lye on the back of Eſtotiland, the moſt Northern Province of America : by which it hath been much endeavoured to find out a paſſage to Cathay and China, and not to go ſo far about as either by the Cape of Good Hope, or the ſtreights of Magellan. Attempted firſt by Sebaſtian Cabot, An. 1497. at the charge of Henry the ſeventh of England. But having diſcovered as far as to the 67. Degree of Northern Latitude, by the mutiny of his Mariners he was forced to return ; where finding great preparations for a War with Scotland, that buſineſs for the preſent was laid aſide. Reſumed by Gaſper Corteriaglis, a Portugal, An. 1500. and after by Stephen Gomez, a Spaniard, in the year 1525. but neither of them went ſo far to the North as Cabot. The Spaniards notwithſtanding would not ſo give over, but firſt with five ſhips from the Groyn, and afterwards by two from New Spain, ſent out by Cortez, purſued the enterprize, which proving as ſucceſleſs as the former had been, occaſion'd Charls the 5th. then preparing for Italy, on the payment of 35000. Ducats by King John the third, to ſuſpend the proſecution of it. Followed with greater induſtry, but as bad ſucceſs, by Sir Martin Frobiſher, who made three Voyages for theſe parts (the firſt of them in the year 1579) and brought home ſome of the Natives, a Sea Unicorns horn (ſtill kept in the great Wardrobe of Windſor Caſtle) and a great deal of the Ore of that Country, found upon tryal, when in England, not to quit the coſt. A great Promontory which he paſſed by, he called Queen Elizabeths Foreland, in whoſe name he took poſſeſſion of it ; and the Sea running not far off, he called Frobiſhers ſtreights. The Seas full ſet with Icy Iſlands, ſome of them half a mile about, and 80 Fathoms above water ; the people like the Samoeds, the worſt kind of Tartars, in their lives and habit. John Davies followed the deſign, An. 1585. at the incouragement of Sir Francis Walſingham, then principal Secretary of Eſtate ; and having in 3. Voyages diſcovered to the Latitude of 73. by reaſon of the many difficulties which he found in the enterprize, and the death of Mr. Secretary, he was fain to give over ; leaving unto a narrow Sea on the North of Eſtotiland, the name of Fretum Davies, in the Latitude of 65. and 20. Minutes, by which name ſtill called. After him followed Weymouth, Hall, Hudſon, Buton, Baffin, Smith, all Engliſh. The reſult of whoſe endeavours was the finding of ſome cold Iſles and points of Land, which they named King James his Cape, Queen Anns Cape, Prince Henries Foreland, Saddle-Iſland, Barren-Iſland, Red-gooſe Iſland, Diggs his Iſland ; all of them betwixt 80 and 81, and the impoſing on ſome paſſages and parts of the Sea, the names of Hackluyts, Hendland, Smiths Bay, Hudſons ſtreights, Maudlins Sound, Fair Haven, and the like marks and Monuments of their undertakings. Nothing atchieved of publick moment but the Diſcovery of an Iſland called Cherry Iſland in the Latitude of 74. and the ſhores of a large piece of the Continent, which they cauſed to be called King James his New-Land, moſt commonly Greenland ; where they found many white Bears, with white, grey, and dun Foxes, Patridges, Geeſe, and ſome other Proviſions, Sea Unicorns Horns, great ſtore of Morſes, (or Sea-horſes) the Oyl and Teeth whereof yield no ſmall Commodity. But moſt conſiderable for the Trade of Whale-fiſhing, which our men uſe yearly upon thoſe Coaſts ; of whoſe Oyl, Bones, and Brain (this laſt ſuppoſed to be the true Sperma Cœti, now uſed as Medicinal) they raiſe very great profit.

3. The NORTH-EAST-PARTS of Terra Incognita Borealis ; are thoſe which lye on the North of Ruſſia and Tartaria ; by which the like paſſage towards Catha and Chinay hath been oft attempted ; and hitherto with like ſucceſs. Endeavoured firſt by Sebaſtian Cabot, the Son of John Cabot, ſo often mentioned before, by whom trained up in the Diſcovery of the North-eaſt parts of America. His employment failing here in England, he betook himſelf unto the ſervice of the King of Spain ; and coming out of Spain, An. 1549. was by King Edward the ſixt made Grand Pilot of England, with an Annual Penſion of 166 l. 13 s. 4 d. In the year 1553. he was the chief Dealer and Procurer of the Diſcovery of Ruſſia, and the North-Eaſt Voyages, undertaken and performed by Sir Hugh Willoughby, Chancellour, Burrough, Jenkinſon, and after proſecuted by Pet and Jackman. Some of which periſhed in the Action, and were frozen to death ; their ſhip being found the next year hemmed about with Ice. and a particular account of all things which had hapned to them. Others with better fortunes found the way to Ruſſia (ſince that time made a common Voyage, without dread or danger) and paſſing down the Volga to the Caſpian Sea, and by that to Perſia, were kindly entertained in the Court of the Sophie. The Hollanders in the year 1594. and in ſome years after, tryed their Fortune alſo, under the conduct and direction of one William Barendſon, their chief Pilot ; but went no further than the Engliſh had gon before them ; yet gave new names unto all places as they paſſed, as if they had been the firſt Diſcoverers; with pride and arrogance enough. Nothing ſince done of any note or conſideration for the opening of this North-Eaſt paſſage, or giving us any better accompt of the North of Tartary, or any Countries beyond that ; but what we had many ages ſince out of Paulus Venetus ; ſo that we are but where we were, in a Terra Incognita. And though I would not willingly diſcourage any noble Actions, or brave and gallant undertakings ; yet when I look upon the natures of thoſe ſhores and Seas, thoſe tedious Winters of ten months, with no Summer following ; the winds continually in the North, and the Main Ocean paved with Ice ſo long together : I cannot chooſe but rank the hopes of theſe Northern Paſſages amongſt thoſe Adventures which are onely commendable for the difficulties preſented in them.

TERRA AUSTRALIS INCOGNITA.

Terra Auſtralis.

WIth better hopes we may go forwards on the next diſcovery, and try what may be done on Terra Auſtralis, or the Southern Continent, though hitherto Incognita alſo, almoſt as much unknown as the Artick Iſlands, which none but my good Frier of Oxon had the hap to meet with. A Continent conceived by our Learned Brerewood, to be as large as Europe, Aſia, and Africk : and that upon ſuch ſtrength of Reaſons, as cannot be eaſily over-born by any oppoſite. His Arguments in brief are theſe, 1. That as touching Latitude, ſome parts thereof come very near to the Æquator, if they come not alſo on this ſide of it : and as for Longuitude, it keepeth along, though at ſeveral diſtances, the whole continual courſe of the other Continents. 2. It is cleerly known, that in the other two Continents, the Land which lyeth on the North-ſide of that Line, is four times at the leaſt as large as that which lyes South thereof; and therefore ſince the earth is equally poized on both ſides of the Center ; it muſt needs be that the Earth in anſwerable meaſure and proportion muſt advance it ſelf in ſome places above the Sea, on the South-ſide of the Line, as it doth in others on the North. By conſequence, what is wanting in the South parts of the other two Continents, to countervail the North-parts of them, muſt of neceſſity be ſupplied in the Southern Continent.

The Country being ſo large, ſo free from the Incumbrances of Froſts and Ice, and endleſs Winters; I have oft marvelled with my ſelf that no further progreſs hath been made in Diſcovery of it : conſidering chiefly by the ſite and poſition of the Countrey, eſpecially in thoſe parts which lye neareſt Aſia, that there is nothing to be looked for elſewhere, either of profit or of pleaſures, but may there be found. Whether it be, that there is ſome Nil ultra put to human endeavours ; or that this people are not yet made ripe enough to receive the Goſpel ; or that the great Princes of the earth think it no good policy to engage themſelves in New Diſcoveries, till the Old be thoroughly planted, and made ſure unto them ; or that the Merchant, who in matters of this nature hath a powerfull influence, thinks his hands full enough already ; and being ſetled in ſo many and ſo Wealthy Factories, will not adventure upon more. Which of all theſe, or whether of all theſe together be the cauſe of this ſtop, I am not able to determine. Certain it is, that here is a large field, enough for Covetouſneſs, Ambition, or Deſire of glory to ſpend themſelves in ; enough to ſatisfie the greateſt and moſt hungry appetite of Empire, Wealth, and worldly pleaſures; beſide the Gallantry and merit of ſo brave an Action. Moſt which hath hitherto been done in it, hath been by the incouragements of the Vice-Royes of New Spain and Peru : by the firſt of which we came acquainted with the Coaſts of Nova Guinea; by the latter, with thoſe Countries called the Iſlands of Solomon, but whether Continents or Iſlands, not yet fully known.

And yet we muſt not rob Magellanus of his part of the Honour, who paſſing thorough the Streights, which now bear his name, diſcovered thoſe parts of it which from the fire thence ſeen he called Terra del Fuego, found by the Hollanders of late under James le Maire to be an Iſland. Nor do the Engliſh or the Dutch want their parts herein, though what they did, was rather Accidental, than upon Deſign. For in the year 1593. Sir Richard Hawkins being bound for the Streights of Magellan, was by a croſs wind driven on ſome parts of this Continent, to which he gave the name of Hawkins his Mayden-Land : A Promontery of it ſhooting into the Sea with three points he called Point Tremontein ; and a pleaſant Iſle not far off, by the name of Fair Iſland. Sayling along theſe Coaſts in the fifty Degree of Southern Latitude, for the ſpace of ſixty miles and upwards, he found the Countrey as he paſſed to be very pleaſant ; and by the fires which he ſaw in the night to be well inhabited. By the like accident, Anno 1599. Sibald de Weert, a Hollander, in his return from the ſtreights of Magellan fell upon ſome Iſlands of this Southern Continent, in the Latitude of fifty Degrees and forty minutes, which he cauſed to be called Sibalds Iſlands. And beſides theſe we owe to the Portugals the Diſcovery of ſuch parts hereof, as they fell on in their way to the Eaſtern Indies ; of which we have little but the names, as Pſittacorum Terra, ſo called from the abundance of Parrats which they ſaw on the Coaſts, over againſt the Cape of good Hope. 2. Beach, a Region yielding Gold, and poſſeſſed by Idolaters, with the two Kingdomes of 3. Lucach, and 4. Maletur ; all three againſt the Iſles of Java, from which little diſtant.

But the greateſt light we have to ſee by into this dark buſineſs, is by the Voyages and Adventures of the Spaniards, employed by the two Voyce-Royes of Peru and Mexico, as before was ſaid. For in the year 1543. the Governour of New-Spain then being, ſent Villa Lobos with a Fleet towards the Moluccos, who in that Voyage made a Diſcovery of a rich and flouriſhing Countrey which he named Nova Guinea, by others ſince his time called Terra de Piccinacoli ; and in the year 1563. Caſtro the Licentiate, then Vice-Roy of Peru, ſent a Fleet from Lima, which under the Conduct of Lopes Garcia de Caſtro, diſcovered the Iſlands of Solomon. To which if we ſubjoyn the ſucceſs of the Hollanders in the Diſcovery of Fretum le Maire, and the Lands adjoyning, The beſt deſcription we can make of this Southern Continent, muſt be in the Chorography and Hiſtory of their Adventures; viz. 1. Terra del Fogo, 2. Inſulæ Solomonis, 3. Nova Guinea ; beginning firſt with Terra del Fogo, becauſe neareſt to us.

1. TERRA DEL FUEGO, lyes on the other ſide of the Streights of Magellan, heretofore thought to be a part of Terra Auſtralis Incognita, or the Southern Continent, but is now diſcovered to be an Iſland by one Jacob Mayre of Amſterdam, accompanied by Cornelius Schouten of Horn, both Hollanders. They began their Voyage on the 15. of June, Anno 1615. and on the 19. of January following they fell even with the ſtreight of Magellan. On the 24 of the ſame Month they had the ſight of another another Streight, which ſeemed to ſeparate this Terra del fuego from the reſt of the Southern Continent; and on the 25 they entred into it. That part of the Land which (being entered into the Streights) they had on the Weſt,they called Terra Mauritii de Naſſaw; that on the Eaſt, Statenland; the ſtreight it ſelf, Fretum le Maire. The entrance into the Streight they found to be in 55. degrees of Southern Latitude, and 50 Minutes; the water running into the North Sea with ſo violent an Eddie, Ut adverſum maris æſtum difficulter ſuperare poſſemus, ſaith he, who in the way of Journal or Ephemerides, hath deſcribed the whole courſe of this Voyage. In the whole courſe whereof nothing ſo much obſervable (beſides this Diſcovery) as that they found that at their coming home they had loſt a day (as muſt needs happen unto ſuch, as in ſo tedious a Voyage had Travelled Weſtward) that being Saturday to them which was Sunday to the Hollanders, and the reſt of Europe; though they had calculated the dayes ſince their going out with all exactneſs. So that if there were any ſuch Morality in the Sabbath, as ſome men pretend, theſe men muſt either keep their Sabbath on a different day from the reſt of their Countrymen, or otherwiſe to comply with them, muſt be guilty of the breach of the Sabbath all the reſt of their Lives. But of this more at large elſewhere. To return therefore to this ſtreight, it is ſaid to be ſeven Dutch miles, or 28 of ours in length, and of a fair and equal breadth; plentifull of good fiſh; eſpecially of Sea-Calves and Whales. About the inſerting of which ſtreight into the third Edition of my Microcoſm, I received a Letter at ſuch time as the Parliament was held in Oxon, An. 1625. ſubſcribed G. B. and a little under that, Sub granda floridus: which whether it were the Gentlemans Motto, or the Anagram of his Name, I am not able to ſay, having never heard more of him from that time forwards, though his deſires were ſatisfied in the next Edition of that work. For my encouragement "wherein he gave me this direction following, The News (ſaith he) of this New ſtreight coming in-"to Spain, it pleaſed the King, in the year 1618. to ſend and ſearch whether the truth were anſwera-"ble unto the Report. And finding it to be much broader than the other, and not above ſeven Dutch "miles long; decreed, that being the more eaſie and compendious way for Navigators, and leſs ſub-"ject to dangers; his Auxiliary Forces ſhould be ſent that way into the Eaſt Indies, to defend the Phi-"lippine and Molucco Iſlands, and the way by the Cape of good Hope to be left. In regard that every ſuch "Voyage requireth twice as much time: beſides the Variety of winds, and often change of the Air, "not onely troubleſome, but full of diſeaſes, conſumeth the one half of the men before they return. "Whereas this way gaineth time (and if need be, they may diſpatch buſineſs in the Weſt as they travel "into the Eaſt) without any extraordinary danger or loſs of men. So far the very words of my Letter. The Intelligence given me in this Letter, I find confirm'd in a Relation of the Voyage made by Captain Don Juan de More, An. 1618. at the command and charge of the King of Spain, who preſently arm'd and furniſh'd eight tall ſhips to ſend this new way unto his Philippines and Moluccos; under the conduct of Petrus Michaelus de Cordoelen. Since it hath been found by experience, that even from our parts to the Moluccos, through this Fretum de Mayre, is but a paſſage of eight months: Sine ulla inſigni navigantium clade, ſaith the Narrator. But of this ſtreight enough, to ſatisfie my unknown well-willers requeſt, and enform my Reader: extremely ſorry that the Gentleman was not pleaſed to impart his name, that ſo his memory might have lived in theſe papers, if they themſelves be deſtinate to a longer life.

Now for the nature of the ſoil, it is ſaid to be very full of Mountains; but thoſe Hills apparelled with Woods, intermixt with Vallies; the Vallies for the moſt part full of little Brooks which fall down from the Mountains, and afford good paſturage; the Sea-coaſts well provided with Bayes and Roads, not unſafe for ſhipping: though the Air every where, but chiefly near the Sea, be much ſubject to Tempeſts. As for the People, they are ſaid to be of a white Complexion: but their Faces, Arms, and Thighs, coloured with a kind of Oker: of full ſtature and well-proportioned, their hair black, which they wear long, to ſeem more terrible. The men moſt generally naked, the women only ſhaded on their ſecret parts, with a piece of Leather.

Towns they have none, nor any Habitations which deſerve the name of houſes; ſo that the moſt which we can do is to Coaſt the Iſland. In which we find towards Mare del Noort, 1. A large Arm of the Sea, called Entrado de S. Sebaſtian. 2. The Cape of S. Ives. 3. Mauritius Land. 4. Promontorio de Buen Suſeio, or the Cape of Good ſucceſs. Oppoſite whereunto in another Iſland is the Cape of S. Bartholomews; and betwixt them the ſtreight called Fretum le Maire. Then in the New South Sea, as they call it, there are 5. Barnwelts Iſland. 6. The Iſlands of S. Ildefonſo. 7. Cape Horn on a fair Promontory,in the South-weſt Ande: which doubled, the Country goes along with a ſtraight ſhore,on which I find ſome Bayes and Capes, but no names unto them; till we come to the Weſtern entrances of the ſtreight of Magellan, oppoſite unto Cape Victoria, ſo often mentioned.

2. INSULÆ SOLOMONIS, or the Iſlands of Solomon, are ſituate on the Weſt of Terra del Fogo, 11 Degrees on the South of the Equinoctical. Diſcovered in the year 1567. by Lopes Garcia de Caſtro, ſent by the Vice-Roy of Peru to find out new Countries. By whom thus named, in hope that men would be rather induced to inhabit in them; imagining that Solomon had his Gold from theſe Lands of Ophir.

In number they are many, but 18. the principal: Some of which 300. miles in compaſs, others 200. and others of them leſs, till we come to fifty, and beneath that, none. All liberally furniſhed with Doggs, Hoggs, Hens, Cloves, Ginger, Cinamon, and ſome Veins of Gold. The chief of theſe eighteen are, 1. Guadalcanal, ſuppoſed to be the greateſt of them; upon the Coaſt whereof the Spaniards ſailed 150 Leagues, where they found a Town which they burned and ſacked, becauſe the people of it in a ſudden ſurprize, had killed fourteen of their men. 2. S. Iſabella, 150. Leagues in length, and 18 in breadth the Inhabitants,ſome black, ome white, ſome of brown complexion. 38. Nicolas,100. Leagues in compaſs, inhabited by a People which are black of hue, but ſaid to be more witty than the other Salvages. All of them ſituate betwixt the ſtreights of Magellan, and the Iſlands of Theeves ; and yet not well agreed upon amongſt our Authors, whether to be accompted Iſlands, or a part of the Continent : The Spaniards having ſailed 700. Leagues on the Coaſts hereof, and yet not able to attain unto any certainty. But being they paſs generally in accompt for Iſlands, and by that name are under the Vice-Roy of Peru, who appoints their Governours, let them paſs ſo ſtill.

Nova Guinea.

3. NOVA GUINEA lyeth beyond the Iſlands of Solomon, in reſpect of us, proceeding as we have begun from the Land of Fire. Diſcovered, as before was ſaid, An. 1543. by Villa Lobos (Herrera attributes the diſcovery of it to Alvarez de Saavedra, and ſets it higher in the year 1527.) more perfectly made known, if I gueſs aright, by Fernando de Quir. Who being ſent with two Ships to make a more full diſcovery of the Iſlands of Solomon, and taking his courſe about the height of the Magellan ſtreights, diſcovered a main Land coming up cloſe to the Æquinoctical, on the Coaſts whereof he ſailled 800. leagues, till hee found himſelf at laſt in the Latitude of 15. Degrees,diſcovering a large Bay into which fell two great Rivers, where he purpoſed to ſettle a Plantation, and to that end preſented a Petition to the King of Spain. This Country I conceive by the ſite and poſition of it to be Nova Guinea, coming up cloſe as that doth, to the Æquinoctial ; and after turning to the South towards the Tropick of Capricorn, where it joyneth with Maletur. And taking it for granted, as I think I may, I ſhall afford the Reader this Deſcription of it, out of his Memorials ; in which it is ſoberly affirmed to be a Terreſtrial Paradiſe for wealth and pleaſures. The Country plentifull of Fruits, Coco-nuts, Almonds of four ſorts, Pom-citrons, Dates, Sugar-canes, and Apples : plenty of Swine, Goats, Hens, Patridges, and other Fowl, with ſome Kine and Buffals. Nothing inferiour (as it ſeemeth) to Guinea, in the Land of Negros ; and from thence ſo named. For, as he ſaith, he ſaw amongſt them Silver and Pearls, and ſome told him of Gold ; the Countries on the Coaſt ſeeming to promiſe much felicity within the Land. The air he found to be whole and temperate, the Sea-ſhores to be full of Baies, Havens, and the Exits of Rivers, making ſhew as of another China. The Inhabitants he affirmeth to be innumerable, ſome white, ſome like the Mulatos, others like the Negros ; diverſified in Habit, as well as Colour. Their bread made of three ſorts of Roots : without Government, but not without Religion ; for they had their ſeveral Oratories and places of burial, but neither King, nor Laws, nor Arts. Divided by that want, and in dayly wars with one another ; their Arms, Bows, Arrows, and other weapons, but all made of wood. Of this Country, whatſoever it was (if not Nova Guinea) he took poſſeſſion in the name of the Catholike King, and ſet up both a Croſs and a Chapel in it ; the Chapel dedicated to the Lady of Loretto.

The preciſe time of this Diſcovery I have no where found, but that the time ſpent about it is by him affirmed to be 14. years, to the no ſmall endamagement of his health and fortunes. Nor do I find that any care was taken of his Petition, or any thing elſe done by others in purſuance of his Propoſitions. Whether it were on any of the reaſons before laid down ; or that there was no credit given to his affirmations, I determine not. Nor find I that he gave any names to the Baies or Promontories, as he paſſed along ; but either took ſuch names as were given before,or found not any thing worth the naming. And for ſuch names as were given before (ſtill taking Ferdinando Quir's new Country for Nova Guinea) we find a Promontary called Cape Hermoſo, in the Eaſt parts hereof near the Iſlands of Solomon, and not far from the Æquator. 2. Another in the Weſtern part, but as near the Æquinox, called Point Primiro. A third in the firſt bendings of the Coaſt towards the South, called Capa de Buena Deſeada, or the Cape of good deſires. 4. Rio de Valcanes. 5. Rio de Lorenzo. 6. Rio de S. Auguſtino, on the Eaſt of Cape Formoſo towards the ſtreights. 7. The Rivers of S. Peter. 8. S. Paul. 9. S. Andrew. And 10. S. James, betwixt Cape Formoſo and Primiro.

But being there is little certain of theſe laſt diſcoveries, and the greateſt certainty we have of that little, is nothing but a Liſt of names without any thing obſervable in the ſtate and ſtory of the ſame, they may ſtill retain the old name of Terra Incognita. And therefore I will try my fortune, and without troubling the Vice-Royes of Peru, and Mexico, or taking out Commiſſion for a new Diſcovery, will make a ſearch into this Terra Auſtralis for ſome other Regions, which muſt be found either here or no where. The names of which, 1. Mundus alter & idem, 2. Utopia, 3. New Atlantis, 4. Fairy Land, 5. The Painters Wives Iſland, 6. The Lands of Chivalrie, And 7. The New World in the Moon.

1. MUNDUS ALTER ET IDEM, another world, and yet the ſame,is a witty and ingenious invention of a Learned Prelate, writ by him in his younger dayes (but well enough becoming the auſterity of the graveſt head) in which he diſtinguiſheth the Vices, Paſſions, Humours,and ill Affections moſt commonly incident to mankind, into ſeveral Provinces ; give us the Character of each, as in the deſcriptions of a Country, People, and chief Cities of it ; and ſets them forth unto the eye in ſuch lively colours, that the vitious man may ſee there in his own Deformities, and the well-minded man his own imperfections. The Scene of this deſign laid by the Reverend Author in this Terra Auſtralis ; the Decorum happily preſerved in the whole Diſcovery ; the ſtyle acurely cleer, the invention ſingular. Of whom and his New World I ſhall give you that Eulogie, which the Hiſtorian doth of Homer, Nec ante illum quem ille imitaretur, neque poſt illum qui eum imitari poſſet inventus eſt.

2. UTOPIA is a Country firſt diſcovered by Sir Thomas More, after Lord Chancellor of England ; and by him made a Scene of a Common-wealth, which neither Solon, nor Lycurgus, nor any of the Legiſlators of former times did ever dream of ; nor had been fancied by Plato, Ariſtotle, Tullie, or any who have written the Ideas of a form of Goverment, though not reduceable to practice. Some of his Plots we have took notice of already, as viz. his device to bring Gold and Silver into contempt by making of thoſe metals, Chains and Fetters for their Malefactors, Pans of Cloſe-ſtools, Chamber-pots and veſſels of ſuch unclean uſe ; by impoſing it as a penalty on infamous perſons, to wear Gold Rings upon their Fingers, and the like devices : as alſo his device to prevent miſtakes and diſlikes in mariages, by giving the parties a full view of each other, naked. Many more projects of this nature, ſome of them poſſible enough, but ſo unpracticable, ſo beyond hope of being looked on in the modelling of a Common-Wealth, that we may reckon this device amongſt thoſe ſtrange fancies, quæ nunquam antea ſpe concepta, nedum opere tentata erant. The man indeed (conſidering the times he lived in) of rare abilities ; but this Utopia fitted only to the Meridian of this Southern Continent, this Terra Auſtralis Incognita, in which now we are, and to no place elſe.

3. NEW ATLANTIS is an Iſland of this Southern Continent diſcovered by Sir Francis Bacon, the Learned Viſcount of St. Albans ; one of Sir Thomas Mores Succeſſors in the place of Lord Chancellour, but far before him in the Excellency and feaſibility of his invention. It had this name with reference to Atlantis, an Iſland of the Weſtern or Atlantick Ocean, mentioned in the Works of Plato, both alike inviſible. But for his falling into this Iſland, his deſcription of it, the City of Benſalem, and the manner of his reception there, ſuch handſome probabilities, and ſo fairly carried, that to one not acquainted with the State of the World, it would ſeem a Reality. But above all things, the Inventions and deſigns of Solomons Houſe, for perfecting the works of nature, or rather improving nature to the beſt advantages of life, and the benefit of mankind, are beyond compariſon. The man I muſt confeſs had his perſonal errours (I know none without them) of good and bad qualities equally compounded, Mores ejus vigore & levitate mixtiſſimi, as Paterculus once ſaid of Piſo : not one amongſt many thouſand (to purſue that Character) qui aut otium validius diligat, aut facilius ſufficiat negotio. A man of a moſt ſtrong Brain, and a Chymical Head. Who if he had been entertained with ſome liberal Salarie, abſtracted from all Affairs both of State and Judicature, and furniſhed with ſufficiency both of means and helps, for the going on in his deſign, would, I am confident, have given us ſuch a body of natural Philoſophy, and made it ſo ſubſervient to the publick good, that neither Ariſtotle or Theophraſtus amongſt the Antients, nor Paracelſus, or the reſt of our later Chymiſts, would have been conſiderable.

4. FAERIE LAND, is another part of this Terra Incognita ; the habitation of the Faeries, a pretty kind of little Fiends, or Pigmey Devils, but more inclined to ſport than miſchief, of which old Women, who remember the times of Popery, tell us many fine ſtories. A cleanlier and more innocent cheat was never put upon poor ignorant people, by the Monks and Friers. Their habitation here or no where ; though ſent occaſionally by Oberon, and their other Kings, to our parts of the World. For not being reckoned amongſt the good Angels, nor having malice enough to make them Devils (but ſuch a kind of midling Spirits, as the Latines call Lemures Larvæ) we muſt find out ſome place for them, neither Heaven or Hell, and moſt likely this. Their Country never more enobled, than by being made the Scene of that excellent Poem, called the Faerie Queen. Intended to the honour of Queen Elizabeth, and the greateſt perſons in her Court : but ſhadowed in ſuch lively colours, framed ſo exactly by the Rules of Poeſie, and repreſenting ſuch Idæas of all moral goodneſs ; that as there never was a Poem more Artificial ; ſo can no Ethical diſcourſe, more faſhion and inflame the mind to the love of virtue. Inviſurum facilius aliquem quam imitaturum, ſhall be Spencers Motto ; and ſo I leave him to his reſt.

5. PAINTERS WIVES ILAND, is an Iſland of this Tract, mentioned by Sir Walter Raleigh, in his Hiſtory of the World. Of which he was informed by Don Pedo de Sarmiento, a Spaniſh Gentleman, imployed by his King in planting ſome Colonies on the ſtreights of Magellan, (which we have touched upon before) Who being taken Priſoner by Sir Walter in his going home, was asked of him about ſome Iſland which the Maps preſented in thoſe ſtreights, and might have been of great uſe to him in his undertaking. To which he merrily replyed, that it was to be called the Painters Wives Iſland, ſaying, that whilſt the Painter drew that Map, his Wife ſitting by, deſired him to put in one Country for her, that ſhe in her imagination might have an Iſland of her own. His meaning was, that there was no ſuch Iſland as the Maps preſented. And I fear the Painters Wife hath many Iſlands and ſome Countries too upon the Continent in our common Maps, which are not really to be found on the ſtricteſt ſearch.

6. The LANDS OF CHIVALRIE are ſuch Iſlands, Provinces and Kingdoms, in the Books of Errantry, which have no being in any known part of the World, and therefore muſt be ſought in this. A groſs abſurdity, but frequent in thoſe kind of Writers, who in deſcribing the Adventures of their Knights, in deſpight of Geography (with which indeed they had no acquaintance) have not onely disjoyned Countries which are near together, and laid together Countries which are far remote ; but given us the deſcription of many Iſlands, Provinces, and mighty Kingdoms, which as the Ingenious Author of the Hiſtory of Don Quixot merrily obſerveth, are not to be found in all the Map. Of this ſort is the Iſle of Adamants in Sir Huon of Burdeaux ; the Firm Iſland in the Hiſtory of Amadis de Gaul ; the hidden Iſland, and that of the Sage Aliart in St. Palmerin of England ; the Iſlands of Lindaraza, and the deviliſh Fauno, with the Kingdome of Lyra (of which the Amazonian Lady Archiſilora was the rightfull Queen) and many others of that kind in the Mirrour of Knighthood ; and divers of like nature in Palmerin de Oliva, Primalion, and Belianis of Greece, Pariſmus, the Romance of Romances, and indeed who not of all that Rabble ? handſomely humoured by Michael de Cervantes in his Iſland of Barataria, of which the famous Sanco Panca was ſometimes Governour, and the Kingdome of Micomicona. And yet I cannot but confeſs (for I have been a great ſtudent in theſe books of Chivalrie) that they may be of very good uſe to Children or young Boyes in their Adoleſcency. For beſides that they divert the mind from worſe cogitations, they perfect him that take pleaſure in them in the way of Reading, beget in him an habit of Speaking, and animate him many times to ſuch high conceptions as really may make him fit for great undertakings.

7. THE NEW WORLD IN THE MOON, was firſt of Lucians diſcovering; a man of eminent parts, but as ill a conſcience, apoſtatizing from the faith in which he was bred. Ariſtophanes had before told us in own of his Comedies of a Nephelococcygia, or a City of Cuckoes in the Clouds. But Lucian was the firſt who found out this New-World in the Moon; of which, and of the Inhabitants of it, he affordeth us in one of his Dialogues a conceited Character. But of late times, that world which he there fancied, and propoſed but as a fancy only, is become a matter of a more ſerious debate: and ſome have laboured with great pains to make it probable, that there is another World in the Moon, inhabited as this is, by perſons of divers Languages, Cuſtoms, Polities, and Religions: and more than ſo, ſome means and wayes propoſed to conſideration for maintaining an intercourſe and commerce betwixt that and this. But being there are like endeavours to prove that the Earth may be a Planet, why may not this Southern Continent be that Planet, and more particularly that Moon, in which this other World is ſuppoſed to be? Certainly there are ſtronger hopes of finding a New World in this Terra Auſtralis, than in the Body of that Planet; and ſuch perhaps as might exceed both in profit and pleaſure the later diſcoveries of America.

But I am no diſcourager of Induſtry and Ingenuity, which I love and honour wheresoever I find it. I know great Truths have many times been ſtarted upon leſs preſumptions. Nor would I be miſtook, as if in my purſute of this Terra Incognita, I put ſcorn on any of ſublimer thoughts; or that I would have any man ſo much in Love with the preſent World, as not to look for another World in the Heaven above. It is reported, that in ſome controverſie betwixt the Polander and the Duke of Muſcovy, the King of Poland ſent the Muſcovite a curious Globe, repreſenting the whole Heavenly Bodies, with the particular motion of each ſeveral Sphere. To which the Muſcovite returned this unworthy Anſwer, Tu mihi Cœlum mittis, Redde mihi Terras de quibus contendimus: You ſend me Heaven, ſaith he, but that will not ſatisfie, unleſs you give me back thoſe Lands which are now in Queſtion. And much I fear there are too many of this mind, who would not loſe their part on Earth for all Heaven it ſelf. Whom I deſire, if any ſuch peruſe theſe papers, to conſider, that as much as the moſt flouriſhing Country which is here deſcribed, doth fall ſhort of that Paradiſe wherein God placed our Father Adam, ſo much and infinitely more did that Earthly Paradiſe fall ſhort of the unſpeakable glories of the Kingdom of Heaven. To the diligent and carefull ſearch of which Heavenly Kingdome I heartily commit the Reader: not doubting but the Works of God which are here preſented, and that viciſſitude of Human affairs which is herein touched at, may prompt him to ſome ſerious thoughts of that mighty God who made all theſe Works, in whom is no ſhew nor ſhadow of change. To whom be given all Glory, both in this World, and that to come.

Quicquid enim Lunæ gremio complectitur Orbis,
Permutat variatque vices, trepidoque tumultu
Æſtuat, & nunquam ſentit pars una quietem.
Nam ruit in ſeſe, & civili vulnere ſemper
Aut cadit, aut perimit; alioque renaſcitur ore,
Rurſus ut intereat; ſic non eſt omnibus unum
Partibus ingenium, non vis nativa. Sed Orbes
Aſtriferi, & nitidi ſublimis Regia Cœli
Immunis ſenii, & vultu immutabilis uno
Perpetuum ſervat ſolida & ſincera tenorem.

The Verſes are G. Buchanans, in his Book De Sphæra. Which I thus Tranſlate, and therewithall conclude this Work.

The World beneath the Moon its ſhapes doth varie,
And change from this to that; nor can it tarry
Long in one ſtate; but with it ſelf doth jar,
Kils, and is kill'd, in endleſs Civil war.
New form'd again, 'tis but to dye. The frame
Neither of Bodies nor of Minds the ſame.
But That above the Spheres, the Heavens on high,
In which God reigns in Glorious Majeſty,
Free from old Age, unchang'd, and of one face,
Alwaies preſents it ſelf in equal Grace.

Non nobis*, Domine, non nobis, ſed Nomini tuo detur Gloria.

FINIS.

An Advertiſement to the Reader, concerning the enſuing TABLES.

Short Tables may not ſeem proportionable to ſo long a Work, eſpecially in an Age wherein there are ſo many that pretend to Learning, who ſtudy more the Index than they do the Book. But to this Work ſhort Tables will be long enough, conſidering that the Running Titles on the top of each leaf, direct the Reader to a view of thoſe Countreys which he is to Travel; and conſequently to as much knowledge of thoſe things which concern thoſe Countreys as this work can give him. Howſoever, that I may not be wanting in any point to the Readers eaſe, I have drawn thoſe Titles into Method by the courſe of the Alphabet; and added all the reſt of the Provinces both great and ſmall, which are herein mentioned and deſcribed; with the names of thoſe Eſtates and Nations, whether old or new, the ſum of whoſe affairs is here drawn together. This being done in the firſt of theſe Tables, I have reduced into a ſecond, the names of thoſe particular Nations, with their ſeveral Tribes (the Principal of them at the leaſt) which antiently inhabited thoſe Kingdomes, Provinces, and Iſlands, the Chorography and Hiſtory whereof is my chief endeavour: that being marſhalled by themſelves, they be no hindrance to the Reader in the ſearch of thoſe places, which he hath more deſire to viſit. And finally, whereas there are many things in this work looking towards Philology, and ſome particulars not eaſily reduceable to the other Tables, I have digeſted the chief of them into a third; leaving the reſt unto the conſideration of the ſtudious Reader, who poſſibly might take it ill if nothing ſhould be left to his care and memory.

A Table of the Principal Countreys, Provinces, Mountains, Seas, and Iſlands, contained and deſcribed in this Book.
